3 The Code, §§ 4488; 4105, declares that the decree of the Court vesting and vesting title, or the deed of the Clerk, shall have the same force and effect, and will be as valid, as if executed by the party in person. These are all-comprehensive words; and in Lowry v. McDermott, 3 Yerg. 225, interlocutory and final decrees, ordering and confirming a sale of land, were allowed to be read as evidence, without producing the bill or answer upon which they were made; and on the strength of such decrees the plaintiff recovered in ejectment, the defendant objecting to the decree on the ground that the bill and answer were not produced. But in Whitmore v. Johnson, 10 Hun. 610, it was held that the decree is not admissible, without a supporting record, unless it embody all the facts necessary to show the right of the complainant to relief, and the jurisdiction of the Court to grant the relief. This holding emasculates the statute, and withers its efficacy, and should be confined to the occasional case. In all such cases, the Court evidently being influenced by the fact that the decree in that case was by a Circuit Court, in a case over which the jurisdiction of that Court was "new, special, and limited." When the decision was made, the practice was to recite in decrees enough to show the jurisdiction of the Court, and the rights of the conclusion reached. Now, however, the Code declares that decrees need not recite the facts upon which they are based, but only the conclusions to which the Court has come. Code, § 4476.

Since the publication of the original edition of this work containing the foregoing note, the Supreme Court in Russell v. Houston, 7 Cates, 536, has decided that a final decree in an ejectment suit in Chancery and the entries on the rule docket are admissible in evidence without producing the balance of the record when the file of papers containing the pleadings cannot be found. See, note 14 to § 446, ante. 1

4 The decree should, in case of a sale, ordinarily bind all of the parties to the suit, by divesting the title out of all of them, and vesting it in the purchaser. Russell v. Stinson, 3 Hay, 173. In other cases, the title will be divested out of the defendants, or some of them, and vested in the complainant, or in the complainant and some of the defendants, according to the nature of the decree. 2

5 The description of the tract, or other property, should fully appear either in the decree ordering, or the decree confirming, the sale. See, ante, §§ 172; 637, note; 580.
A decree directing the Clerk and Master to make a deed to the purchaser operates proprio vigore as a deed from its date. The decree, or deed of the Clerk, as the case may be, has the same force and effect as a conveyance by the party, and must be registered.

Where the sale is made at the voluntary instance of the parties, the decree, or deed of the Clerk, implies a covenant of seizin and warranty of title by the parties whose interest is sold, their heirs and representatives, unless otherwise provided in the face of the decree.

§ 650. Deed by the Master, or Commissioner.—It is a common practice to authorize the Master, or special commissioner, to make a deed to the purchaser of land, sold by him under the decree of the Court. The following is a form of a

As a deed vesting and vesting title need not recite the facts on which it is based, it may well be contended that a Master’s, or Commissioner’s, deed need not recite such facts. The above deed was drawn in conformity to the case of Whitmore v. Johnson, 10 Hum., 610, referred to in a preceding note to this section. It is believed, however, that the following shorter form would be valid:

§ 651. Injunctions to Perform Decrees. | § 652. Attachments to Enforce Decrees.

§ 651. Injunctions to Perform Decrees.—Before issuing any attachment or sequestration, the Court may award a mandatory injunction\(^{1}\) requiring a party to do a particular thing, or to refrain from doing a particular thing, specified in the decree and in the writ.\(^{2}\) The following is the form of\(^{3}\)

AN INJUNCTION TO PERFORM A DECREES

The State of Tennessee,

To the Sheriff of Hamilton county:

Whereas, on the 10th day of July, 1890, a decree was made in our Chancery Court at Chattanooga, in the case of John Doe vs. Richard Roe, therein pending, commanding the said Richard Roe to deliver to the said John Doe, a deed\(^{4}\) conveying to said Doe, in fee with covenants of warranty and seizin, lot No. 6 in the town of Decatur, Alabama, on the north-east corner of River and Second Streets; and also commanding him to execute and deliver to said Doe a release and acquittance of the lien retained by him on the lot by him sold to said Roe, in said town of Decatur, being lot No. 7, adjoining said lot No. 6 on the north, as by said decree doth more fully appear, a copy of which is herein enclosed to be delivered by you to said Richard Roe.

You are, therefore, hereby commanded to serve said copy of said decree\(^{5}\) upon said Richard Roe, and make known to him that he is strictly enjoined and commanded to do, perform and fulfill and do all and every the matters and things in said decree specified and contained, in so far as the same relates to him, according to the true meaning and import of said decree, and in ten days from the service of said copy; and that he hereof fail not at his peril. Herein fail not, and make return of this writ, and how you have executed the same, on the 1st Monday of August next, at my office.

Witness, J. B. Ragon, Clerk and Master of our said Court, at office in Chattanooga, this July 10, 1890.

J. B. Ragon, C. & M.

The Sheriff should show in his return that he read the writ to the defendant, and handed him the copy of the decree; and the date of such service.

It is not necessary, however, that a writ of injunction should issue with the decree,\(^{6}\) the service of a copy of the decree alone is sufficient to bind the defendant; and if he fails or refuses to comply with the terms of the decree, in ten days after the service of a copy thereof, an attachment may issue by order of the Court upon the officer’s return or affidavit of service of such copy.\(^{7}\)

If the defendant in execution keeps out of the way, or absconds, so that a

\(^{4}\) Code, §§ 4479-4480.

\(^{5}\) As a matter of practice, the writ is seldom issued, service of a copy of the decree being absolutely sufficient. Nevertheless, it may be nothing but fair to a defendant, who has no Solicitor to advise him, to issue the writ to the end that he may copy of the decree cannot be served upon him, or if he evades receiving the decree, affidavit of the fact, and that a copy of the decree was tendered him, or left at his last place of abode, will authorize the issuance of an attachment without actual service of the copy of the decree. If it appear to the Court by affidavit that service of a copy of the decree cannot be had, or is likely to be evaded, the Court may award a writ of sequestration in the first instance.

§ 652. Attachments to Enforce Decrees.—Courts of Equity ordinarily act upon the person of the defendant, and enforce their decrees by process of attachment against his person, when necessary; but such is the obedience of parties to the Court's mandates, and such the efficiency of the common law and statutory processes for enforcing the orders and decrees of our Chancery Court, that it is seldom necessary for the Court to bring into requisition its own peculiar process, to compel the payment of a sum decreed, or the surrender or transfer of property, or the execution of conveyances, releases and acquittances. These common law and statutory processes are, however, a mere lengthening and strengthening of the arm of the Court. Its own peculiar powers and process for enforcing its rules, orders and decrees, still exist, and their efficacy is, in no way, impaired because held in reserve for extraordinary exigencies; and the Court may, in the first instance, if deemed expedient, compel a party to perform its decree by process against his person, or by a writ of sequestration against his estate. But such is the regard of the Court for the liberty of the citizen and his rights of property, that it withholds these processes for cases where they are imperatively required to prevent a failure of justice. Thus, where land lies in Tennessee, the Court may, under the statute, divest and vest the title by decree, or may appoint a Commissioner to make the deed, or direct the Master to make it, but if the land is situated in another State, these common law and statutory methods are absolutely ineffectual: in such a case the Court will, when the defendant resides within the territorial jurisdiction of the Court, and has been served with subpoena, compel him to execute a conveyance within a specified time, and on his failure so to do will commit him to jail, there to remain until he makes the deed.

The Court will not only compel a defendant to execute a deed in such a case, but, where any property to be conveyed, or a judgment to be satisfied, or a mortgage, trust deed, or other lien to be discharged, or a debt or obligation to be acquitted, is in another State, or of such a character, or so situated, that a decree divesting title or directing a conveyance, release, or acquittance would be ineffectual, or not fully operative proprio vigore; the Court is bound to require the party to make the necessary conveyance, release, or acquittance, and to enforce this requirement by process of attachment, and by sequestration, if necessary.

The Court will, by attachment, compel a defendant to perform any specified act, when other process would be ineffectual. Thus, the Court will, by attachment, enforce the payment of a trust fund into Court, or the surrender of a deed or other document, or choses in action, or other personal property, especially property stamped with a trust, or having some extrinsic value not to be compensated in damages, or will enforce the payment of the widow's year's

Nevertheless, a Court of Equity will not make a decree that must be enforced in personam, when full and complete relief cannot be enforced except by the exercise of authority over property which lies in another State. W. U. Telegraph Co. v. W. & A. Railroad, 8 Bax., 54; Johnson v. Kimbro, 3 Head, 557. In cases of fraud, trust and contract, the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court is sustainable if the Court has jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, although the land to be affected by the decree lies beyond the State. support by the administrator,17 or the deposit of funds in the State treasury in a suit by the State.18

The decree should, in all such cases, not only require the defendant to do the specific act, but should fix the precise time within which it must be done;19 and the Chancellor has power, on motion, as well in vacation as in term time, to make further orders, and to issue such writs and processes as may be necessary to carry into effect such decree or order, reasonable notice of such motion being given the adverse party, or his counsel.20

An attachment issues by order of the Chancellor, upon the officer’s return, or affidavit, of the service of a copy of the decree ten days beforehand, and that the party has failed or refused to comply with the terms thereof. If the defendant in execution keeps out of the way, or absconds, so that a copy of the decree cannot be served upon him, or if he evades receiving the decree, affidavit of the fact, and that a copy of the decree was tendered him, or left at his last place of abode, will authorize the issuance of an attachment, without actual service of the copy.21 If the Court see proper in the first instance, or, if upon issuance of the attachment, the delinquent cannot be found, a writ of sequestration may issue against the estate of such delinquent to compel obedience to the decree.22

All attachments for the non-performance of a decree are in the nature of an execution, on service of which no bail shall be taken, but the party shall be committed to jail, there to remain until he performs the decree;23 or until, upon a habeas corpus, he has purged his contempt, and been discharged by the Chancellor upon such conditions in respect to his compliance with the decree as the Chancellor may think proper.24 He cannot be discharged, however, until he has cleared his contempt,25 and the adverse party, his agent, or attorney, is entitled to reasonable notice of the hearing upon the writ of habeas corpus, if in the State, and may interrogate the party in contempt upon his oath, and controvert the truth of his statements by other proof.26

The following is the form of an

ORDER FOR AN ATTACHMENT FOR NON-PERFORMANCE OF A DEGREE.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe.

In this case it duly appearing that the defendant, Richard Roe, has not performed the decree against him as he was enjoined and commanded to do, and is in contempt, on motion of complainant, an attachment is awarded against him, and it is ordered that he be committed to the common jail of Knox county, there to remain until he shall fully comply with and perform said decree.

On such an order being made an attachment will issue, instanti, upon which the defendant will be arrested and committed to jail. The attachment may be as follows:

§ 653. Executions, or Fieri Facias, to Enforce Decrees.

$653. Executions, or Fieri Facias, to Enforce Decrees.—When a decree is pronounced the law awards an appropriate writ for its enforcement, and this writ, whatever its form and effect, is termed an execution.\(^1\) When the decree awards a money recovery, the appropriate writ is a fieri facias, now generally called an execution, because it is the execution most frequently used. When the decree awards the possession of property to a party the appropriate writ is a writ of assistance, called, in Courts of law, a writ of possession; and when the Court awards the restoration of property, the appropriate writ is a writ of restitution. An execution, or fieri facias, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements, of the defendant, is now the ordinary process for enforcing the collection of money on a decree.\(^2\) When, however, the decree is against a corporation, the complainant may sue out a distringas; or may, at his election, sue out a fieri facias to be levied as well on the choses in action as on the goods, chattels, lands and tenements of the corporation; and in case of levy on choses in action, the Court may appoint a receiver to collect the same.\(^3\) The following is the ordinary form of

AN EXECUTION, OR FIERI FACIAS.

State of Tennessee,

You are hereby commanded that, of the goods and chattels, lands and tenements,\(^4\) of Richard Roe and Robert Roe, you cause to be made the sum of four hundred and forty dollars, and the costs hereon endorsed, to satisfy a decree that John Doe, recovered against them in the Chancery Court at Memphis, on July 5, 1890; and to have said money and this writ, with your return thereon, at the next term of said Court, to be held at the Court House in Memphis, on the 4th Monday of December next.

\(^2\) Code, §§ 2998-2999. Formerly, all decrees, except for land, were enforced in Chancery by process of attachment. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1933. Deadrick v. Smith, 6 Hum., 146. The decree then required the defendant to pay the complainant, but now the decree usually is that the complainant recover of the defendant, the amount decreed.

An award of an execution is not necessary in a decree for a money recovery: the law awards an execution. Hyder v. Butler, 19 Pick., 289.

\(^3\) Code, § 3000. This section does not mean that the distringas is to be levied, etc.; it is the fieri facias that is to be levied, as well on the choses in action as etc.; thus making the latter writ more effective as against corporations whose assets may consist, in whole or in part, of choses in action. Under a distringas the property is seized and delivered, or held, according to the demand of the writ, and the order of the Court.

\(^4\) If the execution is against a corporation it should read "that of the choses in action, goods and chattels, lands and tenements of," etc. Code, § 3000.

\(^5\) The execution is tested of the first day of the term next before the date of issuance. Code, § 3001. The teste is important from the fact that the execution is a lien on the debtor's personal property from its issue. An execution may be levied upon the personality of a judgment debtor alive on the day of its teste but dead on the day of its issuance. Trust Company v. Weaver, 18 Pick., 69.
If the execution be against an executor, or administrator, in his representative capacity, the command should be

"that of the goods and chattels, rights and credits of I J, deceased, in the hands of K L, his executor [or, administrator,] to be administered, you cause to be made the sum [&c., as in the above form.]

If the execution be against a corporation, the command to the Sheriff should read:

"You are hereby commanded that, of the choses in action, goods and chattels, lands and tenements, of [the corporation, naming it,] you cause to be made the sum [&c., as above.]

The provisions of the Code, and Caruthers's History of a Lawsuit, cover so fully the law and practice relative to executions, (their form and general requisites, their issuance and proceedings thereon, what is liable to levy, how levies and garnishments are made, delivery bonds and proceedings thereon, sales by execution and conveyances of realty sold,) that it would be an unnecessary consumption of space to consider further any of those matters, the practice in reference thereto being the same in the Chancery as in the Circuit Court.

§ 654. Orders of Sale.—If the execution has been levied on land and returned without a sale, an order of sale will be awarded on motion. So, if there be any property, real or personal, in the custody of the Court, whether by attachment, levy of execution, or otherwise, the Court will, on motion, award an order of sale to the Sheriff to sell such property, whenever proper in enforcement of a decree. Such an order may be as follows:

ORDER TO SELL PROPERTY LEVIED ON.

B. M. Pond, vs. Martha L. Trigg. No. 3214.—Order to Sell.

In this cause, on motion of complainant's Solicitor, and it appearing from the Sheriff's return that an execution was levied upon the following lot: [describe it,] but that no sale thereof was made for want of time, it is ordered and decreed by the Court that the Sheriff proceed to sell said lot as required by law, and that an order of sale issue to him accordingly.

If the property has been attached, or has come into the custody of the Court otherwise than by the levy of an execution upon it, the Clerk and Master may be ordered to sell it. The following is the form of an order of sale, where an execution has been levied on land and returned for want of time to sell:*

ORDER OF SALE.

The State of Tennessee,

To the Sheriff of Shelby County:

Whereas, an execution issued, on March 22, 1871, from the Chancery Court of Shelby county, to the Sheriff of said county, upon a decree in said Court in favor of B. M. Pond against Martha L. Trigg, for the sum of five thousand dollars and the costs of the cause, which execution was returned as follows: "No personal property of the defendant to be found in my county upon which to levy this writ, and I therefore levied it on one lot in the city of Memphis, Tennessee, being lot No. 74, north-west of Adams street and Front row, fronting twenty feet on Front row and running back between parallel lines sixty-nine feet, parallel with Adams street east to an alley, as the property of the defendant, Martha L. Trigg, March 24, 1871. And this levy being too late to advertise and sell according to law, I return this writ unsatisfied, and ask an order of sale.

JACOB L. WRIGHT, Sheriff."

And whereas, at the April, 1871, term of said Chancery Court, an order was by it made that the Sheriff of Shelby county proceed and sell said lot so levied on as aforesaid, and that an order of sale issue to him:

You are, therefore, hereby commanded to proceed and sell said lot, as the law directs, to satisfy said decree and the costs; and have the proceeds of said sale, together with this writ, at the next term of said Court, to be held at the Court House in Memphis on the first Monday in October next.

An order of sale in an attachment suit, and in any other case where the property ordered to be sold is in the custody of the Court, is so similar to the foregoing that it can easily be drawn, the draftsman being careful (1) to so describe the property as to identify it, (2) to show that the property is in the custody of the Court by attachment, or in the hands of a receiver, or of some other officer of the Court, and (3) that the Court has ordered the property to be sold, specifying the manner and terms of sale, if any; and (4) to command the Sheriff, or other proper officer, to sell the property as required by the decree, and, if no requirements, then to sell it according to law.

§ 655. Writs of Possession, or Assistance.—If the decree be that the complainant recover, or be put in possession of, specific property, real or personal, the Court may enforce the same by a writ of possession, or other process sufficient for that purpose. The writ of possession, often called in the books a writ of assistance, is the ordinary process used by the Court to put a party, receiver, sequestrator, or other person, into possession of property when he is entitled thereto, either upon a decree, or upon an interlocutory order.

A writ of possession is usually awarded and issued in the following cases: 1, When on a bill to recover a tract or lot of land on the strength of complainant's title, the Court decrees in his favor; 2, When in a suit to recover possession of a tract or lot of land, the complainant obtains the relief prayed; 3, When the complainant has been deprived of the legal title to, or the possession of, a tract or lot of land by the inequitable conduct of the defendant, and the Court decrees in complainant's favor; 4, When in a case of resulting trust, the Court adjudges the land to be the property of complainant, and vests him with the legal title; 5, When a tract or lot of land is sold by the Master, and the sale confirmed to the purchaser; 6, When receivers or sequestrators are appointed to take possession of a tract or lot of land, and the party in possession refuses to surrender, or a tenant of a party refuses to attorn; and 7, When in any other case, the Court adjudges a party entitled to the possession, whether permanently or pending the suit. The writ may be awarded whenever applied for.

A writ of possession will, also, issue to put a party, a receiver, sequestrator, or other person, in possession of personal property, whenever, in cases similar to the foregoing, the Court, by decree or interlocutory order, adjudges him the possession and awards such writ.

The following is the form of a

You are, therefore, hereby commanded to take with you the force of your county, if necessary, and immediately enter upon said tract of land, and eject and remove therefrom every person thereon, and put said A B, [or, E F.] in full and peaceable possession thereof.

And return to said Court at its next term, to be held in the Court House in Maynardville, on the 2d Monday in November, 1891, how you have executed this writ, by proper endorsement hereon.

Witness, Coram Acuff, Clerk and Master of said Court, the 2d Monday of May, 1891.

“to take with you the force of your county, if necessary, and immediately take said property out of the possession of any person having it in custody, and put the said A B, [or, E F.] in full and peaceable possession thereof.”

If a person not a party, or not the tenant or agent of a party, or not the vendee of a party after the bill was filed, is in possession, he must nevertheless surrender the property to the Sheriff on his demand, and apply to the Court by petition to have the possession restored to him.14

§ 656. Writs of Distringas.—The statute allows a party in whose favor a decree is rendered against a corporation, to sue out a distringas, or a heri facias, to be levied as well on the choses in action as on the goods, chattels, lands and tenements of the corporation.15 Under the old Chancery practice, a distringas was issued as a sort of original process, to enforce the appearance of a corporation by seizing its property;16 but now, under the Code, it is in the nature of final process.17 The following is the form of

A WRIT OF DISTRINGAS.

The State of Tennessee.

To the Sheriff of Davidson county:

Whereas, a decree was rendered by the Chancery Court at Nashville in favor of A B, against the Commercial Bank of Nashville, for the sum of one thousand dollars and costs, and a writ of distringas ordered to issue to enforce said decree;

You are, therefore, hereby commanded to distraint the choses in action, goods and chattels, lands and tenements of the said Commercial Bank within your county, and the same to keep until the further order of said Court, unless said debt and costs are fully paid. Herein fail not, and make return how you have executed this writ at the next term of said Court, to be held, [etc., as in case of an execution; see, ante, § 653.]

A writ of distringas is practically obsolete, or nearly so; but it may be used to advantage when choses in action, or rents, belonging to a corporation are sought to be reached; because, in such a case, the Court may appoint a receiver to collect the choses in action, and the rents.18

§ 657. Writs of Restitution: When Issued, and How Obtained.—A writ of restitution is a process to restore to a person, ordinarily the defendant, certain specific property taken from him by process, or surrendered by him on order of the Court, in the progress of a suit. It may be issued: 1, to restore to the defendant property replevied by the complainant, in case the replevy bond is insufficient in form, or in amount of penalty, or in respect to the solvency of the sureties;19 or, 2, to restore to the party entitled property attached in the suit;20 or, 3, to restore to the party entitled specific property involved in the litigation of which he has been wrongfully dispossessed by process, or on the order of the Court;21 or, 4, to restore property, not covered by the decree of the Court, taken by the Sheriff from the party entitled and delivered to a party not entitled;22 or, 5, to restore to a stranger to the suit property of his, which, by order of the Court, or by a misconstruction of an order, or by mistake under an order, has been taken out of his possession and delivered to a party to the suit, or to a receiver or sequestrator in the suit;23 or, 6, to restore to the defendant land of which he has been dispossessed by the order of the Court in an ejectment, or detainer, or other suit when the decree in favor of the complainant is reversed on bill of review, or on appeal or writ of error; or, 7, to restore to the other party in an ejectment or detainer suit, the land of which one party has become possessed, as complainant or defendant when, pending an appeal, 14 If the claimant's right to the possession as against the parties to the suit is clear, the Court will determine the matter summarily, and order the property to be returned to him; Johnson v. Rider, 2 Shan. Cas. 62; or will order it to be delivered up to the claimant, pending an inquiry as to its ownership, on his giving bond and sufficient security to restore it, in case the decision upon his claim should be against him. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1039.

17 of the nature of a writ of sequestration, as a receiver may be appointed to collect the choses in action. See, 1 B.A., Ch. Pr., 75-76.
18 A writ of distringas, or a writ in the nature of a writ of distringas, may also be used when the Court decrees that a party is entitled to the possession of specific personal property, possessing an extrinsic value to the person entitled thereto. Car. Lawsuit, § 425. This sort of writ would be proper to enforce the return of property in a reprieve suit in Chancery.

his security for rents and damages becomes insufficient; 24 or, 8, to restore to a tenant not sued the premises of which he was dispossessed by a writ of possession, his possession as tenant being prior to the suit. 25

1. A Writ of Restitution, in the Nature of an Injunction, will also lie in favor of a party who has paid a judgment or decree in whole or in part which was afterward reversed. It sometimes happens that after a decree has been paid, or partly paid, the party so paying has had the decree reversed, on a writ of error, or on a bill of review, and in such a case he is entitled to a writ of restitution in the nature of an execution. 26

But to entitle a party to a writ of restitution on reversal of the decree, such reversal must be final and not leave questions open which when decided, may show the party is not entitled to the writ. 27

2. A Writ of Restitution, How Obtained. If the person injured by being wrongfully deprived of his property is a party to the suit in which the order was made or the writ issued, he can bring the wrongful dispossession before the Court by motion supported by affidavit when the facts do not otherwise appear; 28 but if he is not a party, he must present his sworn petition to the Court in the cause, fully setting up the facts of which he complains, and praying to be allowed to file his petition in the cause and become a party, pro hac vice. 29

The matter is, ordinarily, inquired into and disposed of summarily, 30 unless the grounds of the motion are seriously contested, in which case, the Master may be ordered to report as to the facts, or the Court may decide the controversy directly, on the proofs submitted. In case of a petition the petitioner may be required to give a prosecution bond. 31

The following is the form of a writ of restitution:

WRIT OF RESTITUTION.

State of Tennessee,

To the Sheriff of Roane county:

Whereas, in the case of John Doe vs. Richard Roe, et al., in our Chancery Court at Kings- ton, it was ordered and decreed, on petition of John Jones, that a writ of restitution issue to restore him to the possession of the following tract of land: Here insert a full description of the land, of which he was unlawfully dispossessed under a writ of our said Court, you are, therefore, hereby commanded, without delay, to take with you the force of your county, if necessary, and immediately enter upon said tract of land, and eject and remove therefrom every person thereon, and restore said John Jones to the full and peaceable possession thereof.

And return to our said Chancery Court at its next term to be held at the Court House in Kingston, on the 2d Monday of November, 1884, how you have executed this writ, by proper endorsement thereon.

Witness, William Clark, Clerk and Master of our said Court, the 2d Monday of May, 1884.

WILLIAM CLARK, C. & M.,
by JAMES C. POPE, D. C. & M.

If the writ be for personal property, its command to the Sheriff will be:

"to take with you the force of your county, if necessary, and immediately take said property out of the possession of any person having it in custody, and restore it to the full and peaceable possession of said John Jones."

ARTICLE V.
SEQUESTRATIONS TO ENFORCE DECREES.

§ 658. Sequestrations Generally Considered. — If the Court see proper in the first instance, or if upon issuance of an attachment for not obeying a decree the delinquent cannot be found, a writ of sequestration may issue against the estate of such delinquent to compel obedience to the decree. ¹ The process of sequestration is a writ or commission, directed to certain persons,² nominated by the complainant, empowering them to take possession of the defendant’s real estate, and receive the rents and profits thereof; and to seize all his personal estate not exempt from execution, and to keep the same in their hands until the defendant shall have performed the decree, and cleared his contempt.³ If necessary, the Court may order the sequestrators to sell the personal property; and if the delinquent be required, by the order or decree, to deliver to any person, or to deposit in Court, or elsewhere, books, papers, writings, or any other articles or things, the sequestrators have power to seize them and hold them subject to the order of the Court.⁴

A writ of sequestration is indispensable to enforce a decree when the defendant has property in this State, but cannot be found on a writ of attachment for contempt, or evades service of the decree, or is out of the State, and the decree commands the defendant to do some affirmative act, such as to execute a conveyance, or lease, of lands outside of the State, or to execute a release or acquittance of a mortgage, judgment, or lien of record in another State, or to do some other act which cannot be directly or indirectly done by a decree proprio vigore.⁵

If either party die during a sequestration, there must be a revivor, not only of the suit, but of the sequestration; and if the suit should be abated, the sequestration would be abated also.⁶

⁷ Including choses in action.
to disturb them in their possession of property taken under the sequestration, and the Court will enjoin any suit brought against them to recover property in their possession as such.\(^8\)

§ 660. Duties of Sequestrators.—Sequestrators are officers of the Court, and their duties and liabilities are substantially the same as those of receivers. They act under the orders of the Court as directed from time to time. They must seize all the estate of the defendant within reach, and must be diligent in getting possession of it. They are accountable for all they receive, and must make and file with the Clerk and Master a complete inventory of everything that comes into their hands, giving items, amounts and dates. They have no authority to apply the money or property they receive, otherwise than as ordered by the Court, but should hold all moneys in their hands subject to the order of the Court.\(^9\)

The powers, duties and liabilities of sequestrators, and the course and procedure by and against them, are so nearly identical with those of receivers, that to enumerate them and specify them would be only to repeat what is said on these matters in the Chapter on Receivers. The following summary will show this identity: 1, The Court will put sequestrators in possession by proper process when necessary, and will require the tenants of the defendant to attain to them; 2, It is a contempt of Court to disturb the possession of sequestrators, and if they are dispossessed the Court will restore them to possession; 3. They are accountable for all that they receive; and must make reports, from time to time, of all that comes into their hands, and must pay over all balances in their hands; and 4. A party claiming sequestrated property by title paramount must apply to the Court for an order of restoration, or for leave to sue the sequestrators.\(^10\)

§ 661. Form of the Writ of Sequestration.—The writ is, in the main, a recital of the order for the sequestration; and the form of the writ must, therefore, be varied to meet the circumstances of each particular case.\(^11\) The following is a form\(^12\) of

A WRITT OF SEQUESTRATION.

The State of Tennessee,
To John Smith, William Jones, James Grant, and Charles Stokes:

Whereas, the Chancery Court at Nashville did, on the 10th day of June, 1890, in a suit therein pending between John Doe, complainant, and Richard Roe, defendant, order the said Richard Roe within ten days after notice, to execute, acknowledge, and deliver to said John Doe, a deed with covenants of warranty and seizin for a certain tract of land in the State of Kentucky, in said decree fully described, and to pay the costs of said suit;

And whereas, an attachment issued against the body of said Richard Roe for his contempt in not obeying said decree, and was returned "Not found."

And whereas, the said Court, on the 27th day of June, 1890, in said suit, ordered a writ of sequestration against the estate of the said Richard Roe, directed to you, all of which fully appears of record in said suit, in our said Court of Chancery;

You, or any two or more of you, are, therefore, hereby commanded, and fully authorized and empowered, to enter upon all the lands, tenements and other real estate whatsoever of the said Richard Roe, and to take, collect, and sequester, not only all the rents and profits of said lands, tenements and other real estate, but also all his goods, chattels, choses in action, and personal estate whatsoever, and detain and keep the same in your possession under sequestration, until the said Richard Roe shall fully perform said decree, and clear his said contempt, and said Court shall make an order to the contrary.

Witness, [as in case of an execution; see, ante, § 653.]

The primary object of the sequestration is to compel the defendant to perform the decree, but the Court may apply the proceeds of the sequestration to the satisfaction of the complainant’s demand.\(^13\)

PROCEEDINGS IN ENFORCEMENT OF DECREES ON REMANDMENT.

§ 662. Proceedings on Remandment from the Supreme Court.

§ 663. Proceedings on Remandment from the Court of Chancery Appeals.

§ 664. Proceedings on Remandment for the Execution of an Order or Decree.

§ 662. Proceedings on Remandment from the Supreme Court.—On the remandment of a cause from the Supreme Court, the first step is to produce the procedendo remanding the cause, and the accompanying decree of the Supreme Court, and to move the Court to have them spread on the minutes, and the cause re-entered on the docket, both of which motions are allowed, of course.

When a remanded cause has thus been re-entered on the docket, it stands exactly as it did when the appeal was granted, except in so far as changed by the decree of the Supreme Court. The decree of the Chancellor appealed from, and the erroneous orders and rulings of the Chancellor excepted to before or at the hearing, are affirmed, modified, or annulled, as required by the decree of remandment.

1. If the bill was improperly dismissed on motion, the defendant must, on remandment, plead, demur, or answer, under the rules.

2. If the bill was improperly dismissed on demurrer, the defendant must plead or answer, under the rules.

3. If the bill was improperly dismissed in consequence of complainant’s supposed wrongful failure to comply with some rule, or interlocutory order, the cause will stand on the docket exactly as it stood when dismissed, to be thence proceeded in according to the practice of the Court, as though never dismissed.

4. Where the Chancellor erroneously refused a material motion, as for an amendment to a pleading, or deposition, or for leave to file some pleading, or document, or pauper oath, or bond, or for a reference, or for a report, or for the recommittal of a report, or for the taking or retaking of a deposition, or for a continuance, or in reference to some other matter, on the reinstatement of the cause, the motion refused by the Chancellor will be granted, and the cause will proceed thereafter as though such motion had been allowed originally, and no appeal had ever been taken.

5. Where the order of remandment gives the appellant leave to make additional parties, or to file a new or an amended pleading, bond, or pauper oath, or to introduce additional evidence, or to do some other thing, on the reinstatement of the cause the appellant will be allowed so to do, and thereafter the cause will be proceeded in as though such thing had been originally done in the Chancery Court, and no appeal had ever been taken.

6. Where a demand for a jury was erroneously denied, on remandment a trial by jury will be allowed. On the other hand, where a jury trial was erroneously granted, on remandment the cause will be proceeded in as though such trial had been refused by the Chancellor instead of granted.

7. Where, in case of a trial by jury, material errors were committed by the Chancellor in admitting or excluding evidence, or in charging or failing to charge the jury, or in refusing a new trial on some other ground, on remandment a new trial will be granted, and the cause proceeded with as though the Chancellor had granted a new trial originally and there had never been an appeal. On the new trial, however, the errors corrected by the Supreme Court will be carefully avoided.

8. Where, in any matter, the Supreme Court has reversed or modified the action of the Chancellor, on remandment such matter will stand reversed or modified accordingly.

9. Where, in any matter, the Chancellor failed to act whether moved on so to do or not, and the Supreme Court decree of remandment indicates what the Chancellor should have done, such action will accordingly be done, or if not done will be deemed to be done, and the case proceeded in accordingly.

10. Where any other act or omission of the Chancellor is corrected by the Supreme Court, or, where the Supreme Court, on its own motion, directs some act to be done, or undone, or omitted to be done, or in some other matter reverses or revises what was done, or omitted to be done, by the Chancellor, on remandment of the cause, the decree of the Supreme Court will, in all respects, be carefully complied with.

After the cause has been remanded, and re-instated on the docket by order of the Chancellor, it is further proceeded in according to the practice of the Court from that stage where the appeal was taken to a final decree.

If the cause is remanded for the execution of an order or decree no order of re-instatement is necessary, as will appear in a following section. 2

ORDER OF RE-INSTATENENT.

Frank Frank, vs. Ananias Fraud.

In this cause, Leon Jourolmon, Esq., the Solicitor of the complainant, Frank Frank, produced the procedendo and decree of the Supreme Court reversing the decree of this Court heretofore pronounced and appealed from, and moved the Court to enter said procedendo and decree on the minutes of the Court and to reinstate the cause on the docket, all of which motions are allowed. Said procedendo and decree are as follows:

PROCEDENDO.

DEGREE.

The Clerk and Master is directed to re-enter the cause on his docket, which is done accordingly.

Supposing the appeal was from a decree sustaining a demurrer and dismissing the bill, and that the Supreme Court reversed the decree, overruled the demurrer and remanded the cause "for answer to the bill and further proceedings according to the practice of the Court;" add.

And, thereupon, the demurrer of the defendant to the bill having been overruled by the Supreme Court, and the cause remanded for answer to the bill and further proceedings, the defendant moved the Court for thirty days in which to file his answer, which motion was disallowed, and the defendant ordered to answer the bill on or before tomorrow, for some other specified day.

§ 663. Proceedings on Remandment from the Court of Chancery Appeals. The proceedings on remandment of a cause from the Court of Chancery Appeals are in every particular identical with those above set forth in case of remandments by the Supreme Court, mutatis mutandis, so that it is unnecessary to restate them.

§ 664. Proceedings on Remandment for the Execution of an Order or Decree. Ordinarily on the remandment of a cause by the Supreme Court, or the Court of Chancery appeals, no further action can be taken in it until it has been re-instated on the docket by order of the Chancery Court. This often causes a long, needless and vexatious delay, as six months might intervene between the pronouncement of the decree of the Appellate Court and the next term of the Chancery Court whose decree had been affirmed, modified, or reversed.

2 See, post, § 664.
To remedy this evil, it has been enacted that when a case is remanded by the Supreme Court, or the Court of Chancery Appeals, for the execution of an order of reference, order of sale, or for other proceedings directed in the decree of the Appellate Court, or in the decree of the Chancery Court as affirmed by the Appellate Court, such case is deemed to be re-instated in the Chancery Court from the time of filing with the Clerk and Master a certified copy of the decree or mandate of the Appellate Court; and thereafter such case may be proceeded in in accordance with the decree of the Appellate Court without any action of the Chancery Court thereon; and as fully and effectively as if the decree of the Appellate Court had been re-decreed, or spread of record, in the Chancery Court, in term time, by order of the Chancellor. As soon as a certified copy of the decree or mandate of the Appellate Court is received, the Clerk and Master will file it, copy it upon his rule docket, and notify the Solicitors of record in the case of the filing of the decree or mandate; and, thereupon, the Clerk and Master will, unless otherwise directed by consent of such Solicitors, proceed to execute such decree or mandate as fully and speedily as though so ordered by the Chancellor.

Under this salutary statute the delays incident to appeals are, in many cases, greatly lessened, and the termination of a litigation greatly speeded.

§ 665. Proceedings on Remandment from a Federal Court.—When a case has been removed from the Chancery Court to a Federal Court and been afterwards remanded to the Chancery Court, the pleadings, depositions and proofs which were filed in the Federal Court during the pendency of the case there, are as valid and may be used as fully as if originally filed in the Chancery Court. And where the original depositions and pleadings and proofs cannot be obtained from the Federal Court, certified copies may be used instead of the originals.

4 Ibid, sec. 2. A case having been remanded for an order of reference to be made as to complainant's damages, the Master proceeded to take proof and assess the damages without an order by the Chancellor so to do; and, on his action being sustained by the Chancellor, the defendant appealed on the ground that the Master's action was premature. The Supreme Court affirmed the decree. Madison v. Ducktown S. C. & I. Co., MSS., Knoxville, September, 1905.

BILLS IN CHANCERY RELATING TO ORIGINAL BILLS.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL BILLS.

ARTICLE I. Amended Bills.

ARTICLE II. Supplemental Bills.

ARTICLE III. Defences to Amended and Supplemental Bills.

ARTICLE I.

AMENDED BILLS.

§ 666. How Defects in a Bill May be Remedied.

§ 667. Amendment of Bills Generally Considered.

§ 668. A Bill Amended, and an Amended Bill.

§ 669. When an Amended Bill is Proper.

§ 670. Difference Between an Amended and a Supplemental Bill.

§ 671. What Amendments May be Made.

§ 672. What Amendments are Not Allowed.

§ 666. How Defects in a Bill May be Remedied.—After a suit has been commenced by original bill, it may need amendment in consequence of defects of various kinds. A bill may be defective in its original structure, either (1) from the want of a full statement of the material facts, or (2) from the want of proper parties, or (3) from the want of asking suitable discoveries, or (4) from other like defects, where no event has occurred subsequent to the institution of the suit, affecting the rights or interests of the parties. In such a case, the defect may be cured either by an amendment of the bill, or by an amended bill. On the other hand, a suit may be perfect in its institution; and yet, by some event, subsequent to the filing of the original bill, it may become (1) defective, so that no proceeding can be had, either as to the whole, or as to some part thereof, with effect; as, when, although the parties to the suit remain before the Court, some event, subsequent to the institution of the suit, has either made such a change in the interest of those parties, or given to some other person such an interest in the matters in litigation, that the proceedings, as they stand, cannot have their full effect, in which case the defect may be remedied by a supplemental bill; or (2) the suit may become abated,

1 It may be well, however, to state that the present practice in Tennessee on the subject of amending bills is somewhat different from the practice as laid down in Story, Daniel and older works on Chancery Pleadings. In the following particulars our present practice differs somewhat from the old practice: I, A bill may be amended at any time before a decree; 2, Matter which has occurred since the original bill was filed, may be incorporated in an amended bill; and 3. The differences between an amended and a supplemental bill are, in other respects, but little more than nominal, in ordinary practice. See, post, § 670.
so that there can be no proceeding in it at all, either as to the whole, or as to a part thereof; as when, in consequence of the death of parties, or of marriage of female parties, or of some other event subsequent to the suit, there is a want of parties before the Court, by or against whom the suit can, in whole or in part, be prosecuted or defended, in any of which cases a bill of revivor in some of its forms may be filed.\(^2\)

\section*{§ 667. Amendment of Bills generally Considered.—}The rights of the parties to a suit are ordinarily determined as though the decree was pronounced on the very day the bill was filed; for the object of the suit is to have a decision of the matters in controversy existing at the time the suit is brought. It would seem manifestly just and logical, therefore, to incorporate into the original bill, either by interlineation, or an a separate paper, (1) any matter necessary to the rights of the complainant, and proper to be brought before the Court, that was in existence when the bill was filed, but for sufficient reason was omitted, and (2) to add to the bill any new parties made necessary by such additional facts. And such is the practice of the Courts, their object being to enable the complainant to get before the Court every matter and every party necessary to a full adjudication of the matters of controversy. And although amended bills are sometimes allowed to bring before the Court matters occurring since the suit was brought, nevertheless such a practice creates confusion, and should not be encouraged; but the complainant should be required to file a supplemental bill.\(^3\)

\section*{§ 668. A Bill Amended, and an Amended Bill.—}There is a difference between amending an original bill on its face and filing an amended bill. In our practice, when an amendment can be made in the body of the bill by interlineation, or by writing it on the margin, it can be so made at any time before the defendant has made defence, or even after demurrer, and before argument thereof, without leave; but, if made at any other time, leave of the Court must be had.\(^4\) Any amendment may be made on the face of the bill that would be proper to be made by an amended bill, provided the amendment be not too voluminous to be incorporated into the original bill by interlineation, or insertion on the margin.\(^5\) If, however, such an amendment is too long to be inserted in the body of the original bill, the Court will require it to be brought forward on a separate paper as an amended bill, or as an amendment to the bill. When the new matter is written on the face of the original bill, the bill is a bill amended; when it takes the form of a separate bill, it is an amended bill.\(^6\)

The new matter, and the new parties, that may be brought before the Court are governed by the same rules and considerations whether the bill is amended on its face, or an amended bill is filed. In either case, amendments to a bill are always considered as forming a part of the original bill, and relate to the filing of the bill.\(^7\)

\section*{§ 669. When an Amended Bill is Proper.—}When a complainant has filed his bill, and is advised that the same does not contain such material facts, or make all such persons parties, as are necessary to enable the Court to do complete justice, he may alter it by inserting new matter subsisting at the time of exhibiting his bill, of which he was not then apprised, or which he did not think necessary to be stated, and may add such parties as shall be deemed nec-

\(^2\) Sto. Eq. Pl., § 328.
\(^4\) Code, §§ 4333-4337.
\(^5\) 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 422, note.
\(^6\) There is a sort of intermediate method of making amendments to bills frequently adopted in term time. Instead of either amending the bill on its face, or filing an amended bill, the complainant is allowed to amend his bill by an entry on the minutes, setting out the very words of the amendment; time to answer the same. In such cases, the amendment is deemed to have been made in the body of the bill. Lyon v. Browne, 6 Bax., 64. This practice, however, should not be encouraged, as the convenience of all parties is promoted by having the bill and its amendments all together, instead of having to search the minutes through to see what amendments to the bill may be found therein. The Court should require the amendment to be incorporated in the bill, as well as entered on the minutes. See State v. Goldberg, 5 Cates, 298.
§ 670. The Difference between an Amended and a Supplemental Bill.—The technical distinctions between an amended bill and a supplemental bill are two: 1. No matter not in existence when the original suit was brought can be brought forward by an amended bill, but to bring forward such matter is the especial office of a supplemental bill. 2. Matter in existence when the original bill was filed must be brought before the Court by amendment, if the answer has not been filed; but, if the answer has been filed, such matter must ordinarily be brought forward by supplemental bill. However, inasmuch as under our practice a bill may be amended after answer filed, this practically abolishes the latter distinction between the two bills, and the effect of this has been greatly to obliterate the former distinction. An examination of our Reports will show that all distinctions between an amended bill and a supplemental bill are often ignored, and amended bills are frequently allowed to be filed when, in strict practice, supplemental bills should have been filed, and this is done without challenge. Hence, it may be safely laid down as a rule of our Chancery practice, that, at least as to matter in existence when suit was brought, an amended bill may be filed whenever a supplemental bill will lie. The result is, whatever is said in the next article in reference to supplemental bills, will apply to amended bills as to matter in existence when the original bill was filed.

§ 671. What Amendments May be Made.—If, at the hearing, the record appears to be defective for want of proper parties, the Court will allow the cause to stand over, for the complainant to amend his bill by adding parties; or, where the parties are too numerous to be brought before the Court, the complainant will be allowed to alter the form of the bill, by making it a bill of complaint on behalf of himself and others: the complainant will be permitted to show why he cannot bring the necessary parties before the Court. So, also, where a matter has not been put in issue, with sufficient precision, the Court has, upon hearing the case, given the complainant liberty to amend the bill, for the purpose of making the necessary alteration. And the Court will, at the hearing, permit the prayer of the bill to be amended, so as to make it more consistent with the case made by the complainant. And where a complainant has amended his bill, and by accident has omitted to insert in the amended bill the prayer for relief, although it was in the original bill, the Court will allow the complainant to re-amend his bill by inserting it. Wherever improper submissions have been made in a bill on behalf of infants, the Court will, at hearing, order that the bill be amended by striking out the submissions. Upon the same principle, where an infant heir-at-law had been made a co-complainant, the Court ordered the cause to stand over, with liberty to the complainant to amend his bill by making the heir-at-law a defendant.15

8 Morrow v. Fossick, 3 Lea, 131; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 401. Daniel says that an amended bill must be addressed to the same Chancellor to whom the original bill was addressed, although a change of Chancellors has occurred since the original bill was filed. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 402. This is a striking proof of the disposition of the Courts to regard the original bill and the amended bill as practically one pleading. In Tennessee, however, regard is had more to the office than to the officer, and it would be proper to address the amended bill to the incumbent Chancellor.

And it may be said, generally, that any amendment may be made necessary to enable the complainant to get the merits of his case fully before the Court; and to enable the Court to do full justice to all parties interested in the controversy. New parties may be made either complainant or defendant; complainants may be made defendants, and defendants may be made complainants; any new matter may be brought forward, pertinent to and consistent with the case stated in the original bill; new or additional process, ordinary or extraordinary, may be asked; the prayers may be changed; and, in short, any addition, or alteration, may be made that is in furtherance of the object of the original bill, and not inconsistent therewith, or repugnant thereto, provided that such addition or alteration does not make an entirely new suit.

The most usual grounds for amending bills are the following:

1. To Make New Parties, such new parties consisting, ordinarily, of persons who are: (1) liable to complainant’s demands; or (2) who have an interest in the subject-matter of the suit; or (3) will be entitled to some of the proceeds; or (4) will be subject to some of the liabilities of the suit; or (5) who have probable rights; or (6) who have set up claims to the subject-matter of the suit, that should be adjudicated; or (7) persons who should be bound by the decree, either in order to remove clouds from the title, or to give the purchaser a good title, or to prevent further litigation in reference thereto. Courts are very liberal in allowing new parties to be made, and when the defendants already in Court are not prejudiced thereby, and when no delay will result from the amendment, no terms are ordinarily imposed.

2. To Bring Forward Newly Discovered Facts that increase or strengthen complainant’s equities, or destroy or diminish the defendant’s set-offs, or defences. Sometimes it is necessary to file a bill, especially an attachment or injunction bill, in so great haste that it is impracticable to thoroughly investigate the case in all its branches and details. In such a case, this investigation should be made as soon after the bill is filed as possible, and application to amend should be promptly made after its necessity is discovered.

3. To Take Advantage of Disclosures in the Answer. It is very common for the answer to disclose facts, or set up defences, previously unknown to the complainant, in consequence of which it becomes necessary to make such corrections in, or additions to, his bill, either as to facts, or as to parties, or as to both, as will enable him to meet, avoid, or overcome these disclosures, if against his interest, or to take advantage of them, if in his favor.16 Such amendments are allowed with great liberality, and ordinarily without terms, if the facts were unknown to complainant when he filed his bill, and if the application to amend is made at the first opportunity after the filing of the answer, because one of the offices of an answer is to disclose and discover facts unknown to the complainant.17
§ 672. What Amendments are not Allowed.—Amendments can only be granted where the bill is defective in parties, or in the prayer for relief, or in the omission or mistake of a fact or circumstance connected with the substance, but not forming the substance itself, nor repugnant thereto. The new matters set up in the amended bill must be germane to the original bill, and have a connection with the matters set up in the original bill. An amended bill will not be allowed, where the relief sought is inconsistent with that of the original bill; nor where the new matter is repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the original bill, even though stated in the alternative; nor where a new title or cause of action is sought to be set up that is barred by the statute of limitations, or in any other way barred, lost or discharged; or that would make the bill multifarious, or in any other respect demurrable. Nor will an amendment be allowed at the hearing whose effect would be to shift the burden of proof as to a particular matter from the complainant to the defendant.

A complainant cannot by amended bill abandon the original claim set up and aver a new one; thus, he cannot sue first in his own right and afterwards amend so as to sue as administrator. Nor will an amended bill be allowed which seeks a relief directly in conflict with the relief prayed in the original bill. And these rules are not changed by the fact that the same person has the one right as an individual, and the other as administrator. Nevertheless, where the new matters are at all germane to the original bill, and grow out of the same transaction, great liberality is allowed in making amendments, provided they do not make out an entirely new case and this is especially true as to amendments for want of proper parties before the Court; all amendments, however, to be made on the payment of costs where the amendment causes delay, or creates costs.

If, at the time of filing the original bill, the complainant had no title to the relief prayed, he cannot make out a title by so amending his bill as to introduce facts which have subsequently occurred. Nor can such a sole complainant amend by adding as complainants parties who have a title; nor can parties who have a title have themselves made complainants by amended bill, when the original complainant has no title. But if the original complainant has any such interest as to make him a proper party, then new parties may be made.

The Court will not, after answer filed, allow amendments as to facts known to the complainant when he filed his bill, unless some sufficient excuse is given for the omission.

§ 673. Statutory Provisions in Relation to Amending Bills.—According to the Code, the complainant may amend his bill before the defendant has taken out, or the Clerk issued, a copy thereof, and in small matters not affecting the merits, afterwards, without costs.

Material amendments may be made as of course, without application to the Chancellor, after copy of the bill has been issued or taken out, and before the defendant has made defence, upon complainant paying the costs of furnishing a copy of the amendment to such of the defendants as have received or taken out copies of the original bill, and of the notice to be served upon all the defendants of such amendment: amendments may also be made after demurrer and before argument thereof, upon the same terms.
In all other cases the complainant can amend his bill only by leave of the Chancellor given in open Court, or at Chambers, and upon such terms as he may impose. But the Court may, at any stage of the cause, even after argument, if it be thought necessary to justice, permit amendments to the bill, upon such terms as may appear reasonable.

The following form of notice of amendment before answer filed will serve as a guide to the Clerk and Master:

NOTICE OF AMENDMENT OF A BILL BEFORE ANSWER FILED.

John Doe, vs. Richard Roe.

Mr. Richard Roe:

You are hereby notified that on the 17th day of June, 1905, the complainant amended his bill in the above entitled cause, as follows:

On the first page, in line 9, he added after the words “on that day,” the following words: “and at the same time complainant paid him forty-seven dollars.”

On the second page, at the end of line 3, he added these words: [Here insert them.]

On the same page, he struck out all the words between the words “on said contract,” in line 10, and the words “Complainant further shows,” in line 16.

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy of said amendments.

This June 17, 1905.

J. C. Scruggs, C. & M.

This notice need not be served on any of the defendants except those who have received or taken out copies of the bill; but all of the other defendants will be notified that the bill has been amended. These notices may be served in the same manner as notices to take depositions. The original notices, with the officer’s return endorsed on them, should be filed in the cause and the facts noted in the Master’s rule docket.

§ 674. When Amendments may be Made, Further Considered.—As a general rule, a bill may be amended at any time between its filing and the adjournment of the term at which the final decree is pronounced, under the terms and conditions stated in the preceding section; and these amendments may cover any, or every, part of the bill, may bring in new parties, change the position of parties on the record, whether complainants or defendants, bring new matters before the Court consistent with the original bill, ask for other process, ordinary or extraordinary, change the prayer, and in any other way alter the original bill; provided always, the changes are in furtherance of the objects of the original bill, and are not inconsistent with them, or repugnant to them. Even after a bill has been in part dismissed on demurrer, and a term elapsed, a bill may be amended, and the amendment will relate back to the filing of the original bill, and restore and preserve an attachment lien.

But, while amendments may thus be made at any time while the bill is pending, it is nevertheless, true that the difficulty of getting leave to amend increases with the lapse of time since the bill was filed, and the liability of the party amending to pay costs increases in like proportion.

An amendment may be made at the hearing so as to bring the beneficiaries before the Court; and if objection for such want of necessary parties is made in the Supreme Court, a decree on the merits will be made, and the cause will be remanded to enable persons having interests to be made parties, or to become parties by petition, and take under the decree already rendered.

If upon the argument of a demurrer, it appears that the ground for demurring can be removed by amendment, the Court, in order to avoid putting the complainant to the expense of filing a new bill, instead of deciding upon the demurrer, gives him liberty to amend his bill on payment of the costs incident to the amendment; and where the demurrer is for want of parties, the Court generally annexes to the order allowing the demurrer, leave to the complainant to amend his bill by adding the necessary parties.\textsuperscript{41} Our practice is very liberal on the subject of adding new parties, either complainant or defendant;\textsuperscript{42} and on sustaining a demurrer for want of a necessary party, it would be reversible error to dismiss the bill: the bill should stand over with leave to amend.\textsuperscript{43} Costs should, however, be imposed as the price of the amendment, either where there has been delay, or where the amendment increases the costs of the litigation.

When an amended bill is sought to be filed, after defence made, it should be drawn, and sworn to, before allowed to be filed.\textsuperscript{44a} 1. It should be drawn so that the Court may see that it contains matter proper for an amended bill;\textsuperscript{45} and 2, It should be sworn to as evidence that the amendment is in good faith, and not a mere invention: otherwise the amendment may be wholly false, or wholly immaterial, or repugnant, or inconsistent with the original bill, or otherwise radically defective.

When leave of the Court is necessary to file an amended bill, some excuse must be given for the omission to insert, in the original bill, the matters sought to be set up in the amendment, if such matters were in existence and known to complainant when the original bill was filed; and the application to amend must be made as soon as the necessity for such an amendment is discovered.\textsuperscript{46} But bills required to be under oath are allowed to be amended with great caution. When a complainant wishes to amend a sworn bill, he must present the proposed amendment in writing so that the Court can see that it is a proper matter for an amendment. He must, also, swear to the truth of the proposed amendment, and show a good reason for not incorporating it into the original bill. The application to amend must be made as soon as the necessity for it is discovered.\textsuperscript{47}

An application to strike out an allegation from a sworn bill, or to make alterations in it, should be supported by affidavits showing how the mistake occurred. The Court may refuse to allow a sworn allegation to be stricken out, and may require a supplemental statement on a separate paper, in the nature of an amended bill.\textsuperscript{48}

\textsection{676. Form and Manner of Amending Bills.}—If the amendment is short, and can be interlined, or written on the margin of the bill, the Court may allow such a course; but if the amendments are long or numerous, they should be made on a separate paper, thus:

Our Solicitors are frequently compelled to file bills in term time, amid the complications, embarrassments, confusion and pressure of other business, and have neither the time to give the case that measure of attention, nor the opportunity of thoroughly investigating the facts, possessed by the English Solicitors. The result is, amendments are often delayed. Nevertheless, as he who seeks Equity must do Equity, the party seeking to amend should be operated with costs enough to enforce proper diligence. AMENDED BILLS. § 677.

AMENDMENTS TO A BILL.

John Doe, vs. Richard Roe.

Amendments to the bill of complainant in this cause, made pursuant to an order of the Court, entered of record on the 1st day of April, 1890:
1. In the third line of the second paragraph of the bill, after the words "and on that day," add "or within a short time thereafter."
2. After the words [name them] in the fifth line of the third paragraph, add the following: [specifying the matter to be added.]
3. Strike out all the words in the fourth paragraph of the bill after the words: [naming them.] L. A. Gratzi, Sol. for Complainant.

Amendments to a bill should not be made by interlineations and erasures on the face of the original bill, except when the changes are very slight; but the Court should require amendments to be made on a separate paper, especially where erasures, or extensive changes, are to be made. The practice of amending pleadings by erasures, and interlineations, on their face, ought not to be tolerated by the Courts.48a

If an injunction, a receiver, or other extraordinary preliminary relief, is desired by virtue of an amendment, the proper practice is to file an amended, or a supplemental, bill in due form, and verify it. No extraordinary preliminary relief should be granted, except upon sworn pleadings drawn up in proper form. The price of extraordinary process is meritorious facts, set forth in proper form, and duly verified on the personal knowledge of the affiant.

§ 677. The Effect of an Amended Bill.—When an amended bill is filed, the new matter set up in it is deemed to be incorporated into the original bill. The amended bill is only a continuation of the original bill, and a component part thereof, the two bills constituting but one record;49 and the defendant may make a new defence to the entire bill as amended if he desires.50

An amendment, or amended bill, not introducing a new cause of action or a new party, relates back to the filing of the original bill, and preserves the lien on property secured by the original bill.51 Indeed, the original and amended bills are in law but one bill, the amendment becoming a part of the original bill and the original bill becoming pro tanto modified.52 But, if the amendment brings forward a new cause of suit which is barred by the statute of limitations, or makes a new complainant who is barred, the amendment will not so relate back as to defeat the bar, but will take effect from the day it is made.53

If the new matter does not affect any of the defendants who have already answered, no new process need be served on them, and no additional answer need be filed by them. As to the new parties, they must be regularly brought into Court, by proper process, and as to them the original and amended bills constitute in effect one original bill, and they have every right of defence thereof that can be made to an original bill, including the right to file a cross-bill. But the new defendants, who have these rights, must not be defendants who are mere successors in interest of parties already before the Court, for such privies will be bound by the acts of those to whose interests they succeed.54

When an amended bill makes new parties complainant in privity with the original parties, and sets up no new cause of action, the depositions previously taken are admissible against the defendants;55 but when an amended bill brings new parties before the Court who have had no chance to cross-examine 48a Puterbaugh's Ch. Pl. & Pr., 204. The practice of allowing amendments by erasures and interlineations is not only a temptation to unauthorized doctorings of pleadings, but is also destructive of that certainty which is one of the essentials of pleading. High vs. Batte, 10 Yerg., 338.

§ 678. Summary of the Essentials of Amended Bills.—The following summary comprises most of the essentials of amended bills:
1. Material amendments may be made, either by interlineation or by an amended bill, at any time before plea, or answer filed, or before argument of demurrer, without application to the Chancellor.\(^\text{58}\)
2. An amendment can be made after answer or plea filed, or argument of demurrer, only by leave of the Chancellor given in open Court,\(^\text{59}\) or at Chambers.\(^\text{60}\)
3. The amendment may be made at any time by leave of the Court, even after the hearing.\(^\text{61}\)
4. If the amendment is sought to be made, or the bill to be filed, after plea or answer, the application for leave should be made at the earliest opportunity after the necessity for it becomes known; and any delay should be explained by affidavit. The amendment should be sworn to in such a case.
5. The new matter must be either to supply some deficiency in the frame of the bill, or be some necessary party omitted, or some facts pertinent to the controversy not already alleged.
6. The new matter must not be inconsistent with the original bill, nor must it constitute a new and different ground of suit.
7. The new parties, if complainants, must be the privies of the original parties, or have concurrent rights, or a community of interests.
8. The amendment should not consist of any matter that has come into existence since the commencement of the suit, but should be confined to matters that might have properly been included in the original bill, being matters in existence when the suit was instituted.
9. No new process is required unless the amendment makes new parties defendant, and then only as to the new parties.
10. The original and amended bills become one original bill as to the new parties; and they have the same rights of defence as parties to an original bill.
11. An amended bill may, in Tennessee, be filed whenever a supplemental bill may be filed, except when sought to be filed by a defendant to the original bill, or by a new party, or to bring before the Court new matter that has come into existence since the original bill was filed.

§ 679. Form of an Amended Bill.—An amended bill should recite the filing of the original, and all the subsequent steps taken in the cause, including issuance and service of subpoena, and the filing of an answer, if such are the facts, as will be more fully seen by the following form:

AN AMENDED BILL.

To the Hon. Thomas M. McConnell, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Chattanooga:

John Doe, a resident of Polk county, complainant,

Richard Roe, a resident of Hamilton county, defendant.

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That, on the 9th day of July, 1890, he filed his original bill on your Honor's said Court against the said defendant, Richard Roe, alleging, among other things, that [here state briefly the material allegations of the original bill.] In said original bill, complainant prayed that [here set forth the substance of the prayers.] All of which allegations and prayers will fully appear by reference to said original bill.

II.

And now, by leave of your Honor, complainant brings this amended bill into your Honor's said Court, and shows to the Court that [here set out the new matters, new parties, and such other additional, or amendatory, or explanatory matters, as the amended bill is intended to set forth.]

ARTICLE II.
SUPPLEMENTAL BILLS.

§ 680. Supplemental Bills generally Considered.—A supplemental bill, as its name implies, is a bill to supply some defect in the original frame or structure of an original bill. In many cases, an imperfection in the frame of the original bill may be remedied by an amendment. Generally, a mistake in the bill in the statement of a fact, or in the omission of a party, should be corrected by an amendment, and not by a supplemental bill. But the imperfections of a bill may remain undiscovered while the proceedings are in such a state that an amendment to the bill will be permitted, according to the strict practice of the Court;1 or the deficiencies may have occurred after the suit was brought, and therefore not properly the subject of an amendment.2 By the strict practice of the Court, no amendment to an original bill is generally allowable after the parties are at issue upon the points of the original bill, and witnesses have been examined.3 Nor is it generally allowable to introduce into the bill, by amendment, any matter which has happened since the filing of the bill. In such cases, a supplemental bill is the appropriate remedy. And such a supplemental bill may not only be for the purpose of putting in issue new matter, which may vary the relief prayed in the original bill; but, also, for the purpose of putting in issue matter which may prove the complainant’s right to the relief originally prayed. Whenever a supplemental bill is not a supplemental suit, but only introduces supplementary matter, the whole record constitutes but one cause. The original and a supplemental bill make, in effect, but one pleading, and any particular, wherein they are in conflict, is to be regarded as not well pleaded.4

1 In Tennessee, an amended bill may be filed at any time, even at the hearing, by leave of the Court. Code, §§ 4332-4337. But such amended bill should not set up any facts, or any rights, except such as existed when the suit was brought. Ante. §§ 6670: Supplemental bill is not kept steadily in view, the Courts having more regard to the substance of the bill than to its name. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1515, note. 3 But in such a case, an amended bill may be filed.

And, so it may be stated generally, that a supplemental bill may be filed to bring before the Court: 1. Matters pertinent to the original suit which have occurred since the original bill was filed; 2. Matters which previously existed but which cannot be added to the original bill by way of amendment because the defendants have answered; 3. Matters necessary to obtain an additional discovery; 4. To add new parties; and 5. To remedy defects in the prayer of the bill.\(^5\)

After the Court has decided upon the suit as framed, it may be necessary to bring some other matter before the Court to obtain the full effect of the decision; or before a decision has been obtained, but after the parties are at issue upon the points in the original bill, and witnesses have been examined, some other point appears necessary to be made, some material fact must be put in issue, some new party made, or some additional discovery is found requisite. In either event, a supplemental bill is the proper method of bringing these new matters before the Court, at this stage of the suit, unless the Court permit the original bill to be amended.\(^6\)

§ 681. Difference between Amended Bills and Supplemental Bills.—In Tennessee, the difference between an amended bill and a supplemental bill, as to bringing forward facts, parties and rights that were in existence when the original bill was filed, has practically become almost obliterated; and even the difference between these two kindred bills as to facts, parties, rights, and interests, that have come into existence since the original bill was filed, is not always observed. Nevertheless, as heretofore shown,\(^7\) there is a marked difference between the bills in the latter case, a difference that is not only emphatically declared in all the treatises on Equity pleading, but is also based on sound principle.\(^8\) In this volume, the distinction will be recognized, more to facilitate a logical discussion of the subject of non-original bills, than to perpetuate the difference in their designations. Besides, the former practice throws much light on the present practice, and no one can become a good pleader without understanding the former practice.\(^9\)

§ 682. Supplemental Bills on Facts prior to the Original Bill.—Nothing which occurred prior to the filing of the original bill ought to go into a supplemental bill, unless the original bill has been answered; in which case, an amended bill not being always properly allowable, any new matter necessary to be put in issue may be introduced by supplemental bill, whether it occurred before or after the filing of the original bill.\(^10\) But under our practice, a case seldom, if ever, happens when an amended bill will not be allowed to set up matter which was in existence when the original bill was filed, if a supplemental bill would lie for the same purpose; and hence, as shown elsewhere, there is no longer any practical difference between an amended bill and a supplemental bill, as to facts in existence, at the commencement of the original suit.\(^11\)

\(^6\) Lube's Eq. Pl., 185, note. New events, or new matters, which do not change the parties nor their rights and interests in the original bill and add new means of holding the property and rights claimed, may be brought forward by a supplemental bill. Riddle v. Motley, 1 Lea, 468.

\(^8\) See, ante, § 670.

\(^9\) 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1515, note; 1530, note; and Sto. Eq. Pl., §§ 332; 336; 885; where the authorities are fully cited.

\(^10\) As may be seen by reference to the Code, §§ 4332-4337, that a bill may be amended after answer filed. The old practice required a supplemental bill to bring forward matter of amendment after answer filed. Sto. Eq. Pl., §§ 332; 890, and notes. Inasmuch as under our practice a bill can be amended, or an amended bill filed, after answer, the distinction heretofore made between an amended bill and a supplemental bill as to matter existing when the original bill was filed, no longer exists. Indeed, in ordinary practice, supplemental bills are generally termed amended bills. Nevertheless, the distinction in the text as to matter arising after suit brought, is a true and a practical one, and is adhered to by the best pleaders, and favored by those Chancellors most anxious to preserve logical differences, and maintain those distinctions necessary to the science of pleading.

new events, or new matters, have occurred since the filing of the bill, a supplemental bill is, in many cases, the proper mode of bringing them before the Court; for, generally, such facts cannot be introduced by way of amendment to the original bill. But such new events, or new matters, must not change the rights or interests of the parties before the Court; they must merely refer to and support the rights and interests already in the bill. A supplemental bill may, also, be brought, not only to insist upon the relief already prayed for in the original bill, but upon other relief different from that which was prayed for by the original bill, where facts which have since occurred may require it. Thus, if a surety, while seeking indemnity against his principal, has the debt to pay, he must by supplemental bill bring this fact before the Court. A supplemental bill changing the character of the original bill, or introducing matters arising since the original bill, cannot be filed without leave of the Court; but any objection for want of leave will be waived by failing to make it at the proper time.

If the interest of a complainant, who is suing in another's right as administrator, executor, guardian, or trustee, terminates by death, resignation, removal, or otherwise, the person who succeeds him as the representative of the same right, may file a supplemental bill to bring himself before the Court, for he becomes entitled to the same property under the same title. In these cases, there is no change of interest which can affect the questions between the parties, but only a change of the person in whose name the suit may be prosecuted. But, ordinarily, where no question is sought to be raised as to the right of the new complainant to revive the suit, it may be done on motion, and this is the usual practice. This revivor by supplemental bill, or motion, may be had either before or after a decree; but if the case is out of Court, it can only be done by supplemental bill, or by scire facias.

Where the subject-matter and the title remain the same, a supplemental bill may introduce matter which may vary the relief to which the complainant is entitled; and so may a supplemental bill bring forward new matter in support of the original cause of action.

§ 684. A Supplemental Bill must not Bring Forward a New Title.—To entitle the complainant to file a supplemental bill, and thereby to obtain the benefit of the former proceedings, it must be in respect to the same title, in the same person, as stated in the original bill. Thus, if a person should file an original bill, as heir-at-law, and it should turn out, upon an issue and hearing of the cause, that he is not the heir-at-law, and he afterward purchases the title of the true heir-at-law, he cannot file a supplemental bill to have the benefit of the former proceedings; for he claims by a different title from that asserted in the original bill. His true course would be to file an original bill. So, on a bill to remove a cloud, a title acquired after suit brought cannot be relied on in an amended bill, but an original bill must be filed to set it up.

If the complainant has no title when he files his original bill, he cannot subsequently acquire a title, and then bring it forward by a supplemental bill; but if a complainant had a good inchoate title when he filed his original bill, and afterwards perfects that title, he may set up this latter fact in a supplemental bill. The supplemental matter must not contradict the statements of the original bill. A complainant cannot support a bad title by acquiring a good one after the filing of his original bill, and then bringing it forward by amended or supplemental bill.

1. A supplemental bill cannot be filed without leave of the Court.
2. A supplemental bill may be filed at any stage of the suit, even after a decree; and may be filed by a stranger, or a defendant, to the original suit, as well as by a complainant.
3. The application to file the bill should be made at the earliest opportunity after the necessity for it becomes known, and all delays must be explained by affidavit.
4. A supplemental bill should be verified by the oath of the complainant.
5. The purpose of the bill must be either (1) to supply some deficiency in the frame of the original bill, or (2) to bring forward some facts pertinent to the controversy not already alleged, or (3) to make some necessary party not before the Court, or (4) to do any two or more of these things.
6. A person who acquires an interest in the relief prayed for, or who acquires or succeeds to the interest of a complainant, may come before the Court by a supplemental bill.
7. The new matter in the amended bill must not be inconsistent with the original bill; nor must it constitute a new and different cause of action.
8. While a supplemental bill may contain matter that was in existence at the commencement of the suit, nevertheless its more appropriate province is to bring before the Court facts which have since occurred.
9. A supplemental bill will not lie when the same object can be accomplished by amending the original bill.
10. A supplemental bill will lie, before defence made, to set up matters in existence when the original bill was filed: but this is the proper province of an amended bill.
11. No new process is required, unless the bill makes new parties defendant, and then only as to the new parties.
12. The original and supplemental bills become one bill as to the new parties, and they have the same rights of defence to both bills as parties to an original bill.
13. If the new parties are mere successors in interest to former parties, the proof on file may be read by, or against, the new parties.
14. When a defendant, or a new party, wishes to bring a matter before the Court, connected with a pending suit, he should do so by a supplemental bill, especially if the matter has come into existence since the original bill was filed.
15. A new prosecution bond should be given, or pauper oath filed in lieu.

§ 686. When a Supplemental Bill may be Filed.—A supplemental bill may be filed, as well after, as before, a decree; and the bill, if after a decree, may be, either (1) in aid of the decree, that it may be carried fully into execution; or (2) that proper directions may be given upon some matter omitted in the original bill, or not put in issue by it, or by the defence made to it; or (3) to bring new parties before the Court; or (4) it may be used to impeach the decree, which is the peculiar case of a supplemental bill, in the nature of a bill of review, of which we shall treat hereafter. But where a supplemental bill is brought in aid of a decree, it is merely to carry out, and to give fuller effect, to that decree, and not to obtain relief of a different kind on a different principle; the latter being the province of a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, which cannot be filed without the leave of the Court.

After a decree upon the merits winding up an insolvent corporation, on an appeal therefrom, a supplemental bill may be filed to reach other property of 24 When a bill brings forward both new matter and new parties, it is properly an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill. Sto. Eq. Pl., § 345. but as the name of the bill is immaterial, if it contain proper substance, it may be called a supplemental bill without forfeiture of any of complainant’s rights.

26 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 338.
the corporation, and bring other creditors before the Court, who are seeking to subject such property by independent suits.\textsuperscript{27} A supplemental bill for the purpose of adding new parties may be filed even after a hearing and decree, when it appears that such parties are necessary. In such case, the cause is continued with leave to make new parties.\textsuperscript{28} The Court will sometimes, on its own motion, direct a supplemental bill to be filed, if, upon the hearing, the justice of the case, in its own opinion, requires it.\textsuperscript{29} A supplemental bill after a decree, however, must not seek to vary the principles of the decree, but to perfect it and make it more effectual. A decree can only be changed by a bill of review.\textsuperscript{30}

\textsection{687. How Leave is Obtained to File a Supplemental Bill.}—A supplemental bill bringing forward new matter, or changing the original bill, cannot be filed without leave of the Court.\textsuperscript{31} In order to obtain this leave, the bill must be properly drawn up and sworn to, and if there has been any delay since the occurrence of the facts now first brought forward, this delay must be satisfactorily explained by affidavit.\textsuperscript{32} If the affidavit be satisfactory, the Court will then examine the bill, and if it be a proper bill to be filed, leave will be granted on such terms as to costs as will both secure the defendant against the laches of the complainant, and insure diligence on the part of parties making amendments.\textsuperscript{33}

A supplemental bill ought to be filed as soon as practicable after the new matter is discovered. For, if the party proceeds to a decree after a discovery of the facts upon which his new claim is founded, he will not be permitted afterwards to file a supplemental bill, in the nature of a bill of review, founded on such facts.\textsuperscript{34} On the other hand, if an objection is meant to be taken by the defendant, that a supplemental bill brings forward matters, which might have been introduced by way of amendment, or at an earlier period of the cause, he should do it before he makes answer to the supplemental bill. It will be too late to take the objection at the hearing.\textsuperscript{35}

\textsection{688. Frame of a Supplemental Bill.}—A supplemental bill must state the fact of the pendency of the original bill, and briefly give the proceedings thereon; and if the supplemental bill is occasioned by an event subsequent to the original bill, it must state that event, and the consequent alteration with respect to the parties, if any; and, in general, the supplemental bill must pray that all the defendants interested in the new matter may appear and answer to the new charges it contains. If the supplemental bill is not for a discovery merely, the cause must be heard upon the supplemental bill at the same time that it is heard upon the original bill, if it has not been already heard; and if the cause has been already heard, it must be further heard upon the supplemental matter. If the alteration or acquisition of interest happens to a defendant, or a person necessary to be made a defendant, the supplemental bill may be exhibited by the complainant in the original suit against such person alone, and may pray a decree upon the particular supplemental matter alleged against that person only; unless the interests of the other defendants may be affected by that decree. The supplemental bill should not, however, state the circumstances of the case at length. All that is requisite is, that it should state so much of the suit as shows the nature of the case, and the ground of relief. Where a supplemental bill is merely for the purpose of bringing formal parties before the Court as defendants, the parties defendants to the original bill need not, in general, be made parties to the supplemental bill. And, as a rule, if new parties are brought before the Court upon a supplemental bill, the original defendants need not be made parties to the supplemental bill, unless they have an interest in the supplemental matter, or their interests require that the new defendant should be a party to the suit. The facts brought forward by the supplemental bill should be material to the matters in controversy, otherwise a demurrer will lie to the supplemental bill. 36 Neither an amended nor a supplemental bill can contain new matter which contradicts, or is inconsistent with, the statements of the original bill; 37 for a supplemental bill, when properly before the Court, is an addition to the original bill, and becomes a part of it, so that the two are to be taken as one amended bill, and heard together. 38 A supplemental bill must be sworn to, or the supplemental matter otherwise verified, and it should be made to appear that it was filed at the first opportunity after the supplemental matter was discovered, or the delay fully explained. 39

As the name and form of a bill is immaterial if necessary substance exists, 40 an original bill containing the necessary substance will be treated as a bill of revivor and supplement in the nature of a cross-bill, and appropriate relief granted. 41

§ 689. Form of a Supplemental Bill.—The form of a supplemental bill is, in the main, similar to the form of an ordinary original bill, the principal differences being (1) that it begins by a recital of the filing of the original bill, and the proceedings thereon; and (2) ends by praying, among other things, that the complainant may have the benefit of all the proceedings upon the original suit.

A SUPPLEMENTAL BILL.

To the Hon. A. S. Key, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Madisonville:

John Jones, a resident of Loudon county, complainant,

George Brown and Henry Smith, both residents of Monroe county, defendants.

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That on, or about, January 9, 1890, he filed his original bill in this Court against the defendant, George Brown, stating therein, among other things, the following: 1st. That [setting forth briefly the substance of the original bill, dividing the recital into sub-sections, numbered 1st, 2d, 3d, &c., 42] and 4th, praying that [setting forth the prayer in concise form.]

II.

That said defendant, Brown, was served with process and answered said bill, alleging in his answer that [setting forth briefly the substance of his answer.]

III.

That upon the issue thus made, proof has been taken, and [showing what further steps have been taken in the cause, if any.] For a fuller account of said bill, answer, and other proceedings in the cause, reference is made to the original record.

IV.

And now, by way of supplement to his said original bill, complainant further shows unto your Honor, that, since the examination of witnesses in said cause, [or since the last step taken in said cause, such as an interlocutory decree, or a final decree,] he has discovered that [here show the new facts he desires to bring forward, and how they affect the rights of the complainant, and make liable the defendant, or the new party or parties to be brought before the Court.] 43

The recital of the answer should be equally as brief.

41 Brandon v. Mason, 1 Lea, 624.

42 The recital should be a brief summary of the bill, thus: stating therein, among other things, the following:

1st. That the defendant Brown, as his guardian, received on or about July 9, 1886, the sum of two thousand dollars from Henry Smith, the administrator of complainant's father, and has failed to pay the same to complainant, who has attained the age of twenty-one, and who, after attaining his majority had demanded the same, with lawful interest thereon.

2d. That said bill prayed for a decree against said Brown for said sum and interest.

43 Thus, in the case supposed, the bill would allege: That on examining said defendant Brown as a witness in said cause, complainant first learned, and now charges the fact to be, that the defendant Henry Smith, as said administrator, never did pay over, or otherwise account for, to his said guardian, all that was lawfully due said guardian from the estate of complainant's father, but only paid over to him the sum of thirteen hundred dollars, whereas the fact is he was then, and has ever since been, accountable to complainant's said guardian and to complainant, not only for the whole of said sum of two thousand dollars, but for a much larger sum, as complainant will show at the hearing: and complainant aver and charges that the defendant, Henry Smith, is liable as administrator to him for about the sum of three thousand dollars, including interest, all of which he has fraudulently withheld.
To the end, therefore, that the said defendant, Henry Smith,\(^{44}\) if a new defendant is made, may show cause, if any he can, why complainant should not have the relief by him prayed in his said original bill, and in this bill, complainant prays:

1st. That proper process issue to bring said defendant, Henry Smith, if a new party is made, into Court, and require him to answer the said original bill if a new party be made, and this supplemental bill.

2d. That in his answer he make full answer [here make the usual requirements as to the special matters to be answered; or, if his oath is waived, so state.]

3d. That complainant may have the same relief from his said original bill, as if said defendant, Henry Smith, had been made a party thereto. [This prayer is one applicable in a case of a new party.]

4th. That complainant may have the following further relief,\(^{45}\) [here pray for the additional relief, if any, appropriate to the new facts.]

5th. That complainant may have such further and other relief as in Equity he may be entitled to.

§ 690. An Original Bill in the Nature of a Supplemental Bill.—A supplemental bill is properly applicable to those cases only where the same parties, or the same interests, remain before the Court; but when new parties, with new interests arising from events since the institution of the suit, are to be brought before the Court, an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill becomes necessary.\(^{46}\) It is called an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill, because it is original as to the new parties and new interests; and it is supplemental also, being an appendage to the former bill as to the old parties and the old interests.\(^{47}\) Thus, where a husband and wife are defendants to a bill, if, by the death of the husband, a new interest arises to the wife, the suit becomes defective; and an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill becomes necessary to bring that interest before the Court; for she is not bound by the answer put in during her coverture. So, if a person, pendente lite, becomes assignee of the interest of a party in the suit, and wishes to take part in it, he must bring forward his claim by an original bill, in the nature of a supplemental bill.\(^{48}\) In like manner, if the complainant has made an assignment in bankruptcy, and his assignee in bankruptcy wishes to have the benefit of the suit, he must file an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill.\(^{49}\)

§ 691. Frame of an Original Bill in the Nature of a Supplemental Bill. A bill for this purpose must state the pendency of the original bill, briefly give the proceedings upon it, specify the event which has determined the interest of the party by or against whom the former bill was exhibited, and the manner in which the property has vested in the person who has become entitled. It must then show the ground upon which the Court ought to grant the benefit of the former suit to or against the person, who has become so entitled; and it must pray the decree of the Court, adapted to the case of the complainant in the new bill. This bill, although partaking of the nature of a supplemental bill, is not merely an addition to the original bill, but another original bill, which, in its consequences, may draw to itself the advantage of the proceedings on the former bill.\(^{50}\)

§ 692. Cost Bond and Process on Amended and Supplemental Bills.—Proper process issues, as of course, on a supplemental bill, and, also, on an amended bill which so prays; hence, in such cases, a new prosecution bond, or pauper oath, should be filed,\(^{51}\) especially if a new party is made, or a new cause of suit set up.

\(^{44}\) Process should not be prayed against any party whose answer is not required. If new parties are made, and their answers only desired, no process should be prayed against the original defendants.

\(^{45}\) In the supposed case, this further relief would be: That a decree be rendered by your Honor, requiring the defendants, George Brown and Henry Smith, to answer in account and cause to complainant the all accounts be taken necessary to ascertain the exact amount.

\(^{49}\) Northman v. Insurance Cos., 1 Tenn. Ch., 312.

\(^{50}\) The name of the bill is immaterial. Ibid. See, ante, § 67.
ARTICLE III.
DEFENCES TO AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL BILLS.

§ 693. Defences to Amended and Supplemental Bills generally Considered.
Defence may be made to an amended, or to a supplemental, bill, (1) by motion to dismiss; (2) by demurrer; (3) by plea; (4) by answer; and (5) by disclaimer. What has been said, heretofore, in reference to these various defences, applies as well to amended and supplemental bills as to original bills. Any ground, sufficient to base a motion to dismiss an original bill, will be sufficient in case of an amended, or a supplemental, bill, if applicable thereto.

As has already been shown, if the new matter sought to be brought forward was in existence when the original bill was filed, such matter is the proper subject of an amendment to the original bill or of an amended bill; but if the new matter has come into existence since the filing of the original bill, it is properly the subject of a supplemental bill.\(^2\) The distinction, however, in our practice, between an amended bill and a supplemental bill no longer practically exists;\(^3\) and, as a consequence, a demurrer will no longer lie because a supplemental bill is filed when the same end could have been attained by an amendment of the original bill. But if a supplemental bill upon matter arising subsequent to the filing of the original bill is brought against a person, who was not a party to the original bill, and who claims no interest arising out of the matters in litigation in it, the defendant to the supplemental bill may demur; especially, if the supplemental bill prays that he may answer the matters charged in the original bill.\(^4\)

So, if the new facts or events shall have arisen subsequently to the filing of the original bill, but those new matters are immaterial to the relief sought under the original bill, or are such as may come before the Master under the proper decretal order, in the original cause, a demurrer will lie. For, if the new facts or events are not material, they are irrelevant; and if material, and yet they are now properly within the reach of the Court, or before the Master under the original cause, there is no ground why the record should be encumbered with superfluous matter. Another ground of demurrer to a supplemental bill is that the new matter is not properly supplemental to the matters in litigation between the parties to the original bill; but makes a new and different case.\(^5\)

If the new matters would make the original bill multifarious, then such new matter would not be the proper subject of an amended or a supplemental bill, and to the extent of such multifarious matter, the bill containing it would be demurrable. The original and amended bills when relating to the same subject are treated as one bill when demurred to; but a defendant who has answered the original bill cannot, on the filing of an amended bill, rely on any ground of demurrer to which the original bill was subject.\(^6\)

The form of a demurrer to an amended or supplemental bill is as follows:

DEMMURER TO A SUPPLEMENTAL OR AMENDED BILL.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et. al.
In the Chancery Court, at Memphis.

The defendant, Romeo Roe, demurs to the supplemental [or, amended,] bill filed against him in this cause.

1st. Because the matter of said supplemental [or, amended,] bill is wholly inconsistent with, and antagonistic to, the matter of the original bill; and is not matter proper for a supplemental [or, amended,] bill.

2d. Because [State any other grounds of demurrer, and conclude as in § 310, ante.]

§ 695. Answers to Amended and Supplemental Bills.—Pleas will lie to amended and supplemental bills, but they are so seldom filed as to be practically unknown. The common defence on the facts is made by answer. This answer may include a demurrer, if there be proper grounds therefor. If the defendant has not answered the original bill, the usual practice is to answer both the original and supplemental bills in the same answer.\(^7\)

If a new defendant is made, he must answer both the original and supplemental matter, for as to him it is a new suit; if new matter only is inserted in the supplemental bill, the original defendants need answer the new matter only.\(^8\)

The answer is subject to all the rules as to form, substance, verification, filing, and exceptions, that apply to answers to original bills.\(^9\)

The following is the form of an answer to an amended or a supplemental bill, the form in each case being the same:

ANSWER TO AN AMENDED OR SUPPLEMENTAL BILL.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et. al.
In Chancery, at Nashville.

The answer of the defendant, Romeo Roe, to the amended [or, supplemental,] bill, [or, to the original and amended bill, or, to the original and supplemental bill,] filed against him [and others] in this cause.

This defendant, for answer, says: [Here set out the answer and conclude as in case of an ordinary answer to an ordinary bill.]

§ 696. When an Answer to an Amended Bill Must be Filed.—In all cases where an amendment of the bill is made after answer filed, and an answer thereto is necessary, the defendants are allowed thirty days after the order, or after notice of the amendment, if notice is required by the order, to answer; and failing so to do, or to obtain further time, the matter of amendment may be taken as confessed, subject, however, to be set aside, by the Master before the cause is set for hearing, or by the Chancellor at any time, on good cause shown, accompanied by a full and sufficient answer, and upon such terms as may be imposed.\(^10\)

§ 697. Proceedings After Answer.—After the answer has been put in, and issue joined, the amended and supplemental bill and the original bill proceed pari passu, practically as one suit. If proof be needed on the issues raised by the amended or supplemental bill, and the answer thereto, it must be made as in case of an ordinary original bill; but a supplemental suit being merely a continuation of the original suit, whatever evidence was properly taken in the original suit, may be made use of in both suits, even though not entitled in the supplemental suit. If there has been no decree in the original suit, before the supplemental bill is filed, both bills will be heard together,\(^11\) and one decree will be made in both. If there has been a decree in the original suit, the two causes must nevertheless be heard together, so far as further orders may be needed in the original cause. If there be no further orders in the original cause, the supplemental bill must be heard alone; and if it is filed after decree, it must be heard on its own pleadings and evidence.\textsuperscript{12}

If the supplemental bill has been improperly filed, or if not proved, it will be dismissed at the hearing; but such dismissal will not affect the complainant's rights to the relief he seeks on his original bill.\textsuperscript{13}

§ 698. When a Suit in Chancery is Abated.—Whenever a suit in Chancery becomes defective, for want of parties before the Court, by or against whom it can, in whole or in part, be prosecuted, it is said to be abated. An abatement, in the sense of the common law, is an entire destruction of the suit, so that it is quashed and ended. But in the sense of Courts of Equity, an abatement signifies only a present suspension of all proceedings in the suit, from the want of proper parties capable of proceeding, or being proceeded against, therein. At the common law, a suit when abated, is absolutely dead. But in Equity a suit, when abated, is merely in a state of suspended animation; and may be revived. The death, or marriage, of one of the original parties to the suit, is the most common cause of the abatement of a suit in Equity. As the interest of a complainant usually extends to the whole suit, therefore, upon the death of a complainant, or the marriage of a female complainant, all proceedings become abated. Upon the death of a defendant, likewise, all proceedings become abated as to that defendant. But upon the marriage of a female defendant, the proceedings do not abate, although her husband ought to be named in the subsequent proceedings. Suits by public officers, in their official capacity, do not abate by the death of the individual holding the office, or by the expiration of his term, and no revivor in the name of his successor is necessary.

If any property or right in litigation, vested in a complainant, is transmitted to another, the person to whom it is transmitted, is entitled to supply the defects of the suit, if it has become defective merely; and to continue it, or at least to have the benefit of it, if it is abated. So, if any property or right, before vested in a defendant, becomes transmitted to another person, the complainant is entitled to render the suit perfect, if it has become defective, or to continue it, if it is abated, against the person to whom that property or right is transmitted.

1 When a party dies, the suit dies as to such party. The suit may, however, be resurrected by a scire facias, or a bill of revivor; but, until such a resur-

An abatement suspends proceedings. An attachment for contempt, or an injunction, or a receivership, is not affected by the death of the complainant. If the party attached, or enjoined, wishes to be relieved from his situation, he must apply to the Court; and the Court will ordinarily make an order that he be discharged, or the injunction dissolved, if the suit be not revived in a given time.

vs.
Richard Roe, et al.

In this cause the death of the defendant, Richard Roe, having been suggested and proved [or, admitted.] at the January, 1905, term of this Court, and no steps having been taken to revive the suit, it is ordered that the suit be abated and discontinued, and that complainant and Henry Doe, his prosecution surety, pay the costs of the cause, for which let an execution issue.

§ 699. Bill of Revivor.—According to the general practice of Courts of Equity, the mode of reviving and continuing suits, where there has been an abatement, is by a bill of revivor; and such a bill will lie whenever a party is disabled by death, marriage, bankruptcy, or otherwise, from further prosecuting or defending a suit, provided the interest of such party in the subject or object of the suit survives or continues, to a person not already a party.

If the interest of a party dying so determines, that it can no longer affect the suit, and no person becomes entitled thereupon to the same interest (which happens in the case of a tenant for life, or a person having a temporary or contingent interest, or an interest defeasible upon a contingency,) the suit does not so abate, as to require any proceeding to warrant the prosecution of the suit against the remaining parties. But, if the party so dying be the only complainant, or the only defendant, there will necessarily be an end of the suit, if there is no subject of litigation remaining. A suit for divorce and alimony cannot be revived.

Whenever there is an original bill and a cross-bill thereeto, if an abatement takes place, there must generally be a bill of revivor in each cause. But if the bills regard an account, and there is a decree for an account, the two causes become thereby so consolidated that one bill of revivor, praying for a revivor of the whole, will revive both causes.

If a man marries an administratrix, and a decree is obtained against him and his wife for a demand out of the assets of her intestate, and the wife dies before the decree is executed, the suit is abated; and the complainant must revive it against the administrator of the wife before any further proceedings can be 4 While an abatement exists as to a sole complainant or sole defendant, no step can be taken in the cause, whatever, except steps to abate or revive. The Court may, however, make orders relative to property in the custody of the law.

Unless the defendant was brought into Court by publication, in which case a sale of the decedent's land without reviver is valid. Dunlap v. Harvey, 3 Cates, 630; Code, §§ 3533-3534; 4280.

2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1543-1544. It is said in Thompson v. Hill, 5 Yerg., 418, that an injunction against an execution at law stands dissolved by the death of the defendant to the injunction bill, but that his representative cannot take out execution without being guilty of contempt of the Court, unless he obtains leave of the Court, which leave will be granted if a bill of revivor is not filed within a reasonable time. But this ruling is substantially the same as that stated in the text. The distinction made in this case between a supplemental bill to bring in devisees and a bill or revivor to bring in heirs, no longer exists in our practice. See Northman v. Liverpool Co., 1 Tenn. Ch., 317.

§ Churchwell v. Bank, 1 Heisk., 782. But the order of abatement will be set aside, if at any time during the term of its entry, steps are taken to revive.

had in the cause against the husband; for the assets in the hands of the wife, as administratrix, are primarily liable to satisfy the decree, and the husband is not liable beyond the amount of such assets which came into his or her hands after the marriage.

§ 700. When a Revivor is Unnecessary.—The death of one of the parties to a suit does not, however, produce such an abatement of it as to suspend all further proceedings, unless the interest of such party, or that which he represents, survives to some other person not already a party to the suit. If the whole interest of a party dying survives to another party to the suit, so that no claim can be made by or against the representatives of the party dying, the proceedings do not abate. If a bill is filed by or against trustees or executors, and one dies, not having possessed any of the property in question, or done any act relating to it, which may be questioned in the suit; or, if a bill is filed by or against husband and wife, in right of the wife, and the husband dies under circumstances which admit of no demand by or against his representatives, there is no abatement. If a surviving party can sustain the suit, as in the case of several creditors, complainants on behalf of themselves and other creditors, no revivor is necessary. If the entire interest of the decedent, on his death, descends to other parties before the Court, as in a partition or ejectment suit, or in a suit by or against partners, or joint-owners, in such case there is no abatement, and no need of a revivor, for the persons remaining before the Court have in them the whole interest in the matter in litigation.

If the interest of a party dying absolutely terminates with his death, there is no abatement: this happens on the death of a tenant for life, or on the death of any party having a temporary or contingent interest, terminating with his death. So, if the interest of a female in a suit terminates upon her marriage, no revivor against her husband would be necessary.

If, upon the death of the husband of a female complainant, suing in her right, the widow does not choose to proceed in the cause, the bill is considered as abated, and she is not liable for the costs. But if she takes any step in the suit after her husband’s death, she makes herself liable to the costs from the beginning. If she thinks proper to proceed in the cause, she may do so without a bill of revivor; for she alone has the whole interest, and the husband was a party in her right, and therefore the whole advantage of the proceedings survives to her; so that if any judgment has been obtained, even for costs, she will be entitled to the benefit of it. If a female complainant marries pending a suit, and afterwards, before revivor, her husband dies, a bill of revivor becomes unnecessary, her incapacity to prosecute the suit being removed. But the subsequent proceedings ought to be in the name, and with the description, which she has acquired by the marriage. And if the wife dies, pending a suit by herself and husband for an account of the rents of her estate, her personal representatives are not necessary parties to a bill of revivor.

If the complainant, in a bill of interpleader, should die after a decree that the defendants should interplead, there will be no abatement of the suit; for by such a decree the suit is terminated as to the complainant, although the litigation may still continue between the defendants under the decree of interpleader; and in that event the cause may still proceed, without any revivor against the representatives of the complainant.

Suits by public officers in their official capacity do not abate by the death of the individual holding the office, or the expiration of his term, and no revivor in the name of his successor is necessary.

§ 701. Proper Parties to a Bill of Revivor.—The party who succeeds to the rights of the decedent in the litigation is the proper person by or against whom the bill of revivor should be filed.\textsuperscript{18} If land is involved, the decedent’s heirs or devisees, or executors holding it under a will, must be made parties; if no land be involved, his administrator or executor must take his shoes.

If a creditor, who sues on behalf of himself and all other creditors, dies, the suit may be revived by his personal representative. If the latter does not choose to revive it, then any other creditor, at least any one who has proved his debt under a decree before the Master, may, by a supplemental bill, continue the cause, and proceed therein for the benefit of all the creditors. And this is on the ground that the creditor, so reviving, was really one of the original complainants, the suit being for his benefit.\textsuperscript{19}

A suit which has become entirely abated may be revived as to part only of the matter in litigation, or as to a part by one bill, and as to the other part by another.\textsuperscript{20} Thus, if the rights of a complainant in a suit upon his death become vested, a part in his real, and a part in his personal, representatives, the real representatives may revive the suit, so far as concerns his real estate, and the personal representatives, so far as concerns his personal estate.\textsuperscript{21} But the better practice would be to allow only one bill to be filed, and to require that all those not joining in it as complainants be made defendants. The rule is general that if some complainants, entitled to file a bill of revivor refuse to join it, they may be made defendants.\textsuperscript{22}

A bill of revivor, properly so called, lies only by or against the persons who are the proper representatives of the deceased party as to the matters in controversy. If the suit respects the personal assets only of the deceased party, his executor or administrator is the proper party, by or against whom the bill is to be filed. If the suit respects the real estate of the deceased party, his heirs or devisees are the proper parties to the bill of revivor.\textsuperscript{23} If the suit respects both the real and personal estate, then both the real and personal representatives must be parties to the bill.\textsuperscript{24} The one question to be answered in considering the proper person to revive, or to revive against, is who, in law, stands in the shoes of the decedent.\textsuperscript{25} Hence, if a decedent has parted with his interest pending the suit, it may be revived by or against the successor in interest, instead of the personal representative or heir.\textsuperscript{26} Where after a defendant dies, his heirs transfer their interest to a third person before any revivor, the latter should be made a party by a bill of revivor and supplement.\textsuperscript{27} So, if the decedent was a bankrupt, the suit should be revived in the name of his assignee in bankruptcy.\textsuperscript{28}

If there are several complainants, and the defendant dies, some of them may proceed to revive without the others, if the latter refuse; for the obstinacy of some of the parties shall not hinder the rest from asserting their own interest. But in such cases the original complainants, who refuse to join, should be made defendants to the bill of revivor.\textsuperscript{29}

A test for the complainant to apply, when a defendant dies, is: to ascertain which set of his representatives is necessary to enable him to obtain the full relief he seeks on the pleadings as they stand. And a test for the defendants to apply, when a revivor is sought against them by the complainants, is: to ascertain whether the estate they derive from the decedent can, in any way be directly affected by a decree on the pleadings as they stand.\textsuperscript{30}

If the decedent is a complainant and a next friend, a new next friend or guardian must be obtained to prosecute the suit, unless the person for whom the decedent sues has become \textit{sui juris}, in which case no revivor is necessary. If the decedent is a complainant guardian, a new guardian must revive, or a next friend may revive, on motion, in lieu of the deceased guardian. If the suit is against a decedent guardian, in the right of his ward, it must be revived against the new guardian, but in case there be no new guardian the Court would, on motion, appoint a guardian ad litem to represent the person under disability. Where the abatement is occasioned by the marriage of a female complainant, the suit may be revived by the husband and wife jointly, unless the suit was for the wife’s separate property, free from her husband’s control, in which case a next friend must revive for her, and her husband must be made a defendant.

A suit by an administrator may, on his death, be revived by his administrator, or by an administrator de bonis non of the original decedent.

§ 702. When the Widow Should be Made a Party.—When the suit is liable to affect lands in which the widow of the deceased defendant has rights of homestead and dower, she should be made a party by bill of revivor, so that she may be bound by the decree, if she have no rights, and so that her homestead and dower may be assigned before sale, if she have such rights, or so that, if she elect, the land be sold free from homestead and dower, and she be given the money value thereof out of the proceeds.

The widow’s right to homestead is not derived through the heirs of her husband, and on his death, survives directly to her, and becomes hers; and, on the death of her husband, if she be not made a party to a suit affecting the land in which she claims a homestead, she may litigate her claims in an independent suit. Hence, it is manifest that, when a claim for homestead can be set up, the widow must be revived against. The heirs do not represent her, or her interests; on the other hand, there is some conflict between her rights of homestead, and the heirs’ rights, to the same land.

§ 703. When a Defendant may File a Bill of Revivor.—A defendant may file a bill of revivor after a decree, in case he has a beneficial interest therein, or can derive a benefit from the further proceedings in the case. This is especially true after a decree ordering an account, for in such a case both parties are actors. And it would seem, on principle, that where a defendant had concurrent interests with the complainants in the benefits of the relief sought, or had any beneficial interest in the relief sought, he would be entitled to file a bill of revivor, and this right is now fully established by statute.

If one or more of several complainants die, and the suit is not revived within the two terms allowed, the defendant may revive, or elect to proceed to trial with the surviving complainant, or may have the suit abated, if revivor is necessary. But when a bill of revivor is filed by a defendant, it merely substantiates the suit, and brings before the Court the parties necessary to see to the execution of the decree, and to be the objects of its operations, rather than to litigate the claims made by the several parties in the original pleadings, except so far as they remain undecided. Nor will a revivor by a defendant take from the complainant the conduct of the case, unless so ordered by Court.

When any sole executor or administrator is complainant or defendant, and dies, the suit may be revived by or against the executor, administrator de bonis non, or other successor in interest of the decedent.

§ 704. What Matters are in Issue upon a Bill of Revivor.—A defendant to a bill of revivor cannot, in his answer to the bill, go into the merits of the controversy in the original suit. If it is alleged in the bill of revivor that he stands in the shoes of the decedent as regards the matters in controversy, that is the only issue.\textsuperscript{42} If he is not the heir, or the executor, or administrator, or other successor in interest, of the decedent as alleged, on his denial thereof the complainant in the bill of revivor must prove it, or fail to sustain his bill. On the other hand, if the complainant seeks to revive the suit in his own name as heir, executor, administrator, or other successor, of the decedent, the defendant may deny this, and unless the allegation be proven, the bill must be dismissed. The matters in issue upon a bill of revivor are the matters of issue presented by that bill, and not any matters presented by the original bill.

The only thing for litigation on a bill of revivor is whether the new party brought before the Court has the representative character imputed to him,\textsuperscript{43} and whether the time has elapsed within which a bill of revivor is permissible.\textsuperscript{44} If, however, the complainant in the bill of revivor does not properly present the question of revivor in his bill; for instance, if he made a mis-statement of the original bill material to the matter of a revivor, the defendant, in his answer to the latter bill, may correct such mis-statement; and so may he, in any case, by his answer to the bill of revivor, bring before the Court any matter proper for the Court's consideration on the question of revivor, or of the proper person to take the shoes of the decedent. Hence, the general rule that upon a bill of revivor, the sole questions before the Court are the competency of the party to revive, and the correctness of the frame of the bill to revive.\textsuperscript{45}

Wherever a suit abates by death, and the interest of the person whose death has caused the abatement is transmitted by operation of law to an heir at law, or an executor, or administrator, so that the title cannot be disputed, the only question in issue is whether the person seeking to revive, or sought to be revived against, is that representative.

If a suit abates by the marriage of a female complainant, and no act is done to affect the rights of the party but the marriage, no title can be disputed: the person of the husband is the sole fact to be ascertained.\textsuperscript{46}

Where a bill of revivor is filed against a non-resident as devisee without attachment of property, a \textit{pro confessio} only creates an issue, and the death of the testator, and the devisee as alleged, must be proved before any decree can be pronounced.\textsuperscript{47}

\textsection{705. Some General Results of a Revivor.}—Bills of Revivor, in all their varieties, when sustained, have the effect of putting the new parties in the shoes of those they represent, whether the privity be of blood or of estate, by operation of law or act of the parties.\textsuperscript{48} On revivor, the suit stands in the same condition as the original bill at the time of the abatement, and is considered as pending from the filing of the original bill, so as not to be affected by the statute of limitations. If the defendant has not answered the original bill, he must answer it after the revivor; or, if a \textit{pro confessio} had been properly taken on the original bill, the benefit of it will accrue to the complainant in the bill of revivor.\textsuperscript{49}

If the original bill has been answered, no further answer is required,\textsuperscript{50} or allowed, unless a discovery of assets is desired from the personal representative of the deceased defendant; the depositions of witnesses, if any have been taken, may be read at the hearing, or for any other purpose for which the original parties might have used them; and, if the cause has proceeded to a final decree, it will continue in force against the new party.\textsuperscript{51}

On a revivor, the new party occupies the shoes of the original party, and is bound by his answer, if filed, and by all orders and decrees affecting him, and by all agreements made by him.\textsuperscript{52} And this is especially true of a personal rep-representative, and of heirs, whether adults or minors, who can take up the defense only at the point where the decedent left.\textsuperscript{53}

The new party brought before the Court by revivor, not only stands exactly in the same plight and condition as the party whose place he takes, but as he receives the benefits of all former proceedings, if any, so he is bound by all the liabilities thereof, if any, and may be subject to all the costs of the proceedings from the beginning of the suit.\textsuperscript{54} But, when the husband of a female complainant revives a suit after marriage, he gives security for the costs, in which case the original prosecution sureties are discharged from all liability for subsequently accruing costs.\textsuperscript{55}

\textbf{§ 706. Summary of the Rules Relative to Revivors.—}The following are the principal rules governing revivors when \textit{a defendant dies}.\textsuperscript{56}

1. \textbf{The Personal Representatives}\textsuperscript{57} are the proper persons to revive against, when the relief sought against the decedent would in any way have made him liable for any debt, duty, or damage, or in any way have affected his title, rights, interests, or claims, in or to, personality of any sort, including money, debts, choses in action, bonds, stocks, securities, real or personal, leases of land, goods, merchandise, and chattels of all kinds.

2. \textbf{The Real Representatives}\textsuperscript{58} are the proper persons to revive against, when the relief sought against the decedent would, in any way, have affected his title, rights, interests, or claims, in, or to, real estate, not including leases on lands, but including all lands the legal title to which was in him to secure debts, or in him for any other trust purpose.

3. \textbf{Both the Real and the Personal Representatives} must be revived against when the relief sought would have affected both the real and the personal estate of the decedent, as shown in the two preceding paragraphs.

The following are the principal rules as to who are the proper persons to revive a suit when \textit{the complainant dies}:

1. \textbf{The Personal Representatives} are the proper persons to revive, if the object of the suit is to declare, protect, secure, recover, enforce, or otherwise affect, rights to, or interests in, personality of any kind: the term personality here includes money, debts, duty, damages, choses in action, bonds, stocks, securities real and personal, leases of land, goods, merchandise, and chattels of all sorts.

2. \textbf{The Real Representatives} are the proper persons to revive, if the object of the suit is to declare, protect, secure, recover, or enforce, rights to, or interests in, real estate.

3. \textbf{Both the Real and the Personal Representatives} are the proper persons to revive a suit, if rights to, or interests in, both real and personal estate, are sought to be declared, protected, secured, recovered, enforced, or otherwise affected.

And the whole matter may be still further summarized as follows: 1. If the suit affects the personal estate exclusively, the personal representative must exclusively take the decedent’s place. 2. If the suit affects the real estate exclusively, the real representatives must exclusively take the decedent’s place. 3. If the suit affects both the real and the personal estate, both the real and the personal representatives of the decedent must take his place.

And the fundamental test of the proper set of representatives to take the decedent’s place is: which set will be directly benefited or injured by the relief

\textsuperscript{56} By defendant is here meant a defendant against whom relief is prayed, and not a defendant whose rights and interest are concurrent, in whole or in part, with those of the complainant.

\textsuperscript{58} The term, "real representatives," in this Chapter includes heirs, devisees, and the assignees of realty transferred during the litigation. It will, also, include the executor when the will devises him any title to the realty in dispute; and, if there be a widow with homestead rights, she would, also, be included among the real representatives, and should be made a party defendant along with the sought. The set liable to either benefit or injury, as the direct result of the suit, is the proper set to take his place.

§ 707. Revivor of Decrees.—A decree may be revived by and against the same parties, by and against whom a pending suit may be revived; and the procedure is the same, as heretofore stated.60 The revivor may be on a bill filed for that purpose, or on a scire facias, under the statute.

Where a bill is filed by a complainant to revive a suit after a decree, and to prosecute the decree, it is not competent for the defendant in his answer to resist the revival, by stating matter which existed before the decree, or which has arisen since, affecting the merits of the decree; and such matter, if stated, will be treated as impertinent. The reason is, that if the facts existed before the decree, and the proper time for making them a part of the defence has been permitted to pass by, the omission cannot be supplied in this manner; and if new matter has arisen since the decree, varying the situation of the parties, other means exist for bringing it forward. The right of a party to prosecute a decree, and to do what is necessary for that purpose, cannot depend upon the merits of the decree.61

Where a bill of revivor is brought by a defendant after a decree, it merely substantiates the suit, and brings before the Court the parties necessary to see to the execution of the decree, and to be the objects of its operations, rather than to litigate the claims made by the several parties in the original pleadings, except so far as they remain undecided.62 Any event that has transpired since the decree was entered, whereby the decree has been satisfied, discharged, released or barred, may be set up in defence to any attempt to revive the decree, whether such attempt be by a bill of revivor, or by a scire facias.63 The defendant to the decree may, also, plead and show that the decree is barred by the statute of limitations.64

When a decree is revived, it is not proper to pronounce a new decree for the amount of the former decree and accrued interest; for that can be done only in a suit brought on the former decree. On a revivor, the proper decree is to order that the original decree be, and stand, revived in favor of the new party thereunto entitled, or against the new party standing in the decedent’s shoes, as the case may be.65 The following will serve as a form in case of a revivor, omitting the caption and recitals of the decree:

REVIVOR OF A DECREES.

It is, therefore, ordered and decreed by the Court, that the decree, made in this cause, on July 9, 1885, in favor of the complainant, John Doe, and against the said defendant, Richard Roe, for the sum of one thousand dollars, and the costs of the cause, [or, for the tract of land in said decree described,] be and the same is in all things revived against Robert Roe, as the administrator, [or, heir at law,] of said Richard Roe; and that execution issue on said decree of July 9, 1885, for said sum of one thousand dollars, interest thereon, and for said costs, and, also, for the costs of this proceeding, to be levied on the goods and chattels, rights and credits, in the hands of said Robert Roe to be administered, [or, if the revivor is against the heir as to said land, add, after the word “revived,” against Robert Roe, the sole heir at law of said Richard Roe; and that a writ of possession issue to put the complainant in possession of said tract of land, and that an execution issue against said Robert Roe, as administrator, for the costs adjudged against his intestate in said decree of July 9, 1885, and against him in his own right for the costs of this proceeding to revive said decree.66

If the original decree or the record in the cause, or both, have been lost, mutilated, or destroyed, it may still be revived, either by a bill of revivor, or by a scire facias, for, in contemplation of law, the decree is regarded in existence.67

§ 708. Frame of a Bill of Revivor.—A bill of revivor must state in brief terms: (1) the filing of the original bill, (2) who were the complainants and 66 The heir would not be liable for the costs of the original suit, such costs being a charge against the decedent’s personal estate. In such a case, it would be proper to revive against the heir as to the land, and against the administrator as to the costs.

defendants to it, (3) what its prayer or object was, (4) the several proceedings thereon, (5) the abatement, (6) the title of the complainant to revive the suit, (7) so much new matter, and no more, as is requisite to show how the complainant becomes entitled to revive, and (8) must charge that the cause ought to be revived, and to stand in the same condition, with respect to the parties to the original cause as it was at the time when the abatement happened; and it (9) must pray, that the suit may be revived accordingly. It may likewise be necessary, in many cases against personal representatives, to charge that they have assets, and to pray that the defendant may answer the bill of revivor; for an admission of assets, or an account of the personal estate may be requisite, from the representative of a deceased party. In this latter case, if the defendant does admit assets, the cause may proceed against him upon an order of revivor merely. But if he does not make that admission, the cause must be heard for the purpose of obtaining the necessary accounts of the estate of the deceased party, to answer the demands made against it by the suit. And the prayer of the bill, therefore, in such a case usually is, not only that the suit may be revived, but also, that in case the defendant shall not admit assets to answer the purposes of the suit, such accounts may be taken. And, so far, the bill is in the nature of an original bill. But upon a bill of revivor proper, the sole questions before the Court are the competency of the parties to revive or be revived against, and the correctness of the frame of a bill of revivor.67

If a defendant to an original bill dies, before putting in an answer; or after an answer to which exceptions have been taken; or after an amendment to the bill, to which no answer has been filed; the bill of revivor, although requiring in itself no answer, must pray that the person, against whom it seeks to revive the suit, may answer the original bill, or so much of it as the exceptions taken to the answer of the former defendant extend to, or as the amendment, remaining unanswered, requires.68

§ 709. Form of a Bill of Revivor.—The form of a bill of revivor will, perhaps, better appear by an illustration, than by description.

BILL OF REVIVOR.

To the Hon. Albert G. Hawkins, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Huntingdon, for the county of Carroll:

John Doe, complainant, Robert Roe, defendant.
Both residents of Carroll county.

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That on July 10, 1890, he filed his original bill in this Court against Richard Roe to recover a debt due him from said Roe, [or, to recover a tract of land in said bill described, or, otherwise, as the case may be, briefly stated.] The said Richard Roe was made a defendant to said bill by due process, and answered the said bill, [if such be the fact:] and depositions were taken in the cause, and other proof filed, [if such be the facts:] and the cause was heard, and the following final decree was pronounced [setting out the decree in full. If no decree was pronounced, this part of the bill will be omitted, of course.]

II.

Since said bill was filed, [or, since said answer was filed; or, since said proof was filed; or, since said decree was pronounced,] the said defendant to said original bill, Richard Roe, has died intestate, [or, testate,] and Robert Roe, the defendant to this bill, has been appointed his administrator, [or, has duly qualified as his executor, or, if real estate is involved, is his sole heir at law, or, his sole devisee] and succeeds to all of the rights and liabilities of the said Richard Roe, deceased, in said original cause.

III.

Complainant is advised that he is entitled to have said suit [or, decree,] revived against the said Robert Roe as the administrator [or, executor, or, heir, or, devisee,] of the said Richard Roe, deceased; and he, therefore, prays:

1st. That said Robert Roe be made a party defendant to this bill by service of subpoena, [or, by publication, if he is a non-resident;] and that he be required to answer this bill, but his oath to his answer is waived.

555  BILLS OF REVIVOR.  § 709
2d. That said suit, [or, decree,] may be revived against him as the administrator [or, executor, or, heir, or, devisee.] of said Richard Roe, deceased, and may on such revivor stand in the same plight and condition as it was at the time of the death of said Richard Roe.

3d. That complainant may have such other and further relief in the premises as equity may require, and as to your Honor shall seem meet.

HAWKINS & HAWKINS, Solicitors.

If the complainant seeks to revive in his own name as administrator, executor, heir, or devisee, he will recite in his bill the death of the original complainant, and that he is his administrator, executor, heir, or devisee, and will pray that the suit, or decree, be revived in his name as such administrator, executor, heir, or devisee, against the defendant, and to stand in the same plight and condition in which it was at the time of the death of the original complainant and for general relief.

STATUTORY METHODS OF REVIVOR.

§ 710. Revivor by Motion.
§ 711. Revivor by Scire Facias, or Notice.
§ 712. What a Scire Facias Against Heirs Should Show.
§ 713. Defences to a Scire Facias, How Made.

§ 710. Revivor by Motion.—The tendency of the times is toward simplicity in pleading; and mere formalism is more and more departed from. Our statutes provide two simple and efficacious methods of revivor: one, by mere motion, and the other by scire facias, or notice.¹

The person entitled to the place of the deceased party, whether complainant or defendant, may, on his own motion, and, of course, on proper proof of his title, take the place of such deceased party, and have the cause revived in his name.² If all parties should consent, no proof of the person’s title to revive would be necessary. If his title to the place of the deceased party is not admitted, he may prove it by oral evidence, if he is an heir, or an assignee; by written evidence if a vendee; by letters of administration or guardianship, if an administrator or guardian; and by production of the will and record proof of its probate and his qualification, if an executor.

So the adverse party, whether complainant or defendant, may revive the suit against the proper person entitled to the place of the deceased party, with the consent of that person, on mere motion,³ whether such person be complainant or defendant.

The husband of a female complainant may make himself a party complainant by motion, on giving bond with good security for the prosecution of the suit;⁴ and the suit may be revived, at any time before the final disposition thereof, against the husband of a female party, on motion with his consent.⁵

A suit may be revived in the name of infants by their next friend, by motion, they being the heirs and successors of a deceased complainant.⁶

¹ Code, §§ 4425; 2855-2856. While, however, the statutory methods render a bill of revivor unnecessary, in many cases, it must not be, on that account, supposed that the rules and principles governing bills of revivor, and proceedings thereon, are in any way superseded, or abridged. On the contrary, all of those rules and principles apply with full force when a revivor is undertaken, either by motion or by scire facias. The motion, or scire facias, supersedes the bill of revivor as a pleading, only; the rights, duties, and liabilities of the parties are precisely the same whether the revivor be attempted or consummated by a bill of revivor, or by motion, or by scire facias; and, as a consequence, the rules and principles defining the rights, duties, and liabilities of the parties set forth in the first Article of this Chapter are equally applicable to this Article.

ORDERS OF REVIVOR ON MOTION.

§ 711. Revivor by Scire Facias, or Notice.—If the person entitled to the place of the deceased party, does not on his own motion, or by his consent, become a party by revivor, the adverse party, whether complainant or defendant, may revive against him by scire facias, or notice. 7 And so, where a female party marries during the progress of a suit, a revivor may be had against her husband, by scire facias, at any time before the final disposition of the suit. 8

The scire facias, or notice, may issue in term time, or in vacation, 9 upon motion of the complainant; and it need only (1) give the names of the parties; and (2) recite the filing of the bill, (3) the pendency of the suit, and (4) the death or marriage, as the case may be, of the particular party, and (5) require the person against whom it is issued to appear, and show cause why the suit should not be revived against him, as the person entitled to the decedent's place in the subject-matter of the litigation, or as the husband of the married female party. 10 On the return of the scire facias duly executed, the Clerk and Master in vacation, or the Court in term time, will make an order of revivor, as a matter of course, unless good cause to the contrary be shown. 11

If any additional matter is to be set up, by way of amendment or supplement to the original bill, the method of revivor by scire facias, or notice, will be inadequate, and the ordinary Chancery procedure by bill of revivor, in some one of its various forms, must be resorted to.

§ 712. What a Scire Facias Against Heirs Should Show.—If no person will administer on the estate of a deceased plaintiff or defendant, the suit may be revived by or against the heirs of the decedent. 12 The statute evidently contemplates a revivor by or against the heirs as the representatives of the personal estate, rather than of the real estate. The existing practice allowed a revivor by or against the heirs as the representatives of the real estate, and hence there was no need of a statute for such a revivor. For this reason, if the suit affects both the realty and the personalty of the decedent, (as a suit to resell a land sale,) and the defendant sought to be charged dies, and an ordinary scire facias issues against his heirs, the presumption of law arises that the revivor is sought against them solely as heirs at law, that is, as representatives of the decedent's real estate; and the heirs have the right to rely on that presumption; and no decree can properly be rendered against them, on such a revivor, holding them liable on a personal judgment, as the representatives of the decedent's personal estate. 13 Hence, if the complainant in any suit, and especially in one of the character mentioned where the defendant may be held liable for either a real

7 The scire facias should be made returnable to, and the cause revived, at a rule day. Code, §§ 4429; 4418. See post. § 1163.
§ 713. DEFENCES TO A SCIRE FACIAS, HOW MADE.—The defences to a scire facias are the same as to a bill of revivor, and when a revivor is sought by motion, scire facias, or notice, under the statutory provisions, the persons proceeded against may resist the revivor upon any sufficient ground, such as that they are not the executors, administrators, devisees, or heirs, or are not all of them, or are not the guardians, or the assignees, or have no interest in the litigation. Or, to express these defences briefly: the defendant to the proceedings to revive, whether such proceeding be by motion, or by scire facias, may show either that he does not stand in the shoes of the decedent, or that he has no interest in the suit.

When such a contest arises, the proof may be made in open Court, or by the depositions of witnesses taken upon notice, or by proof before the Clerk and Master on a reference. This last method is the most convenient and most consistent with Chancery practice. Proof of witnesses, orally examined in open Court, should not be heard except by consent of all adverse parties, and in such case they must all be capable of giving their consent.

§ 714. EXTENT OF THE LIABILITIES RESULTING FROM A REVIVOR.—This question has already been somewhat considered, but more especially in view of the non-statutory practice. It may be stated, as a general rule, that the parties made such by a revivor occupy the shoes of the decedent, and are entitled to the rights he possessed, and are subject to all the liabilities he had incurred, down to and including the day of his death, and to none other. If there be any burdens, they must bear them; and if there be any benefits, they are entitled to them.

But when a revivor takes place against persons who represent the estate of the decedent, they cannot be held liable beyond the value of such estate. Hence, on a revivor against an executor or administrator, or against heirs when there is no administrator, they can be held liable only to the extent of the assets, or of the complainant’s proportion of the assets, in their hands subject to the decedent’s debts. And when a revivor is had against heirs, both as personal and as real representatives, the execution can be levied only on the goods and chattels of the deceased in their possession subject to execution; and, if 14 Preston v. Golde, 12 Lea, 267. The Code language, (§ 2849), is, "If no person will administer on the estate of a deceased plaintiff or defendant, the suit may be revived by or against the heirs of the decedent." An allegation in the order, and in the scire facias, that no one "will" administer would be difficult of direct proof. The fact, however, that no one has administered, and that reasonable time has elapsed for any one desiring it to have himself appointed administrator, will be accepted by the Court as proof that no one will administer. Besides, if the heirs desire to protect themselves from liability to be revived against, they or some one or more of them can do so by administering themselves.

17 Campbell v. Hubbard, 11 Lea, 6; Mayfield v. Stephenson, 6 Bax., 401.

18 In Mayfield v. Stephenson, 6 Bax., 401, where a revivor was had by the administrator and heirs of the complainant, on motion, and it not appearing in the record in what way the heirship was proven, the Supreme Court says they "must assume that the persons named as heirs in this order of revivor in their names] were either admitted to be the heirs, or proven to be, to the satisfaction of the Court." On a collateral attack, this revivor was held good. From this it may be inferred that parol proof of heirship in such cases is admissible, if the fact of heirship is not controverted.

19 See, ante, § 705.

no such goods, or not sufficient, then only on the lands and tenements of the deceased which may have descended to the heirs, subject to execution. 21 No property, real or personal, that would not be liable to the deceased’s debts in case of administration, would be subject to execution against heirs.

§ 715. Forms Used in Reviving Causes.—The following forms illustrate the statutory methods of proving the death, marriage, and representative capacity of parties, when a revivor is sought:

PROOF OF DEATH AND MARRIAGE, AND ORDER FOR A SCIRE FACIAS.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et. al.

In this cause, the death of Richard Roe and the marriage of Rachel Roe were duly proved in open Court; [or, before the Master at the April, 1891, rules,] and it being suggested that Robert Roe is the administrator, [or, sole heir.] of said Richard Roe, deceased; and that John Smith is the husband of said Rachel Roe, on motion of complainant, it is ordered that a scire facias issue to make these facts known to said Robert Roe and said John Smith, and to summon them to appear at the next term of this Court, [or, at the June rules of this Court, or, before the Clerk and Master of this Court on the 1st Monday in June next,] to show cause, if any they or either of them have, why this suit should not be revived against the said Robert Roe as administrator [or, sole heir,] aforesaid, and against said John Smith as the husband of said Rachel Roe.

The foregoing form will adequately indicate the phraseology to be used by the Master, in like cases, when the death or marriage of a party is proved before him on a rule day, and a scire facias to revive applied for. The following is the usual form of a scire facias in the Chancery Court:

SCIRE FACIAS TO REVIVE.

The State of Tennessee,

To the Sheriff of Blount county:

Whereas, a bill was filed in the Chancery Court at Maryville, on May 1st, 1890, by John Doe against Richard Roe and Rachel Roe, which suit is still in said Court, pending and undetermined;

And whereas it was suggested at the April, 1891, term of said Court [or, before me, at the April, 1891, rules of said Court,] that said Richard Roe was dead, and that Robert Roe was his administrator [or, sole heir,] and that said Rachel Roe had married John Smith;

And the said complainant having moved for a scire facias against said Robert Roe and John Smith to show cause, if any they have, why this suit should not be revived against them respectively as such administrator [or, heir] and husband; and the said Court having, at said April, 1891, term, ordered a scire facias to issue;

You are, therefore, commanded to make these facts known to said Robert Roe and said John Smith, and to summon each of them to appear before the said Chancery Court at its next term, to be held in the Court House, in Maryville, on the 3d Monday in October next, [or, to appear before me, at my office, in the Court House in Maryville, on the 1st Monday of June, 1891,] to show cause, if any they, or either of them, have, why the said suit should not be revived against the said Robert Roe as the administrator, [or, heir,] of said Richard Roe, deceased, and against said John Smith as the husband of said Rachel Roe.

This May 4, 1891.

W. C. CHUMLEA, C. & M.

ORDER OF REVIVOR, ON A SCIRE FACIAS.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et. al.

In this cause, the scire facias heretofore ordered to be issued, having been issued and duly served on Robert Roe and John Smith more than five days before the first day of this term, [or, if the revivor be at rules, before this the first Monday of June, 1891,] and neither of them having shown any cause why this suit should not be revived against the said Robert Roe as the administrator [or, heir,] of Richard Roe, and against the said John Smith as the husband of Rachel Roe, it is, therefore, ordered that this suit be revived against them respectively accordingly.

ORDER OF REVIVOR BY CONSENT.

In this cause, it being admitted that the defendant, Richard Roe, has died, and the defendant, Rachael Roe, has married, since the last term of the Court, and that Robert Roe is the administrator [or, heir] of said Richard Roe, and that John Smith is the husband of said Rachel Roe, and said Robert Roe and said John Smith in open Court, [or, by their respective Solicitors] admitting these facts, by their consent this cause is revived against said Robert Roe as said administrator, [or, heir] and against said John Smith as said husband, and is ordered to stand in the same plaint and condition in which it was at the time of said death and marriage.

If the revivor is on motion, or by consent of the parties, the orders would be as follows, omitting the style of the cause:

ORDERS OF REVIVOR, ON MOTION.

In this case, the death of John Doe, the complainant, was this day proved in open Court; and thereupon came David Doe, and presented his letters of administration on the estate of said John Doe, deceased, [or, proved that he was the heir at law of said John Doe, deceased,] and moved the Court to revive this cause in his name as the administrator [or, heir] of said John Doe, deceased, which motion was by the Court allowed, and the cause revived accordingly, and ordered to stand in the same plaint and condition in which it stood at the death of the said John Doe.

ORDER FOR SCIROS FACIAS TO REVIVE A DECREE.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe.

In this cause the complainant by his Solicitor, suggested and proved the death of the defendant, Richard Roe, and further suggested that Roland Roe was his administrator [or executor, or heir, or devisee] and moved that a scire facias issue against him, the said Roland Roe, to show cause, if any he have, why the decree rendered against Richard Roe in this Court in favor of complainant on the—day of—, 19—, [giving its date] should not be revived against him as such administrator [or executor, or heir, or devisee].

Whereupon, and on consideration of the record in the cause, said motion is allowed and said writ22 ordered to be issued.

ORDER REVIVING A DECREE.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe.

In this case, the scire facias heretofore ordered to be issued against Roland Roe, as the administrator [or executor, or heir, or devisee] of the defendant, Richard Roe, now deceased, having been issued and duly served on said Roland Roe more than five days before the first day of this term, and he having shown no cause why the decree rendered against the defendant, Richard Roe, now deceased, in favor of complainant on the—day of—, 19—, [giving its date] should not be revived against him, the said Roland Roe, as the administrator [or executor, or heir, or devisee]23 of said Richard Roe, on motion of complainant and on consideration of the record in the cause, it is ordered adjudged and decreed, that said motion be allowed and said decree revived, and that complainant have and recover.24 [Here set out the decree revived, but substituting the name of Roland Roe as administrator, or executor, or devisee of Richard Roe, in the place and stead of the name of Richard Roe].

It is further ordered and decreed that the Solicitor's lien of Charles H. Smith, Esq., on said former decree attach to the decree hereby revived. The defendant, Roland Roe, as administrator, [or executor, or heir, or devisee] will pay the costs incidental to the scire facias and revivor of said decree, for which an execution is awarded.

§ 716. Statutory Provisions Relative to the Abatement and Revivor of Suits. It is provided by the Code that no action shall abate by the death, marriage, or other disability of any of the parties, complainant or defendant, or by the transfer of any interest in the suit by any party, if the cause of action survives or continues.25

1. Statutory Provisions Relative to Abatement by Death. No civil actions commenced, whether founded on wrongs or contracts, except actions for wrongs affecting the character of the plaintiff, shall abate by the death of either party, but may be revived. The intervention of a term between the death of a party, and the qualification of the personal representative shall not work an abatement or discontinuance of the suit. Nor shall the suit abate or discontinue for the 22 If the decree related to land it must be revived against the heir, or devisee; if to personality or debt, against the administrator or executor. See, ante, § 701.

23 If the decree affects reality, the revivor must be against the heir, or devisee. See, ante, §§ 113; 701.

24 The complainant is only entitled to interest from the date of the decree. Rogers v. Hollingsworth, 11 Pick., 357.

death of either party, until the second term after the death has been suggested and proved or admitted, and entry to that effect made of record, 26.

2. Statutory Provisions Relative to Revivors. If no person will administer on the estate of a deceased plaintiff or defendant, the suit may be revived by or against the heirs of the decedent. If the decedent has parted with his interest pending the suit, it may be revived by or against the successor in interest instead of the representative or heir. 27

Where one or more of several plaintiffs, not partners, dies, the person entitled to represent the decedent may revive, by motion, at any time before the cause is tried or abated. But, if the suit is not thus revived within the two terms allowed, the defendant may revive or elect to proceed to trial with the surviving plaintiff, or abate the suit, if revivor is necessary.

When any sole executor or administrator is plaintiff or defendant, and dies, the suit may be revived by or against the executor, administrator de bonis non, or other successor in interest of the decedent.

No appeal or writ of error in any cause or court shall abate by the death of either plaintiff or defendant, but may be revived by or against the heir, personal representative, or assign, under the foregoing rules. 28

The action may be revived by the proper person, entitled to the decedent’s place, by motion alone. And by the adverse party against such proper person, by consent of that person, on mere motion; and, without consent, by scire facias or notice. The scire facias or notice may be sued out in term time or vacation, and the order to revive be made as of course, unless good cause to the contrary be shown on the return of the process. 29

Where a suit is commenced in the name of one person for the use of another, and the nominal plaintiff dies, the suit may be prosecuted, without revivor, as if the death had not happened. 30

Suits abated by the death of either party may be revived by or against the heir, personal representative, guardian or assign, as the case may be, who may be legally entitled to the decedent’s place in the subject-matter of litigation. 31

3. Statutory Provisions for Revivor in Case of Marriage. No action in a Court of law or Equity by or against a woman abates by her marriage, but may be revived by or against her husband. The husband of a female plaintiff may make himself a party plaintiff by motion, and by giving bond with good security to prosecute the suit with effect, or to pay the costs of suit, as in other cases. On the execution of such bond, the original security for the prosecution is discharged from liability for subsequently accruing costs. The suit may be revived at any time before final disposition thereof, against the husband of a female defendant by motion, with his consent, or by scire facias without consent. 32

4. Statutory Provisions in Chancery Practice. The following statutory provisions, in the Chapter devoted to the Practice of Courts of Chancery, are to be construed along with those hereinabove given, and as parts of one general system of revivers:

Upon the death of a defendant, or marriage of a female defendant, the suit may be revived by scire facias or notice to the heirs, or personal representatives, or husband, without the necessity of filing a bill of revivor. The Clerk and Master shall issue this scire facias, or notice, at any time, upon motion of the complainant, entering the same upon his rules, and including in each writ issued to any county all the parties residing in that county. Persons made defendants under these sections, may make the same defence to the revival of such suits, as if made parties by the former practice of the Courts of Chancery. The scire facias need only give the names of the parties, and recite the filing of the bill, pendency of the suit, and death or marriage as the case may be, and thereupon require the parties against whom it is issued, to appear and show cause why the suit should not be revived. Bills of revivor, amended, and supplemental bills, if resorted to, may be filed at any time in the Clerk's office; and the process may be made returnable, and the suit revived at a rule day.

ARTICLE III.

BILLS AKIN TO BILLS OF REVIVOR.

§ 717. Original Bills in the Nature of Bills of Revivor.

§ 717. Original Bills in the Nature of Bills of Revivor.—In most of the cases already stated, there is no other fact to be ascertained than whether the new party brought before the Court has the character imputed to him. If he has, the revivor is of course. But there are many cases, in which there are other facts which may be brought into litigation besides the mere question of the character of the new party; and to such cases, therefore, the simple bill of revivor does not technically apply. Under such circumstances, an original bill, in the nature of a bill of revivor, is the appropriate pleading to bring those facts before the Court, and to put the original proceedings again in motion, and to enable the new party to have the benefit of the former proceedings. Thus, if the death of a party, whose interest is not determined by his death, is attended with such a transmission of his interest, that the title to it, as well as the person entitled, may be litigated in the Court of Chancery, as in the case of a devise of real estate, the suit is not permitted to be continued by a bill of revivor. An original bill upon which the title may be litigated, must be filed.

The ground of this distinction between bills of revivor, and bills in the nature of bills of revivor, is that the former, in case of death, are founded upon mere privity of blood, or representation by operation of law; the latter, upon privity of estate, or title by the act of the party. In the former case, nothing can be in contest, except whether the party be the heir or personal representative; in the latter, the nature and operation of the whole act by which the privity of estate or title is created, is open to controversy. Thus, for example, the heir may be made a party by a bill of revivor; for his title is by mere operation of law. But the devisee must come in by a bill in the nature of a bill of revivor; for he comes in as a purchaser under the testator, in privity of estate or title, which may be disputed.

A bill in the nature of a bill of revivor cannot be brought, except by some person who claims in privity with the complainant in the original bill. Thus, for example, if a bill is filed by a devisee under a will, and afterwards the will is set aside, or a subsequent will is proved, by which the same property is devised to another devisee; in such a case, the heir, or latter devisee, as the case may be, cannot, by a bill in the nature of a supplemental bill, avail himself of the proceedings in the original suit; for there is no privity between the complainant in the original suit and the complainant in the supplemental bill. But if the bill had been filed by the devisor himself for some matter touching the estate devised, then the heir or second devisee might file a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of revivor, notwithstanding the first devisee has already Code, §§ 4425-4429; Ch. Rule, XI; § 1200, post.

2 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 378.
2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1508, note; Sto. Eq. Pl., 379.
filing such a bill; for he derives his title solely from the devisor, independently of the first devisee.

An original bill, in the nature of a bill of revivor, should generally state the same facts as a bill of revivor. It should state the filing of the original bill, the proceedings upon it, the abatement, and the manner in which the interest of the party dead has been transmitted. It should, also, charge the validity of the transmission, and state the rights which have accrued by it, and should pray that the suit may be revived, and the complainant have the benefit of all the former proceedings thereon.

Where a bill, in the nature of a bill of revivor, is filed by any one not a party to the original suit, all of the parties to the original suit, who have any interest in the further proceedings therein, should be made parties to such bill, either as complainants or defendants.

§ 718. Bills of Revivor and Supplement.—This bill is a mere compound of a bill of revivor and of a supplemental bill, and in its separate parts it must be framed and proceeded upon in the same manner. It becomes proper where not only an abatement has taken place in a suit, but defects are to be supplied, or new events are to be stated, which have arisen since the commencement of the suit. Thus, if a suit becomes abated, and by any act besides the event by which the abatement happens, the rights of the parties are affected, as by a devise, under certain circumstances, although a bill of revivor merely may continue the suit, so as to enable the parties to prosecute it; yet, to bring before the Court the whole matter necessary for its consideration, the parties must, by supplemental bill, added to and made part of the bill of revivor, show the devise, or other act by which their rights are affected.

§ 719. The Name of the Bill Immaterial.—As already stated, the name of a bill is immaterial in our practice. Our Courts look at substance of bills, and allow or disallow them accordingly. It matters not whether a bill is called a bill of revivor, or an original bill in the nature of a bill of revivor, or a bill of revivor and supplement, or an original bill in the nature of a bill of revivor and supplement, or whether it is given any name at all; if it contain the proper averments, and makes the proper persons parties, and has the proper prayer, it is a proper bill. Nevertheless, it is important to know the various varieties of bills of revivor, in order to fully comprehend the cases to which they apply, the term when they are to be filed, the facts they must allege, and the relief to be prayed. Hence, in drawing a bill of revivor, of any kind, while it is necessary to insert all the essentials hereinbefore set out, it is not necessary to call the bill by any other name than a bill of revivor; indeed, it is not necessary to name it at all.

§ 722. Defence by Plea in Bar.

§ 720. Defences to a Revivor.—It is very seldom that any defence exists, or is made, to a bill of revivor, or to a scire facias; but (1) when the complainant to such a proceeding is not entitled to have the suit revived in his name and for his benefit; or (2) when the defendant to the bill, or scire facias, is not the proper person to revive against; or (3) when the proceeding is to revive a decree, and the defendant can show that the decree has been paid, released, or otherwise discharged, or is barred by the statute of limitations, in any of such cases the defendant may demur to the bill, or scire facias, if the matters of defence appear on its face, and may plead to the bill or scire facias, if the matter of defence does not appear on its face. The defences to a scire facias are the same as those to a bill of revivor,1 and the latter have heretofore been fully considered.2

§ 721. Demurrers to Bills of Revivor.—If a bill of revivor, or a bill in the nature of a bill of revivor, does not show a sufficient ground for reviving the suit, or any part of it, either by or against the person by or against whom it is brought, the defendant may, by demurrer, show cause against the revival. Indeed, although the defendant does not demur, yet, if the complainant does not show a title to revive, he will take nothing by his suit at the hearing. A demurrer to a bill of revivor, or to a bill in the nature of a bill of revivor, may be: (1) either for want of privity, or (2) for want of sufficient interest in the party seeking to revive, or (3) for some imperfection in the frame of the bill.

1. For Want of Privity. We have already had occasion to consider in what cases a bill of revivor, technically so called, may lie; and, it was then stated, that it is confined to cases of representation of the party deceased by the merc appointment and operation of law. Thus, the executor or administrator alone is the party by or against whom a bill of revivor, technically so called, will lie as to matters touching the personality of the deceased; and the heir at law of the deceased is the only party by or against whom a bill of revivor will lie as to matters touching the reality. This is properly a privity by operation of law.3 On the other hand, there may be a privity of right and title under the deceased, by a transfer or conveyance of that right and title to a person, who is not in by mere operation of law, and is not the personal or real representative of the deceased. In such a case, a pure bill of revivor will not lie by or against such person; but a bill in the nature of a bill of revivor will. In each of these cases if the appropriate bill was not brought by the party, seeking to revive, a demurrer would formerly have lain:4 but now, in our practice, the name of the bill is immaterial, if the substance be material.

It is laid down by Story, that, (1) if an administrator de bonis non should seek, by a pure bill of revivor, to revive a decree, obtained by a former administrator, a demurrer would lie; for the administrator de bonis non comes not in, in privity with the former administrator, who obtained the decree; but paramount to him, and purely as the representative of the intestate; and (2) if a bill of revivor should be filed by or against the assignee of a bankrupt or an insolvent, or the committee of a lunatic's estate, or a purchaser, or a devisee of the estate in question, a demurrer would lie for the want of the proper right of representation in such a bill;\(^5\) but in Tennessee, no demurrer would lie in such cases, the distinction between a pure bill of revivor, and a bill in the nature of a bill of revivor, being one merely of name and not of substance.

Nevertheless, there must be privity of estate between the party by or against whom the bill of revivor is brought and the deceased party, or a demurrer will lie for that reason; but it is immaterial whether this privity be by operation of law or by contract of the parties, as it is also immaterial whether the bill be called a bill of revivor, or a bill in the nature of a bill of revivor, or whether any name at all be given it.\(^6\)

2. For Want of Interest. Ordinarily, if the party seeking to revive, has no interest in the further proceedings, and can derive no benefit from them, he is not entitled to a bill of revivor, and a demurrer will therefore lie. A defendant may have such an interest as will entitle him to a bill of revivor, as for example in cases of account,\(^7\) in suits for partition or sale for partition, or when he has concurrent rights with the deceased complainant, or in any other case where he will take a benefit under the decree.

3. For Some Imperfection in the Frame of the Bill. The proper parties must be made to such a bill, to the end that the Court may be able to make a complete decree, leaving no roots for subsequent litigation to spring from; and if the bill of revivor is deficient in parties, a demurrer will lie to it on that ground.\(^8\) If, however, the defect of parties existed before the abatement, a demurrer will not lie to a bill of revivor for want of the deficient parties, the only office of a bill of revivor being merely to put the cause in the same plight and condition in which it was at the abatement.\(^9\) Where, however, any defect exists in the original bill, either for want of proper parties, or for want of proper allegations, or for want of any matter proper to be brought forward by an amended or a supplemental bill, it would be proper to incorporate all of these matters in the bill of revivor, which would then be properly termed a bill in the nature of a bill of revivor and supplement.

And in general, whenever the bill shows on its face either that the complainant has no right to revive the suit, or that the defendant is not a proper party against whom the suit should be revived, because not in the chain of representation, a demurrer will lie. And if the statements in the bill of revivor do not show a title to revive, or a liability to be revived against, or if the bill is otherwise fatally defective, the complainant cannot, on demurrer, supply the defect by reading the record of the original bill, although that record be referred to in the bill of revivor.\(^10\)

CHAPTER XXXV.
BILL TO CARRY DECREES INTO EXECUTION.

§ 723. Bills to Carry Decrees Into Execution.—A bill to carry a decree into execution is proper where a party’s rights have become so embarrassed, by events subsequent to the decree, that no ordinary process upon the original decree will be effectual to carry it into execution. This happens, generally, in cases where parties have neglected to proceed upon the decree until subsequent events make it necessary to have the decree of the Court to settle and ascertain their rights under it. Sometimes such a bill is exhibited by a person who was not a party; or who does not claim under any party to the original decree; but who claims in a similar interest; or who is unable to obtain the determination of his own rights, till the decree is carried into execution. Or, it may be brought by or against any person, claiming as assignee of a party to the decree.

The Court, in these cases, in general, only enforces, and does not vary, the decree. But upon circumstances it has sometimes considered the original directions, and varied them in case of mistake. And if it would be inequitable to enforce a decree, the Court may refuse to do so: for this purpose the Court has full power to look into the merits of the case.

But, although the original decree may be controverted, upon a bill to carry it into execution, it is only the defendant in the new suit who can call it in question; the complainant never can. He must, if not satisfied with the decree, impeach it by a bill of review, or some similar proceeding.

A bill to carry a decree into execution is generally in part an original bill, and in part a bill in the nature of an original bill, and it is sometimes a bill of revivor, or a supplemental bill, or both, as the exigencies of the case may require. And the frame of the bill, and the course of proceeding upon it, varies accordingly.

§ 724. Form of a Bill to Carry a Decree into Execution.—The bill should recite the fact of the filing of the original bill, the proceedings thereon, the decree pronounced, and why the decree has not been executed, and should pray that it be enforced. The following is a form of

A BILL TO CARRY A DECREES INTO EXECUTION.

To the Hon. David M. Key, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Chattanooga:
John Doe, administrator of James Doe, deceased, a resident of Hamilton county, complainant, Richard Roe, Robert Roe, Rachel Roe, and Rosanna Roe, all residents of Hamilton county, defendants.

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

That in the year 1860, a bill was filed in your Honor’s Court at Chattanooga, by James Doe, against Roland Roe, to enforce a vendor’s lien said James had in and to the following tract of land, in said town of Chattanooga, on the bank of the Tennessee river:

1 Huddleston v. Williams, 1 Heisk., 581.
4 2 Barb. Ch. Pr., 88; Chestnut v. Frazier, 6 Bax.
217. The name of the bill is immaterial if its allegations be sufficient. Brandon v. Mason, 1 Les., 624. It may be called a supplemental bill. Herd v. Bewley, 1 Heisk., 524; see, ante, § 43.
&c., giving its metes and bounds,] containing about five acres, which tract said James had conveyed to said Roland by deed, retaining an express lien on its face to secure the payment of the unpaid purchase-money, amounting to about four hundred dollars. Said bill prayed for a decree for said four hundred dollars, and for a sale of said land to satisfy said lien debt. The bill was answered by said Roland, the defendant thereto; and such further proceedings were had that in December, 1861, a decree was pronounced granting the prayer of the bill, and adjudging that said Roland owed said James four hundred dollars of the said purchase-money, and ordering a sale of said tract to satisfy the decree.

II.

Complainant further shows that said decree was never executed for the following reasons:

1st. Soon after its rendition, the war between the United States and the Confederate States broke out, and in consequence thereof the Courts were closed, and have only been recently reopened.

2d. Since said decree, all the record of the cause has been totally lost, so that the original file, the orders on the minutes of the Court, and the decree cannot be found; and complainant is credibly informed, and verily believes, and on that information and belief avers, that they were all totally burned and destroyed during said war.

3d. The same James Doe became of unsound mind during the war, and so continued until his death intestate, which occurred in Chattanooga on June 10, of the present year. Your complainant is his only heir at law, and is also administrator, appointed and duly qualified by the County Court of Hamilton County, and entitled to all his estate, real and personal, in his two-fold character of heir and administrator.

4th. Since complainant’s appointment as administrator, his intestate’s papers have come into his hands, and he has discovered thereby all the facts herein alleged in reference to said suit and decree, none of which facts were known to him before.

5th. The said Roland Roe was killed early in said war, and the defendants, who are adults, are his only heirs, he leaving no widow, no personal estate whatever, and no will, and no one having ever administered on his estate. The defendants are all living on said land, and are claiming to own it under said deed to their father.

III.

The papers and records in said cause and said decree having been thus lost and destroyed, and all of the original parties to the suit being dead, complainant is advised that it will be necessary to file this bill (1) to revive said suit, (2) to supply said lost papers and said decree, and (3) to carry said decree into execution; and therefore, the premises considered, he prays:

IV.

1st. That those named as defendants in the caption of this bill he served with proper process and required to answer this bill, but not on oath.

2d. That said lost papers and said decree be set up and supplied, according to law and the practice of this Court.

3d. That said decree be revived in complainant’s name as said administrator, and against said defendants as the heirs at law of said Roland Roe; and that, if an administrator of said Roland Roe be necessary, your honor will appoint one, more than six months having elapsed since his death, and no administrator having ever been appointed, and no person will apply or can be procured to administer his estate:

4th. That said decree of December, 1861, for said sum of four hundred dollars, and for the sale of said land, he, by decree of your Honor, set up and carried into execution, and said tract of land sold, and the proceeds of the sale applied to the satisfaction of said decree.

5th. And that complainant have such other, further, and general relief as he may be entitled to.

[Annex affidavit: see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]

Although the papers in a cause may be lost, in fact; nevertheless, in the eye of the law, they are not lost, and litigants are entitled to the benefits of them as still existing, and in force. CHAPTER XXXVI.
CROSS BILLS.

§ 725. Cross Bills generally Considered.—When a defendant cannot effectually make his defence, or assert his rights in the subject-matter of a litigation, by an answer to the bill; and especially when he needs some affirmative remedy or relief, he may file a cross bill for that purpose. A cross bill, as its name implies, is a bill brought by a defendant in a suit against the complainant in the same suit, or against the complainant and other defendants in the same suit, touching the matters in question in the original bill. A bill of this kind is usually brought, either (1) to obtain a necessary discovery of facts, or (2) to bring before the Court new matter in aid of the defence to the original bill, or (3) to obtain full relief for all the parties to the matters in controversy, or (4) some affirmative relief touching the matters of the original bill. A cross bill which seeks no discovery or relief, and makes no defence, which was not equally available by way of answer to the original bill, is unnecessary, and will be dismissed, on motion, or demurrer. A cross bill may be filed by a defendant, not only against the complainant, or against the complainant and one or more of the defendants, but it may also bring in new parties when necessary for the complete determination of the matters involved in the original suit; but the complainant in the original suit, should be made a defendant to the cross bill in all cases. A cross bill may bring new parties before the Court, but they do not thereby become parties to the original bill. New parties cannot, however, be made by cross bill, unless they are connected with the original matter in litigation. The cross bill for a discovery gives a perfect reciprocity of proof to each party, derivable from the answer of each; but inasmuch as all parties to a suit are now competent witnesses, a cross bill, for a discovery only, is seldom filed, and is almost obsolete.

§ 726. The Relation of a Cross Bill to the Original Suit.—It must be kept in mind that a cross bill is an auxiliary suit, a dependency of the original litigation, and can be sustained only on matter growing out of the original bill.\footnote{2} It is for this reason a cross bill must be heard with the original bill. If a cross bill be set for hearing, the legal effect thereof is to set the original bill for hearing, also; for the cross bill incorporates itself with the original bill, and the two bills really constitute one cause.\footnote{8} And even when the decree on a cross bill alone has been appealed from, so wedded are the two bills that the appeal takes them both up; and, in the Supreme Court, the whole case on both bills is open for re-adjudication; so much so, that there the decree on the original bill, though not appealed from, may be reversed.\footnote{9}

4 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1548-1549, notes; Hergel v. Laitenberger, 2 Tenn. Ch., 251. It will not be a cross bill unless it makes the complainant in the original bill a defendant. Ibid.
6 When, however, a defendant needs the evidence of the complainant as to some single point, or as to a very few points, it may be a good policy to obtain a discovery from him by cross bill, rather than to examine him as a witness, and thereby incur the risks incident to his own self cross-examination.

The dismissal of the original bill by the complainant ordinarily carries the cross bill with it, or the answer when filed as a cross bill;\footnote{10} but when either the cross bill, or the answer filed as cross bill, sets up grounds for affirmative relief on which proof has been taken, the dismissal of the original bill by the complainant does not carry with it the cross bill, or answer filed as a cross bill; but leaves such cross bills in Court for prosecution to final decree.\footnote{11}

New and incongruous matter cannot be introduced into the litigation by means of a cross bill, except as a basis for an equitable set-off. Thus, on a bill to wind up a partnership, the defendant cannot by cross bill be allowed to have an account as to a prior and different partnership,\footnote{12} unless he seeks, on sufficient grounds, to set off one against the other.

\section*{§ 727. Cross Bills for Relief, When Proper.—A cross bill for relief may be filed whenever any question arises between the defendant and the complainant, or between two defendants to a bill, that cannot be determined completely without a cross bill, or cross bills, to bring every matter in dispute completely before the Courts to be litigated by the proper parties, and upon the proper proofs. In such as a case, it becomes necessary for some one or more of the defendants to the original bill to file a cross bill against the complainant and one or more of the other defendants to that bill, and thus bring the litigated points fully before the Court.\footnote{13} When a cross bill seeks affirmative relief, it partakes of the nature of an original bill, and consequently the relief sought must be such as the Court has jurisdiction to grant.\footnote{14}

As this species of bill is a mode of defence, a defendant is sometimes of necessity obliged to resort to it in cases where, by the rules of pleading in Equity, he would not be able to avail himself of the matter of his defence in any other way. Thus, if the matter of defence arises after the cause is at issue, as if the complainant has given the defendant a release, or if there has been a payment, or an award, or a recovery in another suit for the same cause of action, or if any other thing has happened, since answer was filed, to terminate the complainant's right of recovery, or to make it inequitable for him further to prosecute his suit in whole or in part, the defendant must set these matters up by a cross bill. In such cases a cross bill is somewhat in the nature of a plea since the last continuance, at common law.\footnote{15}

A cross bill being generally considered as a defence to the original bill, or as a proceeding necessary to a complete determination of a matter already in litigation, the complainant in the cross bill, is not, at least, as against the complainant in the original bill, obliged to show any ground of Equity to support the jurisdiction of the Court. It is treated in short as a mere auxiliary suit, or as a dependency upon the original suit.\footnote{16}

exclusive, offices are: 1, to bring before the Court, more fully than can be done by an answer, some defence to the bill in connection with its subject-matter; or 2, to obtain some affirmative relief arising out of the matters set forth in the bill, and which could not be had on answer only; or 3, to obtain a discovery in aid of the defence to the original bill.17 In any event, a cross bill must be confined to the matters referred to in the bill, or to matters equitably connected therewith.18 Hence, a cross bill cannot inject a new cause of action into the suit, cannot bring forward matters not referred to in the original bill and not equitably connected therewith, nor set up matters wholly without the scope of the original bill. All such new, independent and distinct matters involve a new, independent and distinct suit, and must be set up in an original bill.19

A cross bill setting up matter wholly original is misnamed a cross bill, and is in substance and in fact an original bill, and may be stricken from the files on motion, as not belonging to the suit in which it is filed, or may be demurred to because the matter it brings forward is not connected with the matter contained in the original bill, but is wholly foreign thereto.20 If, however, such a bill is answered, it is the duty of the Chancellor, on his own motion, to order such so-called cross bill to stand as an original bill, and to be docketed as such, and to be proceeded with as an original bill; in which case a cross bill may be filed to it, if desired.

Inasmuch as the Chancery Court has now full jurisdiction of all matters of purely legal cognizance, except certain suits for unliquidated damages, and inasmuch as the Code authorizes the uniting in one bill of several matters of Equity, distinct and unconnected, against one defendant,21 it would be no breach of the spirit of our legislation, and of our liberal Chancery practice, to allow in a suit by one complainant against one defendant a cross bill (1) to set up a legal as well as an equitable matter connected with the matters in question, or (2) to set up a cause of action, equitable or legal, that is distinct and unconnected with the matters in question22 by way of set off, as in the Circuit Court.23

§ 729. What Relief can be Obtained by a Defendant Without a Cross Bill. The general rule of Chancery pleading is that a defendant cannot obtain any affirmative relief either against a co-defendant, or against the complainant, as to the subject-matter of the suit, without a cross bill;24 but in Tennessee, the practice is to render such a decree, upon the pleadings and proof, as will settle all the rights of either complainants or defendants in and to the subject-matter of the suit, as against each other, and as will, also, settle the rights of the defendants, as between themselves, in and to the subject-matter of the litigation. Our Courts so mold their decrees as to make a final and complete disposition of the entire subject-matter, determining the rights of all the parties in reference thereto, regardless of their attitude as complainants or defendants upon 18 Sto. Eq. Pl. § 401; Campbell v. Foster, 2 Tenn. Ch. 402; Macey v. Childress, 2 Tenn. Ch. 441. The rule stated in the text is not always rigorously adhered to, and our Courts sometimes evince a disposition to relax it. See Lewis v. Glass, 8 Pick., 147.

19 Carey v. Williams, 1 Lea, 53; Cohen v. Woodard, 2 Tenn. Ch. 866; Dan. Ch. Pr., 1743. If new, original and distinct matters could be brought forward in a cross bill by a defendant, such a cross bill would himself have the right to file a cross bill against such a cross bill, and so ad infinitum!
When a cross bill is in substance, an original bill, any defence may be made to it which could have been made to it if filed as an original bill, including a plea in abatement, or a demurrer, to the jurisdiction with which the cross bill is brought, is not suable in the county where the cross bill is filed; and all this is true of an answer filed as a cross bill. Chattanooga Pole Co. v. Young, Knoxville, 1904. Such a cross bill is, also, demariable because not properly a cross bill. See, post, § 737.
20 Campbell v. Foster, 2 Tenn., Ch., 402; Herch v. Laitenberger, 2 Tenn., Ch., 251. But, ordinarily, if the parties do not complain of such an irregularity, the Chancellor will not. Ibid.
21 Code, § 4327.

23 Code, §§ 2918-2922. There is as much reason to apply these sections of the Code to Chancery procedure as there is to apply sections 2902 (as to grounds for pleas in abatement), and section 2934, (abolishing general demurrers): all three sections are in the same chapter, and the first section of this chapter confines them to "legal proceedings." Code, § 2880; but the Courts hold that they apply to proceedings in Chancery. However, in Cooper & Stockell v. Stockard, 16 Lea 140, it is said that this chapter of the Code applies exclusively to actions at law; and such seems to have been the purpose of the codifiers.
24 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1550.
the record.  But a defendant can have no relief on an answer setting up matters for relief not referred to in the original bill, and not within its scope.

But no adjudication will, ordinarily, be made which will result in a recovery in behalf of a defendant, especially a recovery requiring process for its enforcement, unless such defendant has concurrent rights with the complainants, but, because of disability, or non-residence, or some other sufficient cause, he is made a defendant to the bill, and his rights therein set out, and affirmative relief prayed in his behalf, as (1) in suits for partition, or sale for partition; or (2) suits by wards against their guardians; or (3) suits by some of the owners of a common fund; or (4) suits by some creditors or other persons in behalf of themselves and all others having concurrent rights; or (5) suits to sell the lands of a decedent to pay debts; or (6) suits to wind up an insolvent estate, or an insolvent partnership, or an insolvent corporation; or (7) suits to enforce a trust for the benefit of creditors, or others, and the like. But a cross bill is not necessary to obtain the benefit of credits, or other matters of discharge, or of an adjudication sustaining the defendant’s title when assailed, or of a decree for balance due defendant on a bill for an account.

In all doubtful cases, however, a cross bill, or an answer filed as a cross bill, is the safer practice; and is indispensable when a defendant seeks (1) a recovery of land, chattels, or money; 28 or (2) a rescission, or reformation, of a contract, or deed; or (3) a specific performance, when the bill is for a rescission; or (4) an injunction; or (5) an equitable set-off; 29 or (6) a writ of possession.

§ 730. In What Cases a Cross Bill should be Filed.—It may be stated that, as a rule, a cross bill works no injury to the party filing it; and, if he fails to obtain the benefits anticipated therefrom, he is seldom, if ever, left in any worse position as a result of filing the cross bill. For this reason, a cross bill is often filed when there is good reason to believe that the relief sought thereby could be obtained under the bill and answer, the Solicitor of the defendant deeming a cross bill a prudent precaution.

Cross bills should be filed in the following cases:

1. When the complainant impleads a mortgage, trust deed, or express lien on land; and the defendant is able to defeat the bill, and desires, in the same suit, to enforce the mortgage, trust deed, or other lien, by an affirmative decree.

2. When the bill attacks the defendant’s deed, and seeks to have it declared a cloud on complainant’s title; and the defendant, on the other hand, seeks to have his said deed declared the better title, and to be put in possession of the land, or to have his possession and title quieted by injunction, or to have a recovery for taxes paid, or betterments made, on the land, 30 or other affirmative decree.

3. When the object of the bill is to have notes, or other written instruments, declared void, and delivered up to be cancelled; and the defendant not only can show that the note, or other instrument, is legal, but, also, desires to enforce it by an affirmative decree in the same suit.

26 Lewis v. Glass, 8 Pick, 147, citing the above section of this book, then § 665.

28 Bussey v. Gault, 10 Hum, 238.

29 Kiley v. Stamps, 10 Lea, 709; Mrzena v. Bruck- er, 3 Tenn. Ch., 161.

30 This precaution is often deemed advisable on the ground that parties should not experiment with the Court, and should not unnecessarily hazard their interests. The Chancellor is often embarrassed by doubts as to his right, or power, to grant the defendant relief on the original pleadings; and, in consequence of these misgivings, sometimes conceives a scant relief to a defendant, to whom a larger measure of relief would have been cheerfully granted, had he filed a cross bill, putting all the facts in issue, and praying such larger relief. Equity delights to do complete justice, and not by halves. See, ante, § 38. And for this reason favors cross bills.

31 Where a bill seeks to enforce a mortgage, the defense that the mortgage was obtained by fraud may be made by answer; in such a case a cross bill is not necessary. The answer must, however, specify the defence. Genther v. Pagan, 1 Pick, 491; See, Griffith v. Security Association, 16 Pick, 410; and, ante, § 358.

CROSS BILLS.

4. Where, in an ejectment suit, the defendant will be able to show that he is a tenant in common with complainants, and is entitled to, and desires to have, pay for his improvements, and to have the land partitioned, or sold for partition, in the same suit.

5. Where the bill is filed to sell the land of a decedent to pay his debts, and the widow, or the heirs, claim any title to, or interest in, the land, and desire to have that title, or interest, affirmatively declared and enforced, in the same proceeding.

6. Where, on a bill for the general distribution of an estate; or, on a bill to wind up a partnership; or, on a bill for a general accounting, the defendant has claims against the complainant, or one defendant has claims against the fund sought to be distributed, proper for an independent bill, he may bring the claim forward by cross bill, either as a means of obtaining a set-off, or as a means of collecting his debt.

7. Where the complainant seeks to enforce a vendor’s lien, the defendant should file a cross bill, if he seeks to obtain relief because of failure of the complainant’s title, in whole or in part; or, because of breach of any of the complainant’s covenants; or, because of any fraud, especially if he wishes to recover back any of the purchase price already paid.

8. Where the matters in controversy cannot be so settled as to do full justice to the, or a, defendant without bringing other parties before the Court, a cross bill is necessary for that purpose.

9. Where, on a bill to wind up an insolvent estate, or an insolvent partnership; or, on a bill to distribute a fund among creditors, or others, a defendant has any lien on the fund, or superior Equity thereto, it is always prudent to assert his priorities by a cross bill.

10. Where a specific performance of a contract is sought by a bill, the defendant, if he seeks a rescission, or seeks to have the balance of the purchase-price paid him, or seeks to recover back what he has already paid on the contract, should file a cross bill for that purpose.

11. Where, since the defendant’s answer was filed, a new defence has arisen, as where a release has been obtained, or payment has been made, or there have been an accord and satisfaction, or a reference to arbitrators, or an award, or the title of the complainant has been ended by his death, or bankruptcy, or where in any other way the complainant’s cause of action has ceased to exist, in whole, or in part, since the answer was filed, the defendant must file a cross bill in order to set up these new defences.

12. Where the bill seeks a recovery on a deed, note, or other written instrument, executed by the defendant, and the defendant seeks not only to defeat any recovery thereon because of failure of consideration, fraud, duress, drunkenness, infancy, coverture, or because the consideration was illegal or against public policy, or because of any other defence vitiating such deed, note or other instrument, but seeks, also, to have such deed, note or other instrument delivered up and cancelled, and, if a deed, declared a cloud on his title, he must file a cross bill.

And it may be stated, generally, that a cross bill must be filed whenever the, or a, defendant needs (1) to bring a new party before the Court; or (2), desires to obtain the benefit of new facts, or new defences, which have come into being since the suit was commenced; or (3), needs some affirmative relief against the complainant, or a co-defendant, and especially, (4), if such affirmative relief consists in the allowance of a set-off, or in the recovery of money or property, or the enforcement of a right by injunction, execution, sale, or writ of possess-sion, or in the reformation, cancellation, or surrender, of some instrument sued on.

§ 731. The Time for Filing a Cross Bill.—No leave of the Court is necessary for the filing of a cross bill, but the proper time for filing is at the time of the filing of the answer to the original bill; and if not then filed the delay should be accounted for, or the proceedings on the original bill will not be stayed. This rule as to time, however, is not applied when the cross bill is filed against a co-defendant, nor when the delay has been occasioned by some act of the original complainant. A cross bill must, as a general rule, be filed before the time of taking proof in the original suit has expired, unless the complainant in the cross bill will rest his case upon the testimony already taken. This rule is, however, not inflexible. The Court may, at the hearing, direct a cross bill to be filed in order to settle all the rights of all the parties; and if new matter arises after a decree, and while the cause is in the Supreme Court, a cross bill will lie. But, except in such cases, a cross bill cannot be filed after the hearing on the original bill, unless directed by the Court.

When a defendant resorts to a cross bill, he must first answer the original bill, before he can require the complainant therein to answer his bill.

§ 732. The Frame of a Cross Bill.—A cross bill should briefly set forth: 1, The fact and date of the filing of the original bill; 2, The names of the parties to the original bill; 3, The general objects, and the prayer of the bill; 4, The proceedings in the cause since the original bill was filed; 5, The rights of the party exhibiting the cross bill, which are necessary to be made the subject of cross litigation; or the ground on which he resists the claim of the complainant in the original bill, if that is the object of the cross bill; and 6, Should pray for proper process, and relief. A cross bill should not introduce new and distinct matters, not embraced in the original suit; for, as to such matters, it is an original bill, and they cannot properly be examined at the hearing of the first suit.

The rules forbidding the introduction of scandalous and impertinent matter in bills, apply to cross bills, and indeed to all other kinds of bills, and to all pleadings of all sorts, whether filed by the complainant, or by the defendant. The case set up in the cross bill must be consistent with the defense made in the answer.

§ 733. Form of a Cross Bill.—If a vendee of land by deed should file a bill against the vendor, to be released from his purchase, and to have the purchase-money notes delivered up and cancelled, because of fraud, accident, or mistake, the defendant might file a cross bill, and pray for judgment on his purchase-money notes, and have the land sold in enforcement of his lien. In such a case, the cross bill would be as follows:

FORM OF A CROSS BILL.

To the Hon. J. Somers, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Dresden:
John Den, a resident of Weakley county, complainant, vs. Richard Fen, a resident of the same county, defendant.
Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

That, on the third day of last November, the defendant, Richard Fen, filed his original bill in this Court against your complainant; setting forth therein that he had purchased from complainant the following tract of land, in the 3d civil district of Weakley county: Beginning, [describe it by metes and bounds, if possible; if not, give the best description obtainable;]

39 Code, § 4408.
40 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 401.
41 Ante, § 150.
42 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 399, note.
43 Upon the hearing, the Court may dismiss the original bill, and grant the relief prayed by the cross bill. Enochs v. Wilson, 11 Lea, 230; McNaity v. Eastland, 10 Yerg., 314; Chestnut v. Frazier, 6 Bax., 217.
containing one hundred acres, more or less, and praying (1) that he might be relieved from said purchase, because of alleged fraudulent misrepresentations relative to the number of acres, and the title to said land; and (2) that the two purchase-money notes, given by him to complainant, might be delivered up, and cancelled; and (3) that the whole trade might be rescinded; and (4) for general relief. This bill your complainant has this day answered fully, meeting and denying all the equities set up in said original bill. Reference is made to said bill and answer for their contents in full.

Complainant further shows unto your Honor that said two notes are for five hundred dollars each, both dated June 1, 1886, and one of them due one year, and the other two years, after date, each drawing interest from date; and, to secure their payment, an express lien was retained on said land, in the face of the deed executed and delivered to the defendant for said land. Said deed is on file in said cause, and is referred to for a fuller description of its contents; said two notes are herewith filed, marked "Exhibit A," and "Exhibit B," and are made a part of the bill, and they, along with said deed, will be read at the hearing as evidence.

Complainant further states that said notes are overdue, and are wholly unpaid; and that, since the defendant filed his said bill, he has begun to cut the valuable timber on said land, and convert said timber into railroad ties. Said timber is absolutely necessary to said land for fencing, building, firewood, and other farm purposes, and its destruction is waste, and will cause irreparable injury to said land, and greatly impair its value. The defendant is insolvent, and said land will be inadequate security if much of its timber is cut off.

The premises considered, complainant prays:
1st. That proper process issue to compel the defendant, Richard Fen, to answer this bill; but his oath to his answer is waived.
2d. That a writ of injunction be directed by your Honor to issue, to restrain the defendant from cutting any more of said timber for any other than strictly farm purposes.
3d. That complainant have a decree for the amount due on said two notes, and that said amount be declared a lien on said land, and that said land be sold in satisfaction of said lien on a credit of six months, and in bar of all equity of redemption.
4th. That complainant have such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.
This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

[Annex affidavit, as in §§ 161-164, ante.]

§ 734. An Answer as a Cross Bill.—One of the improvements made in Chancery pleadings by our Code, is the right it gives a defendant to convert his answer into a cross bill. The provisions of the statute are as follows:

The defendant may, by proper allegations, file his answer as a cross bill, and require a discovery from the complainant; in which case a demurrer or pleas may be filed, or other proceedings had upon the answer as upon a cross bill. And the Court shall act upon all the matters properly involved in the pleadings; and give such relief, either for the plaintiff or defendant, as the nature of the case may require to do complete justice. If the defendant file an answer by way of cross bill, he may waive the oath of the complainant to his answer thereto.

An answer filed as a cross bill under these provisions is not confined to a discovery, but may well be based on any proper matters of Equity growing out of the original bill, or connected therewith, entitling the defendant to affirmative relief on a cross bill separately filed.

When it is considered that the public welfare is promoted by making a speedy end to litigation, that a multiplicity of suits should always be prevented when possible, and that Equity delights to do complete justice and not by halves, it is manifest that the policy of the statute allowing an answer to be filed as a cross bill should be favored and furthered by the Courts. It has accordingly been held that, where the parties, improperly made defendants to an answer filed as a cross bill, do not object to being thus brought before the Court, before

44 Code, §§ 4323-4324.
45 Code, § 4409.
46 Odum v. Owens, 2 Bax., 446; Hall v. Fowlkes, 9 H. 753.
47 The Code, in defining an answer, says that it should contain "a prayer for dismissal or counter-relief, according to the nature of the case." Code, § 4315. This language would seem to imply that a defendant might get "counter-relief" by praying for it, without a cross bill. See, on this point, ante, § 575.
filing their answer, it is too late for them to object afterwards; and the Court will adjudicate all the matters involved in the cross bill and the answer thereto.
Where parties waive objection to the jurisdiction in such cases, it is the duty of the Court to hear the cause upon its merits. 48

Any matter that would be a proper matter for a separate cross bill at the time the answer is filed, may be incorporated in the answer, and on such incorporation any relief may be prayed that could, on the facts, be obtained by means of a separate cross bill. An answer thus drawn may be filed as a cross bill, and in addition to its office as an answer to the bill, will have all the rights incident to a separate cross bill, except the right to bring new parties before the Court. 49 And having all the rights of a separate cross bill it is, also, subject to all the duties of such a cross bill, and a prosecution bond must be given, and process, and copy of the cross bill, must issue to bring those made defendants before the Court, in their new character as defendants to the cross bill.

When an answer is filed as a cross bill it cannot bring any new party, or new matter, before the Court; it must be confined to the matters set up in the original bill, and matters incident thereto; it can be filed as a cross bill against the complainant only, 50 or, at most, against some other party to the suit. 51 But, if no objection is taken to an answer filed as a cross bill against new parties, and the defendants to such cross bill submit to answer, it is too late to object to the irregularity at the hearing; and, in such a case, the Court will decree on the merits. 52

Under our practice, an answer filed as a cross bill is not strictly a defensive pleading. On such an answer, the original bill may be dismissed, and affirmative relief granted on the prayers of the cross bill: such relief, however, should relate to the subject-matter of the original litigation. Thus, on a bill filed to set aside a deed, or to enforce a mortgage, or to have a note cancelled, or to reform a contract, the defendant may, on answer filed as a cross bill, (1) have said deed declared valid, and his lien for purchase-money enforced; or (2) have said mortgage declared void, and removed as a cloud on his title; or (3) have said note declared binding, and a recovery decreed him thereon; or (4) have said contract declared correct, and have it enforced.

§ 735. Form of an Answer Filed as a Cross Bill.—When a defendant intends to file his answer as a cross bill, he must first answer the bill fully. In this answer he may, however, weave the facts on which the prayers of his cross bill will be based; or he may reserve such facts until he has answered, and then allege them. The following general form will indicate how an answer and cross bill are joined. 53

53 For a fuller form of an answer filed as a cross bill, see Joiner of Defences, ante, § 405.

§ 737. The Defences to a Cross Bill.—Every defence may be made to a cross bill that can be made to an original bill, except objections to the local or personal jurisdiction of the Court; and even these objections may be made by plea in abatement, or demurrer, if the cross bill brings forward new matters to which, if in an original bill, such objections would lie. The defendant to the cross bill may: 1, Move to dismiss the cross bill because (1) it is unnecessary, the same defences being admissible, or the same relief obtainable, by means of an answer; or (2) because no prosecution bond was given; or (3) because of the want of some other prerequisite to the issuance of the subpoena to answer; or (4) because of manifest want of Equity on its face; or 2, The defendant may demur to the cross bill; or 3, He may plead in bar any single matter that would be a defence; or 4, He may answer the cross bill. But he is not required to answer it until his own bill has been answered.

But the ordinary defences to a cross bill are made by a motion to dismiss, by demurrer, or by answer. As a rule, all the grounds of demurrer to an original bill are equally applicable to a cross bill. When a cross bill is proper, has already been fully considered, but it may be generally stated that a cross bill has only two offices: 1, It is a means of making a more effectual defence than can be made by an answer; and 2, It is a means of obtaining some affirmative relief connected with the subject-matter of the original suit not obtainable by means of an answer. Hence, it follows that a cross bill cannot bring before the Court any matters distinct from, and independent of, the matters sought to be litigated in the original suit. No matter is proper for a cross bill that would make the original bill multifarious, if incorporated in the latter, and this may be deemed a test of the propriety of the matter in a cross bill.

If cross bills were not thus confined to the matters in litigation in the original suit, the new matters brought forward by the cross bill might be so distinct as to constitute really a new original suit, on a new, original, and independent cause of action, in which case a second cross bill might lie to the first cross bill, and thus cross suits be multiplied without end. If, therefore, a cross bill should be filed containing matters distinct and independent from those contained in the original bill, it would be open to demurrer for this cause. If, however, such a multifarious cross bill should be answered and regularly heard on the proof, the Court would probably decree as to the distinct and independent matters, treating the cross bill pro tanto as in the nature of an original bill.

§ 738. The Hearing on a Cross Bill.—A cross bill is usually heard along with the original bill, and as a part of the original cause. The two bills and their respective answers and proofs are deemed one record, and, ordinarily, one and the same decree closes the litigation raised by both the original and the cross bill. At the hearing, the cross bill may be dismissed and relief granted on the original bill, or the original bill may be dismissed and relief granted on the cross bill, or relief may be granted on each bill, or both bills may be dismissed.

At the hearing, the original bill and the answer thereto are generally first read, then the cross bill and its answer; then the original complainant reads his proof in chief; the complainant in the cross bill next reads his proof as to all the issues raised by both bills and answers, including his rebutting proof, and the original complainant concludes the reading of the evidence by putting in any he may have in rebuttal. The Solicitor for the original bill, ordinarily, has the right to open and close the argument as well as the evidence; but, if the cross bill confesses and avoids the issues raised by the original bill, or otherwise shifts the burden of proof, the Solicitor for the cross bill would have the right to open and close both the evidence and the argument.

58 Cocke v. Trotter, 10 Yerg., 213. In Carroll v. Taylor, 18 Pick., 451, it is said that where a cross bill sets up equities which do not affect the equities of the original bill, and the original bill is not ready to be disposed of, the cross bill may be heard on its own equities, and a final decree pronounced thereon. But such a cross bill would seem to be, in reality, an original bill under a misnomer.

PART VII.
INTERLOCUTORY APPLICATIONS IN SUITS IN CHANCERY, AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON.

CHAPTER XXXVII.
MOTIONS IN COURT, AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON.

ARTICLE I. Motions Generally Considered.

§ 739. Motions and Petitions Defined and Distinguished.
§ 740. The Main Divisions of Motions.

§ 739. Motions and Petitions Defined and Distinguished.—A motion is an oral application to the Court, the Chancellor, or the Master, for some order in relation to the suit in which the application is made; and a petition is a written application addressed to the Court, or Chancellor, for some order in relation to the suit in which the petition is prayed to be filed. When the application is by a party to the suit, and is based on matters apparent of record, it is usually made by motion; when the matters do not sufficiently appear of record, the motion in reference thereto must be supported by an affidavit of the necessary facts not of record; and when there must be brought before the Court, not only new facts, but also new collateral issues, the application is generally by petition. When a stranger seeks to make an application to the Court, he should always do so by petition; but a party, or a quasi party, may, as a rule, present any matter orally, accompanied, when necessary, by affidavits. A stranger cannot make a motion before the Master, or present him a petition; he can only be heard by the Chancellor in open Court. If, however, a stranger’s case is urgent, and his equities sufficient, he may file an original bill in the nature of a cross bill, and in this way get a hearing before the Chancellor, at Chambers; and the Chancellor may, in a proper case, allow such a bill to be filed as a petition in... the original cause. As a general rule, however, no such practice is known in Equity as allowing a stranger to become a defendant to a pending suit, on his own application, over the objection of the complainant, especially where he sets up a right not noticed in the bill, for this would be to try rights without any issue joined. 4

§ 740. The Main Divisions of Motions.—Motions are divided into (1) motions of course, and (2) special motions.

1. Motions of Course, in our practice, are motions, whether made in Court, at Chambers, or at rules, the opposite party would have no right to resist, without, at least, supporting affidavits. Indeed, a motion of course is one which may properly be made without notice to the other party, and without his having the right to be present when it is made, because there is no discretion to refuse it, when properly made. Motions of course include motions for (1) orders for publication, (2) for appointment of guardians ad litem, (3) for a judgment pro confesso, (4) for a scire facias to revive, (5) for a revivor, when no defence is made, (6) for a vacation of a pro confesso, and leave to file an answer, before final decree, in case of defendants not served with subpoena, (7) for amendment of bills, before argument of demurrer, (8) for amendment, or perfection, of prosecution bonds, (9) for an order specifying which of several parties notice to take proof shall be served on, (10) for an attachment to compel an answer, (11) for a judicial attachment, (12) for the appointment of an administrator, on a bill filed for that purpose, (13) for the abatement of a suit after lapse of two terms since proof of complainant’s death, and (14) for an order of sale when land has been levied on, and not sold.

2. Special Motions are those which the Chancellor may, in the exercise of his discretion, either grant or refuse; 5 and on which the opposite side would have the right to be heard. Whenever the Chancellor is bound to exercise his discretion, he is bound to hear the other side, if it demand a hearing; and he is generally bound not to exercise that discretion, until he has given the other side a chance to be heard. Special motions are generally allowed, or disallowed, upon consideration of the record, or of an affidavit, or of a petition, and after argument heard thereon. All motions, not of course, are special.

§ 741. The General Law of Motions.—It may be stated as a general law of motions, founded on essential justice, that (1) the more rigorous the motion, or (2) the more damaging its effects upon the opposite party, or (3) the more it prevents a hearing of the opposite party on the merits, or (4) the more it closes the door against the right to plead, or (5) to make proof, or (6) the more technical, or arbitrary, it is in nature, operation, or effect, the more strict the Court should be in not allowing it, unless the party making it shows clearly that he has fully, and in good faith, complied with every preliminary or prerequisite to such motion, that he is clearly entitled to it, and the other party clearly liable to be so moved against.

On the other hand, motions that do not shut the door against a party’s right to plead, or make proof; motions that can readily be relieved against, if erroneous, or unduly oppressive; motions promotive of a right founded in substantial justice; motions for the protection of the rights of parties under disability; motions looking to the speeding of a hearing on the merits; and motions, ordinarily denominated motions of course, will be readily allowed, no objections appearing on their face, or aliunde.

§ 742. Practical Suggestions Concerning Motions.—It is of great importance to know what motion to make in reference to a particular matter; and where doubt exists either as to the kind of motion, or as to whether the motion can be supported by the record, you should thoroughly investigate these matters in advance; and not needlessly consume the time of the Court by bringing up above.

the matter before you are fully prepared to inform the Court as to all matters connected with your motion.

Having mastered the facts and law applicable to your motion, you should next reduce your motion to writing, and prepare a brief to support it, if it is likely to be antagonized. Any motion worth the making is worth entering on the minutes. Besides, both the Court and the opposite party have a right to know exactly what your motion is, and a motion in parol is liable to be mis-understood, misconstrued, or misremembered; and it should, therefore, be committed to writing before it is presented to the Court.

If the record does not adequately present the facts on which your motion is to be based, prepare your petition, or affidavit, or obtain the other necessary evidence, before you make the motion. Why waste the time of the Court, and why advertise your own want of knowledge or diligence, by making a motion the record will not sustain?

After your motion has been made, see that it is entered on the minutes; and, after the Court has ruled on your motion, have the action of the Court entered of record, also. If you have supported your motion by affidavits, or other extraneous matter not of record, incorporate them in a way-side bill of exceptions, if the Court rules against you, and you deem your motion of sufficient importance to perpetuate the facts on which it was based.

Nothing so admirably displays an accomplished Solicitor as the appropriateness of his motions, the precision of their frame, the production of the necessary authorities to support them, and the ready marshaling of the facts in the record on which they are based. 6 § 743. How Motions are Heard.—When the time for hearing a motion has arrived, the Solicitor who appears on behalf of the motion should bring it to the attention of the Court. If the motion is based on the record in the case, after briefly stating his motion he should read, if necessary, such and so much of the record as may be necessary to enable the Court to comprehend the premises. 7 If the motion is based on a petition or affidavit, or other document, that fact should at once be brought to the Court’s attention, and so much of it read as may be sufficient to give the Court the necessary information as to the grounds of the motion.

After the facts in the case have been duly presented, and the reasons and authorities in support of the motion stated, in case such are deemed necessary, the Solicitor supporting the motion will give way to the adverse side, the Solicitor representing which will, thereupon, briefly state his objections to the motion, if any, and will read any other part of the record, or present any other affidavits or documents necessary and proper to inform the Court and support his own contention. Having done this, he will briefly present his reasons and authorities, if any be deemed necessary, why the motion should not be allowed. The Solicitor making or supporting the motion will then conclude the argument; and, if the Court wishes to further consider the matter, the Solicitor will pass the papers up, or see that they are sent to the Chancellor’s chambers.

6 A very large part of a Court’s time is often wasted by abortive motions. No Solicitor should rise to make a motion unless (1) the time is opportune, (2) the right to make the motion has fully matured, (3) he fully understands his case, and the purpose and effect of the motion, (4) and has at hand the record, petition or affidavit, requisite to sustain the motion. A Solicitor should know that he is right before he undertakes to go ahead in making motions. All motions must be based: 1st, on the record in the case; or 2d, on an affidavit, or something equivalent in force, such as some other record, or some writing under seal, or a certificate; or 3d, on a petition bringing forward matters not otherwise appearing; or 4th, on some matter of which the Court can take judicial notice, or can inquire about, orally, of the Solicitors or officers of Court, or of some other person present. As to showing cause, see, ante, § 62, sub-sec. 8.

7 Solicitors should keep in mind that the probabilities are that the Chancellor knows little or nothing as to the grounds of the motion, or the necessity or expediency thereof, until duly made known to him by the counsel in the case: hence the importance of a full and clear statement of the case. As to when a motion is heard, see, ante, § 531, sub-sec. 6.

8 Where there are more Solicitors than one on a side, ordinarily the junior Solicitor on each side opens, and the senior Solicitor concludes the argument. The counsel that opens should, ordinarily, have consideration for the ability of his colleague, and not undertake to consume all the time and make all the argumentation allowable for his side, for the senior counsel is presumed to be more able and equally willing.
ARTICLE II.

MOTIONS BY THE COMPLAINANT.

§ 744. Motions by the Complainant to Get the Defendant Into Court.

§ 745. Motions by the Complainant to Perfect His Pleadings.

§ 746. Motions by the Complainant to Produce an Issue.

§ 747. Motions by the Complainant to Prepare the Case for Hearing.

§ 748. Motions by the Complainant to Protect or Enforce His Rights Pending the Litigation.

§ 749. Motions in Reference to Decrees.

§ 744. Motions by the Complainant to Get the Defendant into Court.—Until the defendant is properly before the Court by service of subpoena, or by attachment of his property and publication, or by publication alone, the complainant's main duty is to take the necessary steps to bring him in. If the subpoena has not been served he should move for an alias, or a judicial attachment, as heretofore shown. If the defendant has died, or, being a woman, has married, before service of process, proper steps to revive the suit must be taken as shown elsewhere.

§ 745. Motions by the Complainant to Perfect his Pleadings.—The complainant is usually allowed to do all that is necessary to present his case fully and fairly to the Court, provided he take the right method, in the right time. As already shown, he may amend his bill at any time before the defendant has made defence, or in case a demurrer is filed, at any time before argument thereof, without application to the Chancellor. In all other cases, however, he must obtain leave of the Chancellor to amend his bill, such leave to be obtained on motion in open Court, or at Chambers. If the Court be in session when the necessity for the amendment is discovered, the better practice is to move the Court for leave to amend. The proper time to make the motion, is the very first opportunity after the discovery of the deficiency sought to be remedied; all Courts require diligence and vigilance, but Courts of Equity most of all.

The following are the principal motions by a complainant, looking to the perfection of his pleadings, and to adapting them to the facts of his case, and to the relief he desires:

1. Motions to Amend His Bill. The motions may, under certain limitations elsewhere shown, be made at any time between the filing of the bill and the final decree. The difficulty of obtaining leave, and the price to be paid therefor, being generally, in direct proportion to the length of time elapsed since the answer was filed. These motions are: 1, Motions to amend by correcting some date, or amount, or name, or description of property; 2, Motions to amend by making new parties, or new allegations as to old parties, or by doing both; 3, Motions to amend by bringing forward new matters in existence when the bill was filed, so as to enlarge the scope of the bill, or to sue on an additional ground, or on an additional claim, or for an additional debt, or for an additional piece or pieces of property, real or personal, or to set up any additional Equity; 4, Motions to amend by dismissing his bill as to any defendant, or defendants, or as to any debt, piece of property, claim, demand, Equity or other matter, set forth in his original, or amended, or supplemental bill; 5, Motions to amend the prayer; and 6, Motions that include any two or more of the preceding matters.

2. Motion for Leave to File an Amended Bill. If the changes sought to be made in the original bill are few and short, and can be easily made by interlineations, or on the margin, the Court will allow the original bill to be amended, on its face, if no answer has been filed, or if the defendant does not desire to answer as to the amendments. But if the changes are too numerous, or too voluminous, to be easily incorporated into the body of the original bill; or, if new issues are raised and new parties are made, after answer filed, the complainant must move the Court for leave to file an amended bill, in which case he should have the amended bill drawn and ready to exhibit to the Court, along with an affidavit explaining his delay; and if the delay has been great and much proof has been taken, the proposed amended bill should, also, be sworn to, as an evidence of good faith.

1 See, ante, § 675.
2 Code, §§ 4332-4335. See, post, § 775.
3 See, ante, § 675.

3. Motion for Leave to File a Supplemental Bill. If some event has happened, or some matter or fact has arisen, or come into existence, since the filing of the original bill, and such event, matter, or fact, in any way so materially changes the rights of the complainant, or the duties of the defendant, as to make it necessary or proper to bring it, and any consequent new parties before the Court, this must be done by a supplemental bill; and leave to file such a bill must be obtained from the Court, or Chancellor at Chambers, in the same way as leave is obtained to file an amended bill.

4. Motion to Revive. If the complainant dies, the person entitled to revive may do so, on motion, supported by proper evidence of his rights. So, the husband of a female complainant may become a party complainant, on motion, supported by proof of his marriage, and on filing a prosecution bond. If a female defendant marries, the marriage must be suggested and proved, and an order for a scire facias against the husband moved for. If a defendant dies, the death must be suggested and proved, and an order for a scire facias against his proper representatives moved for. If a scire facias has been already executed and no defence made thereto, the complainant must move the Court to revive the cause. The subject of reviving suits is fully treated of in a previous Chapter.

5. Motion to Have an Administrator Appointed. Where the estate of a deceased person should be represented, and there is no executor or administrator, or the executor or administrator is adversely interested, the Court will on motion appoint an administrator ad litem.

§ 746. Motions by the Complainant to Produce an Issue.—After the bill is filed, the duty devolves on the complainant to take every step necessary to bring the suit to an issue, so that the taking of proof may begin. The following are the principal motions to be made for this purpose:

1. Motion for a Guardian ad Litem. A guardian ad litem may be appointed for a minor, or for a person of unsound mind, by the Court, by the Chancellor, or by the Master, on motion, supported by a sworn bill, or by affidavit, showing that the defendant is under such a disability.

2. Motion for a Pro Confesso. If an adult defendant, who is sui juris, has failed to make defence as required by the subpoena, or order of publication, the complainant may have his bill taken for confessed, on motion, supported by the return on the subpoena, or by proper proof of publication. He may, however, obtain a pro confesso from the Master, on like proof.

3. Motion for a Judicial Attachment. If a subpoena to answer is returned endorsed, "not to be found in my county," the complainant may, on motion, supported by such return, obtain a judicial attachment against the estate of the defendant.

4. Motion for an Attachment to Compel an Answer. If the defendant has been served with a subpoena to answer, and fails to answer, and the complainant desires an answer under oath, he may move for an attachment against the body of the defendant, supporting his motion by a subpœna showing service, or by an affidavit of such service.

5. Motion to Set a Plea or Demurrer Down for Argument. If the complainant conceive any plea, or demurrer, to be naught either for the matter or manner of it, he may move the Court to hear argument as to its sufficiency.

6. Motion to Have a Cause Revived. If a defendant dies, or a female defendant marries, the complainant may revive against the decedent’s proper representative, or against the husband, by bill of revivor, or by scire facias. To obtain the latter, a motion must be made, supported by proof of the defendant’s death, or marriage. The complainant may take steps to revive before the Master, without waiting for the Court to come. On the return of process duly executed, a revivor may be had on motion, in case no defence is shown in due time.

7. Motion for an Administrator. If an administrator becomes necessary in the progress of the suit, and the Court has the right to appoint one, it may be done on motion, supported by a proper record. If the bill is filed to have an administrator appointed, the Chancellor may make the appointment at Chambers.

8. Motion for Creditors to File Their Claims. If a bill is filed to wind up an insolvent estate, or an insolvent corporation, or partnership, on motion of complainant, supported by the proper record, the Court will order creditors to be notified to file and prove their claims.

§ 747. Motions by Complainant to Prepare his Case for Hearing.—There are motions to be made by the complainant looking to the preparation of his suit for trial. Most of these motions will be found in the Article on Motions Common to both Parties, but the following are specially applicable to the complainant.

1. Motion Where the Defendant Fails to Answer Interrogatories. If a non-resident defendant fails to answer duly filed interrogatories, by a given day, specified in a peremptory order by the Court, or Clerk, requiring such interrogatories to be answered, the complainant may, on motion, have such defendant’s answer taken off the files, and the bill taken for confessed.

2. Motion to Strike a Pleading or Other Paper From the File. If the defendant, or the Clerk for him, file any pleading, or other paper, in a cause without lawful authority, or if a defendant file any paper in a cause not proper to be filed, the complainant may, on motion, have such pleading or paper stricken from the files. Thus, if a plea, or additional plea, or amended plea, or an original or amended demurrer, or an original or amended answer, is filed after the time therefor has expired, or without leave where leave is necessary, it may be stricken from the files, on motion of the complainant. If a plea or answer, that must be sworn to, is filed without verification, or, if no verification is needed, is filed without being signed by the defendant, or his Solicitor, or if it be the plea or answer of a person under disability, and is filed in person, or by Solicitor, and not by guardian, or next friend, or if any paper of any kind has been improperly filed by the defendant, or a defendant, it may be taken off the files, on motion of the complainant.

§ 748. Motion by Complainant to Protect or Enforce his Rights Pending the Litigation.—During the progress of the cause, the complainant is frequently obliged to ask the Court for some interlocutory order to prevent the removal, injury, transfer, or destruction, of the property in litigation, or to more fully secure or protect it, or to sell it, or to collect the rents and profits of it, or some order to enforce a previous order of the Court, or to compel obedience to a previous order, or to prevent interference with the orders or officers of the Court. These interlocutory orders are obtained on motion; and must, usually, be supported by a sworn petition, or by affidavit. The following are some of such motions:

1. Motion for an Injunction or Restraining Order. A complainant may move for an injunction, or a restraining order, at any time before a final decree, either on the bill, if it lays sufficient ground, or on a sworn petition. If a ground for an injunction arises pending the litigation, it may be obtained on motion, supported by a sworn petition: in such a case a restraining order is usually entered on the minutes, if Court is in session. If Court be not in session, application must be made to the Chancellor, at Chambers.

2. Motion for a Receiver. If a receiver becomes necessary during a litigation, the complainant may have one appointed on motion supported by an affidavit, or a sworn petition. If Court be not in session, application must be made to the Chancellor, at Chambers, such application to be supported by the original bill, or by petition, or by both, due notice being given to the other party.

3. Motion for an Attachment for Contempt. If a defendant, or other person, has violated, or refused to obey, any writ or order of the Court, or has interfered with any officer of the Court, the complainant may have him attached for contempt, on a petition filed for that purpose.

4. Motion for Alimony Pending the Suit. If a wife, in a bill for divorce, shows a meritorious case, and prays for alimony pending the suit, the Court will, on motion, make her a suitable allowance until the next term. She may strengthen her motion by an affidavit, showing her necessities. The Court will be more liberal, if she is, also, ready for trial, and the defendant seeks a continuance.

5. Motion to Require Money, Choses in Action, or Other Personality, to be Deposited With the Master. When there is any particular fund, especially a trust fund, in litigation, or any specific chose in action, chattel, or any other article of personal property, the custody, or ownership, of which is in dispute, the party thereunto entitled, ordinarily the complainant, may move the Court to require the party in possession to pay, or deliver it into Court, subject to the future orders of the Court. Such motion is generally supported by both the bill and the admissions in the answer.

6. Motion to Pay Out, Transfer, Loan or Impound Funds in Court. Any money in the Master’s hands, that cannot be, at once, paid out, may, on motion, be loaned, subject to the order of the Court, or for a definite period. So, funds may, on motion, be transferred from one case to another, entries showing this being made in each case. So, funds in Court may, on motion, supported by a sworn pleading, or by a petition, or sometimes by an affidavit, be impounded to await the decision of the cause to which it belongs, or to be held subject to the decision in another cause.

§ 749. Motions in Reference to Decrees.—After a decree has been pronounced, it is often necessary to take some steps in Court, in order to get its full benefit. Some of these steps are the following:

1. Motion for an Instanter Execution. If a defendant is making away with his property, or threatening to do so, or other sufficient cause be shown, the complainant may move for an instanter execution, supporting his motion by affidavit.

2. Motion for Judgment on a Note. Whenever a note given for property sold, or money loaned, is overdue, judgment may be had thereon on motion, supported by the note, and the record in the cause.
3. Motion to Set Aside the Satisfaction of a Decree. If property which has been sold to satisfy an execution is recovered from the purchaser, the satisfaction may be set aside, and a scire facias awarded to have the decree revived, on motion supported by affidavit.27

MOTIONS BY THE DEFENDANT.

§ 750. Motions Looking to a Dismissal of the Suit.

§ 752. Motions to Set Aside, or Modify, Interlocutory Orders.

§ 750. Motions Looking to a Dismissal of a Suit.—The complainant is required not only to properly institute his suit, but also to keep it in due progress towards a final decree, and not allow any deficiencies to arise, or to remedy them in case they do arise. For any failure herein his suit is liable to be dismissed. If at any time during the progress of a suit, a ground for its dismissal exists, the defendant may take advantage of it by motion; and, as a rule, he must make his motion at the first opportunity after his right thereto arises. If, instead of moving to dismiss, he takes some other affirmative step, he will not ordinarily be allowed to go back and make a motion to dismiss. The following are some of the principal grounds of motions to dismiss:

1. Motions for a Rule on Complainant’s Solicitor to Show His Authority.1 If the defendant has good reason to believe that the bill has been filed without any proper authority from the complainant, he may, on making such an affidavit, move the Court for a rule on the Solicitor who filed the bill to produce his authority to appear for the complainant; and all proceedings will be suspended until such authority is produced, or proved.

2. Motion to Dismiss the Bill. If the bill is liable to be dismissed for any reason before demurrer, it may be done on motion, the motion specifying the ground on which it is based, and accompanied by the proper proof when the ground is outside of the bill itself. The grounds of such motions have heretofore been stated.2

3. Motion to Require a Better Prosecution Bond.3 If the prosecution bond is, or becomes, insufficient either (1) in the amount of the penalty by reason of the costs of the suit being great, or (2) in the solvency of the security by reason of the death, removal from the State or the insolvency of the surety, on affidavit of the fact, a motion may be made that the complainant be required to give a sufficient prosecution bond, or to justify his sureties.

4. Motion to Dispauper the Complainant.3a If the complainant is prosecuting the suit on the pauper oath, the defendant may have him dispaupered at any time before the hearing, on showing by the testimony of disinterested persons that the allegation of poverty is probably untrue.

5. Motion for a Rule on the Complainant to Take Steps.4 If the complainant fail to keep his suit moving on towards a final decree, by putting it at issue, or by keeping it duly revived, or by furnishing the Master with evidence for a report, or by not complying with some order made, or by not amending his bill,

27 Code, §§ 2990-2996.
1 See, ante, § 233.
2 See, ante, §§ 268-271.
3 See, ante, § 234.
4 The law should be liberal to poor persons. Heatherly v. Hill, 8 Bax., 170. The law of England allowing paupers to sue without paying costs was passed in 1495, and is more liberal to poor litigants than ours. See, 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 37-44, 111.
or by otherwise failing to exercise due diligence, the defendant may make a rule in the Clerk’s office on the complainant to take the necessary step in the progress of the suit, and on his failure to do so, the defendant may, in open Court, move the Chancellor for a peremptory rule on the complainant.

6. Motion Where the Complainant Fails to Answer Interrogatories. If a non-resident complainant fails to answer duly filed interrogatories by a given day, specified in a peremptory order by the Court, or Clerk, requiring such interrogatories to be answered, the defendant may, on motion, have the bill dismissed.1

7. Motion to Abate a Suit. If the death of the complainant has been proved and so entered on the minutes, the defendant may move to abate the suit if it is not revived during the second term after such entry.

§ 751. Motions by the Defendant to Perfect his Defence.—The defendant, within certain limits, is allowed to do what is reasonably necessary, to present his defence, so as to enable him to fully avail himself of all the law and the facts applicable to his case.

1. Motion for Further Time to Make Defense. If the defendant needs additional time within which to make his defense, he should apply therefor to the Master, or to the Chancellor, unless the Court be in session, and then to the Court.

2. Motion to Require the Complainant to Elect. When the complainant is suing the defendant both at law and in Equity, at the same time and for the same matter, the Court will, on motion of the defendant, require the complainant to elect which of the two suits he will prosecute. Such motion cannot be made, however, until the defendant has answered. If the complainant considers that the bill and action at law are for different matters, and that he ought not to be compelled to elect, he may resist the motion.

3. Motion to File a Cross Bill. If the defendant needs a cross bill, either the better to make his defence, or to obtain some affirmative relief connected with the subject matter of the suit, he may, on motion, obtain leave to file a cross bill for that purpose. The cross bill should ordinarily be presented and read in support of the motion; and if there has been any delay, such delay should be accounted for by affidavit, or the Court will not stay the hearing of the original cause.

4. Motion to Amend a Pleading. The defendant cannot amend any of his pleadings, whether a demurrer, a plea, or an answer, without leave; this leave can only be obtained on motion in open Court, or at Chambers, accompanied by the proposed amendment. If a sworn answer is sought to be amended, the amendment tendered must, also, be verified; and the occasion and the necessity for the amendment must be clearly shown by affidavit.

5. Motion for Leave to Withdraw an Answer. Sometimes the Court will allow an answer to be withdrawn, and a demurrer to be filed to the bill. The motion for such leave must be accompanied by an affidavit clearly showing why the demurrer was not originally filed.

6. Motion by Wife for Leave to Answer Separately. Whenever a wife’s interests are antagonistic to her husband’s, or when she dissents from his answer, or is living apart from him, she may on motion, supported by evidence of the fact, obtain leave to answer separately.

7. Motions to Strike Pleadings, and Other Papers, from the File. If a complainant, or the Clerk for him, files any pleading, or other paper, in a cause, without lawful authority so to do, or if a paper, not proper to be filed by the complainant, has been filed by him, the defendant may, on motion, have such pleading, or other paper, taken off the files. Thus, if a bill is filed without authority, or is unknown to the forms of the Court, or if an amended or supplemental bill, or bill of review for new matter, is filed without lawful authority, it may, on motion of the defendant, be taken off the files.

§ 752. Motions to Set Aside, or Modify, Interlocutory Orders.—When any interlocutory order has been made on motion of the complainant, on account of which the defendant is aggrieved, he may bring such order before the Court on motion, supported by affidavit, and move the Court, or Chancellor at Chambers, to set aside or modify such order, or otherwise release him from its effect, in whole or in part. Among such motions are the following:

1. Motion to Set Aside a Pro Confesso. A pro confesso may be set aside on motion, supported by affidavit excusing the delay, and a sworn answer showing a meritorious defence; and in some cases, without an affidavit or a sworn answer. A pro confesso may also be set aside by the Master at rules, upon a good cause shown, and the filing of a sufficient answer.

2. Motion to Dissolve an Injunction. When a defendant, or even a third party, feels aggrieved, or is injured by an injunction, he may move for its dissolution, supporting his motion by a sworn answer, or by showing want of equity in the bill, or in case of a stranger, by a petition. This motion may, also be made before the Chancellor at Chambers.

3. Motion to Vacate the Appointment of a Receiver. When the debt is paid, or the suit compromised, or a bond is given to comply with the decree of the Court, or when in any case a receiver is no longer necessary, on motion for that purpose, the receiver will be discharged, and the property in his hands restored to the former possessor. So, a motion may be made to vacate an order appointing a receiver, such a motion being supported by a sworn answer. This motion may be made before the Chancellor, in vacation.

4. Motions to Discharge or Reduce a Levy or Bond. Where more property has been attached than is necessary to satisfy the debt and costs, or when a replevy bond is excessive, the levy or bond may be reduced on motion supported by a sworn answer, or by a sworn petition, and notice to the other side. This motion may be made before the Chancellor as well in vacation as in term. A levy or bond may be, also, discharged in proper case, on like procedure.

§ 753. Motions in Reference to Pleadings, or other Papers Improperly Filed.
If any pleading, exhibit, deposition, or other paper, has been filed without lawful authority, or is filed after the lapse of the limit allowed, or is not entitled, or is not marked filed, or for any reason ought not be on the file, it may, on motion of any party aggrieved, be taken off the files, or, as it is sometimes expressed, stricken from the files. All motions to strike a pleading or other paper from the files, are heard summarily by the Court, the grounds of these motions being ordinarily apparent on the face of the record. When a pleading is alleged to be filed by a Solicitor without his alleged client's authority, the motion by the adverse party to take it off the files should be based on an affidavit of such want of authority; and it may be stated, as a general rule, that when the ground of a motion to strike from the files is based on matters outside of the record, such matter must be made to appear by affidavit.

§ 754. Motions where More Suits than One about the Same Subject-Matter.
It frequently happens that there are pending in the same Court two or more suits relating to the same subject-matter, such as: (1) suits by different creditors to reach the same property or fund of a common debtor; (2) suits by different beneficiaries of the same trust; (3) suits by different claimants of liens on the same property; (4) suits brought by different next friends of the same person under disability against the same defendant as to the same matter; (5) suits by different persons, whether administrators, executors, legatees, distributees, or creditors, to administer the same estate; (6) suits by different wards against the same guardian about the same general default; (7) suits by different creditors, legatees, or distributees, against the same executor or administrator for the same devastavit, or default; and (8) suits of like character in which all or most of the evidence in one case would be pertinent in the other cases, and the decree of recovery in one case would probably have to be considered in the other cases in order to properly distribute the fund, or otherwise equitably adjudicate the respective and perhaps conflicting rights and claims of the parties in the other cases.

Where two or more suits of the foregoing character are brought in the same Court, the Court will, on motion of the complainant in the suit first brought, stay the proceedings in all the other suits, except in so far as they, or any of them, seek to have adjudicated matters not set up in the first suit. Or, if it appears that a subsequent bill is more comprehensive, or otherwise better adapted to have all the matters in controversy fully determined, the Court may, on motion of the complainant in such bill, stay proceedings on all the other bills, unless the complainant in the bill first filed will so amend his bill as to cover the field included by all the other bills. The Court will, in such cases, consider in what way the interests of all the parties may be best promoted, looking to the saving of costs, an early hearing, and a complete decree settling all the various equities of all the parties in all the suits. Where the complainants in the different suits are seeking the same fund, or to share in the same recovery, the Court will ordinarily allow the complainants in the stayed suits to become parties to the suit allowed to be prosecuted; or will allow the preferred bill to be so amended as to bring before the Court all the parties and all the matters of the other bills, and to pray for an injunction against the further prosecution of the other suits; or, where the same property or fund is claimed by different complainants from the same defendant, will allow the latter, when he sets up no claim of his own, to file a bill of interpleader.

§ 755. Motions to Consolidate similar Causes.—Instead of staying proceedings, the Court will, in any of the foregoing eight cases, except the fourth, order all of the causes to be consolidated, if no party object to the motion. This is a more common and a more convenient practice than the practice of staying the subsequent suits; inasmuch as it enables references, reports, and decrees to be made in the consolidated cause, sufficiently comprehensive to include all the various matters of controversy contained in each, and all the various equities and priorities, however numerous, and however conflicting; and enables the Court to properly distribute the fund, when a fund is involved, and to adjudicate all questions as to the title, when the title is involved, and all other matters.

The practice of consolidating causes where the same fund or property is being sought by different creditors and claimants in different suits in the same Court, is a most salutary one, greatly to be favored. It lessens the costs, and thereby enables the debtor to pay more of his debts; it lessens the labor of counsel; and it enables the Court to administer the fund to the greatest advantage, and with the fewest difficulties to all, besides preventing a multiplicity of trials.

It must not be forgotten, however, that a consolidation of causes, whether by consent, or by order of the Court without consent, does not change the rules of Equity pleading, nor the rights of the parties, those rights must still depend on the pleadings in the respective causes, and the evidence applicable thereto; and an appeal in one case will not necessarily carry up the other case, or cases.

Where several suits are brought by different creditors against the same insolvent corporation in different Chancery Courts, that Court in which is filed the bill embracing the whole matter in litigation may enjoin the creditors in the other suits from prosecuting their independent suits, and require them to come in under the general bill on which the injunction was granted. If none of the bills is filed as a general creditor’s bill, any of the complainants may file an amended and supplemental bill as well for himself as for all other creditors and claimants who may choose to make themselves parties, and pray for all proper accounts, that the property be sold, and assets administered under the orders of the Court, that a receiver be appointed, and for general relief. Upon such an amended and supplemental bill being filed, the complainant would be entitled to an order for an attachment and an injunction against the common debtor and his estate on giving proper bonds;\(^7\) and the Court will restrain all creditors from suing in any other cause.

3 The Court cannot, ordinarily, compel a consolidation against the consent of the parties. Knight v. Ogden, 3 Tenn., 409; Ogburn v. Dunlap, 9 Lea, 162. The Court should, however, hear the causes at the same time, and order the parties refusing to consent to a proper consolidation with all the extra costs caused by the refusal to consolidate. Parties should not be allowed to consume a fund, or oppress a defendant, by an unnecessary multiplication of costs. By adopting the practice of taxing the parties, refusing to agree in a proper case to a consolidation, with all the costs of the cause there-after accruing, consolidations in proper cases will generally be consented to by all parties. The Court may, on its own motion, consolidate causes claiming the same fund against the same defendant. Clement v. Clement, 5 Cates, 40. See ante, § 754.

The statute provides that if separate suits to enforce mechanic's liens be brought in the same Court they shall be consolidated.\(^8\) So, on the filing of an insolvent bill by the personal representatives, or a creditor, the Chancellor may enjoin all other suits against the estate.\(^9\)

On motion of complainant John Doe, [or, by consent of parties] and it appearing that these three suits relate to the same subject-matter, it is ordered by the Court that they be consolidated, and considered and heard together, and that the proof hereafter taken in either cause may be read as to all the causes, provided notice to take depositions be served by the defendants on John Doe, Henry Jones, and William Smith, and by the complainants on Richard Roe and Sarah Brown, or on their respective Solicitors.

When two or more causes are consolidated or heard together, the decree will have the following title, commencement, and recitals:

Richard Roe, \(\text{et al.}\);

These three causes were heard together by consent of all parties, [or, if the causes have heretofore been consolidated, begin thus: These three causes having heretofore been consolidated and ordered to be heard together, came on for hearing] this June 24, 1893, before Hon. John K. Shields, Chancellor, upon all the pleadings and proofs on file, and all the record in each cause, on consideration of which the Chancellor was of opinion that [Here give the Chancellor's findings of fact, if it is desired to set them out specifically] and it is so adjudged and decreed.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed by the Court that [Here set out the decree, following the specific findings, if they have been previously given. See §§ 566-568.]

§ 756. Motions in Reference to Evidence.—During the progress of a suit many questions arise in reference to the taking of depositions, the production of documents, the extension of the time for taking proof, the exceptions to depositions, and other matters relative to the proof. Among such questions are the following:

1. Motion to Produce Documents. If the defendant's answer shows that he has in his possession, or under his control, any documents, or books, relevant to the matters in dispute, their production in the Master's office may be obtained on motion, supported by the pleadings themselves. So, if the complainant has a document, or book, in his possession, or under his control, the Court may order it to be produced and filed with the Master, on motion supported by affidavit, or other competent proof, or on motion supported by a cross bill and answer thereto.

2. Motion as to Notice to Take Depositions. If either party desires the length of the notice for taking a deposition to be enlarged, or restricted, he may move therefor, supporting his motion by an affidavit. So, he may move for an order that service of notice on one or more of several adversaries shall be notice to all. Both of these orders may be made by the Master, on like motion.

\(^8\) Code, § 3546.

\(^9\) Code, §§ 2383-2384.

3. Motion to Extend the Time for Taking Proof. Either party may move for an order extending his time for taking proof, or for an order opening the cause for further proof, supporting his motion by a special affidavit, or affidavits. These motions may be made before either the Chancellor at Chambers, or before the Master in vacation.

4. Motion to Re-Examine a Witness. A witness may be re-examined as to the same matters, on leave obtained from the Chancellor or Master, by motion, supported by an affidavit showing cause. A witness may be cross-examined; or, if his deposition has been suppressed, it may be retaken, without any order for that purpose.

5. Motion in Reference to Exceptions to Depositions. If amendments are needed to a deposition to obviate exceptions, or if a party’s exceptions have been overruled by the Master, or sustained and an appeal taken, he may obtain leave to make the amendment, or have it made, or may obtain the action of the Chancellor on his exceptions, by bringing the matter forward by motion, supported in case of amendments by affidavit. It will be too late to make these motions after the trial of the cause has begun. These motions may be made in vacation, before the Chancellor, on notice.

§ 757. Motions in Reference to Rulings by the Master.—The Master is clothed with large powers, and may at his office make many rulings. Any of these rulings may be appealed from and revised or reversed by the Chancellor. These rulings usually consist of: (1) sustaining, or overruling, exceptions to answers; (2) allowing, or disallowing, a pro confesso; (3) extending, or refusing to extend, the time for answering; (4) setting aside, or refusing to set aside, a pro confesso; (5) overruling, or sustaining, exceptions to depositions; (6) extending, or refusing to extend, the time for taking proof; (7) reviving or refusing to revive, a cause; (8) admitting, or rejecting, evidence on the taking of an account or the making of a report.

In all of these cases the appeal should be entered in writing at the time it is taken, and should be brought before the Chancellor by motion, supported by all the papers the Master had before him.

§ 758. Motions for a Reference to the Master.—As a rule, the Court will not refer a matter to the Master, except on a hearing of the cause; but if the parties consent to such a reference, it will be ordered on mere motion. The Court will, also, on mere motion, order a reference to the Master in the following cases previous to the hearing: 1, To report on the advisability of a partition, or sale of land; 2, To report whether it is necessary to sell the land of a decedent to pay his debts; 3, To report the assets and liabilities of an insolvent estate; and 4, to report whether it is manifestly to the interest of minors or married women to sell their land for their maintenance and education, or for reinvestment. The frame and form of these references will be found in the chapters treating of these particular suits.

If any pleading filed in the cause is unnecessarily prolix, or contains unnecessary and false allegations of a scandalous nature or grossly impertinent, the opposite party may, on motion, have the pleading referred to the Master to be revised, or the Court may order particular parts of the pleading to be stricken out.10

§ 759. Motions in Reference to a Master’s Report.—The subject of Master’s reports and of proceedings thereon have been fully considered in a separate Chapter.11 The following are the principal motions in reference to a Master’s report:

10 Code, § 4316. 11 Sec. ante, §§ 611-620.
1. Motion to Take up the Exceptions to a Master's Report. When a Master's report has been excepted to, it is ordinarily heard on the exceptions when the case is regularly reached on the docket; but it is in the discretion of the Chancellor to hear the report and the exceptions earlier, on motion supported by sufficient cause. If the term of the Court is short, and a recommittal and new report is desirable instantaneously, so as to expedite the final disposition of the cause, the Court will, ordinarily, take up the report and exceptions on motion, especially if the arguments will be brief and pointed.

2. Motion to Confirm a Master's Report. When the time for filing exceptions to a Master’s report has expired, and no exceptions have been put in, the party in whose favor the Master has reported may call up the report on motion and have it confirmed. This is the usual practice in all the cases mentioned in the preceding section, where a reference will be made previous to the hearing. The report will be confirmed when the cause is reached on the docket, of course, if not excepted to.

3. Motion to Recommit a Report. If a Masters' report be founded on illegal evidence, or if there be evidence not considered by the Master, or not filed when his report was made, the party injured may, on motion, supported by the record, or by affidavit, have the report recommitted. The affidavit should show why the new evidence was not taken before the report was made, and should have all the definiteness and particularity required on a motion for a new trial.

§ 760. Motions in Reference to the Trial.—There are various motions pertaining to the trial which must be made before the hearing has been entered upon: these motions are generally the following:

1. Motion for a Trial by Jury. Either party may, upon motion made at the proper time, have a jury to try and determine any material fact in dispute. No affidavit is needed in support of this motion.

2. Motions in Reference to Evidence. Before the trial begins each party should see to it that all his evidence is marked filed, that none of his depositions stand suppressed, and that none of his exceptions to depositions are undisposed of. He may bring these matters before the Court by mere motion, but must do so before the trial begins, or it will be too late.

3. Motion for a Continuance. When the case is reached on the docket, either party not ready for trial may move for a continuance, supporting his motion by affidavit, or by an agreement signed by the opposite party. The affidavit must, in all cases, be special, and must be strong in proportion to the length of time the affiant has had to prepare for trial.

§ 761. Motions in Reference to Sales.—When the Master is ordered to make a sale of land, there are often various motions required before the sale is perfected and the purchaser gets a title, and among them are the following:

1. Motion to Confirm a Sale. If a report of a sale is on file, either party, or the purchaser, may move for a confirmation, after the time for excepting to the report has expired.

2. Motion to Set Aside a Sale. If a sale has been irregularly or unlawfully made, it may be set aside on motion, supported by a record, or other proof of the irregularity or illegality of the sale. The purchaser, himself, may make the motion, supporting it by a petition, showing defect in the title, or great deficiency in quantity, or any other fact entitling him in Equity to be relieved.

3. Motion to Open Biddings. If any party in interest is dissatisfied with the price bid for land, and can secure an advanced bid of at least ten per cent., he may have the biddings opened, on motion supported by a petition, and the written offer of the proposing advance-bidder, tendering good security for his proposed bid.

4. Motions to Revive a Decree of Sale. If for any reason, except a satisfaction of the decree, the Master fails to sell land ordered to be sold, the decree of sale may be revived, on mere motion.

5. Motions for the Benefit of the Purchaser. If the purchaser wishes to have a lien declared paid, or to obtain a deed, or to have a reference as to encumbrances, or as to taxes, or to have a writ of possession awarded him, he may move therefor, supporting his motion, when encumbrances are alleged, by affidavit or other evidence thereof.

6. Motions for an Order of Sale. When the Sheriff levies on land and returns the execution unsatisfied for want of time to advertise and sell, on motion of the party interested in having the land sold, the Court will award an order of sale to the Sheriff to sell the land.

§ 762. Motions in Reference to the Correction of Errors.—If either party is aggrieved by a decree, he must apply to the Court in due time by motion, or otherwise, for the appropriate remedy. These remedies will be more fully shown hereafter; they are, in brief, as follows:

1. Motions to Correct the Minutes. Sometimes an erroneous entry is made on the minutes, or an erroneous order is made by the Court: in such cases the party aggrieved may move to have the minutes corrected, or the erroneous order revised, or set aside, supporting his motion by affidavit when the error is not shown by the record itself.

2. Motion for a Writ of Error Coram Nobis. If a decree is rendered against a party by reason of an error of fact in a proceeding of which he had no notice, or which he was prevented by disability from showing or correcting, or in which he was prevented from making defence by surprise, accident, mistake, or fraud, without fault on his part, he may reverse the same by a writ of error coram nobis, which may be had upon notice, supported by a petition.

3. Motion to Rehear a Cause. If an erroneous decree has been pronounced, and the term of the Court has not ended, the party aggrieved may move for a rehearing, supporting his motion by a petition.

4. Motion to File a Bill of Review. If an erroneous decree has been made, and the term has closed, or thirty days elapsed, the party injured may file a bill of review: if the bill be based on newly discovered evidence, leave to file it must be had. This leave must be obtained by motion, supported by a petition, or by the proposed bill properly framed for that purpose, and duly sworn to.

5. Motion to Correct a Decree. Any clerical error, mistake in the calculation of interest, or other mistake in a decree, may be amended on motion, supported by the record, or the Chancellor’s notes.

6. Motion to Retax Costs. If costs have been improperly, erroneously, or illegally taxed, or omitted to be taxed, the party aggrieved may move the Court to retax the costs, and include costs omitted, or correct errors made. The motion must be accompanied by an affidavit setting forth the errors or omissions complained of.

7. Motion for an Appeal. If any party is dissatisfied with any decree, he may move for an appeal, supporting his motion by a proper appeal bond, or by the pauper oath, or he may get time within which to file his bond or oath.
ARTICLE V.
MOTIONS BY STRANGERS AND QUASI PARTIES.

§ 763. Motions by Strangers to the Suit
§ 764. Motions by a Quasi Party.

§ 763. Motions by Strangers to the Suit.—As a rule, no person can be heard in reference to a suit, or in reference to the property or matters involved in the litigation, unless he is a party to the suit, or the agent or Solicitor of a party. There are, however, certain persons, who, while not parties to the pleadings, are parties to some of the subsequent proceedings in a cause, such as (1) persons who file claims or come in under a decree in the cause; (2) receivers, trustees and guardians, appointed by the Court, (3) reported bidders for, and purchasers of, property sold by order of the Court, and (4) the sureties on notes and bonds filed in a cause; these persons are often termed quasi parties, and they have the right to make any motion required by their interest, or their duties; but persons who are neither parties nor quasi parties, will not, as a rule, be heard except by a sworn petition. The following are the most common motions by persons not parties to the suit:

1. Motion for Leave to Become a Party. If any person, not a party to a suit for the recovery of property, has an interest in the property involved in the litigation, he may present a petition to the Court and move for leave to become a party defendant, to the end that he may assert his rights in the premises.\(^1\)

2. Motion for Leave to File a Claim. When the estate of a decedent, or the assets of an insolvent firm, corporation, or other person, is being administered in the Chancery Court, any creditor may, on motion, supported by a petition, have leave to become a party and prove his claim. The petition should specify the claim, and show that it is a subsisting bona fide indebtedness.

3. Motion for Leave to Reclaim Property in the Custody of the Court. If a stranger has an interest in, or title to, any property in the custody of the Court, he may obtain leave to assert his rights, by motion supported by a petition, the petition setting forth the rights of the petitioner with precision and particularity.\(^2\)

4. Motion for Leave to Sue a Receiver. The Court will not allow its receiver, or other officers, acting under its orders to be harassed by suits in other Courts.\(^3\) Hence leave must be obtained, by motion, supported by petition or affidavit, before any suit can be brought against a receiver. The petition should detail the rights of the petitioner, and show the necessity of enforcing them against the receiver.\(^4\)

§ 764. Motions by a Quasi Party.—All persons who (1) have been reported as bidders for, or purchasers of property ordered by the Court to be sold, or (2) who have been by the Court or Master appointed receivers, trustees, or guardians, or (3) who are named as creditors in a bill to administer assets,\(^5\) or (4) who have filed claims in a cause, or come in under a decree, or (5) who are sureties on any note, bond or other obligation filed in a cause, are, in a limited sense, parties; that is, they have a right to be heard by the Court in any matter affecting the property by them purchased or bid for, or their rights, liabilities or duties as receiver, trustee, guardian, claimant, or surety. And so the Master, or his deputy, the sheriff, or his deputy, or any other officer of the Court, may move the Court for directions or instructions in any matter growing out of the proper discharge of their official duties, all other parties interested having due notice thereof. Such motions would require the support of affidavits, or petitions, when the facts do not fully appear of record. The following are the principal motions in such cases:

1. Motions by a Purchaser of Property at a Master’s Sale. If a purchaser of property at a Master’s sale desires a reference as to alleged encumbrances, or as to disputed titles, or disputed boundaries, or desires to be relieved from his purchase, he may make a motion therefor, supporting it by a petition fully setting forth the particulars. He may have a reference as to unpaid taxes, or may have an order for a deed, or for a writ of possession, or have a lien declared paid, on mere motion, provided he is entitled thereto, and the Court has not lost its jurisdiction of the suit.

2. Motion to Have Satisfaction of a Decree Set Aside. If a stranger buys property at an execution sale, and such property is recovered from him, he may on motion supported by affidavit, have a scire facias against the defendant in order to have the satisfaction set aside, and the original decree revived for his benefit.

3. Motions in Regard to Bids. A person who has rights as a bidder or purchaser at a Master’s or receiver’s sale, may, when his interests so require, bring those rights to the attention of the Court. If the facts do not fully appear in the Master’s or receiver’s report, he may bring them before the Court by petition. Thus, if the Master should fail or refuse to report David Doe as the highest and best bidder, he may bring the matter before the Court by petition, and have the report corrected or the biddings opened.

4. Motions by a Receiver, Guardian, or a Trustee. If a receiver, guardian or trustee desires to be discharged, or to have his accounts passed on, or to have an allowance made him, or to report any matter to the Court relating to his duties, or to obtain instructions from the Court, he may bring the matter before the Court by motion, supported by the record, or a report, or a petition, or an affidavit, according to the character of the matter, and the necessity for showing forth facts not otherwise appearing.

5. Motions by Claimants. A creditor or claimant may except to a Master’s report as to his debt or claim, or may by motion supported by petition or affidavit, bring any matter before the Court in reference to his debt or claim, or in reference to any other claim which he seeks to resist.

6. Motions by Sureties. Sureties on any note or bond executed in the cause may, by motion, bring before the Court any matter affecting their liability: they may have a reference to the Master as to any payments or credits they may claim, and may invoke the decision of the Court on any question involving their rights or duties. Sureties on bonds desiring to be released may be heard on motion for that purpose, on giving the notice required by law.\(^7\)

MOTIONS ABOUT PAYING MONEY INTO, OR OUT OF, COURT.

§ 765. When Money Will be Ordered to be Paid Into Court.
§ 766. When a Complainant Will be Ordered to Pay Into Court.

§ 765. When Money will be Ordered to be Paid into Court.—There are many cases wherein the Court will order money, or choses in action, to be paid into the Clerk’s office before a final decree. This order is ordinarily made on the defendant, but it may be made on the complainant, also. The order is, however, never made against a defendant unless he admits (1) that he has the money, or chose in action, in his possession, or under his control; (2) that it belongs to the complainant; and (3) that it is a trust fund.¹ There are cases, however, where a defendant will be ordered to pay in money that is not trust money, but in such cases the defendant must clearly admit that he has a fund in his possession belonging to one or more of the parties to the suit, that he is willing the Court may determine its disposition, and he must make a tender of it in his answer, without actually depositing it with the Clerk and Master.

A complainant will be ordered to pay money into Court when, on his own admission in his bill, he owes the defendant a certain sum which it is equitable he should pay before he can require the defendant to do equity, or before he can, in good conscience, ask the interposition of the Court as against the defendant.

When money has been paid into Court upon an order, such payment is merely a collateral security, and is not to be taken as the property of the opposite party, until so adjudged upon the hearing: it belongs to the party who may be eventually found entitled to it, and it may be ordered to be returned to the party paying it in, if, on the hearing, he show a right to it.²

An order for the payment or transfer of a fund should always be entitled in the cause to which the fund belongs. A fund may be transferred from one cause to another upon petition filed in the cause from which the transfer is sought,³ in which case, there should be an order of record in such cause showing the transfer, and, also, an order of record in the cause to which the transfer is made, showing the receipt of the fund, and whence derived.

§ 766. When a Complainant will be Ordered to Pay into Court.—Under the operation of that beneficent jurisdictional maxim, He who seeks Equity must do Equity,⁴ the Court will require a complainant to do things which the Court could not require of him if he was a defendant. If a complainant, seeking Equity, admits that he has in his possession money, or choses in action, belonging to the defendant, or admits that he is indebted to the defendant in a definite sum, the Court will require him to do Equity, at least to the extent of his admission, by paying into Court the money, or thing, admitted to belong to the defendant; and compliance with this requirement by the complainant will be the condition on which relief, temporary or permanent, will be granted him. The ordinary cases in which this preliminary order is made are the following:

1. Payment Into Court as the Condition of Injunction Relief. If in a bill tendered for a flat for injunction, the complainant admits any money to be due the defendant, or fails to allege any sufficient Equity against any part of the matter sought to be enjoined, the Chancellor may require the complainant to pay into Court the amount admitted to be due, or not sufficiently contested, before any injunction as to the residue.6

2. Payment Into Court by a Trustee Seeking the Aid of the Court. When an executor, administrator, guardian, trustee, or other fiduciary, has a trust fund in his hands, and applies to the Court for its instruction as to how such funds should be disposed of, the Court will, on motion of a defendant, order the fund to be paid into Court.6

3. Payment Into Court by a Purchaser Who Seeks a Specific Performance. A purchaser, in possession of the land, or a non-resident purchaser, filing a bill for specific performance, will be required to pay the unpaid consideration money into Court.7

4. Payment Into Court by a Party Seeking Redemption. Where a bill is filed by the debtor to enforce his right of redemption, alleging tender and refusal of the purchase-money, the money should be brought into Court when the bill is filed; and if not, the Court may order the complainant to pay it in.8

5. Payment Into Court on a Bill of Interpleader. On a bill of interpleader being filed in reference to money, or a chose in action, the complainant may be required to pay it into Court.9

6. Payment Into Court by Other Complainants. When a partner owes the firm an individual debt, he will not be allowed to come into Equity for an account, without paying his private debt, for he who seeks Equity must do Equity.10

§ 767. When a Defendant will be Ordered to Pay into Court.—It may be stated as a general rule that to obtain an order upon a defendant to pay money into Court before the final hearing, it must appear that he who asks for such an order has an interest in the money, and that he who holds it has no equitable right to it, but holds it in trust: and these facts must so appear as not to be open to any further controversy; and must, ordinarily, appear by the admission of the defendant in his answer, or in an affidavit, or in a written stipulation.11

The Court will not make such an order where the defendant either denies the possession of a trust fund, or denies the complainant’s right to it.12

The ordinary cases wherein a defendant will be ordered to pay money, or choses in action, into Court before final decree, are when a guardian, executor, administrator, trustee, or other fiduciary, admits in his answer that he has trust funds in his hands belonging to the complainant, in which case the Court will, on motion of the latter, order such funds to be paid into Court. This order will be made on a defendant, who is a trustee by implication, as well as on an express trustee; and where only a part of the fund claimed is admitted by the defendant to be in his hands, the Court will order that part to be paid in. The Court will order trust funds to be paid into Court, without any allegation, or proof, that there has been any abuse of the trust, or that the fund is in danger pending the litigation; but in all such cases it must clearly appear that the fund is a trust fund, and not a mere debt.13

§ 768. Investment of Money Paid Into Court.—Where a fund in Court is likely to remain there longer than six months, the Court will, on application of any party in interest, order it to be loaned out, or otherwise invested. Where funds belong to an infant, or a non compos, who has no general guardian, or belong to a beneficiary, who is entitled to the interest only, or belong to heirs, legatees, or distributees, who are non-residents, or unknown, or are in litigation in another cause, or in another Court, or in any case where the interest of the parties entitled will be manifestly promoted thereby, the Court will direct the Master to loan or invest such funds, specifying in the decree the manner and length of such investment.\textsuperscript{14}

No money paid into Court can lawfully be loaned out by the Master, or otherwise by him invested, without an express order of the Court.\textsuperscript{15}

Where money is in Court, or has been invested by order of the Court, the fact that some of the parties to the cause have married, or died, or that the suit has otherwise abated, will not prevent the Court from making all necessary orders to pay out the fund to the parties entitled;\textsuperscript{16} nor will such facts prevent the Court from taking judgment on notes given for loaned money, or from taking other steps necessary to secure or collect notes or other property in the custody of the Court.

\textbf{§ 769. Discretionary Powers of the Court in Paying out Money.}—Where a party before the Court has a clear right to a fund, or to any part thereof, he is entitled to a decree therefor, in accordance with his right; and the Court is bound to pronounce such a decree, where properly demanded. But there are occasionally small sums of money in the Master's office, long unclaimed, or belonging to minors, or persons of unsound mind: in such cases, Courts of Chancery, by virtue of their general inherent powers to do Equity, and act as general guardian of persons under disability, will exercise a large discretion, in ordering these small sums to be so paid out as to do those entitled the most good. Thus, where the amount belonging to a minor, or \textit{non contém}, is too small to warrant the expense of a general guardian, the Court may order it to be paid to his guardian \textit{ad iltem}, or next friend, or to his parent, or to a near kinsman, or other trustworthy person, with orders to apply it as the best interests of the party under disability may require.\textsuperscript{17} Where there is a small sum due an infant wife, the Court may order it to be paid to her, on the joint receipt of herself and husband, when her necessities require it. Where a fund belongs to unknown heirs, and has remained long unclaimed in the Master's office, the Court may distribute it among the known living heirs, on their written agreement to refund when ordered, but without requiring any refunding bond.
Where there is a fund in Court, belonging to the estate of a decedent, too small to justify administration, the Court may order it to be paid out to the person who would have been entitled to administer, or to some other trustworthy person, to be expended for the benefit of those entitled. And in general, in very small matters, where persons are under disability, the Court may, as their general guardian, exercise a discretion not at all permissible in larger matters.\textsuperscript{18}

MOTIONS AT CHAMBERS, AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON.

ARTICLE I. Jurisdiction of the Chancellor at Chambers.

ARTICLE II. Proceedings before the Chancellor at Chambers.

ARTICLE I.

THE JURISDICTION OF THE CHANCELLOR AT CHAMBERS.

§ 770. Jurisdiction of the Chancellor at Chambers Generally Considered.
§ 771. Jurisdiction to Rule on Demurrers, Pleas, or Any Motion, or Other Application.
§ 772. Jurisdiction of the Chancellor at Chambers to Confirm Sales.

The powers of the Chancellor at Chambers in Tennessee have always been greater than those ordinarily exercised. Some Chancellors refrained from exercising many of these powers because of the inconveniences to them and to suitors, especially when there were only two or three Chancellors for the whole State, and the Courts were often a hundred miles from a suitor; and other Chancellors seeing these powers not generally exercised had misgivings as to their existence, or hesitancy as to their exercise.

Formerly in England\(^1\) the common law Courts were held at stated periods, and were attended by crowds of people, visitors, witnesses, litigants, attorneys, barristers, bailiffs and other officers of the Court with their insignia of office, and above all it was the Judge, gowned in black silk, like a big woman, with a monstrous white wig on his head. On the other hand, the Chancery Court was in session, directly or indirectly, nearly all the time. There were in attendance upon it no visitors, no witnesses, few or no litigants, only a few lawyers called “Solicitors,” and only one or two bailiffs. A very large proportion of the Court’s business was dispatched by the Masters, of whom there were several, or by Vice-Chancellors; and these did the business of the Court, not so much in term time as at Chambers, the Court having exclusive jurisdiction, not only of all equitable litigation, but also of the persons and estates of minors, idiots and lunatics, appointing their guardians and caring for their estates and the expenditures thereof.

But in North Carolina and Tennessee, at first, the Chancery Courts and the Circuit Courts were held at the same times and by the same Judges, and the Equity business was generally postponed until the law business was over, and the jurors and witnesses discharged, and the Judges and lawyers anxious to close the term so as to go to their homes, or to the next Court. And after the adjournment of the Court, the Judge and the lawyers, in most of the county seats, were not seen until the lapse of four months, when the new term of the Circuit Court began. The Judges being thus inaccessible, very little Chambers business was transacted, and in consequence, Chancery litigation was greatly prolonged.

§ 771. Jurisdiction to Rule on Demurrers, Pleas, or Any Motion or Other Application.—The Chancellor has jurisdiction to hear and determine, in vacation and at Chambers, all issues and questions arising on demurrers, dilatory pleas, motions and applications to amend pleadings, in any cause pending in his Division, and, by consent of parties, or on notice by the party desiring such action, such notice to be given in the same way and manner as in case of motions to dissolve injunctions, as shown below.

The language of the statutes is broad enough to include any motion and the adjudication of any question that can be made in open court during the progress of a suit.

§ 772. Jurisdiction of the Chancellor at Chambers to Confirm Sales.—On application of a party interested, and ten days' notice to the opposite party, the Chancellor may at Chambers confirm sales of land, where the report of sale has been on file for thirty days, and has not been excepted to, and the biddings not raised; provided the Clerk and Master certifies, under his official seal, that there is, in his opinion, no reasonable prospect of the bid being raised as much as three per cent. But if the Clerk and Master certifies that there is a reasonable prospect of the bid being raised as much as three per cent., no action shall be taken on such motion, and the papers shall be returned to the Clerk and Master that he may receive advanced bids. The Chancellor, however, is not bound to confirm a sale when the Clerk and Master certifies that there is no reasonable prospect of such advanced bid, but he has full discretion in the matter, and may confirm the sale, or refer the matter back to the Clerk and Master, to receive advanced bids, if any be made. No sale, however, shall be confirmed unless the parties in interest, or their Solicitor of record, shall have been given ten days' notice of the time and place of the application therefor: in case the party in interest is a non-resident, such notice shall be filed with the Clerk and Master for ten days, and it shall be so noted on his rule docket.

§ 773. Jurisdiction of the Chancellor at Chambers to Make a Final Decree. While it is entirely proper to give the Chancellor power at Chambers to pass on any issue or question that may arise in a suit in Chancery, preliminary to powers conferred on the Chancellor by the second clause of the first section of this Act cannot be exercised out of the county where the suit is pending, unless by consent of the parties.

It would seem from the use of the word "issues," that "issues" of fact arising on dilatory pleas, might be within the statute, one of its objects being to "expedite" the litigation by getting everything out of the way of a final hearing on the merits.

By "dilatory plea" is ordinarily meant a plea in abatement; but as pleas in abatement are now heard along with the merits of the controversy, as heretofore shown, (see ante, § 261,) they need no longer delay the final decision of the cause. It would require only a liberal interpretation of the statute to hold that any plea, whether in abatement or in bar, which is insufficient, is dilatory, as such a plea delays a hearing on the merits.

9 The words of the Act of 1903 are "all issues and questions arising on demurrers, dilatory pleas, motions and applications to amend pleadings," and the words of the Act of 1905, "any action desired." As an "issue" or "question" of fact may arise on a "dilatory plea," it would seem from the letter of the law, that the Chancellor could determine it, notwithstanding the Act of 1897, ch. 121. See, Pleas in Abatement, ante, §§ 260-261.
11 Ibid.
§ 774. Jurisdiction of the Chancellor at Chambers to Grant an Appeal.
Any party dissatisfied with any decree rendered at Chambers, under this and the foregoing sections, may, at the time the decree is rendered, or within twenty days thereafter, pray for an appeal, which the Chancellor may permit, and may allow the appellant not to exceed thirty days in which to give bond, or otherwise comply with the terms of the decree. The order granting the appeal, if made at Chambers, shall be endorsed by the Chancellor, and transmitted to the Clerk and Master, and by him entered, as in case of the decree appealed from.
A bill of exceptions will lie to any act or omission of the Chancellor at Chambers, when it would lie in a like case at term time.

§ 775. Jurisdiction of the Chancellor at Chambers, under Acts Prior to 1903.
The Chancellor is vested with extensive powers during vacation by statutes passed prior to 1903. These powers are wholly unaffected by the Acts of 1903 and 1905, except in so far as they have been thereby confirmed or enlarged. No notice is required to authorize the Chancellor to discharge any of the powers specified in this section, except the following: 1. Hearing motions, and making orders to prepare a case for hearing; 2. Making orders to carry orders or decrees into execution; 3. Regulating and revising the actions and rulings of the Master; 4. Dissolving or modifying injunctions and appointing receivers; and 5. Discharging or reducing any levy or bond in an attachment suit, in all of which cases, five days' notice shall be given by the party desiring the action of the Chancellor.

The powers of the Chancellor at Chambers based on legislation prior to 1903 are as follows:
1. Powers in Relation to Extraordinary Process. The Chancellor may in vacation (1) grant injunctions, attachments of property, and ex ejectis; (2) may appoint receivers; (3) may discharge or reduce any levy in an attachment of error, a liberal construction would allow an appeal as a matter of right, and a writ of error from any final Chambers decree after its entry on the minutes, or in the minute book, and especially after the authentication and approval thereof by the signature of the Chancellor at the succeeding term of his Court. A decree thus entered and approved becomes in fact a decree of the Court; this is shown by the fact that final process issues thereon. See secs. 3, 7 and 9, of Act of 1903; also, § 2 of the Act of 1905. If not then a decree of the Court, or in every respect as effective as a decree of the Court, the statute would probably be unconstitutional. If a term of the Court should open before the time for appealing had expired, an appeal could be taken in open Court as soon as the decree was entered on the minutes and approved by the Chancellor.

he transacts business, is, for euphemism, called his "Chambers." Sometimes when the proceeding is very important, or the number of attendants large, Chambers proceedings are held in a Court room. But wherever the place may be that the Chancellor transacts any business as a Chancellor, that place, pro hac vice, becomes his Chambers, provided it be not his Court room, while his Court is in session and he presiding.

While, ordinarily, the attendance of the Sheriff, or a deputy is not necessary or required, at Chambers, nevertheless cases may and do arise when the presence of such an office may be necessary, especially while the Chancellor is exercising some of the enlarged jurisdiction conferred on him by the Acts of 1903 and 1905. In any event, the Chancellor may command the attendance of the Sheriff at his Chambers whenever, in his discretion, such attendance is necessary or important.

And so, for like reasons and in like manner, the attendance of the Clerk and Master may be required at Chambers, and he may be required to bring with him any files or papers in his office needed in the matter pending.

§ 777. How Causes are Heard at Chambers.—The Chancellor hears and determines the questions presented to him under the preceding Article, at the time and place specified by consent, or in the notice; but if he can do so without disregarding some other public duty, or without great personal inconvenience, he is required to fix an early date and convenient place at which he will hear the same. At such hearing he has all the powers he possesses at a regular term of Court, as to the questions submitted to him for his determination. The file of papers in the cause being heard may be looked to by the Chancellor in determining the questions submitted to him.

If the matter to be acted on by the Chancellor at Chambers, is a matter of minor importance, the hearing on it, if any hearing is required at all, will ordinarily be informal; but if the matter is one of grave consequence, especially if argument is to be heard, and parties and witnesses or spectators are present, the hearing will approximate, in formality and dignity of procedure, a like hearing in open Court, and the same procedure will be observed.

The Chancellor will first satisfy himself that the parties are consenting to his jurisdiction, or that the notice required by the statute has been duly given; for, without consent or legal notice, he would have no right to act in any case under the Acts of 1903 and 1905.

§ 778. Notice or Consent Required for Hearings at Chambers.—A party desiring to bring any matter, or the hearing of any cause, before the Chancellor at Chambers must, (1) obtain the consent of parties adversely interested, or (2) give the notice required by the statute; but no cause can be heard and determined by final decree unless the parties, or their Solicitors, consent to such hearing.

In all cases, except for a final hearing and the confirmation of land sales, the notice of the intended application shall be given in the same way and manner as in case of motions to dissolve injunctions. If any party has been pro confessoed a copy of the notice filed with the Clerk and Master of the Court where the case is pending, for five days will be sufficient, provided the Clerk and Master enters it on his rule docket. Guardians, guardians ad litem and Solicitors representing parties under any disability, may consent and give notice under this section.

1 Acts of 1903, ch. 248, § 1.
2 Ibid, § 5.
3 It would be well for the Chancellor to require a written consent in all cases of final hearing. The writing will save many differences of opinion and much contention as to what was included in the consent. The losing party will seek to restrict the consent, and the winning party will want to enlarge it. See post, § 1141, sub-sec. 4.
4 See Article on the Dissolution of Injunctions, § 1143. In case of confirmation of land sales, ten days' notice is required, and consent for a final hearing.
5 Acts of 1905, ch. 427, § 1. This means that guardians, guardians ad litem and Solicitors representing parties under disabilities of any kind, may bind those they represent in any case under the Acts of 1903 and 1905 by bringing matters before the Chancellor at Chambers, or consenting to their being brought.
§ 779. Forms of Proceedings at Chambers, and of Entries Recording the Same.—The following forms may be of some benefit in proceedings at Chambers under this and preceding sections:

NOTICE OF AN APPLICATION TO THE CHANCELLOR.

John Doe, \textit{vs.} Richard Roe. \textit{No. 713.—In Chancery at Bristol.}

The defendant is hereby notified that at 10 a. m. on the 12th day of September, 1905, in the office of the Clerk and Master at Bristol, Tenn., I will apply to Chancellor Hal H. Haynes for an order overruling the demurrer \textit{[or plea]} filed by him in this cause \textit{[or for such other order or action of the Chancellor as may be desired.]} This Sept. 1, 1905.

CAMPBELL & BOREN, Solicitors for Compl't.

ORDER MADE AT CHAMBERS.

This cause came on to be heard before me this Sept. 12, 1905, in the office of the Clerk and Master at Bristol, on application of the complainant that the demurrer \textit{[or plea]} of the defendant be overruled, and it duly appearing that legal notice of this application has been given \textit{[or, and the defendant having waived notice, or the defendant being present in person, or by Solicitor, as the case may be,]} on consideration of the premises, the Chancellor is of opinion that said demurrer is bad, and the same is therefore overruled, \textit{[or, that said plea is insufficient and dilatory, and the same is therefore overruled and disallowed,]} and the de-defendant is required to answer the bill on or before the 30th instant.\textsuperscript{6}

This order made on Sept. 12th, 1905, and the Clerk and Master will enter it at once on the minutes of his Court.

PRAYER FOR, AND GRANT OF, APPEAL.\textsuperscript{8}

The defendant, Richard Roe, prays an appeal from the decree of the Chancellor at Chambers overruling his demurrer in this cause, and the Chancellor being of opinion that an appeal is proper, grants said appeal, and allows the defendant thirty days in which to give bond, \textit{[or, file a pauper's oath.]}

The Clerk and Master will enter this order on his minutes, \textit{[or, in his minute book;]} and, on the appeal bond being filed \textit{[or oath taken]} in season, will forward a transcript of the record in the cause to the Supreme Court.

Sept. 12, 1905.

HAL H. HAYNES, Chancellor.

This prayer for, and grant of, an appeal, may, when made at the time the de-degree is pronounced, be entered just below the decree, and on the same paper.

§ 780. Orders and Decrees at Chambers, How Entered of Record.—The orders and decrees made by the Chancellor at Chambers, under this and the preceding section, must be in writing and signed by the Chancellor, and trans-day, and if the defendant does not answer on or before that day, a \textit{pro confesso} can be entered against him on the following Monday.

line may be omitted.

vision of a decision at Chambers. A writ of error mitted by him, under seal, by registered letter or express, to the Clerk and Master of the Court where the respective causes are pending, and the Clerk and Master shall note upon each the exact time of its receipt by him; and he shall enter it and all endorsements thereon, at once in his minute book, under an appropriate heading, showing that it is an order or decree made at Chambers; and when so entered it shall have the same force and effect as if made and entered at term time.

If the minutes of the Court shall have been left open, then the orders and decrees made at Chambers may be entered on the open minutes as in term time, under an appropriate sub-head, thus: “Orders and Decrees made at Chambers.” Each order and decree should have at its foot, in addition to the endorsements on the decree and the date it was made by the Chancellor, an entry showing when it was made on the minute book.

§ 781. How Orders and Decrees at Chambers are Authenticated.—At the next term of the Court, after the entry of a Chambers order or decree on the minute book, or in the minutes, the Chancellor is required to examine it, and if found correct he approves it and signs the minutes.

CHANCELLOR’S APPROVAL OF THE MINUTES.

The foregoing order, [or orders and decrees,] made by me at Chambers since the last term of the Court have been examined and found correct, and are hereby approved.
November 4, 1903.

If any error be discovered in any order or decree he will have it corrected so as to conform to the original decree.

The Chancellor may leave his record of the term’s proceedings unadjudged until Court in course, in which event, any order or decree made at Chambers may be entered on the minutes as in term time, and shall be as effective as if made during term time; provided that all the steps are taken by the applicant, the Chancellor and the Clerk and Master, that are required to be taken by them, in case of orders and decrees at Chambers when the record is closed.
Orders and decrees so entered have all the force and effect of orders and decrees made and entered in term time; and if the decree is final it may be appealed from, and if not appealed from may be enforced by execution, writ of possession or other proper final process as in case of other final decrees. But when the record is left open the Chancellor may close it at any convenient time, but in any event not later than the next regular term of the Court.

§ 782. Force and Effect of Orders and Decrees at Chambers.—Any final decree at Chambers, made pursuant to the preceding sections, when entered by the Clerk and Master, either in his minute book or on the unclosed minutes of his Court, has the same force and effect as if made and entered at term time, and may in like manner be appealed from, and if not appealed from is enforced by executions, writs of possession, and other final process therein provided; and it is the duty of the Clerk and Master, after the expiration of thirty days from the entry of a final decree upon the minutes of his Court, to issue all necessary process, as in case of final decrees made and entered in term time.

9 An appropriate heading would be:

CHANCERY COURT AT BRISTOL, TENNESSEE.
Orders and decrees made at Chambers by Hon.
Hal. H. Haynes, Chancellor, since the last term of this Court.
11 There is a difference between an entry made in the minute book and an entry made on the minutes; the former is made when the minutes of the preceding term have been closed, and so a fuller caption is required. When the minutes of the Court have been left open by the Chancellor, a Chambers order may be entered on the minutes under the caption given in the text.
12 The Act says at the next regular term, but as this is merely directory, the authentication can better be done at the next term, whether regular or special.
Besides, the Act of 1905, ch. 427, § 2, requires objections to Chambers orders and decrees to be made “before or during the next regular or special term of Court succeeding the entry of such order or decree on the minutes.”
16 Acts of 1903, ch. 248, §§ 3, 7, and 9; Acts of 1905, ch. 427, § 2. It is clear that the two Acts give a Chambers order, or decree, when entered by the Clerk and Master, all the efficacy of a Court order or decree.
And what is true as to the force and effect of a final decree at Chambers, is, a fortiori, true of any order made at Chambers.

§ 783. Exceptions to Orders and Decrees Made at Chambers.—If proper notice of an application to the Chancellor at Chambers was not given to the exceptant, or if the Chancellor heard the question presented at an adjourned time and place whereof the exceptant had no notice, or if in any way the exceptant was not sufficiently notified, or if notified failed to be present on good grounds, or if in any way unjustly prejudiced by the order made, or by the transmission or entry thereof, and he desires to except to the order, or if he desires to except to a decree on the merits made without his consent, he must make his objections and take the proper steps to present them before or during the next regular or special term of the Court succeeding the entry of the order or decree; or the irregularity or want of notice, or other failure to comply with the provisions set out in this section, will be deemed waived and the defect cured.19 18 If the defendant to the application was present at the hearing thereof that cures want of, or defect in, a notice.  19 Acts of 1905, ch. 427, § 2.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

AFFIDAVITS.

§ 784. Office of an Affidavit. — An affidavit is a statement reduced to writing, and sworn to before some person authorized to administer the oath. The ordinary offices of an affidavit are (1) to aid in supporting or opposing, an application for an order of the Court, whether such application be based on a motion, or on petition; (2) to serve as a substitute for an officer's return of service of process, notices and other papers, (3) to verify bills, answers and pleas, when verification is necessary; and (4) in general, to bring before the Court facts which do not otherwise appear in the record of a cause.

Affidavits are ordinarily needed in support of motions in the following cases: (1) motions for publication when personal service is dispensed with; (2) motions for the appointment of guardians ad litem; (3) applications for process without bonds for costs or damages; (4) applications for an injunction; (5) for an attachment of property; or (6) for a receiver; (7) motions to set aside a pro confesso; (8) to extend the time for taking proof; (9) to re-examine a witness to the same facts; (10) for a continuance; (11) an attachment for contempt; (12) for better prosecution surety; (13) for a new trial, or re-hearing; (14) for leave to file a bill of review for new facts; (15) for retraction of costs, and (16) for all other cases wherein the grounds of the motion do not already sufficiently appear of record.

Affidavits are not a part of a Court record, even if filed, unless made so by a bill of exceptions, or by an order on the minutes in the nature of a bill of exceptions. All affidavits read in a cause should, however, be duly filed, and the Court may decline to hear them until they are filed.

§ 785. By Whom Affidavits Should be Made. — As a general rule, an affidavit should be made by the person who has personal knowledge of the facts, unless a good reason is shown for its being made by some other person. An affidavit may be made by an agent, or by a Solicitor, when he has personal knowledge of the facts; but, as a rule, not otherwise. The leading affidavit should be made by the party himself, unless he is sick, or absent, or the suit is being conducted by an agent, or attorney in fact: corroborating affidavits may be made by any one having personal knowledge of the facts. Where, however, the facts are peculiarly and personally within the knowledge of the Solicitor, his affidavit

1 1 Barb. Ch. Fr., 597; 3 Greenl. Ev., § 380. In judicis non creditur nisi jurat. (In judicial proceedings nothing is believed unless sworn to.) Sec. ante, § 62, sub-sec. 2. The Judges, Solicitors, attorneys, clerks, sheriffs, and other officers of the Court, are all sworn, and what they do and say officially is under the sanction of their respective oaths.

2 And his affidavit should show that he is acquainted with the facts, Cheatham v. Pearce, 5 Pick., 668.

3 1 Barb. Ch. Fr., 599. The general rule of evidence, that the best evidence obtainable must be produced, is as applicable to affidavits as to other evidence. Affidavits should, therefore, be made by those best acquainted with the facts to be proved, or a sufficient reason given for their not being so made; and all writings referred to in affidavits should be exhibited, or a sufficient excuse given for not so doing. See Topp v. White, 12 Heisk., 201; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 395, note; Cook v. Dewz, 2 Tenn. Ch., 496; Totten v. Nance, 3 Tenn. Ch., 264.

The affidavit of a Solicitor is, ordinarily, insufficient to supply the place of an affidavit by his client, unless the Solicitor show that the facts deposed to are within his personal knowledge and not within the knowledge of his client; or unless some other good reason be given why the party himself does not depose in place of his Solicitor. This rule holds good in case of affidavits to amend bills or answers, in which case the party must swear to the amend-should always accompany that of his client, especially when diligence, good faith, surprise, or want of notice is involved, during the progress of a suit.

When a married woman sues by next friend, her bill should be sworn to by herself, unless the facts upon which the bill rests are peculiarly within the knowledge of the next friend, and the bill, or affidavit, so shows. The next friend of an infant generally signs and swears to the bill, unless the infant best knows the facts, and is of a suitable age, in which case he may sign and swear to the bill. The bill of a corporation must be sealed with the seal of the corporation, if it have one, and if it needs verification, must be sworn to by some officer or agent who knows the facts set out in the bill. Petitions should be sworn to by the petitioners, and not by agents, or Solicitors. Answers must be sworn to by the defendants filing them, if adults and of sound mind; if infants, or of unsound mind, their guardians, or guardians ad litem must swear to their answers.

§ 786. Requisites and Frame of an Affidavit.—The ordinary parts of an affidavit are: 1, The proper title or style; 2, The venue; 3, The name of the deponent; 4, The substance, or statement of facts; 5, The conclusion; 6, The signature; and 7, The oath and jurat. These parts will be separately considered.

1. The Title, or Style, of the Cause. An affidavit must be correctly entitled in the cause, or matter, in which it is made; and an affidavit made in one cause cannot be read for the purpose of obtaining an order in another cause. But in proceedings for contempt against a witness, or other person not a party to the suit, all affidavits subsequent to the order for the attachment should be entitled in the name of the State, on the relation of the party prosecuting the attachment against the person attached. In entitling an affidavit where the parties are numerous, it is sufficient to give the name of the first complainant, and of the first defendant, adding “and others,” or “et al. Thus, John Doe, ct al., v. Richard Roe, et al.11

2. The Venue. The venue should appear on the face of the affidavit, so that it may be known in what county and State the oath was taken. The venue may be placed next below the style of the cause; or it may be prefixed to the jurat. If the affidavit is sworn to in open Court, and the jurat so shows, that is sufficient evidence of the venue.

3. The Name of the Affiant. The person making the affidavit should begin his statement by giving his name and place of residence, and if he is a party, or has any connection with the suit, or is a solicitor, witness, or officer, he should so state. It is, also, often important to state his age and business; these facts often add force to his statements.

4. The Substance, or Statement of Facts. An affidavit must be pertinent to the application based on it, and must be free from prolixity, impertinence, and scandal. An affidavit should give all the necessary circumstances of time,

8 The requisites of an affidavit given in this section will be found in 3 Greenl. Ev., §§380-382; and in 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 600-604.
9 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 600. The reason of this rule is that the mismentioning of an affidavit will exempt the deponent from the punishment of perjury, although his oath is false. Ibid.
10 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 600.
11 Et al. is the correct abbreviation for both complainants and defendants, and for both the singular and plural numbers. See Bensont v. Elliott, 11 Lea, 242: 3 Greenl. Ev., § 380.
12 3 Greenl. Ev., § 380.
13 It is scandalous and impertinent in an affidavit to draw inferences, or state arguments, reflecting on the character, or impeaching the motives of the adverse party, or his Solicitor. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 602-603.
14 The Court should refuse to hear an affidavit containing scandalous and impertinent statements. See, ante, § 150. What is there said as to bills is true of all papers filed in a cause.
place, and manner, and other material incidents; and its matter should be sufficient, when considered by itself, or in connection with other affidavits, to warrant the application based on it, or supported by it. The matter it contains, and all the material circumstances attending it, should be stated positively, so that the Court may be fully informed as to the truth of the matter. An affidavit should give facts, and not hearsay, opinions, inferences, or conclusions of law. When the deponent swears to words spoken, it is a proper precaution to add, "or words to that effect." Affidavits ought also to be legibly written in ink, and in one handwriting, without any interlineations or erasures, except such as are noted before signing.

5. The Conclusion. After the substance, or statement of facts, has been set forth, an affidavit usually concludes thus: "And further this deponent saith not." This conclusion, however, is not essential; it is intended to mean that the deponent has no further knowledge on the subject; and it would be highly culpable in the deponent to suppress any facts that would nullify, or materially modify, the statements made.

6. The Signature. An affidavit must be duly signed at the foot thereof, on the right hand side. If the affiant can possibly sign his own name, he should do so; if not, he should make his mark, and his signature should be duly witnessed.

7. The Oath, and Jurat. The deponent must not only be duly sworn to the truth of the contents of his affidavit, but the officer must, also, certify that fact, in a jurat written at the foot of the affidavit, upon the left hand side: the jurat should be duly dated, and signed officially.

An affidavit in support of a motion or petition is usually in the following form:

FORM OF AN AFFIDAVIT.

John Doe, et al.,

Richard Roe, et al.

John Den, being duly sworn, says that he is a resident of Loudon, Tenn., is 38 years of age, and is a farmer and school teacher; and that he knows of his own personal knowledge the following facts: [Here set forth the facts and circumstances, particularly, giving dates and localities.] And further this deponent saith not.

§ 787. Weight and Effect of an Affidavit.—Courts act only on what is sworn to; and when a fact, or state of facts, is duly verified by the affidavit of a competent person, the Court accepts such affidavit, for the particular occasion, as absolutely true; unless it is highly improbable, or unreasonable, or is self-contradictory, or vague and unsatisfactory, or is merely on information, or is contradicted by the record. Thus, where an affidavit, whether of a party, or of another person, is required in support of a motion, or petition, (which is its proper office,) it is ordinarily received for that purpose as conclusive evidence of this affidavit, by you subscribed, are true. So help you, God."

See Index, for other and fuller forms of affidavits.

If the affidavit is made by more than one person its statement will begin thus: "E. F., aged 38 years, and T. J., aged 29 years, both farmers and residents of said county, being duly sworn, severally depose and say: and first, this deponent, E. F., for himself says that" [here giving his statements in full]. "And the deponent, T. J., for himself, says that" [here give his statements. And then if there be facts to which both may severally swear, the affidavit may proceed thus:] "And these deponents further severally say: [giving the balance of the affidavit."

the facts it contains. And the like effect should be given to them by the Master, when used in support of motions before him.

§ 788. Affidavits to Bills, Petitions, Pleas, and Answers.—All bills and petitions that pray for extraordinary process, such as bills for injunctions, attachments, ne exaret, and receivers; all bills for divorce, for the appointment of administrators, for the sale of the property of persons under disability, or to set up lost instruments, or to have an inquisition of lunacy, or for a mandamus, or for a writ of replevin, all bills in the name of the State against corporations, public trustees, and usurpers of office, and all bills of interpleader, bills for the administration of insolvent estates, for the perpetuation of testimony, to take testimony de bene esse, and to review decrees on facts, and all bills setting out facts requiring the appointment of a guardian ad litem, or process by publication,21 must be sworn to; and all answers22 must be sworn to, unless the bill waives an answer under oath, or unless it be the answer of a corporation.23 All pleas must be sworn to, unless they are based on matters of record in the Court. And all petitions presented to the Court during the progress of a suit, on which the action of the Court is sought, must be verified.

The force of a bill, petition, or answer, depends greatly on the character of the affidavit attached to it; for no bill, petition, or answer can be any stronger than its verification; and if the verification is on mere information and belief, the pleading is but little more than hearsay.24 So, if the verification is direct and positive, but by a third person who is not shown to be acquainted with the facts, it has but little force.25 An injunction bill, sworn to on information and belief, is utterly inadequate to withstand a motion to dissolve the injunction, when the answer is sworn to positively, and directly, on the personal knowledge of the defendant. On the other hand, vam is the effort to dissolve an injunction, when the answer is sworn to on information and belief, and the bill is on the direct personal knowledge of the complainant;26 the difference between the two is the difference between hearsay and evidence. An answer on information and belief simply makes an issue, even when an answer on oath is called for.27

§ 789. Forms of Affidavits to Bills, Petitions, Pleas, and Answers.—The form and substance of affidavits to bills, petitions, and answers, are substantially as follows:

AFFIDAVIT TO A BILL, PETITION, OR ANSWER.

State of Tennessee,
County of Campbell.

John Doe [the complainant, or petitioner, or defendant] makes oath [or, affirms,] that the statements in his foregoing bill [or, petition, or, answer,] are true of his own knowledge, except as to the matters therein stated to be on information and belief, and these matters he believes to be true.

27 Wilkin v. May, 3 Head, 175; McKissick v. Martin, 12 Heisk., 313. Bills and answers are often sworn to, in such a defective or indecent manner, that they cannot be regarded as sworn to at all. The author has had numerous bills presented to him, as Chancellor, for fifats, with nothing to them to show verification except the jurat. The distinction between an affidavit and a jurat is sometimes overlooked. See Lookout Bank v. Nce, 2 Pick., 21.
If the complainant makes his mark, the better practice is to begin the affidavit thus:

John Doe [the complainant, or petitioner, or defendant,] makes oath [or, affirms,] that he has heard his foregoing bill [or, petition, or answer,] read and knows the contents thereof: and that the statements therein made as of his own knowledge are true, and those made as on information and belief, he believes to be true.

Hawk Powers makes oath that he is the Solicitor [or, agent, or, attorney in fact,] of the complainant [or, defendant,] that he has read [or, heard read,] the above bill [or, answer,] and knows the contents thereof, and that the same is true of his own knowledge, except as to the matters therein stated to be on the information and belief of the complainant, [or, defendant,] and that as to those matters he believes it to be true.

CHAPTER XL.
PETITIONS.

§ 791. Petitions Generally Considered.—A petition is a written request, addressed to the Chancellor, setting forth some matter of fact, or ground of complaint, as to which the petitioner prays the Chancellor to make some order, or give some direction.\(^1\) Petitions for interlocutory orders must, of course, be filed in some cause in the Court, and must invoke the action of the Court in reference to some matter connected with such cause. A petition must always state by whom it is presented; it may be filed by any one who can file a bill; but, if the petitioner is under any disability, he or she must appear by guardian, or next friend. A petition must state the material facts upon which the application contained in it is based, must conclude with a prayer for the particular order desired, and must be sworn to.\(^2\)

Where an application to the Court is by some party to the suit, and is based on some matter contained in the record, it may be made by motion; but where the application is based on matters not contained in the record, or where it is made by a person not a party to the suit, it must be made by petition. When a stranger files a petition he may be required to give a cost bond; but a petition by parties to the suit seeking some incidental relief can be prosecuted without a bond for costs.\(^3\)

§ 792. Petition by a Party to the Suit.—The most common cases wherein a party is required to file a petition are: 1, Where, when a defendant is made a party by publication, or by attachment and publication, he, or his heirs, or representatives, after a final decree on a pro confesso, desire to contest the plaintiff’s bill;\(^4\) 2, Where a party desires to discharge, or reduce, a levy or bond, in proceedings under extraordinary process;\(^5\) 3, Where a party seeks to have biddings opened, or reopened; 4, Where a party has been aggrieved by some interlocutory order, which the Court has yet the power to modify, or vacate; 5, Where a party desires to bring before the Court a case of contempt, not committed in its presence;\(^6\) 6, Where a party, imprisoned for contempt, seeks to be released on a habeas corpus;\(^7\) 7, Where a party applies for a writ of error coram nobis,\(^8\) or a rehearing;\(^9\) and 8, Where a party seeks a restraining order, or an injunction, or receiver, on grounds arising during the litigation.

§ 793. Petition by Quasi Party to the Suit.—A quasi party is a person who,

The term petition, in our practice, is a comprehensive term, including not only written requests for interlocutory orders, but even a written ground of complaint, on which a subpoena may issue, to which an answer may be filed, and by means of all which rights may be adjudicated, and decrees pronounced and enforced. A divorce may be had, land may be partitioned, or sold for partition, and some other suits may be begun, by petition. Indeed, if the proper objection is not made by the proper party, and at the proper time, the Court may, on petition and answer thereto, adjudicate matters proper for an original bill. Majors v. while not a formal party complainant or defendant, is, nevertheless, before the Court in some capacity, ordinarily, either (1) as a creditor who has been allowed to file a claim, or (2) as a purchaser of property sold and so reported by the Master; or (3) as a surety on a note, or bond, filed in the cause; or (4) as a receiver, sequestrator, or other person, acting under the immediate and special order of the Court, in some particular cause.

A quasi party may ordinarily bring before the Court, by motion, any matter pertaining to his interest in the suit, and may support his motion by affidavit, when necessary. In the following cases, however, he must file a petition: 1. Where he is named in a bill to administer assets as a creditor, but is not made a party, and wishes to set up his claim in the suit; 2. Where a creditor desires to contest the claim of some other party, or to assert some other right not apparent on the record; 3. Where a purchaser at a Master’s sale, wishes to be relieved from his purchase, or to recover back the purchase-money, or to have an abatement in the price; 4. Where a receiver, or sequestrator, or other officer, of the Court wishes to bring forward some matter connected with the cause wherein he is interested, such matter not otherwise sufficiently appearing, such as that he has been interfered with, or sued while in discharge of his duty, or wishes the direction of the Court, or desires to be discharged. 5. Where any quasi party wishes to bring any matter, pertinent to the cause, and material to his interests, before the Court, and the grounds of motion do not sufficiently appear on the face of the record.

§ 794. Petition by a Stranger to the Suit.—When a person, not a party, desires to take some step, assert some right, or obtain some benefit, in a cause pending in Court, he must do so by petition. The most usual cases are: 1. Where a creditor of an estate, being administered in Chaneyery, desires to file and prove his claim; and it matters not whether such estate be that of a dead or of a living person; all that is requisite is that the Court is undertaking to distribute the assets among those lawfully entitled to share in the distribution. A creditor, not made a party, may come in by petition when an administrator, or a creditor, files a bill to sell the land of a decedent to pay debts; or when a bill is filed to wind up an insolvent estate; or when an insolvent firm, or an insolvent corporation, is being wound up in Chaneyery. 2. Where a person has an interest in the subject-matter of the suit, or in the recovery sought or obtained, he must make himself a party by petition, if he seeks to assert that interest. Thus, where a person has an interest in a trust fund, or trust property of any kind, in the custody of the Court, or sought to be administered or distributed in Court; or where the benefit of a recovery, or of a fund, ensues to the benefit of a third person not before the Court; or where a third person claims the specific property in litigation, or an interest therein; or where a suit is brought by a few of many having concurrent rights or interests, in behalf of all; or in any such case he must file a petition. 3. Where property, which has been seized by a receiver, sequestrator or other person, acting under the orders of the Court, or which has been otherwise impounded, or which is about to be sold, by the Court, or is otherwise in jeopardy, belongs to a stranger to the suit, whose title is paramount to that of any of the parties, the person claiming the paramount title must file a petition in the Court, by whose authority the property has been seized, setting forth his title, and praying to have the property returned to his possession. Such a petition is a petition pro interesse suo.

The reasons why a petition is necessary in the above cases are, ordinarily, the following: 1, The Court has no jurisdiction to determine any question in dispute unless it is raised by some proper pleading; 2, Proof cannot lawfully be taken upon any matter or issue not presented or raised by some proper pleading; 3, No person is bound by a decree in a cause or matter to which he was not a party; 4, A stranger to a cause, if allowed to take proof, or to contest a matter, or to intermeddle, might greatly increase the costs and yet have given no security to pay the same.

§ 795. Frame and Form of a Petition Pro Interesse Suo.—When a receiver, sequestrator, or other officer of the Court, seizes, or is put in possession of, property under a special order of Court, and such property is claimed by a stranger to the suit, the latter will not be allowed forcibly to reclaim the property, nor to repel it, nor bring any other sort of suit against such officer in reference thereto; for the Court will consider any such proceeding a contempt and will deal with the offender accordingly.

The only courses open to such claimant are: 1, to present a petition pro interesse suo in the cause wherein the receiver or other officer is acting, setting forth in such petition his rights to such property, and when and under what circumstances he was deprived thereof, and praying for a writ of restitution; or 2, if his title is prior and superior to that of any of the litigants, he may file an original bill against those litigants claiming the property, and set forth his title, and enjoin them from interfering with his property.

The Court will order the petition to be filed, and give the complainant in the original bill leave to answer it if he so desire. If the answer dispute the title of the petitioner, the Court will either summarily dispose of the matter, or, if desired by either party, will refer the matter to the Master to hear proof and report on the petitioner’s claim.

The petitioner must ordinarily show that his title to the property in question is paramount to that of any of the parties to the suit; and if he claims under any party to the suit he must show that he acquired his title before the bill was filed, and paid a valuable consideration therefor; and if he have any written evidences of title he should file them with his petition. His petition must be verified by his affidavit. The following is a form for such a petition:

PETITION PRO INTERESSE SUO.

To the Hon. W. B. Staley, Chancellor.

Your petitioner, John Jones, a resident of Roane county, respectfully shows to your Honor that on the 1st day of June, 1884, the Sheriff of Roane county, by virtue of a writ of possession, placed Henry Crumbliss, the Receiver in this cause, in possession of the following property belonging to petitioner: [Here describe the property.]

Petitioner represents to your Honor that said property was not liable to said seizure; that said property is his own, and has been in his possession for...years, [stating how long.]

21 If the property of a stranger to the suit is levied upon, or otherwise seized by a Sheriff, under a general writ of attachment or execution, the stranger may recover it in replevin, or sue for its conversion; but if a Sheriff should seize any property of a stranger by virtue of a special writ directing him to seize it, the latter must apply to the Court by petition for its return to him. It would be a contempt of Court to sue the Sheriff for doing what the Court commanded him to do.

22 See, ante, § 794, note, 21; post, §§ 894; 910.

23 Ibid, § 656, note.

24 Haynes v. Rizer, 14 Lea, 247.

25 If petitioner’s claim is disputed he may be required to file a cost bond.
and that he acquired his title thereto in the following manner. [Here state how, and if he have any paper little let him file it as exhibit A to his petition.]

Petitioner, therefore, prays that the said Receiver be directed to restore said property to him, and that a writ of restitution issue, if necessary.

And petitioner prays for general relief.

If the decision is in favor of the petitioners, an order of the Court, to its officer in possession of the disputed property, to restore it to the possession of the petitioner, is ordinarily sufficient; but if not a writ of restitution will be awarded. 26

§ 796. When a Petition is not Proper.—While our own practice is liberal, in allowing a stranger to intervene by petition, to set up his claim to property, or to a fund, in controversy in the Chancery Court, as shown in the preceding section, nevertheless, to allow a third person to inject new matter into a litigation, not germane to the issues presented by the pleadings, would be to allow interminable confusion, incongruous issues, and general multifariousness, wholly at variance with every principle of true pleading, and tending inevitably to vexatious perplexity, alike to the litigants and to the Chancellor. For these reasons, no intervention should be allowed in any case where the new matters sought to be introduced are irrelevant, multifarious, incongruous, or otherwise proper for an original bill. 27

And, while the Code allows any and all matters to be brought forward in a suit between one complainant and one defendant, 28 nevertheless, where there are more parties than two, the Chancellor should not allow matters, wholly foreign to the objects of the original pleadings, to be introduced by petition. Such a practice is not only in violation of the fundamental rules of Equity and good pleading, 29 but tends greatly to confuse and delay the final determination of the cause, increases instead of diminishing costs, 30 and multiplies grounds of appeal to the Supreme Court. It may be stated, as a general rule, that no matter should be allowed to be introduced into a cause by a petition which is (1) proper matter for an independent original bill; or (2) which could be brought forward by an amendment to the bill, or by an amended or supplemental answer, or by a cross bill, on the part of the defendant; or (3) which, if contained in the bill, would make it multifarious, or if set up in the answer would be impertinent and no defence; or (4) which would tend to create confusion, perplexity or delay, without any compensating advantages.

To avoid the perplexities, resulting from the anomalous and reprehensible practice of filing improper petitions in a cause, and taking issue and making decrees on them, our Supreme Court constrained by the statute, 31 and prompted by a most commendable disposition to do justice despite such gross irregularities, have dealt with such petitions as though they were original bills, and have given the consequent relief. 32

§ 797. The Frame and Form of a Petition.—A petition for an interlocutory order contains all of the essentials of a supplemental bill, except the prayer for process, and does sometimes pray that notice of its filing may be given to 26 For form of the writ, and other information in reference to the writ, and to a petition pro interesse suo, see, ante, § 657.

27 See Stretch v. Stretch, 2 Tenn. Ch., 140.
28 See § 4327.
29 Stretch v. Stretch, 2 Tenn. Ch., 140.
30 Many of these illogical and anomalous interventions result from a niggardly disposition to save a few dollars in costs. Chancellors should be slow to allow any practice, which will retard or confuse the orderly determination of the matters presented by the original pleadings, even though there be a probability that two or three dollars may possibly be saved thereby. While Courts should be cautious not to cause or allow unnecessary costs, nevertheless, neither justice, nor those rules whereby justice is evolved, should be sacrificed upon the altar of a false economy. These attempts to save costs often result in an increase of costs, and in expensive and vexatious delays.
31 Code, § 4516.
32 Majors v. McNelly, 7 Heisk., 294; Richardson v. Keel, 2 Lea, 74; Horn v. Denton, 2 Speech, 125, as construed in State v. Kellar, 11 Lea, 404. The Supreme Court being forbidden to reverse any decree, unless for errors which affect the merits, Code, § 4516, the duty of maintaining the rules of good pleading devolves almost exclusively upon the Chancellors. An examination of our reports will show that it is possible for our Chancellors to introduce some wholesome reforms in Chancery pleading. The Supreme Court has again and again admonished the inferior Courts on this subject. Roberts v. Stewart, 1 Varg., 390; Cherry v. Hardin, 4 Heisk., 263; Maupin v. Whitson, 2 Heisk., 1.
those adversely interested. It must (1) be addressed to the Chancellor of the Court in which it is to be filed; (2) it must specify the cause to which it relates, and in which it seeks for some order; (3) it must contain in detail the facts, or matters, which justify or authorize the order sought; and (4) must pray for the particular order desired, and may, also, pray for general relief.33 A petition should be signed and sworn to,34 and, like all other pleadings, must avoid scandalous and impertinent matter.

PETITION BY A CREDITOR.

John Doe, Admr., &c.,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.

To the Hon. B. M. Estes, Chancellor:

Peter Poe, a resident of Shelby county, Tennessee, respectfully shows to your Honor that David Doe, the intestate of the complainant, died justly indebted to your petitioner in the sum of two hundred dollars, evidenced by a note of hand, dated July 8, 1888, due one year after date with interest from date. This note is made part of this petition, and is herewith filed, and marked "Exhibit A." Said note was given to John Jones in part payment of the tract of land sought to be sold in this cause; and to secure its payment a lien was retained on the face of the deed, executed by said Jones to said David Doe, for said land. Said note was by said Jones, for value received, in due course of trade, and before maturity, endorsed and transferred to petitioner, and is now his property, and wholly unpaid.

Petitioner prays to be allowed to become a party to this cause, and to have said note and debt declared a preferred claim, and paid in full out of the proceeds of said land when sold. Petitioner prays for all necessary orders, references, and decrees, and for general relief.

GEORGE B. PETERS, Solicitor.35

A petition may be amended on proper application at any time, even during the argument. Leave to amend is almost of course,36 if applied for in due season.

§ 798. When and Where a Petition Must be Filed.—In contemplation of law the Courts are always open for the filing of any pleading, deposition, petition, affidavit, proof, or other paper or document, relating to any matter pending in Court, or to any new matter any person desires to bring before the Court, whether Court be in session or not.37 So, a petition may be filed at any time, and if it relate to a matter in Court should be filed in the cause to which it relates, and should be so entitled. The question of the right of the person to file it, and of its sufficiency and truthfulness, are questions to be determined by the Court when properly raised.

§ 799. The Hearing of a Petition. —If a petition is in the nature of a formal motion, and all the facts necessary to its due consideration appear of record, or otherwise, in the cause, it is summarily heard and disposed of, after the manner of a motion. If, however, the facts alleged in the petition do not otherwise appear, and are denied, or at least not admitted, the Court usually directs the Master to hear proof and report as to the facts. If the facts alleged in the petition do not entitle the petitioner to the relief he seeks, or if the relief he seeks is not proper to be granted in that cause, or in that form, or by such a summary course of procedure, the opposite party may move the Court to dis-

35 A petition, like a bill, may be signed by the petitioner in person, but the Solicitor who draws the petition generally signs it, and has his client swear to it. Judge Cooper, in Johnson v. Murray, 12 Lea, 117, says the practice is objectionable of permitting petitions to be filed, signed and sworn to, by agents and Solicitors, instead of by the parties themselves.
36 The practice is well settled, however, that either a bill or petition may be signed by the Solicitor, alone. Swan v. Newman, 3 Head, 289; Litton v. Armatistead, 9 Bax., 514.

miss the petition, assigning his grounds; this motion is in the nature of a special demurrer, and, if successful, the petition is dismissed.

If the petition presents an issue of fact, the opposite party may plead to it, or he may answer it, as though it were a bill; and if it presents an issue of law, he may demur to it, although the common practice is to move to dismiss it.

INJUNCTIONS GENERALLY CONSIDERED.

§ 800. The Injunctive Power Generally Considered.

§ 801. Injunctions Defined.

§ 800. The Injunctive Power Generally Considered.—The main object of civilized society and the chief purpose of law is to secure to every individual his life, liberty and property. The common law aimed to protect a man's right to his property by punishing the violation of that right. But such protection did not always protect; the damages awarded the owner of the property were not always paid, and when paid were often inadequate, especially when the injury could not be repaired by payment of damages.

But when the Chancery Court was established with its peculiar powers and processes, borrowed largely from the Roman law, it did not undertake so much to punish, as to prevent, the violation of the rights of property. Acting on its maxim, Equity acts specifically and not by way of compensation, the Chancery Court laid its mighty hand upon the would-be violator, and commanded him to desist from the wrong he was doing, and refrain from doing the wrong he was threatening, menacing him with both bodily imprisonment and pecuniary punishment, if he persisted. When a matter was in dispute the Chancery Court forbade a party to take the law in his own hands, but required him to abide the decision of the Court; and, in a proper ease, compelled him to put matters in statu quo, and thus undo his own wrong.

In no one particular, perhaps, has the immense superiority of the jurisprudence of Equity over that of the common law been so manifest as in its remedy by injunction to prevent a wrong, in place of the common law remedy of damages after the wrong had been committed; and yet no process of Chancery was so vigorously resisted by the lawyers of England; and Lord Coke, as the great champion of the common law, regarded the process of injunction, especially when it interfered with suits and judgments at law, as a high handed violation of the fundamental law of England.

§ 801. Injunctions Defined.—A writ of injunction is a judicial process, operating in personam, and requiring the person, to or against whom it is directed, to do or refrain from doing a particular thing. The process is restora-manding injunctions, commanding him to refrain from doing a particular thing. With reference to their duration, injunctions are either temporary or perpetual.

1. Temporary Injunctions, frequently called interlocutory or preliminary injunctions, are such as are granted at any time before final hearing, generally upon the presentation of the bill to the Chancellor; and continue until the coming in of the answer, or until a hearing upon the merits, or the further order of the Court. A temporary injunction is provisional in its nature, and does not conclude a right.

2. Restraining Orders are interlocutory injunctions granted during a litigattion to prevent the enforcement of some order made in the cause, or to stay the hand of a party or an officer of the Court, or to enjoin persons not parties from bringing suit as to a matter pending wherein assets are being administered, or granted in any other case when necessary to prevent any inequitable or illegal act injurious to any party.

3. Perpetual Injunctions are granted only at a final hearing upon the merits, and usually form a part of the final decree, and are conclusive upon all the parties. Indeed, a perpetual injunction is, in effect, a decree of the Court whereby a defendant is perpetually inhibited from the assertion of an assumed right, or perpetually restrained from the commission of an act which would be contrary to Equity and good conscience.

§ 802. Office of a Temporary Injunction.—The office of a temporary, or interlocutory, injunction is to preserve the subject-matter in controversy in its then condition; and, without determining any question of right, merely to prevent the further perpetration of wrong, or the doing of any act whereby the right in controversy may be materially injured, or endangered. It cannot be used for the purpose of taking property out of the possession of one party, and putting it into the possession of another; nor does it, ordinarily, go to the extent of ordering a defendant to undo what he has already done, since it might thereby do the defendant an injury as great as that of which the complainant complains. The jurisdiction being ordinarily exercised to prevent the further continuance of injurious acts, rather than to undo what has already been done, on an interlocutory application for an injunction, Courts of Equity will, except in extreme cases, only act prospectively, and interpose such restraint only as may suffice to stop the mischief complained of, and preserve matters in statu quo.

§ 803. Office of Mandatory Injunctions.—While Courts of Equity rarely allow interlocutory mandatory injunctions, their jurisdiction so to do is firmly established. The principal office of an interlocutory mandatory injunction is to compel the defendant to restore the subject-matter of controversy to the situation it was in before the commission of the act complained of. Courts of Equity, however, rarely directly command the doing of a positive act on an interlocutory application; they reach the same result indirectly, by framing the injunction so as to prohibit the defendant from doing the reverse of what

3 The common injunction, mentioned in the old reports and books of practice, was the writ of injunction which issued, as of course, upon the default or delay of the defendant in answering the bill; and its effect upon a pending suit at law was determined by the progress of that suit at the date of the issuance of the writ. If the injunction was obtained before the declaration at law was filed, but before plea, the suit proceeded to issue, but no further; if obtained after issue was joined, the suit proceeded to judgment, but stopped there until the determination of the suit in Equity. Hendrick v. Dallum, 1 Tenn. (Overt.), 427; 2 Sto. Eq. Jur., 2882; Chadwell v. Jordan, 2 Tenn. Ch., 636; Patterson v. Gordon, 3 Tenn. Ch., 20. The common injunction has ceased to exist in this State, every injunction being now special. Patterson v. Gordon, 3 Tenn. Ch., 21.

he is desired to do. Even then the jurisdiction is exercised with extreme caution, and is confined to cases where the Courts of law are unable to afford adequate redress, or where the injury cannot be compensated in damages.

Mandatory injunctions, issued after a final decree and in enforcement thereof, are in the nature of an execution, and are sometimes called judicial writs; they will be found more fully considered in the Chapter on Decrees.

§ 804. Injunctions Generally Considered.—The various cases in which the Chancery Court will interfere by injunction, are almost as numerous as the matters which fall within its equitable jurisdiction; but it may be laid down as a fundamental rule, applicable to all cases, that, wherever a legal or equitable right exists, whether arising from contract, from the legal or equitable ownership of property, or otherwise, the violation of that right will be enjoined on proper application to the Chancery Court, unless the legal remedy of compensatory damages would be full, adequate, and complete. If damages cannot be compensatory from the nature of the injury, an injunction will be granted, for, in such a case, the injury will be irreparable.

The old rule, that an injunction would not be granted when there was a plain, adequate remedy at law, has lost much of its force in Tennessee (1) in consequence of the Chancery Court being now clothed with full authority to determine all actions triable at law except suits for unliquidated damages, and (2) in consequence of the Court’s statutory injunctive powers to restrain the injury, removal, or destruction of property, real or personal, involved in the litigation. By virtue of the letter and spirit of these two statutes, an injunction may be properly granted: (1) to restrain the violation of any right of the complainant, incident to the subject-matter of the suit; (2) to restrain any tortious conduct of the defendant, that is injurious or destructive to the property in litigation; (3) to restrain the removal of any specific personal property sought to be recovered in the suit; and (4) to restrain any other act of the defendant injuriously affecting complainant’s rights in or to the subject-matter of the litigation. And in none of these cases will the fact that the complainant may have a plain and adequate remedy at law, be at all material in considering the jurisdiction of the Court in granting the injunction, for the reason that the Court has, and is, exercising jurisdiction in the very suit wherein the injunction is sought.

§ 805. Injunctions in Behalf of Sureties.—Injunctions are granted in behalf of a surety against a suit at law by the creditor whenever by any act of the creditor, or principal debtor, or a co-surety, the surety has been released, or discharged, as where the debt has been paid, or novated, or where the contract has been changed, or the time of payment extended, without the surety’s consent, or where the creditor delays to sue after notice or demand.

§ 806. Injunctions in Behalf of Creditors.—An injunction will be granted against debtors and their privies, in behalf of creditors, in the following cases: 1, To prevent the fraudulent transfer or removal of the debtor’s property, whether in his hands, or in the hands of a mala fide purchaser, or of a trustee; 2, To prevent the waste, removal, or transfer, of property on which the complainant has a lien; 3, To prevent a multiplicity of suits, the cost of which will absorb the common fund.

No injunction, however, will be granted on behalf of a mere general creditor, to prevent the debtor selling or encumbering his property, when no grounds therefor are alleged except the fact of indebtedness, the insolvency of the defendant, and the fear that he may sell or encumber.

§ 807. Injunctions in Behalf of Married Women.—A wife is entitled to an injunction against her husband and his creditors or bargainees, to protect her homestead rights, or her rights to her separate estate, or to the rents and profits of her realty; and on filing a bill for divorce and alimony, or for maintenance, against her husband, she is entitled to an injunction to prevent him (1) from interfering with her conduct or person; (2) from interfering with the custody of the children, or property, in her possession; (3) from collecting the rents and profits of her separate estate, or of her realty; (4) and from selling or encumbering his own property, or selling any choses in action, or other personalty belonging to her.

§ 808. Injunctions Pertaining to Partnerships.—Courts of Equity will enjoin members of a partnership from doing acts inconsistent with the duties of a partner, or with the partnership agreement, or violative of the rights of the complaining partner. A partner may be enjoined from excluding his co-partner from the partnership business, or books; or from misappropriating partnership assets. And where a dissolution is prayed and a receiver is proper, the Court will enjoin any or all of the partners from collecting any firm debts, or interfering with the firm assets or books, or doing any act in the firm name.

§ 809. Injunctions Pertaining to Executors and Administrators.—Injunctions will be granted on application of executors or administrators: 1, Against.
any creditor suing after the suggestion of the insolvency of the estate and the transfer of the administration to the Chancery Court; and 2. Against the widow, or any creditor, distributee, legatee, or other person, improperly interfering with the assets of the estate.

Injunctions will be granted in behalf of the person entitled against executors or administrators to prevent (1) their appropriation of exempt property, or (2) the waste or misapplication of the assets of the estate, or (3) selling property bequeathed when not needed to pay debts, or (4) doing any other act not authorized by the will, or the law.

§ 810. Injunctions Pertaining to Mortgages, Trust Deeds, and Title-Bonds. The Court of Chancery is often applied to for injunctions relative to matters connected with mortgages, trust deeds, and title-bonds, the applications coming sometimes from the owner of the lien, and sometimes from the debtor.

1. Injunctions in Behalf of the Mortgagor, or Creditor. The property in such a case is devoted to the payment of the money advanced, or of the debt thereby secured; and the Chancery Court will grant injunctions against any cutting of timber, removal of fixtures or buildings, or other waste, by the maker of a mortgage or deed of trust, or holder under a title-bond, or other person in possession or control of the premises; mortgaged or conveyed in trust, or held under a title-bond, where such waste will make the security insufficient. An injunction will also be granted to protect the rights of a mortgagee to chattels, by enjoining their removal, sale, or injury.

2. Injunctions on Behalf of the Debtor. The enforcement of a mortgage or trust deed will be enjoined on application of the maker or his assignee, (1) when it was obtained on fraud; (2) when there has been a total failure of consideration; (3) when the complainant is not bound, by reason of some accident, or mistake, in its execution, against which Equity will relieve; (4) when the debt secured by the instrument has been fully paid, or (5) is barred by the statute of limitations. An injunction will not be granted, however, to enjoin a sale in such cases, unless notice of the application be given to the trustee, or mortgagee, as hereafter shown.

§ 811. Injunctions Pertaining to Written Contracts.—The Chancery Court will, in some cases, enjoin the attempted violation of a valid contract, or the attempted enforcement of an invalid contract.

1. The Enforcement of an Invalid Deed, Note, or Other Contract in Writing Will be Enjoined when its existence, or possession by the defendant, may result in some injury to the maker. Thus, when a deed, note, or other contract in writing is not binding in Equity, because executed by accident or mistake, or obtained by fraud, or without lawful consideration, or is void for any other reason, a Court of Equity will not only enjoin its enforcement, or transfer, but will, also, order it to be delivered up for reformation if erroneous, or for cancellation if void, or voidable.

2. The Violation of Valid Contracts Will be Enjoined in any case when such contract would be specifically enforced by the Court, as in case (1) of restrictive covenants in deeds, leases, and other instruments, creating equitable covenants; (2) of contracts of a negative nature, such as agreements not to carry on a particular trade, not to build in a certain way or place, not to run trains past a particular station without stopping, not to publish a rival book or newspaper, not to remove fixtures, not to use leased property in a particular way or for a specified purpose, not to allow property leased or conveyed to be used for the manufacture or sale of spirituous liquors, and generally not to allow or do any other thing that may lawfully be stipulated against.

§ 812. Injunctions to Prevent or Remove a Cloud upon Title.—The title to real estate will be protected by the Chancery Court against any illegal act or instrument likely to cast a cloud upon it, or bring it into question. Hence, the Court will, on application of the owner, enjoin any sale of his land that will not pass the title, and that may illegally subject him to suit, whether such sale is attempted by a Sheriff under a void proceeding, or a satisfied judgment, or execution, or by a trustee, or attorney in fact, under a void or satisfied instrument, or by any other person not having lawful authority. The Court, on like application, will enjoin any party who has a void or invalid grant, deed, mortgage, or other writing, to the complainant's land, from setting up any claim thereunder, or attempting to enforce it; and will, at the hearing, declare such deed, grant, or mortgage, a cloud on complainant's title, and will order it to be delivered up and cancelled, and the cloud removed. And a wife may have removed from her title, or her homestead, any cloud caused in any of the foregoing ways, or caused by any deed or other conveyance made by her husband, or by herself, without her privy examination.

§ 813. Injunctions to Protect the Process, and Officers of the Court, and Purchasers under its Decrees.—Courts of Chancery do not allow any other Court to interfere with their processes, or their officers, or with purchasers under its decrees. Any interference, by suit or otherwise, with the subpoenas, injunctions, attachments, or other writs of the Chancery Court, or with the officer executing the same, will be restrained by injunction, and if necessary by attachment of the person of the wrong-doer. So any interference, by suit or otherwise, with the rights, duties, powers, or possession, of a receiver, sequestrator, special commissioner, or Clerk and Master, will be enjoined; and if necessary the intermeddler will be attached for contempt of the Court. The Chancery Court has full power and inclination to afford perfect redress to all persons wronged by its processes, or officers, and requires all such persons to apply for redress to it, by petition filed in the particular cause wherein the alleged wrong was committed.

§ 814. Injunctions Against Suits, Judgments, Decrees, and Executions. Whenever a person is liable to be injured inequitably by a suit brought, or a judgment rendered, or an execution issued or levied, may he protect himself by an injunction.

1. Injunctions Against Suits at Law Before Judgment will be granted on application of the defendant to the suit in the following cases:
   1. Where the suit is founded on a deed, note of hand, or other contract in writing, not binding on the defendant, because of a failure of consideration, or of some fraud, or accident, or mistake, in its execution, the plaintiff in the suit not being an innocent purchaser.

Williams, 7 Bax., 115; Collins v. Boyett, 3 Pick., 334; 1 High on Injunc., § 438; See Quia Timet, and "Homestead," in our Digests. Such a bill will lie without possession, and in behalf of a mere warrantor. Jones v. Nixon, 18 Pick., 95.

24 Cope v. Payne, 3 Cates, 128.

26 The jurisdiction, power, and utility of the Chancery Court were originally based, to a very large extent, upon the necessity of some injunctive instrumentality to prevent plaintiffs using the Courts of law to obtain or enforce judgments contrary to Equity and conscience. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 1360.

27 Where an involuntary contract with the Court that in the prosecution of such suit he will do nothing contrary to good reason and good conscience, and the Court, as the representative of the State, impliedly contracts with such party to give him such a judgment as in good reason and good conscience he ought to have on the facts alleged and proved. To this extent the Court requires the defendant to submit. But if the plaintiff obtains a judgment by suppressing or fabricating evidence, or by taking an unconscientious advantage of the defendant, or by any other fraud, a Court of Chancery, on due application, will enjoin the plaintiff from enforcing a judgment so obtained, and thus taking advantage of his own wrong, provided such defendant really had a meritorious defense, and was guilty of no negligence or other fault in the case.

28 Injunctions in such cases operate on the parties, and not upon the Courts where the suit at law is pending. Burke v. Ellis, 21 Pick., 702.

4. Where, in any other case, a party plaintiff has an unfair advantage at law, whereby he may make the Court of law an instrument of injustice, and obtain a judgment therein contrary to Equity and good conscience. 34

The flat to a bill to enjoin a suit at law on a money demand should require the defendant to confess judgment at law as the condition of the injunction; otherwise, the complainant after litigating in Chancery may dismiss his bill and renew the litigation at law. 34a

The following is the form of a bill to enjoin a suit at law, and of a proper flat for such a bill:

BILL TO ENJOIN A SUIT UPON A NOTE. 34b

[For address and caption see, ante, §§ 155-164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That on December 4, 1846, Roland Roe brought a note for four hundred dollars to him and requested him to sign it, saying that the note had been executed to him by Henry Den, complainant's father-in-law, that Den was slow in paying it, and that he, Roland Roe, wanted complainant to sign the note the better to warrant him in urging Den to pay it. Complainant, being young, not quite twenty years of age, and inexperienced in business, and feeling flattered by the praises of said Roland Roe as to complainant's ability to get his father-in-law to pay the note, and as to complainant's general capacity to do things; and being, also, assured by said Roland Roe, that, in no event, would he ever call on complainant to pay the note, that his signature to it would be a mere form, and mere personal favor, signed said note, relying on said assurances, without receiving any consideration therefor, and without any purpose of being bound thereby.

II.

That soon after complainant signed said note said Roland Roe died, intestate, and the defendants are his administrators. As such administrators they called on complainant to interfere of the Chancery Court in such cases is, that the defendant is enabled to make a better defence in Equity, or to obtain some substantial relief not obtainable at law. Chadb. v. Jordan, 2 Tenn. Ch., 637.

A Court of Equity should not, ordinarily, grant an injunction to stay proceedings at law before judgment, unless the party applying for the injunction will confess judgment in the suit at law, such judgment to be dealt with as the Court granting the injunction may order. In re Injunct. 624; 20. Where the defence is the fraud of the plaintiff in procuring the instrument sued on, or some accident or mistake, in its execution, or illegality in its consideration, and some affirmative relief is necessary to protect the defendant, such as the reform of the instrument, or its cancellation and surrender. Pom. Eq. Jur., § 451; Rhinehart v. Nolin, 11 Heisk., 488; Porter v. Jones, 6 Cold., 313.

3. Where a discovery from the plaintiff at law is necessary for the defence. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 624. But a discovery can now be had at law, Code, § 3891.

6. Where new parties are necessary to complete justice. 33

Newborn v. Glass, 5 Hum., 521; Lindsey v. James, 3 Cold., 477. Cases where there is a multiplicity of contracts, or where there are mutual accounts of a complicated nature, would come under this head.

34 2 Sto. Eq. Jur., § 885. But the fact that enforcement of a judgment would be against conscience, will not, of itself, warrant an injunction. However unjust and unconscionable the demand may be, on which judgment was obtained, if, through neglect or carelessness, no defence was interposed at law, relief will not be granted in Equity. 1 High on Injunct., § 156.

34a Harp v. Bank, 22 Pick., 425, citing the above section, then § 796, of this book. See note 29, supra. But the Chancery Court has no jurisdiction to enjoin proceedings in a Court of concurrent jurisdiction in a case where such Court can do as complete justice. Such a bill is demariable. Dixon v. Railroad Co. Cates, 362. See, ante, § 294.

34b This bill is based on Bell v. Gamble & Montgomery, admrs., 9 Hum., 117. As to the nature of the flat on such a bill see note 29, supra, and Haynes v. Bank, 22 Pick., 425.
pay said note, when he protested that he was not liable, and stated to them the foregoing facts. But, notwithstanding said facts, the defendants have brought suit on said note in the Circuit Court of Knox county. Complainant could plead that he was under twenty-one years of age when he signed said note, but he is not willing so to do; first, because that is not his real defence, and second, because such a plea is not only humiliating to him, but he is advised that it implies he would otherwise be bound to pay said note.

III.

The premises considered, complainant prays:
1st. That subpoena to answer issue [§§ see, ante, §§ 158; 164.]
2d. That a writ of injunction issue, by order of your Honor, restraining and prohibiting the defendants, and their attorneys and agents, from further prosecuting said suit against complainant on said note in said Circuit Court, and from prosecuting any similar suit in any other Court; and that at the hearing said injunction be made perpetual, and said note cancelled.
3d. That complainant have such other and further relief as he may be entitled to.

This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

[Annex affidavit; see, ante, §§ 161; 164.]

FIAT.

To the Clerk and Master at Knoxville:

File this bill, and on complainant giving an injunction bond in the penalty of one thousand dollars, conditioned as required by law, issue an injunction prohibiting the defendants from proceeding in their said suit against complainant any further than to take judgment on said note; which they are allowed to do. Complainant will withdraw any plea he may have filed in said suit, and allow the suit to proceed to judgment. No steps shall be taken on said judgment without leave of the Chancery Court, in this cause.

Feb. 10, 1848.

WILLIAMS, Chancellor.

2. Injunctions Against Judgments at Law. The Chancery Court is not a Court empowered to review proceedings in other Courts, and to correct errors and irregularities in their proceedings. This jurisdiction belongs to the Supreme Court. The Chancery Court will not, therefore, enjoin a judgment at law merely because of any irregularity or error committed by the Court rendering the judgment; and, in order to make out a case that will authorize the Chancery Court to enjoin a judgment at law, the defendant to such judgment must make out some one of the following cases:

1. An injunction against a judgment at law will be granted on application of the defendant to the judgment, if he show (1) that he had a valid legal defence to the suit on the merits, and (2) that he was prevented from making that defence by the fraud of the plaintiff, or by some surprise, accident, or mistake, and (3) that there was no negligence, or other fault, on his part, or on the part of his agents, or attorneys. The defendant to the judgment must show in his bill all of these essentials.

2. Injunctions against judgments at law will also be granted when the defendant to the judgment had a good defence on the merits, but one not available in a Court of law; or if available it was hampered by difficulties, complications, or embarrassments, too confusing and perplexing for investigation and solution by a jury. And it may be stated as a general principle, that any...
facts which prove it to be against conscience to execute a judgment at law, and of which the judge of the person or of which he might have availed himself but was prevented by fraud or accident, unmixed with any fault or negligence in himself or his agents, will authorize a Court of Equity to interfere by injunction to restrain the adverse party from availing himself of such judgment. 41

3. Void and voidable judgments and decrees will be enjoined without showing any facts, except as demonstrate their nullity. 42 If a judgment or decree is, for any reason, void or voidable, 43 as where vitiated by fraud, accident or mistake, or where the Court had no jurisdiction of the person, or of the subject-matter, such a judgment may be enjoined. 44 A judgment of the Supreme Court, if void or voidable, for any reason, may be enjoined in Chancery; 45 and proceedings in this State, based upon a judgment rendered in another State, may be enjoined for any cause which would authorize an injunction against a judgment of one of our own Courts. 46

4. If the defendant to the judgment has any set-off, and the plaintiff is insolvent, or has removed from the State, an injunction will be granted against the judgment. 47

Nevertheless, while a Court of Chancery will, in a proper case, enjoin a judgment at law, it will not stop there, but will either grant a new trial in the Circuit Court, 48 or will itself determine the rights of the parties and grant the plaintiff at law the recovery he was entitled to, if any, 49 or deny him any recovery, if he is not entitled to any. 50

3. Injunctions Against Execution at Law, or in Chancery, will be granted in the following cases:

1. Where the judgment is void, 51 or voidable, or has been fully paid, or otherwise satisfied, or is barred by the statute of limitations. 52

2. Where the execution is levied upon the land of a person not a party to the lawsuit. 53

§ 815. Injunctions Against Commissioners and Public Officers.—Whenever

41 2 Sto. Eq. Jur., 887; Scurlock v. Scurlock, 8 Pick., 629, citing the above section of this book, then § 796.

42 In such cases, the Chancery Court will not inquire whether the defendant at law had a valid defence. It is enough if he show that the judgment or decree complained of is void. Ridgway v. Bank, 11 H. & C., 98; Bell v. Williams, 4 T. & R., 29.

43 There is a wide difference between a void judgment and a voidable judgment. See, ante, §§ 446; 565. A void judgment it is null and void at law; it binds nobody; it is a nullity and no judgment at all; and justifies no act done under it. Holmes v. Eason, 8 Lea, 760; Finley v. Gaut, 8 Bax., 151. A voidable judgment may be reversed by the Supreme Court, on appeal or writ of error, but cannot be revised, corrected, or set aside, by the Chancery Court, except for fraud, accident, or mistake, in obtaining it, and then only on a bill filed for that purpose. A void judgment, though full of errors, is as valid as a judgment perfectly regular, whenever offered in evidence in either the Chancery or Circuit Court. Scurlock v. Kernahan, 4 Sneed, 371.

44 If the Court rendering the judgment in question had jurisdiction of the person and of the subject-matter, and had authority to make writ of judgment, the fact that there was no evidence to support the judgment, or that gross irregularities appear in the record, are matters wholly immaterial on a collateral attack. And what is void of void and voidable judgments is equally true of void and voidable decrees. As to the difference between void and voidable decrees and judgments, see Greenlaw v. commissioners, or public officers, appointed by the Legislature, the Governor, the County Court, or a public corporation, or other authority, undertake to do some act not authorized by the Constitution or laws of the State, or by the particular order or authority under which they act, they will be enjoined by the Chancery Court on the application of any person liable to be irreparably injured by their illegal or unauthorized act.\textsuperscript{54}

Sheriffs, Clerks and Masters, and Solicitors, should not be enjoined merely because they are doing their duty in obedience to process, or the order of the Court,\textsuperscript{55} except, perhaps, as a means of notifying them of the granting of the injunction. If no relief is prayed against them, the bill should so state, so as to relieve them of the necessity and expense of making defence. If, however, they are guilty of any misconduct, or have the property in dispute in their possession, or under their control,\textsuperscript{56} they may both be made parties, and be required to answer.

\textsection{816. Injunctions Against Illegal Taxes.}—No injunction can be granted against the collection of a tax due the State,\textsuperscript{57} but if a county or city, or other public corporation, attempt through its officers to collect any tax not warranted by the law, or the Constitution, the Chancery Court has jurisdiction to enjoin the collection of such a tax,\textsuperscript{58} and any one tax-payer may sue on behalf of himself and all others, and enjoin the collection of the entire tax.\textsuperscript{59}

\textsection{817. Injunctions Against Taking Private Property without Compensation.} Private property cannot lawfully be taken for public roads, streets, bridges, building sites, or other public purposes, or for railroads or turnpikes, without just compensation being paid, previous to the taking, or statutory security given; and Courts of Chancery will enjoin any attempt to unlawfully deprive the owner of his property for any of said purposes, provided the suit be brought in due season.

\textsection{818. Injunctions Against Public and Private Corporations.}—Courts of Chancery will, by injunction, prevent corporations doing illegal acts.

1. Public Corporations \begin{it}May be Enjoined\end{it} from doing any act in violation of their charters, or doing any act not authorized by their charters.\textsuperscript{60} They may be enjoined from levying particular taxes, or paying or issuing particular bonds, or incurring or paying particular debts, or making particular contracts, or holding particular elections, or doing other particular acts, when such conduct is in violation of law or their charters. Public corporations include counties, as well as towns and cities, and the County Court may be enjoined in any of the foregoing instances.

2. Private Corporations \begin{it}Will be Enjoined\end{it} from doing any acts not authorized by their charters, or from misappropriating their funds or assets, or from making and enforcing unauthorized assessments, or from engaging in a business, or entering into contracts not authorized by their charters, or from over-issuing stock;\textsuperscript{61} or from doing any other act not authorized by their charters, or by some statute.

\textsection{819. Injunctions Against Waste, Trespasses, and Similar Wrongs.}—Courts of Chancery will aid the owner of real estate, or of an interest therein, to protect his property or interest against persons guilty of waste, trespass, or other irreparable mischief.\textsuperscript{62}

And what is meant by "irreparable damages," "irreparable mischief," and "irreparable injury," seems to be such damage, mischief, or injury, as, (1) either materially impairs the value of the fee, or (2) is estimable only by conjecture, and not by any accurate standard, or (3) is so often repeated as to
WHEN INJUNCTIONS WILL BE GRANTED. 628

1. Waste is the destruction or injury of lands, mines, quarries, wells, springs, fields, fruit, shade or ornamental trees, gardens, shrubbery, meadow, timber, houses, improvements, or fixtures, by one rightfully in possession, but not owning the fee, to the prejudice of the heir or of him entitled to the reversion or remainder; or to the prejudice of a mortgagor, tenant in common, or maker of a title-bond; and, on the application of such person, an injunction will issue to prevent any irreparable waste begun or threatened by the dowress, homesteader, tenant by the courtesy, tenant for life, tenant in common, mortgagor, holder under a title-bond, lessee, or purchaser under a parole agreement avoided by him, or their privies, agents, or servants.

In real actions, and in actions for the recovery of personal property in specie, the Court in which the suit is pending, may restrain the injury, removal or destruction of the property by injunction until the cause is finally disposed of.

2. Trespasses are akin to waste, the distinction being that waste is the abuse or destruction of property committed by a person, who while not absolute owner has, nevertheless, a present right to its legitimate use, while a trespass is an act injurious to, or destructive of, property by one who has no right whatever to its use. Where trespasses on realty are likely to result in irreparable injury, or in a multiplicity of suits, or where such trespasses cannot be compensated in damages, either by reason of the peculiar character of the property, or by reason of the insolvency of the trespasser, an injunction will lie to restrain such trespassers, on a bill therefor being filed by the owner of the land.

3. Similar Wrongs include (1) those cases where a person so uses his own property, or so exercises his own rights, as to irreparably injure another; and (2) those cases where personal rights are so wantonly invaded as to work great discomfort, inconvenience, or annoyance to the complainant, such as acts endangering life or limb, or disturbing sleep, or injuring health, and acts that tend to mortify complainant's feelings by publications, and the like.

The following form may be of value in framing bills to stay waste: it is so drawn as to apply to any one of various cases:

BILL TO STAY WASTE.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§155;164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That he is the owner of the fee, or the mortgagee, or a tenant in common, of the following tract of land: [Here describe it; see, ante, §172.]

II.

That said tract of land is now in possession of defendant C D, who has a life estate therein as the endowed widow of E D, [or as a tenant by the courtesy, or as a homesteader, or who is a tenant in common with complainant, or who has mortgaged said land to complainant, or who holds under a title bond from complainant, or who went into possession under complainant on a parole agreement of purchase, which he has avoided and repudiated, or who is a lessee of complainant, or who is a tenant under the defendant C D.]

65 Code, §3767. This section, and the Act of 1877, ch. 97, have greatly enlarged the jurisdiction of the Court in cases of waste, trespass, nuisance and injury to easements. See, ante, §46. To constitute waste there must be a lasting injury to the estate, and a permanent depreciation of its value. Lunn v. Oslin, 12 Pick., 28.

68 3 Pom. Eq. Jur., §1357; 1 High on Injunc., §697-738; 2 Sto. Eq. Jur., §§928-929. Now that our Courts of Chancery have jurisdiction to try the legal title to real and personal property, its power to do complete justice, in every case of trespass, is greatly enlarged; and they will enjoin (1) the cutting of timber, shrubbery, fruit trees, or any other trees; (2) the digging of coal, stone, or mineral; (3) the injury or removal of fences, houses, fixtures, or other improvements, or other property; (4) the interference with springs, or streams, or roads, or rights of way, or easements; (5) injuries to riparian rights; or (6) any other act violating the complainant's rights of property, or use or possession of property. As to injuries to riparian rights, see Webster v. Harris, 5 Cates, 668.
69 Show fully and clearly the character of the defendant's possession, and if a tenant of the owner of the life estate is committing the waste, make him a defendant, also.
WHEN INJUNCTIONS WILL BE GRANTED.

§ 820. Injunctions Against Nuisances.—The Chancery Court will, on application of the person injured, enjoin all nuisances which interfere with the health or comfort of the complainant, or endanger, depreciate, or destroy, his property or his business; such as (1) acts or occupations which cause noxious noises, sights, vapors, odors, or stenches; (2) the erection of houses for the storage of powder, oil, or other explosive combustibles; or the building of stables, steam factories, slaughter houses, glue or soap factories, brick kilns, bawdy-houses, or other offensive establishments, near the complainant’s house: (3) an injury to complainant’s water-rights by diversion, destruction, or pollution, of the water; (4) the obstruction of complainant’s rights of way over roads, streets, or bridges; (5) an injury to complainant’s land by mill-dams and other interferences with running water; or (6) any similar act injurious to comfort, health, property or business, not to be adequately compensated for in damages. And the Court will not only enjoin a nuisance, but will award damages caused by the nuisance.

§ 821. Injunctions to Protect Easements.—Courts of Equity will interfere by injunction, on behalf of the party injured, to protect his rights to easements, § 822. Injunctions to Protect Franchises.—Where the Legislature has granted a franchise, the Chancery Court will protect it by injunctive process. Among these franchises are: (1) right of turnpike, bridge and ferry companies to collect tolls; and (2) right of railroad, telegraph and other companies to operate under their charters, and to possess and enjoy the exclusive privileges and franchises conferred by their charters.77

§ 823. Injunctions in Other Cases.—There are many other cases in which a Chancery Court will grant an injunction to prevent wrongs, unconscientious conduct, and irreparable injury, among which are the following:

1. The Transfer of Specific Property will be enjoined, when, if transferred, irreparable loss would result to the owner, or beneficiary, or lien owner; or, in case of negotiable securities, to the maker or endorser.78

2. The Violation of Any Trust, either (1) by the executor; administrator, guardian, or other trustee executing the trust; or (2) by any stranger intermeddling therewith, will be enjoined.79

3. The Collection of Purchase-Money for Land will be enjoined80 when the title fails in whole or in part, or is in controversy, or there is a breach of the covenants,81 and there has been a fraud in the sale,82 or the vendor is insolvent,83 or the contract is executory.84

4. Tenants Will Be Enjoined from doing acts in violation of their lease or of good husbandry, from removing manure or crops, from plowing up meadows, from injuring orchards, shrubbery, walks or buildings, from sowing seeds of deleterious crops or vegetation, or from committing any waste.85

5. The Enforcement of a Penalty, or a Forfeiture, will be enjoined when it was inserted in the contract merely to secure the enforcement of some act, or the enjoyment of some right, or benefit, and adequate compensation may be made for the breach, especially when the forfeiture was occasioned by accident, fraud, surprise, or ignorance.86

6. The Following Acts will, also, be enjoined: (1) the infringement of trademarks,87 (2) the disclosure of secrets of trade, title, composition, or manufacture,88 (3) the publication of private letters, or other private writings,89 and in general, the breach of any contract, the commission of any tort, or the violation of any right, when the legal remedy would be inadequate.90

§ 824. Mandatory Injunctions, When Granted.—Mandatory injunctions are seldom granted before a final hearing, although they may be granted on interlocutory applications. The Court, however, seldom commands the defendant to

80 1 High on Injunc., §§ 897-933.

82 A purchaser in possession under a deed must ordinarily rely upon the covenants and warranties in his deed, and, in the absence of fraud or insolvency on the part of his vendor, must pay the purchase-money, and this is so even when the vendor has no title. Brown v. Woods, 1 Cold., 610; Land Co. v. Hill, 3 Pick., 578.

83 Ingram v. Morgan, 4 Hum., 66; Topp v. White, 12 Heisk., 165.

86 But a purchaser, after deed made and possession taken under it, cannot, in the absence of fraud, concealment, or misrepresentation, enjoin the collection of the purchase-money, because of breach of any of the covenants, unless the seller is insolvent. Land Co. v. Hill, 3 Pick., 578. And this is so even when the vendor had no title. Brown v. Woods, 1 Cold., 610.

87 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1655; 1656.

do any positive act by an interlocutory order; it contents itself, in an interlocutory proceeding, with prohibiting the defendant from doing the reverse of what he is desired to do. Mandatory injunctions are never granted, unless the injury is irreparable, and unless the complainant uses extraordinary diligence in applying for it in cases where delay or acquiescence would be prejudicial to the defendant.91

1. Mandatory Interlocutory Injunctions would seem to be proper, (1) where the act complained of is a gross violation of a property right, and was done in great haste, or in secrecy, and manifestly to avoid a prohibitory injunction; or (2) was a high-handed outrage on complainant's plain rights of use or possession, and the act is yet warm, and the mandatory injunction restoring the status quo, while doing the complainant exceeding great benefit, will do the defendant but little or no injury.92 A mandatory interlocutory injunction will ordinarily be granted (1) to compel the defendant to undo acts done during the progress of the suit;93 or (2) to undo, remove, or discontinue, a nuisance or trespass of an irreparable nature.94

A mandatory interlocutory order, or injunction, will also be granted to require one party to permit the other to inspect a house, if necessary for the purpose of the suit; or to permit him to have access to the furniture in a house for the purpose of valuation;95 or to permit him to inspect a mine for the purpose of determining the extent of the injury done by the party in possession to the party applying for the order.96

2. Mandatory Final Injunctions frequently form a part of final decrees.97 In such cases, the decree and injunction command and require the defendant to do some affirmative act, such as (1) to surrender the possession of property, real or personal, or choses in action, or deeds, or other papers; or (2) to execute deeds, releases, acquittances, or other instruments; or (3) to pay money into Court; or (4) to do some ministerial acts as an officer,98 or (5) to abate a nuisance; or (6) to maintain a bridge, or road, when so bound by law;99 and on his default in any of these cases, the defendant will be committed to jail until he performs the act, or otherwise purges his contempt.100

§ 825. Cases not Proper for Injunctive Relief.—The Chancery Court sits to declare, protect and enforce the rights of property,101 the obligations of contracts, express and implied, and the duties imposed by conscience and good faith in reference to property, and not to inflict penalties, or to interfere with the procedure in criminal cases, or to deal with political or ecclesiastical102 matters, or to intermeddle with co-ordinate departments of the government. 103

Equity has no jurisdiction to restrain the commission of crimes, or to enforce mere moral obligations, or the performance of mere moral duties; nor will it interfere for the prevention of an illegal act merely because it is illegal; in all cases, an injury to the legal or equitable rights, or property, of the complainant must be involved. 104

The Chancery Court will not grant an injunction (1) to stay proceedings in a criminal proceeding; nor (2) to stay proceedings on a mandamus, information, or writ of prohibition; 105 nor (3) to stay proceedings on an award in a Court of law, except for fraud, accident, or mistake; nor (4) to stay any proceedings in a suit in a Court of law, unless there be some special ground for equitable relief not equally available in the latter Court; nor (5) to stay proceedings on a judgment in a Court of law, unless there be some special grounds of equitable relief existing before the judgment, or some other ground of relief arising since the judgment, not equally available in the latter Court; 106 nor (6) to stay proceedings in a suit in another Court of Chancery, or Court exercising Chancery jurisdiction, in a matter the latter Court may properly determine; 107 nor (7) will an injunction be granted against the exercise of discretionary powers by corporations or their officers, where there is no fraud; nor (8) against the exercise of discretionary powers by any public officer; 108 nor (9) will an injunction be granted against a non-resident, upon whom personal process has not been served; 109 nor (10) will the Court, by a mandatory injunction, undertake to enforce the performance of continuous duties; 110 nor (11) to make an order that it cannot enforce, especially an order in reference to matters outside of the State; 111 nor (12) will an interlocutory injunction lie against an officer collecting State taxes; 112 nor (13) against an officer of the United States discharging a duty under an Act of Congress; 113 nor (14) will an injunction lie for violations of statutory copyrights; 114 nor (15) against a person proceeding under the national bankrupt laws; 115 nor (16) will an injunction of any sort be granted, in any case manifestly unfit for injunctive relief.

§ 826. Form of Bill to Enjoin and Abate a Nuisance.—The following form of a bill to enjoin and abate a nuisance will be found applicable to many cases constantly arising:

BIL TO ENJOIN AND ABATE A NUISANCE. 116

[For address and caption, see, ante, § 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That he is the owner and possessor of the following tract of land in the... civil district of Blount county. [Insert description; see, § 172.]

II.

That there is a grist and saw mill on said tract using the water of Mill creek for power. This mill has been so located and operated over thirty years, without interference, interruption or dispute, except as hereinafter stated. Said mill is operated by what is called an undershot water-wheel, the water flowing through a mill race from said creek, and has always been so operated; and cannot be operated any other way without very heavy expense and the purchase of a site for another dam higher up the creek, and of a right of way for a mill race thereto.

115 1 High on Injunc., § 300.
116 This bill is based on Saff v. Martin, 2 Shan. Cas., 451. See, ante, § 820.
III.

That about a year ago the defendant bought and took possession of the tract of land on said creek below complainant's said tract and adjoining the same, and at once began the construction of a mill and dam thereon, the dam being thrown across said creek very near complainant's land, and not more than one hundred yards from his said mill. The result is that defendant's dam backs the water of the creek up on complainant's mill-wheel, and so retards the current that there is not force enough in the same to turn the wheel.

IV.

That complainant, to avoid trouble, at great expense raised his mill-wheel two feet, and so changed his dam and race as to give a swifter and larger flow of water. But no sooner had complainant completed this work than the defendant raised the height of his dam, and thus caused the back water to flow up on complainant's wheel as injuriously as before. And, in addition to said dam of defendant, he has allowed a very large fallen tree to remain across said creek, thus increasing the back flow of water, and completely drowning the wheel of complainant's mill, whereby complainant is prevented from grinding and sawing for his customers as was his wont, to his great financial injury and the ruin of his business.

V.

Complainant would further show to your Honor that as the result of said dam and fallen tree on defendant's land, the back water of said creek in wet weather flows over a large part of complainant's meadow, and some of his plowed land, doing great damage thereto; and also drowns complainant's spring, from which his family and tenants and employees get their drinking and cooking water. Complainant offered to remove said tree at his own expense, but the defendant refused him permission so to do.

VI.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [See, ante, §§ 158; 164.]

2d. That an injunction issue to restrain and prohibit the defendant from allowing said dam and tree to remain as aforesaid; and that said dam and tree be declared a nuisance and abated by the Sheriff at the defendant's expense.\textsuperscript{117}

3d. That complainant may be granted damages\textsuperscript{118} for the injuries done as aforesaid, and have such other and further relief as he may be entitled to.

This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

§ 828. HOW INJUNCTIONS ARE OBTAINED. 634

A fiat for an interlocutory injunction is ordinarily obtained before the bill is filed, upon application therefor to some Judge, or Chancellor, at Chambers. Whenever his bill praying for an injunction has been drawn and sworn to, the complainant may, without any notice whatever to the defendant, except as hereafter shown, present it to any Chancellor, Circuit Judge, or Judge of a special Court, for a fiat. The application is made wholly ex parte, and at Chambers, unless the bill has already been filed, in which case it may be made to the Court where filed.

If, after the bill has been filed, the necessity for an immediate injunction should arise, and the Court not be in session, the complainant may draw an amended or supplemental bill, stating the new facts and showing the urgency, and obtain a fiat from the Chancellor at Chambers. If the Court be in session an injunction may be obtained in the same way, or on petition, or on motion supported by affidavit. If the Court be in session, a restraining order will be granted of record, if the defendant is before the Court.

§ 828. When Notice of the Application for an Injunction is Required.—An injunction cannot be granted to stay the sale of real estate, under a deed of trust or mortgage, with a power of sale, executed to secure the payment of loaned money, on application of the borrower, unless the complainant gives twenty days' notice to the trustee or mortgagee of the time when, the place where, and the Judge, or Chancellor, before whom, the application for the injunction is to be made; and no Judge, or Chancellor, can act upon the application, unless it is accompanied by proof evidenced by return of a sheriff, constable, or attorney, that the notice has been served on the trustee or mortgagee, or he is not to be found in the county of his usual place of residence, or is a non-resident.

In order, however, that the complainant may have time to give the required notice, the Judge, or Chancellor, may grant a fiat for an interim injunction to postpone the sale until the application for an injunction can be acted on at the regular hearing thereof, on notice. This fiat may be in the following form:

INTERIM FIAT.

To the Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court, at Huntingdon:

Upon complainant filing this bill, and giving an injunction bond in the penalty of one thousand dollars, conditioned to pay such costs and damages as the Court may adjudge against him, you will issue the injunction prayed for in the bill, such injunction to continue in force until [here specify the day, allowing the time requisite to enable the complainant to give the twenty days' notice] on or before which day a further order will be made, on notice to the defendant.

January 29, 1891.

Such order may be, also, in the following words:

FIAT TO DELAY A LAND SALE.

To the Clerk and Master, at Huntingdon:

Upon the foregoing bill being filed, and prosecution bond being given, issue an order to the defendant commanding him to postpone the sale of the property mentioned in the bill until the complainant has time to give the required notice of his foregoing application for an injunction, and until said application has been acted on.

January 29, 1891.

On the day specified in the notice, the application for an injunction will be further heard. At this hearing, the defendant may resist the granting of the injunction, for want of Equity on the face of the bill; or, he may apply for an adjournment of the hearing to give him time to answer the bill. If an adjournment is applied for, the defendant has the right to ten days’ time during which he may file his answer before the same Judge, or Chancellor; and thereupon the motion for an injunction shall be heard upon the bill and answer. 12 At this hearing the Judge, or Chancellor, may (1) refuse any injunction; or (2) may grant an injunction as prayed in the bill, or (3) may refuse an injunction on condition that the defendant will execute a refunding bond; or (4) may grant an injunction on the complainant paying what he admits to be due; 13 or (5) may make such other order as Equity may require. The order of the Judge, or Chancellor, shall be reduced to writing and signed by him, and enclosed with the bill, answer and exhibits, in a sealed envelope, and transmitted to the Clerk of the Court in which the bill is to be filed. 14

The defendant may voluntarily appear without notice, and present his answer, and resist the grant of the interlocutory injunction. He is under no obligation to wait for notice, or process; 15 and he may, in any case, anticipate an application for an injunction, and request the Chancellor, or Judge, to hear him before acting on the application, if one should be made.

§ 829. When Notice of the Application May be Required.—Ordinarily the Chancellor, or Judge, grants a temporary injunction, ex parte, on reading the bill and accompanying papers, if any, except as shown in the preceding section; but where (1) a delay of a few days will work the complainant no injury, and a bond by the defendant will abundantly protect and indemnify him, and (2) where an injunction, though warranted by the bill, will nevertheless affect innocent third parties, the Chancellor applied to, if the bill be addressed to him, 16 may refuse to act on the application until the defendant is notified thereof, and has opportunity to be heard. 17 For this purpose, the Judge, or Chancellor, may retain the bill until the day fixed in the notice. On such day, the defendants may present their sworn answer to the bill, and otherwise resist the application for an injunction. In such case, the Judge, or Chancellor, may (1) refuse to grant the injunction; or (2) may grant it on bond, or on bond and other terms; or (3) may grant it on condition that it stand dissolved, when the defendant files with the Master a bond in a given penalty with two good sureties conditioned to pay the complainant such sum as the Court may at any time award him as debt, damages, or otherwise, for the wrongs complained of; (4) or he may order an injunction to issue, unless the defendant give such a bond instanter. The following would in such case be the form of the fiat:

FIAT FOR A LIMITED INJUNCTION.

To the Clerk and Master, at Clarksville:

Issue an injunction as prayed in the foregoing bill, on complainant giving a proper injunction bond in the penalty of one thousand dollars; but said injunction to stand dissolved when the defendant, E F, files with you a bond, in the penalty of one thousand dollars, with two good sureties, conditioned to pay the complainant such sum as the Court may at any time award him as debt, damages, or otherwise, for the wrongs complained of in his bill.

Aug. 7, 1890. George E. Seay, Chancellor.

The following is a form for the condition of the bond, in such a case:

CONDITION OF THE BOND.

The condition of the above obligation is such that, whereas an injunction was granted in the case of A B, vs. E F in the Chancery Court at Clarksville, on condition that it should stand dissolved when the said E F shall file with the Master of said Court the bond specified in said order, now if the said E F shall pay the complainant such sum as the Court may at any time award him as debt, damages, or otherwise, for the wrongs complained of in the bill in said cause, then this obligation to be void, but otherwise to remain in full force.

16 The suggestions of this section cannot well be acted on by any other than the Chancellor of the Court in which the bill is to be filed.

If the bill be to stay proceedings to collect money in a Court of law, the flat should require the bond to be conditioned that the defendant refund to the complainant any money the Court may so order on final hearing. 18

When an injunction will operate harshly upon the defendants, and yet they are probably infringing the rights of the complainant, the Chancellor, instead of granting an unconditional injunction, may give the defendants the option of giving a bond to indemnify the complainant against the wrongs complained of. In such a case, the fiat would be as follows:

CONDITIONAL FIAT.

To the Clerk and Master, at Nashville:

Issue the writ of injunction prayed in the foregoing bill, on complainant giving a bond therefor in the penalty of ten thousand dollars, unless within five days the defendants file with you a bond in like penalty, conditioned to pay the complainant all damages the Court may award him for the wrongs and injuries alleged in the bill. If the defendants file said bond, it shall be deemed a waiver of all objections to the jurisdiction to the Court to award said damages, in case the defendants are legally liable therefor.

July 29, 1880.

A. G. MERRITT, Chancellor.

Such a fiat should not be granted, however, in any case of clear invasion of the complainant’s rights, or in any case where damages would be inadequate compensation.

If the bill is to enjoin the sale of real estate under a mortgage or deed of trust to secure loaned money, notice must be given the defendant, in all cases, as shown in the preceding section.

20 For pauper cases, see, post, § 831.
21 If the complainant admits any money to be due the defendant, or fails to allege any sufficient Equity against any part of the matter sought to be enjoined, the Judge, or Chancellor, must either (1) order the issuance of an injunction as to that part of the matter only for which sufficient Equity is alleged, or (2) enjoin the whole matter on condition that the complainant, besides giving the usual injunction bond, pay into Court the amount admitted to be due, or otherwise perform the fiat as to any part of the matter sought to be enjoined and as to which an injunction is ordered. Ch. Rule, VI, § 4; § 1195, sub-sec., 4, post. This rule is declaratory of the pre-existing practice.
22 But if this is not done, and the bill is dismissed, the Court on dismissing the bill and dissolving the injunction, should dispose of the matters in controversy, and render a decree against the complainant for the amount due from him, and against his sureties on the injunction bond for interest and costs. plaintiff in the law Court being enjoined from proceeding at law further than judgment, without the consent of the Chancery Court. The following are forms of conditions to flat:

CONDITIONS OF FIATS FOR LIMITED INJUNCTIONS AGAINST SUITS AT LAW.

This fiat is granted on condition that the complainant withdraw his plea in the Circuit Court, and allow a judgment by default to be entered against him, and the defendant is allowed to take said judgment, by default, but shall be enjoined from taking any further step whatever in said Circuit Court suit, and especially from suing out any final process, or otherwise in any way attempting to enforce said judgment by default, without leave of the Chancery Court in this cause.

Or thus:

This fiat is granted on condition that the complainant agrees that all the matters in controversy between him and the defendant in the Circuit Court, may be fully and finally adjudicated in this suit, and that a decree may be rendered herein against him for any sum found at the hearing thereof, to be due from him to the defendant. The filing of said injunction bond will be deemed as a conclusive acceptance of this condition.

Mandatory injunctions usually prohibit the reverse of what is required to be done. The following is a form of

To the Clerk and Master, at Dresden:

Let the injunction inhibit and restrain the defendant from continuing the obstructions in the road mentioned, and from keeping the gate across said road locked. J. SOMERS, Chancellor.

Upon endorsing his fiat on a bill, the officer granting the fiat must enclose the bill and flat, and accompanying papers, in a sealed envelope, directed to the Clerk of the Court to whom the fiat is addressed, which envelope can be opened only by the Clerk, or his deputy.

As soon as the complainant delivers to the Clerk the required bond, if one be required, and otherwise complies with the requirements of the fiat, the Clerk will issue the injunction specified in the fiat.

§ 831. Injunctions on the Pauper Oath. The Chancellor, or Judge, granting the fiat may, in a proper case, order an unlimited injunction to issue, on the pauper oath; but this should rarely, if ever, be done, except, perhaps, in the following cases: (1) where a wife sues her husband, and makes a strong prima facie case; (2) where the defendant appears by the bill to have pauperized the complainant, or taken advantage of his poverty, or otherwise manifestly defrauded him; (3) where the suit is by an administrator, guardian, or next friend, and great merits are shown in the bill. An injunction is a tremendous 26 For the character of this bond, see, post, § 860.

27 It seems to be considered by some Circuit Judges that an injunction may issue on the pauper oath, whenever it may issue on a bond; and the result has been a multiplication of pauper oath injunctions, intended sometimes to harass defendants, and sometimes to release levies, or gain time or other inequitable advantages, all tending to bring both this process and the Court itself into disrepute. While the granting of temporary injunctions is confined to the discretion of the Judges, and Chancellors, it is a legal discretion to be controlled by well settled rules. The power, while necessary to the protection of the citizen, is a tremendous one, and may easily be misused. Its exercise involves the most delicate responsibility, and requires the greatest wisdom and caution. M. & M. R. R. v. Huggins, 7 Colo., 277; Chadwell v. Jordan, 2 Tenn. Ch., 637. Extraordinary, indeed, should be the case to justify an unlimited injunction under the pauper oath, where the injunction will work grievous injury to the defendant, or deprive him of a lien, or other right.
exercise of judicial power, and operates on the defendant without giving him a hearing, and he who asks it ought to give some more substantial evidence of his good faith, and of his confidence in his cause, than a pauper oath.

When an injunction is applied for, on the pauper oath, exceptional care is required in order to prevent gross injustice being done in the name of justice. The Chancellor must have regard to the rights and interests of the defendant as well as to those of the complainant; and to grant an injunction under the pauper oath, in the same way and to the same extent as if an injunction bond were given, would often be manifestly inequitable, and sometimes grossly unjust. The writ should, in pauper cases, be rigidly confined to what is absolutely necessary to the complainant's protection. All that he can equitably demand is ultimate safety, if his claim be found to be just; and the defendant should not be required to do more, or to forego more, or to incur more risks, or disadvantages, than are unavoidable in securing the complainant against loss. As a general rule, therefore, if an injunction is sought, under the pauper oath, to stay a suit at law before judgment, the plaintiff at law should be allowed to proceed to judgment, but no further; and if a judgment is sought to be enjoined, he should be allowed to have execution, and a levy, but no sale. If personal property has already been levied on, or should be levied on by permission given in the fiat and injunction, the sheriff should be required to retain possession of it, until further order, unless the complainant will give a reprieve bond as in attachment suits. If the answer is sworn to and meets the Equity of the bill, the injunction will, on motion, be dissolved upon the defendant giving a refunding bond. If the injunction be retained, the property levied on would remain impounded in the Sheriff's hands, subject to the orders of the Court, or to be reprieved, if so allowed. If the property levied on is perishable, it should be sold, and the proceeds paid into Court, subject to the final orders in the cause. In this way, the rights of both parties may be well guarded, and no grievous wrong inflicted upon either. The following forms of flats in pauper cases are suggested:

FLATS FOR INJUNCTION ON PAUPER OATH.

To the Clerk and Master, at Nashville:

Issue a writ of injunction as prayed in the foregoing bill, on bond therefor being given in the penalty of five hundred dollars, or on the pauper oath being taken. If the pauper oath is taken, let the injunction be so limited as to allow the defendant to proceed in his suit at law as far as judgment; but no further; or, if judgment has already been taken, then say: to proceed as far as to have his execution issued and levied, but no further; or, if execution has already been levied on personally, then say: If the pauper oath is taken, let a limited injunction such as to prevent the Sheriff from making the sale of the property levied on, but requiring him to retain it in his custody until the further order of the Court, unless the property be reprieved by the complainant as in attachment suits, which he is hereby authorized to do. But if the property is of a perishable nature, or expensive to keep, then add: but if not reprieved, then such and so much of the property levied on as is of so perishable a nature, or so expensive to keep, as to render a sale thereof necessary for the interest of the parties, the Sheriff will proceed to sell, at the time and place by him advertised, and will pay the entire proceeds of such sale into the office of the Clerk and Master of the said Chancery Court, to be disposed of as said Court may order.

At Chambers, March 12, 1877.

W. F. Cooper, Chancellor.

28 Code, §§ 3509-3511. An injunction has the effect of releasing a levy on personal property, unless otherwise ordered by the fiat. See § 846. This fact is often a temptation to a defendant at law, to obtain an injunction under the pauper oath expressly to get property released, so that he may put it forever out of the reach of the plaintiff. Judges should not allow one who claims to seek Equity to perpetuate such property.

29 Equity, when having no rule of its own, follows the law, and the attachment law is a good guide in such a case. See Code, §§ 3501-3506.

30 Bridges v. Robinson, 2 Tenn. Ch., 720; same case, 3 Tenn. Ch., 352. The author knows of several cases where plaintiffs in executions at law lost their debts in consequence of personal property subject to execution, being released by injunctions issued under the pauper oath, and the bills of complaint ultimately dismissed for want of Equity, or because not sustained by the proof.

31 Code, § 3510.

32 Code, § 3505.

33 Code, § 4435.
applied for and refused, at Chambers, no other application can be granted, except by the Court in which the bill is filed. If such Court deem the complainant entitled to an injunction on his original bill, or on his bill as amended, if amended, an injunction may be granted him. When, therefore, an injunction has been refused at Chambers, and such refusal endorsed on the bill, the complainant may, notwithstanding such refusal, file his bill in the proper Court, and there renew his application for an injunction.

It is within the discretion of a Court of Equity to revive an injunction after it has been dissolved; and, upon proper showing of complainant's right to relief, the injunction will be reinstated, the Court being regarded as always open for this purpose. And where sufficient facts are stated in a supplemental bill to warrant an injunction, it will be granted, although the injunction granted on the original bill has been dissolved. And when an interlocutory injunction is allowed, but the bill is afterwards dismissed, for want of prosecution, the final order of dismissal does not operate as res judicata upon the questions involved. But when a second bill is filed to obtain a second injunction in relation to the same subject-matter and between the same parties, it is not enough to allege new grounds of Equity not suggested in the former bill; it must be shown that the new Equity alleged did not exist at the time the original bill was filed, or, if it existed, that it was unknown to the complainant. Nor will an injunction once dissolved be reinstated simply upon new evidence, no new ground of Equity being stated which was not alleged in the original bill.

While the right of the party complaining to amend his bill, and renew the application, even after a dissolution upon the merits, clearly exists, yet the exercise of the right is guarded with much caution. And where an injunction has been dissolved for want of Equity in the bill, an ex parte injunction will not be granted upon an amended bill, or upon a new one supplying the Equity of the old, but the Court will require notice to the opposite party.

§ 833. Discretion of the Chancellor in Granting Injunctions.—In granting temporary relief by interlocutory injunctions, Courts of Equity in no manner anticipate the ultimate determination of the question of right involved. They merely recognize that a sufficient case has been made out to warrant the preservation of the property, or rights, in issue, in statu quo, until a hearing upon the merits. In order to sustain an injunction for the protection of property pendente lite, it is not necessary to decide in favor of the complainant upon the merits, nor is it necessary that he should present such a case as will certainly entitle him to a decree, upon the final hearing. The Court will, however, upon an application for an interlocutory injunction, consider the probability of the complainant ultimately establishing his demand.

84 Code, §§ 4434-4436. When a bill is presented to a Judge, or Chancellor, at Chambers, he may allow it to be then and there amended, if complainant so desires. But the practice of some Judges of allowing the complainant to retain his bill upon an injunction being denied is reprehensible: it results in giving the complainant an opportunity to experience with other Judges in hopes of finally finding one whose discretion has been emasculated by indifference, or diluted by an excess of amiability.
The Code requires the Judge or Chancellor refusing an injunction to endorse such refusal on the bill, and sign his name thereto. Code, § 4437. The object of this is to notify other Judges, and Chancellors, of the fact of such refusal. In such case, if the complainant desires to further prosecute his suit, he may file his bill in the proper Court, and there make a second application for an injunction. Code, § 4436.

86 Ibid., § 41.
87 It is frequently said that the grant or refusal of an injunction is a matter of discretion. This is true if such discretion arises from a consideration of the fixed rules of law and Equity, and is governed by an impartial purpose to rigidly apply those rules to the case at hand. In this State no man's rights should be dependent on a Judge's whim, or mood, or favor. If the complainant is entitled to the injunction, it is his right, and the Chancellor is in duty bound to grant it; and it would be tyranny and usurpation to withhold the grant. On the other hand, if the complainant is not entitled to an injunction, it would equally be tyranny and usurpation to bestow the grant. Where, however, it is doubtful whether an injunction should be granted, after duly considering the equities alleged, and the relative advantages and disadvantages which would result to the parties from granting or refusing the writ, in such a case an injunction should be denied. A Judge has discretion to do what in law he is in duty bound to do; but no discretion to deny any man any of his rights, or to give any man more than his rights; nor has he any discretion to withhold from any one what the law gives him, or to give to any one what the law withholds from him. Discretio est scire per legem quod sit justum. (Discretion is to know by means of the law, what is just.) See preface to Lube's Eq. Pl., (Wheeler's Ed.), XII-XIII; M. & M. R. R. Co. v. Huggins, 7 Cold., 226; Flippin v. Knabbe, Tenn. Ch., 238; ante, § 583, note 4; post, §§ 857; 902.
88 High on Injunc., § 5.
Where the legal right is not sufficiently clear to enable a Court of Equity to form an opinion, it will generally be governed, in deciding an application for a preliminary injunction, by considerations of the relative convenience and inconvenience which may result to the parties from granting or withholding the writ. And where, upon balancing such considerations, it is apparent that the act complained of is likely to result in irreparable injury to the complainant, and the balance of inconvenience preponderates in his favor, the injunction will be granted. But where, on the other hand, it appears that greater danger is likely to result from granting than from withholding the relief, or, where the inconvenience seems to be equally divided as between the parties, the injunction will be refused, and the parties left as they are. And if the complainant's rights may be as well secured by a final injunction, and are not prejudiced by a refusal of the temporary injunction, the Court may refuse the interlocutory application, especially when the injuries which would result to the defendant, if the relief were improperly granted, would greatly exceed the benefits which might result to the complainant, if the injunction were properly granted. If, however, a clear case of irreparable injury is shown as likely to result to complainant, unless the injunction is granted, and it does not appear that the issuing of the writ will work any such injury to defendant, the relief will be granted.

An injunction will not ordinarily be granted, even in cases where the complainant would otherwise be entitled to the writ, if it appears (1) that he has consented to, acquiesced in, or otherwise waived, the wrong complained of; or (2) that he has been negligent or guilty of laches in making his application; or (3) that damages will be adequate compensation; or (4) that his own misconduct, or negligence, occasioned or contributed to the wrong or injury complained of; or (5) that by reasonable diligence such wrong or injury could have been avoided; or (6) that he has been guilty of participation in the iniquity complained of, so that his hands are not clean; or (7) that the injunction would be injurious to innocent third parties, who should be heard before hurt; or (8) that the writ would be contrary to some statute, or to public policy; or (9) that, for any other reason, the injunction would be contrary to Equity and good conscience.

§ 834. Form of a Writ of Injunction.—The form of the writ is unimportant, provided it contains enough to give the defendant notice of the fact that he is enjoined from doing the acts complained of in the bill. The writ should state (1) the fact of the bill being filed by the complainant against the defendant, (2) in what Court filed, (3) a brief statement of the allegations showing the wrong complained of, (4) the prayer for an injunction, (5) the granting of a fiat for an injunction, (6) the command to the Sheriff to make known to the defendant what he is enjoined from doing, (7) the direction to the Sheriff when to return the writ, and (8) should be duly tested and signed by the Clerk and Master. The writ should be sufficiently explicit upon its face to apprise the defendant what he is restrained from doing, without compelling him to resort to the bill to ascertain what the injunction means.

If the object of the suit is to restrain proceedings in another Court, the injunction will be awarded against the defendant, his attorneys, and agents. If the object of the suit is to restrain the commission of waste, or other inequitable

40 1 High on Injunc., § 13. An injunction, being “the strong arm of Equity,” should never be granted except on a clear case of irreparable injury, and with a full conviction on the part of the Chancellor of its urgent necessity. To justify the Chancellor in granting the relief he must be reasonably satisfied that there is an actual intention on the part of the defendant to do the act which it is sought to enjoin, or that there is probable ground for believing that, unless the relief is granted, the act will be done. And it is not a sufficient ground for interfering that, if there be no such intention on the part of the defendant, the injunction can do no harm. The Chancellor will not interfere when the evidence shows that there is no probability of defendant doing the act which is sought to be restrained. So, if it is apparent upon an application for an injunction that the relief sought is disproportioned to the nature and extent of the injury sustained, or likely to be sustained, the Chancellor will decline to interfere. 1 High on Injunc., § 22.

A TEMPORARY INJUNCTION AGAINST A SUIT AT LAW.

State of Tennessee,
Gibson County.

To the Sheriff of Gibson county:

Whereas, A B has filed a bill in the Chancery Court at Trenton against E F, alleging among other things, that E F has fraudulently obtained a judgment against him for five hundred dollars, before Charles Smith, a Justice of the Peace of Gibson county, and praying, among other things, for a writ of injunction to restrain said E F from taking any steps to enforce or collect said judgment;

And whereas, the Hon. Albert G. Hawkins, Chancellor, has directed me to issue an injunction as prayed in said bill.

You are, therefore, hereby commanded to make known to the said E F, that he is strictly enjoined and commanded to take no step in person, or by agent, to enforce or collect said judgment, and that he desist and refrain from any action to that end, until the further order of said Court. Herein fail not, and make due return of this writ to said Court, on the first Monday of October next.

Witness R. Z. Taylor, Clerk and Master of said Court, at office, the first Monday in April, 1890.

GENERAL FORM OF A WRIT OF INJUNCTION.

State of Tennessee, —— County.

Whereas, [insert the name of the complainant] has filed his bill of complaint in our Chancery Court at — [insert the name of town where the Court is held] against — [insert the name of the defendant] charging among other things, that, [here insert the substance of the charges in the bill on which the injunction is sought;] and praying, among other things, the issue of a writ of injunction to restrain the said — [Here insert the name of the defendant] his agents and servants, from [doing the act, or acts, complained of, specifying them.]

And whereas, the Hon. —, Chancellor, [giving his name], has directed me to issue a writ of injunction as prayed in said bill:

§ 835. The Issuance and Service of an Injunction.—As soon as the bill has been filed, and the proper prosecution and injunction bonds given, or pauper oath taken, the Clerk and Master will issue a copy of the bill, a subpoena to answer, and a writ of injunction. If there is urgency, the Master may issue the injunction first, and put it in the hands of the Sheriff for service; but in such case, the copy of the bill and subpoena should be made out and served with all possible diligence.

The ordinary mode of serving an injunction is by reading it to the defendant; but if he evade, or attempts to evade, the service of the writ, the officer must leave a copy at the usual residence of the defendant, and state the fact on his return, which will be deemed a sufficient service.

§ 836. When a Prayer for an Injunction is not Necessary.—As a rule, an Code, § 4415; or the fact that a fiat has been granted may be communicated to the defendant, verbally, or in writing, by the complainant, or his agent; or may be telegraphed to him. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1674. See, post, § 845.

interlocutory injunction will not be granted unless prayed for in the bill; but where the Court has taken property into its custody, it will interfere by injunction to prevent any injury to it, or intermeddling with it, either by litigants or others. So, where a Court is administering a fund for the benefit of creditors generally, it will enjoin a creditor from bringing a separate suit against the debtor, or his representative, when such creditor has the right to come in and prove his debt under the general bill.

An injunction will, also, be issued without a prayer therefor in the bill when the complainant is proceeding against the defendant both in Chancery and in some other Court, at the same time and for the same matter. In such cases, as already stated, the defendant may require the complainant to elect in which Court he will proceed, and if he elects to proceed in Chancery, he will be enjoined from further proceeding in the other Court, unless, under special circumstances, he is allowed to sue in both Courts.

The Court will, likewise, without a prayer for that purpose, enjoin persons from interfering with the process or officers of the Court, or suing the latter in another tribunal. An injunction will issue in any such case, on motion in open Court, or before the Chancellor of the Court at Chambers; such motion to be supported by a sworn petition detailing the necessary facts.

The interlocutory injunctions granted in the foregoing and similar cases are generally called “restraining orders.”

An injunction may, also, be moved for and obtained, on sufficient grounds, at any time during the pendency of the suit; and, if at the hearing, a mandatory or perpetual injunction is necessary for the purposes of complete justice, it will then be granted, although not prayed for in the bill.

§ 837. When Injunctions will be Continued, or made Perpetual.—Often an interlocutory injunction is the only exercise of the injunctive power necessary for the purposes of justice, the final decree settling the rights of the parties in such a manner that a continuation of the interlocutory injunction is unnecessary; but there are, also, many cases where the rights and interests of the complainant require that the temporary injunction be continued, or made perpetual, in the final decree. This is especially true in cases where the principal relief sought by the bill is injunctive, as in suits (1) to abate nuisances, (2) to enjoin a fraudulent, or satisfied, or void judgment, (3) to remove a cloud, (4) to enjoin the use or transfer of a forged, fraudulent, or void deed, note, or other paper, (5) to stay waste, or trespass, or other tortious invasions of complainant’s rights, or (6) to quiet titles and prevent a multiplicity of suits.

An interlocutory injunction is superseded by the decree made at the hearing of the cause, and, if such injunction is intended to remain in force, it must be properly continued by the final decree. An injunction may be had at the hearing, even when not prayed for in the bill, or when the interlocutory injunction was dissolved. An injunction can only be made perpetual at the hearing of the cause; and when made perpetual it continues in force notwithstanding some of the parties to the suit may marry or die. The phraseology used in making the temporary injunction perpetual is as follows:

DEGREE OF PERPETUAL INJUNCTION.

[After adjudicating the merits of the controversy, but before the adjudication of costs, or a reference to the Master, or other subordinate matter, add:]

And the temporary injunction heretofore granted in this cause prohibiting and restraining the defendant from [doing so and so, specifying what], is hereby continued and made perpetual.

§ 838. The Frame of the Bill in an Injunction Suit.
§ 839. General Form of an Injunction Bill.
§ 840. Special Form of Injunction Bill.
§ 841. Frame and Form of a Bill for a Mandatory Injunction.

§ 838. The Frame of the Bill in an Injunction Suit.—The character of the averments in a bill for an injunction has been heretofore considered,1 but the importance of the subject may justify further observations.

1. The Frame of an Injunction Bill Generally Considered. As a preliminary injunction is an extraordinary exercise of judicial authority, so the party invoking such exercise should present a bill therefor cogent enough to justify the Chancellor in awarding such powerful process, ex parte. In a bill that seeks no preliminary order, such as an order for a receiver, an injunction, or an attachment, all that is ordinarily necessary is a plain, direct, and positive averment of the facts out of which the complainant’s rights arise, and on which the relief he seeks depends. Such a bill is a mere pleading, and ordinarily need not be sworn to. When, however, a preliminary order is sought, and especially an injunction, the bill partakes of the nature both of a pleading, and of an affidavit in support of that pleading. As a pleading, it should show a clear right to the relief against the wrongs complained of; and, as an affidavit, it should set forth in detail, clearly, directly, and positively, the facts and circumstances of the case, the aggravating and inequitable conduct of the defendant, and how the injury threatened if allowed to happen, or the injury being perpetrated if allowed to continue, will not only work irreparable injury to the complainant’s rights or property, but be, also, manifestly contrary to Equity and good conscience.

An injunction being a harsh remedy, will not be granted, in the first instance, except upon a clear prima facie case, and upon positive averments of the equities upon which the application for relief is based. And while it is not essential that complainant should establish his case, upon an application for an interlocutory injunction, with the same degree of certainty that would be required upon the final hearing, he must nevertheless allege positively the facts constituting his grounds for relief. Thus, the mere allegation of irreparable injury will not suffice to warrant an injunction, but the facts must appear on which the allegation is predicated in order that the Court may be satisfied as to the nature of the injury. Nor will merely argumentative allegations, or inferences from the facts stated, suffice to meet the requirements of the rule. The relief will not ordinarily be allowed where the facts upon which complainant’s equities rest, are stated only upon information and belief; but they should be made to appear by positive averments founded on complainant’s own knowledge or that of some person cognizant of the facts. Nor will it suffice that the averments of the bill are made upon the information of the party complaining, without stating his sources of information. And an injunction granted ex parte, where some of the material allegations of the bill are stated on information and belief, can not be sustained in the absence of proof of their correctness. Nor do the mere apprehensions and fears of complainant unsustained by facts establishing their probability, constitute a sufficient ground to warrant interference by injunction, since such fears may exist without any substantial reason. Therefore, before injunctive relief will be granted, not the complainant, but the Court, must be satisfied that a wrong is about to be committed which will be irreparable in its nature.\(^2\)

The bill must contain all the definiteness of detail, the particularity of fact, and circumstance, the fullness and precision of statement essential to a special affidavit in the gravest of matters. The grounds on which the preliminary injunction is sought must be set forth specifically and positively, and on personal knowledge. If any averments are based on information at all, the source of the information should be stated, and the complainant should aver his belief in its credibility. The bill should show definitely, on its face, what allegations are made on complainant’s own knowledge, and what on information and belief. The bill should be sworn to positively, and the affidavit should so show. If an agent or Solicitor swear to it, his affidavit should show that he is the agent, or Solicitor, and has personal knowledge of the facts set forth in the bill, and he must swear that they are true of his own knowledge, and his affidavit should so show.\(^3\)

If the facts and circumstances of the case are not within the personal knowledge of the complainant, he should state them on his information and belief, and annex the affidavit of the person from whom he obtained the information, or the affidavit of some other person having knowledge of the facts alleged, that the material allegations of the bill are true on his own personal knowledge of the facts.\(^4\)

The bill should contain a specific prayer for an injunction, both as a process and as a part of the relief prayed. An interlocutory injunction will not be granted unless prayed for, either in the original bill, or in a subsequent supplemental pleading.\(^5\) The Court will, however, readily allow the prayer of the bill to be amended so as to pray for injunctive relief, when the facts alleged warrant such relief.

And, finally, the bill must state that it is the first application for an injunction in the case.\(^6\)

2. The Frame of a Bill to Enjoin Proceedings at Law. It is an extraordinary exercise of power on the part of one Court to interfere even indirectly with the proceedings or process of another Court, and the party who asks the Court of Chancery so to do should present all the particulars of the case on which he bases such a request, so that the Chancellor may clearly see from the facts and circumstances detailed in the bill that the inequitable conduct of the defendant justifies injunctive interposition.

The bill for an injunction to stay proceedings at law should show: (1) the nature of the suit at law; (2) the Court in which it is pending; (3) the date of its commencement; (4) the steps taken in it, such as the filing of the declaration, demurrer, plea, etc.; (5) the defences made to the suit, if any, particularizing the nature and matter of the defence, if any has been made, (6) and all the facts which demonstrate that some injustice would be done to the complainant, or that he would be deprived of some legal or equitable right, or of some equitable defence, if his adversary were admitted to proceed to judgment, in the suit at law. If the bill fails to give these details, the injunction ought to be refused.\(^7\)

If the bill be filed after judgment, the complainant should, in addition to the foregoing facts, show: (1) the facts constituting his defence to the suit at law; (2) in what way he was prevented from making that defence, giving the particulars in full; and (3) showing and averring that neither he nor his attorneys were guilty of any negligence or fault in not making the defence. If the ground of injunction be that the defence is an equitable one, or one embarrassed by difficulties and complications, the complainant must show particularly and in detail, (1) wherein the defence is an equitable one, or (2) wherein and how it was embarrassed by difficulties and complications. General and indefinite charges in such cases will not avail; the Court requires specifications of the particular facts relied on.

3. The Frame of a Bill to Stay the Enforcement of a Written Instrument. There is no more solemn act in business dealings between men than a contract duly agreed upon, reduced to writing, and signed; and when a party to such an instrument, especially if it be a deed, mortgage, note of hand, or account stated, is seeking to enforce it, cogent indeed must be the case that will justify a Court or Chancellor in requiring the owner of such instrument to stay his hand. Hence it is that great particularity is required in the frame of a bill praying an injunction in such a case. If fraud be alleged as vitiating the instrument, all the facts and circumstances constituting such fraud must be particularly and fully set forth. If some mistake or accident is alleged as the ground of relief, all the particulars of the mistake or accident must be circumstantially detailed, and it should be further shown that the complainant has been guilty of no neglect or delay in the matter. General allegations of fraud, accident, or mistake amount to nothing in such a case. In hearing parole testimony to reform or rescind deeds, mortgages, notes of hand, accounts stated, and other written instruments, the Chancery Court is violating one of the most sacred rules of the common law, and acting contrary to the presumptions of evidence. Therefore, clear, cogent, particular, precise, and circumstantial should be the allegations of a bill for reformation or rescission; and complainant’s hands must be clean and his feet swift, and any apparent delay in filing his bill must be fully explained.

§ 839. General Form of an Injunction Bill.—An injunction bill frequently has more objects than the obtaining of an injunction, as hereafter shown. An injunction is often only the primary or preliminary object; other relief is desired. A study of the doctrine of relations and the following general form will enable the Solicitor to draw an injunction bill in a precise, lucid and logical manner, and to exhibit his equities and the defendant’s iniquities in bold relief.

GENERAL FORM OF AN INJUNCTION BILL.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§ 155-164.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That [If relations exist between the complainant and defendant, so state and give the particulars.] If no relations exist, begin the bill by alleging complainant’s interest in or title to the property, franchise or right in controversy; describing it with particularity.

II.

That [If relations have been alleged, state what rights accrued to complainant as the result thereof, or what duties were imposed on the defendant. If no relations have been alleged, show how and wherein complainant has been using or enjoying the particular property, franchise or right, in controversy.]

III.

That [If relations exist, show in what way the defendant has violated, is violating or threatens to violate the rights of complainant, or the duties of the defendant, arising from such relations, giving the circumstances with particularity, and the times and places of such violation, and show wherein complainant has been or will be damaged by such violations. If no relations exist, show how, when and where the defendant is interfering with complainant's title, possession or interest, to or in the property, right or franchise in controversy, and specify wherein and how much such interference has injured or will injure the complainant, stating the facts and circumstances with particularity.

IV.

That [If there be any other matter material to the controversy here set it out. If a decree for money is sought and there be any ground to attach the defendant's property, specify such ground, and describe the property if known; and be sure to describe it if complainant has any lien on it, or if it is an equitable estate.]

V.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c., as in § 164.]

2d. That your Honor declare and enforce complainant's rights and equities in the premises, specifying what sort of relief complainant desires, consistent with the facts he has alleged.

3d. That [If a reference to the Master is necessary to take and state an account between the parties, so pray, [see § 600] or if an attachment is desired, pray that an attachment issue [see §§ 871-873]; or if a receiver is desired, pray for the appointment of one [see secs. 905-906], if any other action is desired prior to the hearing, such as an order on the defendant to file certain documents, or the like, so pray, having first laid grounds therefor in the body of the bill.]

4th. That an injunction issue by order of your Honor, to enjoin and restrain the defendant from [doing what complainant does not wish him to do, specifying the inequitable conduct or actions of which complainant specifically complains], and that at the hearing said injunction be made perpetual.

5th. That complainant may be awarded damages for the injuries done to him as hereinbefore set out. [If complainant has not been materially damaged, this prayer will be omitted.] This is the first application for an injunction [or attachment, or receiver,] in this case. [Annex affidavit; see, ante, § 789.]

WALTER COCKE, Solicitor.

An injunction bill should be verified by the oath of the complainant, unless the facts in it are better known to his agent or Solicitor, and then by the one best acquainted with the facts. Where the facts are within the knowledge of another person, and the complainant desires to strengthen his bill against a motion to dissolve the injunction on answer, he may annex the affidavit of such other person to his bill, as follows:

BILL TO ENJOIN SALE UNDER TRUST DEED, HAVE ABSOLUTE DEED DECLARED A MORTGAGE, AND IMPEACH NOTE FOR USURY.18

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§ 155-164.]

Complainants respectfully show to the Court:

That they are husband and wife, and in March, 1903, while in financial distress, he borrowed four hundred dollars from the defendant, for which he gave his note for four hundred and fifty dollars, due in six months, and secured its payment by a deed of trust on their homestead, being the house and lot [or farm] where they live, situated, [locating and describing it; see, ante, § 172.] Complainant, Dove Doe, joined in said note and deed of trust.

II.

That complainants not being able to pay said note at maturity, the defendant advertised said house and lot [or farm] for sale for cash, such being the provision in said deed. Thereupon complainants went to him, and on September 5, 1903, gave him a new note for five hundred and fifty dollars, due in three months, and secured its payment by a new deed of trust on said house and lot [or farm] authorizing him to sell the said property for cash if said note was not paid when due.

That complainants again failing to pay the defendant what said new note called for, said house and lot [or farm] were [or was] again advertised for sale for cash in hand. Complainants again went to see the defendant, and after the defendant had made many threats to force the sale if the note was not paid before the day of sale, and after complainants had secured a reliable prospect to obtain the money, and so informed the defendant, the latter became very friendly and confidential, and told complainants that he would not sell the house and lot, [or farm] but would give them a year's more time to pay said note, if they would deed said house and lot [or farm] to him as security.

Complainants being in great distress, and not knowing what better to do, but hoping for the best, accepted said offer, and on January 13, 1904, by deed duly acknowledged, conveyed said house and lot, [or farm] absolutely to the defendant; and the defendant has had said deed registered, notwithstanding his positive promise not to have it registered within said year, but to return it to complainant unregistered if said debt was paid within said year.

That said house and lot, [or farm] have [or has] become far more valuable in consequence of the building of a railroad in the neighborhood, and complainants were offered fifteen hundred dollars cash for it by a solvent and reliable would-be purchaser, and he and they on March 5, 1904, went to the defendant and tendered him the sum of five hundred and thirty dollars, the full amount of said note, principal and interest, and called for said deed. Thereupon the defendant said the house and lot [or farm] were [or was] his, and exhibited his said absolute deed therefor. After considerable altercation, the defendant offered to deed said house and lot, [or farm] to said would-be purchaser for said fifteen hundred dollars, and give complainants one-half thereof, less the principal and interest of said five hundred dollar note; that is to say, said note was to be deducted from complainants' said half.

That complainants refused to accept said proposition, and the defendant was very much enraged in consequence, and swore he "would have satisfaction yet;" and accordingly on the 28th of this month, March, 1904, he advertised said house and lot [or farm,] for sale under said trust deed, dated September 5, 1903; and such is his litigious reputation, and such the complications in the title from the facts aforesaid, that complainants verily believe and so charge that would-be bidders will be deterred from bidding. On the day said sale was advertised the defendant offered complainants two hundred dollars to surrender to him the possession of said house and lot [or farm,] which offer they rejected.

Complainants continue their said tender of five hundred and thirty dollars, and file said money with this bill.

The premises considered, complainants pray:

1st. That subpena to answer issue [&c., see, ante, §§ 158-164.]

2d. That an injunction issue to restrain and enjoin the defendant from selling or offering to sell, or in any way encumbering, said house and lot, [or farm,] or any part thereof, either under said trust deeds or under said absolute deed.

3d. That all of said deeds be declared null and void, and clouds on their title, and cancelled; but if complainants are not so entitled as to said absolute deed, then that it be declared a mortgage and ordered to be delivered up and cancelled.

4th. That said note for five hundred and fifty dollars be declared usurious, and be abated to the extent of the usury, and that complainants be not held bound or stopped by the amount of their tender, they tendering said amount out of abundant caution, not that they considered that amount honestly and lawfully due, but being in distress tendered all the defendant could claim, hoping he would accept it, and thus terminate their thralldom.

5th. That complainants may have such further and other relief as they may be entitled. This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

§ 841. Frame and Form of a Bill for a Mandatory Injunction.—The frame and form of a bill for a mandatory injunction in no respect differ from the frame and form of a bill for a prohibitory injunction, except in the form of the prayer. In fact, ordinarily, the prayers are of the same nature, as it is customary for a writ of mandatory injunction not to command the defendant to do or undo what is desired, but to prohibit him from allowing it to remain undone or done.\textsuperscript{18a} All the particularity, and positiveness, and directness of allegation, and detail of circumstances, and affidavit of knowledge, required in a prohibitory injunction bill must be observed when a mandatory injunction is sought, for a mandatory injunction is a more stringent remedy, and the bill must present a specially strong case.

BILL FOR MANDATORY INJUNCTION.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§ 155-164]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That he is the owner and in possession of the following tract of land: [Here describe it; see, ante, § 172.] This tract he purchased from the vendor of the defendant, November 13, 1894.

II.

Complainant first took possession of said tract, under a lease from his vendor, and while holding under said lease, built a substantial fence around the entire tract. Said tract is cut off from any public road, the land of the defendant intervening. When complainant purchased said tract his vendor owned and was in possession of all the land now owned by both complainant and defendant. While complainant was his vendor's tenant he used a roadway through his vendor's land leading to the public road, and also used the water from a spring and small creek on his vendor's land; and when complainant took his deed he requested that his right to use said roadway, spring and creek should be recognized, but he was told by his vendor that the word "appurtenances" in the deed was sufficient, and that satisfied him.

III.

That about three months ago, and after complainant and his family had been in free and uninterrupted possession, use and enjoyment of said roadway, spring and creek for more than ten years under his said deed, defendant purchased from complainant's vendor the balance of the latter's land, including the part intervening between complainant's tract and the public highway, on which part are said roadway, spring and creek; and very soon after his purchase he notified complainant that he, complainant, must stop using said roadway, spring and creek, asserting that complainant had no right thereto, and that his, defendant's, deed excepted nothing, and made no mention of complainant's right or liberty to use said roadway, spring and creek.

IV.

That as complainant disregarded said notice, defendant, with a force of hands, erected a very high and strong fence that completely shuts complainant off from said roadway, spring and creek, and thus totally deprives him of water for his family and stock, and of a road by which he and his family can reach the mill, the church, school house, stores, blacksmith shop, and other places of barter, bargain and sale. Complainant has three children of school age, who are thus shut off from school.

V.

That said roadway, spring and creek are so situated that their use by complainant in no way damages the defendant, being in and through a piece of woods half a mile from defendant's house, spring and road; and during the ten years complainant has used said roadway, spring and creek, he has done so exclusively and adversely, under a claim of right, and such right was never questioned by his vendor or any other person, and complainant never supposed that his use of said roadway, spring and creek, was liable to be interrupted or defeated. Complainant paid four hundred dollars for his said tract, and has put valuable improvements thereon since his purchase, hauling the lumber over said roadway, so that the tract is now worth one thousand dollars including said roadway, spring and creek; but is of very little value if said roadway, spring and creek are permanently cut off from it.

VI.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue, [&c., see, ante, §§ 158; 164.]

2d. That a mandatory injunction issue by order of your Honor, requiring and commanding the defendant forthwith to remove said fence and any and all other obstructions to complain-ant’s full and free use of said roadway, spring and creek, for himself, his family, servants, visitors, and stock as before said fence was built; and that defendant be enjoined and prohibited from allowing said obstructions to remain where they now are, and enjoined and prohibited from in any way interfering with or obstructing the full and free use of said roadway, spring and creek by complainant, his family, servants, visitors, and stock.

3d. That complainant be allowed damages for the injury done him by the construction of said fence, and by being shut off from the use of said roadway, spring and creek, as aforesaid.

4th. That complainant have such other and further relief as he may be entitled to.

This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

WILL A. McTEER, Solicitor.

[Annex affidavit; see, ante, § 789.]

FIAT FOR A MANDATORY INJUNCTION.

To the Clerk and Master at Maryville:

On this bill being filed, issue a writ of injunction, as prayed therein, on complainant giving bond therefor, as required by law. Let the writ inhibit and restrain the defendant, his agents and servants from continuing the obstructions mentioned, and from allowing them to remain as such, and from in any way obstructing or interfering with the full and free use and enjoyment of the roadway, spring and creek by the complainant, his family, servants, visitors, and stock.

November 13, 1905. HUGH G. KYLE, Chancellor.

Or the fiat may be in the following form, which, while not so usual, is more consistent with the principles of Equity, and is growing in favor:

FIAT FOR A MANDATORY INJUNCTION.

To the Clerk and Master at Maryville:

File this bill, and, on a proper injunction bond being given, issue a writ of injunction as prayed, commanding the defendant, his agents and servants, forthwith to remove the fence complained of, and prohibiting him and them from in any way obstructing or interfering with the full and free use and enjoyment of the said roadway, spring and creek by the complainant, his family, servants, visitors, and stock.

November 13, 1905. HUGH G. KYLE, Chancellor.

§ 842. Frame of an Answer to an Injunction Bill.—If the defendant is content to submit to the injunction, he may answer so much of the bill as is a pleading; but, if he wishes to have the injunction dissolved or modified, he must, also, answer so much of the bill as is an affidavit. In such a case, the answer becomes both a pleading and a counter affidavit; and, in its character as a counter affidavit, it must specifically, directly, fully, and cogently meet and deny the particular facts and pertinent details averred in the bill. If there be explanatory or exculpatory facts and circumstances, suppressed in the bill, they should be fully set forth. If there be writings throwing light on the controversy they must be exhibited. Every matter in the knowledge of the defendant, relating to the wrongs alleged in the bill, must be fully and frankly disclosed. The allegations and denials must be on the personal knowledge of the defendant, and the answer should so show on its face. Every Equity set up in the bill must be squarely and unhesitatingly met, and overwhelmed; not by general averments or by sweeping denials, but by taking up each material allegation in the bill and showing its falsity, or reconciling it with the defendant’s innocence, or showing that the complainant has misconstrued it, or distorted it, or garbled it. And when the affidavit portion of the bill has been thus completely met, the defendant must swear to the answer positively, and on his own knowledge, and the affidavit to his answer must so show.

PLEADINGS IN INJUNCTION SUITS.

ANSWER: AND CROSS BILL IN AN INJUNCTION SUIT.
[For title and commencement, see, ante, § 405.]

John Doe and wife, Doe Doe, vs. Richard Roe.

The defendant, Richard Roe, for answer and cross-bill to the bill filed against him in said cause, says:

I. That he admits that complainant borrowed the four hundred dollars from him as alleged in the 1st paragraph of their bill, and gave him the note and trust deed as alleged, to secure its repayment; but they neglect to state that the other fifty dollars was a fee paid him for examining the title to the land, drawing the trust deed, and attending to the discharge of a prior trust deed and note given to another party, and also as a bonus for said loan, all of which defendant avers are the real facts, and complainants willingly and cheerfully agreed thereto, and gave said four hundred and fifty dollar note and said trust deed understandingly, willingly and gladly, for it enabled them to save their home.

Further answering, defendant admits the 2d paragraph of the bill to be true, but complainants fail to state that said five hundred dollar note includes the interest on the prior note, the defendant's fee for drawing the new trust deed, and a note for twenty dollars and accrued interest held by defendant on complainant John Doe, and ten dollars cash advanced to complainants at the time, which defendant says are the real facts of the transaction; and he says that said five hundred dollar note and new trust deed were executed willingly, freely and understandingly, and complainant, Doe Doe, was privily examined as to said deed; all of which will more fully appear by reference to said deed, which is made an exhibit to this answer, and marked A.

Further answering, the defendant denies the whole of the 3d and 4th paragraphs of the bill, except so much thereof as alleges the advertisement of said property for cash, and the subsequent delivery of an absolute deed for said house and lot, [or farm,] to defendant. The facts are that complainants were completely at the mercy of defendant, and instead of foreclosing the trust deed, and buying in the property, as would most probably have been the result, the defendant without any extra charge for drawing the deed and without requiring a new note for principal and interest, gave complainants further time to pay the debt. But he denies that there was any definite contract as to withholding said deed from registration, or giving them a year's time to pay the debt, defendant's understanding being that they might pay the debt any time before the deed was registered.

Further answering, defendant denies the statements in the 5th paragraph of the bill in manner and form as charged, and says the real facts are that defendant obtained a purchaser for said house and lot, [or farm,] which he admits has increased in value, but when said would-be purchaser found complainants in possession thereof, and setting up a claim thereto, he proposed to trade with them for a much less sum, and he offered defendant the sum of five hundred and thirty dollars in payment of said five hundred dollar note and demanded a deed to him for the land, all of which defendant refused, as he believed he had the right to do. Defendant did offer to sell said property to said proposing purchaser for fifteen hundred dollars, and to divide the money as alleged in the bill; but this they refused to accept. Defendant made said offer out of compassion for the complainants, and not because he recognized any right on their part to any portion thereof.

Further answering, defendant denies the charges in the 6th paragraph of the bill in manner and form as charged, but he admits that he is offering to sell said property under said second trust deed, and that he, through a third person, offered complainants two hundred dollars to surrender the possession of said property to him, and he did this to quiet his title and prevent a law suit, and he is advised he had a right so to do.

Further answering, defendant denies all and singular the allegations in said bill not herebefore specifically admitted, and says they are not true. And now having fully answered said bill, the defendant files this, his answer, as a cross-bill, and the premises considered, prays:

Ist. That subpoena to answer issue, requiring the complainants in the original bill to answer this cross-bill; but their oath to their answer is waived.
2d. That in the event said deed be declared a mortgage, it or said second trust deed, be foreclosed, and said house and lot, [or farm,] sold on a credit of six months, in bar of redemption, to satisfy said five hundred dollar note and the accrued interest; and
3d. That he be given such other and further relief as he may be entitled to.

SAM C. BROWN, Solicitor.

19 This answer is under oath, defendant's oath not having been waived by the bill.
20 This answer and cross bill is the defence set up to the bill in § 840, ante.
21 This relief could, probably, be had on the answer, but a cross bill is safer. See, ante, §§ 400; 728-729; 732-733.

§ 844. Reliefs Granted in an Injunction Suit.—The primary object of a bill of injunction is to stay the hand of the defendant, and the ordinary aim of the defendant is to shake the injunction loose, but there are often other reliefs obtainable.

1. Reliefs Granted the Complainant. The complainant by his bill obtains, ordinarily, various reliefs: 1st, he obtains a temporary injunction against the acts of the defendant complained of; 2d, Whatever legal or equitable claims, if any, he has against the defendant, he can have adjudicated, and a proper decree therefor; 3d, If he has been injured by the trespasses, or other wrongs enjoined, he can obtain compensation or damages therefor; and 4th, If a perpetual injunction is necessary he can have his temporary injunction made perpetual at the hearing.

2. Reliefs Granted the Defendant. Equity delights in putting an end to litigation, and strives in one and the same suit to determine all the matters involved in the controversy, so that no other or second suit, either at law or in Chancery, may be necessary. If, therefore, the bill enjoins the enforcement of an execution, judgment, lien, mortgage, or deed of trust, or the collection of a note, account, or other claim or equity, or the assertion of rights or claims to specific property, the defendant on setting forth his claims and equities fully, clearly and particularly, either in an answer filed as a cross bill, or in a separate cross bill, may have a cross decree against the complainant for whatever may be due him, and have his lien, if any, enforced by the sale of the property bound thereby, or may have his rights to the specific property declared and enforced. If the defendant has been injured by the injunction he may obtain damages therefor, without a cross bill, on motion and reference to the Master, at the final hearing.

Supposing the allegations in the foregoing bill to enjoin a sale under a trust deed have been substantiated by the proof, and having regard to the prayer of the answer and cross bill to said bill, the decree in the cause would be as follows:

DECREE GRANTING RELIEF AND COUNTER RELIEF.

John Doe and wife, Dove Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe.

This cause was heard this December 14, 1904, before Chancellor Hugh G. Kyle, on the original bill, the answer and cross-bill, the proof in the cause, including the various notes and deeds referred to in the pleadings, the instanter report of the Master and the exceptions thereto, and upon argument of counsel, from all which, the Chancellor being of opinion that the absolute deed executed and delivered on January 13, 1904, superseded the two deeds of trust and was intended as a mortgage, doth so declare and decree; and the Chancellor being further of opinion that the five hundred dollar note, referred to in the pleadings, is usurious, and that the lawful amount due thereon, according to the instanter report of the Master, which is confirmed and all exceptions thereto overruled, is the sum of four hundred and sixty dollars, principal and legal interest, doth so declare and decree; and the Chancellor being further of opinion that Richard Roe, the complainant in the cross-bill, is entitled to have said absolute deed enforced as a mortgage, doth so declare and decree.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed, that unless said sum of four hundred and sixty dollars, and accruing interest, and one-half of the costs of this cause are paid into Court by the complainants within sixty days from this day, the Clerk and Master will sell to the

§ 846. The Effect of an Injunction.

§ 845. When an Injunction Becomes Effective.—An injunction becomes effective as to the party enjoined only from the time of actual notice. But to render an injunction binding and operative upon a defendant, it is not necessary that he should have been officially apprised of its existence, or actually served with the writ. If the defendant has heard the order of the Court granting an injunction, or has in any manner received actual notice of its existence, he is as effectually bound by its provisions as if actually served with process. So, if an injunction has been properly granted, it will be effective if served upon defendants beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, or the limits of the State, it only being necessary that they should be apprised of the order of the Court to render it binding.¹

§ 846. The Effect of an Injunction.—An injunction operates in personam, and binds the defendant, his Solicitors, attorneys, agents and servants, and renders it unlawful for them to do the act therein prohibited,² or to fail to do the act therein commanded. If the act prohibited be nevertheless done, the Court will deal with it as though not done, unless the rights of innocent third persons prevent, and then the defendant is liable to make indemnity for his unlawful act.³ A judgment taken in violation of an injunction will be perpetually enjoined on petition in the cause wherein the injunction was granted.⁴

If an injunction be issued on a misstatement of facts, or without the requisite conditions precedent, the defendant must, nevertheless, obey it until he can obtain its dissolution, or discharge; or he will be punished for his contempt.⁵ The inadvertent grant of an injunction neither makes it void, nor impairs its efficacy.⁶

If the injunction stays proceedings at law, no further step can be taken, unless the fiat or a subsequent decree so allow.⁷ But the suing out of an injunction against a judgment at law is a release of errors;⁸ and if the complainant's bill is dismissed, he cannot further contest the judgment at law by prosecuting an appeal from such judgment, or by writ of error, or otherwise.

An injunction, restraining a sale of personality levied on under an execution, has the effect of releasing the levy, and restoring the property to the defendant’s possession.

If the officer sells notwithstanding the injunction, he may be held liable for the value of the property, and is punishable for contempt.

A perpetual injunction, granted at the hearing, is a decree, and it continues operative notwithstanding the death of the parties to the suit, and its violation is punishable whenever committed.

§ 847. What Constitutes a Violation of an Injunction.—The Chancery Court exacts the most implicit obedience from those against whom its mandates are directed. It matters not what irregularities may affect the proceedings, nor what error the Court, or Judge, may have committed in granting the injunction, nor what the hardship obedience thereto will impose on the defendant; so long as the injunction is in force it must be scrupulously observed, and implicitly obeyed. And the defendant is not allowed to sit in judgment on the equity of the bill, or on the righteousness of the writ, or upon the jurisdiction of the Court; his one duty is to obey. If the writ has been improvidently granted, instead of complaining of it, or violating it in any way, the defendant should at once apply for its modification, or dissolution. It matters not what the intent of the defendant was, in case of any violation of the injunction; nor what honest motives may have prompted his conduct; if the command of the writ has been violated, disregarded, or evaded, the defendant is guilty of contempt, and will be punished accordingly. Even the advice of counsel is no protection or excuse; it only makes another contemnor.

The defendant is bound to obey the injunction in both its letter and its spirit, even in the smallest matters; he is not allowed to judge whether this or that is immaterial or unimportant. Nor is he allowed to permit another to violate the injunction without remonstrance; he must not only obey the writ himself, but he must restrain his employees, servants, tenants, agents, and attorneys, if in his power so to do. An officer executing final process for the defendant’s benefit is deemed his agent.

A defendant is bound by the injunction from the moment he learns of its existence, regardless of the means of information. Notice by letter, telegram, word of mouth, or other means, will be sufficient to bind him. If, after such notice, he does any act violative of the spirit of the injunction, he is as guilty as though he had been previously notified by the Sheriff. He cannot shield himself, in such a case, under the pretext that the writ had not been served on him, or had been defectively served.

§ 848. How a Violation of an Injunction is Punished.—Violations of injunctions are punished by process of contempt. The mode of proceeding is elsewhere described. The object of the proceeding for contempt is twofold; first, to punish the guilty parties; secondly, to compel restitution to the party injured. The person violating an injunction may be imprisoned until the wrong done is rectified, by placing matters and persons in statu quo, or by the payment of damages, and, in estimating these damages, regard may be had to any circumstances of aggravation or mitigation, attending the disobedience of the injunction. Where the violation of the injunction is wilful, and results in serious injury to the complainant, the defendant will be onerated with all losses, and the damages allowed may be such as to combine punishment for the violation with compensation to the party injured. The damages should be assessed by a jury if requested by either party; but in the absence of such request, they may be assessed by the Master on a reference.

If a perpetual injunction by the Supreme Court, on final decree, is violated after the death of the complainant, it would be necessary for his heirs to file a bill of revivor and supplement in the Chancery Court wherein the cause originated; the Supreme Court would have no jurisdiction of such bill.

THE DISSOLUTION OF INJUNCTIONS.

§ 849. Dissolution of Injunctions generally Considered.

§ 850. Dissolution for Want of Equity on the Face of the Bill.

§ 851. Dissolution on Bill and Answer.

§ 852. When an Injunction Will not be Dissolved on Bill and Answer.

§ 853. Dissolution for Want of Diligence in Prosecuting the Suit.

§ 854. When, Where, and How Injunctions are Dissolved.

§ 855. Proceedings on the Hearing of a Motion to Dissolve.

§ 856. When Affidavits May be Read on a Motion to Dissolve.

§ 857. The Discretion of the Court, How Exercised on Motions to Dissolve.

§ 849. Dissolution of Injunctions generally Considered.—An interlocutory injunction will be dissolved: 1, Where there is a want of equity on the face of the bill to support the injunction; 2, Where the statements in the bill on which its Equity rests are fully met, and wholly overcome, by the positive denials of the answer; or 3, Where there has been a want of diligence on the part of the complainant in the prosecution of his suit.

If an injunction was granted (1) on an unsworn bill, or (2) on a bill that did not state it was the first application for an injunction; or (3) if the writ was issued after the time fixed by the fiat, or the rules of the Court, for filing a bond had expired, such an injunction may be discharged, on motion, for irregularity.

If a defendant deem the injunction oppressive for any reason, he should at once make proper application for its dissolution, or modification; and so, if a person, not a party to the suit, be injuriously affected by the injunction, he may apply by petition to have it set aside, or modified so as not to affect him.

An injunction will not be dissolved because of a defect or deficiency in the injunction bond, or any mere technical errors that can be amended.

The dismissal of the bill operates ipso facto as a dissolution of the interlocutory injunction based upon it. And if, at the hearing on the merits, a permanent injunction is denied, the preliminary injunction is necessarily terminated; although the better practice is to have it expressly dissolved in the final decree. When, on a final decree, an injunction is dissolved, an appeal from such decree reinstates the injunction.

28 Foley v. Leath, 3 Shan. Cas., 353.
The three principal grounds of motions to dissolve are: (1) want of equity, (2) denial of the equity alleged, and (3) want of diligence in prosecuting the suit; they will be separately considered.

§ 850. Dissolution for Want of Equity on the Face of the Bill.—If the bill be so devoid of equity that, if admitted by the answer to be true, all injunctive relief would be denied at the hearing, the Court will, on motion and without any answer, dissolve the injunction granted on such a bill. A motion to dissolve an injunction, for want of equity on the face of the bill, is in the nature of a demurrer, and all the material allegations of the bill relied on, as ground for an injunction, are taken as true, and will be given a construction favorable to the relief prayed for. And an injunction will not be dissolved for want of equity on the face of the bill, if the bill disclose merits, even though its allegations be obscure, and the frame of the bill be unnatural. If the bill be devoid of equity on its face, the injunction will be dissolved on motion, and the defendant need not wait for service of subpoena on him before making the motion.

§ 851. Dissolution on Bill and Answer.—As heretofore shown, an injunction bill is both a pleading and an affidavit; and a sworn answer is, also, both a pleading and an affidavit. The affidavit part of the bill is in the nature of evidence on which to obtain ex parte interlocutory relief; and the affidavit part of the answer is in the nature of a deposition for all the purposes of the suit.

When, therefore, a motion is made to dissolve an interlocutory injunction on bill and answer, there comes a struggle for mastery between the affidavit of the complainant and the affidavit of the defendant; it is oath against oath. In such a contest, every allegation of fact in the bill not met and denied in the answer is deemed to be true; and every allegation on the complainant's own knowledge is deemed to be true, when not substantially denied on the defendant's own knowledge. Positive affirmative averments, made on complainant’s own knowledge, cannot be overcome either (1) by silence, or (2) by evasion, or (3) by feeble denials on personal knowledge, or (4) by positive denials on information and belief, or (5) by setting up new matters by way of avoidance.

On the other hand, an answer, made on the defendant’s own personal knowledge, will overcome the allegations of a bill made or sworn to on information and belief.

On the hearing of a motion to dissolve an injunction on bill and answer, the answer must be sworn to; for an answer not sworn to will not sustain a motion to dissolve, however strong its denials. If the oath of the defendant to his answer is waived, he may, nevertheless, swear to it for the purpose of having the injunction dissolved; and this he may do without leave of the Court. If the defendant is a corporation, and has answered under its corporate seal, such answer will not sustain the motion; the answer must be sworn to by some officer, agent, or member, of the corporation personally acquainted with the facts set up in the answer; and his affidavit to the truth of the bill must show this personal acquaintance, and should not be on information and belief. 14

To sustain a motion to dissolve an injunction on bill and answer, the answer must not only be sworn to, but it must also be positive, direct, and full, and based on the personal knowledge of the defendant, and must broadly confront and wholly deny all the material facts upon which the equity of the bill is founded. On such an answer, the injunction will ordinarily be dissolved; 15 for positive and full denials, based on personal knowledge of the facts, will neutralize positive allegations. 16

If the allegations of the bill are based wholly, or in part, on information and belief, such allegations cannot stand against the positive denial of the defendant on his own personal knowledge. On the other hand, if the statements of the bill are made on the personal knowledge of the complainant, and sworn to as such, ineffectual will be the denials of the defendant, made on information and belief. 17

It is a general rule that the answers of all the material defendants must be in and perfected, before an injunction will be dissolved on bill and answer; but if the defendant, on whom the gravamen of the charge rests, has fully answered, that may be sufficient. It is settled, also, that if the complainant has been negligent in having the subpoena served on a part of the defendants, or in compelling them to answer, those who have answered may have the injunction dissolved on their answers alone, if otherwise entitled. 18

The burden of disproving the equities of the bill rests upon the defendant; and if, upon the hearing, a reasonable doubt exists in the mind of the Court as to whether the Equity of the bill is overcome by the answer, the injunction will not be dissolved, but will be continued until the hearing. 19

The fact that a sworn answer has been excepted to for insufficiency will not prevent a dissolution of the injunction, on bill and answer, if in fact the answer is sufficient. But the Chancellor may look at the exceptions on the hearing of the motion to dissolve. 20

§ 852. When an Injunction will not be Dissolved on Bill and Answer.—An answer will not sustain a motion to dissolve (1) if it be weak in its denials, or (2) be on information and belief, or (3) be evasive, or (4) contradictory, or (5) if its statements are extremely improbable, or (6) if any material allegation of the bill is not denied, or (7) if the answer to any essential part of the bill is unsatisfactory, or (8) if the answer is insufficient in important particulars; or (9) where the answer admits the Equity of the bill, and sets up new matter in avoidance; or (10) where fraud is the gravamen of the bill; 21 or (11) where the dissolution of the injunction would work very great mischief to the complainant; or (12) where the injunction is the real remedial part of the bill; or (13) where the dissolution of the injunction involves a decision of the cause on its merits, or (14) where a dissolution would be equivalent to a decision of the case against the complainant. 22

16 Much depends on the frame of the pleadings. If the bill be weak, indirect, or alternative in its allegations; or if its statements are indefinite, general, or limited by qualifications, it will be overcome by an answer that has the opposite characteristics; and so, an answer that is deficient in positiveness, directness, clearness, frankness, and precision, will be ineffectual to overcome a bill whose allegations are strong, positive, direct and precise. Before the injunction will be dissolved, the answer must swear away the equity which is its life.

On a struggle between the bill and the answer, the victory depends on the fullness, frankness, and savor of the truth, manifest in one rather than in the other. A literal, formal, technical denial of the charges, especially if made seriatim, lacks the flavor of that earnest candor which is an essential of truth. The answer must do more than deny the facts of the bill in manner and form as alleged; the substance of the charge must be met and traversed.

§ 853. Dissolution for Want of Diligence in Prosecuting the Suit.—He who invokes and obtains the aid of so tremendous a power as the writ of injunction, is bound to exercise the greatest possible diligence in doing all that is required of him in the prosecution of his suit; and if he fail so to do, the injunction will, on motion, be dissolved, unless there be specially strong reasons to the contrary. The principal instances of want of diligence are the following (1) where the complainant, after flat granted, fails in a reasonable time to give bond, or otherwise comply with the conditions precedent contained in the flat; (2) where the injunction bond is, or becomes, for any reason insufficient, and the defect is not remedied in a reasonable time after order made; (3) when the complainant fails to prepare his case for hearing with due speed, either by failing to bring the defendants before the Court, or by failing to make the necessary parties, or by failing to take or file his proof in due season, or by failing to keep the suit properly revived.23

§ 854. When, and Where, and How, Injunctions are Dissolved.—An injunction may be dissolved or modified on motion, at any time after the granting of the flat, such motion being based either upon a want of equity on the face of the bill, or upon the bill and answer.24 The motion to dissolve or modify may be made in term time, in open Court; or, if the Court be not in session, it may be made before the Chancellor of the Division in which the bill is filed, at Chambers.25 If the motion is in open Court, one day's notice thereof would be sufficient;26 if the motion is in vacation, five days' notice thereof must be given to the complainant, or his Solicitor.27 The notice must, in all cases, state upon what the motion is based, whether for want of equity on the face of the bill, or upon bill and answer.28 The following is a form of

vs.

C. D.

Mr. A B:

At 10 a. m., on the 9th day of this month, (August,) before the Hon. H. J. Livingston, Chancellor, at his Chambers, in the Court House at Trenton, Tenn., I will move that the injunction in said cause be dissolved, [or, modified;] which motion will be based on the want of equity on the face of the bill, [or, on bill and answer.]29

August 4, 1890.

C D.

A final decree dismissing the bill operates, ipso facto, as a complete dissolution of the injunction; and a formal order of dissolution is unnecessary.30

§ 855. Proceedings on the Hearing of the Motion to Dissolve.—At the time and place specified in the notice of the motion, when to be made at Chambers, the defendant appears with a certified copy of the bill, or of the bill and answer, according as the motion is based on the want of equity in the bill, or on bill and answer. If the complainant be present he reads the bill, if not present the defendant reads both bill and answer, and makes his argument in support of his motion. If both sides be present, the defendant will open and conclude the argument.31 The Chancellor endorses his decision ordinarily on the notice, or writes it upon a separate sheet of paper, in substance as follows:

23 A want of diligence on complainant's part is always a cause for dissolving an injunction. 2 Dan. Ch. Ped. 1697; 1698; 2 Barb. Ch. Pr., 639; 1 High on Injunc, §§ 1490; 1504. A complainant in an injunction suit should be held to a degree of diligence proportionate to the stringency of the injunction; and no continuance should be allowed him after he has had reasonable time to get in his proof, except on a dissolution of the injunction. Much should be required by the Court of those who require much of the Court.
24 Ch. Rule, VI, § 2; post, 1195; Code, §§ 4444-4445.

§ 856. When Affidavits may be Read on a Motion to Dissolve.—On the hearing of a motion to dissolve an injunction, the complainant will, ordinarily, be allowed to read affidavits, to corroborate his bill and rebut the answer, in the following cases: (1) where the dissolution of the injunction would work very great mischief to the complainant; or (2) where the injunction is the real remedial part of the bill; or (3) where the dissolution of the injunction involves a decision of the cause on its merits. In such cases, the hearing of the motion is equivalent in effect to a hearing of the cause; and the dissolution of the injunction, on such a hearing, would be more injurious to the complainant than the dismissal of his bill, and consequent dissolution of the injunction, at the final hearing, for then he could appeal, and thus continue the injunction until final decree in the Supreme Court.

§ 857. The Discretion of the Court, how Exercised on Motions to Dissolve. Upon an application to dissolve an injunction, the Court or Chancellor will

Whether, and by whom, affidavits may be read on the hearing of a motion to dissolve on the bill and answer, are questions not definitely settled; but, on principle, the true rule would seem to be this: if an answer on oath has been called for, and a discovery is sought, no affidavits should be allowed to be read by either party; but, if the defendant's oath to his answer is waived, the complainant should be allowed to rebut his answer by affidavits; and counter-affidavits should not be heard, unless perhaps, to bring forward facts not known to the defendant when he filed his answer. The reason of this rule is, that if the complainant elects to make a witness of the defendant, he should be bound by his answer; whereas, if the defendant voluntarily swears to his answer when his oath has been waived, the complainant should have the right to contradict him. If affidavits and counter-affidavits may be read, in any case, the hearing of the motion expands into a hearing of the cause, and this would not be proper or expedient, unless the parties agree that the decision of the motion may be equivalent to the decision of the cause.

weigh the relative convenience and inconvenience which would arise from its continuance, or its dissolution; and if upon such weighing, it appears that the continuance of the injunction is likely to work less mischief than would result from its dissolution, the motion to dissolve will be overruled.\(^{40}\) If there is a probable right, and a probable danger to that right without the intervention of the Court through its injunctive process, the injunction ought not to be interfered with.\(^{41}\) A dissolution sought upon a pure question of law should not be granted, unless the question is plain beyond a reasonable doubt.\(^{42}\) After all, the true rule in deciding motions to dissolve seems to be to do what a sound discretion requires.\(^{43}\)

In continuing an injunction, the Chancellor may require of the complainant additional security, or a bond with new and enlarged conditions;\(^{44}\) or may dissolve the injunction on the defendant giving a bond to indemnify the complainant in case the latter obtains a decree. Whenever the ground of the injunction is mainly the insolvency of the defendant or the failure of the defendant to pay a price, or a debt, the Chancellor will ordinarily dissolve the injunction on the defendant, giving a bond to satisfy the final decree in the cause, if against him. And, in general, it may be stated that when there is a reasonable doubt whether the injunction is necessary to protect the rights of the complainant, the injunction will be continued, for the burden rests on the defendant of satisfying the Court that the injunction should be dissolved.\(^{45}\)

\section*{§ 858. The Effect of a Dissolution, and of a Refusal to Dissolve.}—If the injunction is the substantive relief sought, then its dissolution may operate as practically a decision of the cause; although the final decree may not be pronounced until a subsequent day or term. Nevertheless, if the defendant has answered, and an injunction at the hearing will be of any benefit, the complainant may proceed to prove his case; and, if, at the hearing, he shows himself entitled to an injunction, it will then be granted.

On the other hand, if the injunction is merely collateral to the main object of the suit, or merely ancillary to the relief sought, the dissolution of the injunction does not affect the merits, and the suit proceeds as though no injunction had ever been granted and dissolved; and if, at the hearing, the complainant shows himself entitled to an injunction, the Court will then award the writ.

And if, in either of the foregoing cases, a new and sufficient cause of injunction arises before the hearing, a new interlocutory injunction may be obtained on application by petition, setting up in detail the facts constituting the new ground of injunction.\(^{46}\) But the injunction will not be reinstated on the old ground, simply because the complainant alleges in his petition that he has lately discovered new evidence in support of his bill.\(^{47}\)

If a dissolution of the injunction is refused, the suit proceeds as though the motion to dissolve had not been made.\(^{48}\) If a new and sufficient ground of dissolution subsequently arises, a new motion to dissolve may be made on such ground. The refusal to dissolve does not in any way prejudice the defendant’s rights at the hearing.

The effect of a total dissolution on the defendant is to restore him to every right of which the injunction deprived him; and he may proceed as though no injunction had been granted.\(^ {49}\) If the injunction, however, is dissolved in part only, the defendant is restored to such rights only as the dissolution gives; the balance of the injunction remaining in full force.

ARTICLE VII.

INJUNCTION AND REFUNDING BONDS, AND THEIR BREACH.

§ 859. Injunction Bonds Generally Considered.

§ 861. Refunding Bonds.

§ 859. Injunction Bonds generally Considered.—Before issuing the writ of injunction, it is the duty of the Clerk and Master to take from the complainant both a prosecution and an injunction bond, unless the suit is prosecuted on the pauper oath, in which case an injunction bond may, also, be dispensed with, if the flat so allow. If the suit be to enjoin a judgment at law, the penalty of the bond shall be double the judgment or sum sought to be enjoined, and in all other cases the penalty will be five hundred dollars, unless the flat designate some other amount.\(^1\) In cases where the statute does not prescribe the conditions of the bond, the Judge may, in his flat specify those conditions.\(^2\)

In taking an injunction bond in obedience to a flat, the Master is doing a judicial act; and the bond, when accepted, even though not acknowledged before him, becomes invested with the verity and force of a record.\(^3\)

Whenever the security on any injunction bond is to be taken in any county other than that in which the Court is held, the Clerk and Master may appoint a commissioner in the county where the security is to be taken to judge of the sufficiency of the bond and security, and to take the same as he himself might do.\(^4\)

§ 860. Form of Injunction Bonds.—All injunction bonds are made payable to the defendant, and should be in the penalty prescribed by law, or the flat of the Chancellor. The following are the statutory forms:

AN INJUNCTION BOND.

[After judgment at Law.]

We, A B, [the complainant.] C D and E F, [his sureties.] acknowledge ourselves indebted to G H, [the defendant.] in the penal sum of one thousand dollars;\(^5\) but this obligation shall be void, if the said A B shall pay the amount of the judgment at law sought to be enjoined in the Chancery Court at Memphis, in the case of said A B against said G H, with interest, damages, and costs, or shall perform the decree of the said Court, in case the injunction is dissolved, and shall also pay such damages as may be sustained by the wrongfull spring out of the injunction.\(^6\)

[To be duly dated, signed, and witnessed.]

INJUNCTION BOND.

[Before judgment at Law.\(^7\)]

We, A B, [the complainant.] C D and E F, [his sureties.] acknowledge ourselves indebted... to G. H. [the defendant.] In the penal sum of five hundred dollars; but this obligation shall be void, if the said A B shall pay all costs and damages awarded by the Chancery Court, on dismissing the bill filed by said A B against said G H, in said Court, if the same shall be dismissed. [To be duly dated, signed, and witnessed.]

This bond will be appropriate for all injunction suits, except those brought to enjoin a judgment at law already rendered. Either of the foregoing bonds can also be made a prosecution bond by adding to its conditions the following or similar words: and shall, also, pay any and all costs that may at any time be adjudged against the said A B, in said suit.

§ 861. Refunding Bonds.—Where a refunding bond will fully indemnify the complainant, and where the defendant’s answer fully meets and denies the equities alleged in the bill, the Court will, as a rule, dissolve the injunction, on the defendant executing such a bond. Such a bond should be required in every case, where an injunction is dissolved before the hearing, and there is reason to believe the parties will not be in statu quo at the hearing.

If an interlocutory injunction to stay proceedings on a judgment at law for money be dissolved, the Code makes it the duty of the Chancellor to require of the defendant a refunding bond, in a penalty double the amount of the sum allowed to be collected, payable to the complainant, and conditioned to refund the amount collected, if so ordered on final hearing; and the Court may render a decree upon such bond against any or all of the parties executing the same.

In such a case the form of the order dissolving the injunction may be as follows:

ORDER DISSOLVING AN INJUNCTION ON A REFUNDING BOND.

A B, vs. C D.

In this case, the motion of the defendant to dissolve the injunction on bill and answer having been heard, this Aug. 16, 1890, on consideration thereof, and it appearing that the answer fully meets and denies the whole equity of the bill, it is ordered by the Court that said injunction be dissolved, upon the defendant giving a refunding bond in the penal sum of nine hundred dollars, with at least two good sureties.

The following is a form of refunding bond proper to be executed in such a case:

A REFUNDING BOND.

We, C D, [the defendant], E F and G H, [his sureties], acknowledge ourselves indebted to A B, [the complainant], in the penal sum of nine hundred dollars; but this obligation to be void if the said C D refund to said A B the amount collected on the judgment mentioned in the bill of said A B against said C D, in the Chancery Court at Memphis, with interest, if so ordered by said Court on final hearing, or otherwise comply with the final decree of said Court, in reference to the money so collected. [To be duly dated, signed, and witnessed.]

8 The penalty will be such sum as the Chancellor, Judge, or Court, granting the injunction shall order, and if no sum be named, then the penalty shall be five hundred dollars. Code, § 4440.
9 Code, § 4439, sub-sec. 2; Rogan v. Aiken, 9 Lea, 623. In neither of the foregoing bonds is it any part of the condition that the injunction suits be prosecuted with effect. The statute does not recognize any such condition, and it is, besides, mere useless verbiage, the payment of costs in Chancery not depending on the successful prosecution of a suit. Sec. ante, § 181.
10 Rogan v. Aiken, 9 Lea, 623.
11 The following short form of a bond would seem to be fully sufficient in all injunction or attachment suits, to cover all possible cases, costs included.

SHORT FORM OF BOND.

A B, vs. C D.

We acknowledge ourselves the sureties of the complainant in the above named suit, and agree to pay all costs, damages, interest, and other sums, that may at any time be lawfully adjudged against said complainant, in said cause, either for wrongfully suing out the injunction, [or, attachment] prayed for, or for any other cause. [Dated, signed by the sureties, and witnessed as in § 181, ante.]
12 Davis v. Fulton, 1 Tenn. (Overt.), 121; Moorock v. Williams, 1 Tenn., (Overt.), 325.
13 Code, § 4448.
14 The penalty must be in double the sum allowed to be collected. The sum to be collected is generally the whole judgment, but the order sometimes allows only a part of the judgment to be collected. The following is another form of a refunding bond:

We, C D, [the defendant] E F and G H [the sureties], acknowledge ourselves indebted, and firmly bound, unto A B, [the complainant] in the sum of one thousand dollars.

The condition of the above obligation is such that;
§ 862. Remedies on Injunction and Refunding Bonds.—When proceedings on a judgment for money is enjoined in whole or in part, the object of the law in requiring the complainant to give a bond to pay said judgment if the injunction is dissolved is, to secure the speedy payment of the judgment, in case of such dissolution.\textsuperscript{15} When, therefore, such an injunction is dissolved, whether by an interlocutory order, or by a final decree, such order or decree is required to contain a judgment on said bond against the complainant and his sureties for such amount as the Court may order,\textsuperscript{16} being generally the amount of the judgment enjoined, and the interest thereon.

In cases other than injunctions to stay proceedings on a judgment for money, if the injunction be dissolved either by an interlocutory order or by the final decree, the defendant may, in the final decree, or in a subsequent order at the same term, have a reference to the Master, or a trial by jury, to ascertain the damages suffered by the defendant in consequence of the wrongful suing out of the injunction.\textsuperscript{17} Such a reference may be in the final decree immediately following the adjudication upon the merits, thus:

REFERENCE TO THE MASTER.

\textit{After giving the style of the cause, and the final decree in full, then add:} And it appearing to the Court that an injunction bond was given in this case by the complainant A B, with C D and E F as his sureties, in the penal sum of one thousand dollars, conditioned to pay such costs and damages as this Court may award on dismissing the bill, and the defendant suggesting that he has suffered damages by reason of the injunction sued out in this cause, on his motion, the Master is directed to hear proof, including the proof on file, and report to the present [or, next] term:

1st. The amount of damages, if any, sustained by the defendant by reason of the suing out of the injunction in this case.\textsuperscript{18}

In like manner, if it should turn out at the hearing that the bill to enjoin a judgment was properly filed, and if a refunding bond was given on dissolving the injunction, the Court may, in the final decree, render a judgment on such bond against any or all the parties executing it, for the amount of the judgment collected from the complainant, and interest thereon.\textsuperscript{19} Such judgment may follow the decree on the merits sustaining the bill, thus:

JUDGMENT ON REFUNDING BOND.

\textit{After giving the style of the cause, and the final decree in full, then add:} And it appearing to the Court that the sum of four hundred dollars was collected from the complainant on said judgment, after the interlocutory injunction was dissolved; and that the defendant gave a bond, with E F and G H as his sureties, to refund the amount collected if so ordered by the Court on final hearing; it is therefore adjudged and decreed that the defendant and his said sureties pay into Court said sum of four hundred dollars, and the further sum of twenty-one dollars, the interest thereon since collected, in all, four hundred and twenty-one dollars, within thirty days, and in default thereof an execution will issue against the defendant and said C D and E F, for said sum of four hundred and twenty-one dollars, and the costs incident to said execution, they being each and all adjudged liable to complainant for said sums, which, when paid in, will be paid over to the complainant, or to his Solicitor of record.

\textsuperscript{18} This is the usual form of the reference; but it would be well to have the Master's report more nearly resemble a special verdict, in which case the reference would be as follows:

1st. What damages, if any, the defendant suffered by reason of the injunction sued out in this cause, specifying the kind and degree of such damages.

2d. What would be reasonable compensation to the defendant for such damages.

3d. What, if any, exemplary damages should be allowed, and for what reason.

\textsuperscript{19} Code, § 4448.
§ 863. The Measure of Damages on Injunction Bonds.—No damages will be allowed which are not the actual, natural, and proximate, result of the injury arising from the suspension or violation of the defendant’s vested legal rights by the injunction. Damages that are remote, speculative, or contingent, will not be allowed. In the absence of malice in suing out the injunction, vindictive or punitive damages will not be allowed; but simple compensation for the loss sustained, will be the measure of the damages.\(^{20}\) Interest is allowable, however, as a part of the damages. And if losses happen in consequence of complainant’s failure to have a receiver appointed in a partnership suit, or loss happen because the receiver failed to do his duty, the complainant may be held liable therefor, on his injunction bond; for it was his duty to have a receiver promptly appointed, and then to see that the receiver did his duty in the premises.\(^{21}\)

In ascertaining the damages resulting from an injunction, the following matters may be regarded: (1) loss of rents and profits, or damage to crops or property, by being prevented from taking possession; (2) injury to business, reputation, and credit, by being prevented from properly attending thereto; (3) depreciation in the value of the property while subject to an injunction prohibiting its sale; (4) the loss of the debt whose collection was enjoined by reason of the debtor becoming insolvent during the progress of the suit, and (5) any other loss or injury, naturally or directly referable to the injunction, and flowing therefrom as an immediate consequence.\(^{22}\)

In estimating the damages, regard may be also had (1) to the presence or absence of probable cause for resorting to the writ; (2) to the good or bad faith of the complainant in bringing the suit; (3) to the presence or absence of any circumstance of fraud, malice, or oppression, in the proceedings. If good faith and probable cause appear, compensatory damages only will be allowed; if, on the other hand, there appears bad faith, fraud, malice, or oppression as a motive for the suit, or a reckless disregard of the defendant’s rights and interests, or an utter absence of probable cause for bringing the suit, vindictive damages may be allowed.\(^{23}\)

In estimating the amount of damages the opinions of witnesses, unsupported by facts or reasons, are entitled to no consideration. Opinions are not evidence, except in cases of experts.\(^{24}\)

CHAPTER XLII.

SUTS PRAYING NE EXEATS; AND PROCEEDINGS THEREIN.

§ 864. Ne Exeats Generally Considered.—The writ of ne exeat, although fallen into almost total disuse, is, nevertheless, directly recognized by our statutes, and indirectly recognized by our Constitution. It is one of the extraordinary processes of a Court of Chancery, and is as much a writ of right as any other process used in the administration of justice, and must, therefore, be granted whenever a proper case is presented. The abolition of imprisonment for debt has not deprived the Court of the power to issue a writ of ne exeat in cases of equitable cognizance; but the writ will not be granted upon a mere legal demand sued on in Chancery. The object of the writ is to detain the person of the defendant in order to compel him to perform the decree of the Court, in cases where his departure would endanger the rights of the complainant, or their effectual enforcement.

A ne exeat will issue only upon an equitable demand: suits for alimony, and for an account, are, however, deemed equitable demands. This equitable demand, when for money, must be certain in its nature, not contingent, and must be due, except in suits for alimony and an accounting. The amount of the indebtedness must be stated; the indebtedness must be alleged to be just, and its payment or collection must be alleged to be endangered by the departure of the defendant from the State. There need, however, be no allegation that the defendant is going out of the State for the purpose of avoiding the payment of the debt.

An injunction may be granted at the same time a ne exeat is ordered, and on the same bill, and in the same flat, if prayed for, and a proper case made out.

1 In the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the full name of this writ is ne exeat regno, but in the State of Tennessee, its full name is ne exeat republica.
2 For its direct recognition, see Code, § 4434. It is indirectly recognized in the Constitution by the establishment of the Chancery Court, and by the continuance of existing laws, the writ of ne exeat being one of the powers of the Chancery Court. Const., Art. VI, § 8; Art. XI, § 1; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1698, note 1; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 647; Smith v. Koons, 4 Hay, 189; Edwards v. Mason, 1 Hawks, (N. C.), 152.
3 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1698, note 1; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 647.
4 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 653; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1700, note.
5 The imprisonment for debt prohibited by our Constitution is imprisonment under legal process for failing to pay an adjudicated debt. This sort of imprisonment is quite a different thing from imprisoning a man for endeavoring to evade the jurisdiction of the Court, the latter no more being an imprisonment for debt than is an imprisonment for failing to give a bail bond, or for failing to perform the decree of the Court. Code, §§ 3392; 4478-4481; 2528. The last section (2528) authorizes the arrest and commitment of a guardian who fails to account. The only object of a ne exeat is to prevent the defendant from going out of the State, and thus escaping the jurisdiction of the Court over his person; and the only condition of the bond he is required to give, is that he will not depart from, or leave, the State, without the permission of the Court. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 654; 2 Barb. Ch. Pr., 520; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1711. Where a money recovery is sought, proceedings by attachment of property have, in practice, superseded ne exeats. Indeed, our attachment laws are in the nature of a substitute for writs of ne exeat, when a judgment in personam is not sought, or is not necessary. Instead of attaching the body of the defendant the practice now is to attach his property. Cox v. Breedlove, 2 Yerg., 516.
6 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 647; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1698. The decrees of the Chancery Court were formerly in personam, and enforced by process of contempt, and imprisonment. The result was that if the person of the defendant could not be reached, the decree could not be enforced, when the payment of money was ordered. Hence, the necessity of keeping the defendant within reach of the process of the Court. But now that the Chancery Court can issue an attachment against a defendant's property, the writ of ne exeat is no longer necessary, in ordinary cases.
7 12 Ency. of Forms, 1053.
8 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 650-653; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1702-1708. It is sufficient if the complainant swears to the amount due to the best of his belief; but it is not sufficient to make oath that the complainant is informed, or fears, or apprehends, that the defendant may leave the State. Ibid. See also, Nelson v. Fuld, 5 Pick., 466, which holds that an affidavit for an attachment on "information and belief" is insufficient.
9 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 648.
§ 865. In What Cases a Ne Exeat Will be Granted.—The Court will issue the writ whenever one party has a claim against another which can be enforced only in a Court of Equity, and the enforcement of which will be endangered if the defendant is allowed to leave the State.9 The one great object of the writ is to secure the jurisdiction of the Court over the person of the defendant, to the end that, by process of contempt, he may be compelled to perform the decree of the Court.10

§ 866. How a Ne Exeat is Obtained.—A writ of ne exeat is obtained in precisely the same way an injunction is obtained, that is, upon a prayer therefor in a bill, or upon an application therefor in Court, based on a petition or affidavit, in the cause.11 The writ may be applied for at any time during the progress of the suit. No notice of the application need be given to the defendant, the writ being granted ex parte, at Chambers, by any Judge, or Chancellor, or in open Court by the Chancellor, or Judge, presiding.

§ 867. Frame of a Bill for a Ne Exeat.—A ne exeat is in the nature of an attachment of the body of the defendant, and its object is to detain his body until he gives security for the debt alleged in the bill. What is said elsewhere12 as to the frame of an injunction bill applies with full force to a ne exeat bill, and, therefore, need not be repeated.

The bill, petition, or affidavit, on which the prayer for a ne exeat is based, must allege (1) the amount13 and nature of the indebtedness, when a debt is sought to be recovered; (2) that it is due and justly owing to the complainant; (3) that the defendant intends to leave the State; and (4) that complainant’s debt, or his remedies to enforce his rights, would be endangered by the defendant’s departure from the State.

The following forms of material allegations in a bill, petition, or affidavit for this writ, will serve as illustrations:

MATERIAL ALLEGATIONS FOR A NE EXEAT IN DIVORCE SUIT.

That the defendant has no property subject to attachment, known to complainant, but has a large amount of money, and evidences of debt, in his possession, the proceeds of property sold by him to defeat complainant’s claim for alimony; and he has declared that he intends at once to leave the State and take with him every dollar he owns, and would never pay her a cent.14

9 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1698; Ne exeeats have issued from the Supreme Court pending ex parte to prevent the defendant from removing property. Cox v. Breedlove, 2 Yerg., 516.

10 It would seem that a ne exeat is a writ necessary for the purposes of justice when the defendant, by leaving the State, can defeat the power of the Court to grant effective relief, or evade the relief granted; especially when the relief consists in compelling the defendant (1) to execute to the complainant a deed for, or other property, situated in another State, or (2) to release a lien or mortgage on property in another State; or (3) to give a receipt against, or acknowledge satisfaction of a judgment, or decree, or bond, or other obligation, in another State; or (4) to do some other act which the Court could not effectually do by the direct and inherent operation of its own decree. The object of the writ is to enable the Court to act upon the person of the defendant in such cases. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 647; 651-652; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1698, note; 2 Sto. Eq. Jur., §§ 1471-1473, note.

11 A writ of ne exeat would, also, be essential to justice (1) where, in a divorce suit, the defendant is threatening to take the children and his exempt property of the State; or (2) where a trustee intends to leave the State with trust property in his possession of the same, or where, under the Code, §§ 4283-4285, a discovery is sought or (4) in any other case where the court could not do complete justice without having the person of the defendant within its jurisdiction. See, Smith v. Koonz, 4 Hay., 189; Cox v. Breedlove, 2 Yerg., 516; Denton v. Denton, 1 Johns. Ch., 364.

Writs of ne exeat have issued in the following cases: 1. Against a guardian to compel him to account. 14 Excy. Pl. & Pr., 321; and see Code, § 2528; 2. Against a husband who has his goods packed, and is about to leave the State with another woman without making any provision for his wife, the complainant. 12 Ency. of Forms, 1054; 3. Against a defendant about to leave the State taking with him slaves, or other property of peculiar value. Ibid.; 4. Against a defendant who has converted his property into money and is about to leave the State to avoid paying alimony or a trust debt. 16 A. & E. Ency. of Law, 378.

In these days of rapid transit, this writ may prove more efficacious, in many cases, than an injunction, or an attachment of property. Justice is deader than the right to go abroad, and this writ should be awakened from its slumbers when it is necessary to prevent justice from being wrecked. And it is worth remarking in this connection, that neither our Constitution nor our statutes in any way lessen, limit, or impair, any of the powers, privileges, or jurisdiction, rightfully granted to a Court of Equity; Code, §§ 4279; 4481; 4488; but, on the contrary, its powers and jurisdiction have been greatly enlarged, and made more extensive and efficacious. See, ante, §§ 14-21.

11 The entire practice relative to obtaining a writ of ne exeat is identical with that of obtaining a writ of injunction, and its repetition here is, therefore, unnecessary.

12 See, ante, §§ 144, sub-sec. 2; 838-840.

13 The amount need not be stated in a suit for alimony, or for an accounting. 12 Ency. of Forms, 1053.

14 Ibid, 1056.
That the defendant is largely indebted to complainant by reason of complainant’s estate having gone into his hands, as guardian, [or executor, or administrator, or trustee,] but the exact amount he owes complainant can only be ascertained on a discovery from him and an accounting, but that defendant has not only refused to acquaint complainant with the amount of the estate he has received belonging to complainant, and account therefor, but has lately declared his intention to leave the State. Complainant avers that the defendant is justly indebted to him by reason of the premises in the sum of one thousand dollars, a large part, if not all of which, is in his possession, so complainant is informed and believes and so charges. The defendant has no property, known to complainant, subject to attachment.

It will be sufficient to allege that the defendant is threatening to leave, or to allege facts and circumstances evincing an intention to leave. The bill or petition must be sworn to, on personal knowledge of the party or person swearing to it, and not on mere information and belief. The affidavit as to the intent, threats, or circumstances showing an intent, to leave the State, may be made by a third person who personally knows the facts. The bill must pray expressly for the writ, if it is desired before the bill is filed; but, after the bill is filed, the writ may be applied for and obtained by a sworn petition, or by motion supported by affidavit. The bill, petition, or affidavit, must state that it is the first application for a ne exeat in the case. The following is the form of a

PRAYER FOR A NE EXEAT.

That the writ of ne exeat república issue, to stay the said Richard Roe, [defendant,] from departing from or leaving the State without the express permission of your Honor’s Court.

Upon a bill laying sufficient grounds for a ne exeat, and praying therefor, and duly verified by the complainant, or by some third person having personal knowledge of the facts alleged, the Chancellor will, at Chambers, endorse his fiat for the writ, in the same manner as in ease of an application for an injunction. If he refuses the writ, he will so endorse the bill. In either event, he will seal up the bill, and transmit it to the Clerk and Master, as in case of injunction bills.

FIAT FOR A NE EXEAT.

To the Clerk and Master, at Cleveland:

Issue a writ of ne exeat as prayed in the foregoing bill, upon the complainant giving bond therefor in the penalty of [naming the sum.] The Sheriff will take a bail bond in the penalty of [double the debt claimed in the bill,] conditioned as required by law.

Aug. 13, 1890.

D. C. Trewhitt, Judge.

On receipt of the bill containing a fiat, and the execution of bond therefor by the complainant, the Clerk and Master will, at once, issue a

WRIT OF NE EXEAT.

State of Tennessee,

To the Sheriff of Bradley county:

Whereas, John Doe has filed a bill in the Chancery Court at Cleveland against Richard Roe, alleging among other things that said Richard Roe is justly indebted to him in the sum of [naming the amount. If the bill alleges any other ground of suit, state it briefly,] and that said Richard Roe designs quickly to leave the State, as by oath appears; and said John Doe praying for a writ of ne exeat to stay the departure of said Richard Roe.

Now, therefore, by the fiat of Hon. D. C. Trewhitt, Judge, to me directed, you are hereby commanded without delay to cause said Richard Roe to give a good and sufficient bail bond in the penalty of [amount named in the fiat,] conditioned not to leave the State of Tennessee, without the permission of said Court; and if said Richard Roe fail, or refuse, to give such bond, then you will commit him to the common jail of your county, there safely to be kept until he give such bond, or until the further order of said Court.

16 Code, §§4443–4445.
18 No bond seems to be required by the statute; but the Chancellor should require one similar to an attachment bond. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1714.
§ 868. Proceedings in Execution of a Ne Exeat.—If the defendant fails to give the bond, he will be arrested, and committed to jail, as on a capias. Indeed, the writ of ne exeat is executed in all respects like a capias, and bond taken in the same way. The following is the form of a

NE EXEAT BAIL BOND.

We, Richard Roe, [the defendant,] and Robert Roe and Roland Roe, [his sureties,] acknowledge ourselves indebted to the State of Tennessee for the use of those entitled, in the sum of [amount named in the writ.]

But this obligation to be void if the said Richard Roe, who has been arrested upon a writ of ne exeat issued in the case of John Doe vs. Richard Roe, in the Chancery Court at Cleveland, shall not leave the said State without the permission of said Court.

As witness our hands [&c., as in other bonds.]

The defendant may, if arrested, give bond at any time thereafter to the Sheriff, and be discharged; or, if the Court be in session, he may, by leave of the Court, give his bond to the Clerk and Master, or enter into a recognizance on the minutes, as in a criminal case.

The defendant may have the ne exeat discharged (1) for want of equity on the face of the bill, or (2) on a denial of the equity by a sworn answer, or (3) for want of a diligent prosecution of the suit, or (4) by paying into Court, or giving bond to pay, the amount sued for.\(^1\) It may be stated, generally, that whatever would justify a dissolution of an injunction, or the discharge of an attachment of property, will justify the discharge of a ne exeat.

If the defendant has given bond, he must not leave the State without leave of the Court, or without having the writ discharged, or the Court will render judgment against him and the sureties on his bond for the penalty thereof, or for the debt, if it be less than the penalty. When the ne exeat is discharged, the Court orders the bond given by the defendant to be cancelled;\(^2\) and if the Court considers that the writ was improperly obtained, it may direct an inquiry to the Master as to the damages sustained by the defendant, and may render judgment therefor upon the bond given by the complainant for the ne exeat.\(^3\)

SUTS IN CHANCERY FOR ATTACHMENT OF PROPERTY.

ATTACHMENT BILLS, AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON.

§ 869. Office of an Attachment Bill.
§ 870. When an Attachment Bill Will Lie.
§ 871. Frame of an Attachment Bill.
§ 872. What Bills Must Allege: “This is the First Application for an Attachment.”
§ 873. Form of an Attachment Bill.
§ 874. Attachment Bond.
§ 875. Who May Issue the Writ of Attachment.
§ 876. Forms of Writs of Attachment.

§ 870. When an Attachment Bill Will Lie.—Whenever any person has a debt or demand due, or a claim for damages, cognizable in the Chancery Court, he may file an original attachment bill, to have the property of the defendant debtor attached, in the following cases:

1. Where the debtor, or defendant, resides out of the State.

2. Where he is about to remove, or has removed himself, or property, from the State.

3. Where he has removed, or is removing himself, out of the country privately.

4. Where he conceals himself, so that the ordinary process of law cannot be served upon him.

1 The term, “person,” in the statute includes not only natural persons, but also, officers, partnerships, corporations, counties, and the State. Code, § 50.

2 An attachment may, in like manner, be sued out upon debts or demands not due, in any of the cases mentioned in this section, except in the case of a debtor or defendant residing out of the State. Code, § 3456.

3 Any accommodation endorser or surety may, in like manner, sue out an attachment against the property of his principal, as a security for his liability, whether the debt on which he is bound be due or not. Code, § 3457.

4 If the debtor and creditor are both non-residents, and residents of the same State, the creditor is not entitled to an attachment, unless the bill alleges that the property of the debtor has been fraudulently removed to this State to evade the process of the law in the State of their residence. Acts of 1871-2; Code, § 3458 a.
5. Where he absconds, or is absconding, or concealing himself or property.
6. Where he has fraudulently disposed of, or is about fraudulently to dispose of, his property.
7. Where any person, liable for any debt or demand, residing out of the State, dies, leaving property in the State. 4
8. Where any non-resident, having choses in action or other property in this State, is indebted to another non-resident, who is himself indebted to a person resident or non-resident, such person, without having first recovered a judgment at law, may file a bill to have such choses in action or other property attached, making said non-resident debtors and the person in possession of the property defendants. 5
9. Where a bill has been filed, and the subpœna has been returned. "Not to be found in my county," as to all or any one of the defendants, residents of the county, the complainant may have an alias and plurics subpœna for the defendant, or, at his election, sue out attachment against the estate of such defendant. This attachment is called a judicial attachment; and, upon the return of the attachment levied on any property of the defendant, the cause proceeds against such defendant in all respects, as if originally commenced by attachment. 6

10. What is termed an equitable attachment may be had, on the flat of a Judge or Chancellor, against property described in the bill as in danger of being transferred or being removed from the jurisdiction of the Court, when (1) the complainant has a lien upon it, or (2) has a beneficial interest in it, or (3) has been deprived of it by fraud, 7 or (4) when it cannot be reached by execution, 8 or (5) when the party is indebted to the Court. 9

§ 871. Frame of an Attachment Bill.—Inasmuch as a proceeding by an original attachment of property is purely statutory, and is, also, in derogation of the ordinary rights of the defendant under the law, the complainant is bound to substantially comply with the requirements of the statute, and to take the steps prescribed as a condition precedent to a valid decree. The bill must contain:

1. A Statement of the Nature of the Debt or Demand Claimed. 10 The bill should show what the debt or demand is based on, as that it is, (1) an account for goods, or for chattels, or for labor, or for professional services, or for board, or for rent; or (2) for money loaned, had, or received; or (3) that it is based on a note of hand, due bill, bill of exchange, stated account, insurance policy, or other written evidence of debt; or (4) that it is founded on a breach of contract, specifying the breach.

2. The Amount of the Debt or Demand. The precise amount of the debt or demand sued for should be stated. An attachment will not lie for an indefinite amount of indebtedness. The officer executing the writ cannot determine the amount of the defendant’s property to seize, unless the writ specifies the exact amount of the complainant’s claim. If, from the nature of the case, or the complication of accounts and dealings, the complainant is unable to state the exact amount due, it will be sufficient for him to state in his bill that the amount is about the sum named, or is such an amount, more or less. 11

3. An Averment that the Claim is Just. While it is the safer rule to specifically aver that the claim sued on is just, using the very words of the statute, nevertheless, if the other averments of the bill clearly show that the claim is:

4 Code, §§ 3455: 3461.
5 Code, § 3461 a. Attachments in all the foregoing cases are called original attachments.
6 Code, §§ 3466-3467. A return, "The defendant not found in my county," will not authorize this writ. The return must be, "The defendant not to be found in my county." Welsh v. Robinson, 10 Hun., 264. The publication cannot be made until after the return day specified in the subpœna. Greer v. Henderson, 1 Tenn. Ch., 76.
7 McKeldin v. Goudy, 7 Pick., 677; August v. Seeksind, 6 Cold., 166.
8 See, post, §§ 1005-1035.
9 Rutland v. Cummings, 7 Hum., 279.
10 Code, § 3469; Sullivan v. Fugate, 1 Heisk., 20.
11 Dougerry v. Kelium, 3 Lca, 646.
a just one, the failure to state that the debt or demand sued on is a just one will not affect the validity of the proceeding.12

4. An Allegation of One or More of the Statutory Grounds of Attachment. If the bill fails to show a statutory cause of attachment, the whole proceeding will be void, unless there be grounds outside of the attachment on which to sustain the jurisdiction of the Court. The bill may, however, state in the alternative, or otherwise, more than one of the causes for which an attachment may be sued out.13 But a cause of attachment cannot be joined in the alternative with a fact that is not a cause for an attachment.14

5. An Allegation That the Bill is the First Application for an Attachment in the Case. This is necessary, if the bill seeks to attach the equitable property of the defendant. Whether it is necessary, in a bill to attach property attachable at law, will be hereafter considered;15 but, until the Supreme Court decides otherwise, it is prudent to make such allegation in all attachment bills.

6. The Owners of Both the Legal and the Equitable Titles Must be Made Parties, When. If the bill seeks to attach the equitable property of the defendant, the owner of the legal title must be made a party.16 On the other hand, if the bill seeks to attach the legal property of the defendant, and this property is encumbered by any Equity such as a vendor’s lien, mechanics’ lien, or other statutory lien, the owner of such encumbrance must be made a party.17

7. The Property Sought to be Attached Must be Described, When. In all cases of equitable attachment the property must be described; and it is well to describe it, where known, in a bill for a legal attachment: in either case the bill will be a lien on the described property by lis pendens from the filing of the bill.18

8. The Bill Must be Sworn to. The affidavit to the bill is an indispensable pre-requisite to the issuance of an attachment: Until the affidavit is made, there is no authority for the issuance of an original attachment: and if it is issued without the affidavit, it is a nullity.19 But if the defendant appears and answers, without taking proper steps to have the bill dismissed, or the attachment discharged, it would seem to be a waiver of the affidavit;20 and the absence of an affidavit, in such a case, would not affect the validity of the decree.21 If the bill is not sworn to before the issuance of the attachment, the subsequent verification of the bill will not so retroact as to validate the invalid writ.22

The affidavit to the bill may be made by the complainant’s agent or attorney, and the authority of the latter to act will be presumed in the absence of evidence that he was not authorized to swear to the bill.23 The ground of attachment must be positively averred in the bill. An allegation that “complainant is informed and believes that,” a particular ground exists, without a positive averment that such ground does, in fact, exist, would tend to an immaterial issue, and would be insufficient.24 The ground of attachment must be directly and positively averred, so as to tender an issue of fact, and not an issue as to whether complainant had information, or believed, that the fact was so and so. But, when the bill directly avers one or more causes of attachment, it may be sworn to “on information and belief.”

An attachment bill is both an affidavit and a pleading; as an affidavit, it must contain the necessary statutory statements specified in the Code, § 3469; and as a pleading, it must specify a cause of action cognizable in the Court where filed.

12 Alston v. Sharp, 2 Lea, 523; Boyd v. Gentry, 12 Heisk., 628; Lowenstine v. Gillespie, 6 Lea, 643; Hirt v. Dixon, 3 Lea, 336. 13 Code, § 3470. 14 Haynes v. Powell, 1 Lea, 352; Jackson v. Burke, 4 Heisk., 610. 15 See, post, § 872. 16 See, ante, § 127. 17 Ibid; Jackson v. Coffman, 2 Cates, 271. 18 See note 43, infra. 19 Watt v. Carmes, 4 Heisk., 532; Maples v. Tunis, 11 Hum., 108. 20 Johnson v. Luckadoo, 12 Heisk., 270. 21 The object of the attachment proceedings is to get jurisdiction of the defendant; and, if he appears and answers, he cannot afterwards have the suit dismissed because the attachment was a nullity; he may, however, have a void attachment discharged. 22 Watt v. Carmes, 4 Heisk., 532. 23 Code, § 3469; Baker v. Huddleston, 3 Bax., 1. 24 Nelson v. Fuld, 5 Pick., 466. This case holds that the allegations must be of a fact susceptible of issue and proof; and overrules Bank v. Berry, 2 Hum., 443. 25 There must be an act already performed, or one to be performed, the preliminary steps or circum-
§ 872. What Bills must Allege "This is the First Application for an Attachment."—Code, sections 4434-4435 require the party applying for an attachment to state in his bill or petition that it is the first application for such process.

These sections are substantially the Act of 1821, ch. 7, Sec. 1, and the Act of 1835, ch. 4, Sec. 9, with the word "attachment" interlined in the Act of 1821; and while, out of abundant caution, Solicitors have construed the word to include ordinary statutory attachments of property, it is very doubtful whether this construction is supported by the context.

1st. Attachments of property in the Circuit and Justices' Courts require no statement as to "first application."24a Besides, in these Courts alias or second writs of attachment of property are granted, on mere motion, without new bond or affidavit;25 and judicial attachments of property also issue without new bond, or any affidavit.26

2d. But if these Code sections (4434-4435), apply to ordinary attachments of property in the Chancery Courts, then they equally apply to attachments of property in both the Circuit and Justices' Courts by the express requirement of the Code;27 and as they are not construed to apply to the latter Courts they should not be applied to the Chancery Courts. Code, section 4435, requires the statement as to the "first application" to be made in the bill, or petition, whereas, in attachments of property in the Circuit Courts, and in suits before Justices of the Peace, there is neither bill nor petition but a mere affidavit whose substance is prescribed,28 thus showing conclusively that the section (4435), does not refer to ordinary attachments of property in any Court. Again, in attachments of property in the Circuit Court, and before Justices of the Peace, the Clerk of the Court, or the Justices of the Peace, respectively, grant the attachments, and the fiat of a Judge, or Chancellor, is not necessary.29 Why then the necessity of such a fiat in Chancery? Indeed, in ordinary statutory cases of attachment of property in Chancery, the Clerk and Master can grant the writ without the fiat of the Chancellor, another reason why ordinary attachments of property are not meant by said Code sections.30

On the other hand, there are some good reasons why the word "attachments" does not mean attachments of the person.

1st. The practice is to issue such attachments without any bill, petition or fiat.

2d. Attachments of the person to compel an answer to a bill are issued on mere motion supported by the return on the subpoena, and not on a bill or petition.31

3d. A second attachment of the person to compel an answer is granted, as of course, on forfeiture of bail,32 without bill, or petition, or fiat.

4th. An attachment of the person to enforce a decree issues without bill, petition or fiat, upon the officer's return, or upon affidavit.33

But there are attachments that satisfy all the requirements of the sections under consideration, to wit, equitable attachments of property.

stances of which have already been developed and become capable of proof. McManey v. Catborne, 4 Heisk., 508; Jackson v. Burke, 4 Heisk., 610.

24a Code, §§ 3469-3477. No good reason occurs why this statement should be required in the Chancery Courts and not in the Circuit and Justices' Courts.

25 Code, § 3517. This is in direct contradiction of § 3435, if the latter refers to ordinary statutory attachments of property.

26 See, ante, § 870, sub-sec. 9; post, § 883.

27 Code, §§ 3766; 4454. The latter section says, "The provisions of this article, [Article VIII, which includes said sections 4434-4435] will apply to all cases in any of the Courts in which the extraordinary process herein provided for may be resorted to;" and § 3766 is to the same effect. Besides ordinary attachments of property are not "herein provided for," but are provided for in a preceding Chapter, devoted to the subject, and wholly foreign to Chancery practice. Code, §§ 3455-3538.

28 Code, § 3469.

29 Code, § 3474. In Green v. Lanier the failure to allege that the bill was the first application for an attachment was considered a mere irregularity. 5 Heisk., 662.

30 Code, §§ 4434-4435.

31 Code, § 4361; Ch. Rule, VII, § 8. See, ante, § 201.

32 Code, § 4363. See, ante, § 203.

33 Code, § 4479. See, ante, § 652.
§ 873. ATTACHMENT BILLS.

1st. Equitable attachments of property can issue only on the fiat of a Chancellor, or Judge.
2d. Such attachments are technically "extraordinary" process in the meaning of said sections.
3d. They are issued exclusively by the Chancery Courts.
4th. They are leviable on equitable interests, whereas ordinary attachments are not leviable on any but legal interests.
5th. They are issueable under the inherent jurisdiction of the Chancery Court, where property is in danger of being transferred, or removed beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, and complainant (1) has a lien on it, or (2) has a beneficial interest in it, or (3) has been deprived of it by fraud. Process, in a case like this, is eminently and technically "extraordinary," within every intent and requirement of the sections in question.

6th. Inasmuch as Code, sections 4283-4291, authorize equitable attachments of property by lis pendens, such attachments may well have been included in the sections in question (4434-5) so as to require the fiat of the Chancellor, and thereby attain more force and dignity.

But in view of the present practice and the uncertainty as to the requirement of the statute, the only safe course for Solicitors is to put said allegation in all bills and petitions praying an attachment of property, whether of a legal or equitable nature.

§ 873. Form of an Attachment Bill.—An attachment bill should be as full, particular, and specific, in its averments of the nature, origin and history of the cause of suit, as an ordinary original bill; but, inasmuch as it is generally drawn in haste, it is, for that reason, frequently more brief and pointed than an ordinary bill. The frame and form of the bill may be easily understood by the following:

GENERAL FORM OF AN ATTACHMENT BILL.

To the Hon. John P. Smith, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Morristown:
John Doe, a resident of Hamblen county, complainant,

vs.

Richard Roe, a non-resident of the State.

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That the defendant is justly indebted to him in the sum of [stating the amount, and specifying the nature and character of the debt or demand, whether it is based on a note, account for work and labor done, goods sold, services rendered, breach of contract, or other matter.]

The defendant resides out of the State, [or has done, or is doing, some other act that entitles the complainant to an original attachment. In setting out the ground of attachment, use the very language of the Code.]

III.

That the defendant is the owner of the following property situated in the County of Hamblen: [Here specify the property particularly, and give its locality. This will give you a lien on it from the filing of the bill.] The defendant may be the owner of other property in the State, which is not now known to complainant.

IV.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That an attachment issue and be levied on the property of the defendant above described, and on any other property that may be found, belonging to him, of value sufficient to satisfy complainant's said debt, and the costs of the cause.

2d. An ordinary attachment under the general attachment laws cannot, technically, be considered "extraordinary" process, from the standpoint of Equity practice, but is, technically, a statutory process in ordinary use both at law and in Chancery.

3d. See, post, § 875.

4th. Lane v. Marshall, 1 Heisk., 34; Rice v. O'Keefe, 6 Heisk. 646; Lyle v. Langley, 6 Bax., 287; Hallman v. Werner, 9 Heisk., 587; and see, post, § 875.

5th. McKelvin v. Gouldy, 7 Pick., 677; Rutland v. Cummins, 7 Hum., 279; post, § 875: In ordinary cases of attachment of property a seizure of the property is essential to the jurisdiction of the Court; but in cases of equitable attachment such is not the case. August v. Seaskind, 6 Cold., 165; Avery v. Warren, 12 Heisk., 562; and this explains Code §§ 4345-4346, where it is said that "the mode of service of an attachment ["in the practice of Chancery Courts"] shall be by reading the same to each defendant named therein." This creates a lien by lis pendens.

6th. August v. Seaskind, 6 Cold., 166. The Code provides that such an attachment shall be served, not necessarily by a levy, but by reading it to the defendant, or if he evade service by leaving a copy at his usual residence; §§ 4345-4346. The lien in such a case would arise from the lis pendens. See, ante, § 66.

7th. The maxim, communitis error facit jus, will hardly apply in such a case.
2d. That on such levy being made, publication be made for the defendant according to law in attachment cases, requiring him to answer the bill, but his oath to his answer is waived.

3d. That, if the defendant at any time comes into this State, a subpœna to answer be issued, and served on him.

4th. That complainant be granted a decree for the amount due him an said note, [account, or other ground of indebtedness, stating it.] principal and interest, and that the property attached be sold in satisfaction of the decree.

5th. That complainant have such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.

This is the first application for an attachment in this case.\textsuperscript{41} Nat B. Jones, Solicitor.

[Annex affidavit and jurat, as in the following form.]

The following is an illustration of an attachment and garnishment bill, combined with a bill for discovery and relief:

ATTACHMENT AND GARNISHMENT BILL.\textsuperscript{42}

To the Honorable Thomas M. McConnell, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Chattanooga:

John Doe, a resident of Hamilton county, complainant,

Richard Roe, a non-resident of the State, and John Smith and Sarah Smith, his wife, both residents of Hamilton county, George Jones, a resident of Polk county, and John Brown, a resident of Meigs county, defendants.

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That the defendant, Richard Roe, is justly indebted to him in the sum of ten thousand dollars, being the amount of a promissory note, this day paid by complainant as surety for said Roe, on a note of hand executed by him, and by complainant as his surety, to the First National Bank of Chattanooga. Said note is herewith filed as an exhibit, and marked A, and made a part of the bill; and will be read at the hearing.

II. That said defendant, Richard Roe, resides out of the State of Tennessee, and is a citizen and resident of the State of Georgia; [or, that he is about to remove, or has removed himself or property, from the State; or, that he has removed, or is removing himself out of the county privately; or, that he conceals himself so that the ordinary process of law cannot be served upon him; or, that he absconds, or is absconding, or concealing himself or property; or, that he has fraudulently disposed of, or is about to fraudulently dispose of, his property. More than one cause of attachment may be alleged, in the alternative, or otherwise.]

III. That said defendant, Roe, is the legal owner of the house and lot, No. 816, Seventh street, Chattanooga, worth about one thousand dollars, being the lot purchased by him from William Jones, by deed registered in the Register's office of Hamilton county, June 10, 1890, in book K, on pages 561-562.\textsuperscript{43}

IV. That said Richard Roe has an equitable interest in the house and lot, No. 963 Eighth street, Chattanooga, which he sold to his co-defendant, John Smith, and being the lot whereon the latter now resides. The legal title to said lot was, however, vested by the deed in the defendant, Sarah Smith, who is the wife of said John Smith; and he, the said John Smith, executed to said Roe a note for one thousand dollars, the balance of the purchase-money due for said house and lot, to secure the payment of which balance the said Roe retained an express lien in the deed he made said Sarah Smith for said property. Said note by said Smith to said Roe is overdue; and complainant charges that it is in the possession of said Roe, and is the property of said Roe.

V. That the defendant, John Smith, is otherwise largely indebted to said Roe, as complainant is informed and verily believes, and has in his possession various evidences of debt, choses in action, and other property, and assets of the said Richard Roe.

VI. That the defendant, George Jones, who is a citizen and resident of Polk county, has in his hands various choses in action, and claims, and other property and assets belonging to defendant Roe, and is, also, as complainant is informed, believes, and charges, largely indebted to said Roe, who left his business in the hands of said Jones when he, Roe, left this

\textsuperscript{43} Any transfer, sale, or assignment, made after the filing of an attachment bill in Chancery, or after the signing out of an attachment at law, of property mentioned in the bill, or attachment, as against the complainant shall be inoperable and void. Code, § 3507. The filing of the bill does not, however, create a lien; it operates rather as a re pendent, during which all transfers are void. Sharpe v. Hunter, 7 Cold., 389. But, practically, the filing of the bill is equivalent to a lien upon the property mentioned in it. Lacey v. Moore, 6 Cold., 348; Vance v. Cooper, 2 Hels., 93. This lien, however, does not apply to a contest between creditors: it is confined to sales or transfers by the debtor. Bank v. Mitchell, 2 Shan. Cas., 58.
State and moved to Georgia. The said Jones has a schedule of the debts due the defendant Roe, in Tennessee, as complainant is informed and verily believes; and said Jones is fully conversant with said Roe’s business.

VII.

That the defendant, John Brown, sold to the defendant, Roe, the house and lot, No. 83 Fifth street, Chattanooga, worth about three thousand dollars, and gave him a bond for title. The defendant, Roe, has fully paid for said house and lot, but has not received from said Brown any deed thereafter. The said Brown resides in Meigs county, and is made a party for the purpose of having the legal title to said house and lot divested out of him, and vested in the purchaser at the sale hereinafter prayed, and for the other purposes herein set forth.

VIII.

Therefore, the premises considered, complainant prays:
1st. That all those named as defendants in the caption of this bill be made such by service of subpoena on the residents, and by publication as to Richard Roe, who is a non-resident, and that they all be required to answer the bill.
2d. That an attachment be issued and levied on all the right, title, and interest, legal and equitable, the defendant, Richard Roe, has in and to each of the three houses and lots described in the bill, and any other attachable property belonging to him that may be found; and that, after the levy of such attachment, publication be made notifying him thereof, and requiring him to appear and defend this suit at the first rule day coming seven or more days after the last publication; but his oath to his answer is waived. If said Roe at any time comes into the service of subpoena or served upon him.
3d. That the defendant, George Jones, answer fully and particularly, on oath, what notes, accounts, claims, or other evidences of debt, or other property, were left with him, or in any way put into his possession, or under his control, by the defendant, Richard Roe, at or about the time the latter left Chattanooga, or since; and what has become of them, specifying all such property belonging to said Richard Roe, or in which he has any interest whatever, giving full particulars, the kind, and amount, and where now deposited. He will, also, answer fully and particularly how much he has collected for said Roe, since the latter left Chattanooga, from whom the several amounts have been collected, and how much was in his hands when the writ in this cause was served on him, and from whom collected, or from what source received, belonging in whole, or in part, to said Roe. And the defendant, Jones, will make a full, detailed, and specific, exhibit of the state of his accounts with, and of his indebtedness to, said Roe, at the day of the filing of this bill.
4th. That all the other defendants be required to answer as garnishees, on oath, and fully discover: (1) Wherein, and in what amounts, they, or any of them, were indebted to their co-defendants, Richard Roe, at the time the subpoena was served upon them in this cause. (2) What property, debts, and effects of said Roe were in the possession, or under the control, of either of them at said time, or at any time since; and they will specify the kind and amount of each and all of said items of property. (3) What property, debts and effects of said Roe are to their knowledge and belief in the possession or under the control of any other, and what person or persons, specifying the kind and amount. Each of said defendants will answer separately for himself, or herself, and will specify every debt, note of hand, or other chose in action, every account, claim, or other asset, and the kind and character of any other property in the possession or under the control of either of them belonging to said Richard Roe, or in which he has any interest whatever, giving full particulars.
5th. That all the property, choses in action, and effects of the defendant Roe, in the hands of the defendants John and Sarah Smith, Jones, and Brown, and all of the debts due from said John and Sarah Smith, Jones, and Brown, to said Roe, be attached in their hands as garnishees; and that said John and Sarah Smith, Jones, and Brown, be required and enjoined not to pay any debt due by either of them, or that may hereafter become due, to said Roe, or to any one for him; and to retain in their possession all the property of the said Roe now or hereafter in their custody, or under the control of either of them.

6th. That a decree be pronounced in complainant’s favor against said Roe for the full amount due from him to complainant by reason of the premises; that all of the property attached, and all of the amounts due from the defendants, John and Sarah Smith, Jones, and Brown, to said Roe, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be subjected to the satisfaction of such decree.

7th. That the said lot belonging to the defendant Roe in fee, and the said lot wherein he has a vendor’s lien, and the said lot for which he has a title-bond, be sold to satisfy said decree; that said sales be on a credit of not less than six months, nor more than two years, and in bar of all right of redemption.

8th. That, if necessary, a receiver be appointed to collect, or convert into money, any debts, notes, or other choses in action, or property, belonging to the defendant Roe, in the hands or under the control of the other defendants.

9th. That all necessary orders be made, and all necessary accounts be taken, to ascertain the true amount due complainant, and to adjust any and all equities between the defendant Roe and any of his co-defendants.

10th. And that complainant have such other, further, and general relief as he may be entitled to under the pleadings and proof in the cause.

This is the first application for either an attachment, or an injunction, in this cause.

To the Clerk and Master at Chattanooga:

Issue writs of attachment and injunction as above prayed, on proper bonds being given therefor.

July 14, 1890.

To the Clerk and Master:

The defendant, Richard Roe, may be in Hamilton county in a few days, and you will issue a subpoena for him to the Sheriff of said county, framed according to the statute.

W. H. DeWitt, Solicitor.

§ 874. Attachment Bond.—It is the duty of the officer to whom application for an attachment is made, to require the complainant, his agent or attorney, to execute a bond in double the amount claimed to be due, with sufficient security, payable to the defendant, and conditioned that the complainant will prosecute the attachment with effect, or, in case of failure, pay the defendant all costs that may be adjudged against him, and also, all such damages as he may sustain by the wrongful suing out of said attachment. The affidavit and bond must be filed, by the officer taking them, in the Court to which the attachment is returnable, and shall constitute a part of the record in the cause.

The following is the form of an

ATTACHMENT BOND.

We, A. [the complainant], B and C [his sureties], acknowledge ourselves indebted to D & E, [the defendants], in the sum of [double the amount claimed to be due] dollars. But this obligation to be void if the said A shall prosecute with effect an attachment this day obtained by him in the Chancery Court at Kingston, against the property of said D and E, or in case of failure shall pay all costs that may be adjudged against him, and, also, all such damages as the defendants may sustain by the wrongful suing out of said attachment. [To be dated, signed, and witnessed.]

An attachment suit may be prosecuted under the pauper oath. If the bond be defective, or even if there be no bond, the Court will allow the complainant to give a sufficient bond; and, on such bond being given, it relates back to the date of the writ, and validates the levy made under it.

§ 875. Who may Issue the Writ of Attachment.—The writ of attachment may be granted, signed, and issued, by any Judge of a Circuit, Criminal, or Special Court, by any Chancellor, or Justice of the Peace, or by the Clerk.
and Master of the Court in which the bill is filed. There is no need of the flat of a Judge to authorize the Clerk and Master to issue an original or ancillary attachment in any case where, had the suit been brought in the Circuit Court, the writ could have been issued by the Clerk of that Court. The only cases where a flat of a Judge or Chancellor is necessary are: 1, Where the bill is filed to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of property, or other devices resorted to for the purpose of hindering and delaying creditors, and 2, Where the writ is not authorized by the attachment law, but is issued under the inherent powers of the Court, or in pursuance of authority conferred on the Court by some statute other than the one authorizing original attachments. Where the bill seeks to reach the equitable estate of the debtor, and makes the holder of the legal title a party merely in order to divest him of that title, it is prudent, if not necessary, to have a flat for the attachment prayed.

§ 876. Forms of Writs of Attachment.—The writ must be adapted to the state of facts on which it is based, and the character of the officer by whom it is granted, issued, and signed. The form of the writ, when issued by the Clerk and Master, without a flat, is as follows:

WRIT OF ATTACHMENT BY THE CLERK AND MASTER.

State of Tennessee,
Knox county,

To the Sheriff of Knox county:

Whereas, A B has filed a sworn bill of complaint, in the Chancery Court at Knoxville, against C D, stating therein that said C D is justly indebted to him in the sum of four hundred dollars, and alleging a cause of attachment against the estate of said C D, and said A B, having given bond as required by law in attachment cases, and having prayed an attachment against said estate, you are therefore hereby commanded to attach so much of the estate of the said C D as will be of value sufficient to satisfy said debt, and the costs of the suit; and such estate, unless releived, so to secure that the same may be liable to further proceedings thereon at the next term of said Chancery Court, to be held on the fourth Monday of November next; when and where you will make known how you have executed this writ.

Witness, W. L. Trent, Clerk and Master of said Court, this August 2, 1891.

W. L. TRENT, C. & M.

If the attachment is granted, signed, and issued by any officer other than the Clerk and Master, without a flat, its recital and termination should be as follows:

To the Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court at Knoxville:

Issue a writ of attachment, as prayed in the foregoing bill, on complainant giving a bond therefor as required by law, [or, taking the pauper oath.] Sept. 23, 1890.

S. T. Logan, Judge.

The following is the FORM OF WRIT WHEN BASED ON A FIAT.

State of Tennessee,
Knox county.

To the Sheriff of Knox county:

Whereas, A B has filed a sworn bill of complaint, in the Chancery Court at Knoxville, against C D, stating therein that said C D is justly indebted to him in the sum of four hundred dollars, and alleging a cause of attachment against the estate of C D, and [that said C D added to la the following property in your county: hereof, by way of description in the bill] and praying that [said property and the] [other] property of said C D be attached:

And whereas, the said A B has obtained a flat from the Hon. S. T. Logan, Judge, directing me to issue the attachment as prayed, on bond being given, [or pauper oath being taken] as required by law in attachment cases:

Now, therefore, you are hereby commanded to attach [the above described property and] so much of the [other] estate of the said C D as will be of value sufficient to satisfy said debt and the costs of the suit [&c., as in the preceding form.]

If the bill does not describe any particular property, and specially pray that it may be attached, the attachment will issue against the defendant's property generally, omitting the words in parenthesis in the foregoing form.

The officer granting the attachment may direct counterpart writs of attachment to issue to any county where property of the defendant may be found. It would be well to pray for such counterparts in the bill.

§ 877. HOW THE DEFENDANT IS BROUGHT INTO COURT.—In original attachment suits, when no subpoena is served on the defendant, he must be brought before the Court, both by a levy of the attachment upon his property and by publication duly made. As soon as the writ of attachment is returned, with a levy endorsed thereon, the Clerk will enter on his rule docket an order of publication, in substance, as follows:

Cellor, Justice of the Peace, or Clerk) this—day of—, 18—.

The Code says the writ shall be substantially in this form, thus showing that its substance is more to be considered than its phraseology. If the essentail terms are not in substance, Code, §§ 3475-3477. These essentials are: 1. The style of the writ, "State of Tennessee;" 2. The address, "To the Sheriff of (the proper county):" 3. The fact that a sworn complaint has been made in writing against the defendant, alleging that a just indebtedness exists; 4. The amount of such indebtedness; 5. The command to attach the defendant's estate; 6. The statement where and when the writ is to be returned; and 7. The signature of an officer authorized to issue it. It is understood that the third and fourth of the foregoing are not essentials, and may be inserted on return of the writ, by leave of the Court. In Lyle v. Longley, 6 Bax., 286, the fact that the writ did not bear any date showing when it was signed or issued, did not vitiate it. And see Swan v. Roberts, 2 Cold., 162.

The officer granting and issuing the attachment must take an attachment bond before issuing the writ. Code, § 3471. In Lyle v. Longley, 6 Bax., 286, the writ was issued by the Chancellor.

...and the attachment writ, having been presented to me by the complainant, and an attachment writ prayed from me, and the enclosed attachment bond having been given, I therefore granted and issued an attachment to the Sheriff of Carter county, returnable to the next term of the Chancery Court for said county. April 17, 1865, Seth J. W. Lucky, Chancellor. It would be well, also, for the Chancellor (Judge, or Justice of the Peace,) to endorse the attachment bond as follows: "Taken by me, April 17, 1865, Seth J. W. Lucky, Chancellor." The Clerk and Master should endorse on both bond and bond the date they were filed in his Court.

§ 878. ATTACHMENT BILLS.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe.

In the Chancery Court, at Knoxville.

It appearing from the bill in this case, which is sworn to, that Richard Roe is justly indebted to John Doe, the complainant, and that he resides out of the State, [or, as the case may be, setting out the cause alleged in the bill for the attachment;] and an attachment having been issued and levied in the defendant's property, and it is ordered that publication be made for four consecutive weeks in the Knoxville Journal, requiring the said defendant to appear before said Chancery Court on the fourth Monday of November next, and make his defence to the bill filed against him in this cause, otherwise said bill will be taken for confessed, and the cause proceeded with ex parte. This Sept. 22, 1890.

W. L. TRENT, C. & M.

This notice must be published for four consecutive weeks in the newspaper designated in the order, the last publication to be at least one week before the time fixed for the defendant's appearance. If this notice, when published, instead of being headed "Order of Publication," or "Non-resident Notice," should be headed in bold type, thus:

so that he, or his friends, may the more readily see it.

If, however, the defendant can be personally served with process, the Clerk, upon application of the complainant, will issue a subpoena, and if it is executed, no publication will be made. The subpoena will be in the usual form except that it will contain on its face a notification to the defendant that an original attachment suit has been commenced against him.

If the defendant appears in person, or by Solicitor, before publication is made, publication is unnecessary. But while appearance in an attachment suit gives the Court jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, it does not give jurisdiction of the property sought to be attached: that depends on the validity of the attachment proceedings.

§ 878. Amendment of Attachment Proceedings.—The attachment laws were formerly strictly construed, and serious defects in proceedings by attachment were not curable by amendment; but now, by positive statutory requirements, the attachment law is liberally construed, and the complainant may, at any time before a final decree, amend any defect of form in the bill, the affidavit thereto, the bond, attachment writ, or other proceeding; and no attachment bill will be dismissed, or writ of attachment abated, or levy of attachment dis ceeding founded upon it is an utter nullity. Bains v. Perry, 1 Lea, 27. The essentials of the published notice are: 1, The name of the person to whom the publication is to be made; 2, The style of the Court to which the attachment is made returnable; 3, The cause alleged for suing out the attachment; 4, The fact that the attachment has been levied on the defendant's property; 5, The time and place at which the defendant is required to appear and defend the suit; and 6, The name of the Clerk and Master of the Court testing the notice. Code, § 3522; Riley v. Nichols, 1 Heisk., 19; Bains v. Perry, 1 Lea, 37. The order of publication need not be as precise as the published notice. Allen v. Gilliland, 6 Lea, 531.

The property need not be described, but if described the description should be very short.

Code, § 3523. Twenty-eight days will be sufficient in which to make this publication. Thus, a notice published on the 19th and 26th of August, and on the 2d and 9th of September, respectively, would be sufficient if the day fixed for the defendant's appearance was September 9th. Lowenstein v. Gilliland, 6 Lea, 531. The law requiring the last publication to be at least one week before the time fixed for the defendant's appearance does not apply to any but attachment suits. Sec. ante, § 198.

66 See, ante, § 198. The method many Clerks pursue of heading their non-resident notices with the name of the notice is as absurd as though the editor of a newspaper should head his paper thus: "A Newspaper;" or, as though an artist should write above his painting: "A Picture." Books giving forms necessarily state the name of the form, not intending that the name should be published, but intending to specify the papers for the form. All publication notices should begin with the name of the person to be notified just as a letter is addressed to the person to whom it is written. The publication notices are, as a rule, much too long, thus making the publication fees too large: they have entirely too much beginning and too much ending. Some of them, also, describe the land levied on by metes and bounds; this is but little short of downright oppression to the person who has the costs to pay, and causes a suspicion that the Master's officer is run in the interest of the newspaper making the publication.

67 Acts of 1871, ch. 134; M. & V.'s Code, § 4203. The body of this subpoena would be as follows: "Summon Richard Roe to appear, on or before the fourth Monday of November next, before the Chancery Court at Knoxville, to answer the bill of John Doe; and, also, notify the said Richard Roe that said suit is commenced against him by an original attachment; also, note me, that and there, this writ.

If this subpoena is served on the defendant it becomes the leading process, and brings the defendant into Court; and the original attachment, thereupon, becomes an ancillary attachment.
charged, because of any defect in, or want of, bond, if the complainant, or his agent or Solicitor, will substitute a sufficient bond. 73

While, however, amendments will be liberally allowed in attachment suits, nevertheless, ordinarily there must be something on which to engrat the amendment. Hence, where there is no statement of the nature or amount of the debt or demand, or no writ of attachment, or no affidavit to the bill, or no ground of attachment alleged, or no bond, there can be no amendment as to these several matters, for there is no root of substance on which to engrat the amendment. 74 The statute, however, allows a bond to be given after the issuance of the writ, even when no bond at all has been given. 75

§ 879. When an Amended, or an Ancillary Attachment Bill will Lie.—If, after an ordinary bill has been filed, there exists or arises any ground for the attachment of the property of the defendant, an amended bill 76 may be filed, stating briefly the fact that the original bill has been filed, the parties thereto, the Court where pending, the nature and amount of the debt or demand sued for, and the fact that the claim is a just one, and alleging, in addition, some statutory cause of attachment, and praying that an ancillary writ of attachment issue. 77

An ancillary attachment bill may be filed at any time between the filing of the original bill and the final decree. Its only office is to hold the property of the defendant attached for the satisfaction of the decree which may be rendered; the attachment issued upon it is not a leading process, and does not bring the defendant into Court. 78

The procedure in case of an ancillary attachment bill is precisely the same as in case of an original attachment bill: the bill must be sworn to, bond must be given, and a writ of attachment must issue. The attachment writ must follow the bill or affidavit, as the case may be; and recite the filing of the original and amended bills, the nature of the suit, in what Court pending, 79 the amount of the debt or demand, and that the cause of action is just; and must command the Sheriff to attach enough of the defendant's estate to satisfy the debt claimed, and the costs of the suit, and conclude like an original writ of attachment. 80

State of Tennessee.

To the Sheriff of Hamilton county:

Whereas, John Doe has filed an original bill of complaint in the Chancery Court at Chattanooga, against Richard Roe, to collect a debt of one thousand dollars due from him, on a note of hand; and whereas the said John Doe has, also, filed in said Court, against said Richard Roe, an amended bill of complaint, duly sworn to, alleging the pendency and contents of said original bill, and that the said debt is due by note of hand, and amounts to one thousand dollars, and is a just debt, and that the said Richard Roe owns the stock of goods, wares, and merchandise, in the building, No. 46 Main Street, Chattanooga, and having alleged a cause of attachment against the estate of said Richard Roe, and praying for an ancillary writ of attachment to be levied on said property, and on all other attachable property of said Roe: and affidavit having been made to said amended bill, and bond given as required by law in attachment cases; [and a fiat 81 for an attachment having been granted by Hon. S. A. Key, Chancellor, if such be the case.] you are, therefore, hereby commanded to attach said stock of goods, wares, and merchandise, and so much of the other attachable estate of the said Richard Roe as will be of value sufficient to satisfy the debt and costs, according to the complaint; and such estate, unless repleived, so to secure that the same may be liable to further proceedings thereon in the Chancery Court at Chattanooga on the 1st Monday of August next, when and where you will make known how you have executed this writ.

Witness, J. B. Ragon, Clerk and Master of said Court, this 4th day of June, 1890.

J. B. RAGON, C. & M.

Or, instead of filing an amended bill, the complainant may file an affidavit with the Clerk and Master, containing the substance of an ancillary attachment bill, and have an ancillary attachment issued, as is done in the Circuit Court.

§ 880. Ancillary Attachments.—An ancillary attachment may be issued on a sworn bill, original or amended, laying proper grounds, and praying therefore; or, after an original bill has been filed an ancillary attachment may issue, on affidavit alone, therefore. In either case an attachment bond must be given. The substance of the bill or affidavit, and of the ancillary writ, have already been given.

An ancillary attachment may be granted, signed and issued, by the same officers who are authorized to issue an original attachment, upon a sworn bill, or upon affidavit, laying grounds, and upon bond being given. The writ may issue simultaneously with the original subpoena. An ancillary attachment does not bring the defendant into Court, or give the Court jurisdiction over him. There must be service of a subpoena on the defendant to bring him before the Court, in such a case. The only office of the ancillary writ is to hold the defendant’s property for the satisfaction of the decree which may be rendered against him. If a subpoena and an original attachment issue at the same time, and the subpoena is served, it becomes the leading process, and the original attachment becomes, in effect, an ancillary attachment.

The defendant may have the ancillary writ dismissed, on motion, for want of any of the prerequisites to its issuance; or he may, by plea in abatement, deny the cause alleged for suing out the writ. If the motion or plea is sustained, the attachment is discharged; but this will not prevent the complainant from prosecuting his suit to a final decree. The Court may hear the cause upon the merits, and upon the plea in abatement to the ancillary writ, at the same time, or the plea in abatement may be tried previous to the hearing on the merits. The following is the form for an ancillary attachment, issued on an original bill so praying:

The State of Tennessee,

To the Sheriff of Campbell county:

Whereas, A B has filed a sworn bill of complaint in the Chancery Court at Jackson against C D, stating therein that said C D is justly indebted to him in the sum of four hundred dollars, due by account (note, breach of contract, or, as the case may be;) and said A B having alleged in his said bill a cause of attachment against the estate of said C D, and having given bond for said attachment.

You are, therefore, hereby commanded [&c., as in an original attachment.]

If an affidavit is filed for an ancillary attachment, the above form will be modified as follows:

The State of Tennessee,

93 The filing of a plea in abatement to the ancillary writ in no way affects the merits of the suit, or the answer; and, on the other hand, the filing of a demurrer, plea in bar or answer to the bill, in no way affects a plea in abatement to an ancillary writ, and does not overrule it. The office of such a plea in abatement is to discharge the ancillary writ of attachment, and release the property attached, and not to discharge the defendant, or to end the suit. The result is, a plea in abatement to the ancillary writ a bill in the Chancery Court at Jacksboro against said C D, to recover said sum, which suit is still pending, and affidavit having been made in writing, and bond given, as required by law in attachment cases; and said A B having prayed an ancillary attachment in aid of his said suit against the estate of said C D;

You are, therefore, hereby commanded [&c., as in an original attachment writ.]

If the ancillary attachment is issued in obedience to a fiat of a Judge, or Chancellor, the writ should also so state, as will be seen by reference to the form in case of an original attachment.\(^93\)

§ 881. A Garnishment Bill.—When a debtor is liable to be proceeded against by original or ancillary attachment, and a third person has property, or choses in action, or effects, of the debtor in his possession, or is indebted to the debtor, such third person may be made a co-defendant to the original attachment bill, or to an amended bill ancillary thereto, and may be required to answer on oath.\(^94\)

1. Whether he is, or was at the time of the garnishment, indebted to the defendant; if so, how, and to what amount.

2. Whether he had in his possession, or under his control, any property, debts, or effects, belonging to the defendant, at the time of serving the subpoena, or has at the time of answering, or has had at any time between the date of service of the subpoena and the time of answering; and if so, the kind and amount.

3. Whether there are, to his knowledge or belief, any and what property, debts, and effects, in the possession or under the control of any other, and what person.

4. Such other questions as may tend to elicit the information sought.\(^95\)

The bill, whether original or amended, may pray that all the effects, property, choses in action, and debts, in the hands of the garnishee defendant belonging or owing to the debtor defendant, be attached, and that the garnishee defendant be enjoined from paying such debts, or disposing of, or in any way transferring such property, choses in action, and effects. If, after service upon him of a copy of the bill, the garnishee defendant shall pay the debt attached, or secrete the effects of the debtor defendant, or buy in any other claim against the latter, he will be liable to the same extent as before the payment, secreting, or purchase.\(^96\)

In a garnishment bill, the person owing the debt, or the defendant to the judgment, or the owner of the legal title to the property, sought to be attached must be made a party.\(^97\)

§ 882. Property Attachable in Equity, but Not at Law.—There are various properties subject to attachment in a suit in Chancery which are not so subject in an action in a Court of law. These properties are divisible into two classes: (1) those that are so equitable in their nature as not to be cognizable at law, and (2) those cognizable at law, but whereon or whereto the complainant has some claim of such a nature that under certain circumstances the Chancery Court will imprison them to await the event of the suit.

1. Properties Strictly Equitable, and Not Cognizable at Common Law include: (1) the interest of a mortgagor in the property mortgaged;\(^98\) (2) property in one man’s name and hands for the use of another; (3) the interest of a man in a property bought with his money by another and title taken in the latter’s name;

(4) the equity of redemption in property sold subject to redemption; (5) property of one man held by another in pledge or as security, or in trust; (6) property given away, sold, conveyed or devised to defraud creditors; (7) the assets of an insolvent partnership, corporation, or decedent; (8) a legatee's or heir's estate in the hands of an executor or administrator before final settlement; (9) vendor's liens, express or implied; (10) liens of mechanics, laborers, and material men; (11) liens of contractors, and laborers, on railroads; (12) liens on boats for building, repairing and equipping; (13) all other statutory or equitable liens; (14) choses in action; (15) money in the hands of a Court; (16) a debt due the defendant but the amount whereof can only be ascertained by an accounting, and adjusting of mutual accounts and conflicting equities; (17) money due on a contingency necessary to be adjudicated between the defendant and other claimants; (18) land held under an agreement to convey; (19) property conveyed in trust for the benefit of creditors; (20) the residue after such trust is satisfied, if any: (21) interests in a corporation or joint stock company, not represented by certificates, or other paper evidences; (22) a wife's separate estate; (23) all property of such a character that the creditor cannot reach the debtor's interest in it without bringing both the debtor and the holder of the legal title before the Court; (24) resulting trusts; and (25) generally, all other property which, in Equity, is liable for the debts of its owner or beneficiary, and which cannot be reached by execution at law.

2. Properties Cognizable at Law, but Whereon or Whereto the Complainant Has Some Claim of such a nature, that, under certain circumstances the Chancery Court will impound them by attachment, or injunction, including: (1) property of which complainant has been deprived by fraud or tort; (2) property on which complainant or his debtor, has a lien; (3) property in which complainant has a beneficial interest; but in each of these cases it should appear that the property is in danger of being transferred to an innocent purchaser, or removed beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, and the circumstances are not such as to justify a statutory attachment.

In suits to subject equitable property to the satisfaction of its owner's debts the Chancery Court requires that the holder of the legal title thereto be, also, brought before the Court, to the end, 1st, that he may assert his rights in the premises, and 2d, that the purchaser at the Court sale may get a full title, and 3d, that the property may bring the better price.

§ 883. Judicial Attachments.—If a subpoena to answer is returned, "Not to be found in my county," as to any defendant who is a resident of the county, the complainant may have either an alias or a pluries subpoena for such defendant; or may, at his election, have a judicial attachment against the estate of such defendant. But a bona fide temporary absence from the State will not justify a return of "non est inventus," and a judicial attachment. The following is the form of

A JUDICIAL ATTACHMENT.

The State of Tennessee,

To the Sheriff of Davidson county:

 Whereas, a subpoena was issued from the Chancery Court of Davidson county, on the 10th day of May last, directing you to summon C D to appear before said Court on the 1st Monday of June last, to answer the bill filed against him in said Court by A B, who alleges that said C D is justly liable to him in the sum of four hundred dollars, which subpoena was returned by you, "Not to be found in my county," whereupon it was ordered by the Court that a judicial attachment issue against the estate of said C D;

You are, therefore, hereby commanded [&c., as in § 876, ante.] conveyed on the face of the deed when such deed is intended for a mortgage.

100 The Chancery Court has inherent jurisdiction to attach or impound such property under such circumstances. McKeldin v. Gouldy, 7 Pick., 257.

101 An equitable attachment will lie, at the suit of the owner of the land, to impound waste, such as timber cut, coal mined, or marble, stone or slate quarried, especially if the defendant is insolvent. In such cases an injunction is often granted, and a receiver appointed, which two processes are little more than the equivalent of an attachment.

102 See, ante, §§ 911, 137.

103 Code, § 3466. Section 3468 of the Code, which Mr. Hicks, in his Manual, terms "a regular misap-
This writ is ordered to issue by the Court, upon motion therefor, supported by a subpoena with the return, "Not to be found in my county." This return implies that the defendant was a resident of the county to which the subpoena issued, at the time of the institution of the suit, and that after diligent search for him, he is not to be found, being either actually absent from the county or evading the service of process. 104

No affidavit is required, and no attachment bond need be given, to entitle the complainant to this writ; the Sheriff's return, if in the language of the statute, is all-sufficient. The following is the form of an ORDER AWARDING A JUDICIAL ATTACHMENT.

A B,
vs.
C D,
No. 892.

In this cause, the complainant moved the Court for a judicial attachment against C D, the defendant; and it appearing that a subpoena to answer issued to the Sheriff of this county, who has duly returned the same to the present term, "The defendant not to be found in my county," it is ordered that said motion be allowed; and a judicial attachment is awarded against the estate of C D. Upon the return of said attachment levied upon the property of the defendant, the Clerk and Master will make publication as to said defendant, notifying him to appear as required by law. 105

DEFENCES, DECREES, AND SUBSEQUENT PROCEEDINGS. 4

§ 884. Defences in Attachment Suits.

§ 885. Pleas in Abatement in Attachment Suits Not Overruled by Decrees to the Merits.

§ 887. Decrees in Attachment Suits.

§ 884. Defences in Attachment Suits.—There are some defences peculiar to suits commenced by original attachment. 1 If there be, on the face of the record, a want of any of the prerequisites to the issuance of a writ of original attachment, the bill may be dismissed on motion; 2 and if any of said prerequisites are wanting, in fact, but do not so appear on the face of the record, the fact may be made to appear by a plea in abatement. 3 If an original attachment bill show on its face no cause for an original attachment, it will be dismissed on demurrer. 4

If the ground alleged for an attachment be false, the defendant may put such ground in issue by a negative plea in abatement; 5 but such plea must traverse all the grounds of attachment alleged in the bill. 6 prehension," and Milliken & Vertrees say is "meaningless," does not follow the original statute, as will be seen in James v. Hall, 1 Swan, 297, and 1 Scott's Rev., 467. The original act says "No judicial process," &c.; and a scrutinious comparison of sections 22 and 23 of the original act will show that the process referred to in the original act was (1) a judicial attachment against a garnishee, allowed by section 22, (Code, § 3489), "grounded on an original attachment;" and (2) an execution when the defendant was personally served with subpoena. The term "judicial process" in the original act is not synonymous with judicial attachment, but includes judicial attachment, garnishment, and execution; and section 3468 of the Code means, in the light of the original Act, that a defendant's estate shall not be subjected to sale by order of Court unless the defendant has been brought into Court by an original attachment proceeding, or by service of subpoena. James v. Hall, 1 Swan, 297.

204 Welch v. Robinson, 10 Hum., 264; James v. Hall, 1 Swan, 297; Grewar v. Henderson, 1 Tenn. Ch., 76. A return, "The defendant not found in my county," will not sustain a judicial attachment; the return must be, "The defendant not to be found in my county." Welch v. Robinson, 10 Hum., 264.

205 The Clerk must make the same order of publication on his rule docket, and publish the same sort of notice, as in cases originally commenced by attachment. Code, § 3467; Lyle v. McCurry, 1 Heisk., 26.

1 See, ante, §§ 246; 255-259.

2 Code, § 4386; sub-sec. 4; see, ante, § 271.

3 For instance, if the bill was in fact subsequently sworn to, or was subsequently amended so as to allege a statutory cause of attachment, the fact of such subsequent and unauthorized interpolations, not otherwise appearing, may be made to appear by a plea in abatement; and, if such plea be found true, the bill will be dismissed, if the jurisdiction of the Court is founded on the original attachment. See Code, §§ 3471; 3476.

DEFENCES AND DECREES IN ATTACHMENT SUITS.

The defences, predicated on the absence, insufficiency, or falsity, of the prerequisites to the issuance of the writ of attachment, must all be made before or when an answer or plea in bar is filed; they cannot be made in the answer. But the omission to make any of these defences does not in any way preclude the defendant from demurring to the bill as a pleading, or from filing a plea in bar to the bill, or an answer contesting the equities set up in the bill. After a plea in bar, or an answer, it is too late to object to any irregularities, or deficiencies, in the attachment proceedings. 8

If the defendant intends to dispute any of the grounds alleged for an original attachment, he must do so by a plea in abatement; he cannot put any of them in issue by denying them in his answer. If he files an answer, without, at the same time, or previously, filing a plea in abatement, he is deemed to waive any defence to the jurisdiction of his person he might have made based on the falsity of the grounds alleged for the attachment. 9 But, under the Act of 1897, the defendant can plead in abatement to the attachment, and plead in bar or answer at the same time, the old rule that a plea in bar, or answer, waived a plea in abatement previously filed, being thereby abrogated. 10 By the same Act, it is further provided that when a plea in abatement, and a plea in bar or answer, are filed at the same time, they shall both be heard at the same time, and judgment rendered on each. If, at such hearing, the plea in abatement he found true the suit will be dismissed without any adjudication on the merits of the bill; and if found false, the suit will be decided on its merits in favor of the complainant or defendant as Equity may require. 10a

In case of an ancillary attachment, however, the defendant may, without the aid of the Act of 1897, plead in abatement to it, and at the same time answer the bill on the merits. 14 The reason of the distinction is: that an original attachment is a means of enforcing the personal attendance of the defendant; whereas, an ancillary attachment is a mere means of impounding the defendant's property, and in no way affects the jurisdiction of the Court over the person of the defendant, and in no way affects the merits of the controversy. 15

Ordinarily a plea in abatement brings forward new matter, 16 that is to say, it alleges matter not contained in the bill, and not otherwise appearing elsewhere in the record of the case. But a plea in abatement to an original, or an ancillary writ of attachment, does not usually bring forward any new matter, but denies the ground or grounds of attachment alleged in the bill. If there be more than one ground of attachment alleged, whether alleged in the alternative, or pleader, the plea must traverse all of them. 17 The following forms will serve as guides:

PLEAS IN ABATEMENT TO AN ORIGINAL ATTACHMENT.

The defendant, Richard Roe, for plea in abatement to the original attachment sued out and levied in this cause, says, 10 Acts of 1897, ch. 121; Railroad v. McCollum, 21 Pick., 623; Sewell v. Tuthill & Patterson, 4 Cates, 271. It had been previously held by the Supreme Court, after much vacillation, that a defendant brought into Court by attachment of his property might plead in abatement to the attachment and answer to the merits; and that the general Equity rule that an answer overrules a plea in abatement has no application in attachment suits under our practice. 6 Pick., 735. See Batrille & Co. v. Youngblood, 16 Lea, 355; Simpson v. Railway Co., 5 Pick., 304; Rivins v. Mathews, 7 Bax., 256; Wilson v. Elter, 7 Cold., 31.

14 Price v. Boucher, 12 Heisk., 373; Robb v. Parker, 4 Heisk., 58; Bank v. Foster, 6 Pick., 735.
15 The pleader must keep in mind, that a defence to the attachment is one thing, and a defence to the merits is another, and wholly different, thing: he may succeed in one and fail in the other.

17 Cooke v. Richards, 11 Heisk., 715.
PLEAS IN ABA TEMENT TO AN ANCILLARY ATTACHMENT.

[For title, commencement, and conclusion, see, ante, § 254.]

The defendant, Richard Roe, for plea in abatement to the ancillary writ of attachment sued out and levied in this cause, says, That he had not removed, nor was he removing, himself out of the county [nam ing the county specified in the bill,] privately, at the time the bill in this cause was filed; but that he then was living openly in said county, attending openly to his business, and has so continued to do ever since. That he had not absconded, nor was he absconding or concealing himself or property, at the time the bill in this cause was filed; but that he was then living openly in the county of Claiborne, the county of his usual residence, attending openly to his ordinary business, and that he and his property have been in said county ever since, openly and unconcealed.

Wherefore, he prays that said ancillary writ of attachment be abated and quashed, and that the property levied on thereunder be released and discharged.

[Annex affidavit, as in § 254, ante.]

P. G. Fulkerson, Solicitor.

It will be seen by an examination of the foregoing pleas, that they mainly consist of an emphatic and absolute denial of the ground of attachment alleged in the bill. 19

On a plea in abatement being filed in an attachment case, the same proceedings take place as in other cases of pleas in abatement, as already shown. 20

The issues of fact raised by a replication may be determined by the Chancellor, or, on proper demand, by a jury; and, where the plea is negative in its nature, and consists of a denial of the ground of attachment alleged in the bill, the burden of proof is on the complainant. 21

If the plea in abatement to an original attachment is sustained, the attachment is quashed, the property discharged, and the bill dismissed at the complainant’s cost. But the effect of sustaining a plea in abatement to an ancillary attachment is merely to abate the writ, and discharge and release the property; the suit as to the merits of the controversy is, in no way, affected by the decision of the plea in abatement, in such a case. If the defendant fails in his plea in abatement to the original attachment writ, either on a motion to strike it out, or upon argument as to its sufficiency, or upon an issue of fact as to its merits, he may plead in bar to the bill or answer it, and rely upon any defences he might have made had he not pleaded in abatement. 22

But when a plea in abatement is overruled, after a trial on the facts, if the defendant has no plea in bar or answer on file, and makes no application for leave to make further defense, a pro confesso and final decree may be rendered against him. 23

When the defendant pleads in abatement to the attachment and at the same time answers the bill on the merits, as he may now do, at the hearing he may win on his plea but fail on his answer, or vice versa, or may win on both or lose on both.

§ 885. Pleas in Abatement in Attachment Suits Not Overruled by Defences to the Merits.—In Equity pleading, the plea in abatement is to the bill, and a demurrer, plea in bar, or answer will overrule the plea in abatement, because all of these latter defenses are, also, to the bill; and the plea in abatement is least favored and is deemed to be waived by a subsequent pleading. But in an attachment suit the plea in abatement is not to the bill but to the attachment; hence, a demurrer, or plea in bar, or answer to the bill, will not overrule the plea in abatement to the attachment, for they are not aimed at the attachment but at the bill, and there is no conflict or inconsistency in the two defenses being simultaneously made in an attachment suit, the plea in abatement being intended to defeat the attachment and release the property, while the demurrer, plea in bar, and answer are intended to defeat the bill, and prevent an adverse decree on the merits.\textsuperscript{23a}

\textsection{886. Disposition of the Property Attached.}—The defendant may replevy the property attached, upon giving the bond required by the statute. This bond may be taken by the officer levying the attachment, if tendered before he returns the writ; and may be taken by the Clerk, after such return.\textsuperscript{24} If the property be not repleved, and the exigency require it, the Court may at any time appoint a receiver to collect, manage, and control, the property, or sell the same.\textsuperscript{25} The following is the form of

A REPLEVY BOND.

We, A, [the defendant], B, and C, [his sureties], acknowledge ourselves indebted to D, [the complainant], in the sum of [double the amount of the complainant’s demand, or at the defendant’s option, double the value of the property attached.] dollars. But if, in the event the said A is cast in the suit with said D, in the Chancery Court at Knoxville, wherein the property of said A has been attached, he, the said A, shall pay the debt, interest, and costs, sued for, [or (if the bond is in double the value of the property) shall pay the value of the property attached], then this bond, which is given to replevy said property, is to become void.\textsuperscript{26}

The bond, if given to the Sheriff, must be returned by him with the attachment. The bond, whether taken by the Sheriff or Clerk, constitutes a part of the record in the cause, and a decree may be entered upon it, in case the defendant is cast in the suit.\textsuperscript{27}

\textsection{887. Decrees in Attachment Suits.}—The attachment and publication are in lieu of personal service upon the defendant; and, after the levy of the attachment, and expiration of the time specified in the published notice for the defendant to make defence, the complainant may proceed as though the defendant had been brought into Court by personal service of summons.\textsuperscript{27a} The defendant must, also, make his defences as though he had actual notice of the suit. is not sufficient to satisfy the decree, execution may be awarded for the residue. 31 If, however, execution is awarded, in the first instance, by the decree, and no order of sale awarded at all, this is a waiver of the attachment lien, and in such case the Clerk has no authority to issue an order of sale. 32

But, where the defendant is brought into Court by attachment of his property and publication thereon, a judgment against him is quasi in rem, and valid only to the extent of the money realized from the property attached. A personal judgment and award of execution in such a case becomes coram non judice, and is null and void. 33

Where the defendant, in an original attachment suit, does not appear, the Court may stay final judgment not more than twelve and not less than six months from the return of the writ of attachment, unless the attachment is sued out because the defendant is a non-resident, and then the stay must be allowed, unless sufficient cause appear to the contrary. 34 The stay may be allowed by providing that if the decree is not satisfied by a day named, which must be six months or more from the return of the writ, the decree should be enforced by sale of the property attached, and by other necessary process. 35 The full limit of the stay should be allowed in all cases where the complainant sues under the pauper oath. 36

DEGREE IN AN ATTACHMENT SUIT.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe.

This cause came on this 25th day of August, 1900, to be finally heard before the Hon. Joseph W. Sneed, sitting by interchange with the Chancellor, upon the original bill, the writ of attachment and the return thereon, the answer of the defendant, and the proof, and upon argument of counsel, on consideration whereof the Court decrees as follows:

I.
That the complainant have and recover of the defendant, Richard Roe, the sum of twelve hundred dollars, the amount due on the note sued on; and, also, all the costs of the cause.

II.
That the property attached in this case, consisting of the following: [Here set it out, as described in the bill, or in the Sheriff's return on the attachment] be subjected to the satisfaction of this decree, and be sold by the Clerk and Master, [or, by the Sheriff,] in the manner prescribed by law, [or, if land be attached, the Court may order the Clerk and Master to sell it on a credit as in other cases of land sales. See, ante, § 626.]

If the proceeds of said sale shall not satisfy this decree, an execution 38 will issue for the balance that may be due hereon.

DEGREE ON AN ATTACHMENT BILL.

John Den,
vs.
Richard Fen.

This cause came on to be heard before the Hon. W. B. Staley, Chancellor, on this 7th day of June, 1885, on the bill, the exhibit thereto, the writ of attachment and return thereon, the judgment pro confesso heretofore regularly taken and entered against the defendant, [and the proof in the cause, if there be any proof other than the exhibit, and the pro confesso.]

And it appearing to the Court from an inspection of the note, filed as exhibit A to the complainant's bill, that there is due thereon to the complainant from the defendant the sum of one thousand two hundred and thirty dollars, principal and interest to this day, it is so decreed. And more than six months having elapsed since the return of the attachment, it is, therefore, ordered and adjudged that the complainant have and recover of the defendant, said sum of one thousand two hundred and thirty dollars, and all the costs of this cause.

31 Code, § 3536; 3538.
32 If the decree awards an execution only, this is an abandonment of the attachment lien. Staunton v. Harris, 9 Heisk., 579; Hurst v. Liford, 11 Heisk., 622. Hence, to continue the attachment lien, the decree must award an order of sale. Mullendore v. Hall, 2 Ch. Apps., 273.
33 Paper Co. v. Syber, 24 Pick., 444. An execution, however, can issue on all other judgments in attachment suits.
34 Code, §§ 3527-3528. This stay is discretionary, except in case of non-residents. Swan v. Roberts, 2 Cold., 154; Boggs v. Gamble, 3 Cold., 148. The stay runs not from the decree, but from the return of the writ; hence, if the decree is pronounced six months after the return of the writ, no stay need be allowed. Claybrook v. Wade, 7 Cold., 562; Mulloy v. White, 3 Tenn. Ch., 9.

II.

And it appearing that a certain tract of land, lying in the 7th civil district of Knox county, adjoining the lands of A, B, C, and D, containing 100 acres, has been attached in this cause, it is decreed by the Court that, unless the defendant, within three months from this date, shall pay and satisfy this decree, the Master, after advertising according to law, shall proceed to sell the said tract of land, or so much thereof as necessary, at public sale, to the highest and best bidder, at the Court House door in Knoxville, to satisfy this decree. And on special application of the complainant, both in his bill and at the bar, it is decreed that said land be sold on a credit of twelve months, and that when said sale is reported and confirmed, no right of redemption or repurchase shall exist in the defendant, or his creditors, but that such sale shall be absolute.

The Master will take a note with approved security, bearing interest from its date, for the purchase-money, and retain a lien on the land as further security. He will report to next term of the Court his action in the premises, until which time all further and other matters are reserved.

FINAL DEGREE ON REPLOY BOND IN ATTACHMENT SUIT.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe.

No. 914.—Final Decree.

This case came on to be further and finally heard this 27th day of January, 1906, upon the pleadings and proof, the writ of attachment and the return thereon, and the report of the Master, which report being unexcepted to is confirmed, on consideration of all which it is ordered and decreed that the complainant have and recover of the defendant, Richard Roe, the sum of two hundred and sixty dollars, the amount due on the note sued, and all the costs of the cause.

And it appearing from the said return that the property attached in this cause was reprieved by the defendant giving bond therefor in the penalty of six hundred dollars, with John Friend and Frank Jones as sureties thereon, conditioned to pay the debt, interest and costs sued for, or the value of the property attached, if the defendant was cast in the suit; and it appearing from said report that the value of said property when reprieved was three hundred dollars, it is further ordered and decreed that execution issue against the defendant Richard Roe, and his said sureties, John Friend and Frank Jones, for said sum of two hundred and sixty dollars, and costs.

And on his motion, a lien is declared on this recovery to secure the reasonable fee of Charles H. Brown, complainant's Solicitor.

§ 888. When Attachment Decrees May be Set Aside.—In all cases of attachment, sued out because the defendant resides out of the State, or has merely removed himself or property from the State, the judgment or decree by default may be set aside, upon application of the defendant and good cause shown, within twelve months thereafter; and defence permitted, upon such terms as the Court may impose. In all other cases of judgment or decree by default in attachment suits, the defendant cannot deny or put in issue the ground upon which the attachment was issued, but may, at any time thereafter, and within one year after the suing out of the attachment, commence an action on the attachment bond, and may recover such damages as he has actually sustained for wrongfully suing out the attachment; and, if sued out maliciously, as well as wrongfully, the jury may, on trial of such action, give vindictive damages.

Persons laboring under the disability of coverture, infancy or unsoundness of mind, at the rendition of the judgment or decree by default, have six months, after the removal of such disability, to appear and show cause against such judgment or decree.

The death of the defendant proceeded against by attachment, without personal service, whether the death occur before or after the commencement of the action, does not render the proceedings void, but his heirs or representatives, as the case may be, have the right within three years from the rendition of final judgment or decree, to make themselves parties, by petition showing merits, verified by affidavit, and contest the complainant's demand.

The judgment or decree, if executed before it is set aside, under any of the foregoing provisions, will be a protection to all persons acting under it, and will confer a good title to all property sold by virtue thereof.
§ 889. How Attachment Decrees are Set Aside.—The statute does not prescribe how attachment decrees may be set aside, further than that it is done "upon application" of the defendant, and good cause shown.\(^\text{43}\) In some of the reported cases, the application has been by motion, supported by affidavit;\(^\text{44}\) in others, by motion supported by a petition;\(^\text{45}\) and in one case by an original bill.\(^\text{46}\) If the application is supported by a sworn statement of the necessary facts, the applicant will not be denied relief because of the form of that statement.\(^\text{47}\) Nevertheless, the proper method of making the application is by a sworn petition,\(^\text{48}\) and this petition may, in order to save the bar of the statute, be filed in vacation, provided, of course, the motion is made at the term next following.\(^\text{49}\) The petition may, also, pray to have the decree superseded.\(^\text{50}\) The petition should clearly set forth the following:

1. That a decree has been rendered against the petitioner; stating in the petition when, and in what Court, rendered, and in whose favor.

2. That the decree was rendered in a suit begun by an original attachment.

3. That the attachment was sued out, because either the petitioner resided out of the State, or had merely removed himself or property from the State, as the case may be.\(^\text{51}\)

4. And the petition must, in addition to the foregoing statements, show "good cause" for setting the decree aside. Good cause means such a state of facts as, if true, would rebut or destroy the equity, or cause of action, alleged in the bill, and show that, on the merits of the case, the petitioner has a good defense, and the decree is unjust.\(^\text{52}\)

5. The petition must be sworn to, and the verification should be on the petitioner's own knowledge, and not on information and belief.\(^\text{53}\)

The complainant in the suit is entitled to notice of the filing of the petition, but a regular subpoena need not issue for this purpose. If the complainant seeks to resist the petition, the proper practice is to test its sufficiency by a motion to dismiss the petition, because insufficient. No defence to the petition, by answer or other denial of its allegation, is permissible; and, on the hearing of a motion to dismiss, the Court cannot look at anything outside the petition, unless there be some matter of record that invalidates it. If, upon its face, the petition shows sufficient facts and merits, and is not fatally contradicted by the record, no facts aliunde can be set up to defeat the petitioner's right to have the decree set aside, and to make defence to the bill, upon such terms as the Court may impose. The petition need not be accompanied by an answer to the bill;\(^\text{54}\) its office is to open the door for an answer; and this done, it has served its purpose and becomes functus officio.\(^\text{55}\) But if the petition contains all the matters of defence the petitioner desires to set up, it may be allowed to stand as an answer to the bill.\(^\text{56}\)

In other words, where the bill alleges one of said causes, along with others, the petitioner must aver that one of said two causes was in fact true, and hence the real cause for the attachment. Smith v. Foster, 3 Cold., 139; Gill v. Wyatt, 6 Heisk., 88.

To Hon. B. M. Webb, Chancellor:

Your petitioner, Richard Roe, respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That on the 2d day of June, 1891, a decree by default was rendered against him in said cause and Court in favor of the said complainant, John Doe, for one thousand dollars, and costs of suit, which decree is still in full force, and unappealed from.

II.

Said decree is based upon a proceeding by original attachment levied upon petitioner's property, upon the ground that he resided out of the State. Petitioner avers that he was a non-resident when said attachment writ was issued, and that he had no knowledge or notice whatsoever of the said suit, or of any of the proceedings therein, until after the said decree had been pronounced, and the term closed at which it was rendered.

III.

Said decree is wholly unjust. The allegation in the bill, on which it is based, that the petitioner owed the complainant Doe the sum of one thousand dollars, on account, was utterly false. Petitioner did not, when the bill in this case was filed, or when said decree was rendered, owe the complainant anything. Before petitioner left Tennessee, he and the complainant had a full and final settlement, and the latter gave your petitioner a receipt in full, which is made a part of this petition, and marked A. Said pretended account on which said bill is based is utterly unfounded, and was abandoned by complainant, when said settlement was made.

IV.

Said decree ordered the Clerk and Master to sell the property of petitioner therein described, and said property has been advertised for sale, and will be sold unless said sale is superseded,\textsuperscript{58} or restrained.

V.

The premises considered, your petitioner prays:

1st. That notice of this petition be issued by order of your honor, and served on said complainant;

2d. That this petition be considered, also, an answer to said bill, and that, on the hearing of this petition, said decree, and also the decree pro confesso, be set aside, and vacated, and this petition allowed to stand as an answer\textsuperscript{59} to said bill.

3d. That, in the meantime, a restraining order be granted and issued to stay all further proceedings under said decree, and on said advertisement of sale.\textsuperscript{60}

4th. And that petitioner have such other, further and general relief, as he may be entitled to.

This is the first application for a restraining order in this case.

W. V. Whitson, Solicitor.

State of Tennessee,
DeKalb county.

Richard Roe makes oath that the statements in his foregoing petition are true.

[\textit{Jurat, as in § 797, ante.}]

RICHARD ROE.

RESTRAINING ORDER.

To the Clerk and Master at Smithville:

You are hereby restrained from proceeding further under the decree and advertisement of sale referred to in the foregoing petition.

You will also file this petition,\textsuperscript{61} and issue the notice to the complainant prayed for therein.

July 3, 1891.
B. M. Webb, Chancellor.

If, at the hearing, the prayer of the petition is granted, the following order would be entered on the minutes:

pronounced herein, at the last term may be set aside, coming on to be heard this day, the Chancellor is of opinion that petitioner is entitled to the relief by him prayed.

It is, therefore, ordered and decreed by the Court that the decrees pronounced in this cause at the last term, both the decree pro confesso and the final decree based thereon, be vacated, set aside, and for nothing held; that the cause be reinstated on the trial docket, and the petition be allowed to stand as an answer to the bill, and be refiled as such, accordingly.

And thereupon this cause was remanded to the rules for proof generally.

SUITES FOR RECEIVERS; AND PROCEEDINGS THEREIN.

ARTICLE II. In What Cases a Receiver will be Appointed.

ARTICLE III. Time and Manner of Appointing Receivers.

ARTICLE IV. Powers, Duties, and Liabilities, of Receivers.

ARTICLE V. Settlements, Removal, and Discharge, of Receivers.

ARTICLE I.

RECEIVERS GENERALLY CONSIDERED.

§ 891. Office of a Receiver.

§ 892. Who May be Appointed Receiver.

§ 893. Of What a Receiver May be Appointed.

§ 894. Effect of a Receivership.

§ 891. Office of a Receiver.—The Courts of this State are all vested with power to appoint receivers for the safe-keeping, collection, management, and disposition, of property in litigation in such Court, whenever necessary to the ends of substantial justice.¹

A receiver is a person appointed by the Court (1) to receive the rents and profits of land, or other property, (2) to sell property in the custody of the Court when so ordered, (3) to collect notes, accounts, and other choses in action belonging to a suit, (4) to care for property which is the subject-matter of the litigation, and (5) to do any other acts in reference to property in the custody of the Court, that the Court may direct. He is an officer of the Court; and is regarded as truly and properly the hand of the Court.²

A receiver is appointed for the benefit of the interested party who makes the application, and for the benefit of all others who may eventually be found to have an interest in the property, or its proceeds; and the object of his appointment is to preserve the subject-matter of the litigation, or its rents and profits, from waste, loss or destruction, so that there may be some harvest after the labors of the controversy are over.³

The appointment of a receiver, however, does not involve the determination of any right, or affect the legal title of either party; and is, by no means, to be construed as deciding any of the issues involved in the controversy. The appointment is made for the benefit of the party who may ultimately appear to be entitled to the property or its proceeds.⁴

Where it would be difficult, inconvenient or perplexing, for one receiver to take charge of two or more separate estates, or stocks of goods, or sets of accounts, the Court will appoint more than one receiver.

§ 892. Who May be Appointed Receiver.—Any person may be appointed receiver; the rule, however, is to appoint a person who is not only wholly disinterested in the subject-matter of the litigation, but has, also, especial fitness for the particular duties he will be required to discharge. A person whose duty it would be to watch, check, and control, the receiver should never himself be appointed receiver; nor should the person be appointed whose neglect, misconduct, or fraud, has occasioned the litigation.⁵

¹ Code, § 3768. Such interlocutory appointment cannot be appealed from, suspended by a superseding, or revised upon a bill of review. High on Rec., § 26; Baird v. Turnpike Co., 1 Lea, 394; Bramley v. Tyree, 1 Lea, 531; Roberson v. Roberson, 3 Lea, 50.

² 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 658; High on Rec., §§ 1-2.

⁴ 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1741; post, § 894.

⁵ 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1732.
The Judge, or Chancellor, may, however, appoint one of the parties with the consent of the others, or if no one else can readily be obtained to accept, may appoint the Clerk and Master, or his deputy.\footnote{6}

\section*{§ 893. Of What a Receiver May be Appointed.} The property a receiver is most commonly appointed to take charge of is: (1) property levied on by attachment, or execution, and liable to perish or deteriorate, pending the suit; (2) goods, wares, and merchandise, involved in the litigation; (3) judgments, notes, accounts, and other claims, attached or impounded by garnishment; (4) partnership property of all kinds; (5) corporation property of all kinds; (6) real estate belonging to tenants in common, or encumbered by liens belonging to other parties, and by them sought to be enforced; (7) assets of a deceased person; (8) trust property of all kinds; (9) proceeds of waste committed on real estate; (10) rents and profits of real estate, or of coal, iron, or other mines, or of quarries, or of turnpikes and railroads. Indeed, it may be stated, generally, that a receiver may be appointed of any kind of property, or of the proceeds of any kind of property, real, personal or mixed, legal or equitable, that may be disposed of by the decree of the Court in the cause. And, on the other hand, the Court has no right to appoint a receiver of property that is not subject to execution or attachment, except in a suit by a wife for divorce and alimony, and except in cases where the purpose of the receivership is to protect or preserve the exempt property for the benefit of the owner thereof.

\section*{§ 894. Effect of a Receivership.} A receiver is appointed on behalf of all parties, and not of any one; and the appointment alters no right, and adjudges no question. The appointment is merely to hold the property for the benefit of the party who may ultimately appear to be entitled to it; and when such party is ascertained, the receiver will be considered his receiver.\footnote{7} As the result of these principles, if any loss happens by the destruction, or deterioration of the property, or by the misconduct of the receiver, such loss must be borne by the estate in his hands, as between the parties to the suit.\footnote{8}

As soon as his bond has been accepted by the Clerk and Master, the receiver's appointment is complete, and the title and right of possession to the property committed to him, instantly vests in him as of the date of his appointment;\footnote{9} and it is the duty of all the parties to the suit to surrender to the receiver any of the property in their possession, or under their control. The tenants of the parties will also attorn to the receiver and pay their rents to him, including all rents in arrears;\footnote{10} and if any of the property has been levied on, between the date of the receiver's appointment and the execution of his bond, the Sheriff must surrender it to the receiver.\footnote{11}

If any party refuse to surrender to the receiver the property in his possession, or any tenant refuse to attorn to him, such party or tenant may be attached for contempt, or a writ of possession may be awarded to put the receiver in possession.\footnote{12}

A receiver is an officer of the Court, and is considered as truly and properly the hand of the Court.\footnote{13} For this reason, the possession of a receiver is deemed the possession of the Court; and any attempt to disturb it, in any way, without the leave of the Court first obtained, will be a contempt of Court; and the \footnotesize{\textsuperscript{6} Under the English practice, the Master often appointed the receiver, and therefore could not act as receiver himself. § 895. WHEN A RECEIVER WILL BE APPOINTED.

§ 895. The Appointment of Receivers generally Considered. — The Chancery Court has power to appoint receivers for the safe keeping, collection, management, and disposition, of property in litigation in such Court, whenever necessary to the ends of substantial justice; and it may be laid down, as a general rule, that a receiver will be appointed whenever there is good ground to believe that the property itself, or its proceeds, belong, in whole or in part, to the complainants, or that they are entitled to its use, or to have it or its proceeds, or both, applied to the satisfaction of their claims, and the defendant in possession is so misusing the property or proceeds, or so acting with reference thereto, as to jeopardize the complainant’s rights or interests. To give the Court jurisdiction, however, to appoint a receiver there must be a cause pending.

Where at the hearing, the Court decares that the defendant is not entitled to the possession of the property, and the defendant is insolvent, or appeals on the pauper oath, the Court may appoint a receiver before granting the appeal, if an appeal is prayed, and may refuse an appeal from the order appointing a receiver.

16 Conley v. Deere, 11 Lea, 276.
18 Code, §§ 3768; 4432. The appointment of a receiver is in the nature of extraordinary process. Hamilton v. Wyne, 3 Shan., 34. See Code, § 5766, and the title of the Chapter containing the section. See also, the title of the Article containing Code, §§ 4434 and 4435, and notes. The immediate moving cause of the appointment of a receiver is the preservation of the subject of litigation, or the rents and profits of it, from waste, spoliation, loss, destruction, or removal, during the litigation, so that there may be some harvest, some fruits to gather, after the labors of the controversy are over.
19 Barb. Ch. Pr., 658; High on Rec., § 4. All the cases agree that a receiver is proper, if the fund or property, or its proceeds or profits, are in danger; and the most usual cases for a receiver are (1) either to prevent fraud, or (2) to secure the rents or profits, or (3) to save the subject of litigation from waste or material injury, or (4) to rescue it from probable deterioration, spoliation or destruction, or (5) to prevent its removal from the jurisdiction of the Court. And the appointment can only be made at the instance of a party who has an acknowledged interest, or a strong presumption of title in him; if alone, or in common with others. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1715-1716, notes; High on Rec., §§ 1-39.
21 It would seem that if the Court desires to have the receiver appointed by a final decree, act pending an appeal from that decree, the proper course to pursue is to set aside the final decree and the consequent appeal, and by an interlocutory order appoint a receiver, and put him in possession; and, on this being done, to pronounce a final decree on the § 896. Receivers in Suits by, or against, Partners.—In suits between partners, or between partners and their privies in estate, a receiver will ordinarily be appointed: 1, When the defendant is willfully mismanaging the partnership property; 2, When the defendant has been guilty of fraud in partnership matters; 3, When the defendant has assumed exclusive control of the business and assets of the firm; 4, When the conduct of the defendant is in gross violation of the articles of the partnership; 5, When irreconcilable dissensions and disagreements exist between the partners as to the management of the firm business, and loss is a probable result thereof; 6, When the mutual confidence has been destroyed by the conduct of the defendant; 7, When, in any other case, a dissolution has actually taken place by the death of all the partners, or by efflux of time, or is sought upon sufficient grounds; or 8, When the partner in possession of the assets is enjoined from selling or collecting them.5

In suits against a firm by creditors or other third parties, a receiver will ordinarily be appointed: 1, When the firm is insolvent and there is a contest between rival creditors over its assets; 2, When the assets of the firm, or of some member of the firm, have been attached or levied on by conflicting executions at law; 3, When some member of the firm has become a bankrupt; and 4, When, in any case, it becomes necessary to ascertain the net interest of any member of the firm, either to subject it to the payment of his debt, or to deliver it to his administrator, executor, legatee, or assignee.6

§ 897. Receivers in Suits against Debtors.—A receiver will be appointed on behalf of a creditor, in the following cases:
1. Where a Debtor is Enjoined from collecting his debts, or from disposing of property liable to waste, or expensive to keep.7
2. Where a Debtor Has Made an Assignment, which is assailed as fraudulent, on strong grounds, or which the assignee fails or refuses to properly enforce, or when the trustee is acting fraudulently, and in either event the property is liable to deteriorate, or debts or other assets are liable to be lost.8
3. Where Personal Property Has Been Levied on, or garnished, in an attachment suit, and is perishable, or expensive to keep, or liable to deteriorate in quality or price, or consists of merchandise, or notes, or accounts.9
4. Where Many Executions or Attachments Have Been Levied on the Same Property, and the cost of a multiplicity of suits will greatly lessen the net fund to be paid to the various creditors, the Court will, on a proper bill for that purpose, appoint a receiver, settle the priorities of the parties, and distribute the fund accordingly.
5. Where a Judgment Creditor Seeks to Subject Property, Held in Trust for the debtor upon a bill filed after an execution has been returned, unsatisfied in whole or in part.10

§ 898. Receivers in Suits against Corporations.—A receiver will be put in charge of the property, assets and franchises of a corporation, on application of a creditor or stockholder: 1, When it becomes insolvent;11 or 2, When its merits, and grant an appeal from such final decree, but refuse an appeal from the interlocutory order appointing a receiver. See Merrill v. Elam, 2 Tenn. Ch., 513; Payne v. Baxter, 2 Tenn. Ch., 519; Brien v. Paul, 3 Tenn. Ch., 360; Hoge v. Hollister, 8 Bax., 532; Enochs v. Wilson, 11 Lea, 228; High on Rec., §§ 25-29.
No appeal will lie from an interlocutory order appointing a receiver, nor will such an order be superseded by the Supreme Court when it was discretionary. Enochs v. Wilson, 11 Lea, 228; Johnson v. Hanner, 2 Lea, 8.
3 See generally, High on Rec., §§ 472-529; Pars. on Part., 312-321; 2 Dan. Ch., Pr., 1727-1729. § 899. Receivers in Suits to Recover Realty.—Although as a rule the Chancellor is reluctant to appoint a receiver on a bill to recover the possession of realty, nevertheless, one will be appointed when the complainant clearly shows that the legal title and the immediate right of possession and enjoyment are both in him, and (1) that he has been deprived of the possession by fraud, or (2) that there is imminent danger of irreparable injury to the property if left in the defendant’s possession; or (3) that there is a strong probability arising from the fraud, mismanagement, or insolvency, of the defendant that the complainant will lose the rents and profits of the land, unless a receiver is appointed.16 Where, however, the contest between the parties grows exclusively out of conflict of legal titles without any equitable circumstances affecting the conscience of the defendant, a receiver will not ordinarily be appointed.17 But after a decree in favor of the complainant, the Court, will consider that as evidence of his right, and will appoint a receiver when necessary to preserve the rents and profits of the land from loss, pending a motion for a new trial, or a rehearing, or an appeal.18

If, however, on an application for the appointment of a receiver to collect rents of real property, the defendant in possession will agree to pay the rents and profits into Court, and will give bond and security so to do, the application for a receiver will be denied.10

§ 900. Receivers in Suits to Protect Trust Property and Liens.—Courts of Chancery exercise all powers deemed necessary to protect property charged with a trust, and will appoint receivers:

1. Where an Executor, Administrator, Guardian or Other Trustee, is so acting as to endanger the safety of the trust property, whatever its character; or is misapplying the property, or its proceeds; or is otherwise violating his trust duties to the detriment of the beneficiaries, especially if he is insolvent, or has left the State,20 or is dead, or non compos, or has resigned.21

2. Where the Trusteeship is in Dispute, as in a contest over a will, or over the appointment of an administrator,22 guardian, or trustee, and the estate of the decedent, or the trust property, real or personal, is liable to deteriorate, or the

But now, that, under the Act of 1877, the Chancery Court has full jurisdiction to try the legal title, it will appoint a receiver in cases where formerly such power would not have been exercised, especially where there is any waste, or where the defendant is insolvent. The Code enlarges the powers of the Courts in granting injunctions and appointing receivers; and provides that in real actions, and in ac-rents or profits are liable to be lost, or the assets are liable to be wasted, by reason whereof complainant’s rights or interests are imperilled.

3. Where a Mortgage, Trust Deed or Other Express Lien on property, real or personal, is sought to be enforced, and such property is being so misused, or wasted, or neglected, by the defendant that the security is greatly endangered, and likely to be lost, or rendered inadequate, especially if the debtor fails to keep the taxes paid, or has abandoned the property, or is insolvent, or if the mortgage debt is overdue, and the land mortgaged is inadequate security.23

§ 901. Receivers to Protect Rights in Property where No Trusts Exist. Receivers will be appointed wherever imperatively necessary to protect the complainant’s rights to property, real or personal, in cases where there are no trust relations or duties:

1. Where Complainant is a Tenant in Common, or otherwise interested beneficially with the defendant in the proceeds, profits, uses, or enjoyment, of property, real or personal, and the defendant wholly excludes him therefrom, and refuses to accord to him his rights, and especially if he is insolvent.24

2. Where the Property Belongs to an Infant, or to a person of unsound mind, or has escheated to the State,25 and there is no guardian, or personal representative, or other person lawfully entitled to take the same into possession, and properly care and account for it, until those entitled are able to do so.26

3. Where a Tenant for Life, or Vendee Under a Title Bond, or Other Party in Possession of Property, real or personal, not having absolute title thereto, fails to keep down the taxes,27 or to discharge encumbrances, or to keep inflammable property insured, or to keep up the repairs, whereby the rights of those entitled to the remainder, or to other interest in, or liens on, the property, are in danger of being lost or greatly injured.

4. Where, in a Suit for Alimony or Maintenance, the defendant fails to provide for complainant, or to pay the instalments of alimony or maintenance ordered by the Court, and especially in suits for maintenance where the land is charged with the complainant’s support.28

5. Where, in Any Case, it is Necessary to the Ends of Substantial Justice to safely keep, manage, collect, sell, rent or otherwise dispose of, property in litigation.29

§ 902. The Chancellor’s Discretion, How Exercised.—The appointment of a receiver, when any sort of case is made out, is purely a matter of discretion. This discretion, however, acts according to equitable rules, and is the discretion of a sworn officer, anxious to do his duty impartially, and is not the whim or caprice of an irresponsible or indifferent person.30 In exercising this discretion on an application to appoint a receiver,

1. The Following Considerations Will Weigh in Favor of the Application:

1. That the defendant has been guilty of fraudulent or other inequitable conduct, jeopardizing complainant’s rights.

2. That the defendant is insolvent, and is enjoying the property or its proceeds.

3. That the defendant has not properly cared for the property, or has mismanaged or misused it, or has displayed incapacity or indifference, jeopardizing complainant’s rights.

4. That the defendant has failed to pay the taxes, or to keep the property duly insured when insurance is expedient, or stipulated.

(A good judge does nothing according to his own arbitrary will, nor from the prompting of social pleasure, but decides in accordance with law and justice.)
§ 903. TIME AND MANNER OF APPOINTING RECEIVERS.

5. That the parties interested are numerous, and no one of them has any particular right to the possession of the property.

6. That the property is charged with a trust, and the trustee’s conduct is questionable.

7. That a receivership can do no one any particular harm, and may be of great benefit to those entitled to the property, or its proceeds. On the other hand,

2. The Following Considerations Will Weigh Against the Application for a Receiver:

1. That the complainant has been guilty of laches, or inequitable conduct.

2. That the complainant is not clear and emphatic in the allegation of his equities, or his bill is sworn to on information and belief.

3. That the appointment is likely to greatly injure the defendant, while the advantages to the complainant will be comparatively small.

4. That the benefits of a receiver are likely to be counterbalanced by the trouble, confusion, expenses, or losses that will probably result from the appointment.

5. That there is no urgency, and an appointment would produce no benefits, even if the defendant would not be particularly injured thereby.

6. That the defendant is willing to comply with all orders necessary to secure the rights of the complainant, and to preserve the property, or fund, or its proceeds; and is willing to give bond therefor.

The Chancellor will, also, in exercising his discretion, consider whether upon a view of the whole case there is a probability (1) that the complainant will be entitled to recover; and (2) that he will be injured if the defendant is allowed to retain the possession of the property.31

If the answer is on oath, and it fully and fairly denies the equities of the bill, and the evidence adduced in support of the bill fails to overcome the denials of the answer, a receiver will not be appointed.32 Nor will the Court appoint a receiver if it will injuriously affect a person not a party to the suit.33

ARTICLE III.

TIME AND MANNER OF APPOINTING RECEIVERS.

§ 903. When and by Whom Receivers are Appointed.

§ 904. How the Application for a Receiver is Made.

§ 905. Frame of a Bill for a Receiver.

§ 906. Form of a Petition for a Receiver.
When a defendant is entitled to relief against a co-defendant, the Court may, in a proper case, appoint a receiver upon the application of the defendant entitled to relief; for Courts of Equity have regard to the rights of the parties, rather than to their situation as complainants or defendants. Receivers may be appointed by any Chancellor, or Circuit Judge, in vacation, and by the Chancellor alone during term time. If the application for the appointment of a receiver is made in vacation, reasonable notice of the time and place of such application, and of the person before whom it will be made, must be given to the opposite party, or good cause shown why such notice should not be given.

§ 904. How the Application for a Receiver is Made.—The application for a receiver is usually made by a prayer therefor in a bill, or in an amended or supplemental bill, or in a petition. Such a prayer, however, is unnecessary; if the bill lays a foundation for the appointment of a receiver by stating facts showing the propriety of such an appointment, the Court, looking at substance and not form, will, on motion, appoint a receiver, although there is no prayer therefor in the bill. Indeed, the necessity for the appointment of a receiver frequently occurs after the bill has been filed. If new facts arise pending the litigation, making necessary the appointment of a receiver, they may be brought before the Court by a supplemental bill, or by petition.

§ 905. Frame of a Bill for a Receiver.—The bill that seeks the appointment of a receiver should be both a pleading and an affidavit:

1. As a Pleading, it should show complainant’s cause of action clearly, and his right to, or interest in, the particular property or fund in litigation, and how he is entitled to its possession or proceeds, in whole or in part.

2. As an Affidavit, it should set forth fully the particular facts that show the danger the property, or fund, or the proceeds are in, and the necessity for a receiver to rescue the property, proceeds, or fund, from danger, loss, or destruction; and if there be any special acts of neglect, mismanagement, fraud, or willful disregard of complainant’s rights, such acts should be specified and detailed. The facts set forth should be on the complainant’s own knowledge, or on the personal knowledge of the person swearing to the bill or petition, an affidavit on information and belief being insufficient.

The bill must not only lay a proper foundation for the appointment of a receiver, but if the application for a receiver is to be made before answer, or before the hearing; it should, also, pray for such appointment. If, however, an immediate appointment is not wanted, such a prayer is not indispensable.
The bill or petition should also show upon its face that it is the first application for a receiver. ¹³

§ 906. Form of a Petition for a Receiver.—When the necessity for a receiver arises during the progress of a litigation, the proper mode of making the application is by a petition, or by motion supported by affidavit, where new parties are not necessary. The following is a form of a

PETITION FOR A RECEIVER.¹⁴

William L. Bramley, et al.,  }
vs.
Thomas J. Tyree, et al.  }
No. 683.—In the Chancery Court, at Lawrenceburg, Tenn.

To the Hon. George H. Nixon, Chancellor:
Your petitioners, the complainants in the above named cause, respectfully show to your Honor:

I. That on the 3d day of January, 1878, they filed their original bill in said cause, alleging (1) that the defendants had executed to petitioner Bramley, as trustee, for the benefit of the other petitioners, a deed of trust on certain lands in said bill and deed described, said lands to be sold by said trustee if the debt by said deed secured were not paid by March 30, 1878; and alleging (2) that said defendants were in possession of said lands, and were stripping the same of all its valuable timber, and committing other waste thereon, thereby greatly impairing the value of said land, and impairing the security given petitioners by said deed of trust; and (3) praying that the commission of waste be enjoined, and after the period fixed therefore in the deed, (March 30, 1878,) that said trust be executed by a sale of said lands, and the distribution of the proceeds among those thereunto entitled. Reference is here made to said original bill, and said deed now on file in this cause, for a fuller statement of their contents, and we pray your Honor to consider them as a part of this petition, on the hearing thereof.

II. Petitioners, in addition to what is stated in their said bill, now state to your Honor, that on January 26, 1878, Eliza P. Tyree, wife of said Thomas J. Tyree, by her next friend, filed her original bill in your Honor's said Court against petitioner and her husband, to have said trust deed set aside, and have a resulting trust in said lands declared in her favor. All of the defendants to her said bill, except her husband, have answered the same, denying all of its equities; but the pendency of her said suit throws such a cloud on the trustee's title to said lands that a sale thereof, before the removal of such cloud, would result in their being sacrificed.

III. Petitioners would further state that it will probably be many months before the said suit by said Eliza P. Tyree is terminated; that the object of said suit is to embarrass petitioners in enforcing said trust; that said defendants are both insolvent, and nothing can be made out of them by legal process, outside of said lands; that said lands will fall far short of paying the debts secured by said trust deed, and that the rents and profits of said lands will be required to pay the residue of said debts.

IV. Petitioners believe and charge that the object of the defendants in committing said waste, and in bringing the said suit of said Eliza, is to obtain all they can out of said lands by stripping it of its timber, and by holding the possession and enjoying the rents as long as possible, relying on their utter insolvency to shield them from the just claims and redress of petitioners, whose said security is becoming less and less every day, while said debts are becoming more and more every day by the accumulation of interest. The time fixed in said trust deed for its enforcement has now expired, and the trustee has now the right to proceed with the sale of said lands; but such sale is not now desirable for the reasons already stated.

V. The premises considered, petitioners pray:

1. That your Honor will forthwith appoint a receiver to take charge of all of said lands, and collect the rents and profits thereof, and hold them subject to your Honor's orders in this cause.

¹³ Code, § 4435. The Code seems to regard a receivership as in the nature of extraordinary process. See title of Chapter 20, preceding § 3766, and title to Article VIII, preceding § 4434, where receiverships are termed "extraordinary process," as they, also, are in §§ 3869 and 4454. When one considers that the order appointing a receiver, not only puts him into immediate possession of the property, requires the parties to surrender the property, and their tenants to attorn to him, but also, sometimes awards a writ of possession or assistance, the extraordinary character of the proceeding becomes manifest. Roberson v. Roberson, 3 Lea, 50; Baird v. Turnpike Co., 1 Lea, 307. Besides, if more than one application is made, there may be more than one receiver appointed, one by one Judge, and another by another Judge, and thus unseemly conflict might arise. In case of two receivers for the same property being appointed, the one first appointed will be deemed the rightful one, and the subsequent appointment will be deemed improvident, and will be revoked. High on Rec., §§ 152; 173.

¹⁴ This petition is based on the case of Bramley v. Tyree, 1 Lea, 531.
2. That at the hearing, said rents and profits be applied to the satisfaction of the debts secured by said trust deed.

3. That your Honor will make all such other and further orders as may be necessary to protect, secure, and enforce petitioners' rights and equities in the premises.

This is the first application for a receiver in this cause.

[Annex affidavit by the trustee, or one of the other petitioners: see, § 789, ante.]

The application may also be made by motion, when all the necessary parties are before the Court. If the facts supporting such a motion do not otherwise appear, they must be made to appear by affidavit. These affidavits, however, should be as full, particular, and precise, as a bill or petition filed for the same purpose.\(^{15}\)

At the hearing of an application for a receiver on bill and answer, it is proper for the Court to hear affidavits on behalf of the complainant.\(^ {16}\)

§ 907. Notice of the Application for a Receiver.—Reasonable notice of the time and place of the application for the appointment of a receiver, and of the Judge or Chancellor to whom the application will be made, must be given the defendant, or good cause shown why such notice should not be given.\(^ {17}\) The following is a form of a NOTICE OF MOTION FOR A RECEIVER.

A B, \[ vs. \]

C D. \[

Mr. C D:

Take notice, that I will, at 10 a.m. on August 20, 1890, before Chancellor John P. Smith, at the office of the Clerk and Master, in Jonesboro, move for the appointment of a receiver in said cause, as prayed in the bill, [or, in the amended or supplemental bill.]

Aug. 14, 1890.

A B, by John P. Davis, Solicitor.

This notice should be served in the same manner as a notice to take depositions, and the complainant should have the original notice with the officer's return thereon, or affidavit of service, at the time he makes his motion.

If no notice can be given, because of the extreme urgency of the matter, or because the defendant is a non-resident, or cannot be found, or for other good cause, affidavit should be made showing the fact, unless it appears in the bill, or otherwise.

§ 908. Form of an Order Appointing a Receiver.—If on the reading of the bill, or the bill and affidavit, the Judge, or Chancellor, should be of opinion that a case for the instantaneous appointment of a receiver is made out, he will make the appointment in writing, substantially as follows:

ORDER APPOINTING A RECEIVER, AT CHAMBERS.

A B, \[ vs. \]

C D. \[

The motion in this cause for the appointment of a receiver coming on this day to be heard before me, at Chambers, on consideration thereof it is allowed: and E F is hereby appointed receiver of all the property described in the bill, and on his giving a receiver's bond, with two sufficient sureties in the penalty of two thousand dollars,\(^ {18}\) he will enter upon the discharge of his duties as such receiver, and will at once proceed at public or private sale, as he may deem best, to convert into money all the personal property and choses in action mentioned in the bill; the real estate he will rent out for the term of one year from expiration of the present lease; the rents of the current year he will collect and account for. The Clerk and Master will give him a copy of this order as his evidence of authority, and if possession of any of said personal property is refused him, or if the tenants of the said real estate refuse to attend to him, the Master will issue a writ of possession to the Sheriff to put the receiver into the full and peaceable possession of all the property so withheld. The receiver will report his action in the premises to the next term of said Court. The Clerk and Master will file this order in the cause, and note it on his Rule docket.

Aug. 20, 1890.

John P. Smith, Chancellor.

\(^ {16}\) High on Rec., § 83.

\(^ {17}\) Code, § 4452. What would be good cause has heretofore been shown. See, ante, § 904, note 8.

\(^ {18}\) The penalty should be double the probable amount of money, or personal property, committed to the receiver. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1735.
This order may be endorsed on the notice, or on the bill or copy of the bill, or may be written on a separate sheet of paper. When written and signed, it will be delivered or mailed to the Clerk and Master.

If the Court be in session, the motion for the appointment of a receiver may be made, at any time after the appearance of the defendant, on the bill, or on the bill and petition, or on the bill and affidavits, or on an amended or a supplemental bill; and the order for the appointment will be substantially the same as the order at Chambers above given, and the proceedings consequent on the order are the same.

Sometimes the same bill prays and makes out a case for an injunction, attachment, and the instanter ex parte appointment of a receiver. The following is a form for a

FIAT FOR AN INJUNCTION AND AN ATTACHMENT; AND AN ORDER APPOINTING A RECEIVER.

To the Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court at Crossville:

Upon this bill being filed and prosecution bond given, issue (1) the injunction as prayed, upon an injunction bond in the penalty of five thousand dollars being given; (2) the attachment as prayed, upon a proper bond therefor being given; and (3) on said bill being filed and bonds given, and said process issued, George W. Jones, of Cumberland county, is appointed receiver to take charge of all the property described in the bill, and also of all such property as may be found by the Sheriff in executing said attachment. The receiver will, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, execute a receiver's bond in the penalty of five thousand dollars, properly conditioned, the sureties to be approved by the Master. The receiver will at once sell all the personal property that is of a perishable nature, or expensive to keep; the notes of hand and accounts he will at once collect and convert into money; the stock of goods, wares, and merchandise, the fixtures, and the balance of the personal property, he will sell at private sale, provided he can get a satisfactory bid within thirty days, and if not he will then sell at auction. He may take notes with two good personal sureties, payable with interest from date, and due the first day of the next term of said Court, for all sales over fifty dollars. Before selling said stock of goods he will make a complete inventory thereof. He will require the tenants of the defendant to attorn to him, and pay over to him all rents, including any in arrears. He may pay any back taxes on said property, and may insure the same if expedient. All the defendants to this suit are enjoined to deliver to the receiver all the property in their possession, or under their control, hereby committed to him. If the receiver is denied possession of any of said property, or if any tenant refuses to attorn, the Clerk and Master will issue a writ of assistance, directed to the Sheriff of the county where the property is situated, to put the receiver into possession thereof. The receiver is empowered to bring all suits by him deemed necessary to fully execute this trust; and all persons are enjoined from suing him without permission of said Court. The receiver will report his action in the premises to the next term, and will file with it an itemized statement, showing every piece of property by him received, and the price for which sold, and all sums by him expended, and on what account, and the money and property in his hands.

Ordered at Chambers, August 16, 1891.

Thos. M. McConnell,
Chancellor of 3d Division.

The Chancellor will, instead of appointing a receiver, sometimes give the defendant the option of giving a bond to pay the complainant what the Court may decree him, thus:

CONDITIONAL APPOINTMENT OF A RECEIVER.

To the Clerk and Master: Unless the defendant give a five hundred dollar bond in this cause, with two good sureties, within five days after notice hereof, such bond conditioned to pay the complainant the value, [or, the rents,] of said [property, describing it briefly,] John Smith is hereby appointed receiver to take possession of said property, and sell [lease, secure, or otherwise deal with,] the same on the best terms obtainable, on due public notice. The receiver will, before acting, give bond in the penalty of one thousand dollars. The Master will forthwith notify the defendant of this order, and the defendant is hereby enjoined from in any way removing, encumbering, or disposing of, said property, until and unless he shall give said bond; and on his giving said bond, this order in reference to a receiver will stand vacated and annulled.

the required bond and security, 21 and give him a certified copy of the order of appointment. The following is a form for the

Know all men by these Presents:

That we, E F [the receiver,] and G H and I J, [his sureties,] acknowledge ourselves indebted to the State of Tennessee, for the use of those entitled, in the sum of two thousand dollars.

But this obligation to be void if the said E F, who has been appointed receiver in the case of A B vs. C D, in the Chancery Court at Nashville, shall promptly take charge of, and duly and faithfully account for, all the property of which he has been appointed receiver; and shall make and file all proper inventories and reports, and pay over or account for all moneys that may or should come into his hands, and obey all orders of the Court to him addressed, and otherwise faithfully discharge all the duties of his trust.

As witness [&c., duly dated, signed, and witnessed.]

The Chancellor or Judge may require the complainant applicant to give the bond, instead of the receiver, in which case the condition of the bond will be substantially the same as given above. 22

§ 910. Putting the Receiver Into Possession. |
§ 911. The Powers of a Receiver. |
§ 912. The Duties of a Receiver. |
§ 913. The Liabilities of a Receiver.

§ 910. Putting the Receiver into Possession; and Suits Resulting.—The order appointing a receiver should clearly specify the property committed to his custody; and should enjoin all the parties to the suit, their agents and attorneys, to surrender to the receiver all of such property in their possession, or under their control, and all books and papers relative thereto. The Court will award a writ of possession, called in Chancery a writ of assistance, to put the receiver into possession of any property denied him; and to eject all tenants who refuse to attend to the receiver. If any person, whether a party to the suit or not, in any way interferes with the property, or with the proper discharge of the receiver’s duties, he will be enjoined or attached, according to the flagrancy of his conduct. All persons who claim rights as against the receiver should come before the Court by petition, setting forth their rights and praying relief. 1
No suit can be brought against a receiver without express leave of the Court appointing him, when all persons are enjoined from suing him; and it is a contempt of Court to bring such a suit without such leave. The possession of the receiver is the possession of the Court appointing him; and all the property in his hands is in the custody of the Court. 2 But if no order has been made forbidding suits against a receiver, he is subject to suit, especially if operating a railroad; but the plaintiff, if successful, must file his judgment in the case wherein the receiver was appointed. In case of a suit against a receiver he may petition the Court for instructions, or for an injunction, which latter may be granted or refused. 3 If a receiver is in possession of, or claiming, property belonging to one not a party to the suit, such person can file an original bill against the parties to the suit claiming the property, and enjoin them from interfering with been appointed receiver in the case of A B vs. C D, in the Chancery Court at Nashville, shall faithfully discharge all the duties imposed on him by law, or the said Court. Code, §§ 3948; 4453. It is well, however, to set out the principal duties of the

§ 911. The Powers of a Receiver.—As a general rule, a receiver has no powers to exercise, and no duties to perform, other than those conferred and imposed by the order appointing him, and by the course and practice of the Court, in such cases.7

He has the power to take possession of all the unleased property, and obtain the attornments of all the tenants of the leased property, and to collect all the debts and claims committed to him. A receiver cannot sue to recover property never in his possession, nor to collect a claim or debt, nor to enforce any right, unless generally or specially empowered by the Court so to do; and when he sues he should aver, or show on the face of his bill, that he has been so empowered.8 If empowered to collect notes, accounts, and other choses in action, he may bring suit9 for that purpose, if necessary, in his own name. Where property is in the possession of a third person, who claims the right to retain it, the receiver must either sue him, or the complainant must make him a party to the bill, and have the receivership extended over him.10 A receiver appointed in another State cannot sue in this State to recover property never in his possession.11

§ 912. The Duties of Receiver.—The receiver, as soon as he has been qualified to act, should set to work diligently to discharge every duty imposed on him by the order of the Court. If he has been given the custody or management of personal property, he will at once take it all into his possession, and will demand all the choses in action, books, papers, and writings, relative to the business or property put into his custody. All the parties to the suit are usually enjoined to deliver up to the receiver all securities, notes, account books, papers, and other property, in their possession belonging to the business, and in case of their refusal to obey the order, the receiver should bring the matter to the attention of the party at whose instance he was appointed.

He will, as soon as he takes possession, make a complete inventory of the property, including therein every item, sufficiently described to identify it. If authorized to sell, he will at once take all steps necessary to realize a fair price; and if authorized to collect notes, accounts, or other choses in action, will at once proceed to do so, bringing suit whenever necessary.

When real estate has been committed to his custody, management, control, and disposition, he must at once take possession of it; or if tenants be in possession, he must require them at once to attend to him, and pay him the rent, including all that may be in arrears. If unable to obtain possession, or attornment, or the rents, he should report the fact to the Solicitor of the complainant in order that the necessary steps may be taken to obtain possession, or to procure the attornment; and if such Solicitor fail to take action, the receiver should apply to the Court for instruction and assistance.12 He must rent out such real estate as is not under lease, and must be diligent in collecting all the rents and profits of the estate, including all back rents due the defendant. He

But when a receiver sues at law he must stand on his legal rights, like any other plaintiff; and recover on the strength of his legal title. A Court of law is not concerned in maintaining the dignity of the Chancery Court in such a suit. Conley v. Deere, 11 Lca, 274. 7 3 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1748, note. 8 Simmons v. Taylor, 22 Pick., 729.

may expend small sums in making customary and necessary repairs, without previous order of the Court; and may pay back taxes, or any debt that, if left unpaid, would cause the title to the property to fail, provided it is manifestly to the interest of the parties that he pay such taxes or debt. If property, such as a mill, is deteriorating and expensive to keep, the receiver may be ordered to sell before the final hearing.\textsuperscript{13}

It is the duty of the party, on whose application a receiver is appointed, to see that he discharges his duties, and that all necessary orders are made from time to time to compel him to act and account, according to law; and any loss, which may occur by the negligence of such party, must, as between him and the other parties to the cause, fall upon him.\textsuperscript{14}

\textbf{§ 913. The Liabilities of a Receiver.}—A receiver must be careful to keep within his powers, and to fully, prudently, and faithfully, discharge all his duties. He will be responsible for all losses occasioned to the estate by his wilful default, or gross negligence. If he places money received by him in improper hands, he will be charged with all loss.\textsuperscript{15} He must account for all the property and money that went into his hands, or that could have been obtained or collected by reasonable diligence.

Property in the hands of the receiver, being in the hands of the Court, any loss, depreciation, or destruction of it, without his fault, must fall upon the owners.\textsuperscript{16} He is not liable for interest, unless he has received interest, or used the funds, or failed to pay over when required.\textsuperscript{17}

If the receiver fail to report, or fail to pay over the balance in his hands, when ordered by the Court, he may be committed to jail until he complies with such order. The Master may, also, be required to report what amount the receiver is liable for, if it does not otherwise appear; and when the amount is ascertained, the Court may render a decree therefor against the receiver and the sureties on his bond.

When any question of difficulty arises in the discharge of his duties the receiver should bring it before the Court by petition in the cause, and pray the advice and direction of the Court in the matter.\textsuperscript{18} ordinarily deemed necessary are included (1) expenses of caring for and guarding the property, when necessary; (2) indispensable repairs; (3) insur-

or Solicitors, or (4) improvements made to the property, or (5) unauthorized additions to the stock of goods, or business in his hands, or (6) for losses incurred by taking insufficient security, or (7) for costs or expenses of any kind which, by proper diligence or action, might have been avoided; or (8) any compensation for his services, when he fails to properly discharge his duties, or fails properly to make settlement, or account for moneys in his hands. The receiver should first obtain the consent of the Court, or of the parties, before taking any affirmative step, or assuming any responsibility.2

§ 915. Compensation of Receivers.—A receiver is entitled to such compensation as is usually allowed by law, or contract, for similar services. The usual commission is five per cent. of the amount collected and disbursed; but this amount may be increased in cases of special difficulty; and decreased where the amount is large, or the labor or responsibility inconceivable. In all cases, the compensation should be such as is reasonable for the services of a person competent to perform the duty. A percentage of five per cent. is only a general guide, and not an invariable rule.3 He may, also, have an allowance for extraordinary trouble or expense, and for counsel fees, if incurred with the approbation of the Chancellor, or Court.4 His compensation is allowed and paid, usually, out of the proceeds of the property that went into his hands; but, if there were no proceeds, his compensation will be taxed as a part of the costs of the cause.5

A surviving partner who serves as receiver is, ordinarily, entitled to no compensation, especially when appointed at his own request.6

A receiver who fails to settle and pay over when so ordered, or who fails to make reports when so ordered, or who is guilty of fraudulent or negligent conduct causing loss or delay, forfeits all right to compensation.7

§ 916. Receivers' Accounts and Reports.—A receiver must make a full and true report to the Court whenever required,8 showing what has come into his hands, what expenses he has incurred, and the condition of the estate. These reports should be minutely itemized, and accompanied with vouchers for every expenditure made. If the items are numerous, they may be put in an inventory, or schedule, and the sum total entered in the report, the inventory or schedule being filed therewith. The following is a form of a

INVENTORY OF NOTES AND ACCOUNTS.

[Exhibit C.]
The following is a full and true inventory of all the notes, accounts, and other money demands, belonging to C D, that came into my possession, and the amounts collected thereon:
1. Note on K L, for $50.00, date Aug. 1, 1889, due one day after date. Paid Sept. 1, 1890, $53.25

[And so on, giving each note, account, judgment, &c., their dates, and amounts, and when and how much collected.]
Total amount collected, $841.00

The notes, accounts, and judgments numbered 2, 6, 8, 11, and 13 are considered good, the others are doubtful, or worthless.

George W. Jones, Receiver.

The inventory, exhibit B, is substantially the same as the inventory exhibit A. A schedule of moneys expended should be made when the items are very numerous, and only the sum total entered in the report; but in all cases the receipts for all moneys paid out should be filed, duly numbered.

§ 917. Removal and Discharge of Receivers.—There is a distinction between the removal of a receiver and his discharge. A removal ordinarily implies a mere change in the incumbency of the office, whereas a discharge ordinarily implies that the duties of the receiver are at an end.

1. Removal of Receivers. The Court has full and absolute power to remove a receiver at any time of the litigation, and to appoint another in his place. The exercise of this power is not governed by any fixed rules, but belongs to the discretionary jurisdiction of the Court. On the removal of receivers, see, generally, High on Rec., §§ 820-831 a.
time, or in vacation; and the application for a change in the receivership should be on notice to both the receiver and the opposite party. The ordinary causes for removal are: (1) that the receiver is a biased kinsman to one of the parties; (2) that his conduct or declarations show that he is a partisan of one of the parties; (3) that he is incompetent mentally or physically; (4) that he has abandoned or is otherwise grossly neglecting his duties; (5) that he fails to give a proper bond when required, and (6) that he has become a bankrupt.

If the Court is made certain that the appointment of a receiver was improvidently made, the appointment will be revoked on motion.

2. Discharge of Receivers. Ordinarily, before a receiver will be discharged, he is required to make a full settlement with the Master; and that settlement must be reported and confirmed, and the full balance found against him paid into Court. On the settlement with the Master, all parties in interest are entitled to notice in order to have the opportunity of being present, and examining or cross-examining the receiver on oath; and, also, of introducing any evidence they may have to show the incorrectness or deficiency of the receiver's report.

If all parties are satisfied with the correctness and sufficiency of his reports, the trouble and expense of a reference to, and settlement with, the Master is avoided, by a consent order confirming the receiver's report, fixing his compensation and ordering his discharge, and the cancelling of his bond, on his paying into Court the full balance due from him.

If a receiver is appointed before answer, and the answer fully and fairly denies the equities of the bill, and is not overcome by the proofs adduced by the complainant, the receiver will, on motion of the defendant, be discharged.10

When a receiver has accepted the office by giving bond, he cannot be discharged on his own application, without showing some reasonable cause; but if he becomes a bankrupt, or falls into bad health, he will be discharged. A receiver will, also, be discharged if the complainant's demand is satisfied, or if the receivership becomes unnecessary; but, as his appointment is for the benefit of all parties, he will not be discharged on the ex parte application of the party who had him appointed.11

ATTACHMENTS OF THE PERSON FOR CONTEMPT.

§ 918. Contempts Generally Considered.
§ 920. Proceedings in Contempts in the Presence of the Court.
§ 921. Proceedings in Contempts Out of the Presence of the Court.
§ 922. Punishment for Contempts.
§ 923. Proceedings in Contempts Before the Master.
§ 924. Effect of a Contempt.

§ 918. Contempts Generally Considered.—A court of law operates upon the property of parties to a suit, but a Court of Chancery often operates upon the person of the parties, commanding them to do certain specified acts. It is manifest that, if the Court had no power to enforce obedience to such decrees, they would be wholly ineffectual, and would be absolutely disregarded. The violation of the decree of a Court is termed a contemp, and the Court of Chancery, from the beginning of its existence, has exercised the power to punish such violations, by process of attachment. ¹

The power to punish for contempt is one of the highest prerogatives of a Court of Justice; and, upon its bold and prudent exercise, depend the respect, the dignity, and efficiency, of Courts as arbiters of human rights. The mandates of a Court of Chancery must in all cases be obeyed, according to the spirit of the decree, promptly, faithfully and without question, or evasion. The party, upon whom the order or command of the Court operates, is not allowed to speculate upon the Equity of the bill, or the legality or regularity of the order, or decree, or of the writ issued thereon; but his simple duty is to obey: and when he disobeys it is a duty the Court owes, to itself and to the public, to punish him at once. ²

§ 919. Nature and Kinds of Contempts.—Under our statutes, the power of the several Courts to issue attachments, and inflict punishments for contempts of Court, is limited to the following cases:

1. The wilful misbehavior of any person in the presence of the Court, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice.

2. The wilful misbehavior of any of the officers of the Court, in their official transactions.

3. The wilful disobedience or resistance of any officer of the Court, party, juror, witness, or any other person, to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of the Court.

4. The abuse of, or unlawful interference with, the process or proceedings of the Court.

5. Wilfully conversing with jurors in relation to the merits of the cause, in the trial of which they are engaged, or otherwise tampering with them. ³

6. The failure of a defendant to answer a bill in the time and manner required by law. ⁴

¹ The power to punish contempts summarily, by process of attachment, has been coeval with the existence of Courts; and to Courts of Chancery it is indispensable. Their decrees are sometimes (1) affirmative, and require an act to be done, as that one party shall convey by deed, or shall surrender up an instrument to be cancelled; and sometimes (2) negative and restraining, as that a party shall refrain from doing a specified act. Without the power to enforce these decrees by punishing disobedience and violation of them, a Court of Chancery would be useless. Underwood’s case, 2 Hum., 46.

² Blair v. Nelson, 8 Bax., 1. See Article on enforcement of decrees by process of contempt, ante, §§ 321; 652.

³ Code, §§ 4106. As to the enforcement of judgments and decrees for contempt, see Code, §§ 3104; 4478; 4483; and §§ 651-652, ante.

§ 920. Proceedings in Contempts in the Presence of the Court.—If any of the foregoing contempts are committed in the presence of the Court, the offending party may be arrested by the officer waiting upon the Court, upon the verbal order of the Chancellor, without process or notice, and the contemner shall not be bailable; but the Court may proceed at once to fine, or imprison, or both. The proceedings in such a case are summary, but the power to so proceed is vital to the respectability, safety, and existence of the Court, and should be exercised unhesitatingly, fearlessly, and vigorously.

But, inasmuch as there are no pleadings to show the grounds of the Court’s jurisdiction and judgment, it is indispensable to the validity of such a summary proceeding that the judgment show on its face: (1) one or more of the statutory acts of contempt; (2) that such statutory act was committed in the presence of the Court; and (3) the penalty inflicted. The following is the form of such a

JUDGMENT FOR CONTEMPT.

The State, vs. John Lawless.

On this August 16, 1891, Court being in session, the defendant, John Lawless, did so willfully misbehave in the presence of the Court by loud talking as to obstruct the administration of justice; and, for such wilful act of contempt, it is ordered and adjudged that said defendant, he being present in Court, be fined the sum of twenty dollars; and be committed to the county jail for twenty-four hours, and that he pay all the costs of this proceeding. An execution will issue for said fine and costs, and a mittimus will issue for his commitment.

§ 921. Proceedings in Contempts Out of the Presence of the Court.—In all cases of contempts of Court committed out of the presence of the Court, except contempt by a defendant in failing to answer a bill, or contempt by a witness in failing to appear or answering questions, the mode of proceeding is as follows: The party complaining of the alleged contempt, must file a petition in the cause wherein it was committed, stating the contempt complained of, and by whom committed. The petition must be sworn to, and must be supported by such affidavits, returns of officers, or certified copy thereof, or other papers, as will fully show how the contempt arose.

If such petition show sufficient cause, the Chancellor will order the Clerk and Master to issue an attachment for the body of the contemner, fixing in the order the time and the place for his appearance, to answer the petition; and also, the amount and character of the bail-bond to be taken. The following is a form of a PETITION FOR AN ATTACHMENT FOR CONTEMPT.

A B, vs. C D. In Chancery, at Carthage.

To the Chancellor of said Court:

A B, complainant in said cause, respectfully shows to your Honor, that the injunction awarded in the cause was duly issued by the Clerk and Master, and duly served on the defendant C D, prohibiting him from cutting trees upon the complainant’s tract of land in said injunction described, and from removing therefrom any of the trees already cut thereon; but that said defendant since said service has cut other trees, and has removed all that had been cut prior to said service. Complainant charges that said cutting and removal were in wilful disobedience of said injunction, and in contempt of Court; and he, therefore, prays for an attachment for the body of the defendant, and that he answer hereunto.

Complainant files herewith the affidavits of William Jones and Henry Brown, marked exhibits A and B, respectively, to this petition, and will read them at the hearing in support of the petition; as he will, also, read the bill, writ of injunction, and return thereon.

This is the first application for an attachment in this case. E. L. GARDENIRE, Solicitor.

The petition being duly sworn to, the Chancellor will endorse thereon his

FIAT FOR AN ATTACHMENT FOR CONTEMPT.

To the Clerk and Master at Carthage:

File this petition; and issue an attachment for the body of C D, returnable to the first day of the next term of your Court. The Sheriff will take a bail-bond from the defendant for his appearance on the next term of the Court and the penalty of one thousand dollars, with two good sureties, conditioned to be void if the defendant appears and file his answer to said petition, on the first day of the next term, and do not depart from the Court without its leave.

August 20, 1891.

B. M. WESS, Chancellor.

If the petition is presented in open Court, the order for the attachment will be entered on the minutes, and will be substantially the same as the foregoing fiat. Neither a fiat nor an order should contain any adjudication, that the defendant has been guilty of the alleged contempt, but may allege that it appears to the Court that there is a probable cause for an attachment.

Upon the appearance and answer of the contemner, or on the production of his body, and refusal to answer, at the time and place designated, the Chancellor will hear the case upon the petition, affidavits and exhibits, and the answer thereto, in ease the contemner answers; and, if he fails to answer, then upon the case made by the petition. For good cause shown, the Chancellor may give the defendant further time to answer. The answer of the defendant denying the contempt, is not conclusive; but evidence may be heard in support of the petition, and, also, in support of the answer.

If the contemner fail to appear as required by his bond, judgment will be rendered thereon against him and his sureties, for the full amount thereof; and an alias attachment ordered to issue. In case an alias attachment is issued, and the contemner arrested thereon, no bail shall be taken, unless the contemner show good cause for his default, either before the Clerk and Master, in vacation, or before the Chancellor in term time. If the party charged with the contempt be in the custody of an officer, or in jail, the Court, or Chancellor, may award a writ of habeas corpus to bring him up to answer for his alleged misconduct.

§ 922. Punishment for Contempts.—The punishment for extraordinary contempts is by fine or imprisonment, or both, such fine, however, not to exceed fifty dollars, and the imprisonment not to exceed ten days. But if the contemipt consist in an omission to perform an act ordered by the Court, which it is yet in the power of the contemner to perform, he may be imprisoned until he performs it. If the contemipt consist in the performance of an act, forbidden by an order of the Court, the contemner may be imprisoned until the act is rectified by placing matters and person in statu quo, or by the payment of damages. All attachments for the non-performance of decrees, are in the nature of an 15 In proceedings for contempt against a party to the suit to compel the defendant to answer, or to enforce the performance of a decree, or order, the affidavits, both before and after the attachment, should be entitled in the original cause. In proceedings for contempt against witnesses, and others, who are not parties to the suit, the affidavits previous to the order for the attachment should be entitled in the original cause; but all subsequent affidavits should be entitled in the name of the State, on the relation of the party prosecuting the attachment, against the person prosecuted. 1 Barb. ORDER OF COMMITMENT FOR NOT PERFORMING A DECREE.

A B, vs.
C D.

The petition filed in this case, praying an attachment against the defendant, C D, for not performing the decree of the Court in this cause commanding him to execute to the complainant a deed for the tract of land described in said decree, coming on to be heard, and the defendant being in Court, under arrest on the attachment heretofore issued against him on said petition, and his answer to said petition showing no sufficient excuse for not performing said decree, it is adjudged by the Court that the defendant is in contempt for not performing said decree; and it is, therefore, ordered and decreed that the defendant be committed to the jail of Smith county, there to remain until in presence of two proper witnesses he shall have duly executed and acknowledged the deed specified in said decree, and exhibited in said petition, and that a mittimus issue accordingly.

The order of the Court convicting a party of a contempt should recite the substance of the alleged misconduct, and that the defendant is guilty thereof. The mittimus should follow the decree, and command the Sheriff "to take the body of the said C D, and him safely and closely keep in the jail of Smith county, until he shall have duly executed and acknowledged the deed specified in the said decree." 31 The following is the form of a

MITTIMUS.

State of Tennessee,

To the Sheriff of said county:

Whereas, in a cause in the Chancery Court of said county, wherein A B is complainant and C D is defendant, it was ordered, at the May term, 1891, of said Court, that the said defendant, C D, be committed to the jail of Smith county, there to remain until [he shall do what the decree requires of him, here inserting the language of the order or decree of commitment.]

You are, therefore, hereby commanded to take the body of the said C D, and him safely and closely keep in the said jail, until he shall have duly [complied with said order of commitment, specifying what is required of him.]

As witness my hand, this May 20, 1891. C. W. Garrett, C. & M.

If any one is illegally committed for an alleged contempt, he may be discharged on a habeas corpus. If legally committed, he cannot be discharged until the time of his imprisonment has expired, if such time be limited by the order of commitment; but if he is imprisoned until he performs the decree, he cannot be discharged until he has so done. He may, however, obtain a habeas corpus from the Court, or the Chancellor in vacation, and be discharged upon purging his contempt, and upon such conditions in respect to his compliance with the decree as the Chancellor may think proper. In such a case, the adverse party, his agent or attorney, if in the State, is entitled to reasonable notice of the hearing of the writ of habeas corpus, and may interrogate the party in contempt upon his oath, and controvert the truth of his statements by other proof. 32

An appeal to the Supreme Court will lie from a judgment imposing either a fine or imprisonment for a contempt committed not in the presence of the Court. 33 If the contempt is in the presence of the Court, the defendant's remedy in case of his conviction is by writ of error and supersedeas. 34 contempt; and, upon the return of an officer, or proof by affidavit, of such service, it is the duty of the Master to issue an instanter attachment for such witness. The attachment should designate the penalty of the bail bond to be given by the witness, the bond to be conditioned for his appearance before the Chancellor, at a time and place to be specified, if practicable, or before the Court at the next succeeding term, if it be not then in session, to show cause why he should not be fined, or committed according to law for contempt. The following is a form of such AN ATTACHMENT FOR CONTEMPT.

State of Tennessee.

To the Sheriff of Anderson county:

We command you to attach John Reckless so as to have his body [before our Chancellor at the Clerk and Master's office, in Clinton, on September 2, 1890, at 10 a. m., or] before our Chancery Court at Clinton, at its next term, then and there to show cause why he should not be fined or committed according to law, for a contempt by him committed against the State, in failing to appear before the Master, when summoned as a witness, in the case of A B vs. C D.

You will take a bail-bond from said John Reckless, with two good sureties, in the penalty of two hundred and fifty dollars, conditioned for his appearance at the time and place above designated to show cause as aforesaid. Herein fail not, and have you then and there this writ, with a return showing how you have executed the same.

Witness James C. Scruggs, Clerk and Master of said Court, at office in Clinton, August 18, 1891.

JAMES C. SCRUGGS, C. & M.

If a witness should appear before the Master, and refuse to answer legal questions, it is the duty of the Master to commit him to jail, until he consents to give his testimony. In such cases, the mittimus should show on its face that the witness is committed for refusing to answer legal interrogatories, and shall require the Sheriff to safely and closely keep him in custody, in the county jail, until he consents to give his testimony.

The Master, while engaged in taking depositions, is vested with all the powers of the Court to preserve order, prevent interruption, and control the conduct of the parties in the examination of witnesses, and may summarily impose a fine not exceeding ten dollars.

The Master may, on application of the complainant, issue an attachment against a defendant for want of an answer, where the time for answering has expired, and the defendant has been served with subpoena.

§ 924. Effect of a Contempt.—He who seeks Equity must do Equity, and he who has done iniquity shall not have Equity. Therefore, it is a general rule that a party who is in contempt will not be heard by the Court, when he wishes to make a motion or ask a favor; and, if the contempt consists in his failure to answer, he will not be allowed to file any other pleading, in the particular cause wherein the contempt arose. His first duty is to purge his contempt, and the only steps he can take are to apply to the Court (1) to set aside the proceedings against him because they are irregular, and (2) to be discharged on the ground that he has purged himself of his contempt, by doing the act for the non-performance of which the contempt was incurred, and confessing judgment for the costs occasioned by his contumacy. But a party in contempt in one cause, is not thereby in contempt in another cause, even though the parties in such other cause be the same; and he is free to make motions and to file pleadings in the cause wherein he is not in contempt. Nor will the fact that a party is in contempt prevent him being heard in opposition to any special application or motion which the other side may make.

If the imposition of a fine should fail to preserve order, prevent interruption, or control the conduct of any party examining a witness, the Master should sue out a warrant for the arrest of the offender for obstructing the administration of justice. It would seem that the Master has no power to commit the offender. But the Master may report the offender to the Court, and he may there be punished for his contempt, on proper proceedings. PARTICULAR SUITS IN CHANCERY SPECIALLY CONSIDERED.

CHAPTER XLVI.

SUITS IN RELATION TO TRUSTS.

ARTICLE I. Suits in Relation to Express Trusts.

ARTICLE II. Suits in Relation to Resulting and Constructive Trusts.

ARTICLE I.

§ 925. Trusts Generally Considered.

§ 926. Cases of Express Trusts.

§ 927. Frame and Form of Bills in Cases of Express Trusts.

§ 928. Answer of an Executor to a Bill for an Accounting.

§ 929. Suits to Construe Wills, or Trusts.

§ 925. Trusts Generally Considered.—A trust, in the most enlarged sense in which that term is used in our jurisprudence, is a beneficial interest in property, real or personal, distinct from the legal possession and ownership thereof. In trusts, the legal title and possession of the property are in one person, called a trustee; the equitable title and beneficial use of the property are in another person, called a cestui que trust, or beneficiary. The trustee holds the direct and absolute dominion over the trust property, in the view of Courts at law; while, in the view of Courts of Equity, the trustee is a mere steward to hold, manage and account for the proceeds of, trust property for the exclusive benefit of the beneficiary. In the sight of a Court of law, the beneficiary has no interest in the trust property; while in the sight of a Court of Equity, the beneficiary has all the enjoyable interest. In short, the trustee holds the legal title and the possession of the trust property, but all the benefits arising from the property, its income or profits, belong wholly, or in part, to the beneficiary.1

As a general rule, property of every kind and form, real and personal, may be made the subject of a trust. Any person, who has the capacity to hold and dispose of property, can impress a trust upon it; and, generally, any person capable of holding property, may be made a trustee, or a beneficiary. Courts of Chancery have exclusive jurisdiction of all matters arising out of trusts of all kinds, express, resulting and constructive.2

§ 926. Cases of Express Trusts.—Express trusts are those directly and affirmatively created and declared (1) by the grantor; or (2) by a Court; or (3) by operation of law coupled with the assent of the person assuming the duties of the trust. The trusts devolved on special commissioners, receivers, Clerks and other persons appointed to do some act or series of acts for another's benefit, are instances where express trusts are created by a Court; and the duties devolved by the statutes upon administrators, executors, guardians and public officers, especially those who give official bonds, are instances of express trusts created by operation of law and the assent of the person assuming the duties. The most common cases wherein a Court of Chancery is called upon to act in relation to express trusts are suits: (1) to enforce marriage settlements, mortgages and trust deeds to secure debts; (2) to enforce assignments of property for the benefit of creditors; (3) to compel executors, administrators, guardians, receivers, Clerks and all other express trustees, to account for and pay over, to those entitled, the trust funds or other property that are, or should be, in their hands; (4) to compel all such persons to faithfully execute and carry out their trust duties of every character whatsoever, and, when necessary, to remove them and appoint other trustees; and (5) to advise and direct executors, administrators with the will annexed, and other trustees as to the construction or execution of a complicated or obscure will or other trust instrument, especially where there is contention among the beneficiaries as to its meaning.

1 2 Sto. Eq. Jur., § 964. See ante, § 46.

§ 927. Frame and Form of Bills in Cases of Express Trusts.—All express trusts result from relations, and reference is made to the various preceding sections treating of relations in the framing of bills. The draughtsman will (1) state the relation of the defendant to the complainant as shown in the preceding section, and state how it was created; (2) will show what equitable estate of the complainant the defendant is liable for; and (3) in what particular, or particulars, the defendant has failed to do his duty towards complainant in reference to said estate; and (4) will pray the Court to redress the wrongs complainant has suffered, to compel the defendant faithfully to discharge his trust, to order an account when necessary to ascertain the defendant’s financial liability, and to render a money decree against him when he is liable thereto.

BILL OF WARD AGAINST HIS GUARDIAN.

David Doe, a resident of Clay County, complainant,

vs.

John Doe, Richard Roe and Peter Poe, residents of Clay County, defendants.

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That he became entitled to a valuable estate as a distributee of the estate of his father, [giving his father’s name], and being then a minor, the defendant, John Doe, became his guardian, giving bond as such in the County Court of Clay county, with the defendants, Richard Roe and Peter Poe, as his sureties thereon. A certified copy of said guardian bond and of the record of said guardian’s appointment will be read at the hearing of this cause, if necessary.

II. That the sums of money belonging to complainant that went, or should have gone, into the hands of the said guardian amounted to, at least, the sum of two thousand dollars; and complainant reserves the right to show that the amount was much larger. The said guardian not having made a full exhibit of his guardianship, and the facts being largely within his exclusive knowledge, complainant is consequently unable, at present, to state with more definiteness the exact amount received by his said guardian.

III. That said guardian failed to make his settlements with the County Court Clerk of said County, as required by law; and when called on by complainant for a settlement, claimed to have in his hands “only a few hundred dollars, not exceeding four hundred, if that,” to use his own language, and even this sum he has not paid, nor tendered to complainant.

IV. Complainant being thus greatly wronged by the said John Doe, his guardian, and by the said Richard Roe and Peter Poe, said guardian’s sureties, comes into your Honor’s Court of Chancery, and prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c., see ante, §§ 158; 164].
2d. That said defendants answer this bill [but not on oath], and that the said John Doe, set out in his answer, or file as an exhibit thereto, a full, complete and detailed statement of each and every sum by him received as guardian of complainant, when and from whom received, and in what manner the same was invested or applied.
3d. That an account be taken and stated by the Master to show what estate of complainant said guardian received, and what balance he owes the complainant, and that complainant have a decree for such balance against all of the defendants.

Meigs’ Dig., § 553.
BILL FOR DISTRIBUTIVE SHARE.

To the Hon. George E. Seay, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Gallatin:
John Doe and David Doe, residents of Sumner county, complainants, v/s. Richard Roe, administrator of Daniel Doe, deceased, and Robert Roe and George Smith, all residents of Sumner county, defendants.
Complainants respectfully show to the Court:

I.
That Daniel Doe died, intestate, in Sumner county on March 10, 1888; and letters of administration on his estate were taken out in said county by the defendant, Richard Roe, on April 3, 1888. The defendants, Robert Roe and George Smith, are the sureties of said Richard Roe on his bond as said administrator.

II.
Complainants are the sole distributees of the estate of said Daniel Doe, deceased, and are entitled to the whole of said estate, after all lawful debts, charges, and other claims against the same have been paid. The assets of said estate are largely more than sufficient to pay said debts, charges, and claims; and there remains a large balance in the hands of said administrator, which he fails and refuses to pay over to complainants, said balance being about eight hundred dollars.

III.
The premises considered, complainants pray:
1st. That process issue to bring the defendants into Court and make them answer this bill, but their oaths to their answers are waived.
2d. That an account be taken to show how much said administrator is indebted to complainants; and that a decree be rendered against him, and his co-defendants as his said sureties, for the amount found to be due complainants; and
3d. For general relief.

John Doe,
David Doe.

[The bill must be verified by affidavit, as in § 789, ante.]

§ 928. Answer of an Executor to a Bill for an Accounting.—When a bill is filed against an administrator, executor, guardian or other trustee, he should display no resentment in his answer, unless his integrity is assailed, and even then a dignified response is most proper. He should remember that he is handling other people's money, and knows all the facts relative thereto, while the beneficiaries may know little or nothing, and that a bill in Chancery is often the best method of obtaining the information they desire. The following is a form of an

ANSWER OF AN EXECUTOR TO BILL BY DISTRIBUTEEES.6

[For title and commencement, see, ante, § 380].

I.
That he admits the death of George Doe, the father of complainants, and that he left a will which has been duly probated, and that this defendant has qualified as executor thereof, having been appointed in and by said will, and is now discharging his duties as such, and executing said will.

II.
This defendant also admits that complainants are the heirs and distributees of said testator, and that his co-defendants, Henry Roe and William Roe, are legatees under said will, and that his co-defendant, Mary Doe, is the widow and a legatee of said testator.

III.
Further answering, the defendant says that he duly filed with the County Court Clerk of Knox county a just, true, and perfect inventory of all the goods and chattels of his testator, properly verified; and in due course of administration has made sale of the same to the highest bidder, and returned to said Clerk a true account of such sale duly sworn to, which the County Court ordered to be recorded.7 This defendant is also collecting all notes, accounts and debts due or belonging to his testator, and is liquidating his testator's indebtedness as rapidly as possible; and defendant refers the complainants to said inventory and account for further and fuller information relative thereto; and says they show all the goods and chattels, rights and credits, accounts and choses in action that came into his hands as such executor.

6 This is not intended as an answer to the foregoing bill.
6 Code, § 2241.
7 Code, §§ 2243-2244.
Further answering, this defendant says that he is greatly delayed in his execution of said will, and in the settlement of said estate, by the pendency of several suits against him as executor, one of said suits pending in the Chancery Court at Knoxville, and the other in the Circuit Court at Clinton; the former suit seeks to recover an alleged debt of about four thousand dollars, and the latter suit is instituted to recover the testator's coal mine near Brickeville, in Anderson county; and if either suit is successful the testator's estate will be insolvent, and there will be nothing due the complainants except such interest as they may have, if any, in the exempt property, real and personal.

Further answering, the defendant denies that he has wasted any of his testator's assets, or failed to take all necessary and proper steps to possess himself of all of his testator's estate; and he would be obliged to the complainants, if they or any of them, will point out to him any asset not reduced to possession by this defendant, or any claim against the estate as to which there is a good defence; and this defendant can not regard their failure so to do in the past, or failure to specify in their bill any act of waste, neglect, mispayment, or other breach of trust, as good evidence of his correct discharge of his duties as executor.

Further answering, this defendant says that he admits there are serious complications in said will, and grave doubts as to the proper interpretation of parts thereof, and he believes that it will be necessary to have your Honor construe said will if it should turn out that said estate is solvent; but this defendant did not deem it wise and proper to file a bill for such construction and advice as long as there were doubts whether there would be any part of said estate left after said suits were ended, and all of testator's debts were paid, especially as the doubtful parts of said will applied to the residue of the estate after certain legacies and preferred bequests had been paid.

In conclusion, this defendant says he is perfectly willing and really glad to have a chance to submit to your Honor what he has done and is doing as executor, and to have all accounts taken, by your Honor deemed necessary; but he is advised that complainant's bill is prematurely filed, and might have been demurred to on that ground, but this defendant deemed it his duty as executor to submit, at any time when called on, a statement of what he has done and is doing, and therefore he has answered.

And having fully answered, he prays to be dismissed with his costs.

Jas. C. Ford, Solicitor.

Richard Roe, Executor.

§ 929. Suits to Construe Wills, or Trusts.—An executor, or administrator with the will annexed, or a trustee, is not required to run risks arising from a reasonable doubt or doubts as to the meaning of the instrument he is required to execute, especially if antagonistic parties in interest are insisting upon antagonistic constructions; and he can file a bill in the Chancery Court, making all the parties interested in, or claiming under, the instrument parties defendant, and have the instrument construed, and his path blazed out for him. The Court will, also, in such a case, on his application, allow him to execute his trusts under the direction of the Court, in the same cause.

The bill, in such a case, is in the ordinary form, and the following statement of a case, and the consequent prayers, will show their special character:

BILL TO CONSTRUE A WILL, OR A TRUST.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

1. That he is the executor of the will of A B. [or the trustee of a trust created by the deed of A B.] Said will was duly probated [or said deed was duly registered] on April 4, 1905, and is exhibited hereto, marked A, and made a part hereof; and complainant has given bond and security and duly qualified to carry out and administer the trusts imposed on him by said will [or deed.]

2. That complainant hoped he would be able to execute said will [or trust] without any special trouble; but so it is grave doubts have sprung up in his mind as to the true meaning, intent, purport and construction of the following portion of said will [or trust: Here set it out in full, giving its very words, spelling, punctuation, &c.]

Complainant was of opinion that said paragraph meant [so and so, giving his construction, thereof.] But so it is the defendant A insists that it means [so and so, giving A's contention]; and he demands of complainant that [complainant shall do so and so, stating what A's claim is under the will or trust.] On the other hand, the defendant B insists that both complainant and said A are wrong in their construction of said will [or trust:] and insists that it means,
§ 930  SUITS IN RELATION TO TRUSTS.

[so and so, stating B's contention in full.] Complainant further shows to the Court that [here state any other construction given by any other person interested in said paragraph. No one not interested can be heard.]

III.

Complainant is advised that the following part of said will [or deed] is so indefinite that he cannot safely act on any construction he may give it, to-wit: [Here set out the part referred to.] Complainant is, also, advised that it is his duty to apply to your Honor for advice and direction, to the end that he may so discharge the trust created by said paragraph, and all the other doubtful paragraphs and provisions of said will [or trust], that none of the parties interested therein may suffer loss, and that he, himself, may not become liable as the result of an error of his judgment.

IV.

[After stating all the various parts of the will (or trust) needing construction, and giving fairly and fully the contents of those interested in the construction; and after the usual prayers for process, then add:] 2d. Complainant further prays that said will, [or trust] be established, and the trusts therein performed, and the rights and interests of all parties under the same be declared. 3d. Complainant further prays the Court to construe the aforesaid portions of said will, [or trust] and to state clearly what are complainant's duties thereunder, and what the rights of the contending defendants are, if any, thereunder; and, in order that complainant may be relieved from all risks and liabilities incident to the contentions, and conflicting rights and claims, of the defendants, he prays the Court to retain the cause in Court until said will [or trust] shall have been fully executed and performed, and all of complainant's duties and trusts fully executed and performed, to the end that complainant may, then, also, obtain his discharge as executor [administrator with the will annexed, or trustee,] and his release from all liability as such thereafter; and for such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.

[Annex affidavit and jurat as in § 789, ante.]

HORACE MAYNARD, Solicitor.

ARTICLE II.

SUITS IN RELATION TO RESULTING AND CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS.

§ 930. Cases of Resulting Trusts.  § 931. Cases of Constructive Trusts.

§ 930. Cases of Resulting Trusts.—Resulting trusts are those which arise where the legal estate is disposed of, or acquired, without bad faith, and under such circumstances that equity infers or assumes that the beneficial interest in said estate is not to go with the legal title. These trusts are sometimes called presumptive trusts, because the law presumes them to be intended by the parties, from the nature and character of their transactions. They are, however, generally called resulting trusts, because the trust is the result which Equity attaches to the particular transaction. 1

Resulting trusts arise: 1, When property is conveyed, or devised, on some trust which fails, in whole or in part; 2, When land is conveyed to a stranger without any consideration, and without any use, or trust, declared; 3, Where the property is purchased and the title taken in the name of one person, but the purchase price is paid by another; and 4, Where the purchaser pays for the land but takes the title, in whole or in part, in the name of another. 2

BILL TO ESTABLISH A RESULTING TRUST.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

1. That, relying on the friendship and integrity of the defendant, he placed in his hands on

1 1 Perry on Trusts, § 124; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 1030-1031. No one is presumed to intend to part with his property, and especially his land, without some consideration; and he who furnishes the consideration-money is presumed to intend to acquire a corresponding beneficial interest in the lands purchased therewith. So, when the consideration-money is trust funds, or belongs to another, the person buying property therewith is presumed to intend that the purchase shall enure to the benefit of the person who is beneficial owner of the purchase-money paid. Reason and conscience so determine his duty, and Equity imputes to him an intention to discharge this duty. When the consideration, or purpose, for which a conveyance is made fails, or in any way becomes ineffectual, the bargainer is deemed in Equity to intend that the legal title shall revert to him.

These general principles determine nearly all the questions arising in cases of resulting trusts.

2 2 Stu. Eq. Jur. §§ 1196-1210; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., §§ 1032-1043. Resulting trusts may be, and generally are, proved by parol. The following are some illustrations of trusts set up by parol in our Courts: 1, the 10th day of April, 1905, the sum of one thousand dollars, [or whatever it was complainant gave defendant in money, or other property; if property, describe it particularly,] under an agreement that the defendant would invest the same in a tract of land for the sole use and benefit of complainant, and take the deed in complainant's name. [If any particular kind of land was to be bought, as land for farming, or coal mining, or manufacturing, or building-sites, so state.]

II.

That it was a distinct part of said agreement, and an express condition of said deposit, that the defendant was to be merely the agent of complainant, was to take the title to the land when purchased, in complainant's name, and it was at no time contemplated by complainant that the defendant was to take the title in his own name, nor was there any suggestion, or talk, of that kind.

III.

That the defendant, on the 15th of April, 1905, in pursuance of said agreement, purchased from one John Jones, the following tract of land. [Here, describe it by location, corners, courses and distances, as set out in the deed to the defendant, and give the location.] The complainant paid for said land, as appears from the face of the deed made to him for said land, the sum of one thousand dollars, but whether he paid that amount or less, complainant has no knowledge, and calls on the defendant to prove what was paid.

IV.

That, in violation of his agreement with complainant, the defendant took the title of said tract of land to himself as though he was the real purchaser, the name and interest of complainant not appearing, nor being in any way mentioned in said deed. A certified copy of said deed is filed with the bill, marked Exhibit A.

V.

That since said deed was executed and delivered to the defendant, said tract of land has greatly appreciated in value in consequence of the building of a railroad in its vicinity, [or in consequence of some other fact, stating what it is. But no claim of appreciation of value is essential to the bill, such an appreciation, if any, being alleged merely as complainant's explanation of defendant's bad faith in the matter.]

That on complainant discovering that the defendant had taken to himself the title to said land, and had the deed made to himself, he called on the defendant to transfer the title and possession of said land to him, and offered to pay the costs of such transfer, and to pay the registration fee, and taxes, growing out of said conveyance to the defendant, but the defendant refused to make said transfer unless he was paid five hundred dollars for his services in buying said land; and he claimed that he had bought said land for himself, and said he would refund to complainant said sum of one thousand dollars, which he admitted he had paid said John Jones for the land.

VII.

The premises considered complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c. See, ante, §§ 158; 164.]

2d. That the complainant be adjudged to be the equitable owner of said tract, and to be entitled to the legal ownership and possession thereof; and that all the title and interest of the defendant in and to said land be divested out of him and vested in complainant in fee simple, and that he be given a deed therefor, and writ of possession.

3d. That complainant have such further and other relief as the nature of his case may require.

A. J. Agee, Solicitor.

The bill need not be sworn to unless some extraordinary relief is prayed. If the defendant has received any rents, or profits, from the property, it should be alleged, and an account should be prayed, and, in a proper case, a receiver. If the defendant is trying to sell the property, that should be alleged, and an injunction prayed to prevent him.

DEGREE ESTABLISHING A RESULTING TRUST.

[For title, commencement and recitals, see, ante, § 567.]

On consideration whereof the Court is of opinion and doth adjudge and decree that the tract of land described in the bill was purchased and paid for by the defendant with complainant's money, given him by complainant in trust, and that, therefore, an equitable title to said land results to complainant, and that he has the right to have the legal title to said land.

Where land was purchased with partnership funds, but title taken in the name of the purchasing partner; 2, Where a deed by father to son is shown to be for the benefit of the mother; 3, Where a devise to A, is proved to be for the benefit of B; 4, Where a husband sells his wife's property to invest the proceeds for her benefit, but takes the title in his own name; 5, Where a judgment creditor buys in property at a judicial sale under a parole agreement to hold it as security for the debt; 6, Where there is an agreement for the redemption of real estate sold at a judicial sale, or under a trust deed; and 7, Where a deed absolute on its face was intended as a mortgage. 3 King's Dig., § 5139. But, in such cases, the proof must be most convincing and irrefragable. Hyden v. Hyden, 6 Bax., 406. That is, the presumption in favor of the writing is strong, and it requires strong proof to overcome it. See, ante, §§ 445-447.
It is, therefore, ordered, adjudged and decreed that all the right, title and claim of the defendant in and to the tract of land described in the bill lying in the —— civil district of —— county, and bounded as follows: [insert courses and distances], be, and the same is, hereby divested out of him and vested in complainant in fee simple; and the Clerk and Master will make to him, and acknowledge for registration, a deed conveying said land to him in fee simple.

The defendant will pay all the costs of the cause, for which an execution is awarded. A writ of possession will issue instantaneously to put complainant in possession of said tract of land.

§ 931. Cases of Constructive Trusts.—Constructive trusts are so called because they are constructed by Courts of Equity in order to satisfy the demands of justice, without reference to any presumable intention of the parties; 3 they include cases: 1, Where a person procures the legal title to property in violation of some duty, express or implied, to the true owner; or, 2, Where title to property is obtained by fraud, duress, or other inequitable means; or, 3, Where a person makes use of some relation of influence or confidence to obtain the legal title upon more advantageous terms than could otherwise have been obtained; or, 4, Where a person acquires property with notice that another is entitled to its benefits. In all such cases, Equity, for the purpose of doing justice in the most efficient manner, constructs a trust out of the transaction, and makes a trustee out of the person thus acquiring the title.

The most common illustrations of constructive trusts are the following: 1, Where another's property has been wrongfully, and with notice of his rights, converted into a different form; 2, Where one party has, with notice, obtained money or securities which equitably belong to another; 3, Where the legal title to property is held merely as a security, as when an absolute deed is really a mortgage; 4, Where an executor, administrator, guardian or other trustee, makes profits out of the trust fund or estate; 5, Where a partner or trustee obtains in his own name the renewal of a firm or trust lease; 6, Where a purchaser at a forced sale undertakes to buy in property for the debtor, or for his heirs, or for the benefit of a creditor; 7, Where an administrator, executor, guardian, or other trustee, wrongfully acquires the trust property, by purchase from himself, or otherwise; 8, Where a person acquires trust property with notice, or without consideration; 9, Where a personal representative pays legatees or distributees before creditors; 10, Where a corporation distributes its capital stock without paying its debts; 11, Where a vendee does not pay for the land; 12, Where an advantageous contract has been obtained from a person under age, intoxicated, or of weak mind; 13, Where an advantageous bargain has been obtained by means of a relation of trust, confidence, or undue influence; 14, Where property has been obtained by fraud, duress, or by means of an unconscientious bargain; 15, Where a devise or legacy has been prevented by fraud; and 16, Where, in any other case, a person fraudulently prevents an act from being done.

BILL TO ENFORCE A CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST, BY HAVING A DEED DECLARED A MORTGAGE.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

That on the —— day of ——, 19—, [give the date the deed was made] he was the owner of the following tract [or lot] of land: [describe it.]

That being greatly in debt, and harrassed by his creditors, and having no money, he applied to the defendant for counsel and assistance, which he pretended to be very willing to give; and after much conversation and the suggestion of various plans, it was agreed that the defendant would advance complainant enough money to satisfy his most urgent creditors, and that he would go complainant's security on notes of hand to his other creditors, and that defendant should be secured for the money actually advanced, and indemnified against loss on said notes by a mortgage on complainant's said tract [or lot] of land.

5 2 St. Eq. Jur., §§ 1195-1594; 2 Pomp. Eq. Jur., §§ 1044-1058; and see "Trusts" in our Digests.

III.

That on the day after said agreement had been made, but before any steps had been taken under it, defendant brought to complainant an absolute deed for said land, stating that it was a simpler way to settle their affairs, that he did not know how to draw a mortgage, and that as soon as he, defendant, was fully paid he would deed said tract [or lot] of land back to complainant.

IV.

That complainant was dissatisfied with this change in the agreement, but being depressed by his circumstances, and comforted by the repeated assurances of the defendant that everything would come out all right, he executed said deed, and delivered it to defendant, and it has been duly registered.

V.

That about three months after said transaction complainant, having some money, offered to pay one of said notes, when, to his surprise, he was informed that the defendant had paid it. Complainant, thereupon, went to the holders of said other notes, and learned from them that their notes had all been paid by the defendant. [If any of said notes were discounted, state the fact, and the rates of such discount.]

VI.

That complainant, thereupon, went to see defendant in order to have an understanding as to the sum total he owed him, when, to his great surprise, the defendant insisted on being allowed, not only the benefit of said discount, but also, either two hundred dollars for his services, or fifteen per cent. interest on the money he had advanced. This insistence caused some angry words, and the conference was ended by defendant declaring complainant could do as he chose as he, the defendant, had the farm, [or lot], and could do with it as he chose.

VII.

That, much alarmed, complainant went to another friend, who agreed to pay defendant off, and take a deed of trust on said tract of land; but when they went to the defendant, he refused to take the principal and interest due him; said the title to said tract [or lot] was in him, and that he and complainant should settle their affairs by themselves, or they would not be settled at all.

VIII.

Complainant therefore prays:
1st. That subpoena to answer issue, [&c. See, ante, §§ 158; 164.]
2d. That said deed to defendant be declared a mortgage, and the amount due the defendant ascertained, so complainant can pay it into Court.
3d. That defendant be enjoined from selling or encumbering said tract [or lot] of land.
4th. That complainant have such other, further and general relief as his case may justify, and to your Honor may seem meet.

This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

W. R. Peters, Solicitor.

The complainant may, in his bill, tender the amount due defendant, in which case he must bring the money into Court, and deliver it to the Clerk and Master when he files his bill, and take a receipt for the amount tendered and paid in; let the receipt show it is for money tendered in the cause.

If the decree is for complainant on the foregoing bill, it may be as follows:

DEGREE DECLARING A DEED TO BE A MORTGAGE.

[For title, commencement and recitals, see, ante, § 567.]

I.

On consideration whereof it is ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the deed referred to in the pleadings was intended as, and is, merely a security for the money advanced and notes signed by the defendant as surety, and is declared to be in equity a mortgage; that complainant is liable to the defendant only for the real sums paid by the defendant, in discharge of said notes, and for interest on the cash advanced by defendant, and on the sums actually paid on said notes, and it being agreed, without a reference, that the sum total of said payments by the defendant, principal and interest, is sixteen hundred and seventy-one dollars, it is so adjudged and decreed.

II.

It is further ordered and adjudged and decreed that said sum is a lien on said tract for lot] of land, and that, unless it, and accruing interest, are paid into Court, in sixty days, the Clerk and Master will sell said tract, [or lot] of land, on a credit of six, twelve, eighteen, and twenty-four months, [c. see, ante, §626.]

All further questions are reserved until the incoming of the Master's report of sale, or his report that complainant has paid said sum into Court.

At the next term, if the money has been paid into Court, it will be decreed to the defendant, and all the right, title and interest he has in and to said tract [or lot] of land will be divested out of him, and vested in complainant, and the Master directed to make complainant a deed therefor. If the money has not been paid, the sale of the land will be confirmed, and out of the proceeds, the amount due the defendant, less the costs of the cause, will be paid, and the balance, if any, paid to complainant. The costs of the cause will be adjudged against the defendant, if the Chancellor deems it proper.

§ 933. Suits in Cases Resulting From Actual Frauds.

§ 934. Frame and Form of Bills in Suits to Undo Fraud.

§ 935. Frame and Form of Bills to Set Aside Judgments or Decrees for Fraud.

§ 932. The Rationale of the Law as to Fraud, Accident and Mistake.—Every person who has business dealings with another has the right to expect that he will, in every matter connected with such dealings, do whatever good reason and good conscience require. Indeed, each party to a business transaction, before entering upon any negotiations relative thereto, impliedly contracts with the other or others that, in making and performing his engagements honesty, frankness and fidelity will characterize his conduct.\(^{1}\)

In consequence of the mutual consciousness of this implied obligation, neither party to an express contract, ordinarily, deems it necessary to inquire of the others, whether such is the understanding. If such inquiry should be made, the party interrogated would almost invariably respond with an emphatic affirmative, accompanied with emotions or expressions of real or pretended indignation because of the implication of distrust contained in the question. This implied contract not only precedes and enters into every express contract, but every express contract is impliedly conditioned upon its faithful performance.

If this fundamental antecedent implied contract is analyzed it will be found to contain the following elements:

1. Neither party will make to the other any material representations concerning the subject-matter of the contract that are not true.\(^{2}\)

2. Neither party will conceal from the other anything, within his knowledge, material to the subject-matter of the contract, that the other party ought to know, and cannot easily ascertain by himself.\(^{3}\)

3. Neither party has done, nor will do, anything to hinder, delay or defeat a faithful compliance with the contract on his part.\(^{4}\)

4. If one of the parties has trust or confidence specially reposed in him by

\(^{1}\)The law requires good faith in all transactions between man and man. Craddock v. Cahiness, 1 Swann, 483, ante, § 58. Bad faith is treason to mankind, and if generally practiced would destroy human society. See, ante, § 48. Fides abrogata, omnis humana societas tollitur. (Good faith abolished, all human society is destroyed.)

\(^{2}\)While at law before a misrepresentation can be fraudulent, it must be made with a guilty knowledge of its falsity, in Equity such knowledge is not necessary. A person making an untrue statement, without knowing or believing it to be untrue, and without any intent to deceive, may be chargeable with actual fraud in Equity. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., §§ 884-885. The injury to the other party is the same, whether there was any intention to deceive or not, and where a loss must happen to one of the parties it must be borne by him whose conduct occasioned it. Hence it is a settled rule in Equity that where a person makes a statement of fact which is actually untrue, and he has at the time no knowledge of the matter, he is chargeable with fraud; and his claim that he believed in the truth of his statement is wholly immaterial. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 887. A person, however, is allowed to fairly commend, Simplex commendatio non obligat. Suprressio veri est suggestio falsi. Fraus est celare fraudem.

\(^{3}\)A fraudulent conveyance to defeat a creditor violates this implied contract.
the other, or has special power or influence over the person or property of the other, he will not avail himself of these advantages to the other's detriment.

5. The express contract when finally agreed on, if to be reduced to writing, shall be so worded as to express the real meaning of the contract; and shall be so executed, as to formalities, as to make the contract obligatory, and enforceable in Court.

6. If the contract has been reduced to writing, and by accident or mistake, fails to express correctly the contract really made, at the request of the party injured the other party will consent so to reform the writing as to make it conform to the contract.

7. After the contract has been consummated, each party will, in good faith, do all that the contract requires of him.

8. Neither party will take advantage of any material mistake by the other concerning the subject-matter of the contract, or his rights or duties relative thereto, such mistake having materially influenced his consent to the contract, and not being the result of any negligence or bad faith on his part.

9. Neither party will insist upon the other doing anything not fairly required of him by the contract.

10. If the contract is in writing and should be lost or destroyed, it will be re-executed, if required by either party having an existing interest in it.

11. If the performance of the contract is, or becomes, impossible by reason of its very nature, or of something wholly unanticipated by either, or wholly beyond the power of the performer to provide against, then performance, so far as impossible, is to be excused.

The first six elements of the implied contract above set forth are conditions precedent, and the last five are conditions subsequent. It is, also, an element of the implied antecedent contract, that

12. If any of the implied conditions precedent are violated, the party thereby injured shall have the right to rescind the contract; and that

13. If any of the implied conditions subsequent are violated, the party thereby injured will be compensated and made whole by the other.

Violations of the first four elements of the implied contract are frauds; violations of the other elements constitute inequitable conduct: all of such violations are redressable in the Chancery Court.

§ 933. Suits in Cases Resulting From Actual Fraud.—Fraud, in the sense of a Court of Equity, properly includes all acts, omissions and concealments, which involve a breach of legal or equitable duty, or of trust or confidence justly reposed, and which are injurious to another, or by which an undue and unconscientious advantage is taken of another.5

Actual fraud is the intentional doing or saying of something, or the intentional concealment of something, material to a business transaction, by a party thereto, whereby the other party is induced to act or not to act, to his injury, the former party contemplating such a result, or such a result being the reasonable and natural consequence of his conduct. The following are illustrations of actual frauds, and of how they will be relieved against in Equity: 1, Deeds, mortgages, contracts, notes, bonds, wills, settlements, and other writings, obtained, or executed, or surrendered or cancelled, in whole or in part, as the result of fraud by the defendant upon the complainant, will be reformed, re-executed, cancelled, delivered up, enjoined, executed, or otherwise dealt with as may be necessary for the protection or enforcement of the complainant’s rights; 2, Judgments, or decrees, or awards obtained, or cancelled, or discharged, as the result of fraud on the part of the defendant, will be enjoined.

5 1 Sto. Eq. Jur., § 187; Belcher v. Belcher; 10 Verc. 131, Smith v. Harrison, 2 Heisk., 242. Courts of Equity refuse to define fraud, preferring to be left unshackled by definition in their contests with this Protean adversary of good conscience and good faith. The result is the term has an element of elasticity that enables the Court to adapt it to all the various exigencies resulting from the manifold devices resorted to in order to obtain some undue advantage. See Smith v. Harrison, 2 Heisk., 242.
or enforced as the complainant’s rights may require; 3, Money, or other property, obtained by the defendant through fraud will be declared a trust fund for complainant’s benefit, and the defendant, and all claiming under him, not bona fide purchasers, will be compelled to surrender it, or account for it; and 4, A deed, or other contract, obtained by the defendant at a shockingly inadequate consideration, especially if accompanied with circumstances showing imposition or undue advantage, will be set aside.6

§ 934. Frame and Form of Bills in Suits to Undo Fraud.—All frauds grow out of relations, and are those violations of the duties arising from relations,7 caused by bad faith. Therefore, in drawing a bill in a suit based on the fraudulent conduct of the defendant:

1st. Specify the relations between him and the complainant, their nature and origin, whether imposed by kinship, law, or social duty, or arising from contract, express or implied.

2d. State particularly, and in circumstantial detail, in what way the defendant took advantage of those relations, and wherein he violated the confidence complainant reposed in him, and in what manner he deceived complainant, and by what misrepresentation, concealment, or other act or acts of bad faith obtained from him money, property, or a contract, or a release, or discharge from some contract or obligation, or deceitfully or treacherously engineered complainant into a situation wherein he has suffered, or must suffer, loss, and the defendant has obtained, or will obtain, a benefit.

3d. Show what action of the Court is necessary to neutralize the effects of the defendant’s inequitable conduct, and restore complainant to his rights, and make him whole; and specify what extraordinary process, such as an injunction, attachment or receiver, is necessary the better to secure his rights and property, and stay the inequitable conduct of the defendant; and detail the facts and circumstances justifying such remedies.

4th. Then pray for all ordinary and extraordinary process needed, and for a decree undoing the defendant’s acts of bad faith and giving complainant what he is entitled to, and requiring the defendant to do, or praying the Court to do, everything necessary to put complainant as nearly in statu quo as possible, under the circumstances; and when a money equivalent is necessary, operating the defendant with the payment of as much money to the complainant as may be requisite to make complainant perfectly whole.

5th. And, finally, pray for general relief, and state that your bill is the first application for an injunction, attachment and receiver, or any one or more of those writs, in the case.

Be particular to give in full the facts and circumstances constituting the breaches of good faith, for the Court will pay no attention to general charges of fraud, misrepresentation, concealment, deceit, and imposition, when unaccompanied by the details and particulars thereof.8

A large proportion of the suits in Chancery considered under other heads in this book could well be considered under the head of fraud, actual or constructive; but are considered elsewhere for convenience of treatment and of reference.

BILL TO SET ASIDE A DEED, OR OTHER INSTRUMENT, FOR FRAUD.

[For address and caption, see ante, § 155-164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

1. That on the...day of....19.... [insert the date of the deed, or other instrument, was made,] he owned [in fee, and was in possession, if such be the fact,] the following house and lot [or farm, or other property, real or personal: describe it fully; see, ante, § 172.]

II. That on said day he was induced by the defendant to sell and convey [or mortgage, or 7 For the nature of relatives, see, ante, §§ 165-169.

8 See, ante, §§ 142, sub-sec., 3; 838.
§ 935. Frame and Form of Bills to Set Aside Judgments, or Decrees, for Fraud.—A bill to impeach and set aside a judgment or decree for fraud, or imposition, must state the judgment or decree, and the proceedings which led to it, and then set out the fraud, or circumstances of imposition. All of the parties to the original suit liable to be affected by the relief sought, are necessary parties to the bill, even though no fraud, or other misconduct, is alleged against them. The prayer should be to have the judgment or decree set aside and annulled, and, if necessary to the rights of the complainant, that a new decree be made giving the relief he may be entitled to, and especially such relief as will avoid the effects of the judgment or decree annulled.

It may be said that, as a rule, to entitle a party to this relief, it must be made evident that, if a defendant, he had a defence on the merits, and, if a complainant, he had a right to the relief sought, and this loss of a defence, or failure to obtain relief, must in all cases be occasioned by the fraud or act of the prevailing party, or by mistake or accident on the part of the losing party, unmixed with any omission, neglect, or default on the part of himself or his agents.

BILL TO IMPEACH A DECREES FOR FRAUD.14

To the Hon. A. J. Abernathy, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Pulaski; William West, a resident of Maury county, complainant,

vs.

Edward East, a resident of Giles county, defendant.

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

That he and the defendant, down to January 5, 1890, were partners in trade in Giles county,

9 See, ante, §§ 46; 165-169.
10 Jones v. Williamson, 5 Cold., 376; Maddox v. Apperson, 14 Lea, 694; Ste. Eq. Pl., § 428. A bill will not lie to impeach a decree for fraud, and at the same time review it. But such a bill may be dismissed as to one phase and maintained on another. Murphy v. Johnson, 23 Pick., 352.
12 Paul v. Wiles, 1 Tenn. Ch., 519; Walker v. Day, 8 Bax., 83.
13 Maddox v. Apperson, 14 Lea, 596.
14 As to the character of the allegations, see, ante, §§ 142; 838; 934. The bill is not required to be under the style of East & West; that on said day, in consequence of irreconcilable differences, the firm was dissolved; and on the same day the defendant filed a bill against complainant in this Court, alleging that the firm was largely indebted, that the assets were not sufficient to pay said indebtedness, that complainant was largely indebted to the firm, that he and the complainant could not agree upon a plan to wind up the firm’s business, and praying, (1) for an account between them, (2) for the ascertainment of the indebtedness, (3) for the conversion of all assets into money, (4) for the payment of all debts, (5) for a decree against the complainant for what he might owe the firm, and (6) for an injunction, and a receiver, and general relief.

II.

Complainant was in failing health when said bill was filed, and just ready to go to California for rest, and for the benefit to be derived from the climate; and not wishing to be delayed by any litigation he, on the day he was subpoenaed to answer said bill, entered into a compromise in writing with the defendant, wherein and whereby it was stipulated and agreed that said bill should be at once dismissed at the cost of the defendant, East, and in consideration thereof, complainant transferred to him all his interest in the firm’s assets, and in addition paid him one thousand dollars in mules, in consideration whereof the defendant bound himself to assume and pay all the costs of said suit, and all the indebtedness of said firm. Said compromise agreement is now in complainant’s possession, and will be filed and read at the hearing.

III.

Relying on said agreement, which was in all respects fully complied with by the complainant, he at once proceeded to California, not doubting that his partnership troubles were all over. But so it is, the defendant in utter violation of said agreement, and in violation of good faith, proceeded with said suit, took on order pro confesso against complainant, an interlocutory decree for an account, and a final decree on the account as stated and reported by the Master. Said final decree adjudges that complainant was indebted to said firm in the sum of thirty-two hundred dollars, and adjudges one-half of the costs of the said suit against complainant.

IV.

Said pro confesso, account, report, and decrees were all taken at the term recently adjourned; and complainant was put on inquiry relative thereto by seeing a two-line notice of the case, in the proceedings of said term, published in a Pulaski newspaper, sent him by a friend, containing an obituary notice of complainant’s father, who died a short time before the last term of this Court. Complainant at once opened correspondence with friends, and ascertained the foregoing facts in reference to said suit.

Complainant further shows to the Court, that he at once returned to Giles county, and demanded of the defendant an explanation of his said conduct. Defendant pretended that the indebtedness of the firm was larger than he supposed when he made said written agreement, that the said mules were not worth one thousand dollars, and that by the death of complainant’s father, complainant had become possessed of abundant means and ought to pay him for his trouble and expense in winding up the partnership business. Complainant charges that said judgment was obtained as a means of black-mailing him, and in order to fraudulently coerce money out of him; and that the defendant is thereby endeavoring to convert the machinery of your Honor’s Court of Equity, beneficently devised to uncover and disclose fraud, into an engine of iniquity and oppression, in violation of good conscience and contrary to good faith. Complainant avers that all the aforesaid pretences of the defendant are utterly false, except the statement that by the death of his father complainant has become possessed of a large estate. This statement is true, and this fact was too strong a temptation for the defendant to resist, and hence said fraud.

VI.

An execution has issued on said decree, and has been levied on complainant’s lands by the Sheriff of Giles county, said lands being situated therein, and he has advertised them for sale to satisfy said decree.

VII.

Complainant is advised that all of the said proceedings in said case, after the filing of said bill, were and are a fraud upon your Honor’s Court, and a fraud upon complainant, and contrary to good conscience and good faith; and therefore, the premises considered, he comes into your Honor’s Court and prays:

1st. That all proper process issue to bring the defendant, William West, into your Honor’s Court, and to make him answer this bill, but his oath to his answer is waived.

2d. That an injunction may issue by fiat of your Honor restraining and inhibiting the defendant from further proceeding in the enforcement of said decree, and from transferring the same; and that your Honor grant complainant a restraining order addressed to the said Sheriff of Giles county, requiring him to stay all proceedings on said execution until further orders of your Honor.

§ 936. Suits in Cases of Constructive Fraud.—Constructive frauds are acts, statements or omissions, which operate as virtual frauds on individuals, or which, if generally permitted, would be prejudicial to the public welfare, and are not clearly resolvable into mere accident or mistake, and yet may have been unconnected with any selfish evil design, or may amount, in the opinion of the person chargeable therewith, to nothing more than what is justifiable or allowable.1 Constructive frauds mainly consist of the following:

1. Frauds against Law, or Public Policy, such as (1) usurious and gaming contracts; (2) contracts in restraint of marriage; (3) contracts in restraint of trade; (4) contracts in reference to buying or selling offices, or illegally influencing public officers; (5) contracts to suppress criminal prosecutions; and (6) contracts founded upon illicit intercourse, or upon the doing of some act in violation of law, or upon failing to do some act required by law.2

2. Frauds upon Persons wholly, or partially, Incapable of Contracting, such as, (1) contracts with persons under age, or of unsound mind; (2) contracts with persons intoxicated, or under duress; (3) contracts with persons in great pecuniary necessity and distress; (4) contracts with persons very ignorant, or illiterate; (5) contracts with sailors, expectant heirs, reversioners and others having expectant interests; and (6) contracts in any case where influence is acquired and abused, or where confidence is reposed and betrayed.3

3. Frauds Presumed because of the Fiduciary Relations of the Parties, as in cases of very advantageous contracts by (1) a guardian with his ward, (2) an executor or administrator with a distributee or legatee, (3) a trustee with the beneficiary, (4) an agent with his principal, (5) an attorney with his client, (6) a parent with his child, (7) a husband with his wife, (8) a physician with his patient, (9) a priest with a penitent, and (10) or by any other person occupying a position of special trust and confidence towards the party from whom he obtains a gift, or a contract unduly advantageous.4

4. Frauds on Sureties as (1) in cases where the creditor, upon sufficient consideration, gives the principal debtor further time for payment, without the surety's consent; (2) in any other case of a subsequent contract between the principal debtor and the creditor to the detriment of the surety; and (3) any case where the creditor does any act injurious to the surety, or omits any act he is bound to do, and the surety is injured by such omission.5

1 Smith's Eq. Jur., 71. Constructive fraud is simply a term applied to a great variety of transactions, having little resemblance either in form or in nature, which Equity regards as wrongful, and to which it attributes the same or similar effects as those which follow from actual fraud, and for which it gives the same or similar relief. It embraces: (1) Contracts illegal, and, therefore void; (2) transactions voidable because contrary to public policy; and (3) transactions merely presumptive of fraud and requiring the party benefited to prove his good faith. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 922.

§ 937. Frame and Form of Bill for Violations of Fiduciary Relations.—A consideration of the doctrine of relations in former sections, and of the frame of a bill to undo fraud in the preceding Article, will greatly aid a draughtsman in drawing a bill under this section; but as a further aid the following general form is given:

GENERAL FORM OF BILL FOR VIOLATION OF FIDUCIARY RELATIONS.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That [Here show that complainant had an estate as a ward, distributee, legatee, beneficiary, principal, or otherwise, and that the defendant is, or was, guardian, executor, trustee, agent, attorney, or in some other confidential relation, and as such had the custody, control or management of complainant's said estate, describing such estate.]

II.

That [Here show, if such be the fact, that complainant was not fully informed as to the amount or value of his said estate in the hands of the defendant, or under his control, or within his knowledge; and if defendant kept back full information, or gave misinformation, in reference to said amount or value, or in any way misled or deceived complainant, so state, and give the particulars, and show what efforts, if any, complainant made to ascertain the said amount, or value.]

III.

That [Here show in what way complainant was dependent on the defendant for information as to the value, amount, or character of his said estate, and what confidence or trust complainant reposed in him, especially if he was his agent, attorney, parent, physician, kinsman, or other adviser; and in what way the defendant took advantage of complainant's dependence on him to secure the title to said estate, or a part thereof, giving the particulars.]

IV.

That [Here show that the property thus acquired by the defendant was worth greatly more than the consideration complainant received, or if the property was money that the amount complainant received was greatly less than the amount justly due him, or, as the case may be, show how, wherein and to what extent the defendant defrauded the complainant, giving the particulars.]

V.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c.; see, ante, §§ 158-164.]

2d. That said [transaction, specifying it.] be set aside as fraudulent and therefore void; and that complainant be restored to the possession of said property [if real estate or personal property capable of restoration, if not, then omit all after the word "void," and insert:] and that complainant have a decree against the defendant for the difference between the consideration he received and the real value of the property the defendant acquired as aforesaid. [If the property was money, then let the decree be for the difference between the amount complainant received and the amount he was entitled to.]

3d. That [If an account is necessary to ascertain the amount due complainant, so pray: see, ante, § 159, sub-secs. 6, 10-12.]

4th. That complainant may have such other further and general relief as he may be entitled to.

P. C. Fulkerson, Solicitor.

§ 938. Frame and Form of Decree in Case of Constructive Fraud.—As already stated, a decree when in behalf of the complainant, usually follows the special prayers of the bill. If money was fraudulently obtained from the complainant the decree will be against the defendant for the amount he justly owes Reliefs Granted in Case of Fraud.—The jurisdiction of the Chancery Court in cases of fraud, actual or constructive, is co-extensive with the injury done, and the remedy required therefor. In framing and applying these remedies, the power of the Court is practically limited only by the requirements of justice. The most important of these equitable reliefs are conferred: (1) by rescinding or canceling the contract, conveyance or judgment fraudulently obtained, and thereby relieving the injured party from its obligations; (2) by so reforming the deed, contract, or other written agreement, fraudulently framed, as to make it express the real intention of the contracting parties; (3) by requiring the wrongdoer specifically to perform the obligations resting upon him according to their very spirit, and thus giving the defrauded party the very right of which the other sought to defraud him; and (4) by compensating the party defrauded when no other remedy is adequate, or practicable.

the complainant, with interest; if land was obtained the deed will be declared fraudulent, and all the title conveyed thereby divested out of the defendant and reinvested in the complainant; if personal property was obtained it may be restored, or, as is the usual rule, a decree pronounced against the defendant: for the difference between its value and what he paid for it. Where real or personal property is restored to the complainant a lien may be declared on it to secure to the defendant the repayment of the consideration by him paid for it. If a reference to the Master is necessary it will be ordered, and, as a rule, the costs are adjudged against the defendant.

On consideration whereof it is ordered, adjudged and decreed:

1st. That the relation of guardian and ward [or other relation, stating it] existed between complainant and defendant when the deed was executed [or, receipt given, or other transaction occurred, specifying it.] and that the defendant as such guardian, administrator, agent, attorney, [or other trustee or adviser] took undue advantage of such relation and obtained an unconscientious bargain from the complainant, as alleged in the bill.

2d. That said deed [receipt, or other writing, specifying it.] be cancelled, and set aside, and all the right, title and claim of the defendant in and to the tract of land by said deed conveyed to him be, and the same hereby are divested out of him and vested in complainant as an indefeasible inheritance in fee simple, forever, and that a writ of possession issue to put complainant in possession of said tract, which is described as follows: [Here copy the description given in the deed: see, ante, §172] The defendant will pay all of the costs of the cause, for which execution will issue.

ARTICLE III.

SUITS ARISING FROM ACCIDENTS AND MISTAKES.

§ 939. Cases Arising From Accident.—Accident, as remedial in Equity, may be defined to be an unforeseen and injurious occurrence, not attributable to mistake, negligence or misconduct. 1

The following accidents will be relieved against in Equity: 1. When a deed, bond, note, will, or other valuable instrument in writing, has been accidentally lost, mislaid, destroyed, or materially mutilated or defaced; 2. Where, in consequence of failure to pay a debt, or redeem a mortgage, or comply with any other specific duty, by a day named, a penalty or forfeiture has been incurred, which can be compensated for in damages; 3. Where trustees, agents, bailees, executors or administrators have suffered loss of trust funds or property, by inevitable accident, such as fire, robbery, reasonable confidence disappointed, or the like, without any negligence or misconduct on their part; 4. Where, by accident, a power was defectively executed; and 5. Where by some unavoidable accident a party has been prevented from making his defense at law, and in consequence an unjust and oppressive judgment has been rendered against him. 2

§ 940. Cases Arising From Mistake.—A mistake may be defined to be an act which would not have been done, or an omission which would not have occurred, but from ignorance, forgetfulness, inadvertence, mental incompetence, surprise, misplaced confidence, or imposition. 3

1 Smith’s Eq. Jur., 36. Accident is an unforeseen and unexpected event, whereby, without negligence or misconduct on his part, and contrary to his own intention and wish, a party loses some legal right or becomes subjected to some liability, and another person acquires a corresponding legal right which it would be against good conscience for him, under the circumstances, to retain. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 823; 1 Sto. Eq. Jur., § 78. 2 See 1 Sto. Eq. Jur., §§ 75-109; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., §§ 823-837; and “Accident” in our Digests. 3 Smith’s Eq. Jur., 45. Mistake exists, in a legal
The following mistakes of law and fact will be relieved against: 1, Where arbitrators intending to follow the law, mistake the law; 2, Where an endorser promised to pay under a mistake of mixed law and fact as to his liability; 3, Where a party erroneously supposed he was acquiring a valid title, being mistaken both as to law and fact; 4, Where a party surrenders a valid title in ignorance of plain law; 5, Where both parties believe the seller's title to be good, when in fact it is defective or void; 6, Where a line was agreed on between two adjoining farms upon a mistake as to the calls of the deeds; 7, Where land is sold by the acre and there is a mistake as to the number of acres; 8, Where land is sold and the deed conveys more or less than the contract called for; 9, Where legatees divided notes believed to be good, and some prove to be worthless; 10, Where a redeeming co-endorser paid under belief that the execution sale was valid; 11, Where money is paid by mistake; 12, Where a deed of trust misdescribes a note intended to be secured; 13, Where a note was misdrawn by mistake; 14, Where a settlement includes items, or omits items, by mistake, accident or fraud; 15, Where in drawing any writing a material error has been made by accident, or by mistake of law or fact, such error being the error of the draftsman; 16, Where a will on its face shows an error; 17, Where a person parts with a right or title in ignorance of its existence; 18, Where, at the time of the sale, the property sold had ceased to exist, having been destroyed by flood or fire, or having died, or a life estate had terminated, and the purchaser ignorant of the fact; 19, Where a testator cancelled a former will under a belief that a later will was properly executed, when it was not; 20, Where a party surrenders, or cancels, a note of hand, bond, deed, or other instrument, either in ignorance of his rights thereunder, or on mistaken belief that the instrument had been paid or otherwise become of no effect; and 21, Where a power has been defectively executed, in favor of a charity, a purchaser, creditor, wife or child.

In all cases of mistake in written instruments Courts of Equity will interfere only between the original parties, or those claiming under them in privity—such as personal representatives, heirs, devisees, legatees, assignees, judgment creditors or purchasers from any of them with notice of the facts. As against bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice, Courts of Equity will grant no relief.

The following mistakes of law, or fact, will not be relieved against: 1, Where the obligee releases one of the obligors on a bond thinking the other would continue bound; 2, Where a payee releases one surety thinking the other, or others, will continue liable; 3, Where a person releases, or accepts satisfaction from, one of several joint trespassers, thinking the others would continue liable; 4, Where a note was drawn calling for usurious interest, in ignorance of the law; 5, Where a widow failed to dissent to her husband’s will in time, being ignorant of the limit of dissent; 6, Where the purchaser of land knew of a vendor’s lien, but thought there was enough personal property to satisfy it; 7, Where an administrator paid to a mother and children what wholly belonged to the mother, under a mutual mistake of law: he was required to account to her for the residue; 8, Where a party sells land in ignorance of a mine on it, the purchaser not practising any fraud; and 9, Where the price of an article has been suddenly greatly enhanced, the seller not knowing it, and the buyer practising no deception.

sense, where a person acting upon some erroneous conviction, either of law or of fact, executes some instrument, or does some act, or omits to do some act, which, but for that erroneous conviction, he would not have executed, done or omitted. Haym’s Outlines of Equity, § 132; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 839. But the doctrine is settled that, in general, a mistake of law, pure and simple, is not an adequate ground or relief; for ignorance is not non-existence. Where a party with knowledge of all the material facts, and without any other special circumstances giving rise to an Equity in his behalf, enters into a transaction affecting interests, rights or liabilities, under an ignorance or error with respect to the rules of law controlling the case, Courts will not, in general, relieve him from the consequences of his mistake. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 842. Mistakes, to be remediable in Equity, must cause a loss to the party complaining which the other party ought not in reason and conscience to take advantage of. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., §§ 838-856; and “Mistake” in our Digests.

§ 941. Frame and Form of Bills in Cases Arising From Accidents, and Mistakes.—The frames and forms of bills to set up instruments lost, destroyed or mutilated by accident, and of bills to reform instruments because of mistake, will be found in the Articles treating of such bills, and reference is made thereto. Great particularity of details is required in framing such bills; the circumstances attending, or causing the accident or mistake complained of should be fully set forth, and it should be shown that complainant was free from any fault in the matter, and in no way responsible for the accident or mistake.

The bill should be filed promptly after the happening of the accident, or the discovery of the mistake, or the delay should be accounted for.

BILL TO CORRECT A MISTAKE IN A DEED.\(^8\)

[For address and caption, see ante, §§ 155, 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That on November 9, 1905, he sold to the defendant the following tract of land in civil district No. 4, in Dickson county, [Here set out the corners, courses, and distances according to the deed.]

II. That the defendant contracted to pay thirty-five dollars per acre for said tract, and it was agreed that a survey should be made to ascertain the number of acres, and a man was employed to make the survey. In the meantime and before the deed was drawn, defendant paid complainant one hundred dollars and gave his note for four hundred dollars, and was to give his notes for the residue when the acreage was ascertained as the result of said survey.

III. That after said survey was made, but before its result was known to complainant, defendant came to complainant's house, bringing with him the deed and notes for the land. Complainant inquired as to the result of the survey, but defendant stated that he did not know, but was willing to take the farm at thirty-five dollars per acre for thirty acres, and urged complainant to sign the deed he had drawn calling for "thirty acres, more or less," defendant saying he had urgent official business at home, and was in a hurry to leave. So complainant signed and delivered the deed, and took the defendant's notes for five hundred and fifty dollars, the balance of the purchase money.

IV. That since delivering said deed complainant has ascertained that said tract contains forty-five acres, fifteen more than he was paid for. Complainant will here state that the defendant was with the surveyor when said survey was made, and stayed that night with the surveyor, making calculations from the latter's field book, and that when said deed was signed he well knew that said tract contained largely over thirty acres; and complainant would probably have ascertained this fact from the surveyor, who was present as defendant's companion, but had not made his calculations as to the acreage, had not defendant hurried him to sign the deed, and hastened away as soon as the signing had been done, hardly waiting for the ink to dry on complainant's signature. Complainant will further state that he is an old and feeble man, and was sick the day he signed the deed, and wanted the signing put off until the acreage was ascertained, but the defendant would not agree so to do, and urged immediate action: so complainant signed.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c.; see, ante, §§ 158; 164.]

2d. That he be given a decree against the defendant for the price of said fifteen acres at thirty-five dollars per acre, and that such decree be declared a lien on said tract of land, and if not otherwise paid, the land be sold to satisfy the same.

3d. That if necessary said deed be reformed so as to show that the land contained forty-five instead of thirty acres, and that the consideration was fifteen hundred and seventy-five dollars, instead of ten hundred and fifty dollars, as mistakenly stated in said deed.

4th. That complainant have such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.

Robert M. Jones, Solicitor.

CHAPTER XLVII.

SUITS TO SET UP, REFORM AND RESCIND WRITINGS.

ARTICLE I. Suits to Set up Written Instruments.

ARTICLE II. Suits to Reform Written Instruments.

ARTICLE III. Suits to Rescind Written Instruments.

ARTICLE I.

SUITS TO SET UP WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS.

§ 942. Suits to Set up, or Have Re-executed, Lost or Destroyed Instruments, or Records.

§ 943. Frame and Form of Bills and Decrees

§ 944. Statutory Method of Supplying Lost Instruments, Papers and Records.

§ 942. Suits to Set up, or Have Re-executed, Lost or Destroyed Instruments. When a written contract, such as a note of hand, deed, will, lease, partnership agreement, or other valuable instrument, or a Court record, has been accidentally lost or destroyed, under circumstances not attributable to any reprehensible negligence on the part of its owner, on his application and due proof the Chancery Court will set it up and enforce it. If the loss or destruction was caused by the fraud, negligence or other misconduct of the defendant, and the instrument was originally executed by him, the Court will, by attachment, compel him to re-execute it, if such re-execution is essential to the complainant's enjoyment of his rights thereunder. In the same suit in which an instrument, or record, is set up or instrument re-executed the Court will, on a bill framed for the purpose, proceed further and fully enforce complainant's rights thereunder.

§ 943. Frame and Form of Bills to Set up Lost or Destroyed Instruments, or Records.—The bill should describe the instrument or record as fully as possible, and should set out, on its face, or in an exhibit if the instrument or record will cover more than a page, as perfect a copy as complainant can make; and, if an instrument, will allege its execution by the defendant, or by some one authorized to bind him, and show the consideration therefor paid by complainant; and will set forth the loss, destruction, or mutilation of the instrument or record, and the circumstances thereof; and should show that complainant was guilty of no negligence or blame in the matter. The bill should, also, show how and wherein complainant is injured by such loss, destruction or mutilation, and should pray that said instrument or record be set up and established, and declared in force and operative; and, in a proper case, may pray that the instrument or record be enforced, or the relief sought in the suit whose record is set up be granted. The bill should be sworn to.

BILL TO SET UP A LOST NOTE.

[For address and caption of the bill, see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]

I.

That on or about the first day of July, 1905, the defendant, John Jones, for value received, executed and delivered to complainant his promissory note for five hundred dollars payable six months after date with interest from date, which note is still the property of complainant and wholly unpaid.

II.

That on, or about, the fourth day of July, 1905, said note was lost ['or mutilated, or destroayed] in the following manner: [Here state briefly the circumstances of the loss, mutilation or destruction, if known, to complainant; if not known he should so state, but should over that he was guilty of no blame or negligence, but was wholly without fault in the matter.]

That complainant drew a true copy of said note, except the signature of the defendant thereto, and requested the defendant to sign and return it, or to make him a new note in the place of the one lost [or mutilated, or destroyed] and offering to indemnify him against any and all loss that might arise from the original note coming up against him, but the defendant refused and still refuses to sign said copy, or to renew said lost note. Complainant renegotiates his said offer of indemnity, and will cheerfully submit to any order your Honor may make for the indemnity of the defendant against said note.

That complainant has made diligent search for said lost note among his valuable papers and in all receptacles and places where he keeps valuable papers, or where said lost note would in any probability be, but has utterly failed to find the same, and so he alleges and charges that said note is utterly lost, and that he will inevitably lose the same and the money due and payable thereon, unless your Honor's Court will give him relief and remedy.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c.: see, §§ 158; 164.]

2nd. That said lost note be set up and established by decree of your Honor's Court, and be declared unpaid and payable, and that your Honor pronounce a decree against the defendant for the amount due on said note, principal and interest, and award execution therefor, and for the costs of the cause, in complainant's favor.

3rd. That complainant have further and other relief.

Wm. York, Solicitor.

[Annex affidavit and jurat as in § 789, ante.]

A bill to set up a negotiable instrument must be sworn to, and should offer a bond of indemnity to the defendant against liability arising from such lost instrument returning to torment him. The Court may, however, stay the decree until such bond is given, when no bond is tendered in the bill. The defendant may make any defences to the bill that could be made to a bill suing directly on the note if in existence, such as non est factum, payment, the statute of limitations, infancy, failure of consideration, illegal consideration, duress, fraud, or the like.

DECREES TO SET UP A LOST NOTE.

Upon consideration whereof it is ordered and decreed by the Court that complainant was the owner of the note set out in his bill, and that the same has been lost [mutilated or destroyed] without fault on his part, and that he is entitled to have it set up and established, as his property, and that the defendant owes the same, and that it is due and wholly unpaid.

It is, therefore, decreed that said note be set up and established, and the defendant pay the complainant the sum of six hundred and ten dollars, the amount due on said note, principal and interest, and that he, also, pay the costs of this cause, and on his failure so to do in the time required by law an execution will issue.

The execution in this case will be stayed until complainant files with the Clerk and Master a bond in the penalty of twelve hundred and twenty dollars, with two solvent sureties to be approved by the Clerk and Master, to indemnify the defendant against any loss to him by having to pay said note or any part thereof to any other person.

BILL FOR THE RE-EXECUTION OF A DEED.

[For address and caption of the bill, see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That on the 23d of September, 1905, the defendant executed and delivered to him a warranty deed for the following tract of land in the State of Kentucky. [Here give the county in which the land lies, and otherwise describe it as described in said deed.] The consideration expressed in said deed was one thousand dollars, all of which was paid by complainant when the deed was delivered.

II. That after the execution and delivery of said deed, complainant entrusted it to the defendant to take to Kentucky and have it probated and registered in said county, the defendant volunteering to do so, stating that he had some business in said county. Complainant gave defendant two dollars to pay the fees for probating and registering said deed.

8 See, ante, § 161.
9 Lowry v. Medlin, 6 Hum., 450.

That, on defendant’s return complainant went to see him to get the deed, but he pretended he had forgotten it, and would send for it. Thereupon, complainant, after waiting a month or more, wrote to the register of deeds of said county and was informed by him that no such deed had been left with him, or been registered in his office. Complainant’s suspicion being aroused he made inquiries and learned that defendant was denying ever having sold said land to complainant and was trying to sell it to other parties, pretending to them that the deed had been cancelled and destroyed without registration.

Complainant thereupon, through his attorney, called upon the defendant to make him another deed, or produce the original. This he refused to do, and pretended to become very angry, setting up various pretences and conflicting explanations, but admitted that the deed had been made by him.

That, inasmuch as the land is situated in the State of Kentucky and, therefore, out of the jurisdiction of your Honor’s Court, complainant is advised that his remedy is to apply to your Honor for a decree to compel the defendant to re-execute said deed.\[5a\]

Complainant therefore prays:

1st. That subpœna to answer issue [&c.; see, ante, §§ 158; 164.]
2d. That the defendant be required to re-execute said deed; and that, in the meantime, he be enjoined from setting up any claim to said tract of land, or in any way transferring or encumbering the same.
3d. That complainant may have such other, further and general relief as the nature of his case may require.

This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

Ed. P. McQueen, Solicitor.

§ 944. Statutory Method of Supplying Lost Instruments, Papers and Records.—The Code\[6\] provides a summary method of supplying instruments, papers and records, and under its provisions any record, proceedings, or paper, if lost, or mislaid unintentionally, or fraudulently made way with, may be supplied, upon application, under the orders of the Court, by the best evidence the nature of the case will admit of.\[7\] Papers are often supplied in the Chancery Court under this statute.\[8\] To entitle a party to supply a record, paper, or proceeding, lost, mislaid, or made away with, it must be made to appear:

1. That such a record, proceeding, or paper once existed in the Court where-in the application to supply is made. If it be a pleading, deposition, or other part of a file, it must, also, appear that it was filed in the cause.\[9\]

2. That such record, proceeding, or paper is lost, mislaid unintentionally, or fraudulently made away with; and that due and diligent search has been ineffectually made for it in the place where it should be, or was last known to be; and that the last or proper custodian of it does not have it, and cannot find it on due search, and does not know where it is, and believes it is lost, or mislaid unintentionally, or fraudulently made away with.

3. On such facts being made to appear by the affidavits of the Clerk and Master,\[10\] and of the Solicitors in the cause, or other person\[11\] last having it in his possession, if such be the case, the Court will, if satisfied that these affidavits make out a case under the statute, order the record, proceeding, or paper to be supplied by the best evidence that the nature of the case will admit of. 7 Code, § 3907.
8 The practice in such a case is fully set out in Cornelius v. City Bank, 3 Tenn. Ch., 5.
9 Mullins v. Aiken, 2 Heisk., 531; Baker v. Mayor. Ibid, 117. These and similar cases show the importance of the Clerk’s entries of the filing of papers in his rule docket.
10 The Clerk being the custodian, his affidavit must always be made, showing that he is the Clerk and the custodian of the files and records of the Court; that such a record, proceeding, or paper was in his office, according to his own knowledge, or according to some record on his rule docket, trial docket, or execution docket, as the case may be; that he has made diligent search for it in his office, and in such other place or places as it is likely to be found, and that he has been unable to find it; and that it is lost, mislaid, or fraudulently made away with. The deputy clerk’s affidavit is inadmissible, ordinarily, Cornelius v. Bank, 3 Tenn. Ch., 7.
11 The affidavit of such Solicitor or other person must, also, be filed. Indeed, the Solicitors of both parties should make affidavit of the existence of the record or paper; that they have made diligent search for it, and cannot find it; and that they verily believe it is lost, or mislaid, or fraudulently made away with.

intention of the parties; and, in a proper case, after such reformation, the bill so praying, the Court will enforce the instrument by a decree for the amount due the complainant, if a money demand; or, in a proper case, a decree awarding the possession of the property sued for to the complainant.

BILL TO REFORM A DEED.

[For address and caption of the bill, see, ante, §§155-164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That the complainant contracted with the defendant to purchase from him the following tract of land. [Describe it by its location and boundaries, and state its acreage.] And the defendant contracted to convey said tract to complainant and make and deliver to him a deed therefor with full covenants, and acknowledge the same for registration, for the following consideration: [Here state the consideration, and if it has been paid so state, and if not paid show the facts in reference to payment.]

II. That the defendant did on the 8th day of April, 1905, execute, deliver and acknowledge for registration a paper writing which complainant then believed to convey the above boundary of land, and complainant fully paid the purchase money [or has done the acts required as the consideration, specifying them.]

That on comparing the metes and bounds in said deed with the tract of land above agreed to be sold to him complainant finds and so charges that [Here show the mistake whether in metes and bounds, or otherwise.]

III. That [If complainant has ground to charge that the defendant made a mistake in drawing the deed, or the draughtsman made the mistake, let him so charge. If he has grounds to charge that the defendant acted knowingly and fraudulently in having the deed so drawn, let him so charge.]

That complainant has called on the defendant to correct said deed and make it conform to their contract, or make and deliver to him a new deed so conforming, but the defendant refused and still refuses so to do.

IV. That [If the defendant is withholding any part of the land belonging to complainant so allege, and give the facts relating thereto fully.]

The premises considered, complainant prays:
1st. That subpoena to answer issue [see, ante, §§158; 164.]
2d. That said deed be reformed so as to express the real contract of the parties thereto, and especially that the mistake alleged be corrected.
3d. That [If the defendant is withholding any part of the land covered by the deed as it should be reformed, pray that complainant be given possession thereof.]
4th. That [If complainant desires any extraordinary process or relief, let him pray thereof, having laid the necessary grounds therefor in the body of the bill.]
5th. That complainant has such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.

J. H. WALLACE, Solicitor.

The bill need not be sworn to unless some extraordinary process is prayed, in which case add:

This is the first application for an injunction, [attachment, or receiver] in this case.

DECREED OF REFORMATION.

[For title of cause, commencement and recitals of decree, see, ante, § 567.]

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the complainant is entitled to have the deed referred to in his bill reformed as prayed; and the Clerk and Master will execute, acknowledge for registration and deliver to complainant a deed with full covenants conveying to him in fee simple forever the tract of land described in the bill, bounded as follows: [Here give the boundaries of the deed as reformed.]

That all the right and title of the defendant to said tract of land be divested out of him and vested in the complainant, and that a writ of possession issue to put the complainant in full possession of said tract, and of every part thereof.

That the defendant pay all the costs of the cause, for which an execution will issue.

If the instrument as reformed calls for the payment of money, the decree, in a proper case, will adjudge the amount due complainant thereon, and award an execution therefor.

§ 946. Effect of Reforming a Written Instrument.—When a written agreement has been reformed, it stands in all respects, and has identically the same force and effect, between the parties, as though originally made in its reformed condition, for Equity regards that as done which ought to have been done. The reformed instrument is substituted for, and is in lieu of, the original instrument, and takes effect from the date of the original instrument. The change is made nunc pro tunc, and the reformed instrument becomes the only evidence of the original agreement.

On the reformation of an instrument, the rights of the respective parties thereto are determined exclusively by the instrument as reformed; and those rights are precisely the same, no more and no less, for each and all of the parties, as they would have been had the reformed instrument been the one originally by them signed. The result is, the complainant is generally required to go one step further in his bill for reformation, and pray for the enforcement of the reformed contract: if a deed, for instance, has been reformed as against a defendant in possession, or claiming an interest, complainant may pray for a writ of possession, or a decree adjudicating the title, or both. So, whatever the character of the instrument reformed, if the complainant has rights under it needing affirmative enforcement, he may, in the same suit, have the instrument reformed, and enforced as reformed. If a defendant is sued on an instrument that may be reformed to his advantage, he may file a cross-bill and have it reformed, and then rely on the reformed instrument as a defence to the original suit.1

§ 947. Suits for the Recission and Delivery-up of Written Instruments.

§ 947. Suits for the Recission and Delivery-up of Written Instruments. When a written instrument, such as a note of hand, bond, deed or mortgage, has been obtained by fraud, force, or duress, or is based on an illegal or immoral consideration, or has been paid or otherwise discharged, but is retained by the payee, on application by the maker of such instrument and the proof of such facts, the Chancery Court will rescind and cancel the same, and require the defendant to deliver it up, and will enjoin him from setting up any claim under it, or in any way attempting to enforce it, and if he has instituted any legal proceedings on such instrument will enjoin them.

But a recission will not be allowed for fraud unless the complainant disaffirmed the deed, or other instrument, promptly on discovering the fraud, and consistently adhered to such disaffirmance;2 and he must file his bill promptly, for if he sleep on his rights he will be repelled.3 On a bill for recision because the consideration was grossly inadequate, the Court will inquire 1st, would a same man, uninfluenced by some cause not explained, make such a contract; 2d, would the defendant if a fair man take such a contract; and 3d, if he would, ought a Court of Equity to permit him to do it.4

§ 948. Form of Bill for Recision.—The bill must be definite and certain, and must aver positively the facts on which the complainant relies for relief; general allegations and conclusions of law are not adequate; nevertheless, it is not necessary, nor indeed proper, for a complainant to set forth all the details and minute facts constituting the grievance of which he complains.

The bill may contain an alternative prayer for damages in case the recission prayed for is not granted.¹

BILL FOR THE RESCISSION AND DELIVERY-UP OF A MORTGAGE.

[For address and caption of the bill, see, ante, §§ 155-164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That on December 25, 1904, he executed and acknowledged in presence of two witnesses, a deed of mortgage to the defendant on [specifying the property conveyed.] This mortgage has not yet been registered.

II. That [Here specify in detail the circumstances under which said mortgage was executed, giving the details thereof showing fraud, duress, drunkenness, or considerations contrary to law or public policy, and that the defendant was an actor in the matter.]

III. That [Show that complainant was an innocent victim, if such was the case; or if there be any circumstances which mitigate his participation in the immoral or illegal considerations state them.]

IV. That [If the defendant is about or likely to use said instrument to the detriment of complainant give all the facts so showing, in order to lay ground for an injunction.]

V.

Complainant therefore prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c.: see, ante, §§ 158; 164]

2d. That the defendant be required to deliver up said mortgage; and that he be enjoined from having the same registered, and from setting up any claim to, or under, it, and that it be declared void and cancelled; and that whatever title it may have conveyed to the defendant be divested out of him and reinvested in complainant, [or, if the land has been sold and the purchaser is a defendant and his conduct equitable and the purchase-money not paid, pray for a judgment against the first purchaser for the full amount due and against the second purchaser for the amount due from him on his purchase, and declare a lien on the land therefor and pray a sale of the land on credit and in bar of the equity of redemption, if necessary.]

3d. That he may have such further and other relief as the nature of his case may require.

This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

David A. Wood, Solicitor.

[Annex affidavit. See, ante, §§ 161; 164.]

On a bill for recission the complainant must tender whatever consideration he may have received, if any, and offer to do whatever is necessary to place the defendant in statu quo.¹

The answer to a bill to rescind a sale of land for failure of title should fully set forth complainant’s title, if defendant resists the rescission.²

CHAPTER XLVIII.
SUITs FOR SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

A contract is an agreement between two or more parties to do, or not to do, some specified thing. To constitute a valid contract enforceable in a Court of Equity there must be 1, The reciprocal or mutual assent of two or more persons, competent to contract; 2, A consideration deemed sufficient in law; and 3, A thing to be done which is not forbidden by law, or a thing not to be done, the performance of which is not commanded by law. When a contract is found to be valid all a Court can do is to enforce it. The mere fact that one party or the other may have obtained an advantage does not justify a Court in an endeavor to mitigate the hardship; for the law allows a party to obtain an advantage, provided he occupies no relation of trust or confidence, or practices no fraud, or does no act to mislead or deceive the other party. Courts of Equity do not stand as the guardian of all persons who contract to see that absolute equality prevails between them. When a contract is binding on the parties it is binding on the Courts, for Courts have jurisdiction only to enforce contracts between parties, not to make contracts between them. If a contract is so indefinite or uncertain as to convey no reasonable meaning, it is void for vagueness; if it provides for the doing of something unlawful to be done, or for the omission of something required by the law to be done, it is void for illegality; if the party seeking to avoid it, was incapable at the time of contracting by reason of some disability, as infancy, coverture, duress, drunkenness or want of mental capacity, then the contract is void for want of a competent party; and if the consideration is wanting or is illegal, the contract is void for want of a legal consideration. If a contract has all the essentials of validity, and is certain in its terms, is based on an adequate and valuable consideration, is fair and just in all its provisions, is free from any fraud, misrepresentation, illegality, or mistake, is capable of being enforced without hardship to either party, and if compensation in damages for its breach is impracticable, or would be inadequate, a bill will be maintained for its specific performance. The broad ground of jurisdiction in such cases is the inadequacy, or the impracticability, of damages to do complete justice to the

1 Talbott v. Manard, 22 Pick., 60.

2 The following are the principal maxims relating to the law of contracts, not already given:

MAXIMS RELATING TO CONTRACTS.

1. Modus et conventio vincunt legem. (When there is an agreement its terms prevail against what otherwise would be the law.) But Equity will relieve against an inequitable agreement. Snell's Pr. Eq., 290.

2. Privata formatur juris publico non derogat. (The agreements of private individuals will not be allowed so to operate as to diminish the effect of a public law.)

3. Qui sentit commodum sentire debet et own. (He who acquires property or a right must take it subject to all its encumbrances.)

4. Facta que turpem causam continent non sunt observanda. (Contracts based upon immoral or illegal considerations are not enforceable by law.)

5. Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. (No right of action arises out of a contract based on no consideration.)

6. Qui facit per alium facit per se. (He who does an act by means of an agent is considered in law as doing it in person.)

7. Delegatus non potest delegare. (An agent cannot transfer his authority to another;) nor can a trustee.

8. Respondent superior. (The principal is responsible for the acts of his agent.)

9. Ratihibito mandato equiperatur. (When a principal ratifies what his agent does, such ratification is equivalent to an order to do what was done.)

10. Nemo potest plus juris ad alium transnire quam ipse habet. (No one can transfer to another a greater right than he himself possesses.)

3 3 Pom. Eq. Jur., §§1401-1405. A Court of Chancery will not specifically enforce a contract when (1) it is illegal or immoral; or when (2) it is without consideration; or (3) when the contract involves personal skill or knowledge, as to sing, or perform in public; or when (4) the contract is to construct buildings, or make repairs; or when (5) there is a want of mutuality, as where one of the parties is an infant. Snell's Pr. Eq., 519-522.
injured party. Hence, where damages are practicable, and would be adequate, the Court, as a rule, will not compel a specific performance, but will leave the complainant to his remedies at law, or will itself award damages. If the contract relates to lands, or an interest in them, and in addition to all of the foregoing requirements is, also, in writing, a specific performance will be decreed as of course, for no damages can adequately represent real estate. On the other hand, chattels of all kinds, can ordinarily, be duplicated in the market, or can be reproduced; and hence, a pecuniary compensation is both practicable and adequate, unless, as it sometimes happens, the article has a special value, such as a keepsake, a family relic, heirlooms, paintings, gems, coins, statuary, rare works of art, manuscript, title papers, and the like, in all of which cases a specific delivery is ordinarily decreed. 4

The most ordinary cases for a specific performance are: (1) agreements in writing to buy or sell land; (2) contracts to give or renew leases; (3) contracts to give a mortgage; (4) contracts to insure; (5) contracts for chattels of special value; and (6) agreements of separation between husband and wife.

§ 950. Frame and Form of Bill for Specific Performance.—In drawing the bill the contract must be fully set out, and the consideration specified, and complainant must offer to do all that the contract requires of him.

BILL FOR A SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

[For address and caption of bill, see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That on the 1st day of September, 1905, [give the date of the contract,] the defendant was the owner and in possession of the following lot [or tract] of land situated in the County of Knox, [give the county in which the land lies, and remember the bill must be filed in that county. See, ante, §§ 177. If the contract does not relate to land, here state the substance and subject-matter of the contract,] and bounded as follows: [here insert the description contained in the contract, and if this description is not definite enough give, also, the description in the deed under which the defendant holds.]

II. That the defendant being so seized and possessed of said lot [or tract] of land, did, on said 1st day of September, 1905, [give the date of the contract,] contract in writing, signed by him and delivered to complainant, to convey to complainant, for the consideration of one thousand dollars, said lot [or tract] of land, with the usual covenants. [In this paragraph of the bill give the details of the contract, if not given in paragraph I, and especially set forth the consideration complainant is to pay, or what he is to do as the consideration of the contract.] Said contract is hereto exhibited, and marked A.

III. That, [Here, show for and to what extent complainant has complied with conditions precedent binding on him, if any, thus:] in accordance with the terms of said contract, the complainant did on the day said contract was executed, pay defendant the sum of two hundred dollars, which is receipted for on the face of said contract [or, for which defendant gave him a receipt, if such be the fact.] On the 1st day of November, 1905, complainant paid the defendant on said contract the further sum of three hundred dollars, and took his receipt therefor, which is hereto exhibited, and marked B; and on making this payment complainant called on the defendant to make and deliver said deed of conveyance, when defendant, greatly to complainant’s surprise, insisted the deed was not to be made until the entire consideration was paid. [Here show what reasons and excuses, if any, the defendant gives for not performing his contract.]

IV. That [If the defendant is doing any act, or threatening to do any act, in reference to the subject-matter of the contract which materially impairs or will impair its value, or is threatening to convey it, so allege and give the particulars, as foundation for an injunction, thus:] the defendant is having many of the most valuable trees on said tract of land cut down to be converted into lumber, and has offered to sell said tract to another party.

V. The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c., as in §§ 158; 164, ante.]

2d. That said agreement be specifically performed by order of your Honor, and that any and all orders, injunctions, attachments of the person, and other process necessary to that end be made and awarded by your Honor, and duly enforced.

§ 951. SUITS FOR SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

3d. That an injunction issue [if necessary, to restrain the defendant from doing the acts complained of in the bill, thus: ] to restrain the defendant from cutting the valuable trees on said tract, or committing any waste thereon, and that he, especially, be enjoined from selling or encumbering said tract.

4th. That complainant have such further and other relief as the facts will justify.

[If there is a prayer for an injunction, add: ] This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

Charles H. Smith, Solicitor.

The bill need not be sworn to unless an injunction, or other extraordinary process, is prayed for.

If any money has been tendered by the complainant out of Court, the bill should so state, and should renew the tender; and the money should be filed with the bill.

The bill may pray in the alternative for a specific performance, or, in case that cannot be had, for damages for the defendant's breach of the contract; or, in a proper case, such damages may be awarded under the prayer for general relief. And if the amount of the damages does not appear at the hearing, the Master may be directed to hear proof and report thereon.

§ 951. Decree for a Specific Performance.—The following decree will indicate the general character of such decrees:

DECREES FOR A SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

[Here insert title, commencement and recitals: see, ante, § 567.]

From all of which the Court is of opinion that complainant is entitled to the relief by him specially prayed, and it is, therefore, ordered, adjudged and decreed that the agreement set out in the bill of complaint be specifically performed by the defendant.

It is further ordered and decreed that the defendant execute, and acknowledge for registration before two competent witnesses in the Master's office, and deliver to the Master for the complainant a deed conveying to the complainant the following lot [or tract] of land: [describing it by courses and distances, or other sufficient description,] with covenants of warranty and seizin. If the parties differ as to the form of the deed the Master will settle the same. [If any transfer is to be made in writing to specifically perform the contract, or any transfer of property, so specify in the decree, and if a writ of possession is necessary, award it, thus: ] And, on the delivery of said deed to the Master, a writ of possession will issue to put complainant in full possession of said tract [or lot] of land. A lien is hereby declared on said land to secure the payment of the balance of the purchase-money, which may be paid into the Master's office by the complainant for the defendant.

The defendant will pay all the costs of the cause down to the execution of the writ of possession.

And either party is given liberty to apply to the Court as occasion may require.

SUITES FOR AN ACCOUNTING.

§ 952. Accounts Generally Considered.

§ 953. Suits for an Accounting Where the Account is Open.

§ 954. Form of Bill and Decree for an Accounting Where the Account is Open.

§ 955. Suits to Open, or Surcharge and Falsify a Stated or Settled Account.

§ 956. Form of Bill and Decree to Open a Stated or Settled Account.

§ 957. Suits to Open Settlements Made by Executors, Administrators, and Guardians.

§ 958. Proceedings in the Master's Office on an Accounting.

§ 952. Accounts Generally Considered.—An account is a detailed statement of the mutual demands in the nature of debit and credit between parties arising out of contracts or some fiduciary relation. Accounts are either: 1, Open; 2, Stated; or 3, Settled.

1. An Open Account is one of which the balance has not been struck, or which is not accepted by both parties.

2. A Stated Account is one, 1, that has been made out and agreed to, or 2, rendered and admitted to be correct, or 3, rendered and acquiesced in, or 4, not objected to in a reasonable time.

3. A Settled Account is one that has been stated and paid.

Settlements of executors, administrators and guardians, made in the County Court, in pursuance of law, are to be taken as prima facie correct, and if adult parties in interest are present when such settlements are made, they have, as to such parties, all the force and effect of stated accounts.

The Chancery Court will, on a proper bill filed for that purpose and sustained, open either a stated or settled account, 1, where by reason of some mistake, or omission, or accident, or fraud, or undue advantage, the account is vitiated, and the balance incorrectly fixed; and 2, where by reason of some relation of trust or confidence between the parties, the complainant was at a disadvantage, and as a consequence the account is inequitable.

When, however, the bill is filed to open the settlement of an executor, administrator or guardian, made in the County Court, no fraud, or undue advantage, or other special Equity need be alleged, unless the complainant was present when the settlement was made; in which event, the settlement has all the force and effect of a stated account, and must be impeached in the same way.

Where the fraud, mistake, undue advantage or imposition is gross, the Court will direct the whole account to be opened and taken de novo; but where the mistake, omission, inaccuracy, fraud, or imposition is not shown to affect or stain all the items of the transaction, the Court will, ordinarily, allow the account to stand, with liberty to the complainant to surcharge and falsify it.

The effect of such a course is to leave the account in full force except in so far as the complainant can prove errors and mistakes. Sometimes the Court confines the complainant to the particular items of error or mistake set forth in 4 Code, §§ 2305-2306; see, ante, § 333.

5 Torrey v. Williams, 7 Vegg., 172; Matlock v. Rice, 6 Heisk., 33.
7 1 Sto. Eq. Jur., § 527a. But in the absence of fraud, and after a long delay, it requires very clear proof to surcharge and falsify settled accounts. Poker v. Cren, 1 Lea, 14.

9 Torrey v. Williams, 7 Vegg., 172.
his bill, treating the account as, in other respects, conclusive. The Court is more reluctant to open a settled account than a stated account; and, except in cases of apparent fraud, or many errors, will allow the account to stand, and give complainant leave to surcharge and falsify. Where a party is given leave to surcharge and falsify, the burden of proof is on him; but where the account is opened in toto, and a general accounting ordered de novo, each party must prove his own charges and his own credits.

§ 953. Suits for an Accounting Where the Account is Open.—Where parties have business dealings, involving many items, or where in consequence of relations of trust, or confidence, one party has handled the estate of the other; or done business for him, involving a series of transactions, or numerous items, a bill for an accounting will lie in behalf of the party entitled to a settlement. Bills of this character are usually brought by wards against their guardians, by principals against their agents, by one partner against another, by clients against their attorneys, by landlords against tenants, by a guardian against his predecessor, by beneficiaries against their trustees, by legatees, distributees and creditors against executors and administrators, and by one or more tenants in common against another, or other tenants in common, when the respective defendants have failed duly to exhibit an account for the funds or other property in which the complainant has an interest, and to pay over whatever may be due or belong to him.

The bill in such a suit should start out by stating clearly the relations of the parties, and that in consequence of such relations various sums of money or other property of the complainant went, or should have gone, into the possession, or under the control, of the defendant, giving items, dates, values, and circumstances. The bill should then show that the defendant has rendered no account of such money and property and the profits thereof; or, if he did render any, that it was imperfect and incorrect, that complainant refused to accept it in any respect, and so notified the defendant; and allege, if known, the balance due complainant on a fair accounting; and pray for an account to be taken by the Clerk and Master and for a decree for the amount found due. If the defendant has any sureties bound for his good conduct they should be made defendants, and their suretyship alleged in the body of the bill.

A bill that seeks to open and reform a stated or settled account, or to set aside such an account, or to surcharge and falsify any settlement made by executors, administrators or guardians, is a very different bill from one for an accounting where the account is open.

§ 954. Form of Bill and Decree for an Accounting Where the Account is Open.—The following forms indicate how the bill and decree should be framed in ordinary cases for an accounting where the account is open:

FORM OF BILL FOR AN ACCOUNTING, WHEN THE BILL IS OPEN.

[For Address and Commencement of bill see § 164, ante.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That [Here show the relation of the parties, how and when it originated, and what it related to.]

II.

That [Here show the business dealings resulting from the relations of the parties, and what matters were entrusted to, or assumed by, the defendant, and give a full history of all the various transactions engaged in by the defendant, and as fully as possible the moneys and other property belonging to complainant which went into his hands, or could have gone by due diligence.]

That [If the defendant has done, or is about to do, anything making an attachment or injunction expedient, specify such inequitable conduct.]

That [If the defendant has any sureties for the faithful discharge of his duty to complainant, so state, giving their names, and the nature of their obligation, and insert their names as defendants in the caption of the bill.]

The premises considered the complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer [See § 164, for prayer for process.]

2nd. That the defendant be required to set out in his answer a full and detailed account of all moneys, notes of hand, accounts, or other evidences of debt, and all property of every kind that came into his hands, and show what disposition he made of them. [And if the defendant is charged with having sold, transferred, given away or otherwise disposed of any property not accounted for, pray he may be required to specify the same and to state what consideration he received therefor. And if he has failed to account for any money or property, pray that he be required to state why he so failed, and what has become of the same.]

3rd. That an account be taken and stated by the Clerk and Master showing all the moneys, accounts, choses in action and other evidences of debt, and all property, that went into the defendant's hands, or should by due diligence have gone into his hands by virtue of his being the guardian, [agent, attorney, trustee, executor, administrator, partner, tenant in common, or other confidie,15] and what disposition he has made thereof, and what profit he made, or could by due diligence have made out of the money and property that went, or might have gone, into his hands as such guardian, [agent, attorney, administrator, or other confidie.] That the Master show in his said report what balance is due complainant, after allowing the defendant all just credits, but no compensation, and that a decree be rendered in favor of complainant against the defendant [and his said sureties, if any, and they are sued,] for said balance.

4th. That an injunction issue to restrain the defendant from [stating the acts of defendant to be restrained.] Also, that an attachment issue and be levied upon the property of the defendant. And, also, that complainant have such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.

DAVID K. YOUNG, Solicitor.

The bill should be sworn to, if it seeks an injunction or attachment, and should allege that it is the first application for such process.

The decree in favor of the complainant for an account should specify the rules to govern the Master, and blaze out his road as definitely as possible so as to prevent too wide a range of proof and investigation.16 The decree in form ordinarily follows the special prayer of the bill in stating what matters the Master will inquire into and report on, coupled with such directions as the Chancellor may see fit to make to limit and define the scope of the inquiry.

DECLREE FOR AN ACCOUNTING.

It is ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the matters of account in controversy be and are referred to the Clerk and Master to take and state an account between the complainant and defendant concerning the business of [stating the business, if any] and all transactions relating to or growing out of the same, [and, if a partnership is involved, add: charging each party with the several sums by them respectively drawn or received from the firm assets on their individual account; also interest17 thereon.] The Master is authorized to compel the production of all such books, papers, documents and other writings as may be in the possession or power of the parties, or either of them, and shall be called for by either party, or he shall think proper to be produced before him in taking such account. The Master shall require each party, before the taking of depositions is begun, to produce and file with him a charge or statement in writing, duly signed, of all the several items which he claims the other party should be charged with, giving the date, character and amount of each item, and no item not contained in these several statements will be considered by the Master, unless on good cause shown,18 he allow said statement, or statements, to be amended by the insertion of additional items or the alteration of the original items.19

The Master will so state and take said account as to show the balance which either party may owe the other, and he will report hereon to the next term of the Court, until which time all other matters are reserved. The Master shall have liberty to state any special circumstances.

15 Interest is charged against a partner on the balance found due from him on the day of the dissolution of the partnership, such day being the proper time to make a rest, and adjust the balance of the partnership account. Blake's Ch. Pr., 235
16 See, ante, § 62, sub-sec. 8, for what is meant by "good cause shown."
17 These statements of charge and discharge will § 955. Suits to Open, or Surcharge and Falsify, a Stated or Settled Account. If a bill is filed for an account, when there exists a stated or settled account between the parties, the defendant may plead or set up in his answer the stated or settled account, and thus defeat the suit. To avoid this defence, the bill must set forth the facts connected with the account, and show that by reason of some acts of fraud, oppression, imposition or undue advantage, or of some gross and manifest error, or by reason of some relation of trust or confidence between the parties, the complainant should not be bound by the account. The bill must specify the fraudulent acts, impositions, undue advantages, or gross and manifest errors complained of, or the relations of trust or confidence existing; and where the ground for opening the account is fraud, or a relation of trust or confidence, the bill must set forth such facts as will show the account to be inequitable. General charges of fraud, mistake, error, injustice, or undue advantage, are wholly insufficient either in a bill to open a stated or a settled account, or in a bill to surcharge and falsify such an account, but the complainant must give the specific acts and facts complained of. This is especially true of a bill to surcharge and falsify which will not be sustained unless the specific mistakes, omissions and errors are pointed out, and proved as stated.

But while a complainant must specify the errors he insists on, it is not necessary to prove all that he specifies; if he prove some, he is entitled to a decree giving him liberty to surcharge and falsify. Where one party is allowed to surcharge and falsify the other may do so, too.

What is meant by "surcharging" is showing the omission of an item in the account for which the complainant is entitled to credit, and "falsifying" is showing a charge against him in the account which is false, and should be stricken out. A surcharge seeks to have credits inserted which have been omitted, and a falsification seeks to have debits omitted which have been inserted. And it must be borne in mind that there is a marked difference between a bill to open a stated or a settled account for a general accounting de novo, and a bill that merely seeks to surcharge and falsify such an account. On a bill praying for the opening of a stated or a settled account, if sustained and a general accounting ordered, the account complained of is wholly set aside and stands for nought; and each side must prove the charges and credits for which he contends. The Court will not ordinarily open a stated or settled account in toto, even on a bill filed for that purpose, unless the assent of the complainant was obtained by fraud or imposition, or was given by inadvertence or mistake, or unless there were relations of trust or confidence between the parties; but will allow the account to stand, and give complainant the right to surcharge and falsify it on a reference to the Master. The burden of proof is always on the party who seeks to surcharge or falsify, but when an account is opened generally, the burden of proof rests upon the party asserting a charge or claiming a credit. On a bill to surcharge and falsify a stated account the parties will be limited to such matters as they have specifically alleged to be overcharges, errors and omissions, for, on such a bill, the account be found of great value by the Master. They will prove to be charts to guide him through the labyrinth and mazes of a tangled mass of testimony and a heterogeneous conglomeration of facts and figures. Such statements are required by the rules of Chancery practice. See Blake's Ch. Pr., 218-228; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 493; 563-569; 2 Ibid, 494-497; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1221-1222; Hicks v. Chadwell, 1 Tenn. Ch., 251; Myers v. Bennett, 3 Lea, 184. For forms of such statements, see, ante, § 953.

20 See, ante, §§ 142; 333; 858; 934; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 667.

21 It seems to be well settled that a bill to open a settled account must specify the errors in the account. Sto. Eq. Pl., § 800, note.

22 Raht v. Mining, 5 Lea, 22. While Courts will not hesitate to relieve against an error apparent on the face of the account, there is a general disinclination to unravel an old account, even when set upon an erroneous principle, unless a confidential relationship existed between the parties. Ibid.

25 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 668. The account will be wholly unravelled and the parties will not be bound by deductions agreed upon between them on taking over the former account, Ibid. While it stands for nought as an account it will nevertheless be evidence against the party who made it out, in so far as he charges himself, or credits the other party.

29 Ante, § 333; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 668.

is impliedly admitted to be correct, except in so far as overcharges, errors and omissions are alleged.

Where a bill impeaches a stated account, and alleges that the complainant has no counterpart of it, and calls on the defendant to file a copy of it with his answer, the defendant must do so; and if on inspection of such a copy the complainant discover errors therein, he will be allowed to amend his bill to allege them.\textsuperscript{31} So, if at any time, new errors or new frauds, or other new grounds for impeaching the account be discovered, the complainant may put them in issue by amending his bill. If, however, he is allowed to surcharge and falsify the account, he is not confined to the errors and omissions alleged in his bill and proved at the hearing, but may show others at the taking of the account ordered, unless the order of reference expressly forbid.

In general, where fraud, imposition, undue advantage, or fiduciary relations are shown to exist, the Court will incline to open up the whole settlement; in cases of accident, mistake, omission or inaccuracy, the Court will ordinarily allow the account to stand, with liberty to the complainant to surcharge and falsify; or, in a weak case, the Court may open the account only as to the matters specially set out by complainant in his bill.\textsuperscript{32} must put your finger on each and every item of the account you dispute, and must specify each and every item you claim has been omitted from the account. It is sometimes well to give the history of the items omitted or mischarged, so as to show that your complaint in reference to it is equitable.]

That, [Here show when this settlement took place, and the circumstances in which it was made; and if there was any hurry or confusion, any promises made to correct errors, any failure to produce vouchers or other papers, or any other act or omission that interfered with a full and honest and intelligent settlement, state these incidents in full, giving the particulars. If the account was made out by the defendant alone, and delivered to the complainant, or sent to him, so state; and if there was any delay in complaining, explain why the latter did not complain at once, why he delayed calling the defendant's attention to the errors and omissions in the account. If the account has been paid, explain fully how the complainant happened to pay it, and if any inducements were held out, or promises or representations made to obtain payment, state these facts fully, or allege, if such be the fact, that the errors were not discovered until after payment; and remember it is harder to open a settled account than a stated account.\textsuperscript{33}]

\textbf{V.}

That, [Here show any fraud, imposition, undue advantage, act of oppression, concealment, or misrepresentation, on the part of the defendant whereby the complainant was misled, or deceived, or his suspicions quieted, or his objections met, or his confidence obtained, or his assent procured. If any relation of trust or confidence existed between the parties, show the facts fully.\textsuperscript{34}]

That, [If the defendant has made any promises to correct the errors complained of, so state, and show his subsequent refusal so to do. If there has been any delay in filing the bill give the reason thereof fully.]

That, [If the defendant has sued at law on the account, so state, specifying when the suit was brought, and in what Court, and what steps have been taken. See, ante, §814, and notes. If the defendant is threatening to sue, or to assign the account, so charge. If any other ground for an injunction, or attachment, exists, give such ground. See, ante, §§871-873.]

That, [If complainant never had a counterpart of said account or has lost or mislaid it, so state, and pray that the defendant file a copy of it with his answer. In such a case reserve the right to amend your bill, if, on inspecting said account, you deem it advisable.]

The premises considered, the complainant comes into your Honor's Court and prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c.: see, ante, §§158; 164. If an injunction is necessary to stay a suit brought on the account, or to prevent the defendant from suing, or from transferring the account, so pray; if an attachment is desired, and grounds therefor have been laid, so pray. See, ante, §158.]

2d. That said account be opened and set aside, and that a general account of all dealings and transactions between complainant and the defendant be taken and stated by the Master on a reference for that purpose; and that on said reference, said stated [or settled] account be held for nought.

[If, however, a general accounting is not desired but only liberty to surcharge and falsify, then pray:] That complainant be allowed to show the said errors and omissions and mistakes in said account; and that the said account be opened for that purpose, and be referred to the Master, and complainant be given liberty to surcharge and falsify the same.

3d. That complainant may have such other further and general relief in the premises as the nature and circumstances of this case may entitle him to, and as, to your Honor shall seem meet.

4th. This is the first application for writs of injunction [and attachment.] in this case.

J. C. J. WILLIAMS, Solicitor.

[Annex affidavit as in §789, ante.]

The decree will, of course, follow the special prayer of the bill and the opinion of the Chancellor, and specific instruction should be given the Master as to the particular matters of law or fact in controversy.

DEGREE OPENING A STATED ACCOUNT.

From all of which it appears that the complainant is entitled to have the account referred to in the bill opened and set aside, and to have an account in this Court.

It is therefore ordered and decreed by the Court that said account be opened and set aside and for nothing held. And the Master is directed to take and state an account of all dealings and transactions between the parties. [If the account is to be limited to any particular business, such as partnership, agency, trust, &c., then add:] growing out of the partnership, [agency, trust or other business] referred to in the bill. The Master will, before entering upon the account, require each of the parties to file a sworn statement of the credits he claims, and the charges he admits, and no items not set out in these statements shall be considered by the Master in stating the account. [If any special directions as to particular charges and credits are deemed necessary by the Court, here give them.]

[If necessary further order:] And for the better taking of said account, both parties are required to produce all books and papers in their custody or power relating thereto.

All other questions are reserved until the incoming of said report.

If the decree merely opens the account for the purpose of allowing it to be surcharged and falsified, it will be as follows:

It is therefore ordered and decreed by the Court that said account be opened, and that any of the parties have liberty to surcharge and falsify the same. The Master will restate the account between the parties, and report the same to the next term. In restating the account he will allow the account set up by the defendant to stand except in so far as it may be successfully surcharged or falsified by the complainant. [If the Court should limit the liberty to surcharge and falsify then add:] But the complainant will be limited to the items of surcharge and falsification set forth in the bill.

All other questions are reserved until the incoming of said report.

28 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1221-1222, note. This is good practice.

36 The Court should settle the principles upon which the account will be taken, and may order certain claims to be allowed, and others to be disallowed. Ante, §§899-900.

37 The Court may, also, allow the defendant to surcharge and falsify when once the account is opened, because when opened for one party, it is equally open for both parties. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 668.
If the items of surcharge and falsification are few, and the proof all in, the Chancellor may reform the account without a reference to the Master, and make a final decree at the hearing. 38

§ 957. Suits to Open Settlements Made by Executors, Administrators and Guardians.—When a bill is filed to open an official settlement made by an executor, administrator or guardian, it is not necessary to allege any fraud, imposition or undue advantage, unless the complainant, then an adult, was present at the making of the settlement, or had due notice thereof. It is sufficient to show that the complainant is interested in the settlement, and has been aggrieved by errors, omissions and false credits therein; and that a just and legal settlement will benefit him. If however the complainant was an adult, and present at the settlement, or after attaining majority, ratified the settlement, or acquiesced therein, he must then show fraud, oppression, imposition, undue advantage, or other equitable circumstances, to entitle him to an opening of the settlement.

The bill should, as a rule, be filed, not only against the personal representative or guardian, but also against his sureties on his official bond, so as to make them liable for the decree obtained.

On an accounting before the Master, the official settlement by the personal representative and guardian will be taken as prima facie correct. 39

BILL TO OPEN A GUARDIAN'S SETTLEMENT.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§ 155-164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That the complainant, while a minor, became entitled to a large estate [showing when, how, and the amount, and that it all went into the defendant's hands.]

II. That the defendant was appointed guardian of complainant, [showing when, in what Court; and if you seek to hold his sureties liable, show who they were. Show, also, that all of said estate went, or should have gone, into the defendant's hands.]

III. That the defendant, in his settlements with the Clerk of the County Court, falsely and fraudulently demanded and received credit for the following items, [showing each item as-sailed.] The facts relative to said items are as follows: [showing specifically such facts as invalidate the credits, and render them inequitable, or illegal.]

IV. That the defendant, in said settlement, falsely and fraudulently neglected and failed to charge himself with the following sums of money, and items of property, by him received, or that might by due diligence have been by him received, as such guardian: [specifying each sum of money, and each piece of property, he should have been charged with in said settlement, and the particular circumstances connected with each.]

V. That, if the defendant had not thus obtained said false and fraudulent credits, and had not falsely and fraudulently kept back said sums, and pieces of property, and failed to charge himself therewith, he would have been liable to complainant in the sum of three thousand dollars more than his said settlement shows, and more than he paid over, or offered to pay, to complainant, and he, as such guardian, [and the other defendants, as his sureties, if they are sued,] is liable to complainant therefor, on his said bond, and by virtue of his said trust; and is liable to pay complainant compound interest thereon.

In said settlement, the defendant is allowed undue compensation; [show wherein,] and for his said frauds he should be denied any compensation whatever.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. For proper process [Cf.: see, ante, §§ 155-164.]

2d. That complainant be allowed to surcharge and falsify said settlement, and to show said errors, omissions and fraudulent charges, and to have said settlement reopened generally, to the end that the complainant may show by proof, not only said errors, but any others he may hereafter discover.

38 Gray v. State, 11 Pick., 317; McLean v. State, 8 Heisk., 286. This while good law is not good practice. See, ante, § 597, note 12.

39 Code, § 3786.

40 The items charged against the guardian by the County Court Clerk will, of course, be all charged against him in the bill.

41 The Court will not sustain a bill to open an account stated, unless specific errors therein are distinctly pointed out. Sto. Eq. Pl., § 251.

42 The sureties of the guardian on all his bonds should be sued in the same suit with him.
SUITS FOR AN ACCOUNTING.

750

3d. That the Master take and state an account between complainant and defendant, showing therein, fully and in detail, the various amounts justly chargeable to the defendant, and the various amounts he is justly entitled to credit for; that, in taking said account, said false and fraudulent settlement with the said Clerk be wholly disregarded, and for nought held, [complainant never having had any notice thereof, and being then an infant.] and that said settlement he made anew. That no compensation be allowed the defendant, and that he be charged with compounded interest.

4th. And that complainant may have all such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.

ANDREW GAMBLE, Solicitor.

DECREES FOR AN ACCOUNTING, WITH LIBERTY TO SURCHARGE AND FALSIFY.

[For title, commencement and recitals, see, ante, § 557.]

The Court doth order and decree that the account stated on the...day of........., 19...., [giving its date] do stand, with liberty to either party to falsify or surcharge the same. And the Master is ordered to take a general account of all dealings and transactions between the complainant and defendant from the foot of said stated account, and report what shall appear to be due from either party to the other on the balance of the account when taken. It is further ordered and decreed that the stated account dated the .... day of ............, 19...., [giving a date after the other stated account] be opened and set aside, and not considered by the Master.

§ 958. Proceedings in the Master's Office on an Accounting.—The proceedings in the Master's office on a reference for an account have been heretofore considered somewhat extensively, and need not be repeated.

The Master should require the parties to file their respective statements of charge and discharge at an early day after the decree, and should not begin the examination of witnesses until both of said statements have been filed. Ordinarily, in examining witnesses, it is best to examine the parties and their respective clerks, bookkeepers and cashiers first, beginning with the complainant; for by so doing it will be found that so many items in the respective statements are undisputed as to render any further testimony in reference to them unnecessary.

The Master should not allow these statements to be amended on mere motion, but only on good cause shown, and no additions should be allowed by a party after he and his clerks, bookkeepers and cashiers have been examined, except for good cause shown by affidavit. These statements are in the nature of pleadings, and if they could be amended on mere motion their value would be greatly impaired.

COMPLAINANT'S CHARGE BEFORE THE MASTER.

John Doe, Complainant's Charge.

Richard Roe.

The complainant insists that upon the reference pending in this cause the defendant should be charged with the following sums of money:

1. 1903, Jany. 1. Cash paid.......................................................... $100.00
2. Feb. 2. Money paid for defendant to John Smith, on note.................................. 360.00
3. Mch. 4. Price of horse, saddle and bridle........................................ 140.00
4. April 16. Bill of goods (Bill annexed).......................................... 30.00

[And so on to the end of the charges.]

Complainant reserves the right to amend this charge, or add new items, as he may be advised.

Nov. 21, 1905. John Doe

DEFENDANT'S DISCHARGE BEFORE THE MASTER.

John Doe, Defendant's Discharge.

Richard Roe.

The defendant insists that upon the reference in this cause he, the defendant, is entitled to the following credits:

1. 1903, Jany. 10, Cash paid complainant........................................... $200.00
2. March 5, Value of horse................................................................ 90.00
3. March 31, Personal services, for 1 month..................................... 50.00

43 See, ante, §§ 603-610.
44 For what is meant by "good cause," see, ante, § 62, sub-sec. 8.
45 This good cause should be such as would warrant a rehearing of a decree because of newly discovered evidence. See, post, §§ 1215-1219.
4. April 30, Paid a note for complainant, (Note attached) ........................................ 184.00
5. July 31, Rent of house for 3 months, May, June and July, 1903 .................................. 30.00
6. Aug. 1, Taxes paid for 1900 ...................................................................................... 116.00

[And on to the end of the items of discharge.]
And defendant claims interest on each of the above items from the date thereof until the making of the Master's report.
And defendant craves leave to add to, or alter, this discharge as he may be advised.

If either party finds that he has accidentally omitted any items or claims in his statement of charges or discharge, he may file a further statement thus:

FURTHER CHARGE BY COMPLAINANT BEFORE THE MASTER.

John Doe,  Further Charge.
vs.  Richard Roe.

Complainant hereby adds to his charge in this case dated Nov. 21, 1905, as follows:
1. Complainant insists that the defendant should be charged with interest on the several items and amounts specified in his original charge from their respective dates.
2. Since the original charge was filed, to-wit, on Nov. 25, 1905, complainant has been compelled to pay as defendant's surety on a note to John Brown, (note attached,) $68.00.
And complainant craves leave to further alter, or amend, his said charge.

And so the defendant may likewise amend or alter his discharge thus, on showing cause:

FURTHER DISCHARGE OF DEFENDANT BEFORE THE MASTER.

John Doe,  Further Discharge of Defendant.
vs.  Richard Roe.

The defendant hereby adds to his discharge, dated Nov. 25, 1905, the following:
1. 1903, May 2. One suit of clothes returned ............................................................... $16.00
2. June 13. One car ticket for complainant's wife to St. Louis and return .................... 20.00
And defendant craves leave to further alter or amend his said discharge.
Nov. 27, 1905.  James H. Grant, Solicitor.
CHAPTER L.

SUITS IN RELATION TO PARTNERSHIPS.

§ 959. Partnerships Generally Considered.
§ 960. Suits by Partners to Wind up a Partnership.

§ 959. Partnerships Generally Considered.—A partnership is a union of two or more persons on an agreement to place their money, effects, labor or skill, or some or all of them, in lawful commerce or business, and to divide the profit and bear the loss in certain stipulated proportions. Each of the partners has an interest in the assets of the firm, and each is personally responsible for its contracts and liabilities. Each partner is an agent of the firm, and by using the firm name may bind the firm by contract as to any matter relating to the business of the firm. While individuals as between themselves they are a unit as to all others, so far as the firm’s business is concerned.

Courts of Equity will dissolve a partnership before the regular time of its expiration, in case, by reason of the ill-feeling between the partners or other circumstances, it is impracticable to carry on the undertaking at all, or at least according to the stipulations of the articles, or beneficially; or in case of the insanity, permanent incapacity, or gross misconduct of one of the parties. And a partnership will also be dissolved at the instance of a partner who was induced to enter into it on false representation. On the other hand, in case of a partnership existing during the pleasure of the parties, with no time fixed for its renunciation, Equity will grant an injunction against a dissolution, if a sudden dissolution is about to be made in bad faith, and would work irreparable injury. And an injunction will be granted to prevent a partner from doing acts injurious to the partnership. Where a dissolution has taken place, not only will an account be decreed, but, if necessary, a receiver will be appointed to close the business, and make sale of the property.

The creditors of the partnership have a right to the payment of their debts out of the partnership funds, before the private creditors of either of the partners. On the other hand, the separate creditors of each partner are entitled to be first paid out of the separate effects of their debtor, before the partnership creditors can claim anything. The partnership property of all kinds is regarded in Equity as a trust fund to secure the partnership debts.

The partnership creditors may in the first instance proceed against the executors or administrators of a deceased partner, leaving them to their remedy over against the surviving partner.

§ 960. Suits by Partners to Wind up a Partnership.—Inasmuch as one partner cannot sue another in a Court of law, while the relation exists, all such suits must be instituted in the Chancery Court. In partnership suits, inter se, all of the partners must be made parties, either complainant or defendant, and when one or more partners wish to file a bill against one or more partners all of the partners who do not wish to join in the bill must be made defendants, and if a partner is dead his personal representative must take his place either as complainant or defendant.

1 Mann v. Taylor, 5 Hrisk, 269.
5 Smith’s Eq. Jur., 353.
§ 961. Pleadings, Decrees and Procedure in a Suit to Wind up a Partnership.—In a suit by one partner against another, the following forms may be found useful:

BILL TO DISSOLVE AND WIND UP A PARTNERSHIP.

[Insert address and caption as in §§ 155; 164, ante.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That on the 1st of January, 1895, he and the defendants formed and entered into a partnership agreement for the purpose of conducting a mercantile business under the name and style of John Smith & Co. Said agreement was in writing, and will be filed at the hearing or sooner if required. [If the agreement was verbal so state, and give its substance so far as necessary to the litigation.]

II.

That the complainant and the defendants were each to put into said business. [Here state what each partner was to pay in in money, or property, and what in services, if not already stated.] all of which complainant did faithfully according to his said agreement, and he has done all other things stipulated by him or lawfully required of him.

III.

That the defendants, James Smith and John Brown [Here state what they were to do, if it has not been already stated. If either or both of them failed to do what they had agreed to do, so state.]

IV.

That said partnership was to continue five years, unless sooner dissolved by mutual consent, but after the lapse of two years from its beginning the defendant, John Brown, formed habits of intemperance to such an extent as to disqualify him to be a manager or partner in a mercantile concern, and, notwithstanding his promises to reform, or retire from the partnership, he has totally failed to do either, but persists in participating in the business and profits of the partnership, much to the embarrassment of complainant and to the hazard of the concern. [If any losses by bad bargains, or bad conduct of said Brown, so state in a general way, giving amount of losses when known.]

V.

The premises considered complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c.: see, ante, §§ 158; 164.]

2nd. That said partnership be dissolved, and that a receiver be appointed with full power and authority to wind up the business of the partnership, to collect and receive all money, debts and property now due or to become due to the said partnership, or to any of the partners as partners; to pay all debts of the partnership now due or to become due; to manage and conduct the business of the partnership as long as it can profitably be done, or until otherwise ordered by your Honor, and then to sell all the property and effects of the partnership and make distribution of the profits according to the respective interests of the parties therein.

3rd. That [If there be any allegations that any of the parties has received or become accountable in any way to the firm, or has taken or received more than his share of the property or profits of the concern, the bill should pray that] an account be taken of all the partnership dealings so as to show the liability of each partner to the firm.

4th. That [If the conduct of any defendant, as set out in the bill, is such that he should be enjoined from collecting any of the firm’s debts, or meddling with the firm’s assets, or doing any act detrimental to the business of the partnership, there should be a prayer to that effect.]

5th. That [If a defendant has fraudulently disposed of any of his property, or of any of the firm’s property, and the bill makes out a case for relief against the transferee, he should be made a defendant, and an attachment prayed for to be levied upon such property, and the sale of the attached property prayed for, the proceeds to be applied towards the liquidation of the fraudulent partner’s liability to the firm.]

6th. And that complainant have such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.

James A. Greer, Solicitor.

The bill must be sworn to, if an injunction or attachment is prayed; and there should be added to it the allegation: That this is the first application for an injunction or attachment in this case.

If the defendants are unable to defeat a dissolution of the partnership, or do not so desire, they will file an answer consenting thereto.

ANSWER CONSENTING TO A DISSOLUTION.

The defendants, answering the bill in said cause, do not admit the various charges of misconduct against them in the bill, but deny each and all of them. However, being advised that it is to their interest not to resist a dissolution of their partnership with complainant they, therefore, consent thereto, and unite with the complainant in praying for the appointment of a receiver, and a speedy winding-up of the affairs and business of the partnership, the collection of its assets, the payment of its debts, and the division of the residue among the partners according to their respective interests.

And now, having fully answered, the defendants pray to be dismissed with their costs.

Sam A. Breazeale, Solicitor.

The answer must be sworn to unless the defendant's oath is waived. If necessary, the answer while consenting to a dissolution and receivership, may dispute any material allegations of misconduct, especially such as make the defendant liable to the firm, and such as charge misappropriation of the firm's property, or fraudulent transfer of property, or other inequitable conduct.

DECREA DISSOLVING A PARTNERSHIP.

For title, commencement and recitals, see, ante, § 567.

That the partnership heretofore existing between the complainant and the defendants be, and the same is hereby dissolved; and that Frank Dealer be and he hereby is appointed receiver to take into his possession all the property and assets of said partnership of every kind and wheresoever found, and reduce the same to cash by sale or collection as speedily as may be consistent with the interests of the parties to this suit, and to collect all debts due the said partnership, and to pay all just debts owing by said partnership.

II.

That the complainant and defendants forthwith deliver to said receiver all the books and papers of the firm, and all cash on hand, and all accounts, securities, notes of hand, or other evidences of debt, and all the merchandise, fixtures, furniture and other property and effects, of every kind whatsoever belonging to the said partnership, to be by him accounted for in this case.

III.

That the receiver be authorized to bring all suits he may deem necessary to collect the debts due the said partnership, and with the consent of the partners may compromise any doubtful claim whether in behalf of or against said partnership.

IV.

That the receiver before entering on the discharge of his duties under this decree shall give bond [&c. See § 909.] The receiver will report to the Court from time to time as to the progress made by him, and duties discharged.

V.

That the Master take and state an account⁶ of all dealings and transactions by and between complainant and the defendants as partners from the commencement of the partnership to this day; and for the better taking of said account the parties are respectfully required to produce and leave with the Master all books, papers and writings in their custody or under their control relating thereto. If, in taking said account any special matter shall arise the Master is at liberty to state the same in his report.

VI.

All further questions are reserved until the incoming of said reports; and any of the parties are at liberty to apply as occasion may require.

⁶The method of taking a partnership account is:
1. To ascertain how the firm stands in relation to third parties.
2. To ascertain what each partner is entitled to charge in account with his co-partners.
3. To apportion between the partners all profits to be divided, or losses to be made good, and ascertain what, if anything, each partner must pay to the others in order that all cross-claims may be settled.
Myers v. Bennett, 3 Lea, 184; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1249. The parties should employ a competent bookkeeper to make out a balance sheet, showing the exact status of the firm business. Ibid. The procedure in an accounting has heretofore been considered. See, ante, §§ 603-610; 958.
CHAPTER LI.

SUITS FOR EXONERATION, SUBROGATION AND CONTRIBUTION.

ARTICLE I. Suits for Exoneration.
ARTICLE II. Suits for Subrogation.
ARTICLE III. Suits for Contribution.

ARTICLE I.

SUITS FOR EXONERATION.

§ 962. Suits for Exoneration of Sureties.

§ 962. Suits for Exoneration of Sureties.—Entire good faith is required between debtor and creditor and sureties. And if a creditor does any act affecting the surety, or if he omits to do any act of duty which he is required to do by the surety, or otherwise bound to do, and that act or omission may prove injurious to the surety; or if a creditor enters into any stipulations with the debtor, unknown to the surety, and inconsistent with the terms of the original contract, the surety may set up such act, omission or stipulation, as a defence to any suit brought against him, in a Court of law or Equity. So that if a creditor stipulates with his debtor, in a binding manner, upon a sufficient consideration, to give further time for payment, without the consent of the surety, the latter will be thereby discharged, if the arrangement might be injurious to him. Mere delay on the part of the creditor, at least if some other Equity does not intervene, unaccompanied with any valid contract for such delay, will not amount to laches, so as to discharge the surety; for the creditor is under no obligation to press the principal for payment. However, sureties are not obliged to wait for their principal to bring suit, but are entitled to come into a Court of Equity, after a debt has become due, and compel the debtor to exonerate them from their liability by paying the debt. 1

If a surety requests the creditor to sue forthwith, stating that he will consider himself no longer bound as surety if the creditor fails to do so, he will be discharged by the creditor's failure so to sue, if his principal was solvent 2 when the notice was given, but becomes insolvent after the expiration of the time probably required to prosecute the suit to judgment if it had been promptly instituted as requested. 3

§ 963. Frame and Form of Bill for Exoneration of Sureties.—The bill must allege (1) the fact of suretyship and how arising, (2) the solvency of the principal debtor when the right of action on the obligation accrued, (3) that, after such right accrued and while the principal was solvent, complainant notified the creditor to bring suit at once on said obligation or he, the complainant, would stand as surety no longer, 4 (4) that after such notice the creditor failed to sue in a reasonable time, (5) that in the interim between such notice and the bringing of suit by said creditor, against complainant on said obligation the principal debtor became insolvent, and (6) should pray that said creditor's suit be enjoined and complainant discharged from liability on said obligation.

1 Smith's Eq. Jur., 84-86; Crowder v. Denny, 3 Head, 360; Greene v. Starnes, 1 Heisk., 583. See Digests; and ante, § 805.
2 The solvency of the principal need not be shown beyond a reasonable doubt, but will be determined, like all other facts, by the preponderance of probabilities. See, ante, § 445; and Thompson v. Watson, 10 Yerg., 362; and Hopkins v. Spurlock, 2 Heisk., 152. But see Jackson v. Huey, 10 Lea, 184.
4 Or would be no longer liable or responsible, or would consider himself discharged or released, or some equivalent expression.
BILL FOR EXONERATION OF A SURETY.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§ 155-164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That on February 1, 1903, John Doe executed his note to the defendant for one thousand dollars, due one year after date, and complainant signed said note as surety.

II. That John Doe was then solvent, and continued so solvent until on or about April 19, 1905, when his stock of goods was totally consumed by fire, and was wholly uninsured, his loss being about five thousand dollars.

III. That on March 1, 1904, complainant notified the defendant, in presence of a witness that he would not stand as surety for John Doe any longer, and requested defendant to bring suit on said note at once, or he would consider himself discharged. Complainant a few days afterwards wrote to the defendant to the same effect.

That, notwithstanding said notices, the defendant failed to bring suit until the 2d day of the present month, (May 2, 1905,) when he sued complainant and said John Doe in the Circuit Court of Anderson county, where said suit is now pending. If defendant recovers a judgment on said note against said Doe and complainant, complainant will have the whole of it to pay as said Doe is totally insolvent, and has been ever since April 19, 1905.

The premises considered complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue, [etc. see, ante, §§ 158; 164.]

2d. That the defendant be enjoined from further prosecution of said Circuit Court suit and from attempting to collect said note in any other way, as against complainant; and that at the hearing said injunction be made perpetual.

3d. That complainant have such other, further and general relief as the nature of his case may require.

This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

ARTICLE II.

SUITS FOR SUBROGATION.

§ 964. Suits for Subrogation and Substitution. | § 965. Form of Bill for Subrogation and Substitution.

§ 964. Suits for Subrogation and Substitution.—Subrogation is the substitution of one person in place of a creditor, whose debt he has paid under compulsion not being liable primarily therefor, and to whose rights as to the collection of that debt he, thereupon, succeeds. So, whenever a surety, or other person secondarily liable, discharges a debt, he is entitled to the benefit of all collaterals or liens which the creditor held as security; and the person secondarily liable is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the person primarily liable. In such cases, Equity regards the payment by the surety, or other person secondarily liable, as equivalent to a purchase of the creditor’s rights, equities and collaterals as against the debtor primarily liable; and the Court will treat such payor as an assignee of the creditor, to that extent. So, a creditor is entitled to the benefit of any indemnity, or collateral security, given by the debtor to his surety. Where, in any case, one not primarily liable pays a debt, or discharges an encumbrance or lien, being under legal compulsion so to do, he will in Equity be substituted to all of the creditor’s rights against the person primarily liable.1

The following are the most usual cases of substitution and subrogation:

1. Where a surety discharges the debt or obligation of his principal.

2. Where a co-surety pays a judgment that is a lien on the other surety’s land.2

2 He is entitled to enforce the lien as to one-half of the judgment. Holt v. Strain, 2 Shan. Cas., 166.
3. Where anyone not primarily liable pays the debt or discharges the obligation of the one primarily liable.

4. Where a purchaser, for his own protection, discharges an incumbrance on the purchased property.

5. Where a junior encumbrancer for like reason pays off a prior encumbrance.

6. Where a person advances money to discharge an incumbrance on an agreement that he should succeed to the rights of the encumbrancer.

7. Where a devisee, heir, or legatee satisfies a debt against the estate for which others are equally liable.

8. Where any person, for his own protection, or the protection of some interest he represents, pays a debt for which another is primarily liable.

9. When an insurance company pays in full a loss, it thereby becomes subrogated to the rights of the insured against the party causing the loss, and against other insurers.

§ 965. Form of Bill for Subrogation and Substitution.—The following bill illustrates one of the most common cases for subrogation and substitution:

BILL FOR SUBROGATION AND SUBSTITUTION.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That on June 3, 1903, the defendant, John Doe, borrowed one thousand dollars from the defendant Richard Roe, and to secure the repayment thereof he executed to said Richard Roe a note for said sum, due one year after date, with complainant and defendant Henry Doe as sureties.

II.

That when said note became due suit was brought thereon by the defendant Richard Roe, against complainant and the defendants John Doe and Henry Doe, and judgment recovered, which judgment complainant was compelled to pay on September 30, 1905, the sum he so paid, being eleven hundred and three dollars, including the costs of the suit.

III.

That the defendant John Doe applied the said one thousand dollars borrowed from defendant Richard Roe to the purchase of the following tract of land: [describe it], but took the title in the name of his son, the defendant, Henry Doe, who claims it as his homestead.

IV.

That about the time suit was brought on said note, as aforesaid, the defendant John Doe assigned and transferred to defendant Richard Roe, as further security, a note of hand for three hundred dollars executed to said John Doe by the defendant George Jones, and now due and wholly unpaid.

V.

That the defendant John Doe is insolvent, and the defendant Henry Doe has no visible property subject to execution, except said tract of land, which he claims as his homestead. Complainant charges and avers that said purchase by defendant John Doe in Henry Doe’s name was in fraud of creditors, and to hinder and delay them, and that said Henry Doe aided his father therein, and agreed to deed said land to him when called on so to do, and in the meantime to hold it for him.

VI.

The premises considered the complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c.; see, ante, §§158; 164.]

2d. That complainant be subrogated and substituted to all the rights and collaterals of the defendant Richard Roe as against the other defendants; that said tract of land, and said note made by the defendant George Jones, be held liable to reimburse complainant for what he paid on said judgment and interest thereon.

3d. That the transfer of said land to Henry Doe be declared fraudulent and void, but if that be not done that a resulting trust in favor of John Doe be declared thereon, and complainant declared to have a lien thereon, by virtue of the premises; that defendants, John Doe and Henry Doe be enjoined from transferring or encumbering said land, and that an attachment issue and be levied upon it to secure complainant’s claim.

4th. That complainant be given a decree for the amount due him, from the defendant John Doe as principal, and from the defendant Henry Doe as co-surety on said thousand dollar note; that a decree be rendered against the defendant George Jones for the amount due on said note made by him, to be collected by execution; that said tract of land be sold on a credit of six months and in bar of redemption, and its proceeds, along with the proceeds of the decree against said Jones, be applied to the satisfaction of the decree in favor of complainant.

5th. That complainant may have such further and other relief as the nature of his case may require.

This is the first application for an injunction and attachment in this case.

[Annex affidavit. See, ante, §§ 164; 789.]

ARTICLE III.

SUITS FOR CONTRIBUTION.

§ 966. Suits for Contribution by Co-Sureties, Co-Principals, Co-Debtors, Co-Owners, Co-Heirs, Co-Partners § 967. Form of Bill for Contribution Between Partners.

§ 966. Suits for Contribution by Co-Sureties, Co-Principals, Co-Debtors, Co-Owners, Co-Heirs, Co-Partners, and Other Co-Sharers of Liabilities.—Where two or more persons are bound by a common charge, not arising from a tort, and one of them pays more than his share of the common liabilities, he can compel the other or others to reimburse him. This rule of Equity is based on the broad principle that where one person has discharged more than his share of a debt or obligation which others are equally bound with him to discharge, the others ought in conscience to refund to him enough to reduce his burden to an equality with theirs.1 In a Court of Chancery equality is Equity.2 This rule applies as between co-principals, co-sureties, co-owners of property, co-insurers, co-heirs, co-devisees, co-legatees, co-owners of party walls, co-partners, co-directors and co-stockholders in a corporation, and even to co-tort-feasors, when the one asking relief was not primarily liable, or was innocent of the tort.3

If a co-surety is dead his personal representative may be sued for the decedent’s proportion; and if a co-surety is insolvent, he may be wholly ignored and treated as no surety; but in such a case the bill should state the fact of his insolvency as the reason he is not sued.4

BILL FOR CONTRIBUTION BETWEEN CO-SURETIES.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That he and the defendants, along with others, were co-sureties on a guardian bond for one thousand dollars, payable to the State of Tennessee, to secure the faithful discharge of duties by John Smith as guardian of Henry Brown and William Jones.

II.

That in consequence of the alleged defaults of said John Smith as said guardian, a decree was rendered against him in the Chancery Court of Hamblen county on the 18th day of April, 1905, in favor of his said wards, Henry Brown and William Jones, for the sum of seven hundred and ten dollars, and costs of the suit aggregating seven hundred and fifty-three dollars.

III.

That on said decree execution issued and was levied on complainant's property. Complainant called on the defendants to come to his relief, and contribute and pay their proportionate parts of said decree, and thus relieve his property, but this they all failed to do, in consequence of which the whole burden fell on complainant, and he was so compelled to pay, and has paid the full amount called for by said execution, to-wit, the sum of seven hundred and seventy dollars, and took the sheriff’s receipt therefor, dated June 5th, 1905, the day he paid said amount, a copy of which receipt is filed with the bill marked exhibit A, and the original will be produced at the hearing, or sooner, if required.

IV.

That the defendants are the only co-sureties on said bond who are solvent, and for that reason they alone are sued. Complainant has besought them to help him bear the burden

1 Riley v. Rhea, 5 Lea, 115; Stephens v. Meek, 6 Lea, 226; Crowder v. Denny, 3 Head, 360. 3 Maxwell v. R. R. Co., 1 Tenn. Ch., 8.

2 See, ante, § 47. 4 Smith's Eq. Jur., 347. of said payment and contribute their proportion thereof, but they have failed so to do, and so complainant despairing of their doing equity comes to your Honor and prays:

V.

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c.: see, ante, §§158; 164.]

2nd. That he be given a decree against the defendants for their ratable proportion of the amount paid by complainant as aforesaid, and of the interest thereon, and for the costs of this cause, and

3d. That he have such further and other relief as the nature of his case may require.

T. A. PEACE, Solicitor.

§ 967. Form of Bill for Contribution Between Partners.—The right to contribution often arises between partners. The following bill will serve as a form in such a case.

BILL FOR CONTRIBUTION BETWEEN PARTNERS.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That he and the defendant were formerly partners, but that on the 18th day of April, 1900, said partnership was dissolved by mutual consent, and, on January 8, 1902, all the partnership matters, so far as then known to complainant, were settled and adjusted between him and the defendant, all the debts of the partnership, so far as then known to complainant, having been previously paid.

II.

That on May 1st, 1903, John Jones recovered a judgment against complainant and defendant in the Circuit Court of Knox county, Tennessee, for five hundred and twenty dollars, on a note made to him in St. Louis, Missouri, by the defendant in the firm name, whereof complainant knew nothing when said settlement between him and the defendant was made. Complainant charges that the defendant got the exclusive benefit of the consideration of said note, and that the partnership got none.

III.

That as the defendant got the exclusive benefit of the consideration of said note, complainant insisted that he should satisfy said judgment without any contribution from complainant, but this he not only refused to do, but has failed and refused to pay even his one-half of said judgment, and complainant was compelled to pay, and has paid the amount due on said judgment, an execution having issued therefor and been levied upon his property.

IV.

That the said judgment amounted to five hundred and sixty dollars, and was paid on July 1, 1903, to the Sheriff of said county of Knox, and his receipt therefor taken, which will be duly proved, and produced at the hearing, if denied.

V.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c.: see, ante, §§158; 164.]

2d. That he be given a decree against the defendant for the amount paid on said execution, and interest thereon and costs of this suit; but if your Honor holds that the defendant is only liable to contribute and pay complainant one-half of said amount then he prays therefor, and for all the costs of this suit.

3d. That he have such further and other relief as the nature of his case may require.

SUITS RELATING TO PERSONS UNDER DISABILITY.

ARTICLE I. Suits Where the Chancery Court Acts as Guardian.

ARTICLE II. Suits to Sell the Property of Infants and Wives.

ARTICLE III. Suits Relating to Persons of Unsound Mind.

ARTICLE I.

SUITS WHERE THE CHANCERY COURT ACTS AS GUARDIAN.

§ 968. Suits Where the Court Guards the Interests of Wives.

§ 969. Frame of Bill to Enforce a Wife’s Equity.

§ 970. Suits Where the Court Guards the Interests of Minors and Lunatics.

§ 971. Frame of Bill by Next Friend Against a Guardian.

§ 968. Suits Where the Court Guards the Interests of Wives.—Courts of Equity act for those who by reason of some disability of nature or of law are unable to act for themselves;¹ and wives being under a disability of law and sometimes of both law and nature, frequently require the care of the Court for their welfare.

Courts of Equity standing in loco parentis will not suffer the husband to obtain possession of the wife’s property without making a suitable provision for her and her children, unless she being capable of giving her consent voluntarily waives her right to a settlement. If the wife be not of full age she is incapable of giving her consent, and in such case, the Court will not take her examination, nor suffer her to waive her Equity;² and will act in spite of her protestations.³ Husbands, and especially young husbands, cannot always be depended on to guard providently the financial interests of their wives, and often themselves need a guardian’s supervision as much as, and sometimes more than, do their wives.

The Chancery Court will not, however, on its own motion, reach forward and intervene in a wife’s behalf; but when its protecting care and power are invoked, the Court is ever ready to act; and whether the application be made by the wife herself, or by next friend, relative, guardian, or even a third person in her behalf, is immaterial, when the Court has the opportunity to declare and enforce the wife’s Equity to a suitable provision out of her personal estate before it passes into the hands of her husband, or his assignee.⁴

The Equity of the wife is enforced: 1. Incidentally, when the husband, or his assignee, is before the Court asking its aid to reduce her property to his possession;⁵ and 2. Directly at the suit of the wife, or of her trustee, guardian or next friend, asking the interposition of the Court in her behalf: in which case the party in possession of the wife’s estate will, if necessary, be enjoined from turning it over to the husband, or his assignee, until due provision has been made for her and her children.⁶

This right of a wife to a provision out of her property before the husband or his assignee has reduced it to possession, is the creature of Courts of Equity, and the assignment of her personal property, though duly probated, is not

² Phillips v. Hassell, 10 Hum., 197.
³ Pillow v. Thomas, 1 Bax. 122; Murphy v. Green, 2 Bax., 405.
⁵ In such case if the wife is not a party she should, by next friend, file a bill in the nature of a cross bill and enjoin her husband, or his assignee, from proceeding in his suit except concurrently with hers, and she should have the two suits consolidated and heard together.
⁶ Dearin v. Fitzpatrick, Meigs, 551.
valid as to the wife, and will be set aside on application to the Chancery Court before the assignee takes possession. But if the husband or assignee is suffered to reduce the wife’s property to his possession the Court will not undertake to follow it.

§ 969. Frame of Bill to Enforce a Wife’s Equity.—To aid the pleader in drawing an ordinary bill under the foregoing section the following frame is given. If a suit is pending by the husband or assignee to reduce her estate to his possession this bill will be so changed as to recite such fact, and to pray that her bill be filed as an original bill in the nature of a cross bill, and that the two causes be consolidated and heard as one:

FRAME OF BILL TO ENFORCE A WIFE’S EQUITY.

To the Honorable ........................................, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at ........................................

Mary Doe, wife of John Doe, who sues by Henry Jones, her next friend, all residents of Knox county, complainant,

vs.

John Doe, and George Brown, executor of Thomas Jones, deceased, and Henry Brown and James Doe, his sureties as such executor, all residents of Knox county, defendants.

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That [Here show what personal estate the complainant has, whence derived, as from her father’s estate, or from some legacy, and that it is in the hands of the defendant George Brown.]

II. That [Here show her age, that she is the wife of the defendant, John Doe, and give the number and ages of her children, and if she is a feeble woman, or any of her children are feeble, so state, and if there be any other reason why her fortune should not go into his hands, so state. If he has assigned it, in whole or in part, so state, and make the assignee a defendant.]

III. That [Show that the debts of her deceased father have been paid, and that the time has arrived for his executor, the defendant, George Brown, to pay over to her her distributive share of her father’s estate, specifying the amount, and if she has made any demand therefor so state, and state his response.]

IV. That, [If the husband or his assignee is making efforts to induce the executor to pay to him said share, so state. If any other facts exist showing the necessity for an injunction to protect said share, state them fully and particularly.]

V. That, [Show that the defendants Henry Brown and James Doe are the sureties of George Brown as such executor.]

VI. Complainant therefore prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue against all of the said defendants requiring them to answer the bill fully and on oath [or fully, but not on oath.]

2nd. That the amount due complainant from the defendant George Brown and his said sureties be decreed to her, and be settled upon a trustee, or otherwise safely invested for her sole and separate use, free from the liabilities and control of her said husband. [If this amount has not been fixed by settlement with the Clerk of the County Court, or otherwise, and an accounting is necessary to ascertain the amount then pray:] and that all necessary accounts be taken to ascertain said amount.

3d. That an injunction issue to restrain the defendants, or any of them, from in any way interfering with complainant’s said equity, and to restrain the defendant, George Brown, from paying it, or any part of it, to any of the defendants or to any one else. This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

4th. That complainant may have such other, further, and general relief as the nature of her case may require.

[To be sworn to: see ante, § 789.]

§ 970. Suits Where the Court Guards the Interests of Minors and Lunatics. The Chancery Court has jurisdiction of the persons and estates of infants, and of idiots and lunatics, and other persons of unsound mind, and may appoint guardians for them, and have their estates cared for and their interests promoted to the same extent and in the same manner as do the County Courts.

7 Coppenere v. Threadgill, 3 Sneed, 579; see Smith v. Greer, 3 Hum., 118; McElhatton v. Howell, 4 Hay., 19.

8 Dearin v. Fitzpatrick, Meigs, 551.

9 Ser. ante, § 24. Originally, in North Carolina, from which State our laws were derived, the Chan-and, in many very important particulars, more fully. Thus, the Chancery Court may make fuller provision for the education of the infant, and for its medical or surgical treatment in extreme cases, and may expend a part or all of the infant's estate for these purposes, when necessary for its permanent welfare; and the Court may exercise a much larger discretion in dealing with the property of idiots, lunatics and other persons of unsound mind as hereafter shown. A guardian may trespass on the corpus of his infant ward's estate, in case of sickness, death, marriage, or for other good reason, or urgent necessity, and the Chancery Court will ratify such action, on his showing a state of facts that would have justified such an allowance on a bill filed by him in Chancery for that purpose, and on his giving good reason for not appealing to the Court in advance. But it is better for the guardian to get authority for such expenditures in advance by bill applying therefor; for, even when the Court ratifies his action in such matters, it often taxes him with the costs; whereas on a proper bill, filed in advance, costs and counsel fees will be paid out of the ward's estate. If a guardian fail to make his settlements as required by law, fails to renew his bond, or converts his ward's funds by paying his individual debts with the same, or fails to keep it loaned on good security, but uses it as his own in making his personal expenditures, it is cause for his removal.

The Chancery Court delights to help those who cannot help themselves, and whenever the estate of an infant, idiot, or lunatic is being wasted, or converted, whether by a parent, guardian, or stranger, the Court, on a bill filed by any one as next friend, will right the wrong, and hold the wrongdoer liable, treating him as a trustee, when necessary to promote the interest of the beneficiary.

Whenever it is necessary for the welfare of an infant, idiot or lunatic to convert his realty into personalty, or his personalty into realty, or to invest his money, or to ratify or avoid his contracts, the Chancery Court has authority to order it to be done, and to superintend the execution of its order. In short the Chancery Court, acting in loco parentis, and as general guardian for minors, idiots, lunatics and persons of unsound mind, will do for them and their property, what they themselves would in all probability have done if possessed of good reason and good conscience.

§ 971. Frame of Bill by Next Friend Against a Guardian.—The following frame of a bill is given to aid the Solicitor of the next friend in drawing a bill to cover the usual delinquencies of a general guardian. Of course, all of the enumerated delinquencies never exist in any one case, and, as a rule, it is enough if any one of them exists.

FRAME OF BILL BY NEXT FRIEND AGAINST A GUARDIAN.

To the Honorable H. B. Lindsay, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Knoxville.
The State of Tennessee: for the use of Sarah Brown, an infant, [or idiot, or lunatic, or person of unsound mind,] who sues by John Brown, her next friend, both residents of Knox county, complainant,

vs.

Charles Brown, guardian of said Sarah Brown, and Henry Brown and George Brown, his sureties as such guardian, and Richard Roe, all residents of Knox county, defendants.

cery Court, by its inherent power, had exclusive jurisdiction of the persons and estates of infants; and when, for greater local convenience, the County Courts were given jurisdiction thereof, it was expressly provided in the statute, (Act of 1762, ch. 5, § 26) that "the powers of the Court of Chancery over orphans and their estates should not be abridged" thereby. 1 Scott's Rev., 105. And this provision has existed in our statutes ever since. Code, § 240; 10 Bax. 256; Lake v. McDavitt, 13 Lea, 26; Talbot v. Provine, 7 Bax., 510.

10 See, ante, §§ 984. See, also, Code, §§ 3708-3719.

11 Tamey from old age is covered by the statute. Porter v. Porter, 3 Hum., 589; Fentress v. Fentress, 7 Heisk., 431.

12 Fincher v. Monteith, 5 Lea, 144. If a guardian wilfully neglects, or obstinately refuses, to exhibit his account, the Court may attach him until he does so. Code, § 2528.

14 Newm v. Allen, 1 Yerg., 374.

15 The bill may be filed by the minor or lunatic by next friend, directly, without using the name of the State. See, ante, §§ 927-937. For form of caption and commencement, see, ante, § 156.
The complainant, the State of Tennessee, suing for the use of Sarah Brown, an infant, who sues by John Brown, her next friend, respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That [Here show what estate and rights Sarah Brown has, and, if land, give its location and value.]

II. That [Here show that the defendant Charles Brown is her guardian, and specify in what way, and to what extent he is violating his trust, such as failing to settle with the County Clerk, or to renew his bond, or, if he has settled, charge that the settlement is false and fraudulent, and specify in what particulars; or that he fails to keep the trust money loaned or properly invested; or the estate is land show that the guardian has let it greatly deteriorate, or does not keep it leased or under proper cultivation, or so use it as to derive a reasonable profit therefrom. If the guardian is, in any way, neglecting his duty, specify in what way; if he is speculating on the assets so state, and particularize how; if he is using the assets for his own use or profit, so charge; if he has sold any property to Richard Roe without authority specify it, and give the facts in full; if he is committing any waste of the estate, or allowing Richard Roe, or any others, to commit any, specify in what way; if he has bought any property with his ward's money and taken the title in his own name, or is loaning his ward's money to Richard Roe, or any one else, and taking notes in his individual name, give the particulars in full so as to identify the property so bought, or the notes so taken; if he has used the ward's estate to pay his own debts to Richard Roe, or to any other person, or is lending her money on insufficient security; if he fails to collect from Richard Roe a large sum of money owing by said Roe to complainant, give the facts and circumstances; and show any other default on his part as guardian.]

III. That [Here set forth any ground that may exist for an injunction to prevent any act by the guardian or any other defendant, especially Richard Roe, that if done will be prejudicial to complainant's rights and interests, giving the particulars, and showing clearly the necessity for such injunction.]

IV. That [If it be necessary to attach any of the property of any of the defendants to secure the payment of the money due complainant, and if any statutory or equitable ground of attachment exist, state it.]

V. That the defendants, Henry Brown and George Brown, are the sureties of the defendant Charles Brown as guardian of Sarah Brown, and along with him have given bond, dated August 14, 1905, payable to the State of Tennessee in the penalty of five thousand dollars, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duty of said Henry Brown as said guardian; and complainant charges and avers that the condition of said bond has been broken by defendant Charles Brown by the various violations of his said duty hereinbefore set out and alleged.

VI. Complainant therefore prays:
1st. That subpoena to answer issue [C.: see, ante, §§ 158; 164.]
2d. That an injunction be ordered by your Honor [C.: ante, §§ 158, sub-secs., 3, 4.]
3d. That an attachment issue and be levied [C.: see, ante, § 158.]
4th. That an account be taken between Sarah Brown and the defendant Charles Brown, showing therein, fully and in detail, the various matters and moneys justly chargeable to him, and various matters and moneys he is justly entitled to credit for; that he be held liable for the reasonable rents of said lands, and for all waste by him committed or permitted thereon, and for the reasonable value of the said property of Sarah Brown by him appropriated or converted, that the title to the said tract of land by him purchased with complainant's money, from the defendant Richard Roe, and deed taken in his own name, be divested out of him and vested in complainant; that no compensation be allowed him, and he be charged with compound interest; that a decree be rendered in Sarah Brown's favor against him and his said sureties for the full amount found due from him, and that he be removed as guardian and a new guardian be appointed, and that the defendant Richard Roe be held liable to Sarah Brown for all trust money and property by him received as aforesaid, and that he be held to account for the same as trustee; that all attached property be sold to satisfy Sarah Brown's claims, and that she may have all such further and other relief as she may be entitled to.

This is the first application for an injunction or an attachment in this case.

G. W. Pickle, of Counsel.

W. R. Turner, Solicitor.

[Attach affidavit to bill: see, ante, §§ 161; 164.]
§ 972.

SUITS RELATING TO PERSONS UNDER DISABILITY. 764

In case of a bill by a next friend against the guardian of a lunatic the above frame will be found helpful, the necessary changes being very few, and such only as will readily occur to the pleader. The liabilities and defaults of the guardian of an idiot or lunatic are mainly the same as those of the guardian of an infant, and the bill against him is mainly the same.

ARTICLE II.

SUITS TO SELL OR LEASE THE PROPERTY OF INFANTS AND WIVES.

§ 972. When a Sale or Lease May be Made.—Property is valuable only as a means of support and education; and a small estate belonging to an infant cannot be better invested than in educating and supporting him. It, also, often happens that a very advantageous sale may be made of an infant's or married woman's property, or that the property should be sold because dilapidating, or unproductive, or encumbered. It is, therefore, provided by the Code, that, whenever a sale of the property, real or personal, of an infant or married woman is (1) necessary for their support, education, and maintenance, or (2) is manifestly for their interest, the Chancery Court may consent to and decree a sale thereof. And the jurisdiction may be exercised as to any kind of property, and whether the interest or estate of the person under disability, or any of the parties litigant, is in possession, reversion, or remainder, or subject to any limitation, restriction, or contingency whatsoever; except, that in no case shall property be sold, if it be claimed under a will which expressly directs otherwise. Even property wherein persons not in being may have an interest may be sold, if all those interested, then in being, are before the Court; and sale is necessary, or manifestly for the interest of such persons then in being, having a common interest with those who may come into being.

But the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court in the foregoing matters does not depend exclusively on the Code; that Court has inherent power over the persons and estates of infants, and has plenary jurisdiction, upon proper pleadings and process, to control and sell, or consent to the sale of, the real estate of minors, and to compromise their rights. Indeed, it may be said, generally, that the Chancery Court has inherent power to convert realty into personality; and in so doing can bind the rights and interests, legal or equitable, vested or contingent, present or future, of all persons whether in esse or in posse, and 1 Whenever a person is disabled by law or nature to care for his own persons or property, a Court of Chancery will act for them, and do all that may be necessary for the welfare of their persons, the education of their minds, and the management or disposition of their property. The Court will appoint guardians, remove guardians, and compel guardians to do their duty; and, when proper, will authorize guardians to expend a part or all of the principal of their ward's estate in maintaining or educating them; and will sell the lands of the ward for that purpose. See note, § 33.

2 Code, §§ 3323; 3333. Inasmuch as the greater contains the less, the Court could, it would seem, consent to and decree a long lease of their property when manifestly for their interest. Note to original edition.—And it has been so held since the original edition of this work was published. See Bardwell v. Gaboury, 7 Cates, 484. \(\textit{§ 973. The Frame of a Bill to Sell.}—\)The bill may be filed by the husband of the wife, and by the regular guardian of the infant, against the person under a disability;\(^9\) and should be filed in the county where the property, real or personal, sought to be disposed of, is, or where the person under disability at the time resides, at the option of the complainant.\(^10\)

The bill should set forth fully and particularly: (1) the age, circumstances and condition of the party under disability, (2) what other property, if any, such person owns, or is in any way entitled to; (3) and the causes or reason why a sale of the particular property is sought; and (4) must be sworn to.\(^11\)

The following is a form of a

BILL TO SELL LAND OF MINORS FOR THEIR EDUCATION.

To the Hon. Thos. M. McConnell, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Manchester:

John Rogers, guardian, &c., a resident of Coffee county, complainant,

vs.

Henry Clark and Mary Clark, residents of the same county, defendants.

The complainant respectfully shows to the court:

I.

That the defendants, Henry Clark and Mary Clark, are infants, without mother or father-living, and complainant is their regular guardian. Said Henry Clark is eighteen years old, and said Mary Clark is twelve years old; and the residence of all the parties is in Coffee county.

II.

The defendants are the owners, as tenants in common, in fee simple, of a tract of land in the 5th civil district of said county, bounded as follows: Beginning on a rock, Charles Brown's corner, \([\text{and giving the metes and bounds.}]\) to the beginning, containing about one hundred acres. They own no other realty, and the value of their personal estate is less than fifty dollars to each, and is money.

III.

That said tract of land is worth about five hundred dollars, and is unencumbered, except the taxes on it for the last year are unpaid. The land has no improvements except a small cabin and a clearing of about one acre. It yields no revenue whatever, and complainant has no means, as guardian, sufficient to pay taxes.\(^12\)

IV.

The defendant, Henry, is an apt, energetic, and industrious boy, and desires to qualify himself to be a civil engineer. It will cost about one hundred and fifty dollars to complete his education for that business, coupled with what he can himself earn. He has already partially qualified himself for the business, and has a talent and a fondness for it.

V.

The defendant, Mary, is a bright child, with a talent for music, and has an aunt, Mary Brown, who will keep her, if complainant as guardian will help pay for her musical education. This is an opportunity too valuable to be lost.

VI.

Complainant believes that it is manifestly for the interest of his wards, as well as necessary for their support and education, that said land be sold;\(^13\) and therefore prays:

1st. That they be made parties to this bill by service of subpoena; that the defendant, Henry, answer in person as well as by guardian ad litem, and that a guardian ad litem and Solicitor be appointed for both of them.

2d. That said tract of land be sold, and the proceeds be used for the purposes above stated.

3d. That such other relief be granted as the rights and interests of the defendants and the duties of complainant may require.

[To be sworn to by complainant in person, and on his own knowledge. See, ante, § 789.]

\(8\) Ridley v. Halliday, 22 Pick., 607; Ricardi v. Gaboury, 7 Crats, 484.

\(9\) Code, § 3374. The bill may, also, be filed by a next friend. Code, §§ 3335; 3339; Mason v. Tinsley, 1 Tenn. Ch., 154, 390.

\(10\) Code, § 3336; Williams v. Williams, 10 Heisk, 566.

\(11\) Code, § 3329; Greenlaw v. Greenlaw, 16 Lea, 437.

\(12\) If the guardian has no means of paying the taxes, this, alone, will justify the sale of an infant's land. Greenlaw v. Greenlaw, 16 Lea, 435.

\(13\) If the bill is filed to confirm a sale already negotiated by complainant, the proposing purchaser should be made a defendant, and paragraph VI would read as follows: Complainant realizing the necessity of a sale of said land, has negotiated the same to the defendant, \([\text{purchaser,}]\) for six hundred dollars, a sum believed to be one hundred dollars more than could be obtained at public sale; and he, the said purchaser, is ready and willing to pay for the same in such installments as your Honor may prescribe, and has paid complainant one hundred dollars as a forfeit, which sum is paid into Court with the filing of this bill.

And in such case, the foregoing prayer will be so changed as to pray:

2d. That the said sale of said tract to the defendant, \([\text{purchaser,}]\) be ratified and confirmed, and the proceeds be used for the purposes above stated. See further, as to confirming a sale, post, § 979.

When a sale is sought to be confirmed, the purchase money must be paid into Court. Mason v. Tinsley, 1 Tenn. Ch., 154.
§ 974. Proceedings on Behalf of the Defendants.—On or after the return day of the subpœna duly served on the defendants, the Court, if in session, or the Chancellor or Master,14 if in vacation, will appoint a guardian ad litem for the infant defendants, and for a defendant who is a married woman, and the guardian ad litem may be required to give a bond15 faithfully to discharge his trust. If the person under disability is not represented by counsel, the Court will appoint counsel for such a person, and fix the compensation, which shall be the same whether a sale is ordered or not, and shall in no event exceed one hundred dollars.16

The infant, if over fourteen years of age, and the married woman, must answer the bill in person;17 and in their answer should fully and truthfully set forth any facts material to their interests and to the suit, not contained in the bill; and should deny, or correct, any misstatements in the bill; and should state their own wishes in reference to the sale, and to the application of the proceeds. Their answer must be sworn to.

§ 975. Reference to the Master to Ascertaining the Facts.—The Court may hear the case without a reference; but the usual practice is to direct the Master to examine unexceptionable and disinterested witnesses, and to put such questions as will elicit the whole truth, and will enable the Court to obtain a full understanding of the real facts of the case.18 If the case is heard without such a reference, the Court will be obliged to determine it upon such proof as the parties may themselves see fit to present. But proof there must be, and cogent proof, to authorize a decree, and no consents of parties sui juris will bind an infant.18a The following is a form of an ORDER OF REFERENCE.

John Rogers, guardian, &c.,

vs.

Henry Clark, et al.

This cause, coming on for orders before the Hon. Thomas M. McConnell, Chancellor, on this Sept. 6, 1891, on the bill the answers of the defendants, by Charles Wilson, their guardian ad litem, and the answer of said Henry Clark in person; the Court, in order to ascertain the real facts, is pleased to direct the Master to examine disinterested and unexceptionable witnesses, and report upon the facts established by the proof:

1st. What estate each of the defendants possess, its kind and value, and the net income derived therefrom; and how they are being supported.

2d. What is the age of each of the defendants; and has each or either of them, any and what talent for any particular business, trade, or profession; and what have they been doing for the last year?

3d. Whether a sale of the land described in the bill is necessary for the support, education, and maintenance of the defendants, or is otherwise manifestly for their interest, and why. And what is a reasonable minimum price for said tract of land.

The Master will base his conclusions on the facts proven by the witnesses, and not on their opinions; and he will examine such witnesses, and put such questions, as will elicit the whole truth; and will report against a sale unless the testimony leaves no reasonable doubt as to its propriety.

He will report to the present or next term of the Court.

§ 976. Report of the Master as to the Sale.—The Master is expected to use extraordinary diligence and good faith in ascertaining the facts, in cases of this character, and in reporting them to the Court.19 His report will be in the usual form; but, as an illustration of its character, the following form is given of the Master’s response to the 3d head of inquiry, in the foregoing reference.

14 The Master may appoint the guardian ad litem and Solicitor, Beaumont v. Beaumont, 7 Heisk., 226.

15 Code, § 3334. As to guardians ad litem generally, see, ante, §§ 106-108. The guardian in these proceedings cannot file a cross bill to have a sale confirmed. Browning v. Browning, 11 Lea, 166.

16 Code, § 3330. Counsel not appointed by the Court are not entitled to any compensation out of the fund in Court; they sometimes really represent third parties who are more anxious to buy the property than guard interests of the person under disability. For this reason, the Court should rely on the guardian ad litem, or next friend, rather than on counsel not appointed by the Master, or Chan-cellar. The Master should appoint no one as guardian ad litem, or Solicitor, who is at all in sympathy with a proposing purchaser.

17 Code, § 3325. Their guardian ad litem should also answer for them. He should, as a rule, content himself with a formal answer, unless he knows, or has reliable information of, facts that should be made known to the Court. He should never make any admissions except as to the infancy of his ward, and the ward’s ownership of the property. For form of a formal answer, see, ante, § 383.

18a Sawyers v. Sawyers, 22 Pick., 597.

19 Code, §§ 3331-3334.
REPORT AS TO NECESSITY, OR PROPRIETY, OF A SALE.

III.

As to the necessity, or propriety, of the proposed sale.

On this point, the Master reports that the facts clearly show:

1st. That the sale prayed for is necessary for the support, education, and maintenance of the defendants, because (1) the defendants are both orphans; (2) the personal estate of each of them is only thirty-nine and 43-100 dollars, which is in money in their guardian's hands, [Dep. of John Rogers, p. 2, q. 3; and exhibit A:] (3) they have no other source of income or support, except their own labor, [Dep. of John Rogers, p. 3, q. 4;] (4) Henry Clark is learning civil engineering, is apt, industrious, and capable; and for one hundred and seventy-five dollars can complete his studies, and be prepared to engage in the business of civil engineering, which is a good business, and he has a talent and a fondness for it, [Dep. of William Brown, pp. 2-4, q. 2; Charles Jones, pp. 1-3, q. 2; and Henry Clark, pp. 2-4, q. 3;] (5) Mary Clark has a talent for music, and her aunt, Mary Brown, a professional musician of good repute, will board, clothe, and educate her for forty dollars a year. [Dep. of Mary Clark, pp. 2-5, q. 2 and 3; and Henry Jones, pp. 1-2; q. 1]

2d. And said sale is, also, manifestly for the interest of the defendants, because: (1) the land yields no revenue; and cannot be made to yield any, without converting it into a farm, which would require a large expenditure of money, [Dep. of Henry Farmer, pp. 2-4, q. 2 and 3; and John Rogers, p. 6, q. 7;] (2) the defendants have no means of paying the taxes, and the guardian has been compelled to sell timber for that purpose from the land, which is now deficient in good timber, [Dep. of John Rogers, p. 7, q. 8;] and (3) the land is covered with scrubby timber, and is being damaged by several large and growing wash-outs through its midst, [Dep. of Henry Farmer, p. 5, q. 4.]

All of which is respectfully submitted. Sept. 8, 1891.

John S. Moore, C. & M.

The other heads on which the Master is required to report will be reported on with equal fullness and exactness, to the end that the Court may have that full understanding of the circumstances and condition of the person under disability required by the statute. The Master should summon witnesses who best know the facts and should not depend on witnesses suggested to him by the parties.

§ 977. Action on the Report, and Final Proceedings.—It is the duty of the Chancellor to hear the proof read, and to set aside the Master's report, on his own motion, even though unexcepted to, if not fully satisfied that the case for a sale is clearly made out.

If the Master's report is confirmed, the Court orders the land to be sold. No guardian, next friend, or witness, can purchase at the sale, or at any time after¬wards until five years from the removal of the existing disabilities; and a sale to any such person is void. The Court will see that the proceeds of the sale, if made for education or support, are so applied; and if made for reinvestment, are invested in lands, bonds of this State, or of the United States, or loaned on good mortgages on realty.

The following will serve as a form of

DEGREE ORDERING A SALE.

John Rogers, guardian, &c.,

vs.

Henry Clark, et al.

This cause, coming on to be heard, this Sept. 19, 1891, upon the pleadings, including the answer of the minor defendant, Henry Clark, [in person, if over fourteen years of age, and] by guardian ad litem and Solicitor, and proof, and report of the Master, which report is in the words and figures following:

[Here set it out, in full.]

And said report being unexcepted to, and the Court being fully satisfied that the case for a sale of the land of the defendant, Henry Clark, for his education and support, is clearly made out by proof of facts established by unexceptionable and disinterested witnesses, the conclusions of the Master are fully ratified and approved, and his report in all things confirmed.

20 Code, § 3334.
21 Sec. Hunt v. Glenn, 11 Lea, 16.
22 Code, § 3334.
23 Code, § 3339.
24 Code, § 3338. A witness is not disqualified to purchase unless he testifies to some material fact necessary for a decree of sale. Hunt v. Glenn, 11 Lea, 16.
It is, therefore, ordered and decreed by the Court, that the tract of land, described in complainant's bill and in the Master's report, be sold by the Master, in the manner provided by law, to the highest bidder, on a credit, six, twelve, eighteen and twenty-four months. The Master will take notes from the purchaser, for the instalments, drawing interest from date, with good personal security, and will, also, retain a lien on the land for further security. He will not sell said land for less than five hundred dollars; and will not sell to the guardian, next friend, or any witness in the cause. He will report to the next term of the Court.

Said sale is ordered both because it is manifestly to the interest of the defendants, and because the proceeds are necessary for the support, and especially for the education, of the defendants; and said proceeds will be paid out for said purposes, under the order of this Court, to the end that the defendants may receive the full benefit thereof. And the cause will be retained in Court until the funds are all disbursed, and the purpose of this proceeding fully attained.

If the bill is dismissed, the Court may adjudge all the costs of the cause against the complainant, personally, including the counsel fees of any counsel appointed by the Court.

§ 978. Proceedings to Confirm a Sale by a Guardian.—In any case where it would be proper, on a bill filed for that purpose, to sell the property, real or personal, of an infant or a married woman, the Court may confirm or adopt a sale, already made by the guardian or husband, or consent to a sale proposed to be made. When the action of the Court is sought in such a case, a bill must be filed for that purpose in the same manner as when a sale sought, and the same proceedings must be had, the same kind of witnesses examined, and the same report made. In such a case, however, the purchaser, or proposing purchaser, should also, be made a defendant. The bill, after reciting the facts showing a proper case for a sale, should then proceed to show that an advantageous sale has been negotiated, and should state its terms, and pray that it be ratified, and confirmed. The form of such a bill is the same as a bill for a sale, with the changes indicated in the marginal notes.

On such a bill being filed and answered, the Master, in addition to the matters referred to him on a bill for sale, will be directed to report:

REFERENCE TO MASTER AS TO CONFIRMATION OF A SALE.

4th. Whether the sale referred to in the pleadings is an advantageous one, and whether it is manifestly for the interest of the defendant under disability to confirm the same, stating the facts and reasons.

If there be any probability of a higher price being obtained than that offered by the proposing purchaser, it would be prudent to decree a private sale of the property, and direct the Master to accept the proposed offer, if no higher bid was obtained before the next term of the Court, or before some other fixed period.

On confirmation of such a sale, the proceeds will be applied, or reinvested, as in other cases of sale.

§ 979. Proceedings to Authorize or Ratify a Purchase or Exchange of Land by a Guardian.—On proper bill filed therefor under the rules hereinbefore stated, and on suitable references and reports showing that the interests of the minor will be manifestly promoted by the purchase of real estate made or proposed by the general guardian, the minor being before the Court, represented by a guardian ad litem, and answering in person if over fourteen years of age, the Court may authorize or ratify the proposed purchase of real estate by the general guardian with his ward's money, being careful to see that the title of the minor to the land will be good.

And so, on like proceedings, the Court may authorize or ratify an exchange of lands, when clearly shown to be to the manifest interest of the minor.

ARTICLE III.

SUITS RELATING TO PERSONS OF UNSOUND MIND.

§ 980. The Jurisdiction of Chancery Over Persons of Unsound Mind.—The Chancery Court has jurisdiction to take care of the financial affairs of persons who are mentally incompetent to promote or protect their own interests; and to make any decree in reference to their estates, required for the well-being of their persons or their property. The Court may do anything in reference to their property which they would, in good reason and good conscience, have been bound to do, if capable of making contracts. And by statute the Court is given jurisdiction over the persons and estates of idiots, lunatics, and other persons of unsound mind, where the estate exceeds five hundred dollars.

§ 981. How Jurisdiction is Exercised.—Whenever a person of unsound mind has an estate in excess of five hundred dollars, and no regular guardian, any person may file a sworn petition in the Chancery Court of the county where the non compos resides, setting forth the facts in regard to the person and property of the supposed idiot, or lunatic, alleging that his estate exceeds five hundred dollars, and making him a defendant. The following is a form of

A PETITION FOR AN INQUISITION OF LUNACY.

To the Hon. B. M. Webb, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Jamestown:

The petition of Frank Friend, against John Need, both residents of Fentress county.

Petitioner would respectfully show:

I.
The defendant, John Need, has recently become [or is] a person of unsound mind, so that he has not capacity sufficient for the government of himself and property. He has a wife, Susan Need, and two young children, dependent on him for support. He is also considerably indebted.

II.
The said John Need owns the following property: (1) a farm of one hundred acres in the 2d civil district of said county of Fentress, adjoining the farms of Henry Jones, John Tate, George Smith, and perhaps others, and worth one thousand dollars; (2) two horses, three cows, various agricultural implements, and a set of household furniture; and (3) a small stock of merchandise, worth about six hundred dollars.

III.

In consequence of the mental unsoundness of said John Need, his business has fallen into confusion, and his property is being wasted. His creditors are not being paid, and his debts are not being collected. And unless a guardian is appointed to take charge of his estate, it will suffer irreparable injury.

ceeded against as "the defendant," and speaks of "both parties" and "either party." Code, §§ 3692-that he is not sane. See, Dozier, ex parte, 4 Bax.,

IV.

Therefore, the petitioner prays:

1st. That a writ of inquisition issue to inquire and ascertain whether the defendant be a person of unsound mind; and that defendant be given due notice thereof.

2d. That if so found, a guardian be appointed to manage his person and estate; and

3d. For general relief.

FRANK FRIEND.

[Annex affidavit and jurat as in § 797, ante.]

Upon this petition being presented to the Chancellor, either in Court, or at Chambers, he will endorse on the petition an order for a writ to be issued, on bond being given. The following will serve as a form of

THE CHANCELLOR’S FIAT.

To the Clerk and Master of said Court:

Upon the petitioner giving bond, with good security, in the sum of five hundred dollars, conditioned as required by the statute, you will issue a writ of inquisition as prayed, and do all such acts in connection therewith as are required of you by law.

WRIT OF INQUISITION.

State of Tennessee, }
County of Fentress. }
To the Sheriff of said county:

You are hereby commanded to summon a jury of twelve freeholders to meet at a day and place to be designated by you, to inquire and ascertain by their verdict, whether John Need is an idiot, lunatic, or person of unsound mind; and if so, the value of his estate, of what it consists, and who would be his heirs, and next of kin, were he to die intestate.

Witness, O. C. CONATSER, Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court of said county, at office in Jamestown, the 4th day of June, 1890.

O. C. CONATSER, C. & M.

Summon, also, the following persons to attend at the time and place fixed for the inquisition, to testify in behalf of the petitioner: Dr. John Jones, George Brown, and Henry Smith.

O. C. CONATSER, C. & M.

§ 982. Proceedings on an Inquisition of Lunacy — The Clerk and Master will cause the defendant to be served with a copy of the petition, and notice of the time and place of holding the inquest, at least five days previous there-to.

The following will serve as a form of

THE NOTICE TO THE DEFENDANT.

Frank Friends,

vs.

John Need.

In the Chancery Court, at Jamestown.

Mr. John Need:

Take notice, that a writ of inquisition to inquire as to your alleged unsoundness of mind has been issued in said cause by the Chancery Court of Fentress county; and the inquest will be held on June 15, 1890, in the Court House of said county, beginning at nine o’clock, a. m., when and where you can attend, if you wish, with your witnesses. June 6, 1890.

O. C. CONATSER, C. & M.

RETURN OF THE OFFICER.

This notice, and a copy of the petition in the cause, came to hand June 6, 1890. A true copy of this notice, and said copy of the petition, were delivered to the defendant, and the contents thereof fully made known to him. This June 7, 1890.

A. J. Mace, Sheriff.

The defendant should be represented by counsel employed by himself, or friends. Both parties are entitled to process of subpoena, and an attachment, if necessary, to be issued by the Clerk, to compel the attendance of witnesses. At the trial, the Clerk and Master presides, and receives the verdict. The jury must not only hear the testimony, but should inspect and examine the defendant himself. The Clerk must take down the testimony of the witnesses,

7 Code, § 2691.
8 Code, § 2692.
9 Code, § 2693.
10 Code, § 2699.
11 This form follows the form given in the Code, § 3682.
12 Code, § 2696. As the Sheriff designates the time and place, he should fix the time far enough ahead to enable the Clerk to give the five days’ notice. It would be well for the Sheriff and Clerk to agree on a time and place in order to avoid confusion. Notice to the defendant is essential. Dozier, ex parte, 4 Bux., 81.
13 Code, §§ 3696-3697.
14 Code, § 2697. But the defendant may be confined in a distant asylum, he may have wandered off, it may be dangerous to his health of mind for him to be examined, or even to be present, so that it may be impracticable or inexpedient for the jury to inspect and examine him. In such a case, his examination is probably not essential to the validity of the proceedings. The next section of the Code, (§ 3698) says, “his examination, if made, shall be taken down,” thus showing that the statute contemplates circumstances when an examination will not be made. Code, §§ 3706-3707, would, also, seem to and the examination of the defendant, if made, and return them with the verdict to the Chancellor in Court.\textsuperscript{15}

The verdict of the jury may be endorsed on, or attached to, the writ of inquisition, as follows:

THE VERDICT OF THE JURY.

State of Tennessee, \textit{Fentress county,}

The undersigned jurors, having been duly summoned and sworn, to inquire and ascertain whether the within named John Need is an idiot, lunatic, or person of unsound mind, upon oath, do say:

1. That he is of unsound mind, so that he has not capacity sufficient for the government of himself, or of his property.

2. That the value of his estate is about two thousand dollars, and consists of the farm, stock of goods, two horses, three cows, various agricultural implements, and set of household furniture, specified in the petition, and various debts due him; and

3. His next of kin and heirs, were he to die intestate, are his two children, James and Jane Need, both infants; he has, also, a wife, Susan Need.

As witness our hands, this June 15, 1890.

[To be signed by all the jurors.]

This verdict received by me from the jurors, this June 15, 1890.

O. C. Conatser, C. & M.

If the jury cannot agree, the Clerk may issue a new writ to the Sheriff, who shall summon twelve other freeholders, before whom the matter shall be again tried, and in the same manner. The defendant is entitled to a new notice of the time and place of the new inquest. The second jury must hear the witnesses anew, and inspect and examine the defendant for themselves. The Clerk must issue process for witnesses, preside over the trial, and take down the testimony, as in the first trial. If the second jury does not agree, the evidence on both trials must be returned to the Court, and submitted to the Chancellor, who may order a new inquisition, or decide the case for himself upon the testimony thus returned, and such other testimony as may be offered, and may inspect and examine the defendant, if he think proper.\textsuperscript{16}

At the first term of the Court after the return of the inquisition, either party may move the Court to set the verdict of the jury aside, and grant a new trial. Upon this motion, the Court hears the evidence, and the examination of the defendant, as taken down and returned by the Clerk and Master, and also, such affidavits as may be competent and proper, and grants or refuses a new trial. Upon setting aside the verdict of the jury, the Chancellor may, at his discretion, order another inquest to be held, or may pronounce a final decree upon the facts,\textsuperscript{17} adjudging the defendant to be of unsound mind, and appointing a guardian, or adjudging him sane and dismissing the petition.

If the defendant die pending the litigation, even after an appeal to the Supreme Court, the suit abates, and cannot be revived against his administrator even as to the costs accrued.\textsuperscript{18}

\textbf{§ 983. Appointment of a Guardian.}—If the jury find the defendant of unsound mind, it is the duty of the Clerk to appoint a guardian to take care of the defendant, and manage his estate, until the next term of the Chancery Court, at which time the Court will appoint a regular guardian,\textsuperscript{19} unless the verdict of the jury is set aside.

If the defendant is finally adjudged to be an idiot, lunatic, or person of unsound mind, the Court will appoint a regular guardian for his person and estate. The following is a form of an order based upon the verdict of a jury:

imply that the Chancellor may determine the case without inspecting and examining the defendant. The appearance of the defendant may be enforced by attaching his person. Yourie v. Nelson, 1 Tenn. Ch., 275.

15 Code, § 3689.
16 Code, §§ 3701-3707.
17 Code, §§ 3703-3705. It is a calamity, and not a crime, for a person to become insane; and the proof to sustain a charge of insanity need not, therefore, be beyond a reasonable doubt. A preponderance of evidence is sufficient, the presumption of sanity, however, counting as so much evidence in defendant's behalf. A defendant, even if not insane, cannot be much injured by having a good man appointed his guardian. Juries should regard the matter from a business point of view, from a dollar-and-cent standpoint; and not treat it as a criminal prosecution. The true question is: has the defendant sufficient capacity for the government of himself and property? Code, § 3583; Pentress v. Pentress, 7 Heisk., 428.

ORDER APPOINTING A GUARDIAN.

Frank Friend,
vs.
John Need.

This cause coming on to be heard before the Chancellor, this July 20, 1890, upon the petition to have the defendant declared a person of unsound mind, and to have a guardian appointed for his person and estate, and upon the writ of inquisition and the verdict of the jury, and the evidence, which verdict is as follows:

I.
[Here copy the verdict in full.]

II.
And thereupon the defendant moved the Court to set aside the said verdict, and grant him a new trial; and the Court having heard the evidence, and the examination of the defendant as taken down and returned by the Clerk and Master, and the affidavits in support of the motion, and the argument of counsel, overruled said motion, and refused a new trial.

III.
It is, therefore, ordered and adjudged that said verdict be and the same is hereby in all things confirmed, the Court being of opinion that it is well sustained by the evidence, and that the defendant, John Need, is a person of unsound mind.

IV.
And the Master having appointed Frank Friend guardian of the defendant's person and estate, and the Court being satisfied that he is a suitable person for said trust, it is ordered that said Frank Friend be, and he is hereby, appointed the regular guardian of the person and estate of the defendant, John Need, upon his being duly sworn and giving bond as such in the penalty of five thousand dollars, with two sufficient sureties to be approved by the Master, and conditioned faithfully to discharge all his duties as such guardian.

V.
The said guardian will at once make out and file with the Clerk and Master of this Court, a full and true itemized inventory of all the real and personal estate of said John Need, which report the Clerk will enter upon his Book of Guardian Settlements.

VI.
The costs of this cause, including a fee of twenty-five dollars to James C. Taylor, Esq., the defendant's counsel, will be paid by the said guardian out of the estate of his ward.

Should the defendant afterwards become restored in mind, he may, on application by petition to the County Court, have a jury appointed to inquire into the condition of his mind; and if found of sound mind, and competent to control himself and property, the Court will declare him of sound mind; and the guardianship of his person and property thereupon ceases, and he may demand a settlement of his guardian.

§ 984. The Guardian's Duties and Powers.—The guardian should report his receipts and disbursements, and make settlements and renew his bond, in the Master's office, in strict compliance with the law governing guardians of infants. In addition to these duties; (1). He may file a bill in Chancery to have a child of his ward, coming of age or marrying, decreed a portion of the ward's estate. This bill is in the nature of a bill for partial partition, and all persons should be made parties who would have any interest in the ward's estate, in case of his death intestate, including his wife, if any. (2). He may file a petition in Chancery, to have his ward's property, real or personal, sold when manifestly for the ward's interest, or the interest of the ward and his family. To this petition the ward should be made a defendant, and the proceedings should be similar to those upon a bill by a guardian of an infant to sell his ward's property. The same state of facts that would justify the sale of an infant's property would justify the sale of the property of a person of unsound mind; and in the latter case the welfare of his family may be considered along with his own.

20 These affidavits are such as would be proper in support, or rebuttal, of a motion for a new trial in the Circuit Court. Code, § 3704.
21 Acts of 1887, ch. 149.
22 Code, §§ 3708-3715. The bill may, also, be filed by the child coming of age, or marrying, in which case the guardian must be made a party defendant along with the others indicated in the text.
23 An interest in expectancy may, also, be sold. Code, § 3328.
24 Code, §§ 3716-3719. The statute evidently means that this petition shall be in the form of a bill. The term, petition, is elsewhere used in similar cases as synonymous with a bill. Code, §§ 3270; 3274; 3294; 3298; 3324-3326.

CHAPTER LIII.

SUITES TO ADMINISTER THE ESTATES OF DECEDEMTS.

ARTICLE I. Suits to Appoint an Administrator.

ARTICLE II. Suits to Sell a Decedent’s Land to Pay His Debts.

ARTICLE III. Suits to Administer Insolvent Estates.

ARTICLE I.

§ 985. When and How an Administrator May be Appointed in Chancery. Ordinarily, the County Court appoints administrators; but there are two states of facts in which the Chancery Court may appoint an administrator:

1. Where six months have elapsed since the death of a person, and no one will apply, or can be procured, to administer on his estate. In such a case a bill may be filed for the express purpose of having an administrator appointed.

2. Where a suit is pending in the Chancery Court, and the estate of a deceased person is involved, and there is no executor or administrator of such estate, or the executor or administrator thereof is interested adversely thereto, the Chancellor may, on motion, appoint an administrator ad litem of such estate for all the purposes of that particular suit. An administrator ad litem, so appointed, will not be required to give any bond, except in cases where it becomes necessary for him to take control or custody of the property or assets of his intestate, in which case he must give a bond with good security, and in such amount as the Chancellor may order. This bond will be conditioned as in case of an ordinary administrator’s bond. If the death of the decedent does not appear of record in the cause, it may be made known to the Court by the affidavit of any person interested in the case. The Master may make the appointment in vacation, on the facts being made to appear. The order of appointment when made in Court may be as follows:

ORDER APPOINTING AN ADMINISTRATOR AD LITEM.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al.

In this cause it appearing from the record [or, from the affidavit of John Doe, the complainant,] that the defendant, Robert Roe, is dead, intestate, and that no administrator has been appointed to take charge of his estate; and it being necessary to have said estate represented in this suit, on motion of the complainant it is ordered by the Court that Richard Roe be appointed administrator ad litem of the estate of said Robert Roe, and no bond is required of him [or, and it appearing that it will be necessary for said administrator ad litem to take into his control and custody the property and assets of his intestate, it is further ordered by the Court, that, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, the said Richard Roe will execute an administration bond with good security, in the penalty of one thousand dollars, conditioned as required by law. Such bond will be filed as a part of the record in this cause.

Code, § 2209. It would seem that the lapse of six months without any one applying to the County Court, is presumptive evidence that no one will apply, or can be procured to administer.

An administrator ad litem cannot be appointed by the Supreme Court. Ragio v. Collins, 17 Pick., 662.

Acts of 1889, ch. 137; Denning v. Todd, 7 Pick., 422.

For the form of an administrator’s bond, see, Code, § 2273. This form is suitable for an administrator ad litem.
§ 986. Frame and Form of Bill for Appointment of Administrator.—If the next of kin desires to have an administrator appointed, or any creditor of the deceased so desires, he may file his bill for that purpose in the Chancery Court of the county in which the deceased resided at the time of his death, or in which his estate or effects were at the time of his death. If the bill is filed by a creditor, it must be on behalf of all other creditors who may wish to come in and be made parties; and the distributees and heirs must be made defendants. If the bill is filed by the next of kin, or any of them, it must be on behalf of all the distributees and heirs, and against all creditors who may be made or become defendants.

The bill, by whomsoever filed, will set forth (1) the death of the deceased; (2) where he resided, or where his effects were, at the time of his death; (3) of what those effects consisted, and their probable value; (4) that six months have elapsed since his death; (5) that no person will apply or can be procured to administer; and (6) will pray that an administrator be appointed, with such other specific prayers as are required by the facts, and for general relief. The following is a form of a BILL TO HAVE AN ADMINISTRATOR APPOINTED.

To the Hon. Albert G. Hawkins, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Huntingdon.

George Rich, a resident of Haywood county, on behalf of himself and all other creditors of William Kent, deceased, complainant,

vs.

Susan Kent, George Kent, and Charles Kent, residents of Haywood county, defendants.

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That in June, 1889, William Kent died intestate, leaving defendant Susan Kent his widow, and defendants George Kent and Charles Kent, his only children, distributees, and heirs at law, said Charles Kent being a minor without regular guardian.

II.

The said William Kent, at the time of his death, resided and had considerable estate in Haywood county, and six months have elapsed since his death, and no person will apply or can be procured to administer on his estate.

III.

The said William Kent, at the time of his death, was indebted to complainant, by note, for one thousand dollars, dated May 10, 1888, and payable one day after date, which note, with the interest thereon, remains wholly unpaid, and is herewith filed, marked exhibit A, and prayed to be taken as a part of this bill. Said note was given in settlement of balance due complainant on dissolution of a partnership between the complainant and said William Kent.

IV.

The said William Kent died seized and possessed of a tract of land in the 10th civil district of Haywood county, containing about one hundred acres, adjoining the lands of James Jones, George Cole's heirs, and others, being the same on which the said defendants now reside. Said land, subject to the homestead and dower rights of the widow, is available assets for the payment of the liabilities of said estate, and is well worth two thousand dollars. Said decedent, also, left considerable personal estate, including two horses, three cows, a mule, a large flock of sheep, and a mowing machine; and complainant is informed and believes, and on that information and belief charges, that the said decedent left about one thousand dollars in money, and a considerable amount in collectible choses in action, all of which is now in possession of his said widow.

V.

The said William Kent is largely indebted to others beside complainant, and his said estate was acquired mainly with what he obtained from his creditors. Nevertheless his widow and heirs, the defendants, are unwilling to pay said indebtedness, and have conspired to deny and conceal a large part of said personal assets, especially the said money and choses in action; and are seeking to defraud said creditors, and appropriate the whole estate among themselves; and to aid in this, they not only refuse to administer on the decedent's estate, but discourage others from administering.

VI.

No year's support or exempt property has been set apart to the widow, nor has homestead or dower been assigned her, but she has said tract of land and said chattels in her possession.

Complainant therefore prays:

vii.

That process issue to cause the defendants to appear, and that they be required to answer this bill fully, but not on oath; and they may be required and enjoined to deliver to the administrator, when appointed, all the money, choses in action, and other personality, not exempt from execution, belonging to said William Kent at his death; and that a guardian ad litem be appointed for said Charles Kent, who is a minor.

That an administrator of said estate be appointed by your Honor; that all necessary accounts be taken of the assets, real and personal, of the said decedent, and that due distribution thereof be made among the creditors of his estate; that homestead and dower be assigned the said widow, and the remainder interest in said tract of land be sold for the satisfaction of the liabilities of said estate, if necessary; that the administration of said estate be conducted under the authority of this Court, in accordance with the statute for such case made; and that general relief be granted.

That publication be made for all other creditors of said estate who may wish, to come forward and have themselves made parties, and file and prove their claims.

The bill should be sworn to by the complainant, especially if he seeks the immediate appointment of an administrator, or guardian ad litem.

§ 987. Proceedings After the Filing of the Bill.—Upon the filing of the bill, the Court in term time, or the Chancellor in vacation, will appoint an administrator of the estate upon such terms as he may think best. The following is a form of an ORDER APPOINTING AN ADMINISTRATOR.

George Rich, &c.,
Susan Kent, et al.

In this case, it is ordered by the Court that Charles Smith be appointed administrator of the estate of William Kent, deceased; and the said Charles Smith thereupon appeared in open Court and accepted said appointment, and having been sworn to perform the duties of such administrator, and having given bond in the sum of two thousand dollars, with Henry Smith and George Rich, his sureties, conditioned for the faithful performance of all the duties required of him by law in the administration of said estate, he is clothed with all the powers of administrator of said William Kent, deceased; and letters of administration will issue to him on his demand.

The said administrator will forthwith demand, and take into his possession, all the personal estate of said decedent liable to his debts, wheresoever and in whosoever's hands found; and convert the same into money, and report a true inventory thereof to this Court, at its next term. The defendants are hereby commanded and enjoined to deliver to said Charles Smith, all his property, choses in action, and other personality, not exempt from execution, belonging to said William Kent at his death.

The Master will make publication for all creditors of said William Kent to come forward, and have themselves made parties, and prove their claims.

The administrator thus appointed becomes a party to the suit, and is bound by any order or decree in the cause. He is under the same responsibilities as a receiver in Chancery, and must make reports to the Court in the same manner. SUI TS TO SELL A DECEDENT'S LANDS TO PAY HIS DEBTS.

§ 988. When and How a Decedent's Lands May be Subjected to His Debts.

§ 989. Form of an Administrator's Bill to Sell Lands.

§ 990. Frame and Form of a Creditor's Bill to Sell a Decedent's Land to Pay His Debts.

§ 991. Defendants to the Bill by Heirs and Others.

§ 992. Petitions by Creditors and Claimants to Become Parties.

§ 993. Reference to the Master to Ascertain the Facts.

§ 995. Decree of Sale.

§ 996. Proceedings Subsequent to the Sale.

§ 988. When and How a Decedent's Lands May be Subjected to His Debts.

When an executor not authorized by will to sell and convey real estate, or an administrator, has exhausted the personal estate of the deceased in the payment of his debts, leaving just debts or demands against him unpaid, or paid by the representative out of his own means, and the deceased died seized and possessed of real estate, such executor or administrator may file a bill in the Chancery Court, to have such land, or enough thereof, sold to satisfy such debts or demands.

The bill must be filed in the county where the land or some portion of it lies, and it must allege, as jurisdictional facts: 1, The death of the owner of the realty sought to be sold; 2, The appointment of complainant as his executor, or administrator; 3, The exhaustion of the decedent's personalty in the payment of his bona fide debts; 4, The existence of debts or demands against him remaining unpaid, or paid by the representative out of his own means; and 5, That the deceased died seized and possessed of real estate, some portion of which lies in the county where the bill is filed.

The bill should specify particularly the names of the creditors, and the amounts of the debts, or the demands of each, for the satisfaction of which the land is sought to be sold; and should also describe the various tracts of land by metes and bounds, or other description sufficient to identify them, and should pray for the sale of such real estate, or such portions thereof, as may prove least injurious to the heirs and legal representatives, and be sufficient to satisfy the debts or demands set forth in the bill, and shown to exist.

The heirs, devisees, legatees, widow, and all persons having any legal or equitable interest in the land, must be made parties defendant: and if the title originated by the bill, whether set forth in the bill, or not. Dalas v. Read, 6 Serg. 53; Kendall v. Tius, 9 Heisk., 727. No sale can take place until there has been an account and a report confirmed, showing a deficiency of personal assets, and the consequent necessity of a sale of realty. Frazier v. Pankey, 1 Swan., 75; Jones v. Douglass, 1 Tenn. Ch., 359. It is not enough that the necessity for a sale appear probable; it must actually appear, and be so adjudicated, and adjudicated upon the facts, those facts to be ordinarily ascertained by a Master's report, showing the due exhaustion of the personality, and bona fide debts outstanding. Wade v. Fisher, 10 Heisk., 498; Kendall v. Titus, 9 Heisk., 727.
of the deceased is equitable, the holder of the legal title must also be made a party. All persons known to have claims against the estate should be made parties, and called on to prove their claims before the Master when the account prayed for is taken.

§ 989. Form of an Administrator's Bill to Sell Land.—The frame and ordinary allegations of an administrator's bill to sell land to pay the decedent's debts are substantially given in the preceding section. If there be any liens or other encumbrances on the land, the owners thereof must be made parties; and if the decedent held the equitable title only, the holder of the legal title must be made a party. The following will serve as a GENERAL FORM OF A BILL TO SELL LAND TO PAY A DECEDENT'S DEBTS.

[Address and commencement of bill as in §§ 155-156, ante.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That in the month of [giving month and year] A B [the intestate] departed this life, intestate, at his residence in [give name] county, leaving the said [naming the defendants who are] his only children and heirs at law, whose places of residence are respectively as stated in the caption of the bill. Complainant is the administrator of said estate, duly appointed by the County Court of said county at its [stating month and year of] term; and then and there duly qualified as such. [The said defendant, O P, is a minor without a general guardian.]

II.

The whole of the available personal assets of said estate, for the payment of debts, amounted to about the sum of one thousand dollars, and complainant has applied them all to the payment of the debts and liabilities of said estate, leaving bona fide debts, as he believes, outstanding and unpaid to the amount of about one thousand dollars, to-wit: 1. A judgment in the Circuit Court of said county, rendered on [giving date] in favor of the defendant, C D, for one hundred dollars and costs of suit, now amounting to one hundred and twenty-three dollars in all. 2. A note, executed to G H, and by him endorsed to the defendant C D, due one year after date, for three hundred dollars, dated January 1st, 1889, and drawing interest from date; and 3. An account claimed by E F, for about five hundred dollars, for services as attorney-at-law in said suit of C D against said intestate. There may be other claims against said estate, which have not yet been presented.

III.

The said A B [the intestate] died seized and possessed of one hundred and sixty acres at land, more or less, lying in the 8th civil district of [give name of] county, and bounded as follows: [Here describe it by metes and bounds.] This land is the only asset now left for the payment of said outstanding debts. [If there be any homestead or dower rights attaching to this land, so state, and state whether they have been assigned.]

IV.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That process issue against the resident defendants aforesaid, and that publication be made as to said non-resident defendants, to cause said defendants to appear; and that they be required to answer this bill fully and particularly, but their oaths to their answers are waived. [That a guardian ad litem be appointed to answer for said minor, O P.]

2d. That an account of the assets and liabilities of said estate be taken, to the end that it may appear whether the personal estate of said intestate has been duly exhausted, and whether a sale of said land is necessary.

3d. That said land, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be sold to pay said outstanding liabilities of said estate; and also any bona fide debts and charges against said estate which may be found to exist in favor of any other creditors not named herein who may choose to come forward and become parties to this proceeding, and establish their claims to the satisfaction of the Court, before the proceeds of said sale are paid out.

4th. That he may have all such further and other relief, as the nature of his case may require. [The bill need not be sworn to unless it falls within some of the exceptions stated in § 161, ante.]

Inasmuch as bills of this character are often filed, the following more special and complicated form of a bill is given, as a further guide to draftsmen:

BILL TO SELL THE LAND OF A DECEDENT.

To the Hon. John P. Smith, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Dandridge:

John Wilson, administrator of James Wilson, deceased, a resident of Jefferson county, complainant, Henry Wilson, Henry Jones, Charles Stiles, George Brown and his wife, Susan Brown, Sarah Wilson, senior, and Samuel Wilson, a minor without general guardian, all residents of Jefferson county, and Sarah Wilson, Junior, a non-resident of the State, defendants.

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That James Wilson died intestate in Jefferson county, where he resided, on June 1, 1888 leaving as his only heirs at law the complainant and the defendants, Henry Wilson, Susan Brown, formerly Wilson, Samuel Wilson, a minor without regular guardian, and Sarah Wilson, junior. He, also, left a widow, the defendant, Sarah Wilson, senior. George Brown is made a party in the right of his wife only. Complainant was on June 15, 1888, appointed and duly qualified as the administrator of the estate of said James Wilson, deceased; and has been acting as such ever since.

II.

The personal estate of said decedent, available for the payment of his debts, amounted to seven hundred and twenty dollars, all of which has been exhausted in discharging the indebtedness of said decedent; and settlement therefor has been made with the County Court Clerk of Jefferson county, and such settlement duly approved.

III.

There remains outstanding and unpaid the following demands against the estate of said decedent:

1. One note for sixty dollars, and accrued interest, executed to Henry Jones, Sept. 1, 1886, and due in one day thereafter; and now alleged to be the property of said Henry Jones.

2. One judgment in favor of Charles Stiles, for four hundred dollars, rendered Oct. 10, 1885, by James Johnson, a J. P. for Jefferson county, credited Jan. 15, 1886, with two hundred dollars.

3. Three hundred and ten dollars, which Henry Brown claims to be due him for money alleged to have been paid July 15, 1886, by said Brown as stayor of said decedent, on a judgment rendered against the latter, by John Wright, a J. P. of Jefferson county, Sept. 4, 1885.

4. The defendant, Henry Wilson, has presented a sworn account for two hundred dollars against said estate for nursing and caring for the decedent in his last illness.

Two years and six months not having elapsed since complainant was appointed administrator, there may be other claims against said estate not yet presented.

Complainant knows of no evidence or facts whereby he can controvert the justice of said demands, and he calls upon the widow, heirs, and distributees, of the said James Wilson, to contest the same, if they so desire.

IV.

Said decedent at his death was the owner in fee of the following tracts of land; and three town lots in Jefferson county; Tract No. 1 being his homestead, where he died, containing four hundred acres, beginning at a black walnut on the bank of French Broad river, [and so on, giving the metes and bounds exactly as they appear in his deed.] Tract No. 2 containing one hundred and forty acres beginning [etc., giving metes and bounds as in the deed.] The three town lots are on Main street in Dandridge, and are known in the plan of said town as lots No. 24, No. 25 and No. 26, all adjoining, each fronting on said Main street, and running back two hundred feet to a ten-foot alley, the said lot No. 24 beginning at a stake, the junction of Main and Blount streets [etc., describing each lot according to the deeds, or otherwise, so as to fully specify the bounds of each.]

V.

Neither homestead nor dower have been assigned to said widow, but she and her said minor son, Samuel, are occupying the Home Farm, worth about two thousand dollars, as a homestead. All of the lots and tracts hereinabove described are liable for said decedent's debts, subject to the homestead rights of said widow and minor, and subject to the widow's right of dower. Complainant believes and so charges that the said three town lots will bring enough to pay all of the outstanding indebtedness of his intestate; and that it would be to the interest of the heirs to sell said three lots rather than sell either of said two farms, either of which is worth at least two thousand dollars.

VI.

Complainant, therefore, prays:

1st. That subpoena issue against the resident defendants, and that publication be made as to the defendant, Sarah Wilson, who is a non-resident of the State.

2d. That a guardian ad litem be appointed for the minor defendant, Samuel Wilson, he having no regular guardian.

3d. That all the defendants be required to answer the bill fully and on oath, except the defendants, Henry Wilson, Henry Jones, and Charles Stiles, whose oaths to their answers are waived.

4th. That an account be taken of the assets and liabilities of said estate, and of what bona fide debts of said estate are outstanding and unpaid, including those hereinbefore set out, and such others as may be duly presented by petition in this cause, and duly proved.

[Both the bill and the report of the Master should show (1) the amount of the personal assets, (2) the bona fide debts outstanding, (3) the names of the creditors, and (4) the amount due each; and the sale should be made to pay these specific debts. Young v. Young, 12 Lea. 335. Where there are minors, their guardian ad litem should demur to the bill, if it fails to set out the specific debts for the payment of which the land is sought to be sold, or fails to set out any other jurisdictional fact. Many doubtful claims are frequently allowed, which, if they had been set out in the bill, and thus had attention drawn to them, could have been successfully resisted. Administrators should be held to the strict law when they seek to sell the realty.]

The heirs have the right to contest the justness.
5th. That the defendants, Henry Wilson, Henry Jones, and Charles Stiles, be required to prove their claims before the Master at the taking of said account.

6th. That a sale be made of such part of said real estate as may be sufficient to pay all of the outstanding indebtedness of said estate, including costs, counsel fees, and compensation to complainant for his services as administrator; and, if necessary, that the homestead of said widow and minor, and the dower of the widow, be laid off, to the end that the remainder interest of the heirs in the land so assigned may be sold.

7th. That complainant have such further and other relief as he may be entitled to under the pleadings and proof in the cause, and as may be necessary to enable him properly and effectually to discharge his trust.

ALLEN G. MATHEWS, Solicitor.

§ 990. Frame and Form of a Creditor's Bill to Sell a Decedent's Lands to Pay His Debts.—A bona fide creditor may, likewise, file the bill, in which event the suit should be for the benefit of all other bona fide creditors of the estate; and the personal representative, the widow, heirs, legatees, devisees, and other persons interested in the land, or in the proceeds thereof, should be made defendants. Other creditors must come forward by petition, which the administrator or other party interested may answer. The justness of all claims filed may be contested before the Master. The proceedings upon a bill by a creditor are the same as on a bill by the personal representative.

The following would be the form of the caption and commencement of the bill when filed by a creditor:

CAPTION AND COMMENCEMENT OF A CREDITOR'S BILL.

Charles Stiles, a resident of Jefferson county, who sues in behalf of himself and all other creditors of the estate of James Wilson, deceased, complainant, vs.

John Wilson, administrator of said James Wilson's estate, Henry Wilson, Henry Jones, George Brown and wife, Susan Brown, Sarah Wilson, senior, and Samuel Wilson, a minor without general guardian, all residents of Jefferson county, and Sarah Wilson, junior, a non-resident of the State; defendants.

The complainant, who sues in behalf of himself and all other creditors of the estate of James Wilson, deceased, respectfully shows to the Court:

That [A creditor's bill contains the same allegations as an administrator's bill, and must show the same facts, except (1) that it must allege that complainant is a bona fide creditor of said estate, and state the origin or character of the indebtedness, and (2) it may state why the complainant did not wait for the administrator to file the bill: this latter statement is not essential, but if a good reason be given, such as an unreasonable delay on the part of the administrator, it gives the bill a better savar.]

§ 991. Defences to the Bill by Heirs and Others.—Inasmuch as the personal estate is the primary fund for the satisfaction of a decedent's debts, the persons to whom his lands descend, or have been bequeathed, and all other persons interested in the lands, or the proceeds thereof, have a right to require that all creditors be satisfied out of the personal estate, and that the lands or their proceeds be not subjected to the payment of the decedent's debts until the personal estate has been exhausted in due course of administration. When, therefore, a bill is filed, whether by the personal representative or by a creditor, to sell a decedent's lands to pay his debts, the heirs, widow, devisees, and the other persons interested in the land, or in its proceeds, have the right to show: 1, That the alleged debts, for which the land is sought to be sold, are illegal, or unjust, or have been paid, or are within the statute of frauds, or are barred by the statutes of limitation, or are otherwise not recoverable; or 2, That if recoverable, nevertheless the land should not be held liable for their satisfaction, for the reason that personal assets sufficient to pay the same came, or by due diligence should have come, into the hands of the personal representative; or 3, That the personal assets have been wasted, that false claims have been paid, and that the estate has been so otherwise misadministered that the administrator is liable on his official bond for enough to satisfy the debts sought to be made a charge on the decedent's land; or 4, That seven years have elapsed since the death of the decedent.

of all debts set forth in the bill, and of all brought forward during the progress of the cause.

§ The bill need not be sworn to, except for the purposes stated in § 161, ante.
An administrator de bonis non cannot maintain a bill to sell the decedent’s land to pay debts until there has been a settlement with the previous administrator, showing that the personal assets have been legally administered.

The following general form of an answer will serve as a guide in ease the heirs deem it necessary to contest the sale of the land described in the bill:

GENERAL FORM OF AN ANSWER TO A BILL TO SELL LAND.

[For title and commencement, see § 380, ante.]

These defendants, jointly and severally answering the bill filed against them in this cause, say:

I.
They admit the death and intestacy of A B [the intestate], deceased, and the appointment and qualification of complainant as administrator of the estate of said intestate, as stated in the bill; and that the legal heirs of the said decedent are as stated in the bill. They, also, admit the descent to them of the real estate described in the bill. [Here set up any claim or facts relative to homestead or dower, if any.]

II.
Further answering, they say that the complainant may have paid off some debts that were owing by said intestate, but respondents do not know to whom, or to what amount. Neither do they know whether or not any or all of the claims mentioned in the bill are just, nor whether there are any bona fide debts against the estate, yet outstanding and unpaid; and they require strict proof upon these points. [Here set up any defences known to any of the debts or claims set out in the bill. Rely on the statute of limitations as to said debts, if available, and plead the seven-year statute as against all claimants, if available.]

III.
Respondents have no personal knowledge as to whether or not complainant has exhausted the personal estate in the payment of debts, but according to their information and belief, he has not done so, but has, or should by due diligence have had, about one thousand dollars in his hands as such administrator, which has not been applied to the payment of debts; or otherwise duly accounted for; and according to the best of their information and belief, it will not be necessary to sell said real estate to pay debts, if said personal estate is duly collected and properly applied. [If the administrator has made no settlement with the County Court, so allege. If you can show any assets he has not collected, or has not accounted for, specify them.]

IV.
And now, having fully answered, these respondents pray to be hence dismissed with their reasonable costs.

Bray Cecil, Solicitor.

[The answer must be sworn to, unless the oath thereto is waived in the bill. § 380, ante.]

§ 992. Petitions by Creditors and Claimants to Become Parties.—Any creditor, not made a party to the bill, who desires his debt paid out of the proceeds of land, must come forward by petition, and prove his claim before the Master. And any person claiming the land, or any interest therein, not made a party to the bill, may assert his rights by petition, or he may file an original bill and enjoin the sale. Form of such petitions, and proceedings thereunder, have been heretofore given.

§ 993. Reference to the Master to Ascertain the Facts.—No decree of sale can be made, until the truth of the jurisdictional facts stated in a preceding section, has been satisfactorily shown to the Court; and no debts can be paid out of the proceeds of the sale except those shown to exist during the progress of the cause. If there be any creditor whose debt has not been set forth in the bill, he must have himself made a party by petition, showing therein the nature and amount of the debt, and why it was not presented to the personal representative.

To ascertain whether a sale should be made, the Court will make a reference to the Master to take and state an account with the administrator, to ascertain whether there be a deficiency of personal assets, and, also, to report what bona fide debts are owing to creditors, or to the personal representative. A return of nulla bona on an execution against the administrator is not sufficient to authorize a decree to sell a decedent’s lands to pay his debts. There must be

In this cause, on motion of complainant's solicitor, the Master is directed to hear proof and report to the present or next term of the Court:

1. What personal assets of the estate of James Wilson, deceased, came or ought by due diligence to have come, to the hands of the complainant as administrator of said estate, showing in the report the total gross amount, and specifying the amount from each principal source.

2. What \textit{bona fide} debts and charges against said estate have been paid by the administrator, specifying the principal expenditures, and giving the total amount.

3. Whether the personal assets of said estate have been duly exhausted in the payment of \textit{bona fide} debts and charges.

4. Whether any \textit{bona fide} debts and charges against said estate remain outstanding and unpaid; and if so, the amount and nature thereof, and to whom owing.

5. What real estate the said James Wilson died seized and possessed of, and what is its reasonable minimum value.

6. Whether it will be necessary to sell any or all of said real estate, to pay said outstanding debts or charges; and if not necessary to sell all, the sale of what part will prove least injurious to the heirs and legal representatives.

7. \begin{quote}
[On allegation or suggestion that said real estate is encumbered, add the following:] Whether any of said real estate is encumbered, if so, the nature and amount of the encumbrance, and the owner thereof.

The Master will report on no claim not specified in the pleadings, or in a petition duly filed, unless the parties waive a petition.\footnote{15} If any petitions be filed, he will notify the administrator and the Solicitor of the defendants thereof. Petitions and claims may be filed any time prior to the closing of the account.

§ 994. The Master's Report of Assets and Liabilities.—The Master will proceed in the usual manner, in making his report.\footnote{16} No claim will be reported on not set forth in the pleadings, or duly brought forward by petition, unless the parties in interest allow claims to be filed before the Master without petition.    $1,675.70

The personal assets of said estate have been duly exhausted in the payment of the bona fide debts and charges above named.

IV.
The following bona fide debts and charges against said estate remain outstanding and unpaid:
1. Judgment in favor of Charles Stiles, interests and costs,
   (Ex. C to dep. of John Wilson.)
   $418.20
2. Note by the decedent to Henry Jones, due Jan. 1, 1890, including interest,

   50.00
5. Amount due the administrator for excess of disbursements over receipts,
   1.30
6. Amount due complainant for services as administrator, not yet fixed,
   Total outstanding liabilities, not including amount due complainant as administrator,
   $545.06

V.
The only real estate of which James Wilson died seized are the two tracts of land and the three town lots described in the bill.17 [Exhibits E, F, G, H, and I, to dep. of John Wilson.] Each of the two tracts is well worth $2,000; one of the town lots is worth $500, and the two others are worth each $200. It is to the interest of the heirs to sell the three town lots. [Dep. of Geo. Brown, p. 4, q. 10.]

VI.
It will be necessary to sell two, if not all three, of said town lots to pay said outstanding debts and liabilities, the amount due the administrator, and the costs of this proceeding.

All of which is respectfully submitted, this June 12, 1890.

§ 995. Decree of Sale.—On the confirmation of the Master’s report showing the existence of specific debts, the exhaustion or insufficiency of the personalty, and the necessity of a sale of a sufficiency of the real estate to pay the decedent’s debts, the Court decrees a sale accordingly.19 If homestead and dower rights exist, they must be determined and set apart, before the sale is made, so that there may be no conflict between the rights of the purchaser and those of the widow and minor heirs.

DECREES OF SALE.

John Wilson, admr., &c.,
vs.
Henry Wilson, et al.

No. 543.

This cause came on to be further heard before Chancellor John P. Smith, on this 14th day of June, 1890, on the pleadings and proof in the cause, and especially on the report of the Master to the present term of the Court, which report is as follows:

And said report being unexcepted to is in all things confirmed.

I.

And it appearing to the Court from the said report that the personal assets of the estate of James Wilson, deceased, have been duly exhausted by the administrator in the payment of bona fide debts and charges against said estate, leaving bona fide debts and charges against the same still outstanding and unpaid

17 If the lands are not described in the bill, or in exhibits thereto, the Master should describe them in his report sufficiently to fully identify them. They should be described by metes and bounds in the decree of sale. See, ante, § 172.
18 See, ante, § 615-617.
19 It is error to decree a sale before adjudicating debts against the estate. Miller v. Taylor, 2 Shan. Cas., 461. The inheritance fathers have left their children should be dealt with reyenently by the Courts, and saved from sacrilege. See, post, § 1141, sub-sec., 6.
SUITS TO SELL DECEDENTS' LANDS TO PAY DEBTS. § 996 dollars and six cents, not including the amount due the administrator for his services as such, and the cost of this proceeding;

II.

And it further appearing from said report that said James Wilson died seized of two certain tracts of land and three town lots, fully described in the bill, and in the deeds exhibited to the said report; that it would be least injurious to the heirs to have said town lots sold rather than either of the farms, and that it will be necessary to sell all three of said lots to pay said outstanding liabilities; said lots being described as follows: [Here describe them according to the title papers, so as fully to identify them.]

It is, therefore, decreed by the Court that the Master, after advertising according to law, proceed to sell said three town lots at public sale, at the Court House door in Dandridge, to the highest and best bidder, on a credit of six and twelve months [except the sum of one hundred dollars, which he will require to be paid in hand,] taking notes drawing interest from date, with approved security, for each installment of the purchase-money, and retaining a lien on the land for further security. The Master will report his action in the premises to next term of the Court, until which time all further questions are reserved.

§ 996. Proceedings Subsequent to the Sale.—The proceedings preliminary to, during, and subsequent to, the sale, are the same as in ordinary cases; and the decree confirming the sale, and divesting and vesting title, is in the usual form. The Master should pay out the proceeds of the sale, not the administrator.

DEGREE CONFIRMING SALE.

John Wilson, admr., &c., vs. Henry Wilson, et al. No. 543.

This cause came on to be heard before Chancellor John P. Smith, on this 12th day of December, 1890, on the pleadings and proof, and especially on the Master's report of sale to the present term, which report is in the words and figures following:

[Here copy the report in full.]

I.

And said report, being unexcepted to, is by the Court, in all things confirmed. It is, therefore, decreed that all the right, title, and interest, of all the parties to this suit, complainant and defendant, and especially of such as are the heirs at law of James Wilson, dec'd, in and to said three lots of land, be divested out of them and vested in said purchaser, Charles Stiles, subject to the lien aforesaid for the unpaid purchase-money. On paying the legal fees therefor, the said purchaser may have a copy of this decree for registration as a muniment of title to said land; or, if he so prefer, the Master will make him a deed conveying to him said three lots as an indefeasible inheritance in fee simple forever.

On demand of the purchaser, a writ of possession will issue to put him into the possession of said three lots.

II.

Out of the proceeds of said sale as paid in, the Master will retain enough to pay all the costs of this cause, and then will pay pari passu:

1. The amount due on the judgment in favor of Charles Stiles.
2. The amount due on the note of Henry Jones.
3. The fee of fifty dollars due Pickle & Turner.
4. The sum of one hundred dollars to complainant, in full of all services rendered, and all expenses incurred, and all sums paid out of his own means.
5. The sum of fifty dollars to Allen G. Mathews, Esq., for his services as Solicitor of complainant in this cause.
6. The sum of ten dollars to George James, the guardian ad litem of Samuel Wilson. This sum will be charged to said Samuel by the Master in paying out the residue in his hands to the distributees.
7. Whatever balance may remain in the hands of the Master after making the above payments, and paying the costs of the cause, he will pay out to the heirs of James Wilson, deceased, share and share alike. The amounts due any of the parties who are sui juris may be paid to their Solicitors of record in this cause.

20 Inasmuch as the statute provides how lands shall be sold under a decree, it is not necessary to encumber the minutes, and consume the time of the Court, by reciting these statutory provisions. Code, §§ 21450-2155. If, however, special directions to the Master are given, such as directions to advertise by posters, or hand-bills, or in special newspapers, or directions to sell on the premises, or directions to subdivide the land and sell in lots, such directions will be inserted here.

21 As a rule no cash payment should be required, for reasons heretofore given; but if unpaid taxes, or other pressing liens, exist, it may be necessary to require a cash payment sufficient for their discharge. See, ante, § 623, note 11.

22 Ante, §§ 621-627.

23 The proceeds of the sale should be paid out by the Master, under the orders of the Court, and not by the administrator. The administrator's bond does not cover the proceeds of realty sold to pay debts. Gambill v. Campbell, 12 Heisk., 739.
ARTICLE III.
SUITs TO ADMINISTER INSOLVENT ESTATES.

§ 997. Jurisdictional Facts.—The administration of the estates of decedents is ordinarily within the exclusive jurisdiction of the County Court; but where the assets of an estate, real and personal, amount to, or exceed, one thousand dollars in value, are insufficient to pay the debts of the estate, according to the complainant’s information and belief, and the estate has been reported insolvent to the County Court, or to its Clerk, the personal representative, or any creditor, may file a bill in the Chancery Court and have the administration of such estate transferred from the County to the Chancery Court.

The executor or administrator may, as the representative of the creditors of an insolvent estate, file a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of property; and when such conveyance is set aside, the assets recovered must be distributed pro rata among the creditors. Any creditor may, also, file such a bill. But the suit cannot be maintained unless: (1) the estate be insolvent, (2) and such insolvency duly suggested, and (3) the conveyance shown to be fraudulent.

Inasmuch as the assets of an insolvent estate are distributed ratably among all the general creditors, and as the suit, whether instituted by a personal representative or by a creditor, is for the common benefit of all entitled to share in the assets, the statute provides that the suit shall be conducted on equitable principles, and after the manner of a general creditor’s bill.

§ 998. Frame of Bill.—The bill must be filed in the county where the will was proved, or the letters of administration granted, or where the personal representative resides, or is served with process; and may be filed at any time after the estate is reported insolvent to the County Court, or its Clerk, or Deputy Clerk. The bill should set forth:

1. That the assets of the estate, real and personal, amount to as much as one thousand dollars, in value.
2. That the assets are insufficient to pay the decedent’s debt, and the costs of administration, according to the complainant’s information and belief.
3. All the debts the complainant knows, or believes, are owing by the deceased, giving names of creditors and the amount of each debt, where possible; also, all disputed claims against the estate, the amount of each, and the names of the claimants.

4. That the estate is insolvent, and its insolvency has been duly reported to the County Court, or its Clerk, or Deputy Clerk, as the case may be.\textsuperscript{11}

If the personal representative file the bill, he may do it in his own behalf, as well as in behalf of the widow, heirs, and legatees, or distributees, of the estate against all such of the creditors and claimants as are named therein and sought to be enjoined, and all others interested and not named as complainants;\textsuperscript{12} but the better practice is to join the widow, heirs, and legatees or distributees, as defendants.\textsuperscript{13} If a creditor file the bill, he must file it in behalf of himself and all other creditors and persons interested in the estate, and who may wish to come in under the decree; and must file it against the personal representative, and such other persons as are sought to be enjoined;\textsuperscript{14} the widow, heirs, devisees, distributees, and legatees, should also be made defendants, especially when the deceased died seized of real estate.\textsuperscript{15}

All persons who are suing or threatening to sue the administrator, either at law or in Equity, should be made defendants, and if any suits, or threatened suits, are vexatious or liable to be costly or oppressive, the facts should be fully set forth in the bill, and an injunction should be prayed against the commencement or prosecution of all suits against the estate.\textsuperscript{16}

§ 999. \textbf{Form of Bill.}—The form of the bill is substantially the same, whether filed by an administrator or executor, or by a creditor.\textsuperscript{17} The following form will serve as a precedent:

\textbf{BILL TO WIND UP AN INSOLVENT ESTATE.}

To the Hon. Andrew Allison, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court, at Nashville:

\textbf{vs.}

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That William Smith, a citizen of Davidson county, died on the 2d day of February, 1890, intestate, and on the first Monday of March, 1890, complainant was duly appointed by the County Court of said county, and duly qualified, to administer upon his estate. Nancy Smith is the widow, and Sarah Smith and Thomas Smith are the only heirs of said decedent. The said widow has had duly assigned to her a year's support, the exempt personality, and homestead, and dower.

II. The assets of said estate, real and personal, subject to the decedent's debts, exceed one thousand dollars in value, but are insufficient to pay the decedent's debts and the costs of administration, according to complainant's information and belief; and he has accordingly reported the insolvency of the estate to said County Court. A certified copy of said report of insolvency is herewith filed as a part of this bill, marked A.

\textsuperscript{11} The bill will not lie until after the suggestion of insolvency to the County Court, or its Clerk. Campbell \textit{v.} Bryant, 2 Shan. Cas., 146.

\textsuperscript{12} Code, $ 3367.

\textsuperscript{13} It would seem from a scrutiny of the statute that one of its objects was to save something for the widow, heirs, and legatees or distributees, out of the wreck that would probably result from many suits against the administrator, and from the loose methods of administration prevalent in the County Court. It is in this view that the administrator may sue in behalf of the widow, heirs, and legatees or distributees, and thus befriend them.

\textsuperscript{14} Code, $ 3367.

\textsuperscript{15} Code, §§ 2379-2380.

\textsuperscript{16} Code, $ 2383. One of the main objects and benefits of this proceeding is the saving of the costs incident to a multiplicity of suits; and consequently, all suits commenced or threatened should be enjoined.

\textsuperscript{17} If the bill is filed by a creditor, its caption would be in the following form:

\textbf{CAPTION OF A CREDITOR'S BILL.}

\textbf{John Jones, a resident of Davidson County, who sues in behalf of himself and all other creditors of, and persons interested in, the estate of William Smith, deceased, complainant,}

\textbf{vs.}

\textbf{John Smith, the administratrix, Nancy Smith, the widow, Sarah Smith and Thomas Smith, the heirs and distributees of said William Smith, Henry Stokes, Thomas Johnston, Robert Moore, and George Brown, all residents of Davidson county, defendants.}

It would be well for the creditor to show why he filed the bill, instead of waiting for the administrator to file it; this, however, is not necessary. If the administrator is too slow, or incompetent, or in collusion with any creditor or heir, or is otherwise remiss in the discharge of his trust, it would be proper for any creditor to file the bill, without waiting for the administrator to do so.
III.

The following debts complainant believes to be justly owing by said estate:

1. A judgment against the decedent in favor of the defendant, John Jones, rendered July 2, 1889, by the Circuit Court of Davidson county, amounting to nine hundred and eighteen dollars debt, and forty-two dollars costs.

2. A note of hand for six hundred dollars, executed by the decedent on June 12, 1889, to the defendant, Henry Stokes, bearing interest from date, and one year after date.

3. An account for one hundred dollars by Dr. Thomas Johnson for medical and professional services rendered the decedent in the years 1889 and 1890.

4. There are other claims against said estate for various minor amounts, believed to be just, the largest of which are the following: (1) Thomas Cook, (account,) $10.00; George Dalton, (account,) $8.00; Samuel Long, (note,) $12.00; and Edmund Gray, (account,) $42.00.

The defendant, Robert Moore, has brought suit against complainant in the Circuit Court of Davidson county for five thousand dollars, which the said Moore claims the estate owes him for a breach of contract by the decedent. Complainant believes said claim is unjust. Said Moore has had a subpoena issued for a large number of witnesses, and if he obtains even a small recovery, the costs will probably be very great.

The defendant, George Brown, claims that the decedent owes him a large balance on a settlement made between them as partners two years ago, and he threatens to bring a suit to enforce his claim. The decedent stated on his death-bed that he owed said Brown nothing, and complainant believes such to be the fact.

There are several other persons who assert that they have claims against said estate, some of which may be just, but complainant has no means of ascertaining their correctness, except by having them duly established by proof before the Master, in your Honor's Court.

The personal estate of said William Smith, consists of about six hundred and eighteen dollars, the proceeds of a small stock of merchandise, of notes, and accounts, and of some horses, and cattle, and other property converted into money by complainant, a full inventory of all which has been filed in said County Court. The real estate of which he died seized and possessed consists of (1) one house and lot, No. 46, on John street, Nashville, worth about fifteen hundred dollars, and which has been assigned as homestead and dower to his widow; (2) and a lot No. 216, on Sanders street, Nashville, worth about fifteen hundred dollars. The deeds to said two lots are herewith filed as exhibits to this bill, marked B and C, and will be read at the hearing.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1. That all those named as defendants in the caption be made such by service of subpoena, but that no copy of the bill be issued, unless expressly ordered by your Honor. That an abstract of the bill be made out by the Clerk and Master, and be made known to such of the defendants as your Honor may require; but answer under oath is waived as to each of the defendants.

2. That the administration of said estate be transferred from the County Court of Davidson county to this Court; and to this end that all necessary references be ordered, and all proper accounts be taken, and proper distribution of the estate be made among those entitled.

3. That all further proceedings in reference to the administration of said estate in the said County Court be enjoined; that the commencement or prosecution of all suits at law, and of all other suits in Equity against complainant be enjoined; that the defendant Robert Moore be specially enjoined from further prosecuting his said suit at law against complainant; and that the defendant George Brown be enjoined from bringing any suit against complainant in reference to said estate.

4. That all persons, defendants included, having claims against said estate be required to present and substantiate them in this cause by legal proof before the Master within such time as your Honor may order, or be forever barred.

5. That said real estate be sold, subject to the widow's homestead and dower rights, and the proceeds thereof, as well as the proceeds of the personal estate of the decedent, be applied in due course of administration, and paid out to those thereunto legally entitled; and that proper allowance be made complainant for his services as administrator; and that proper allowance be made his Solicitors for their services in this cause.

6. And that complainant, and the widow and heirs of the decedent have such other and further and better relief as they or any of them may be entitled to, under the pleadings and proofs in this cause.

This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

JOHN M. LEA, Solicitor.
The bill should be sworn to, as it both seeks preliminary injunctive relief, and transfers the jurisdiction of the cause.

§ 1000. Proceedings on Bill, at Chambers.—If the Court be not in session when the bill is filed, it must be presented to the Chancellor, at Chambers, for his action. If he thinks a copy of the bill should be issued, he will so order; and will designate such of the defendants as shall be served with process.\(^\text{26}\) He will, also, order proper publication to be made.\(^\text{27}\) If any suits have been instituted, or are threatened against the administrator, the Chancellor may join them, or make other orders in reference to them in his discretion, having in view the rights of the parties suing, as well as the interest of the estate.\(^\text{28}\)

The following form for a fiat would be adapted to the bill in the preceding section.

CHANCELLOR’S FLAT ON AN INSOLVENT ESTATE.

To the Clerk and Master at Nashville:

File the foregoing bill; issue abstract of the bill and subpoena, to be served on all named as defendants in the caption of the bill. Make publication in the Nashville Banner for four weeks, notifying all creditors of William Smith, deceased, and all other persons interested in his estate, to come forward and exhibit their demands, and have themselves made parties to the bill, within the time prescribed by law.\(^\text{29}\) Issue an injunction against Robert Moore and George Brown as prayed in the bill, without bond therefor.

ABSTRACT OF BILL.

John Smith, admr., &c.,

Nancy Smith, et al.

\(\textit{vs.}\)

Abstract of the Bill. No. 7163.

The bill in this cause is filed against the widow, heirs, and creditors, of William Smith, deceased, and alleges:

1. That complainant is the administrator, that Nancy Smith is the widow, and that Sarah and Thomas Smith are the only heirs of said William Smith. That the year's support, the exempt property, homestead, and dower, have all been set apart to the widow.

2. That the assets of the estate exceed $1,000; but that the estate is insolvent, and has been so reported to the County Court.

3. That the estate owes the following debts: (1) John Jones, $918.00 debt, and $42 costs, on a judgment; (2) Henry Streets, $500 on a note; (3) Dr. Thomas Johnson, $100 on an account; and (4) other smaller amounts to various other parties.

4. That Robt. Moore has brought suit in the Circuit Court of Davidson county against the estate for $5,000 on an alleged breach of contract, believed to be unjust.

5. That George Brown is threatening to sue the estate for an alleged balance due him as a partner of the deceased.

6. That there are other persons asserting claims against said estate.

7. That the personal estate of the decedent amounts to about $518; and his real estate consists of two lots in Nashville, worth about $1,500 each, one of which, No. 46 John street, has been assigned the widow as homestead and dower; the other, No. 216 Sanders street.

8. The bill makes all said persons defendants, waives their answers under oath; and prays to have said estate administered in Chancery as an insolvent estate; and to have all suits against the administrator enjoined, especially the said suit of Robt. Moore, and the threatened suit by George Brown.

[Signed] and duly sworn to by the complainant.

\(\text{29}\) Code, §§ 2370-2371; 2376. The publication notice sometimes requires all claims to be filed within six months, or be barred. But there is no law authorizing such a procedure. If, however, the funds have all been distributed before a creditor comes forward, he would be forced to compel those who had received the funds to contribute to his just pro rata. Creditors may present their claims within the time prescribed by law. Code, § 2376; that is, within the ordinary time for suits against administrators. See, Code, §§ 2393-2393.

The reason why creditors and claimants are excluded, unless they come in within a limited time, is, because, (1) otherwise, the Court would not know how to distribute the fund; and (2) those who are vigilant should not be kept out of their rights by the laches of the negligent. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1204-1205, notes. A creditor who comes in after a distribution may sue those who have drawn out the fund for his pro rata. An executor, administrator, trustee, or Clerk of Court, who has paid out such funds, under the order of the Court, cannot, however, be held personally liable for any funds by them so paid or distributed. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1206-1207.

it is to be filed, (3) will state the amount and character of the claim, and how evidenced, and (4) will pray for leave to petitioner to file the petition, to become a party to the cause, and to prove his claim and to have it allowed, and paid out of the assets of the estate. If the petitioner has any lien on the property sought to be sold, entitling him to priority of satisfaction, or has any equity superior to those of the general creditors, he should set it forth in his petition, with due precision and particularity along with the written evidences thereof, if any. The petitioner should, also, offer to contribute to the expenses of the suit, in case the expenses cannot be paid out of the funds sought to be reached.

The following form will show the character of such a petition:

PETITION BY A CREDITOR TO BECOME A PARTY.

John Smith, admr., &c.,

vs.

Nancy Smith, et al.

To the Hon. Andrew Allison, Chancellor:

Your petitioner, Robert Roe, a resident of Nashville, Davidson county, respectfully swears to the Court:

I.

That William Smith, deceased, complainant's intestate, died justly indebted to him in the sum of one thousand dollars, evidenced by a note of hand, dated Aug. 3, 1889, due one day after date, which, with interest, is wholly due and unpaid. If the claim is based on account, or is for work and labor, or for services, or for goods or chattels, or for any other matter, so state, and specify it fully and particularly, giving its amount and date.

II.

Your petitioner would have sued the complainant as administrator of said William Smith, deceased, had he not been restrained from so doing by the pendency of this suit, and your Honor's injunction. Petitioner is, therefore, constrained to pray your Honor to allow him to become a party to this cause, to the end that he may prove his said debt, and have a decree for the amount thereof, and have it paid out of the assets to be administered in this cause. He files said note as a part of this petition, and marks it A.

III.

Your petitioner would further show that said note was given by said William Smith as evidence of the amount he owed your petitioner as part of the purchase price of the house and lot No. 216 Sanders street, Nashville, sought to be sold in this cause; and to secure the payment of said note, a lien was expressly retained on the face of the deed executed by petitioner to said William Smith, for said house and lot, as will be seen by reference to said deed, now on file in this cause, and marked Exhibit C to complainant's bill. Petitioner, therefore, claims a prior and superior lien and equity to the proceeds of said house and lot, and prays your Honor to decree him satisfaction in full in preference to the general creditors of said estate. If the petitioner has any right or claim to priority of satisfaction based on any contract, or statutory lien, or any attachment or judgment lien, so specifically show, giving the facts in full, and praying to have his priority of satisfaction decreed and enforced.

IV.

Petitioner prays your Honor to allow him to file this petition in this cause, and to become a party to the cause, for the purposes aforesaid; and for general relief.

And he hereby offers to contribute to the expenses of the suit, in any way your Honor may deem it equitable for him so to do.

John J. Vertrees, Solicitor.

[To be duly sworn to by the petitioner, or by his agent, or Solicitor, as shown in § 789, ante.]

The complainant's answer, under oath, to such a petition merely makes an issue, and has no probative force.

The Court may, by consent of parties, allow claims to be filed without the necessity of a formal petition. But even in such a case, unless the claim is itself evidenced by writing, it should be reduced to writing, specifying its date, character, and amount, and should be signed by the claimant, and sworn to. Such a claim could be put into the form of a proven account, thus:

INFORMAL CLAIM.

§ 1004. Taking the Account, and Final Distribution.—After the time allowed by law for creditors to have themselves made parties has expired, the Court will, on motion of any party, direct the Master to take and state an account of the assets and liabilities of the estate. The order of reference may be as follows:

ORDER FOR AN ACCOUNT OF ASSETS AND LIABILITIES.

John Smith, admr., &c.,

vs.

Nancy Smith, et al.

No. 7163.

In this cause, on motion of the complainant’s Solicitor, it is ordered by the Court that the Master report to the next term of the Court:

I. What assets, real and personal, William Smith died seized and possessed of, specifying the main items thereof, and describing the real estate fully.

II. What personal assets came, or ought by due diligence to have come, to the hands of the administrator, specifying the main items thereof, and giving the total amount.

III. Whether the year’s support, the exempt personalty, and homestead and dower, have been duly set apart for the widow, and in what real estate, homestead and dower have been assigned, if assigned.

IV. What bona fide debts and charges against said estate have been paid by the administrator, if any; to what creditors paid, and the amount paid to each.

V. What bona fide debts and charges against said estate remain outstanding and unpaid, specifying each creditor, the amount due him, and the total amount.

VI. Whether there are probably any other bona fide debts against the estate outstanding and unpaid; and if so, in whose hands.

VII. The Master will report on any other matter that may be proper to enable the Court to properly distribute the assets, real and personal, of the decedent among those lawfully entitled thereto.

All other matters are reserved until the incoming of said report.

The Master will consider all claims presented by petition, or filed without petition by consent of the administrator, down to the closing of the account. Notice of all claims presented to the Master shall be given to the complainant, or his Solicitor, and if not admitted by him to be just, the claimant must substantiate them by legal proof, which shall be reduced to writing and filed. Notice of claims filed should, also, be given the Solicitors of the principal creditors; and they may contest a claim, even where admitted by the complainant to be just, and may except to the report allowing it.

Creditors whose debts are not due must become parties, and present their claims, or be barred; and, to save the bar, any creditor may present his claim to the Master in vacation, and apply to become a party. The report of the Master, and the exceptions thereto, and the proceedings thereon, and the decree to sell the realty, are substantially the same as in a suit to sell land to pay debts. The estate of the decedent having been all converted into money, and the total liabilities ascertained, a final decree is pronounced in substance as follows:

42 This will be two years and six months after qualification of the personal representative. The Court will not, ordinarily, delay a year longer for the benefit of non-resident creditors. Code, § 2372, is probably intended to warn non-residents to sue within the two years and six months, or run the risk of the estate being distributed before they do sue.

45 See, ante, §§ 994-996.
John Smith, admr., &c., } No. 7163.
Nancy Smith, et al. }

This cause, coming on this Jan. 12, 1891, before Chancellor Allison, to be further and finally heard upon the whole record in the cause, including the report of the Master, showing the various creditors, and the amounts due each, and the total amount for distribution among them, and the exceptions of the defendants, Robert Moore and George Brown, to the Master's report, filed Jan. 10, 1891; the Court, after due consideration of said exceptions, overruled each and all of said exceptions, and confirmed said report, and ordered it to be spread on the minutes, which is done in the words and figures following:

[Here copy it, in full.]

It is, therefore, adjudged and decreed by the Court, that the Master, after deducting from the funds in his hands all the costs of the cause, and after paying John M. Lea, Esq., a fee of five hundred dollars for his services in the cause, will distribute the balance of said funds pro rata among the creditors, as set out in his said report of Jan. 10, 1891, hereinabove copied, and made part of this decree.

The proceeds of the sale should be disbursed by the Clerk and Master under the order of the Court, and not by the administrator. If the estate should prove to be solvent, and there be a surplus after paying the debts and costs, the Court will distribute this surplus among those entitled, taking refunding bonds, if necessary.

46 If the report is voluminous, the Court should order it to be recorded in the Insolvent Book. Code, §§ 2392-2393.

§ 1005. Suits in Cases Where no Original Process Can be Executed.

§ 1006. Suits in Cases Where the Demand is Purely of an Equitable Nature.

§ 1005. Suits in Cases Where no Original Process¹ Can be Executed.—The Code provides that in all cases (1) where personal service of process cannot be made at law, and where no original attachment at law will lie, and no judgment at law can be obtained; and, also, (2) in cases where the demand is purely of an equitable nature, the Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to subject legal and equitable interests in every kind of property,² except property held in trust for the defendant, when the trust has been created by, or the property so held has proceeded from some person other than the defendant himself, and the trust is declared by will duly recorded, or deed duly registered.³

In the first class of cases above mentioned, (where no judgment can be obtained at law,) the following facts must all co-exist, and must all be specifically alleged in the bill:

1. No Personal Service of Process Can be Made at Law. This must arise either from the non-residence of the defendant, or from some of the other causes mentioned in the Code where personal service of process cannot be made at law.⁴

2. No Original Attachment at Law Will Lie.⁵ This, of course, must arise from the fact that the defendant has no property liable to levy at law. He may have equitable interests in property, but these cannot be levied on at law.

3. No Judgment Can be Obtained at Law. This results, of course, from the other two facts above set out. For, if no process can be served either on the defendant’s person or on his property, a Court of law would have no jurisdiction to render a judgment against him.⁶

§ 1006. Suits where the Demand is Purely of an Equitable Nature.—These comprise the second class of cases named in the Code section, (4287,,) now being considered.⁷ In this class are included none of the essentials specified in the preceding section; all that is necessary to give the Court jurisdiction, prima facie, is to allege such a state of facts as to show that the demand is purely of an equitable nature, that is, a demand not cognizable in a Court of common law, but cognizable in a Court of Equity only. This class of cases includes all those heretofore enumerated in treating of the exclusive and inherent jurisdiction of the Chancery Court,\(^8\) wherein the Circuit Courts have no concurrent jurisdiction.\(^9\)

§ 1007. Frame of Bills where Judgments at Law Cannot be Obtained.—In drawing a bill in the first class of cases above mentioned, care should be taken to show that complainant has a just claim against the defendant, giving its nature with particularity and preciseness, so that the Court may see that the claim is a just one; and, also, so that, on a pro confesso a final decree may be pronounced. The draughtsman should then show that the complainant has not been able to recover a judgment at law against the defendant because the latter was not in reach of process, and had no property liable to attachment at law; and that therefore complainant has no remedy except in the Chancery Court. The bill should then set forth the equitable interests owned by the defendant, such as: 1, a mortgage; 2, a vendor's lien; 3, a mechanics’ or other statutory lien; 4, an interest in a partnership; 5, an interest in land bought in another's name with the defendant's money; 6, a debt due but that cannot be realized until the debtor's assets have been marshalled; 7, property in another's name but belonging in Equity to the defendant; 8, property held in trust for the benefit and enjoyment of the defendant on an agreement in parol; 9, property held in trust for the defendant under a will not recorded or under a deed not registered; 10, property conveyed to another by the defendant in fraud of his creditors; 11, property of defendant devised to another in fraud of complainant; and 12, any other property interest, or estate, of the defendant visible to the eye of Equity, but hidden from the sight of the law by the veils of form, or concealed under the cloaks of fraud.\(^10\) These interests should be as fully described and as definitely located as possible, and the names of the persons given who have the possession of them, and the legal title, or ostensible legal title. The bill should make all such persons defendants, and, if deemed advisable, they should be compelled to set forth and discover the nature, location and value of any and all property in their custody or control, or within their knowledge, or, in the custody or control of any other person, belonging to the defendant debtor, or in which he has any interest or concern. An attachment should be prayed against all of the defendant debtor's property, legal as well as equitable, and especially against the property described in the bill; and all of the defendants should be enjoined from selling, transferring, encumbering, concealing, or in any way disposing of the property described, or of any other property, legal or equitable, to which the defendant debtor has any title or interest, or has the benefit or use of.

§ 1008. Form of Bill where Judgment at Law Cannot be Obtained.—The draughtsman should keep in mind the essentials of the bill as stated in the preceding section, and also what is said about the consideration of relations\(^11\) in drawing a bill. The following general form will aid him in the class of cases it belongs to:

BILL WHERE JUDGMENT AT LAW CANNOT BE OBTAINED.

§ 1009. Suits to Set Aside Fraudulent Conveyances.—The law favors creditors. The Constitution has established Courts for the benefit of those who have been injured in person, property, or character;1 and the Legislature has enacted many laws to enable complainants to obtain redress for injuries done or rights withheld, and to have relief decreed to them, according to right and justice. All of a debtor's property, real and personal, excepting such as is specially exempted by statute, is, in the eye of the law, a fund for the benefit of his creditors. This fund he is not allowed to give away to the injury of those to whom he is indebted, for the law requires every man to be just before it permits him to be generous, honesty being deemed a greater virtue than generosity, especially when that generosity is at another's expense.2 Neither does the law

1 Const. of Tenn., Art. I, § 17.
2 It is a fraud in law and dishonest in morals, for a man to give to others what is required to pay his debts. The very property he gives away may have been directly or indirectly purchased with the money he owes; or the debt he owes may have been contracted on the faith of that property being a means of its payment. While much has been said and written, in and out of the Courts, about the capacity of the creditor class, it is certain that creditors, as a rule, are more slow in collecting than debtors are swift in paying; and, as a rule, creditors invent no allow a debtor to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors by making conveyances, or suffering judgments, or by putting his property out of their reach, or by covering it up, by sham deeds or other colorable transactions, or by resorting to any other device. The law makes all such conveyances, judgments, transactions and other devices utterly void, except (1) as against the fraudulent debtor himself, and (2) as against an innocent purchaser from him, or from his assignee. Fraudulent conveyances are void, not only as to existing creditors, but also, as to subsequent creditors. Any one is a creditor within the meaning of the statute who has a just right of recovery, whether such right be based on contract or on a tort, or be reduced to a judgment or not. But in order to invalidate a transfer for a valuable consideration, it must be shown that it was made with a fraudulent intent on the part of the debtor, and that the grantee had notice of this intent, and participated in it.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE

§ 1010. Ordinary Badges of Fraud.—Inasmuch as frauds are generally secret, and have to be tracked by the foot-prints, marks and signs made by the perpetrators, and discovered by the light of the attending facts and circumstances, these evidences are termed “badges of fraud.” The most common badges are the following: 1. The fact that the debtor is embarrassed; 2, that a suit is pending or threatened; 3, that he transfers all of his property; 4, the transfer secretly or hurriedly made; 5, false recitals of consideration or other matters in the deed; 6, giving an absolute deed as a mere security; 7, inadequacy of actual consideration; 8, unusually long credit given to the vendee; 9, the retention of the possession of property conveyed; 10, the enjoyment of the use, benefit, rents, proceeds, or other profits of the property conveyed; 11, acts and honest which the law justly pronounces fraudulent and conceals but is not, therefore, to escape from the consequences of such an act. The law must have a more certain standard of measuring a man’s intentions than each individual’s varying and capricious notions of right and wrong. Whatever a man’s opinions of his own acts may be, there are certain rules, founded in experience and established by law, which define the validity of acts done under the statute; and if these rules are transgressed, the transfers are void, without regard to the opinions of the parties. Bump on Fraud Conv. 25. A creditor’s evidence as to his intent is not regarded as anything more than an expression of his opinion as to the character of the transaction, and, unless supported by other evidence, is entitled to but little weight. Ibid. 593-594. If the question of fraudulent intent could be determined by the parties, the statute might as well be repealed. No man can be the judge of his own case: it is for the jury or the Chancellor, under the law and facts of the case, to judge of the intent of the parties. The parties may admit that they made a conveyance to defraud creditors, and yet, if no creditor was, in fact, defrauded, the conveyance would be good; whereas, unless supported by other evidence, that a particular conveyance was made to defraud creditors, and yet, if the effect of such a conveyance was to hinder or delay a fraudulent creditor, the conveyance would be fraudulent. It is an unnecessary, and often a cruel strain of a defendant’s conscience for his Solicitor to ask him whether the conveyance in question was made, or taken, with any intent to hinder, delay, or defraud, any creditor. See, ante, § 448.

8 Bump on Fraud Conv., 31: 2 Meigs’ Dig., § 1522; Waite on Fraud Conv., §§ 224-242. A “badge of fraud” is any fact that throws a suspicion on the transaction and calls for an explanation. Ibid.
§ 1011. When Fraud Will be Presumed.—A Court of Equity will not presume fraud in the absence of any proof on which to found the presumption; but when inculpatory facts are proved, which are termed badges, or signs, of fraud, the Court will presume its existence. In finding fraud a Court of Equity will act on a lower degree of proof than what is required in a Court of law. Fraud will be presumed in the following cases:

1. Where the conveyance is voluntary, that is without a valuable consideration, and creditors are hindered or defrauded by such conveyance, whatever be the real intent of the debtor.

2. Where the debtor remains in possession of personality after an absolute conveyance thereof; but, in this case, the presumption may be rebutted.

3. Where the assignment reserves a benefit to the assignor; or the assignor is allowed to retain the possession of the property.

4. Where the property assigned is consumable in use, and the assignment gives the debtor the right to use it.

5. Where the assignment keeps the proceeds of the property away from the creditors for a period exceeding the law’s delay.

6. Where fictitious debts are secured by the deed of assignment.

7. Where the deed of trust requires creditors to receive in full, or get nothing.

8. Where the consideration of an absolute conveyance is grossly inadequate.

If the complainant’s evidence place the conveyance attached under a great suspicion of fraud, the burden is then cast on the vendee to prove the bona fides of the transaction, or, at least, remove the suspicion. And if the consideration is impeached by the bill, and the proof casts suspicion upon it, the burden is then on the vendee to show that a valid consideration was paid.

§ 1012. Conveyances when Fraudulent in Law.—When the consideration is greatly inadequate, or was obtained under suspicious circumstances, but actual fraud is not shown, the Court will consider the conveyance voluntary to the extent of the value of the property in excess of the price paid, and will declare such conveyance fraudulent in law, and treat it as a mere security for the consideration actually paid. But where fraud is proved the conveyance will not be permitted to stand as security for the money paid.

§ 1013. Frame of Bill to Set Aside a Fraudulent Conveyance.—Where a debtor has made any conveyance, or suffered any judgment, or resorted to any other device, to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, or any of them; or, where he has given away any of his property, whether fraudulently or otherwise, the proper remedy is by a bill in the Chancery Court, against the debtor and the fraudulent grantee, or bargainee, or the voluntary grantee, or donee, or their representatives or assigns. The bill in such a case should:

1. Set out the facts, showing that the vendor or donor is indebted to the complainant, the date and amount of such indebtedness, and how evidenced. If the debt be evidenced by a note, or other writing, it should be exhibited to the bill, and filed with it.

2. It should, also, show what property said vendor or donor had, describing and locating it, and show to whom it has been transferred, how and when; and any and all inequitable or illegal facts or circumstances connected with such transfer, and invalidating the same.

3. The bill should positively aver and charge that such transfer was for the purpose of hindering, or delaying, or defrauding the complainant, or other creditor or creditors of the vendor or donor; and should allege that the vendee or donee had knowledge of such purpose, or that he paid nothing for the property, or both.

4. The bill should pray for an attachment to impound the property, and an injunction to restrain the conveyee from transferring it; and should, also, pray to have the sale, transfer or gift set aside, and the property subjected to the satisfaction of the complainant's debt; and for general relief.

The bill may be filed for the benefit of the complainant alone, or he may file it in behalf of himself and of all the other creditors of the fraudulent vendor. The complainant will, however, ordinarily file the bill for his own exclusive benefit, unless the property is of value sufficient to pay all of the debts, or unless the litigation threatens to be very onerous, and the complainant desires all the help he can get. So any number of creditors may join as complainants in one bill, each setting forth his separate claim in a separate paragraph. But where such bill must be sworn to, each of such co-complainants, or his agent or Solicitor, must verify it.

A bill may be filed to set aside a fraudulent conveyance made by a deceased debtor whose estate is insolvent. In such a case, however, it must be a general creditors' bill; and it must allege that the insolvency of the decedent's estate has been suggested to the County Court, or to its Clerk.

§ 1014. Form of Bill to Set Aside a Fraudulent Conveyance.—The substance of the bill, as given in the preceding section, and the following form, will enable the draftsman to frame a bill for any ordinary case of fraudulent or voluntary conveyance.

BILL TO SET ASIDE A FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

To the Hon. William B. Staley, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Knoxville.
John Doe, a resident of Knox county, complainant,
Richard Roe and Roland Roe, both residents of Knox county, defendants.

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

That the defendant, Richard Roe, is justly indebted to him in the sum of one thousand dollars, evidenced by a note of hand, dated January 1, 1880, and due one day after the date thereof, which note, with the accrued interest, is wholly unpaid. [If the indebtedness is evidenced by a judgment, or by any writing, so state. Show the amount, date, and character of the debt, and any special equities attaching to it, if any.]

The said Richard Roe being thus indebted to complainant, and intending or contriving not

1. Complainant A respectfully shows to the Court that the defendant, C, is justly indebted to him in the sum of — dollars, evidenced, &c.
2. Complainant B respectfully shows to the Court that the defendant, C, is justly indebted to him in the sum of — dollars, evidenced, &c.
3. All of the complainants will join in charging the fraud.
27 Code, § 3395; Boxly v. McKay, 4 Sneed, 286. See, ante, § 997, note 4.
28 If the bill is filed in behalf of all the creditors, the caption should so show; thus:
John Doe, a resident of Knox county, who sues for himself and all the other creditors of Richard Roe, (the grantor or donor), complainant,
Richard Roe, (the fraudulent or voluntary grantor or donor) and Roland Roe, (the fraudulent or voluntary grantee or donee) both residents of Knox county, defendants.

The complainant, who sues in behalf of himself and all the other creditors of the defendant, Richard Roe, respectfully shows to the Court:
to pay said debt, did, on August 6, 1881, convey to his co-defendant, Roland Roe, who is, also, his brother, [show the relationship of the parties, if any] the following tract of land in the 10th civil district of Knox county: [Describe it by metes and bounds, or, at least, so as to fully identify it.29] This conveyance was made and contrived of fraud, covin, collusion, and guile, to the intent and purpose to delay, hinder, and defraud, the creditors of said Richard Roe of their just and lawful debts;30 and especially to delay, hinder, and defraud, complainant of his said debt.

III.

The defendant, Roland Roe, took said conveyance from his co-defendant, well knowing the fraudulent purpose and character thereof, and with intent to aid said Richard Roe to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors, especially complainant, of their just debts. And complainant avers that said conveyance was collusively made; and that there is a secret agreement between the defendants whereunder the said Roland Roe is to hold said land in secret trust and for the benefit of his co-defendant, Richard Roe. [If there be anything showing such a trust, or showing any collusion between the parties, or showing that the grantor is to have any benefit, or to have any rents or profits, or to retain the possession, state these facts fully and particularly.]

IV.

Said conveyance recites that it was made on the consideration of one thousand dollars in hand paid. Complainant charges that this recital is absolutely false, that no cash was paid at all; and that if any was pretended to be paid it was a mere device in furtherance of the covin, collusion, and fraud whereby the defendants were contriving to hinder and delay complainant. [If any relationship, or business connection, or special confidence, existed between the parties, state the facts. Show, also, any facts, or circumstances, that impeach the recitals of the deed as to the payment of the alleged consideration.]

V.

The premises considered, the complainant prays:31

1st. That those named as defendants in the caption be made such by the issuance and service of all proper process requiring them to answer this bill; but their answer on oath is waived.

2d. That the complainant may have a decree against the defendant, Richard Roe, for the amount due him as hereinafter shown, principal and interest, and for the costs of this suit; [and, if the suit is in behalf of the other creditors, then add: and that all the other creditors of the defendant, Richard Roe, who may come in under this proceeding and prove their debts, may have decrees against him for the amounts justly due them, respectively.]

3d. That said conveyance to the defendant Roland Roe be decreed to be fraudulent, null, and void, as against complainant, [and, if the suit is brought in behalf of all other creditors, then add: and as against all the other creditors of the defendant, Richard Roe:] and that said tract of land be sold on a credit of not less than six nor more than twenty-four months, and in bar of all equity or right of redemption; and the proceeds of said sale be applied to the satisfaction of the debt of complainant [and of all the other debts that may be proved by the other creditors of said Richard Roe, who may come in under this bill.]

4th. That all other creditors of said Richard Roe may be allowed to come in by petition, filed in vacation or in term, and prove their debts, and have a decree therefor. That this bill be sustained as a general creditors' bill; and that due notice be given by public advertisement that all of said creditors may become parties to this cause who desire to obtain the benefits of this proceeding. [If the suit is for the exclusive benefit of the complainant, this paragraph of the prayer will be omitted.]

5th. That to secure and impound said property, a writ of attachment be issued by fiat of your Honor, and be levied on said tract of land; and that an injunction, also, issue to inhibit and restrain the defendant Roland Roe from selling, encumbering, or in any other manner disposing of said property, or any part thereof. This is the first application for writs of attachment and injunction in this case.

6th. Complainant prays for all such other, further, and general relief as he [or the other creditors who may come in under this bill] may be entitled to on the facts as alleged and proved.

JAMES COMFORT, Solicitor.

WEBB & McCLUNG, of Counsel.

[The bill must be sworn to, as in §789, ante.]

The attachment in this case must issue on the fiat of a Judge or Chancellor, and cannot be issued by the Clerk and Master without.

§ 1015. Defences and Decrees in Suits to Set Aside Fraudulent Conveyances.

The usual defences are: 1. That the defendant does not owe the debt alleged; or 29 This description is important, as it gives complainant a lien upon the property specifically described, from the filing of the bill. Unless the property is specified, the lien will only date from the levy of the attachment.

30 It is well to follow the phraseology of the statute, even though somewhat stiff and antiquated. Code, § 1759.

31 If the suit is in behalf of all the other creditors of the fraudulent grantor, then say: The premises considered, the complainant, in behalf of himself and all the other creditors of Richard Roe, prays:
2. That it is barred by the statute of limitations; or 3, That it is based on a usurious consideration, or on some other illegal or immoral consideration; or 4. That it is without consideration in whole, or in part; or 5. That there was no fraud in the conveyance. The defendant may deny the alleged fraud in his answer. The decree, if for the complainant,
1. Should adjudge that the principal defendant, (the vendor,) is indebted to the complainant by reason of the facts alleged and proved, specifying the amount of the debt, principal and interest where it draws interest.
2. The decree should next adjudge that the conveyance complained of in the bill (describing the property, and, if land, giving its boundaries and location,) was made with intent to hinder and delay complainant in collecting the said debt and that the vendee defendant knew of this intent and aided therein, and that, therefore, such sale was fraudulent and void, as against complainant.
3. The decree should finally order the sale of the land, or other property, mentioned in the bill, describing the property if not already described in the decree, specifying the terms of the sale, and directing how the proceeds should be distributed.
4. If any property not described in the bill has been attached order its sale, also; and direct an execution to issue for any residue after the proceeds of the sale have been exhausted in satisfying the decree.

GENERAL FORM OF DECREE SETTING ASIDE A FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.
[For title of cause, commencement and recitals, see, ante, §§ 557.]

II.
That the defendant John Brown is justly indebted to the complainant in the sum of eight hundred and ten dollars, the principal and interest due on the note [or judgment, or account, or contract sued on, or otherwise. Specify the amount of debt the Court finds the defendant owes, and out of what arising.]

III.
That the defendant John Brown sold and conveyed to his co-defendant James Brown the tract of land described in the bill with intent to hinder and delay the complainant in collecting his said debt, the defendant James Brown well knowing the intent and purpose of the conveyance, and aiding therein, and that therefore such sale and conveyance is fraudulent, null and void as against complainant.

IV.
That said tract of land, to-wit: [Here describe it by metes and bounds and by location,] be sold on a credit of six and twelve months and in bar of the equity of redemption, the complainant so praying: that out of the proceeds of such sale, when confirmed, there be paid 1st, the costs of the cause; 2nd, the amount of the debt herein described to complainant and interest to date of payment, and 3rd, the balance, if any, to the defendant James Brown.
If, however, the proceeds of said sale should be insufficient to pay the costs of the cause, and the debt of complainant as herein decreed, an execution will issue against the defendant John Brown for the residue.

But if the complainant fail to establish the fraud he may have a decree for the amount of his claim. In such a case, however, he will be taxed with all the costs down to the decree.

§ 1016. Suit to Set Aside a General Assignment as Fraudulent.—If a general assignment for the benefit of creditors fails to comply with the statute, or gives the trustee an unreasonable time to close the trust and pay the creditors, it is fraudulent in law, and may be set aside. The following is the usual form of bill in such a case:

BILL ATTACKING A GENERAL ASSIGNMENT.
[For address and caption, see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]
Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.
That the defendant, Richard Roe, is justly indebted to him in the sum of two thousand dollars, and interest thereon from November 24, 1900: said indebtedness evidenced by a note of hand of that date, due one year after date with interest from date. No part of said note has ever been paid.

88 Templeton v. Mason, 23 Pick., 625.
89 Code, § 4292.
90 The bill should be filed against the grantor and grantee of the deed of assignment, and against all the beneficiaries named in said deed, complainant of course excepted, if a beneficiary. This bill is based on the three cases referred to in the following notes, and is an illustration of what can be done by a party who, in the words of Judge Neil, is "diligent and § 1017

Suits Where Execution Cannot Be Levied.

II.

That on October 3, 1902, said Richard Roe pretended to make a general assignment of all his property for the benefit of his creditors, the deed of assignment being made to the defendant Richard Fen. The other defendants and complainant are the creditors named in the bill. Said deed is hereto attached, marked A, and made a part of the bill.

III.

Complainant knows nothing of the validity or amounts of the alleged debts of Richard Roe to the defendant creditors, and if at any time in the progress of this suit it becomes necessary to have such validity and amounts established, complainant requires satisfactory proof thereof.

IV.

Complainant charges that said deed of assignment is fraudulent and void as against him.

1st. The description of the personal property sought to be conveyed is wholly insufficient, the language of the schedule being, "all notes and accounts due me," the grantor.

2d. The said schedule is not verified by the oath of the grantor, the words "sworn to and subscribed before me," the clerk, not being an affidavit.

3d. The delay required by said deed for converting the property conveyed into money is unreasonable and oppressive to complainant and the other creditors of said grantor and operates as a fraud upon them by hindering and delaying them in the collection of their debts.

If all three of said defects in said deed will more fully and at large appear by reference to said deed which is made a part of the bill.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [etc.; see, ante, §§ 158; 164.]

2d. That said deed of assignment be declared fraudulent and void, and that an injunction issue to prohibit the defendant, Richard Fen, as trustee or otherwise, from taking any steps under said deed, and from in any way meddling with the property in said deed or schedules mentioned, or described.

3d. That an attachment issue and be levied upon all of said property, and especially upon the leasehold interest in the storehouse, and upon the goods, wares and merchandise, notes and accounts, in said deed of assignment and said schedules mentioned, or described.

4th. That a receiver be appointed to take charge of all said property, and convert the same into cash as rapidly as may be prudent.

5th. That complainant be given a decree for the amount due him on said note, principal and interest, and that enough of the proceeds of said property be applied to satisfy the same and the costs of the cause.

6th. That complainant have such other and further relief as he may be entitled to.

This is the first application for an injunction, attachment or receiver in this case.

T. L. Carty, Solicitor.

§ 1017. Some Practical Suggestions in Suits to Set Aside Fraudulent Conveyances.—If the defendant vendor and vendee do not become witness in their own behalf, the complainant may be compelled to make witnesses of them himself. In either event, make them specify when, where and from whom the vendee got the money to make the payments for the land, and what the vendor has done with the money by him so received. Make them show the place, day and hour when the writings were drawn, and signed and who were present. Prove by them that the vendee knew the vendor was in debt, especially to complainant, and was liable to be sued. Ask them in reference to conversations between them, or talk by either of them, in reference to the vendor's debts, and his liability to the sued. Prove the existence of as many badges of fraud as possible by themselves, or by other witnesses. Show that the vendee was in a situation to know of his vendor's indebtedness.

If the defence is fabricated, the chances are that the defendants in their depositions will contradict each other, or the statements in their answers. Be particular in examining them to question them closely as to the time, place and circumstances of the conveyance; do this at the very outset of their examination and repeat it at the very close; and note inconsistencies, if any.

§ 1018. Suits in Aid of a Judgment Creditor where No Fraud is Alleged.
The Code gives the Chancery Courts exclusive jurisdiction to aid a creditor by judgment or decree, to subject the property of the defendant which cannot be 34 Scheiber v. Mundinger, 2 Pick., 674.

36 Bank v. Martin, 12 Pick., 1.
37 See, ante, § 1010.
reached by execution, to the satisfaction of the judgment or decree, under the provisions of the Code. This is a comprehensive and far reaching statute, and includes all manner of judgments and decrees for money, no matter by what Court rendered or whether the amount exceeds fifty dollars or not, and subjects to their satisfaction all property of the defendant that cannot be levied on under an execution; and it is not necessary to have an execution issued, and returned "nulla bona," before filing the bill, nor is it necessary to charge in the bill that the defendant has fraudulently transferred or concealed his property, or that a discovery is necessary.

The complainant has a lien upon the equitable interest of the defendant in real estate or other property from the filing of the bill; but he may acquire a lien from the rendition of the judgment or decree by causing a memorandum thereof, within sixty days from its rendition, to be registered as provided in Code sections 2984, 2985, and by filing his bill within thirty days from the return of the execution unsatisfied.

If the property reached by the bill is insufficient to satisfy complainant’s demand, and the defendant is receiving the rents but fails to pay the taxes, a receiver may be appointed.

The character of the property that may be reached under this section is described in another section.

A bill will not lie under Code, § 4282, in behalf of a judgment creditor to reach property that may be levied on at law, for, having a judgment already, he can have an execution on it. Nor will it lie in behalf of a complainant who has no judgment, on the sole ground that the defendant is insolvent and complainant fears he may sell or encumber what property he has.

The following is a form of a bill under this section:

BILL BY A JUDGMENT CREDITOR.

For address and commencement, see, ante, §§ 156; 164.

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That on May 1, 1890, he recovered a judgment in the Circuit Court of McMinn county against the defendant, Richard Roe, for five hundred and ten dollars, and costs of suit. [On this judgment an execution issued, and was returned June 10, 1890, "no property found."

This allegation is unnecessary, except in cases specified in Code, §§ 2984-2986.]

II.

That the defendant, Richard Roe, has no property subject to execution at law; but on April 12, 1889, he conveyed by registered deed to the defendant, Henry Pen, a tract of land in the 2d civil district of said county in trust to secure to him the payment of an alleged debt of four hundred dollars. Said tract of land is bounded as follows: [Give description: see, ante, § 172.] Said tract of land is well worth one thousand dollars.

III.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c., see, ante, §§ 158; 164.]

2d. That said tract of land be sold, 1st to satisfy whatever, if anything, may be due the defendant Henry Pen under said deed of trust; and 2d, that what balance of the proceeds of sale may remain be applied to satisfy complainant’s said judgment; that said sale be on a credit of twelve months and in bar of redemption.

3d. That complainant have such further and other relief as may be consistent with equity.

Geo. G. Williams, Solicitor.
§ 1019. When a Bill of Discovery Will Lie. The Code provides that a creditor whose execution has been returned unsatisfied in whole, or in part, may file a bill in Chancery against the defendant in the execution, and any other person or corporation, to compel the discovery of any property, including stocks, choses in action, or money due to such defendant, or held in trust for him, except when the trust has been created by, or the property so held has proceeded from some person other than the defendant himself, and the trust is declared by will duly recorded or deed duly registered.

To sustain such a bill the complainant must allege and prove: 1st, that he is a creditor by judgment or decree on which an execution has issued and been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part; 2d, that the defendant, (who is the judgment debtor,) has property legal or equitable, or both; and 3d, that this property has been so concealed that it can be reached only by aid of a discovery. Such a bill will not lie to reach property capable of being reached on an execution by levy or garnishment, nor money in the debtor's possession.

§ 1020. Character of the Discovery Enforced. The statute aims to aid the judgment creditor, to the utmost limit of the powers of a Chancery Court, in his efforts to ferret out the assets and estate of his debtor, and to uncover all receptacles of property and open all doors to deposits. And not only is the creditor authorized to search the conscience of the judgment debtor, and of any other person or corporation, by interrogatories in his bill, in order to ascertain what stocks, choses in action, money or other legal or equitable property, of the judgment debtor is in their possession, or under their control, or within their knowledge, including money, stocks, choses in action, or other property held in trust for him, but he may, also, take their depositions, or, if opportunity permit, cross-examine them to the uttermost to compel them to disclose all they may know, and to disgorge all they may have, pertinent to the relief sought by the bill.

Under Code sections 4283, 4284, 4285, the debtor defendant may be compelled to disclose what property in any way belongs to him, including stocks, choses in action, or money, due him or held in trust for him, with the exception above stated; and where such property is, and, if in another's possession, the name and place of residence of such person; and when the existence of any property is disclosed by the answer of the defendant or defendants, either in their answers to the bill or to interrogatories or questions propounded, the Court will compel the party in possession to surrender the same into the custody of the Court, and it will be subjected to the satisfaction of complainant's judgment or decree.

If any of the defendants fail or refuse to make full disclosures in answer to the bill, or to interrogatories or questions, or having made disclosures, or, the facts otherwise appearing, fail or refuse to surrender, or pay into Court, money, stocks, choses in action, or other property due or belonging to the debtor defendant, or held in trust for him, with the exception stated, or refuse to make all necessary transfers to pass the title or possession of such property, when duly ordered by the Court, the defendants so failing or refusing may be imprisoned by process of contempt until they comply. 4

§ 1021. Rights Acquired Under the Bill.—The complainant has a lien upon all of the judgment debtor's property from the filing of his bill, but he may acquire a lien from the rendition of his judgment or decree, by causing a memorandum thereof within sixty days from its rendition to be registered as provided in Code sections 2984-2985, and by filing his bill within thirty days from the return of the execution unsatisfied. 5

§ 1022. Frame of the Bill of Discovery.—As the object of the law is to compel the discovery of the judgment debtor's property and to prevent its transfer, payment or delivery to any other person, so the bill of complaint should be equally as vigorous and far-reaching. 6

The bill in such a case should contain the following averments and prayers:

1. It should commence by stating the recovery of the judgment on which the bill is founded. The name of the Court rendering the judgment, the names of the parties, the amount of the judgment, and its date, should all be set forth with substantial accuracy.

2. It should next show that an execution duly issued upon said judgment, specifying when and to the Sheriff of what county; and that said execution has been duly returned unsatisfied, in whole or in part. The very words of the return ought to be given; but this is not essential.

3. It should aver that the defendant has property, specifying it, and showing its character, amount, form, and whereabouts as nearly as possible, and if in the hands of third parties, so stating, and making such averments and charges in reference to such property, and to the possession or control thereof by any of the co-defendants, as the complainant is justified in making.

4. It must pray for process, and for a discovery of the property of the judgment debtor, and to subject the same to the satisfaction of the complainant's judgment, whether such property could be levied on or not. 7 The discovery called for should be of the most searching character probing the knowledge, memory and conscience of the defendants to the uttermost. If an injunction or an attachment, or both, are necessary and proper, they may be prayed for, also.

§ 1023. Form of the Bill of Discovery.—The subject of Bills of Discovery will hereafter be fully treated, and reference is made to the Chapter on the subject. 8

The following form will indicate the character of bill contemplated by the statute under consideration:

BILL OF DISCOVERY BY A JUDGMENT CREDITOR.

To the Honorable Oliver P. Temple, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Knoxville:

John Doe, a resident of Knox county, complainant,

Richard Roe, Robert Roe, John Smith, William Brown and Henry Jones,

all residents of Knox county, defendants.

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court: 9

I.

That at the January term, 1876, of the Circuit Court of Knox county, he recovered a judgment for five thousand dollars and costs of suit against the defendants, Richard Roe and Robert Roe, said Robert being the surety of said Richard on the note on which said judgment was based.

In February, 1876, an execution was duly issued, on said judgment, to the Sheriff of Knox

4 Cresswell v. Smith, 3 Lea, 688. This statute was intended to be efficacious, and there is no reason why the Court should not make it so. In a republic no one, not even a debtor, should be superior to the law. Let it not be said, De legibus non curat debitor.

Suits Where a Discovery Is Necessary.

Complainant charges and avers that the defendant Richard Roe, shortly before said judgment, was a merchant in the town of Knoxville, and had been doing a large business; and complainant charges and avers that many persons are indebted to him in various amounts, large and small; and that he holds many notes, due bills, accounts stated and open, county warrants, bonds, coupons, and various other securities and evidences of debt, to a large amount, and has goods, wares and merchandise, choses in action, and chattels, of various kinds and divers amounts, in his possession, or under the control or possession of others for his use, advantage or benefit, or subject to his order, or wherein he is in some manner beneficially interested; all of which property, debts, choses in action, and other estate, might and ought to be applied to the satisfaction of complainant's said judgment. [Specify any debts, choses in action, or other effects of the principal defendants due from, or in the hands of, the other defendants.]

Complainant further charges and avers that the other defendants John Smith, William Brown and Henry Jones, are indebted to said Richard and Robert, or to one of them, or have money, county warrants, notes of hand, due bills, accounts, trust deeds, mortgages, stock certificates, bonds, coupons, or other evidences of debt, or securities, or valuable papers, or property of some other kind, belonging to said Richard or said Robert, or to both; or subject to the order, or control, of either said Richard, or said Robert, or of both; or held for the benefit of one or the other of them, or of both; or in which the said Richard and Robert, one, both, or either, have some beneficial interest, or some right of use, enjoyment or profit, whether said property is held in the name of said Richard or Robert or of either of them, or in the name of any or all of the defendants or of any two or more of them, or held in any other manner or form. [If any of these defendants are known or believed to have any property of any kind belonging to their co-defendants, or held for their use or benefit, or to be in any way their debtor, trustee, bailee, agent, depositary or donee, as to any debts, effects, choses in action, interests or estates, of any kind, specify the supposed facts fully and particularly.]

And if the said Richard or Robert Roe have made any assignment or transfer of any of their property or effects, complainant charges and avers that such assignment or transfer is merely colorable, and made with a view and for the purpose of placing the same beyond the reach of complainant's said judgment and execution thereon, and of enabling the said Richard and the said Robert, one or both, to control and enjoy the same, and have the use, benefit, and proceeds thereof; and so it would appear if they would state and set forth when and to whom such transfer or assignment was made, and what was the kind, amount and value of the property, debts, choses in action, or effects so assigned or transferred, and what were the terms or conditions, express or implied, upon which such transfers or assignments were made, and what disposition has been made of the property so assigned or transferred, and in whose possession the same now is, or what has been done with the same, or the rents, proceeds, or income thereof. Complainant claims, and calls for, a full and complete discovery of all such property, debts, claims, effects, and things in action, belonging in any way to said Richard or Robert Roe, or to both; and of all agreements or understandings, express or implied, and of all trusts, whereby any property, debts, choses in action, or other effects, or the use, benefit, income, rents, issues, or profits thereof, are held for the use or benefit, or at the disposal, of said Richard or Robert, or of both; and of every assignment or transfer, bailment or pledge, gift or donation, which either or both of said last named defendants have, or have, made directly or indirectly of his or their property, debts, choses in action, or other effects, or of any part thereof, and of the person or persons to whom such assignment, transfer, bailment or pledge, gift or donation, has been made directly or indirectly, in whole or in part; the amount and value of the property, debts, choses in action, or other effects so assigned or transferred; and the trusts, conditions, limitations, agreements, or understandings, express or implied, from which such assignment, transfer, bailment, pledge, donation or gift, was made, and all the facts and circumstances relating thereto; and particularly what is the situation of said property, debts, choses in action, or other effects, assigned, transferred, delivered, pledged, donated or given away, directly or indirectly, at the time of the filing of this bill, and in the possession, or under the control of what persons the same is, at such filing. [If any specific facts, or supposed facts, are charged, identifying any particular chattel, debt, chose in action, or other property or estate, legal or equitable, of the principal defendants, call for a discovery in reference thereto.]

VII.
Complainant charges and avers that the defendants, John Smith, William Brown, and Henry Jones, have jointly or severally confederated and agreed, directly or indirectly, expressly or impliedly, to aid said Richard and Robert Roe, one or both, in covering up his or their property, effects, debts, choses in action, and other estate, and have themselves possessed or control, directly or indirectly, of some of the property, effects, debts, choses in action, and other estate of said Richard and Robert, or of one or the other of them; or that other persons hold some of said property, effects, debts, choses in action, stocks, monies, checks, bonds, county warrants, coupons, certificates, or evidences of property, debt, deposit, stock, or interest, in pledge or in bailment for the said Smith, Brown, and Jones, or for one or more of the others, therefore, the said Smith, Brown and Jones, one or more of them, hold the same by some agreement, trust, or understanding, express or implied, for said Richard or Robert Roe, or both of them. [Here specify any fact or facts complainant has reason to believe to be true, showing that any of the foregoing general charges are true.]

VIII.
The premises considered, complainant prays:
1st. That this subpoena to answer issue as to all of those named as defendants in the caption of this bill, and that they all be made parties defendant hereto, and be required to abide and perform your Honor's orders and decrees.
2d. That each of said defendants be required to answer this bill fully and particularly, upon his oath, by paragraph by paragraph, according to the best of his knowledge, remembrance, information, and belief; and that each of them be compelled to set forth and discover the nature, character, kind, amount, value, and whereabouts of all the property, debts, choses in action, effects, and other interests or estate of the said Richard and Robert Roe, or of either of them, whether in the hands of any of the defendants, or of any other person as bailee, pledgee, donee, trustee, lessee, mortgagee, or desository, direct or indirect.
3d. That each of said defendants, Richard Roe and Robert, answer fully and particularly to the best of their knowledge, remembrance, information, and belief, (1) whether they, or either of them, at the time of the filing of this bill, owned directly or indirectly any and what property, debts, notes, accounts, choses in action, county warrants, certificates of deposit, or of indebtedness, stocks, bonds, coupons, shares, or interests in any company or firm, corporation or incorporated, of any kind whatsoever; or (2) whether any and what person or persons, or company, or corporation, at the time of the filing of this bill, held for them, or for either of them, directly or indirectly, or as trustee, pledgee, bailee, or donee, any property, debts, notes, accounts, money, choses in action, checks, county warrants, certificates of deposit or of indebtedness, stocks, bonds, coupons, shares or interests in any firm, company or corporation, or other estate, or evidence thereof, of any kind or character whatsoever, and the amount and value thereof; or (3) whether they or either of them have, since the execution of said note, assigned, transferred, donated, given, pledged, bailed, or delivered to any and what person, firm, company, corporation, or partnership, any of his or their property or effects, money, choses in action, county warrants, accounts, claims, stocks, bonds, coupons, checks, certificates of stock, interest, deposit, pledge, bailment, gift or trust, or any other kind or evidence of property, or of the use, benefit or enjoyment thereof whatsoever; and when, to whom, for what purpose, and upon what terms, conditions, understandings, or agreements, verbal or written, express or implied, direct or indirect, such assignment, transfer, donation, gift, pledge, bailment, or delivery was made; and what has become of said property, effects, or estate; and whether they, the said Richard and Robert, or either of them, or any member of the family of either, or any person for either of them, or for any member of the family of either of them, since such transfer, assignment, donation, gift, pledge, bailment, or delivery, have received any of the benefits, or any of the rents, issues, income, interest, hire, or other profits of any of said property, effects, or estate, of any kind, character, or amount, or in any shape or form whatsoever, and the kind, amount, and value thereof.
4th. That each of the defendants, Smith, Brown, and Jones, answer fully and particularly to the best of their knowledge, remembrance, information, and belief, (1) whether they, or either of them, have in their possession, or under their control, or whether any other person, or persons, for them, or either of them, have in his, her, or their possession or control, as debtor, assignee, transferee, vendee, lessee, trustee, bailee, or donee, any property, money,
§ 1024 SUITS BY FOREIGN CREDITORS AGAINST FOREIGN DEBTORS.

Suits where a creditor has obtained judgment in another state, and has exhausted his legal remedy there.

§ 1025. When a Bill by a Foreign Creditor Will Lie Against a Foreign Debtor.—Under the Code, when a judgment has been recovered in another State against a resident of such State, and the creditor has exhausted his legal remedy, the real or personal property of the debtor in this State may be subjected to the satisfaction of such debt, by bill stating the facts under oath, and filed in the County in which the property is situated.¹

creditor without a judgment cannot maintain a bill against a non-resident debtor either under Code, § 4297, or under the general principles of Equity jurisdiction.

§ 1026. Frame of the Bill.—The bill should be drawn with great precision as the inclination of our Courts seems to be to construe the statute strictly.
The bill should open by declaring and reciting the judgment complainant has obtained against the defendant, and when, where, and for what amount obtained, and should aver that such judgment is unpaid, and in full force and effect; and that on said judgment an execution issued and was returned wholly unsatisfied, or satisfied only in part, as the case may be, giving the amount realized on the judgment, if anything, and giving the dates of the issuance and return of the execution.

If the property of the defendant is known it should be described so as to identify it, for this would operate as a lis pendens; and an attachment should be prayed for as further security.

The draughtsman should be careful to show that the defendant is a resident of the State in which the judgment was recovered, and that the complainant is a resident of the same state.

If the bill shows that all of the defendant's property in the State of his residence has gone into the hands of a receiver, or that the defendant is insolvent, the issuance and return nulla bona of an execution become unnecessary, and the bill may be filed at once.

It is not necessary for the complainant to allege that the property of the defendant has been fraudulently removed to this State to evade the process of the law in the State of their residence.

Lands descended to heirs in this State cannot be reached in this proceeding to satisfy a judgment against the administrator in another State.

§ 1027. Form of the Bill.—The form of the bill is well indicated in the preceeding section, but the following illustration may be of service:

BILL TO ENFORCE A FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

[For address and caption see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.
That on the...day of....19.... [insert the date of the judgment.] he recovered a judgment for seventeen hundred and ten dollars, and the costs of the suit, in the law Court of Cincinnati, Ohio, on which judgment an execution duly issued, and was returned on the...day of....19....
[give the date] "nulla bona," all of which will more fully appear by reference to said judgment, execution and return, certified copies whereof are hereewith filed, marked A, B and C, respectively. Said judgment remains in full force and effect. Complainant and defendant both resided in Ohio when said judgment was rendered, and have resided there ever since, and now reside there.

II.
That said defendant owns the following tract of land in Blount county, Tennessee.
[Here describe it, and specify any other property he owns in this State, real or personal, givning the county where situated.]

III.
Complainant therefore prays:

1st. That an attachment issue and be levied on said tract of land, and on any other property of the defendant to be found in the State.

2d. That on such levy being made, publication be made according to law in attachment suits, notifying the defendant thereof, and requiring him to appear and answer the bill, but his oath to his answer is waived.

3d. That complainant have a decree against the defendant for the amount due him on said § 1028. Suits to Subject the Separate Property of Married Women. — Whenever real or personal property is given, granted or devised to a woman after marriage, or in contemplation of marriage, for her separate use, and free from the control of her husband, it will be deemed a separate estate; and as to such property, Equity considers her a single woman, conceding to her the power to charge it with debts or engagements: this power she exercises by express words or by clear implication, in writing, or by parole. Equity regards her engagement as in the nature of an allotment of enough of her separate estate to discharge her liability: and in subjecting this estate to the satisfaction of her engagement, the Chancery Court regards the separate estate as the debtor, and a bill to enforce such an engagement is in the nature of a proceeding in rem, rather than in personam. The bill should, therefore, specify and locate the property held by the wife as her separate estate, and aver an express engagement on her part to pay the debt, or discharge the liability, out of such estate.

The following will indicate the frame and form of a

BILL TO SUBJECT A WIFE’S SEparate ESTATE.

[For address and caption, see ante, §§ 155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That, [Here show the relations of the parties out of which the liability of the wife arose. Such as goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered for the use of herself and family, or money loaned her to pay obligations, or the like.]

II. That, [Here show that complainant made said advances on the express stipulation of the wife that she would pay him out of her separate property, and that complainant made said advances on the faith of such stipulation. If a writing was executed by her in evidence of her engagement, so state, and set it out in full, and make it an exhibit to the bill.]

That at the time said note was executed, [or said engagement entered into] the defendant [wife] owned the following property as her separate estate. [Here describe the property and give its location so as to fully identify it.]

That, [If the husband is insolvent, so allege, and make him a defendant whether he signed the note or other writing, or not.]

That [If there be any other material matter, so allege it.]

1 See Woodfolk v. Lyon, 14 Pick., 269.
3 Eckler v. McGhee, 1 Pick., 661. Such contracts are, however, generally in writing. But a writing, such as a note, not expressly binding the separate estate cannot be shown by parole to be so binding. Ibid.
4 Jordan v. Everett, 9 Pick., 390.
5 The property must be located within the jurisdiction of the Court. Flannigan v. Grocery Co., 14 Pick., 599.
6 “I bind my separate estate for the payment of this note,” inserted in the body of the note is sufficient. Warren v. Freeman and wife, 1 Pick., 513.
VI.
The premises considered, complainant prays:
1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c.; see, ante, §§158; 164.]
2d. That complainant have a decree against the defendant [wife] for the amount due him, including interest, and that enough of her said separate property be sold to satisfy the same.⁶
3d. That he have such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.

DAVID C. YOUNG, Solicitor.

The bill need not be sworn to unless some defendant is a non-resident or some extraordinary process is prayed: no injunction or attachment is necessary to fix a lien upon the property, the filing of the bill creating a lien, the doctrine of lis pendens applying in such a case.⁷

§ 1029. Suits to Marshal Securities.—Whenever one creditor has a lien upon two funds, or two parcels of property, and another creditor has a lien upon only one of them, the Chancery Court will require the former creditor to seek satisfaction first out of that fund or property upon which the other creditor has no lien.⁸

Thus, where one creditor (A) is secured by two or more funds, (say two, X and Y,) and another creditor (B) is subsequently secured by only one of said funds, (say X,) a Court of Chancery on due application will compel A to exhaust first the fund, Y, before resorting to fund, X; and if A has exhausted the fund, X, without observing this rule, the Chancery Court will subrogate B to A’s right against fund, Y. And this rule applies, also, in favor of two or more creditors against one or more prior creditors.

BILL TO MARSHAL SECURITIES.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That the defendant Richard Roe, is indebted to him in the sum of six hundred dollars. [Show the amount of the indebtedness, and that it is secured on farm, lot or fund A, stating how secured, and specifying the security, and giving its date.]

II.

That the defendant Richard Roe is, also, indebted to his co-defendant, Roland Roe, but the amount of such debt complainant does not know. This debt owing to Roland Roe, alleged by him to be eight hundred dollars, is secured by a deed of trust, [mortgage, lien, or in some other way; specify how.] on said [farm or lot A, specifying the property.] and also on [another piece of property B, describing it.] Said deed of trust [mortgage, or lien] in favor of Roland Roe, is dated the...day of...190... [give date.]

That the deed of trust, [mortgage, or other lien.] of defendant, Roland Roe, is a prior and superior lien to that of complainant, and he is about to sell said [farm, lot, or &c., A.] without recourse to said [lot B.] having advertised it for sale under his said deed of trust. Complainant is informed and believes, and so charges and aver[s], that said farm is not worth and will probably not sell for more than the amount of the debt to defendant Roland Roe, in which event complainant’s said security will become worthless.

IV.

That he has requested the defendant Roland Roe to first sell said [lot B.] but he has refused so to do. [It is not necessary to make such an allegation, but if the request was made and refused, so state.]

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c., see, ante, §§158; 164.]

2d. That an injunction issue to restrain and prohibit the defendant, Roland Roe, from selling [farm, lot, or &c., A.]

3d. That the debt due the defendant, Roland Roe, if any, be set up and established in your Honor’s Court, and that complainant have a decree for his debt also, and that said two [tracts of land, lots or &c., A and B.] be sold⁹ on a credit of not less than six nor more than twenty-four months, and in bar of the equity of redemption, and that the proceeds of said two lots [or tracts] be marshalled, and the debt to the defendant Roland Roe be first paid, if he be found entitled thereunto, and that out of the proceeds of the sale of said [farm, lot or &c. A.] complainant’s said debt be paid.

⁶ If the property is realty, and a sale in bar of redemption is desired, so pray. See, ante, § 626.

§ 1030. Rationale of the Pro-rating of the Assets of an Insolvent Debtor.

§ 1031. When a General Creditors' Bill Will Lie.

§ 1032. Rationale of a General Creditors' Bill.

§ 1030. The Rationale of the Pro-rating of the Assets of an Insolvent Debtor.—As a rule, the assets of an insolvent debtor are, directly or indirectly, composed of what he has obtained from his various creditors, and failed to pay back or otherwise make good; so that, in effect, these assets are indirectly the equitable property of these creditors, the legal title only being in the debtor, and he in Equity holding these assets in trust for his creditors as the equitable owners. Hence, the insolvent debtor has no equitable or moral right to take the whole, or an undue proportion, of his assets to pay one or more of these general creditors, for that would be using the equitable shares of the other creditors in those assets to pay those thus preferred; nor has any one of these general creditors any equitable or moral right to the whole, or an undue proportion, of his debt, for, if he got more than his equitable proportion of the assets, he got more or less of the proportions of the other general creditors, and would be liable, in Equity, to account therefor.

It is manifest that the only way in which such assets can be equitably disposed of is to return to each general creditor his proportion of the whole without taking from any other what is his. It will thus be seen that the assets of an insolvent debtor constitute a quasi trust fund wherewith to pay his debts. These assets are the crop produced by his debts, and are often a part of the very money or property or services received from the creditors. Every person who labored for this debtor on account, or loaned him money, or sold him property on credit, did so on the faith that the debtor's assets would constitute a fund from which he would be reimbursed. But, as these assets, the common fund for the payment of all the creditors and in Equity belonging to all, are not sufficient to pay each creditor one hundred per cent. of his debt the only equitable rule of distribution is to pay each one as large a per cent. as the assets will warrant, giving each one the same proportion of his debt, and thus administering that equality in which Equity takes delight.¹

§ 1031. When a General Creditors' Bill Will Lie.—Whenever there is a fund which a Court of Equity will distribute ratably among all the creditors of the owner of that fund, then any one of the creditors may file a bill in behalf of himself and of all the other creditors of said owner against said owner, in order to have the fund prorated among such creditors.² And if the common debtor has assigned said fund to a third person for the benefit of his creditors, such assignee must be made a defendant, also. If any of the common creditors have filed separate bills exclusively for their own benefit, on a general creditors’ bill being filed praying to have the individual suits enjoined, the Court will enjoin them, and will require the complainants therein to come in under the general creditors’ bill. A complainant, who has filed an individual bill, will, however, be allowed to so amend it as to make it a general creditors’ bill, if such amendment be made before a general creditors’ bill has been filed. The most common cases for the filing of general creditors’ bills, and bills in the nature of general creditors’ bills, are the following:

1. Bills to Wind up Insolvent Corporations. The assets of an insolvent corporation constitute a trust fund for the benefit of all the general creditors of such corporation.

2. Bills to Wind up an Insolvent Estate. The assets of an insolvent estate are required by statute to be distributed ratably, under the statute among all the general creditors, as heretofore shown.³

3. Bills to Enforce Trust Deeds and Assignments for the Benefit of Creditors. When an individual, partnership, or corporation makes a trust deed or assignment for the benefit of all his or its creditors, or for the benefit of those therein named, any creditor entitled to share in the fund may file a bill on behalf of himself and all other creditors in order to assert, protect, and enforce his and their common rights to the property conveyed. But in such a case the bill must show that the assignee or trustee is unable or unwilling to execute the trust, or is guilty of inequitable conduct endangering the interests of the beneficiaries, or that for some other sufficient reason the Court should execute the trust.

4. Bills to Sell the Lands of a Decedent to Pay His Debts. When such a bill is filed by a creditor it must be filed in behalf of all the other bona fide creditors of the decedent.

5. Bills by a Creditor to Have Administrator Appointed. When a bill is filed in Chancery to have an administrator appointed, if filed by a creditor, it shall be on behalf of all other creditors who may wish to come in and be made parties on the usual terms; and the distributees and heirs may be made parties defendants; and if the bill is filed by the next of kin, or any of them, it shall be on behalf of all the distributees and heirs against the creditors, who may become defendants.

6. Bills to Set Aside Fraudulent Conveyances Made by an Insolvent Decedent. Such a conveyance when set aside ensues to the benefit of all the general creditors of the decedent, and the bill must, therefore, be in behalf of all such creditors.

7. Bills to Set Aside Fraudulent Conveyances of a Living Debtor. A creditor may file such a bill for himself alone, or he may file it in behalf of himself and all other creditors of the fraudulent debtor, in which latter case it becomes a general creditors’ bill.⁴

8. Bills to Enforce the Liens of Mechanics, Laborers, and Material Men are akin to general creditors’ bills. The property to which the lien attaches is in the nature of a trust fund for the common benefit of all the lien-holders. The bill may be filed in behalf of all having liens, and on such a bill all other suits to enforce like liens may be enjoined.

⁵ See Code, §§ 3544-3546. They would not, in strictness, be general creditors’ bills, but rather bills in the nature of general creditors’ bills. The bills, however, are framed in the same way, and allow all the plaintiffs to come in under them; and the proceedings on the bills are substantially the same as in case of general creditors’ bills.
9. Bills to Enforce Liens on Boats are in the nature of general creditors’ bills, and may be filed in behalf of all the parties having such liens. On such a bill all persons who have prior liens on the boat may, also, be made parties to the bill.\(^6\)

10. Bills to Enforce the Liens of Contractors and Laborers on Railroads, and the Liens of Employees of Corporations, Partnerships and Merchants, are, also, in the nature of general creditors’ bills, and may be filed on behalf of the complainant, and of all other persons having liens on the defendant’s property.

In case of bills to enforce any of the next three foregoing classes of liens, the property to which the lien attaches may be regarded as a common fund in which all the lien holders are entitled to share ratably.

\section*{§ 1032. Rationale of a General Creditors’ Bill.}—If all or many of those entitled to a common fund were allowed to institute separate suits therefor, it is manifest that the costs of the various suits would consume all, or a large part of the fund, and thus nothing be left for the creditors. Besides, if the fund belongs to all the creditors in common, ratably, it would follow, in strict law, that no one of them has the exclusive right to subject any part of it to the satisfaction of his individual claim, regardless of the rights of the other creditors. And in the third place, if the fund belongs ratably to many creditors, it is impossible to distribute it among those rightfully entitled thereto, unless all the creditors have a chance to be heard in one and the same suit, wherein their respective claims can be properly adjudicated, and the right given to all to prove their own claims and contest the claims of others. Whereas, when a suit is brought by one creditor in behalf of himself and all the other creditors of a common debtor, in order to have a common fund distributed \textit{pro rata} among the creditors, the expenses of litigation are reduced to a minimum, all the creditors have a right to be heard, and by one decree all of their various equities may be effectually adjudicated, and the fund divided equitably, according to each his proper \textit{pro rata}. And so it may be said that the main object of general creditors’ bills are (1) to prevent a multiplicity of suits, (2) to make an equitable distribution of a common fund, and (3) to prevent the accumulation of costs.\(^6\)

Equity delights in equality, and whenever the Court is not embarrassed by superior liens, or equities, it will apportion a fund in its custody \textit{pro rata} among the creditors of the owner of that fund,\(^7\) whether such owner be an individual, a partnership, a corporation or a deceased debtor.\(^8\)

\section*{§ 1033. Frame of a General Creditors’ Bill.}—In drawing a general creditors’ bill the following matters should be kept in mind:

1. The bill must show on its face, either in the caption, or in the prayer, that it is filed in behalf of the complainant and of all the other creditors\(^9\) of the insolvent estate, person, firm, or corporation.

2. It must be filed against the insolvent debtor, and the persons in charge of his or its assets; and against any and all persons intermeddling with said assets, or trying by suit or otherwise to appropriate them, or any part of them.

3. The bill must show on its face that the complainant is a \textit{bona fide} creditor of the insolvent defendant; and should file the evidence of his debt, if any:\(^10\) if he is a judgment creditor, he should so allege; and if execution has issued on his judgment and been returned \textit{nulla bona}, he should so show, and should file a certified copy of the judgment, execution and return.

4. The bill must positively allege the insolvency of the debtor or estate whose assets are to be administered. If the suit be against the estate of a decedent,

---

\(^7\) See, \textit{ante}, § 47.

\(^8\) 1 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 410.

\(^9\) A bill filed in behalf of the complainant alone is not a general creditors’ bill. Parks v. Saw Co., 20 Pick., 23.

\(^10\) A general creditor can maintain the bill. Tradesman Co. v. Car Wheel Co., 11 Pick., 634.
the bill must show that the insolvency of the estate has been suggested to the County Court, or to its Clerk. If the suit is against a person, partnership, or corporation, it is always well to show that an execution has issued against the defendant, and been returned unsatisfied.

5. The bill should specify as fully as practicable the character, location and amount of the assets of the defendant debtor; and, so far as possible, the names of the principal creditors, where they reside, and the amount due each, and on what account. These creditors should all be made defendants.

6. If any fraudulent conveyances are assailed, the property alleged to be so conveyed must be described, the fraud charged specifically, and the conveyee made a defendant.

7. The bill should pray: (1) that it may be allowed to be filed in behalf of complainant and of all the other creditors of the defendant debtor; (2) that all those named as defendants in the caption be made such by the issuance and service of all proper process; (3) that all of said creditors not made parties be allowed to come in by petition, and file and prove their respective claims in the cause, and have the benefit of all decrees made therein; and that all creditors be notified hereof by due publication; (4) that all suits against the defendant debtor, and all persons intermedding with the assets sought to be administered, be enjoined; (5) that a receiver be appointed to take possession of all the property, real and personal, and all the choses in action, franchises and other assets of the defendant debtor; and that such receiver convert all of said property into money; (6) that all accounts be taken necessary to show the amount of said assets, the prior liens thereon if any, the names of the creditors and the amount due each, and who have liens and who none; and (7) that after paying the costs, and expenses of the suit, including complainant’s counsel fees, the amounts due the preferred creditors be paid, and the balance of the assets prorated equitably among the general creditors.

§ 1034. Form of a General Creditors’ Bill.—The frame of the bill, as given in the preceding section, may be better understood by an examination of the following form:

GENERAL CREDITORS’ BILL.

To the Hon. John P. Smith, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Tazewell:

John Doe, a resident of Knox county, complainant, who sues on behalf of himself and all the other creditors of the River Improvement Company, vs.

The said River Improvement Company, a corporation under the laws of Tennessee, whose principal office is in Claiborne county, and whose chief officers reside there, and Henry Hill and David Doe, both residents of said Claiborne county, and Richard Roe, John Smith, and Jesse James, non-residents of Tennessee. Complainant, who sues in behalf of himself and of all the other creditors of the said River Improvement Company, respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That he is a bona fide creditor of the defendant, the River Improvement Company, as follows:

1. He has a note for five thousand dollars executed to him by said Company on January 4, 1891, and due ninety days after date, all of which is owing to him and unpaid.

2. He has an account against said Company for work done on the Clinch river, under a written contract with said Company, amounting to four thousand dollars, all of which is due him and unpaid.

3. He has a judgment against said Company for three thousand and sixty-one dollars and costs of suit rendered by the Circuit Court of Knox county against said Company at its May term, 1891, and that on said judgment an execution has duly issued to the Sheriff of Claiborne county, and been duly returned by the Sheriff of said county wholly unsatisfied.

II.

The said note, the said account, and a certified copy of said judgment, execution, and return, are hereto attached as exhibits, and marked A, B, and C, respectively.

The defendant Company is, also, largely indebted to various other persons, to wit: to P. G. Fulkerson and J. H. S. Morrison, about one thousand dollars each for attorneys’ fees; to C. H. Rogers in a large sum, believed to be about five thousand dollars; to G. W. Montgomery about one thousand dollars, and to T. W. Stone and E. A. Hurst, in various large sums, aggregating several thousand dollars. Said Company, also, owes various other persons various amounts.

III.

The liabilities of said Company complained of is informed and believes, and on that belief charges and aver, will not fall below thirty thousand dollars; whereas its assets will not exceed twenty thousand dollars in value. The Company has ceased to do business, its office is closed, and its corporate franchises are not used. Said Company is unable to pay its debts, and is insolvent.

IV.

The principal assets of said Company are:
1. Its boom in the Clinch river, in Claiborne County, including the logs, chains, pillars, and ropes, belonging thereto.
2. The logs in said boom, and logs at many places on Clinch river, and its tributaries above said boom.
3. The saw mill near said boom, including the engine, boiler, gearing, attachments, and tools, thereunto belonging, and the shed covering said mill.
4. The lumber now sawed and stacked near said mill; and other lumber there unstacked.
5. The following tracts of land in Claiborne and Hancock counties: [Describing each tract by metes and bounds.]
6. The office furniture of said company in their office at Tazewell, consisting of desks, chairs, tables, safe, stove, book-case, books, maps, drawings, &c., &c.
7. The Company has, also, large debts coming to it from various parties; but how much can be realized therefrom complainant is not advised, and does not know.

V.

The defendant, Richard Roe, is justly indebted to the said River Improvement Company in the sum of three thousand dollars for money collected by him for said Company and not accounted for. He is a non-resident of the State, but owns a valuable house and lot at Cumberland Gap, adjoining the lots of Daniel Boone, David Crockett, and Simon Kenton.

VI.

Shortly before complainant obtained his said judgment against the defendant Company, it conveyed a valuable tract of timber land in the 4th civil district of Hancock county to the defendant John Smith. Said tract adjoins the lands of John Brown, James Jones, and Charles Clark, and contains about three thousand acres, being the tract conveyed to said Company by said C. H. Rogers, to whom a portion of the purchase-money is yet due. The said conveyance to said John Smith was made by the defendant Company for the purpose of hindering, delaying and defrauding complainant and the other creditors of said Company, and no consideration really passed, but said Smith holds said tract of land under a secret trust for the benefit of Jesse James, the president and general manager of said Company.

VII.

The defendants Henry Hill and David Doe are each prosecuting a separate suit against the defendant Company, in the Circuit Court at Tazewell, claiming five thousand dollars each as damages for an alleged breach of contract; and they have each attached said mill, logs, lumber, and office furniture of the defendant Company. And complainant aver, on information and belief, that other creditors of the said Company are threatening to bring suit against said Company, so that its assets are in great danger of being consumed by the costs incident to a multiplicity of suits.

VIII.

The premises considered, complainant prays:
1st. That he may be allowed to file this as a general creditors' bill, in behalf of himself and of all the other creditors of the said River Improvement Company; and that the bill be by your Honor sustained as such.
2d. That all of those named as defendants in the caption of this bill be made such by the issuance and service of subpoena as to all the residents and by publication notices as to all the non-residents; and that they each and all be required to answer this bill; but the oath to the answer of each is waived.
3d. That all of the bona fide creditors of the defendant Company be required to prosecute their claims and demands against said Company in this Court and in this cause; and to that end that they be allowed to file their petitions in term or in vacation, exhibiting their respective claims and demands, and to prove the same before the Master; and that they be granted all the benefits of this proceeding to which complainant may be entitled; and that the Master be directed to notify by due publication all the creditors of said Company to file their claims in this cause.
4th. That a judgment be rendered against the defendant Richard Roe for the amount due from him to the defendant Company as aforesaid, and that an attachment issue and be levied on the said house and lot owned by him at Cumberland Gap; and on any other property he may own in this State.
5th. That the aforesaid conveyance by the defendant Company to John Smith be declared fraudulent and void; and that the said tract of land so fraudulently conveyed be attached by the levy of an attachment thereon, and be sold and the proceeds applied to the satisfaction of the debts of the defendant Company.
6th. That the defendants Henry Hill and David Doe be enjoined from further prosecuting their said suits in the Circuit Court against the defendant Company; and that all other creditors be enjoined from instituting any suit or suits against the defendant Company in any Court, or on any account; and that said Henry Hill and said David Doe, and all the other creditors of the defendant Company be required to prosecute their claims in this Court, and in this cause.

7th. That a receiver be appointed to take into his possession all of the property of the defendant Company, of every sort whatsoever, real, personal, or mixed; and that said receiver be empowered and directed to convert all of said property into money, at the earliest practicable moment; and that he be authorized and directed to bring all suits necessary to collect debts due the defendant Company, or to assert its rights or claims to any property: and to do all other acts necessary to collect or protect the assets of the defendant Company.

8th. That the Master be directed to take and state an account showing:

(1) The amount of the assets of the defendant Company;
(2) The names of the preferred creditors, if any, and the amount due each, and the particular asset on which each has a lien or superior equity;
(3) The names of the general creditors, and the amount due each;
(4) The probable amount of the costs and expenses of the suit, including the expenses and compensation of the receiver, and a reasonable counsel fee for the Solicitors of the complainant; and
(5) The pro rata of the general creditors out of the fund subject to distribution among them.

9th. That the property herein attached and prayed to be attached be sold on a credit of six months, and in bar of the right of redemption.

10th. That complainant and the other creditors of the defendant Company be granted all such further and other relief as they may be entitled to.

This is the first application for an attachment, injunction or receiver in this cause.

John P. Davis and E. A. Hurst, Solicitor.

[Annex affidavit and jurat, as in § 789, ante.]

§ 1035. Proceedings Upon a General Creditors' Bill.—The bill being filed on behalf of all persons entitled to share in the common fund, the complainant therein should, at the earliest practicable moment, obtain an order of the Court sustaining the bill as a general creditors' bill, and ordering that publication be made for the creditors to appear and file their petitions and prove their claims, in that particular cause; and, if no injunction has already been granted, the Court should, thereupon, restrain the prosecution of all other suits by any of the common creditors. The following is the form of such an order:

ORDER SUSTAINING A GENERAL CREDITORS' BILL.

John Doe, vs. The River Improvement Co., et al. No. 987.

The bill in this cause having been read, and it appearing to the Court that it is filed in behalf of the complainant and all other creditors of the defendant corporation, and the insolvency of the defendant appearing by the return of nulla bona on the execution exhibited to the bill, or by the judgment pro confesso heretofore taken and entered against it, or by the admission in its answer, or by the admissions of its Solicitor in open Court, it is ordered by the Court that the bill be sustained and ordered to stand as a general creditors' bill, and as such enure to the benefit of all creditors who may claim its benefits, or come in under it.

And the Clerk and Master is ordered to make publication in some newspaper notifying all the creditors of the defendant of the filing of the bill in this cause, and requiring them to come in by petition, and file and prove their respective claims against the defendant, on or before the first day of August, 1892, [allowing at least six months,] or they may be excluded from the benefits of this proceeding.

And on motion of the complainant, the institution of any separate suits by any of said creditors, will require such steps to be taken by the complainant as will enable all persons interested in the fund to set up their respective claims. This is the rule of the Court, whether this fund belong to the estate of a decedent, or to an insolvent partnership, company, or corporation; and whether the fund to be distributed belongs to creditors, legatees, distributees, or other claimants. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 991.

11 The complainant's answer under oath to such petitions has no probative force, and merely makes an issue. Irvine v. Dean, 9 Pick. 346.

In accordance with its fundamental rule to so determine a matter in controversy that all persons interested in it may have a chance to be heard, the Court in all cases relating to the distribution of a fund distributable among various creditors or other claimants, will require such steps to be taken by the complainant as will enable all persons interested in the fund to set up their respective claims. This is the rule of the Court, whether this fund belong to the estate of a decedent, or to an insolvent partnership, company, or corporation; and whether the fund to be distributed belongs to creditors, legatees, distributees, or other claimants. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 991.

CHAPTER LV.
SUITS TO ENFORCE LIENS.
§ 1036. Liens Generally Considered.—A lien is defined to be "a hold or claim which one person has upon the property of another as a security for some debt or charge."1 Whoever owns property subject to a lien owns only what remains of it after the lien has been discharged. There are four kinds of liens, all enforceable in Chancery: 1, Common Law Liens; 2, Equitable Liens; 3, Statutory Liens; and 4, Contract Liens.

1. Common Law Liens are those liens which are recognized in the Courts of common law; and include 1, a general lien, which is the right to retain the property of another to secure a general balance of accounts; and 2, a particular lien, which is a right to retain the property of another on account of labor employed or money expended upon that identical property.2 A common law lien is simply the right of a creditor to retain possession of the chattel until some debt or demand due the creditors is satisfied; and possession is so essential to the lien that, if it be voluntarily surrendered by the creditor, the lien is at once extinguished.3

The following are the principal common law liens: 1, common carriers’ liens; 2, innkeepers’ liens; 3, bailee’s liens; 4, pawnees’ or pledgees’ liens; 5, factors’ liens; 6, brokers’ liens; 7, bankers’ liens; 8, wharfingers’ and warehousemen’s liens; 9, attorneys’ liens; and 10, execution liens.

2. An Equitable Lien is not an estate or property in the thing itself, nor a right to obtain possession of the thing. It is simply a right of a special nature over the thing, constituting a charge or encumbrance upon it entitling the owner of such right to subject the property so charged or encumbered to the satisfaction of that particular claim of his which constitutes the charge or encumbrance.4 In short, an equitable lien on property is a right to subject that particular property to the satisfaction of a debt which is a charge upon that very property.

As has been stated, a common law lien ordinarily depends on the creditor retaining the possession of the chattel to which the lien attaches. On the other hand, an equitable lien exists although the encumbered property be in possession of the debtor; indeed, as a rule, the debtor retains the possession, in cases of equitable liens, and the creditor seldom has the right to keep or demand the possession: when he has such right, it grows out of special contract.

The following are the principal equitable liens: 1, vendors’ liens; 2, lis pendens liens; 3, liens of creditors on assets of insolvent partnerships and insolvent corporations; 4, liens of vendees for their debts when their deeds are declared mortgages; 5, liens on property bought with trust money; 6, joint owners’ liens; 7, partners’ liens; and 8, bona fide improvers’ liens.

3. A Statutory Lien is a right given by statute to subject certain property to

---

1 Bouv. Law Dict. "Lien."
2 2 Kent’s Com., 634.
the satisfaction of a particular debt, such debt being ordinarily in some way connected with the property, or growing out of it, or contracted on the faith of it. Statutory liens partake largely of the character of equitable liens. In both classes of liens the possession of the property to which the lien attaches is in the debtor, and the creditor ordinarily has no right to the possession. His rights are mainly to have the property sold, and enough of its proceeds applied to pay his lien debt.

The following are the principal statutory liens: 1, landlords' liens; 2, mechanics' liens; 3, material men's liens; 4, boat creditors' liens; 5, liens of corporation, partnership and mercantile employees; 6, liens of creditors on a decedent's land; 7, farm laborers' liens; 8, liens of railroad contractors and laborers; 9, cotton-sellers' liens; 10, wharfage liens; 11, pasturage and season liens; 12, innkeepers' liens; 13, tax liens; 14, attachment liens; 15, judgment liens; and 16, liens of judgment creditors on a return of nulla bona and bill filed.

4. A Contract Lien is one created by the express agreement of the owner of the property on which the lien is fixed, and gives the lienor the right to sell or have sold the property in satisfaction of a stipulated debt, usually on a specified contingency. The principal contract liens are those created (1) by deed of trust, (2) by mortgages, (3) by reservations in deeds to secure purchase-money unpaid, and (4) by other writings, or (5) by parol agreement that specified property shall stand as security for certain debts.

Any of these liens may be enforced by a bill in Chancery when the amount due is large enough to give the Court jurisdiction.

§ 1037. Liens Specially Considered.—The principal liens enforced in Chancery are the following, the substance and character of each being briefly and generally indicated, without attempting to specially and precisely define any of them:

1. Liens of Vendors on Land. A lien for the purchase-money exists in favor of the vendor on land sold by him: 1, When the vendee takes a clear deed, but executes a mortgage or a trust deed expressly to secure the purchase-money; 2, When the vendor gives the vendee a title-bond only; and 3, When the vendor on the face of his deed to the vendee expressly retains a lien to secure the unpaid purchase-money; 4, When the deed by the vendor shows on its face that a part of the purchase-money is unpaid, an Equity exists in such vendor's favor, which will become a lien on the land upon the filing of a bill to enforce such Equity. In all the foregoing cases, the lien may be enforced against the vendee, or against any person holding under or through him, with notice, actual or constructive; 5, When no express lien is given or retained, and the deed shows on its face that the purchase-money has been paid, when in fact it has not been, the vendor may, by filing a bill, obtain a lien on the land against the vendee, or against any person holding under or through him, who bought with notice of the fact that the purchase-money was still owing to the complainant.

When the vendor has an express lien, the lien passes to, and may be enforced by, the assignee of the purchase-money notes.

2. Liens on Lands to Secure Debts. All mortgages, and all trust deeds, however drawn, are deemed in Equity as mere securities, notwithstanding any stipulations that the title is to become absolute on certain conditions; and such conveyances constitute mere liens, and must be enforced as such.

3. Other Liens on Land. A judgment or decree is a lien on the defendant's land; a lien is created by levying an attachment or execution upon land; a recognizance in Court constitutes a lien on the obligor's land; and assessed taxes are a lien on the land assessed.

An absolute deed given in payment of a pre-existing debt, or to secure borrowed money, is deemed a mortgage.
4. Liens of Contractors and Laborers on Railroads. A lien exists upon a railroad: (1) to secure the principal contractor for work done and materials furnished in constructing the road, or its appurtenances; and, (2) to secure sub-contractors, laborers, and furnishers of material, when their principal contractor fails or refuses to pay them. The principal contractor's lien continues for six months after the performance of the work, or the delivery of the material, and until the termination of any suit commenced within that time to enforce the lien. The lien of sub-contractors, laborers and furnishers of material to contractors, does not exist unless and until they give certain written notices specified in the statute, and then such lien is only to the extent of the indebtedness of the person notified to the debtor of the person giving the notice.

5. Liens of Employees of Corporations, Partnerships and Merchants. All employees and day laborers of corporations, partnerships and individual merchants doing business in this State, have a lien upon the corporation, partnership or individual property, real and personal, to secure payment for their labor and services performed for such corporation, partnership or individual.

6. Liens of Mechanics and Material Men. All persons who do any of the work on, or furnish any of the materials, fixtures or machinery, for any building or improvement, constructed or repaired, on any lot or tract of land, or who put any fixtures or machinery thereon, by special contract with the owner or his agent, have a lien upon such lot or tract of land to secure payment for such work, materials, fixtures, and machinery.

7. Liens on Boats. A lien exists on any steam or keel boat, her tackle and furniture, (1) to secure payment for work done or material or articles furnished, in building, repairing, fitting, furnishing, or equipping such boat; and (2) to secure payment for wages due the hands of such boat.

8. Liens for Wharfage. The owners and proprietors of wharves and landings where wharfage is allowed by law, have a lien on all boats, rafts, and other water crafts, and their loading, for the payment of their wharfage fees.

9. Liens on Crops. The statutes give a lien on the crop growing or made, on a particular tract of land: 1, to secure the payment of the rent due the landlord; 2, to secure payment for supplies, labor, money, implements of industry, or work stock, furnished by the owners of the land to lessees, or by lessees to sub-tenants, and used in the cultivation of the crop; 3, to secure payment for the necessary supplies of food and clothing furnished by the landlord or his agent to the tenant to enable him to make the crop; 4, to secure payment for labor or service in cultivating the soil and making the crop.

10. Liens of Cotton Sellers. When merchants, factors or cotton brokers sell cotton, they have a lien upon the cotton sold, to secure payment of the purchase-money agreed to be paid.

11. Liens on Tobacco. Liens exist in favor of all persons who make advances in money on tobacco, in barns, storage-houses, warehouses, sheds or elsewhere.

12. Liens Upon Animals. Liens exist 1, upon any animal to secure the payment of pasturage, or for service of the male; 2, upon the offspring of the male to secure the payment for the season; and 3, upon all stock received by livery stable keepers for board and feed, to secure the payment of all reasonable charges.

13. Liens Upon Other Personal Property. A lien exists 1, upon the furniture, baggage, wearing apparel or other goods and chattels of any guest or patron § 1038. General Rights of Parties Having Liens.—The ordinary purpose of a lien is to secure the payment of a debt fastened by operation of law, Equity or contract upon a particular piece of property; and the Chancery Court treats this particular property as a security for the debt; and, if the debt is not duly paid, the owner of the lien, (sometimes called the lienor,) has the right to file a bill in Chancery, and have such property sold in satisfaction of his debt.

§ 1039. Frame and Form of Bills to Enforce Liens.—Any of the foregoing liens may be enforced by a bill in the Chancery Court; and there is no special form for such a bill. In drawing the bill, the draftsman should state definitely and particularly, the ground, origin, or occasion, of the lien; when and how it originated; the amount of the lien, on what property it rests, and who is the owner thereof; and if notice to the defendant is necessary to bind him, such notice must be alleged. The property should be fully described; and, if it be land, the description should be by metes and bounds. The bill should pray to have the lien declared, and enforced by a decree of sale; and for general relief.

Different bills to enforce different liens on the same property may be consolidated; or one bill may be filed by a lienor against the owner of the property and all the other lienors, in the nature of a general creditors' bill; or one lienor may file a bill in behalf of himself and all other lienors against the owner of the property, each bill praying that the various lien debts be ascertained, the property sold, and the proceeds administered according to the priorities of the various lienors.

If an injunction, attachment or receiver is prayed for the bill should state that it is the first application therefor. An attachment in such a case can issue only on the fiat of a Judge or Chancellor. Such an attachment is ancillary.

GENERAL FORM OF BILLS TO ENFORCE LIENS.

[Address and commencement of the bill as in §§ 155; 164, ante.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That [Here show how and when the alleged lien originated, stating the contract, particularly. Give any special facts or circumstances throwing light on the nature, origin or extent, of the lien. If any notice is necessary to make the defendant liable, or if any notice is required by the statute to fix the lien, show that such notice was given; and show that all other antecedent steps necessary to establish the lien were duly taken.]

II. That [Here show what efforts have been made, if any, to obtain payment without recourse to the Court; and if no efforts, why. This is not necessary, but is proper; and sometimes affects the adjudication of costs.]

19 M. & V.'s Code, §§ 2784-2786.
20 M. & V.'s Code, §§ 2763-2766.
21 The statutes in reference to the enforcement of said liens are as follows:

22 Lumber Co. v. Loeb, 2 Cates, 251; Lane v. Wood, 1 Shan. Cas., 648.
23 An attachment in aid of a statutory lien is ancillary, and not intended to enforce the defendant's appearance: a subpoena to answer must issue, or publication be made, to bring the defendant into Court. Barnes v. Thompson, 2 Swan, 313; Brown v. Brown, 2 Sneed, 431.
III.
That [Here specify, locate, and fully describe, the property bound by the lien, if such description has not already been given.]

IV.
That [If any person besides the principal debtor is interested in said property, or is setting up any claim to it, or is secondarily liable for complainant's debt, give the facts relative thereto, fully, and make him a co-defendant. If there be any superior liens on the property, so show, and make the holder thereof a co-defendant.]

V.
That [If there be need for it, and a statutory or other ground of attachment exist, state such ground. If there be any necessity for an injunction, and sufficient cause, specify in detail the facts and circumstances warranting such an injunction.]

VI.
The premises considered, complainant prays:
1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c., as in § 164, ante.]
2d. That complainant have a decree for the full amount of his said debt, principal and interest; and that he be declared to have a lien on the property hereinbefore described, to secure the amount of said debt.
3d. That to enforce said lien, said property be sold on a credit of not less than six nor more than twenty-four months, and in bar of all equity of redemption; and that the proceeds of said sale be applied to the satisfaction of this decree, and in discharge of said lien.
4th. That an attachment issue and be levied upon said property; and an injunction issue to restrain the defendant [from doing the act or acts specially complained of, stating them briefly.]
5th. That complainant have all such further and other relief as he may be entitled to at the hearing.

[If an attachment or injunction is prayed for, add:] This is the first application for an attachment [and injunction] in this case.

[H. M. Goins, Solicitor.

The bill should be duly sworn to; see, ante, § 789.]

BILL TO ENFORCE A MECHANIC'S LIEN.

[Address and commencement of the bill as in §§ 155; 164.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.
That by special contract with the defendant, he constructed and built for him a dwelling-house on a lot of ground belonging to the defendant, in the 10th civil district of Knox county, complainant furnishing all the materials, and doing all the work, according to said special contract.

By the terms of said special contract, complainant was to be paid the sum of one thousand dollars cash, whenever said house was finished. [Here specify the terms of payment. Complainant avers that he has fully complied with the terms of his said special contract, that said house was fully finished on the 9th day of June, 1891, and was on that day delivered to, and accepted by the defendant; and he and his family at once moved into it, and are now living in it.

III.
The day after possession was delivered as aforesaid, complainant demanded said sum of one thousand dollars, to which he was then entitled in accordance with the terms of his said contract. The defendant, thereupon, began to find fault with some of the workmanship and some of the material, but said he would call on complainant in a few days and arrange matters with him. But so it is he has not so done; and complainant has now waited one month in vain, although he has sent word to the defendant and written to him, urging payment.

IV.
Said lot of ground on which said dwelling-house was built, as aforesaid, is in the 10th civil district of Knox county, adjoining the lands of John Doe and Richard Roe, and bounded as follows: Beginning on a maple [and fully describing it by metes and bounds,] to the beginning, containing ten acres, more or less. Complainant is advised that he has a lien on said lot of ground to secure the payment of the amount justly due him for constructing and building said dwelling-house, and for furnishing the material therefor, as aforesaid. Less than one year has elapsed since said work was finished and said materials furnished.

V.
The premises considered, complainant prays:
1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c.; see, ante, § 164.]
2d. That complainant may have a decree against the defendant for said sum of one thousand dollars, and for interest thereon from June 9, 1891, and for all the costs of this cause.
3d. That to secure the payment of this decree, and the better to enforce complainant's lien on said lot of ground, an attachment be issued and levied thereon. This is the first application for an attachment in this case.

4th. That at the hearing complainant's said lien be declared, and that said lot of ground be sold on a credit of not less than six nor more than twenty-four months, and in bar of all equity of redemption, and that the proceeds of said sale be applied to the satisfaction of this decree.

5th. That complainant have such further and other relief as he may be entitled to at the hearing.

[Annex affidavit and jurat, as in § 789, ante.]

If the bill be filed by a journeyman or other person employed by the contractor to do work or furnish materials, its material allegations will be as follows:

BILLY A JOURNEYMAN OR SUB-CONTRACTOR.

[For address and caption, see, ante, § 164.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That John Doe, [the principal contractor,] was employed by Richard Roe, [the owner of the land,] by special contract to build a dwelling-house on a lot of ground in the 10th civil district of Knox county, said Doe to do all the work and to furnish all the material, for which the said Roe agreed to pay him the sum of one thousand dollars, when said house should be fully and duly completed and finished, according to the terms of said contract.

II.

That complainant was employed by said Doe to do the brick-work on said house, and to furnish the brick, mortar, lime, sand and hair, requisite and necessary to said brick-work. Under his said contract complainant built the brick foundations for said house, built the chimneys, laid the hearths, and made the walks. Complainant files herewith an itemized account of all the material by him furnished, and all of the work by him done, under his said contract with the defendant Doe, which account is correct, just and true, and owing to the complainant, and amounts to the sum of one hundred and nine dollars, all of which is due from said Doe, and wholly unpaid.

III.

Within thirty days after said material was furnished and said work done, complainant notified the defendant Roe in writing that he claimed a lien on said lot of ground for the work by him done, and the material by him furnished, as aforesaid. Complainant, also, within said thirty days filed with the County Register of Knox county a sworn statement of the amount due for such work, labor and materials, and said Register duly registered said statement and affidavit.

IV.

Complainant not having been paid said account by either of the defendants, and having given the notice aforesaid and caused it to be registered, and less than ninety days having elapsed since he gave said written notice, he is advised and claims that he has a lien on said lot of ground to secure the payment of the amount due him on his said account, which account is herewith filed, marked A, and made a part of this bill. Said lot of ground is bounded as follows [Describe it fully, by metes and bounds, if practicable.]

The prayers are substantially the same as those in the preceding form; and the bill should be sworn to.

§ 1040. Forms of References and Decrees.—When payments have been made as to which there is some dispute, or there is a dispute as to the amount, character or value of work done or materials furnished, or as to whether complainant has complied with his contract, or as to any other matter affecting the right or amount of recovery, the Chancellor generally narrows the dispute down to a few questions of fact and refers them to the Master.

The following is given as a general illustration of the form of an order of reference to the Master:

ORDER OF REFERENCE AS TO AMOUNT OF LIEN DEBT.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al.
No. 619.

This cause came on to be heard this 10th day of June, 1890, before Chancellor W. S. Bearden, upon the original bill, the answers of all three of the defendants thereto, the cross-bill of the defendant, Sarah Roe, and the answer thereto, and the proof in the cause, including the stipulation signed by all the parties except Sarah Roe, and upon argument of counsel, from all of which,

I.

The Court is of opinion that the defendant, Richard Roe, was the owner of the lot upon which the dwelling-house, and other improvements specified in the bill, were made at the time they were made; and that the deed made by him to his wife, Sarah Roe, not having been registered, and being based on no valuable consideration, but having been made to defraud complainant and other creditors, is void, and of no effect as against complainant, and the defendant, Charles Stokes, and it is so adjudged and decreed accordingly.

II.

It is, therefore, decreed by the Court, that the complainant has a mechanic's and furnisher's lien upon said house and lot, and all the improvements thereon, to secure the payment of all the work by him done, and of all the materials by him furnished, in erecting the houses, and making the improvements, specified in his bill, on the lot described in the bill; and that he has a right to have said lien enforced by a sale of said lot and improvements as prayed by him.

III.

But because it does not fully appear how much is due from the defendant, Richard Roe, for said improvements, and how much of the debt due from said Roe to complainant belongs to the defendant, Stokes, the Court orders the Master to consider the pleadings and competent proof now on file, and such further competent evidence as may be produced by either or both parties, and report to the next term:

1. What amount was originally due from the defendant, Richard Roe, to the complainant for the construction of the dwelling-house referred to in the bill, after deducting payments made to the complainant before the assignment by complainant to the defendant, Stokes.
In fixing this amount, the Master will take the written contract between the parties as prima facie proof of the true amount, but will allow such deductions and payments as the defendant, Richard Roe, may prove, and such additions as complainant may prove, by reason of changes made in the contract after it was signed. The Master will report whether the $300.00 check was cashed, and if not, why not.

2. How much of the debt due from the complainant to the defendant, Charles Stokes, did the defendant, Richard Roe, pay, and under what sort of contract; and what payments said Roe made to said Stokes by virtue of said assignment.

3. Whether said dwelling-house was constructed according to contract; and if not, what deduction should reasonably be made from the contract price, by reason of imperfect materials or defective workmanship, or for any other of the violations of contract alleged in the answer and cross-bill of Sarah Roe.

4. What amount does the defendant, Richard Roe, owe complainant for building the outhouses and fences on the lot containing said dwelling-house, after deducting all payments made by said Roe, or his wife, and all credits for defective work, if any be shown. If Roe or his wife made any payments on this account to the defendant, Stokes, it will be allowed as a credit.

5. What balance is due from the defendant, Richard Roe, and what part of said balance belongs to complainant, and what part thereof to the defendant, Charles Stokes.

The Master will not look at so much of the testimony of the defendant, Roe and wife, as seeks to set up conversations with complainant prior to the signing of the contract to build the dwelling-house; such testimony being inadmissible to vary said contract. All the receipts evidencing payments made by the defendant, Richard Roe, now on file will be allowed, except the check hereinbefore referred to, and the Master will inquire as ordered in reference to that.

The cross-bill of Sarah Roe is dismissed, and all costs thereof, including the costs of witnesses examined relative to the question of her title, will be paid by her and her prosecution surety, John Bright, for all of which execution is awarded.

The following forms of decrees enforcing liens illustrate the general frame of decrees in such cases. In all cases the decree should show that the debt is a lien, and should specify the property to which the lien attaches, and should order its sale in enforcement of the lien.

GENERAL FORM OF DECREE TO ENFORCE LIENS.

[For title, commencement and recitals, see, ante, § 567.]

On consideration whereof, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed by the Court:

1st. That the defendant is indebted to the complainant in the sum of — dollars, the amount due for [specifying what, whether for work in building a house, or material furnished for such building, or repairing, or equipping a boat, or work or materials in constructing a railroad, or labor and services performed for a corporation, partnership, or individual merchant,] and interest thereon from the...day of....19.... [insert date when the work was done, or materials furnished, or services rendered.] making in all the sum of — dollars.

2d. That said sum is a lien on said house and lot [or railroad, or boat, or the property of said corporation, or partnership, or individual merchant.] and complainant is entitled to have said lien enforced by the sale thereof, unless previously paid and discharged. Said house and lot are described as follows: [Here insert location and description; if a railroad, locate it by town and county; if a boat, give her name, name of her owners or officers and river on which sailing; if a corporation or partnership, or individual merchant, locate their property and place of business.

3d. And unless said debt, and the costs of the cause, which are adjudged against the defendant are paid into Court, in sixty days, it is ordered and decreed that the Clerk and Master sell said property, to the highest bidder, for cash, after giving at least ten days notice of sale in the manner of other property. For forms of decrees of sale, see, ante, §§ 626; 844; 977; 995; 1069.] and out of the proceeds of said sale he will pay first the costs of this cause, then pay complainant the amount due him on this decree, and the remainder, if any, to the defendant. If the proceeds of said sale fail to satisfy this decree an execution will issue for the balance unpaid.

An examination of the foregoing decree will show that it contains only three parts: 1, An adjudication that the defendant is indebted to the complainant in a certain sum on a certain account, specifying each; 2, That this debt is a lien on the property for building which the debt arises, or is a lien on such other particular property on or concerning which the work was done, the services rendered, or the materials furnished; 3, That, in the event said debt is not paid by a fixed date, the Clerk and Master is ordered to sell the property, and pay the costs of the cause and said debt out of the proceeds. As the proceeds of the property may not satisfy the decree it is prudent to award an execution for the balance.

DEGREE ENFORCING A MECHANIC'S, FURNISHER'S OR LABORER'S LIEN.

[After giving the style of the cause, and adjudging the amount of the indebtedness, see, ante, §§ 567-568, then proceed as follows:]

And it further appearing that complainant has a mechanic's [or furnisher's, or laborer's, or other] lien to secure said indebtedness, upon the following lot of ground [or tract of land:] [Here describe it as described in the bill, or proof,] and that an attachment has been duly levied thereon.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed, that complainant has such a lien, and has the right to have said lot [or tract] sold in satisfaction of said lien, and in payment of said indebtedness; and that if the same is not paid and satisfied within sixty days from this day, the Clerk and Master will, after advertising according to law, sell said lot of ground [or tract of land] to the highest and best bidder [&c., as in § 626, ante.]

§ 1041. Forms of Bills to Enforce Contract Liens.—Where a debt is secured by a mortgage with power of sale, or by a deed of trust, the bill should allege, and the proof show, some reason for coming into Court; or, while granting the relief prayed, a portion of the costs may be adjudged against the complainant.24

In drawing decrees it would be well, in case of any difficulty, to refer to what is said on the subject in the Chapter on Decrees.25

BILL TO ENFORCE A VENDOR'S LIEN.

[Address and commencement of the bill as in §§ 155; 164.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That on January 2, 1889, he sold to the defendant the following tract of land in Blount county. [Here describe it fully, by metes and bounds.] The consideration price for said land was one thousand dollars, five hundred dollars of which was paid cash in hand, and for the other five hundred dollars the defendant executed and delivered to complainant a note, payable with interest one year after said January 2, 1889. Said note is herewith filed as a part of this bill, and marked A.

II.

Complainant executed no deed to the defendant for said land, but gave him a bond for title [or, complainant made the defendant a deed for said land, but expressly retained a lien on the face of said deed to secure the payment of said five hundred dollars; or, complainant made the defendant a deed for the land, which deed shows on its face that said note was a part of the consideration price for said land; or, complainant executed and delivered to the defendant a deed for said land, said deed showing that the whole of said one thousand dollars was paid in hand on the day of sale, but in fact only five hundred dollars was then paid, and said note was given for the residue.]

III.

Said note for five hundred dollars has long been overdue, and is wholly unpaid, principal and interest. [If any part of it has been paid, so state, specifying the amounts and dates of the credit.]

24 See, ante, § 587.

25 See, ante, §§ 566-568.
IV.

The premises considered, the complainant prays:
1st. That subpoena to answer issue [§§: see, ante, § 164.]
2d. That he may have a decree against the defendant for the amount due him on said note, [or notes:] and a lien be declared to exist in his favor on said tract of land to secure the payment of this decree.
3d. That in enforcement of complainant's lien, and in satisfaction of this decree, said tract of land be sold on a credit [§§, as in the foregoing forms.]
4th. [If an injunction or receiver is necessary, then pray:] That an injunction issue by fiat of your Honor to inhibit and restrain the defendant, his agents and employees, from cutting or removing any trees or timber on or from said tract, [and that a receiver be appointed to take charge of said property, and to collect the rents and profits thereof, and to keep down the taxes, and see that the property is kept well insured.] This is the first application for an injunction [and receiver] in this case.
5th. That complainant may have such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.

WILL A. McTEE, Solicitor.

BILL TO ENFORCE A DEED OF TRUST.

To the Hon. B. M. Webb, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Jamestown, for the county of Fentress:

John Brown, a resident of Fentress county, complainant,

William Johnson and George Smith, both residents of the same county, defendants.

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

That on the 10th day of June, 1888, he loaned the defendant, Johnson, one thousand dollars, for which Johnson executed and delivered to complainant his note, due January 1, 1889, which note is made a part of this bill, and attached hereto, and marked A.

To secure the payment of said note, defendant Johnson executed a trust deed to his co-defendant, George Smith, conveying to him, in trust, the following tract of land in the 2d civil district of Fentress county, bounded as follows: [Here set out its bounds with precision,] containing one hundred acres, more or less. Said trust deed [or, a certified copy of said trust deed,] is herewith filed as an exhibit to the bill, and marked B.

If said note was not paid at maturity, said Smith was required by said deed to sell said land. Said note is the property of complainant, and overdue and wholly unpaid, but said Smith, who is thereby seeking to aid his co-defendant, Johnson, fails and refuses to sell said land, though often requested by complainant so to do. [Show why the trustee refuses to act, or that he does refuse or fail to act.]

Therefore, the premises considered, complainant prays:
1st. That the defendants be made parties hereto by the service of process, and be required to answer this bill, but not on oath. [If the trustee has the trust deed in his possession, then add: Respondent Smith will file said trust deed with his answer; or complainant will, at the hearing, read a certified copy thereof.]
2d. That said trust deed be enforced, and the land therein conveyed be sold to satisfy complainant's said debt, and the interest thereon and the costs of this suit; and that said sale be on a credit of not less than ten nor more than twenty-four months, and in bar of the equity of redemption.
3d. That complainant may, also, have such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.

LUTHER T. SMITH, Solicitor.

BILL TO FORECLOSE A MORTGAGE.

[Address and commencement of bill, as in §§ 155; 164, ante.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

That on the 10th day of August, 1887, the defendant executed to him a mortgage on the following tract of land, in Marion county: [Here describe it fully, following the description in the mortgage, if it be full.] Said mortgage is herewith filed as an exhibit, marked A.

That said mortgage was made to secure to complainant the payment of a note for ten thousand dollars, executed to complainant by the defendant for money loaned him, on the same day, and due one year thereafter, with interest from date. Said note is the property of complainant, and is overdue, and wholly unpaid, except the sum of eight hundred dollars, paid January 5, 1890. Said note is made a part of this bill, and is hereto attached, and marked B.

III.

Said mortgage provides that in case said note was not paid at maturity, the said land should become absolutely the property of complainant, but he is advised that a Court of Equity regards such an instrument as a mere security for the debt.

IV.

Said land is in possession of the defendant, who refuses to surrender it, and relies on his rights as a mortgagor in a Court of Equity. He is not properly caring for said land, and is allowing it to greatly deteriorate. He is having all the valuable timber cut off the land for railroad ties. The land is not now worth more than the mortgage debt. He has not paid the taxes thereon for the last year; and none of the buildings thereon are insured. He is wholly insolvent. [Allege any facts showing that the value of the land is being lessened, or the security endangered, and showing the necessity of an injunction and a receiver.]

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [cpr.: see, ante, §164.]

2d. That said mortgage be foreclosed, that said tract of land be sold to satisfy complainant's said debt, and the costs of this suit; and that said sale be on a credit of not less than six nor more than twenty-four months, and in bar of the equity of redemption. [If the mortgage contains a power of sale, so show, and pray that the sale may be on the terms specified in such mortgage.]

3d. That complainant have a decree for the amount due him on said note, principal and interest, and that if the proceeds of said sale do not satisfy this decree, that he may have an execution for the balance due thereon.26

4th. That an injunction be issued, by fiat of your Honor, to inhibit and restrain the defendant from cutting, removing, or selling any more of the trees or timber on said land; and that a receiver be appointed to take possession of said land, and apply its rents and profits, including the timber now cut, (1) to the payment of said taxes, (2) to the insurance of the buildings on said land [if the buildings constitute a large proportion of the value of the security.] and (3) to the discharge of the interest on said note. This is the first application for an injunction or a receiver in this case.

5th. That complainant may have such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.

[Annex affidavit and jurat: see, ante, §789.]

SUITS TO PROTECT AND RECOVER REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY.

ARTICLE I. Suits to Protect Interests in Land.
ARTICLE II. Suits to Recover Interests in Land.

SUITS TO PROTECT INTERESTS IN LANDS.

§ 1042. Suits Quia Timet.
§ 1043. Suits to Protect the Homestead.
§ 1044. Suits to Redeem.

§ 1042. Suits Quia Timet.—Bills quia timet lie where a person has reasonable fears of being subjected to future inconvenience, probable or even possible to happen by the neglect, inadvertence or culpability of another, in which case the Court will quiet his apprehensions by removing the cause. The main objects of such a bill are: 1, to guard against possible or prospective injuries, and 2, to preserve the means by which existing rights may be protected from future or contingent violations. Under this jurisdiction the Chancery Court

1. Will cancel a void or voidable deed, bond, note or other instrument, that may be used in the future to complainant’s detriment.
2. Will appoint a receiver, when there is danger of trust property being misused, or the trustee is insolvent, or his bond insufficient.
3. Will remove clouds from one’s title, or prevent an act which will create a cloud.
4. Will enjoin the establishment of a new county that will reduce an old county below its constitutional area.
5. Where a surety is in danger of being injured by the creditor’s delay in bringing suit, he may bring the creditor and principal debtor before the Court, and have a decree on the obligation in question in favor of the creditor against the principal.
6. Where the principal is dead the surety may, by bill, compel his executor or administrator to exonerate him.
7. In any case where the complainant is secondarily liable for any debt he may bring his principal and the creditor into Court, and have a decree against his principal and himself in favor of the creditor for the debt, and if the creditor has any collateral security, or any lien of any sort, to secure such debt, the complainant may have such collateral or lien applied to the payment of the debt and satisfaction of said decree.
8. Where a tenant for life, or other party in rightful possession of land, is § 1043. Suits to Protect the Homestead.—A conveyance of the homestead without his wife joining therein as required by the statute is void so far as she is concerned; and she may, by next friend, file a bill in Chancery to have such sale declared a cloud upon her homestead, and the purchaser perpetually enjoined from attempting to enforce it. Her husband must be made a defendant along with the purchaser. So the husband, or any head of a family, may file a bill to protect his homestead when levied on illegally, or in any case when his right is put in jeopardy.

BILL BY WIFE TO PROTECT HER HOMESTEAD.

[For address and caption see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]

Complainant, Mary Doe, wife of the defendant, John Doe, suing by James Buck, her next friend, respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That she is the wife of the defendant John Doe, and that down to April 1, 1905, she and her said husband were in possession of the following tract of land [or, house and lot; locating it and describing it: see, ante, § 172.]

II. That said tract of land [or house and lot] was the only real estate owned by her husband on said April 1, 1905, and was then occupied by her husband and his family, herself included, as their homestead. On said day her husband sold and conveyed said tract of land [or house and lot] to his co-defendant, John Short. Complainant did not join in said conveyance, and in no way participated therein. On the other hand, she positively refused to sign the deed, having regard to the fact that her husband owned no other land, and that she was the mother of six children, the oldest of them thirteen years old.

That her husband has acquired no real estate since said conveyance by him, and if he and she should be dispossessed under said conveyance they would have no home or land of their own to go to.

IV. That [if the defendant, Short, obtained said conveyance for an inadequate consideration, or in payment of old debts, or on any other unmeritorious consideration, state the facts. If he is threatening to take any legal steps to obtain possession, so state. If he has been endeavoring to persuade or pay complainant to sign and acknowledge said conveyance, state the circumstances.]

V. Complainant is resolved never to voluntarily give up her said homestead until another is provided for her, and there is no prospect of another: therefore, she comes to your Honor and prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c.: see, ante, §§ 158; 164.]

2d. That said conveyance by her husband to his co-defendant, John Short, be declared null and void and of no effect, and a cloud on her homestead rights; and that said defendant, John Short, be perpetually enjoined at the hearing from in any way asserting, or attempting to assert, any claim to said tract of land under said conveyance, and that her right to said homestead be declared and quieted.

3d. That she have such further and other relief as her case may require, and your Honor may deem proper.

JAMES SEVIER, Solicitor.

§ 1044. Suits to Redeem.—Whenever the right to redeem land exists, whether by contract, decree, or operation of law, and the party in possession under the contract, decree or sheriff’s deed refuses to surrender the possession on tender of the redemption money, or disputes complainant’s right of redemption, the proper remedy is a bill in Chancery to enforce such right. The right to redeem land exists: (1) where the mortgagee, or his assignee, is in possession, and the mortgage debt has been duly paid or tendered; and (2) where the land has been sold subject to redemption, and the amount of the bid and interest has been duly paid, or tendered.

9 The wife is not bound by any participation, unless she signed and acknowledged the deed as required by the statute.
BILLS TO REDEEM.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§155; 164.]

I.

That on the 19th day of April, 1901, he was the owner in fee of the following tract of land in the 4th civil district of Campbell county, adjoining the lands of William Allen, Alexander Lloyd, and others, and bounded as follows: Beginning on a stake at the northwest corner of the Baptist Church lot, [giving description by corners, courses and distances, or other adequate description: see, §172, ante.]

II.

That on said day said tract of land was sold [Here show how it was sold, whether by the Sheriff under an execution, or by the Clerk and Master of a Chancery Court, and not in bar of redemption, or by a County Trustee. If under execution or decree, specify the Court, and if by a County Trustee state of what county. If sold under a mortgage or deed of trust with power of sale, so state, and briefly describe the instrument.]

That at said sale the defendant became the purchaser at the price of six hundred dollars [If any one redeemed from the purchaser, so state, and give the facts, and make him the defendant. If the original purchaser has parted with his interest in the land state the facts and make his assignee or vendee the defendant, or one of the defendants.] The defendant is in possession of said land under his said purchase, and has so been in possession ever since the 2nd day of August, 1901, enjoying the rents and profits thereof [If the defendant is not in possession by self or tenant, omit this allegation.]

III.

That on the 2nd day of January, 1902, complainant tendered to the defendant the sum of [stating the amount of money tendered, which, of course, must be the full amount paid for the land at said sale, and interest thereon to the day of the tender. If the tender or payment is made to the Clerk of the Court under whose judgment or decree the land was sold, so state, and explain why not made to the purchaser,] which he refused to receive, denying complainant's right to redeem and claiming that he owned the land free from any liability of redemption by complainant. [If the money was paid to the Clerk and refused by the defendant, so modify the above allegation.]

The premises considered, complainant now brings said redemption money into Court, principal and interest, and continues the tender thereof and prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c.: see, ante, §§158; 164.]

2d. That complainant's right to redeem said tract of land be declared and enforced, and the title and possession thereof be restored to him as fully as though said sale had never been made.

3d. That the defendant be compelled to account for the rents and profits of said land while in his possession or under his control, and that a reference to the Master be had to ascertain the amount due.

4th. That complainant have such further and other relief in the premises as may be just and equitable.

W. A. Owens, Solicitor.

If the defendant is committing any waste on the land, so charge in the bill, and specify the character and amount of such waste, and if it be considerable, and the redemption money insufficient to cover it, pray for an injunction against the waste, and also for a receiver. In such a case the bill must be verified.

10 Acts of 1870, ch. 111. The party entitled to redeem has the right to pay the redemption money to the Clerk. If the money has been paid to the Clerk of the Court no tender is necessary; nor is any tender necessary where the complainant's right of redemption is absolutely denied. Rogers v. Tindell, 15 Firk., 356. If the Clerk received the money, but the defendant refused it, and claims the land, denying complainant's right to redeem, so allege.
ARTICLE II.

SUTITS TO RECOVER INTERESTS IN LAND.

§ 1045. An Ejectment Bill.—A bill may be filed in the Chancery Court (1) to recover land when the title of the complainant is disputed, or (2) to recover the possession of houses or lands when the complainant’s right of possession is denied or disputed.1 In drawing an ejectment bill it is, ordinarily, not necessary to do more than (1) to aver that the complainant is the owner in fee of, or has a present subsisting life-estate in, or has a leasehold estate, or has an undivided interest as tenant, in common, or has an easement, or some other specified valid subsisting legal interest, in the particular land described in the bill, and a right to the immediate possession thereof;2 (2) to describe the land so as to identify it; (3) to show when and how the defendant obtained possession, or what acts of ownership he is exercising, what damage he is doing to the fee, if any, and, generally wherein and how he is interfering with the complainant’s rights; (4) to specify what rents and profits the defendant has, or might have received, or is liable for, and what timber he has cut, coal mined, stone or marble quarried, buildings or fences removed, or other waste committed, and the value thereof;3 (5) to pray to have the complainant’s rights to said land declared and enforced, to have him put in possession thereof, to have the defendant’s deed or other evidence of title, if any, declared a cloud on complainant’s title, and removed, and the defendant perpetually enjoined from setting up any further claim to said land under said title, and (6) to pray for an account of the rents and profits received, and of the waste committed, by the defendant, and a decree therefor, and for general relief. If the defendant has any color of title, it may be prudent to specify it, and show its infirmity, and pray to have it declared a cloud. The land, lot, or house sued for should be described according to the complainant’s title papers; and the suit must be brought in the county where the land, or some part of it, is situated. The bill need not be sworn to, unless it prays for some extraordinary process.

If the complainant is entitled to the immediate possession of the house, lot, or tract sued for, it is not necessary to allege title; or if he has title in common with others, or has a mere life-estate or a leasehold interest, it is not necessary

1 In other words, whenever an ejectment suit or a forcible entry and detainer, or a forcible or unlawful detainer suit will lie in the Circuit Court, a bill will lie in Chancery for the same relief.

The jurisdiction of the Chancery Court to entertain an ejectment bill was well settled before the Act of 1877, ch. 97. Alimony v. Hicks, 3 Head, 39; Buck v. Williams, 10 Heisk., 277; Coal Creek M. & M. Co. v. Ross, 12 Lea, 8; and Ross v. Scott, 15 Lea, 489; Walsh v. Crook, 7 Pick., 388. Now, under the Act of 1877, the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court is co-extensive with that of the Circuit Court in suits to recover possession of land. Smith v. Taylor, 11 Lea, 743. And the fact that the land is of less value than fifty dollars does not deprive the Chancery Court of its jurisdiction. Frazier v. Browning, 11 Lea, 253.

2 Code, §§ 3229; 3235.

3 An ejectment bill in Chancery is more effective than an ejectment suit in the Circuit Court, because rents and the value of waste can be recovered, and waste and trespasses can be enjoined, in the same suit; whereas, in the Circuit Court, the value of the waste and the rents cannot be recovered in the ejectment suit. And tenants in common may recover the land by an ejectment bill, and by the same bill have the land partitioned. Burks v. Burks, 7 Bay., 357. But an ejectment bill by one tenant in common does not entitle to the benefit of his co-tenants. Williams v. M. & M. Co., 7 Cates, 578.
to define the extent or character of his title: it will be sufficient for him to allege that he is owner of, and entitled to the possession of, the tract sued for. Nevertheless, as a rule, it is better pleading to specify the character and extent of the complainant's title and interest, because, although when he sues for the whole, he can recover such a part and such an interest as he may be entitled to, nevertheless an excessive or general claim, when not justified by the proof, may cause such an increase of costs that the complainant may be taxed with a part thereof as a penalty for not specifying his title or claim more precisely.

If the bill be to recover possession alone, in the nature of a detainer bill, it need allege only (1) that the complainant is entitled to the immediate possession of the tract or lot of land, describing it, and (2) that the defendant unlawfully detains the same from him; and may pray for a decree for rents, as well as that the complainant be restored to the possession of the premises sued for. The value of the land, or of the interest claimed, or of the use or rents of the land, is immaterial to the jurisdiction of the Court, whether the bill seeks to recover the land on the strength of title, or seeks to recover the possession only.

§ 1046. Form of an Ejectment Bill.—The following form will help to illustrate the general requisites of an ejectment bill:

AN EJECTMENT BILL.

To the Hon. Henry R. Gibson, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Huntsville:

John Claimer, a resident of Scott county, complainant,

vs.

George Possessor, James Waster, and Henry Trespasser, all residents of Scott county, defendants.

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That he is the owner in fee of [or, that he owns for and during the term of his natural life, or, that he owns for and during the term of the natural life of Sarah Brown, the widow of John Brown, or, during the term of the natural life of John Brown, tenant by courtesy of the lands of Sarah Brown, his deceased wife, or, that he owns an undivided one-fourth interest in fee, or for his life, as tenant in common with the said defendants; or, that he is the owner of a leasehold estate of five years in] and entitled to the immediate possession of, the following tract of land, situated in the 2d civil district of Scott county: Beginning on a large walnut, [and so on, describing the land precisely, according to the description by metes and bounds in the complainant's deed, or other evidence of title] to the beginning, containing two hundred acres, more or less, and adjoining the lands of Charles Brown and Henry White.

Complainant further shows to the Court that, notwithstanding his ownership of said land [or, of said interest in said land;] and notwithstanding he is, and has ever since the 1st day of May, 1890, been entitled to the possession, use, and enjoyment of said land, and of the rents, profits, and fruits thereof, the defendant, George Possessor, on the 1st day of June, 1890, took possession of said land, and has continued in possession thereof ever since, using it as his own, and appropriating the rents and profits. And the defendants, James Waster and Henry Trespasser, have been, by agreement with said George Possessor, cutting valuable trees on said land, and are now engaged in cutting and destroying other trees on said land, and removing them therefrom. [Specify all acts of waste or trespass committed by the defendants, or by any of them.] The destruction of said trees is an irreparable injury to said land.

II.

The defendant, George Possessor, has recently obtained a grant from the State for five thousand acres of land. This grant covers complainant's said tract, and is a cloud on his title thereto. Complainant holds under an entry and grant thirty-six years older than defendant's, and complainant's privity had twenty years' possession under the grant from which complainant's title is derived. The other defendants are claiming to hold and act under their co-defendant, George Possessor.

IV.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That process issue [&c, as in §§158; 164, ante.]

2d. That the defendants be enjoined from cutting any trees, or committing any other waste, on said tract of land; and that they be enjoined from removing, selling, or in any way disposing of the trees already cut on said land; and that a receiver be appointed to sell the said trees already cut, and hold the proceeds subject to the order of the Court.

3d. That the title and right of possession to said tract of land be decreed to complainant, and that he be put in the possession thereof by decree of your Honor's Court.

4th. That complainant be given a decree for all the rents and profits of said land while in the defendants' possession, and for the value of all trees cut on said land by the defendants, or by any of them; and that full damages be allowed complainant for any and all waste and other injury done said land by the defendants, or any of them, and that an account be taken to ascertain the value of said rents and profits, the value of the said trees cut, and the amount of damages for waste and injury to said land. 6

5th. That the said younger entry and grant of the defendant, George Possessor, be declared void, and a cloud on complainant's title, and removed as such; and that the defendants be perpetually enjoined from setting up any claim, or doing any acts whatsoever, under or by virtue of said entry or grant.

6th. And that complainant be given such other and further relief as he may be entitled to at the hearing.

This is the first application for an injunction or receiver in this case.

John Claimer.

Jim F. Baker, Solicitor.

[Annex affidavit to the bill, as in § 789, ante.]

Notice to the defendant:

At the hearing of this cause, I will introduce and read as proof the following documentary evidence:

1st. A grant for said land from the State of Tennessee to Thomas Chambers, No. 12,643, based on entry 819, by Dennis Angel, made in the entry taker's office in Scott county, on May 21, 1853. Said grant is dated July 1, 1854.

2d. A deed for said granted land from Thomas Chambers to James Williams, made September 3, 1850. This deed is registered in Scott county.

3d. A decree made March 30, 1869, by the Chancery Court of Scott county in the case of Henry Adkins v. James Williams et al., vesting the title of said land in me, the complainant. I will introduce the original record in the case.

John Claimer.

By Jim F. Baker, Solicitor.

§ 1047. What a Complainant in an Ejectment Suit Must Prove.—The complainant must show a valid subsisting legal or equitable interest in the real property sued for, and the right to the immediate possession thereof; 6 and, if the defendant is not in possession, must, also, show that he, the defendant, is claiming an interest therein, or was exercising acts of ownership thereon when the bill was filed. 7

A legal title is ordinarily proved: 1, By a grant from the State; or 2, by connected conveyances from the grantee; or 3, by seven years' adverse possession under a color of title; or 4, by a decree divesting the title out of the defendant and vesting it in the complainant; or 5, by a deed from the defendant, or from a Sheriff or Court Commissioner, conveying the defendant's title, when so authorized: or 6, by a superior deed, or title-bond, from the party under whom the defendant claims; or 7, by proof that the defendant was a tenant whose term has expired, or been forfeited; or 8, by proof by the complainant mortgagor that the mortgage debt has been paid, when the mortgagor is defendant and in possession. 8

§ 1048. Defences to an Ejectment Bill.—The complainant must introduce the same character and quantity of proof in support of an ejectment bill in Chancery, as is required in an ejectment suit in the Circuit Court; and, on the other hand, the defendant may make the same defences. 9

The defendant may make defence by plea in abatement, motion to dismiss, demurrer, plea in bar or answer, or he may disclaim in whole or in part; or if

6 See Bains v. Berry, 1 Les. 37.
7 Code, § 3229. The complainant in the Chancery Court can sue on an equitable interest coupled with the right of immediate possession. Thus, he can sue his vendee, in possession under an absolute deed, which is really a mortgage, and the mortgage debt paid; or he can sue a defendant holding under a sheriff's deed when the redemption money has been paid.
8 See Digests for the decisions.
9 An ejectment bill must not be confounded with bills to set up and enforce equitable rights to, or interests in, realty, or to remove clouds; the latter are strictly bills in Equity, and the character of the proof and of the relief are quite different, as is, also, the character of the defences made. An ejectment bill, ordinarily, seeks to enforce legal rights, only.
he is entitled to any affirmative relief against the complainant, or against the complainant and a co-defendant, he may file a cross bill. The defence on the merits is usually made by answer; or by answer as to so much of the land sued for as the defendant claims, and by disclaimer as to the residue.

The usual defences to an ejectment bill are: (1) a denial of the complainant's title; (2) the plea of title in the defendant;\(^\text{10}\) and (3) the plea of the statute of limitations.\(^\text{11}\) These pleas may be, and generally are, set up in an answer. The plea of innocent purchaser is not available against a pure ejectment bill.\(^\text{12}\)

The following forms will indicate how the foregoing defences are usually made in an answer:

ANSWER DENYING THE COMPLAINANT'S TITLE.\(^\text{13}\)

Further answering, the [or, this] defendant denies that the complainant has any title whatever to the land described in his bill, or to any part thereof; or to any interest therein; and denies that the complainant has any right whatever to the possession of said land, or of any part thereof; and the [or, this] defendant will require the complainant to prove his title and right of possession by strict legal proof. The defendant denies, also, that he is guilty of unlawfully withholding the said tract of land, or any part thereof.\(^\text{14}\)

ANSWER SETTING UP TITLE IN THE DEFENDANT.

Further answering, the [or, this] defendant says that the title to the land described in the bill\(^\text{15}\) is in him; that he has been in peaceable continuous adverse possession thereof, [in person and by those through whom he claims,] for more than twenty years before the bill was filed, claiming title thereto in fee; and the [or, this] defendant relies on and pleads said twenty years' possession; and, also, pleads that he had had actual continuous adverse possession of said land for more than seven years before the complainant's bill was filed, and he pleads the statute of limitations of seven years in bar of said bill.\(^\text{16}\)

ANSWER PLEADING SEVEN YEARS' POSSESSION UNDER COLOR OF TITLE.

Further answering, these defendants say that before the bill was filed in this cause, they, [by themselves and those through whom they claim, or, by those through whom they claim, as the case may be,] had had seven years' actual continuous adverse possession of the land described in the complainant's bill [or, of the following tract of land, describing it,] holding by conveyance [devise, grant, or other assurance of title, specifying his title-paper,] purporting to convey to these defendants an estate in fee; and these defendants say that they have a good and indefeasible title in fee to the land so described in their said conveyance, [devise, grant, or other assurance of title,] and they, also, plead and rely on the statute of limitations of seven years in bar of said bill.

If the defendant claims a part, only, of the land sued for, he must state distinctly in his pleadings the extent of his claim, or he will be taxed with all, or at least, a part of the costs of the cause even though he succeeds to the extent of his possessions, or actual claim. The defendant cannot, however, dispute the title of the complainant to the whole tract, and, in the same answer, disclaim as to a part of the tract.\(^\text{17}\)

The following is the form of an answer and disclaimer to an ejectment bill, when the defendant claims only a part of the land sued for:

ANSWER AND DISCLAIMER TO AN EJECTMENT BILL.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.

No. 423.—In the Chancery Court, at Kingston, Tenn.

This defendant, Romeo Roe, for separate answer and disclaimer to the bill filed against him and others, in this cause, says:

1. That when the bill in this cause was filed he was, and now is, in possession of the following tract of land:\(^\text{18}\) [Here describe it by metes and bounds, according to the defendant's deed or other writing, if he have any; if none, describe it by natural objects, fences, or other sufficient description.] This defendant then claimed, and now claims, said tract of land

\(^\text{10}\) See Plea of Title in the Defendant, ante, § 327.
\(^\text{11}\) See ante, § 331.
\(^\text{13}\) When the complainant's title is denied he must show a title against all the world; and the defendant can, in such a case, show an outstanding title without specially pleading it. Bleidorn v. Pilot Mt. Coal Co., 5 Pick., 166; Woods v. Bonner, 5 Pick., 411.
\(^\text{14}\) Code, § 3239.
\(^\text{15}\) If the defendant does not claim the whole tract, he must carefully and definitely specify the bounds of the tract he claims; and disclaim as to the remainder of the land sued for in the bill.
\(^\text{16}\) It is prudent to add the plea of the statute of seven years to the defence of twenty years' possession; and also, to the defence of seven years' possession under a color of title.
\(^\text{17}\) See, ante, § 395.
\(^\text{18}\) Code, §§ 3231; 3234.
§ 1049

SUITS TO RECOVER LAND.  834

as his own, and denies that the complainant has, or at the commencement of this suit, had, any title or just claim thereto whatever, or any right to the possession thereof whatever.

II.

Further answering, this defendant says, that he had had the actual, open, notorious, and adverse, possession of the above described tract of land for more than seven whole continuous years before said bill was filed, and that such possession still continues and now exists; and he relies upon said adverse possession, for said term of seven years before this suit was brought, as a bar to this suit, and pleads the statute of limitations of seven years, in and for such case made and provided, as a defence to complainant's bill.

III.

Further answering, this defendant says, that as to the remainder of the tract described in the bill, he is not in possession thereof, nor was he in possession thereof, or claiming any interest therein, or exercising any acts of ownership thereover, at or before the bringing of this suit; and as to such remainder, this defendant says he never at any time claimed it, or any interest therein, and now disclaims all and every right, title and claim therein and thereto, legal and equitable.

Further answering, this respondent says that he admits that he has had the use and benefit of the land described in the first paragraph of this answer, and has enjoyed the fruits, rents, and profits thereof; and says he was entitled so to do, the land being his.

And now, having fully answered, this defendant prays to be dismissed with his costs.

Romeo Roe.

T. A. Wright, Solicitor.

Where a defendant disclaims, his answer should be signed by him in person, and must be sworn to as in case of other answers, unless his oath is waived.

§ 1049. Frame and Form of Decrees in Suits to Recover Lands.—As already stated in the Chapter on Decrees a decree for a complainant usually follows the special prayer of the bill: so a decree in a suit to recover land, if for the bill, will usually give the complainant what he specially prays for, and declares the nature and extent of his title and interest to and in the premises sued for, and awards him the possession. If the suit is for possession only the decree will declare him entitled to the possession. If complainant is, also, entitled to any rents and profits, and to damages for waste, the decree may order the Master to report the amounts thereof.

DEGREE ON AN EJECTMENT [OR RETAINER] BILL.

[For title, commencement and recitals, see, ante, § 567.]

On consideration whereof it is ordered, adjudged and decreed, by the Court:

1st. That complainant is the owner in fee of, or has a life interest in, or is entitled to the possession of, the tract of land described in the bill, and of the following portion of the tract of land described in the bill, describing it: see, ante, § 172.] and has the right to the possession thereof; and a writ of possession will issue to put him in possession. Said land so adjudged to the complainant is described as follows: [Here give corners, courses, and distances, and location, if not before given in the decree. See, ante, § 172.]

2d. That the Master hear proof and report to the next term of the Court, the reasonable value of the rents and profits of said tract of land while in the possession of the defendant, or of those holding under him; and, until the incoming of such report, all other questions are reserved.

The defendant will pay all costs of the cause, for which an execution will issue.

§ 1050. Orders and Bonds to Secure Rents in Case of Appeal.—If the decree is in favor of the complainant, he is put in possession at once, unless the defendant appeals and gives bond for double two years' rent of the premises. If the defendant appeals without giving bond, the complainant gives a like bond, and is put into possession. If the party giving the bond is finally defeated a decree is rendered against him and his sureties on said bond for the value of the accrued rents and the costs.

The party appealing may take the pauper oath as to the costs, but not as to 19 Code, § 3231. The complainant has the right to show, by proof, that this disclaimer is false, and thus operate the defendant with the costs of the suit, and obtain a writ of possession. But no writ of possession can be had unless complainant shows that the disclaimer is false. McDonough v. Prater, 2 Shan. Cas. 114.

20 See Article on Disclaimers to Bills, ante.
21 See, ante, §§ 566-568.
22 This clause would be omitted to damages for waste if in his bill he prayed an injunction to stay waste being committed. See, ante, §§ 36; 38.
23 This will be omitted in a detainer decree.
the rents. If the bond by the party in possession at any time becomes deficient the Court in which the suit is pending will require new and sufficient security, or return the possession to the other party.\textsuperscript{25}

The following would be the form of a prayer and grant of appeal in such a case:

From the foregoing decree the defendant prays an appeal to the next term of the Supreme Court to be held at Knoxville, and having given bond for rents and costs said appeal is granted. [Or, but having failed to give a bond for rents and costs, and the complainant having given such bond, a writ of possession will issue \textit{instanter} to put him in possession of the premises described in the decree. Upon the defendant executing a bond for costs, or taking the pauper oath, his prayer is granted.]

BILL TO RECOVER LAND, TO HAVE A RECEIVER AND REMOVE A CLOUD.\textsuperscript{26}

\begin{center}[	extit{For address and caption, see, ante, §§ 155; 164.}]\end{center}

Complainants respectfully show to the Court:

I.

That they are the owners in fee of the house and lot, No. 26, Home street, in the city of Nashville, said lot fronting 25 feet on said street and running due north between parallel lines about two hundred feet to Jones alley; and is bounded on the east by the lot of William Price and on the west by the lot of George Jones. This lot complainants inherited from their father, James Doe, who has recently died intestate, leaving no widow, and complainants are his only heirs at law.

II.

That said house and lot are in the possession of the defendant, Rachel Roe, who pretends that she bought the same from complainants' father, but complainants charge that there is no foundation in law for such pretence; and that if she has any writing of any sort, it was obtained by fraud, imposition or undue influence, while their father was unlawfully cohabiting with her, and was weak in mind and body, and completely in her power; and if she has any such writing, or deed, for said house and lot from their father, complainants call on her to produce and file it with her answer, and to state what consideration she paid therefor.

III.

That the rents of said house and lot are well worth ten dollars per month, and the defendant has had possession thereof ever since June 10, 1905, the date of their father's death, now nearly six months; and she is utterly insolvent, having no visible property except some cheap household and kitchen furniture, worth not exceeding fifty dollars.

IV.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c.: see, ante, §§ 158; 164.]

2d. That the title and right of possession to said house and lot be decreed to complainants, and that they be given a decree against the defendant for the reasonable rents of said house and lot since the date of their father's death.

BILL TO DECLARE AND ENFORCE AN ESHEAT. 5
To Hon. F. H. Heiskell, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Memphis:
The State of Tennessee, complainant, vs.

Thomas L. Beasley, a resident of Shelby county, and the unknown heirs of Harris Goldberg, deceased, defendants.
Complainant, The State of Tennessee, suing by George S. Yerger, her District Attorney, respectfully shows to the Court:

That Harris Goldberg died intestate in Shelby county, January 17, 1897, leaving no widow or children, or other relative or heir, but seized and possessed of the following lot of land. [Describing it.]

That the defendant, Thomas L. Beasley, is in possession of said lot, claiming it under a tax deed, which complainant charges is void, 1st, because such deed is based on a sale made after said Goldberg's death; 2d, because defendant, Beasley, when he made his said purchase and took said deed, was the agent of said Goldberg in possession of said lot; and 3d, he had funds in his hands as such agent sufficient to have paid said taxes, and it was his duty to have so applied them; and so complainant charges that his said purchase was fraudulent and void, and that said deed is a cloud on complainant's title to said land.

That Richard Roe was appointed administrator of the personal estate of said Goldberg, and that all of his debts have been paid, leaving said lot free from all lawful claim by any creditor or other person; but defendant Beasley is in possession of said lot, enjoying its rents and profits, claiming under his deed as aforesaid.

That complainant has made diligent inquiry for the names and residences of the heirs and relatives of said Goldberg, if any, but has been unable to ascertain whether there be any, and so complainant charges that there are no such heirs nor relatives, and that therefore said lot of land is complainant's property by escheat, and was her property when said tax sale was made, whereby said sale was void, the tax lien having become merged into the complainant's fee title to the lot.

The premises considered, complainant prays:
1st. That subpoena to answer issue against defendant, Beasley, requiring him to appear and answer this bill, but his oath to his answer is waived.
2d. That publication be made, as required by law, calling upon the unknown heirs of said Harris Goldberg, and all persons, claiming under him, in any manner or way whatever, to enter their appearance and answer this bill.
3d. That, if no lawful claimant to said lot of land appear, said tax deed be declared a cloud on complainant's title and removed, and the said lot be sold, and its proceeds applied under the statute in reference to escheats.
4th. That, in the meantime, a receiver be appointed to take charge of said lot, rent out the same, and account for the rents and profits thereof; and that the defendant, Beasley, be required to account for all rents and profits by him received from said lot since the death of said Goldberg.
5th. That complainant have such further and other relief as to your Honor may seem proper.

This is the first application for a receiver in this case.

§ 1056. Proceedings Upon a Replevin Bill.

§ 1057. A Detinue Bill: Its Frame and Form.

§ 1053. A Replevin Bill.—A replevin bill may be filed in the Chancery Court in any case where a replevin suit may be brought in the Circuit Court.1

Formerly, a replevin bill would not lie in Chancery, unless the property possessed some peculiar extrinsic value as an heirloom, a family relic, a picture, silver plate, a ring, or some other article of peculiar, uncommon, or unique character, or unless it possessed some other special value not to be compensated in damages; but under the Act of 1877,2 the Chancery Court now has jurisdiction in a replevin suit in any case triable in the Circuit Court.

The bill in such a case should contain the substance of the affidavit for the writ, and the substance of the declaration, at law; and should aver 1, that the complainant is entitled to the possession of the property proposed to be replevied, describing it with reasonable certainty; 2, that the defendant has seized, or detains the same; and 3, that it was not subject to such seizure, detention or execution; and 4, should pray for a writ of replevin, and for the value of the hire or use of the property from a day named.3 The bill must be sworn to by the complainant, his agent or attorney.4

§ 1054. Form of a Replevin Bill.—The following is the form of a replevin bill, omitting the address and commencement; which are in the usual form:

A REPLEVIN BILL.

[For address and caption, see, ante, § 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That he is the owner, and entitled to the immediate and exclusive possession, of a certain pair of bay horses, about eight years old, with a star in their foreheads and a small R branded on the left shoulder of each; and of a certain set of double nickle-plated harness worn by said horses; and of a certain two-horse family carriage, all now or lately in the stable and carriage-house, No. 27 Jockey street, in the city of Memphis, Shelby county.

II.

That said property is unlawfully detained from the complainant by the defendant; and has been so unlawfully detained for the period of twenty days, during which time the defendant has had the possession and use thereof. None of said property is subject to detention by defendant; and the detention thereof is wholly unlawful. Said property was bequeathed to complainant by his father; and for that reason has great extrinsic value to the complainant, not to be estimated in money.

1 The fact that the property is of less value than fifty dollars is no objection to the jurisdiction. See Frazier v. Browning, 11 Lea, 253.
2 Ch. 97. A replevin suit is not for any injury to the property, but merely to recover its possession, and the value of the hire or use thereof during the detention. Colby v. Yates, 13 Heisk., 267.
3 A replevin bill, before the Act of 1877, could be filed to enforce the specific delivery of property to the complainant when the property was of peculiar value and importance, and the loss could not be fully compensated in damages. 1 Sto. Eq. Jur., § 709. The Chancery Court has always had jurisdiction to compel the restoration, or delivery of possession, of specific chattels of such a peculiar, uncommon, or unique character that they cannot be replaced by means of money, and not susceptible of being compensated for by any practical or certain measure of damages. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur., §§ 177; 185; Womack v. Smith, 11 Tum., 478.
4 A replevin bill in Equity is more effective than a replevin at law. At law, the defendant may so conceal the property that the officer may be unable to find it, while in Equity the Court will, by process of attachment, compel the defendant to surrender the property. 3 Code, §§ 3374-3376.
5 The affidavit must be before the Clerk of the Court in which the bill is filed; and such affidavit may be on the affiant's information and belief. Code, § 3376.
That said pair of horses is reasonably worth five hundred dollars; said harness is reasonably worth one hundred and twenty-five dollars, and said carriage is reasonably worth four hundred dollars; and the use of said horses, harness and carriage, is reasonably worth three dollars a day.

The premises considered, complainant prays:
1st. That the defendant be brought into Court by the issuance and service of all necessary and proper process, and be required to answer this bill, but his oath to his answer is waived.
2d. That a writ of replevin be at once issued by the Clerk and Master [by command of your Honor,\(^6\)] to have said property taken out of the possession of the defendant and delivered to the complainant.
3d. That the title of the complainant to said property, and his right to the immediate and exclusive possession thereof, be decreed, and duly enforced by all necessary orders.
4th. That complainant be given a decree for the value of the hire and use of said property while so detained from him as aforesaid.
5th. That complainant have such further and other relief as he may be entitled to, either in law or equity.

A replevin bill must be sworn to by the complainant, his agent or attorney.\(^6\)

While the Clerk and Master may issue the writ of replevin without the fiat of a Chancellor or Judge, there may be cases when it might be prudent to obtain such a fiat, in which case the following form may be used:

FIAT FOR A WRIT OF REPLEVIN.

To the Clerk and Master at Memphis:

Issue the writ of replevin prayed for in the foregoing bill, on complainant giving a proper replevin bond, in the penalty of twenty-two hundred dollars. [Double the value of the property to be repleved.]\(^7\) July 3, 1890.

B. M. Estes, Chancellor.

§ 1055. Form of the Bond, and Writ of Replevin.—Bond must be given in double the value of the property, conditioned to be void if the complainant abide by, and perform, the judgment of the Court.\(^8\) The proceedings on a replevin bill are substantially the same as on a replevin suit in the Circuit Court. The Clerk will issue the writ of replevin in the usual form, upon the bill being sworn to and filed, and the proper bond given. No fiat of a Chancellor or Judge is, ordinarily, necessary to authorize the issuance of the writ. The following forms will serve as a guide both for the bond and the writ:

REPLEVIN BOND.

We, John Doe and Henry Doe, acknowledge ourselves indebted to Richard Roe in the sum of twenty-two hundred dollars; but this obligation to be void if the said John Doe abide by and perform the decree of the Chancery Court at Memphis in the case of John Doe vs. Richard Roe. This July 8, 1890.

John Doe,
Henry Doe.

WRIT OF REPLEVIN.

The State of Tennessee,
To the Sheriff of Shelby county:

Summon Richard Roe to appear on or before the 1st Monday of August next, at the office of the Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court at Memphis, to answer the bill of John Doe; and have you then and there this writ.

Said bill prays that a writ of replevin issue to put the complainant in possession of a pair of bay horses, about eight years old [and so on, describing the property exactly as it is described in the bill.] Said property is alleged to be in the possession of the defendant Richard Roe. [And the Hon. B. M. Estes, Chancellor, having ordered me to issue said writ of replevin,\(^9\)] you are, therefore, commanded to take said property out of the possession of said Richard Roe, and deliver it to the said John Doe; and make due return hereon of the manner in which you have executed this writ.

Witness my hand this July 8, 1890.

E. B. McHenry, C. & M.

\(^{6}\) The writ can probably be issued by the Clerk and Master, without any fiat by the Chancellor, as the Circuit Court Clerk issues it without any fiat.

\(^{7}\) Code, § 3376.

\(^{8}\) Code, § 3377. The complainant may pauper the costs, but must give bond in double the value of the property, notwithstanding. Creamer v. Ford, 1 Heisk., 307. The Clerk will be liable for failing to take the bond. Code, § 3393.

\(^{9}\) This will be omitted if there be no fiat.
§ 1056. Proceedings Upon a Replevin Bill.—The writ of replevin will issue and be executed in the same manner as in the Circuit Court; but the defendant will file his answers, or make other defence to the bill, and the parties will take their proof and try the cause, according to the practice in the Chancery Court. All of the provisions of the Code applicable to replevin suits in the Circuit Court apply equally to replevin suits in the Chancery Court, subject to the modifications necessitated by the pleadings and practice in use in the latter Court; and the rights, duties and liabilities of the officers of the Court, and of the parties, are the same as in the Circuit Court, except that a Court of Chancery may, when necessary, use its extraordinary process to enforce its orders, and more fully effectuate the ends of justice.

§ 1057. A Detinue Bill: Its Frame and Form.—The only difference between a detinue bill and a replevin bill is that the former does not seek to obtain the possession of the property in dispute until the end of the suit; therefore, if the foregoing bill is filed as a detinue bill the second prayer will be omitted. A detinue bill need not be sworn to, and may be prosecuted on an ordinary cost bond, or on a pauper oath.

10 Code, §§ 3374-3393.

11 In a detinue suit the complainant must show a general or special property in the subject-matter, and the right to its immediate possession when the bill was filed. Robb v. Cherry, 14 Pick., 72.

12 If complainant is given a decree for the property a writ of possession will be awarded. Code, § 2997.
CHAPTER LVII.

SUITES TO PARTITION LANDS, OR THEIR PROCEEDS.

ARTICLE I. Partition by Division.
ARTICLE II. Partition by Sale.
ARTICLE III. Gross Value of Life Estates.

ARTICLE I.

PARTITION BY DIVISION.

§ 1058. When Land May be Partitioned, or Sold. — The policy of the law is to give each person his own, in severalty, and not to force a person to continue in partnership with another. Hence, any person having an estate of inheritance, or for life, or for years, in lands, and holding, or being in possession thereof, as tenant in common, or otherwise, with others, is entitled to partition thereof, or sale for partition; § 1061. Proceedings After the Filling of the Bill. and the fact, that the premises are subject to a life estate by dower, or by marriage, or otherwise; or 2, that some of the joint owners are infants, and that it is not to their interest that the property should be partitioned; or 3, that the several estates and interests of the parties are altogether different and distinct, does not affect the right of partition. The Court may set apart, to such of the parties as desire it, their shares in severalty, leaving the shares of others, if desired, in common; and may leave the shares of the minors in common, if to their interest. 2

The Court will not partition a tract of land while the legal title to it is in dispute. In such a case, the bill should be filed by the tenants in common, or some of them, against the adverse claimants or possessors, making defendants of such tenants in common as do not join in filing the bill; and, on such a bill, pray first to have the legal title settled, and then for partition, or sale for partition, among those entitled. 3 Nor will the Court partition, or sell for partition, a tract when the title of the parties is purely equitable. But if, in such a case, the parties have a right to the legal title, the holder of the legal title may be brought before the Court, and the legal title divested out of him, and vested in the other parties; and partition, or sale for partition, thereupon decreed. The Court of Chancery, under the Act of 1877, and previous Acts, and under its inherent jurisdiction, has power to adjust all claims and titles, legal and equitable, and to determine the rights of all parties. 4

1 Code, § 3262. See Bierce v. James, 3 Pick., 538, where it was held that "holding and being in possession" should read "holding or being in possession."

2 Code, §§ 3263-3265. Our statute on the subject of partition closely follows the statute of New York, and was, in part, copied from it. For this reason, several New York decisions are referred to, in connection with our own Reports.

3 Hopkins v. Toel, 4 Hum., 46; Burks v. Burks, 7 Bax., 357; Carter v. Taylor, 3 Head, 30; Almony v. Hicks, 3 Head, 39: Dean v. Snelling, 2 Hrck., 489.

4 See cases above cited; and Code, § 3277; Acts of 1877, ch. 97; Cass v. Hawkins, 1 Thomp. Cases, 238.
Any person entitled to a partition of premises is equally entitled to have such premises sold for partition: 1, Where the premises are so situated that partition thereof cannot be made; or 2, Where the premises are of such description that it would be manifestly for the advantage of the parties that the same should be sold instead of partitioned. 5

§ 1059. Frame of a Bill for Partition, or Sale.—The bill for partition in kind, or for sale for partition, 6 may be filed in the county in which the land or any part of it lies, or in which the defendants reside. 7 The bill should set forth as far as known: 1, the names of the owners; 2, their residence; 3, which of them are infants, or married women, and if married, to whom married; 4, the description of the property, and its situation; 5, the title by which it is held and possessed; 6, the interest of each of the parties; 7, in case any one or more of the persons interested, or the share or quantity of their interest, be unknown, or be uncertain, or contingent, or the ownership of the inheritance sought to be partitioned shall depend on an executory devise, or the remainder shall be a contingent remainder, so that such parties cannot be named, the facts shall be set forth; 8, such other facts shall be stated as may be necessary to show the various rights and equities 8 of any and all parties; and 9, should pray for a division of the property by partition, if practicable or advisable, among the claimants, according to their respective rights and titles; and if partition is not practicable, or advisable, a sale may be prayed for. 9 If the land is adversely held the bill may be filed 1, to recover the possession and clear the title, and 2, to partition it, making, of course, all the tenants in common parties as well as the adverse claimants. 10 Every person having any interest in the property, whether in possession or otherwise, and every person entitled to homestead, dower, courtesy, or other estate for life or for years, or having a mortgage or other lien on the property, should be made a party. 11 The decree of partition will, however, not affect any tenants, or persons having claims as tenants in dower, by the courtesy, or for life, to the whole of the premises, 12 unless their claims are expressly adjudged.

§ 1060. Form of a Bill for Partition in Kind.—All of the tenants in common may join in a bill for partition; 13 but, as a rule, the adults desiring a partition by the Court, join in the bill, and make all the other tenants in common, and other parties having any interest of any kind in the land, defendants. This is the correct practice, as it enables the Court the better to protect the interests of the minors, and to adjudicate the rights of all parties. 14 The following is a form 15 of a BILL FOR PARTITION IN KIND.

To the Hon. J. Somers, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Dresden:

5 Code, § 3293. Exactly what is meant by its being manifestly for the advantage of the parties that the property be sold, is not so clear when it is considered that section 3296 allows a sale when partition is not advisable, and that section 3297 allows a sale for satisfactory cause shown. The spirit of the law seems to be that a sale will be ordered when plainly for the interest of the parties. Code, § 3298.

6 The bill may apply, in the alternative, for partition, if practicable or advisable; and, if otherwise, for sale. Code, § 3296. The form of a bill praying for a sale is given below, § 1066; and is adapted for former use to a bill for partition.

7 Code, § 3268. If all the claimants join in the petition, or assign to the partition, it may be filed in any county in the State. Code, § 3269.

8 The statute providing for partition does not deprive the Chancery Court of the jurisdiction rightfully belonging to it over the subject of partition and over sales of realty for the purposes of division. Code, § 3267. The Chancery Court can adjudicate and settle every question of law or equity between the various owners and claimants relative to the ownership of the land, back rents, improvements, encumbrances existing, or discharged by any of the parties for the common benefit, can elect for infants, reinvest the shares of persons under disability, enforce the equities of married women, and determine and adjust every matter between the parties on principles of Equity, and in accordance with law.

SUITS TO PARTITION LAND BY DIVISION. § 1061

John Scott and Samuel Scott, both residents of Weakley county, complainants, vs. Henry Scott, Charles Scott, a minor without guardian, George Jones, Mary Jones, and Franklin Pierce, all residents of Weakley county, defendants.

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That Winfield Scott died intestate in Weakley county, on July 4, 1884, the owner in fee of the following tract of land, in the 3d civil district of said county. Beginning on a large rock, George Jones' corner, [and then continuing the description by metes and bounds to the beginning.] containing eight hundred acres, and worth about four thousand dollars. His deed for said tract is herewith filed as an exhibit marked "A," and will be offered in evidence at the hearing.

II. The said Winfield Scott left the following his only children and heirs at law: (1) John Scott, (2) Samuel Scott, (3) Henry Scott, (4) Charles Scott, a minor without regular guardian, and (5) Mary Jones, formerly Scott, wife of George Jones. Each of said children have an equal estate of inheritance in said land, by descent from said father. The said Winfield Scott left surviving him no widow; and there is no encumbrance on said land known to complainants. Franklin Pierce is made a defendant because he claims to own the share of the defendant Mary Jones.

III. The said tract of land is capable of being advantageously partitioned among the parties entitled, and complainants therefore pray:

1st. That those named as defendants in the caption be made such by service of subpoena, and be required to answer the bill.

2d. That a guardian ad litem be appointed for Charles Scott, who is a minor without general guardian.

3d. That the rights, titles, and interests of the parties in the premises be declared, and especially the conflicting claims of the defendants, Mary Jones and Franklin Pierce; and that partition of said tract be made between the parties according to their respective rights.

4th. They, also, pray for general relief; and if a partition be impracticable, or unadvisable, they pray for sale of said land, and a partition of the proceeds.16

EMERSON EETHERIDGE, Solicitor.

The bill need not be sworn to, unless it prays for extraordinary process, or for publication, or for a guardian ad litem.

§ 1061. Proceedings After the Filing of the Bill.—The defendants may plead, demur, or answer to the bill. If any of them dispute complainant's right to a partition, or are minors, lunatics, or non-residents, the complainants must make such proof as would entitle him to a recovery in ejectment.17 The complainants may have a reference to the Master to hear proof and report:

1. Whether the complainants, or any, and which of them, have such an interest in the land described in the bill as entitled them to a partition thereof; and if so,

2. What is the nature and extent of their respective interests;

3. What share or part of the premises belongs to each of the other parties to the suit.

4. Whether partition is practicable, or advisable.

The last head of reference will be impertinent, unless the bill pray for partition, or sale, in the alternative; or unless the answer of some of the defendants ask for a sale.18

If the Court is satisfied from the proof, or from the Master's report, that complainants and defendants are tenants in common, and are entitled to a partition in kind, a decree to that effect will be pronounced, declaring the rights of the parties, and the extent of their respective interests in the premises.19 The following is a form of a

DECEASE FOR PARTITION.

This cause came on to be heard before the Hon. J. Somers, Chancellor, on this 4th day 16 Code, § 3296. 17 § 3296-3297. The statutes of New York in reference to partition are almost identical with ours.

§ 1062  SUITS TO PARTITION LAND BY DIVISION. 844

of June, 1885, on the pleadings and proof in the cause, including the answer of Charles Scott by his guardian ad litem, and the exhibit to the bill.

I.

And it appearing to the Court that the complainants, John Scott and Samuel Scott, and the defendants, Henry Scott, Charles Scott, and Mary Jones, are the heirs at law of Winfield Scott, deceased, and as such are entitled, by descent, to equal undivided interests, as tenants in common in the tract of land described in the pleadings, to wit: a tract lying in the 3d civil district of Weakley county, beginning on a large rock, George Jones’ corner [and then continuing the description by metes and bounds to the beginning.] containing eight hundred acres, more or less, the rights of the parties are declared accordingly; and it is adjudged and decreed that partition of said tract be made in accordance with their rights and interests so declared, and so as to allot to each of them an equal one-fifth part of said tract, quality and quantity relatively considered.

II.

And the Court appoints John Price, James Baker, and Richard Page, the county surveyor of Weakley county, each being a respectable freeholder, commissioners to make partition of said land among the parties according to their respective rights and interests, as hereinbefore declared.

III.

The said commissioners, having first been duly sworn, will divide the said tract of land, and make the allotments of the several shares, according to the rights of the parties as adjudged in this decree, having due regard to the relative quality and quantity of the several shares. They will plainly designate the several shares by posts, stones, marked trees, or other permanent monuments. And if exact partition of said land cannot be made among said parties, agreeably to their rights aforesaid, without material injury to such parties, or some of them, the commissioners will make the partition as nearly equal as they can, and charge the larger shares for the benefit of the smaller shares, with the sums necessary to equalize all the shares, or, if they find that said tract cannot be partitioned without great prejudice to the owners, the commissioners may so report.

IV.

The commissioners will be given a copy of this decree, and will report their action in writing to the next term of the Court, describing the land divided, and the shares of each party, by metes and bounds, or other sufficient designation, and filing a plat of the tract, as partitioned, with their report.

V.

It is further adjudged and decreed that the defendant, Franklin Pierce, has no title to, or interest in, said tract of land.

VI.

The adjudication of the costs, and all other questions, are reserved until the incoming of said report.

§ 1062. Duties of the Commissioners in Making Partition.—The Court appoints three or more respectable freeholders, any three of whom may perform the duty, to make the partition in accordance with the decree of the Court.20 The commissioners before taking any step as such must be severally sworn to do justice among the parties, to the best of their skill and abilities, according to the directions of the Court.21

In making partition, the commissioners shall give each party such a proportion of the land, quality and quantity considered, as the decree adjudges him, and they will designate the several shares, by posts, stones, marked trees, or other permanent monuments, and they may employ a surveyor, with the necessary assistants, to aid therein.22

If exact partition cannot be made without material injury to the parties, or some of them, the commissioners may make partition as nearly equal as they can, and charge the larger shares with the sums necessary to equalize all the shares;23 or they may abandon the partition, if satisfied that the premises, or any portion thereof, are so situated that a partition cannot be made without great prejudice to the owners.24

If homestead or dower has never been assigned to any party entitled thereto, the Court may order the same to be set apart by the commissioners; but such 20 Code, § 3279. In some Divisions, the practice is to appoint three commissioners, one of them a surveyor. If the lands lie in different counties, the Court may appoint separate sets of commissioners for each county, or one set for all the lands. Code, § 3286.

assignment will not prevent the premises, including the part covered by the dower, being partitioned among the claimants.\(^{25}\)

The Clerk should give the commissioners a copy of the decree, and a commission authorizing them to proceed. The following is a form of the

COMMISSION TO THE COMMISSIONERS.

To John Price, James Baker, and Richard Page:

You have been appointed by the Chancery Court of Weakley county commissioners to partition the land described in the decree of said Court in the case of John Scott, et al., vs. Henry Scott, et al., in accordance with the rights of the parties as declared in said decree. You are authorized to make said partition, to go upon the said land for said purpose, and to employ a surveyor, with necessary assistants, to aid you in making the partition.

You will make due report of your action in the premises, and a copy of the said decree is hereto annexed for your information and guidance.

June 20, 1885.

B. B. Edwards, C. & M.

Their commission, and the copy of the decree, should be delivered to them after they have been sworn.

\(^{26}\) Code, §§ 3289-3290.

§ 1063. Report of the Commissioners, and Action Thereon.—The commissioners must make a report in writing, signed by at least three of them, showing what they have done, describing the land divided, and the shares of each party, by metes and bounds, or other sufficient designation, and showing how much each of the larger shares is charged with, if anything, and how much each of the smaller shares shall receive, if anything, in order to equalize all of the shares.\(^{27}\)

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS.

To the Hon. J. Somers, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Dresden:

\(\text{John Scott, et al.,} \) vs. Henry Scott, et al.

The undersigned, appointed by your Honorable commissioners to make partition of the lands in this case, respectfully report that, after having been duly sworn by the Clerk and Master, we went on the premises, and carefully examined the same, and made partition thereof between the parties according to their respective interests, as set forth in your Honor's decree, as follows:

1st. We set apart in severalty and allotted to John Scott, as his share, the tract numbered 1, on the annexed plat, and bounded as follows: Beginning on a large rock the beginning corner of the whole tract \(&c.,\) describing it by metes and bounds,] to the beginning, containing sixty acres, more or less, which share we value at nine hundred dollars.

2d. We set apart in severalty and allotted to Samuel Scott, as his share, the tract numbered 2, on the annexed plat, and bounded as follows: Beginning \(\text{giving the description by metes and bounds,}\) to the beginning, containing one hundred acres, more or less, which share we value at eight hundred dollars.

3d. We set apart in severalty and allotted to Henry Scott, as his share, the tract numbered 3, on the annexed plat \(&c.,\) as in No. 2.

4th. We set apart in severalty and allotted to Mary Jones the tract numbered 4, on the annexed plat \(&c.,\) as in No. 2.

5th. We set apart in severalty and allotted to Charles Scott, as his share, the tract numbered 5, on the annexed plat, \(\text{describing it by metes and bounds,}\) which share we value at seven hundred dollars.

6th. We charge the share allotted to John Scott with the sum of one hundred dollars, to be paid by him to Charles Scott in order to equalize their shares with the others in value. John Scott's share has most of the buildings, and it was considered best to give him enough land to make a farm, which could only be done by charging him for the surplus.

7th. The said annexed plat is made a part of this report, signed by the surveyor, Richard Page, and marked exhibit A to this report. A bill of the costs of the partition is also annexed.

All of which is respectfully submitted, this July 20, 1886.

John Price,
James Baker,
Richard Page,
Commissioners.

§ 1064. Decree of Partition, on Report of Commissioners.—If the report of the commissioners is confirmed, the Court will, in the decree of confirmation, divest and vest title according to the terms of the report. The following will serve as a guide in drawing such a decree:

DECREES CONFIRMING A PARTITION.

John Scott, et al.,

vs.

Henry Scott, et al.

This cause, coming on this, January 9, 1887, to be finally heard before Chancellor J. Somers,

I.

Upon the whole record in the cause, and especially on the report of the commissioners appointed to make partition, which report is in the words and figures following:

[Here set out the report, in full.]

And said report being unexcepted to, is, by the Court, in all things confirmed, and said partition ratified and approved.

II.

It is, therefore, adjudged and decreed by the Court, that all the right, title, and interest, of each and all the parties to this suit, in and to each of said shares or lots of land, be divested of them and each of them, and be vested in the respective parties to whom the commissioners have allotted them, in their foregoing report, to be by the said parties respectively held in severalty forever, as set forth in said report. And the Master will, on demand of any of the said parties, and the payment of the legal fee, execute, acknowledge for registration, and deliver to such party, a deed conveying to such party in severalty the particular share of land allotted to him in said report, as his muniment of title.

It is further adjudged and decreed that the complainant, John Scott, pay into Court for the defendant, Charles Scott, the sum of one hundred dollars, in order to equalize their shares with the others; and a lien is declared on the share of John Scott to secure the payment of said sum and interest from this day. This lien may be enforced by motion, if necessary, at the next or any subsequent term.

IV.

It is further ordered and decreed that each of the parties to this suit, except George Jones and Franklin Pierce, pay one-fifth of the costs of the cause. Charles Scott will pay his guardian ad litem, H. Clay James, Esq., a fee of twenty dollars.

V.

The said fee and the costs chargeable to Charles Scott will be paid out of said one hundred dollars when paid into Court. Executions are awarded to enforce this decree as to said one hundred dollars, and, also as to costs, unless the same are paid within sixty days.

If the ground of the exception does not appear on the face of the report, or on the face of the exhibits thereto, the party excepting would be required to support his exceptions by affidavit, or by a sworn petition, corroborated by affidavits. The Court will not lightly regard the sworn report of three respectable freeholders; and it has been decided that their report can be impeached only for fraud, partiality, mistake, or gross error of judgment. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1159, note. The commissioners are regarded as having a character similar to arbitrators. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1154-1156. The Court should require a strong case to be made out before setting aside the report.

ARTICLE II.

PARTITION BY SALE.

§ 1065. When Land Will be Sold for Partition.

§ 1066. Form of a Bill for Sale of Land for Partition.

§ 1065. When Land Will be Sold for Partition.—The cases wherein land will be sold for partition have been already considered. These cases resolve themselves into two classes: 1, Cases where partition is impracticable; and 2, Cases where a sale is plainly for the advantage of the parties.

1. Where Partition is Impracticable. Where the premises are so situated that partition thereof cannot be made, the parties are entitled to a sale for division. Thus, where the premises are a house and small lot, or a mill, mill-seat, mill-race, or a railroad, or a canal, or a lot containing a manufacturing plant, or a mine, or a quarry, or the like, partition in kind would be impracticable.

2. Where a Sale is Plainly Advantageous. Where the premises are of such description that it would be manifestly for the advantage of the parties that they should be sold, instead of partitioned, the Court will so decree. The test, whether it is manifestly for the advantage of the owners that a tract of land should be sold instead of partitioned, is whether it will bring more money when sold as a whole than the several shares would bring in the aggregate when sold separately to different purchasers, after a partition in kind. If the tenants in common would, very probably, realize more money by having the tract sold as a whole, or sold in fewer parts than there are shares, than they would very probably realize by selling their respective shares after a partition, then it would be manifestly to their advantage that the land should be sold instead of partitioned in kind. The advantage the statute refers to is a financial advantage, and the money value of the whole tract as compared with the aggregate money value of the several shares after partition in kind, is the test of advantage.

When the land is adversely held or claimed, the bill can be so framed as to first settle the title and then sell for partition, making the adverse claimants defendants, and so praying. And when some of the tenants in common have not received their proportion of the rents and profits they may have an accounting against those who have received more than their proportion, and the amount due may be paid out of the latter’s share of the proceeds, on proper pleadings.

The Chancery Court has inherent power to convert realty into personalty; and in so doing can bind the rights and interests, legal or equitable, vested or contingent, present or future, of all persons, whether in esse, or in posse, and whether sui juris or under disability, who are before the Court by service of process, or by virtual representation.

§ 1066. Form of a Bill for Sale of Land for Partition.—There is no difference between the form of a bill for partition in kind, and a bill for sale for partition, except that greater care should be manifested, both by the parties and by the Court, to have before the Court all the parties in any way interested in the land, or in its possession, use, or proceeds, or having any mortgage, trust, lien, or other encumbrance, or entitled to any estate for life, or for years, on the whole tract, or any part, or parcel, or share, thereof. The following is a form of a

1 See ante, § 1058.

BILL FOR SALE FOR PARTITION.

To the Hon. Albert G. Hawkins, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Jackson:

James Todd and George Todd, both residents of Madison county, complainants,

Edward Todd, Emily Todd, Jane Todd, William Brown. James Brown, Charles Johnson, George Johnson, a minor, Emily Jones, James F. Jones, and George Cash, all residents of Madison county, and Robert Todd, Henry Todd, John Todd, and Sarah Todd, non-residents of Tennessee, and residents of Texas, defendants.

Complainants respectfully show to the Court:

That Edward Todd, senior, died about three months ago, seized and possessed in fee of the following tract of land, in a 2d civil district of Madison county: Beginning on a walnut, near [&c., giving description by metes and bounds, according to his deed,] containing two hundred acres, more or less. His deed is herewith filed, marked exhibit A, and will be read at the hearing. The said Edward Todd, senior, left no widow, and there are no encumbrances on said tract known to complainants, except a vendor's lien held by the defendant, George Cash, the exact amount of which is to complainants unknown; and said Cash is called on to establish said amount by proof.

The said Edward Todd, deceased, had the following lawful children: (1) James Todd, (2) George Todd, (3) Edward Todd, (4) Emily Jones, formerly Todd, wife of James F. Jones, all of whom are living and parties to this suit. (5) Columbus Todd, who is dead, leaving as his sole heirs, Emily Todd and Jane Todd. (6) Susan Brown, formerly Todd, now dead, leaving as her sole heirs, William Brown and James Brown, (7) Catherine Johnson, formerly Todd, who has died since her father, leaving a husband, Charles Johnson, and an only heir, George Johnson, a minor, without a guardian, and (8) Houston Todd, who has died since his father, leaving a widow, Sarah Todd, and Robert Todd, Henry Todd, and John Todd, as his only heirs. The said Edward Todd, senior, deceased, had another son, William Todd, but he died many years before his father, unmarried, and without issue.

The said parties are owners of said tract of land, or have interests therein, as tenants in common, or otherwise in the following proportions, or manner: (1) James Todd, (2) George Todd, (3) Edward Todd, (4) Emily Jones, and (5) George Johnson, each own an undivided one-eighth in the fee; (6) Emily Todd and James Todd, heirs of Columbus Todd, each own an undivided one-sixteenth; (7) William Brown and James Brown, heirs of Susan Brown, each an undivided one-sixteenth; (8) Robert Todd, Henry Todd, and John Todd, heirs of Houston Todd, each an undivided one-twenty-four. Charles Johnson, as husband of Catherine Johnson, is tenant by the courtesy of the one-eighth that descended to his wife; and Sarah Todd is entitled to dower in the one-eighth that descended to her husband, Houston Todd. James F. Jones is made a party solely as the husband of Emily Jones, and George Cash claims a vendor's lien on the whole of said tract, and insists that it is superior in equity to the rights of all the other parties.

The said tract of land is worth about one thousand dollars, it is not near any town, and is adapted exclusively to farming uses; and it would be manifestly for the advantage of the parties that it be sold for partition, instead of partitioned in kind, there being on it only one house, one spring, and a small quantity of timber.

The residences of the various tenants in common and life tenants are as stated in the caption, and George Johnson is a minor without general guardian.

Therefore, the premises considered, complainants pray:

1st. That all those named as defendants in the caption be made such by service of subpoena on the residents, and by publication as to the non-residents, and that they all be required to answer the bill, but the oath of the defendant Cash to his answer is waived.

6 Code, §§ 3309-3315. For the frame of a bill for partition, or sale, see ante, § 1059.

7 It is the duty of parties, when a stile is applied for, or ordered, to disclose any encumbrance upon the premises, or any part thereof. Code, §§ 3309-3315.

8 If the bill seeks a partition in kind, this paragraph will be entirely omitted. With this exception, and with the exception of the prayer, bills for sale and bills for partition are alike.
2d. That a guardian ad litem be appointed for the minor defendant, George Johnson, to make defense for him.

3d. That the rights of the parties to said land be settled and declared by the decree of the Court, that the said tract of land be sold, and the proceeds, after satisfying the said lien of the defendant Cash, if any, be divided among the parties in accordance with their respective rights; and to this end all necessary references to the Master be made. 10

4th. That the tenancy by the courtesy of Charles Johnson, and the dower rights of Sarah Todd, in said land, be sold with the rest of the land, to the end that the purchaser may get an unencumbered title in fee, said Charles Johnson and Sarah Todd being willing, as complainants are informed and charge, to take the value of their respective interests in money. 11

5th. That the defendants may set up and establish by proper proofs, any lien he may have to said land, and show fully and clearly the nature and amount thereof.

6th. And complainants, also, pray for general relief.

T. C. Muse, Solicitor.

The bill need not be sworn to unless it prays extraordinary process, or for publication, or for a guardian ad litem, or for a receiver.

§ 1067. Reference to the Master as to the Advisability of a Sale.—After the answers of the defendants are all in, or decrees pro confesso entered against those not answering, if the right of complainants to a sale is disputed, or there be minors, or persons of unsound mind, or non-residents, who are defendants, on motion of complainants the Court will order a reference to the Master.

REFERENCE TO THE MASTER AS TO A SALE.

The bill in this case praying a sale for partition, but the facts not sufficiently appearing, it is ordered by the Court that the Master hear proof, and report instanter, [or, to the next term of this Court.]

1st. Who are the owners of the premises sought to be sold, and the respective rights, titles, and interests, of the parties therein, and what share or part belongs to each. 12

2d. Whether the premises are so situated that partition thereof cannot be equitably made, or whether they are of such description that it would be manifestly for the advantage of the parties that the same should be sold, instead of partitioned.

3d. Whether there are any encumbrances on the premises not disclosed in the pleadings; and if so, what, and to whom belonging. 12

4th. What would be a reasonable minimum price for the premises. [This inquiry may be omitted if all the parties are sui juris.]

In ascertaining the necessity of a sale, the true question for the Master to decide is, whether the property sold as a whole, or sold in fewer subdivisions than shares, would bring a larger price than the various shares would bring in the aggregate. 14 In other words, whether the aggregate value of the several parcels into which the whole premises must be divided will, when distributed any are discovered, the Court may order them to be paid, or may relieve the purchaser of his purchase, if the encumbrance was not made known at the sale.

Code, §§ 3309-3315. The Master should search the records for encumbrances, and should examine such persons as appear to be creditors. 2 Barb. Ch. Pr., 307.

14 The following questions may be propounded to witness as to the expediency of a sale:

Q. 1. How near to said tract do you live; and what opportunities have you had to become acquainted with it? Answer fully.

Q. 2. Describe said land; and give the number and character of its improvements, houses, barns, stables, cribs, fences, cleared fields, and other improvements, if any, and show where they are situated.

Q. 3. What is said tract best adapted to, considering its character, location and quantity; to farming, manufacturing, building, mining, grazing, or timber? State why, fully.

Q. 4. What would be a reasonable price for said tract; if subdivided into two or three lots, and so sold?

Q. 5. What would be a reasonable price for each of the shares sold in said land, if said tract should be subdivided into as many shares as there are tenants in common, and each share owned by a different person?

Q. 6. Would it be to the interest of the parties to sell said tract, or to divide it in kind? Give fully your reasons for your opinion.
§ 1068. Suits to Sell Land for Partition.

among the different parties in severalty, be materially less than the value of the same property as a whole, or as subdivided into fewer parts than there are shares.\textsuperscript{15}

If the realty held in common is 1, a house; or 2, a house and lot; or 3, a lot so small that any share would be too small to be readily salable; or 4, a farm so small that any share would be too small to support a family; or 5, a quarry, coal bank, iron or other mine; or 6, a manufacturing plant; or 7, property, otherwise partitionable, held under a long lease from the ancestors or previous owners,\textsuperscript{16} or fitted up at great expense to be operated as a whole, a sale should be ordered, unless the other defendants are infants, or desire their shares to be left in common, and the complainant can have his share set apart in severalty without great prejudice to the others.\textsuperscript{17} If there be any uncertainty as to the boundaries of the land, or the number of acres in it, it should be surveyed before sale, and if any party is under disability a minimum price for the land should be fixed.\textsuperscript{18}

§ 1068. Report of the Master as to a Sale.—The Master should diligently inquire as to the facts, especially where persons under disability, non-residents, or unknown heirs, are interested, and where encumbrances are probable. He can call before him any witness he deems necessary for the discovery of the truth. The following is the form of a REPORT OF THE MASTER AS TO A SALE.

James Todd, et al.,
vs.
Edward Todd, et al.

The undersigned would respectfully report that, in obedience to a decree made in this cause, requiring him to report:

1st. As to the rights, titles and interests of the various parties in and to the land described in the bill;

2d. As to the manifest advantages of a sale, rather than a partition in kind; and,

3d. As to encumbrances, if any;

He has considered the proof, which has been taken in the cause, and reports as follows:

I.

1st. That Edward Todd, Senior, died intestate, seized and possessed in fee of the tract of land described in the bill; and that it descended to his heirs, in the manner and to the extent declared in the bill. [Dep. of James Todd; pp. 4-5, qs. 8-10; and Exhibit A thereto.]

2d. That said heirs and their respective interests or shares in said land are as follows:

(1) James Todd, a son, (2) George Todd, a son, (3) Edward Todd, a son, (4) Emily Jones, a daughter, and (5) George Johnson, heir of Catherine Johnson, a deceased daughter of said Edward Todd, Senior, deceased, each own an undivided one-eighth (\(\frac{1}{8}\)) of said land; (6) Emily Todd and James Todd, heirs of Columbus Todd, a deceased son, (7) William Brown and James Brown, heirs of Susan Brown, a deceased daughter of said Edward Todd, Senior, are each entitled to an undivided one-sixteenth (1-16) of said land; and (8) Robert Todd, Henry Todd and John Todd, heirs of Houston Todd, a deceased son of said Edward Todd, Senior, own each an undivided one-twenty-fourth (1-24) of said land.

3d. Charles Johnson as husband of said Catherine Johnson, deceased, is tenant by the courtesy of the one-eighth undivided interest belonging to said George Johnson.

4th. Sarah Todd is entitled to dower in the one-eighth undivided interest belonging to said heirs of her deceased husband, Houston Todd. [Dep. of James Todd, pp. 8-9, qs. 14-16; and Sarah Todd, pp. 1-3, qs. 1-2 and 5.]

II.

It would be manifestly to the advantage of the parties that the land should be sold instead \textsuperscript{15} Clason v. Clason, 6 Paige, (N. Y.) 541. Thus, if the property, taken as a whole, were reasonably worth, say one thousand dollars, and if the various shares after partition would not be reasonably worth more than eight hundred dollars, in the aggregate, then a sale would be manifestly advantageous. Or, if the property when subdivided, into say two or three tracts, would aggregate a greater price than the several shares would aggregate, if sold after partition, then a sale would be advantageous. Oftentimes, a tract can be advantageously divided into a smaller number of tracts or lots than there are tenants in common, and a sale of the tract as thus subdivided will, often, produce a much larger sum than the tract would sell for as a whole, or than the various shares would sell for after a partition. In all such cases, a sale is manifestly advantageous; and it also, gives the tenants in common a fair chance to buy, if they desire; and, also, a chance to prevent the lots from selling too low. This plan often satisfactorily solves contests as to whether a tract should be sold, or partitioned.

of partition.19 [Depts. of James Todd, p. 10, q. 17; George Harris, p. 2, q. 1; Charles Cooper, p. 4, q. 3.] It is very probable that it would bring a larger price if subdivided into two lots, and so sold. [Dep. of James Todd, p. 11, q. 18]

III.

A reasonable minimum price for said tract of land is seventeen hundred dollars, and James Todd offers to start the bidding at that sum.

IV.

There appear to be no liens or encumbrances on said land, except:

1st. A lien for twenty-one dollars, State and county taxes for the years 1889 and 1890, [Dep. of James Tolson, p. 1, q. 1;] and

2d. A vendor's lien belonging to the defendant, George Cash, the principal and interest of which, down to this date, amounts to one hundred and twenty-three dollars. [Dep. of George Cash, pp. 1-3, q. 2; and exhibit A thereto.]

Respectfully submitted, Jany. 4, 1891.

R. A. Hurtt, C. & M.

§ 1069. Decree for Sale, and Disposition of the Proceeds.—The report of the Master is subject to exceptions, modifications, or recommittal, as in case of all other reports. If the report in favor of a sale is confirmed, a sale will be ordered; if the report should show no advantage or necessity of a sale, on confirmation thereof, the bill will be dismissed unless complainants amend their bill and pray for partition, or unless the defendants pray for a partition. The following is a form of a

DECREES FOR SALE.

James Todd, et al., }

vs.

Edward Todd, et al.

This cause came on to be heard this January 15, 1891, before Chancellor Albert G. Hawkins, I.

Upon the pleadings and proof, and the report of the Master, which report is as follows: [Here copy the report, in full.]

And said report being unexcepted to, is, by the Court, in all things confirmed.

II.

And the Court being satisfied that the facts are as set out in said report, the respective rights and interests of the parties are adjudged and settled accordingly, the share of each party being as reported by the Master.

III.

It is, therefore, ordered and decreed by the Court, that said tract of land be sold for partition,20 and that the Master sell the same according to law, on the premises, on a credit of six and twelve months, to the highest and best bidder, taking notes with security drawing interest from date, and retaining a lien on the land for further security. The Master will not sell said tract for less than seventeen hundred dollars. [This minimum may be omitted when all the parties are sui juris.] But will report the highest bid received. Said tract is described as follows: [Here describe it, by metes and bounds.]

IV.

The Master will report his action to the next term, until which time all further questions will not bid on the lots, but will reserve their bids until the whole tract is offered; and thus the smaller bidders will be prevented from getting the lots desired by them, and for which they would, under proper competition, have given a larger sum in the aggregate than the tract sold for as a whole. When sold as a whole first, the larger bidders are forced to compete, both with themselves and with the smaller bidders, when the subdivisions are offered for sale.

In such a case, the foregoing decree would continue, in substance, as follows:

DECREES FOR SALE IN LOTS AND AS A WHOLE.

And it appearing to the Court from the proof [or, from the Master's report; or, And it being suggested to the Court by the parties.] that said tract of land may be advantageously sold in subdivisions, it is ordered by the Court that the Master employ a competent surveyor, and have him subdivide said tract into two or more lots, as may appear to the best interests of the parties, making a plat of the subdivisions, and describing them by metes and bounds. And at said sale, the Master, after selling said tract as a whole, will then sell it, on the same terms, as subdivided, and will adopt that sale which produces the largest sum. If sold in lots, he will describe said lots by metes and bounds in his report, and file said plat as an exhibit thereto.
are reserved, especially questions relative to the disposition of the proceeds of the sale, and the discharge of the encumbrances reported by the Master.

After the sale has been made and confirmed, and the costs and encumbrances paid out of the proceeds, the shares of the adult parties, not under any disability, in the remainder of the proceeds will be paid over to them, or on their order. The decree ordering the sale, or the decree confirming it, should specifically show the proportionate interests of the respective parties so the Clerk and Master may know how to distribute the proceeds of the sale. The Code explicitly provides for the method of paying out the shares of all parties, under any disability, and of reinvesting such shares, as well as the shares of parties unknown or non-resident.

If the money of any infant, or person of unsound mind, is ordered to be paid to the guardian of such person, such payment should be on condition that the guardian execute a special bond in the Chancery Court to secure the proper accounting for such money. Such bond may be in the following form:

GUARDIAN'S SPECIAL BOND.

Know all men by these Presents:

That we, Roland Roe, John Smith, and Henry Brown, hereby obligate and bind ourselves to pay the State of Tennessee the sum of [double the amount to go into the guardian's hands] dollars.

But this obligation to be void if the said Roland Roe, who has been, by the County [or, Chancery] Court of Knox county, appointed guardian of Romeo Roe, a minor, [or, person of unsound mind,] shall faithfully discharge all of his duties as such guardian, and especially shall duly account for and pay over all money by him received belonging to his said ward from the Chancery Court of Knox county in the case of John Doe vs. Richard Roe, et al., or in any other case in said Court; and shall perform any and all decrees of said Chancery Court in reference to said moneys.

Witness our hands, this August 12, 1881.

Acknowledged in open Court by all the makers, with whom I am personally acquainted; and each of whom I am personally acquainted; and accepted and approved. Aug. 12, 1881.

W. B. Staley, Chancellor.

The following is the form of an order directing the money of the ward to be paid to the guardian:

ORDER TO PAY MONEY TO GUARDIAN.

In this cause, this day came Roland Roe, and presented his letters as guardian of the defendant, Romeo Roe, a minor [or person of unsound mind], and moved the Court to direct the Master to pay over to him the money in Court in this cause, belonging to his said ward, which motion the Court declined to allow, except on a bond being given in this Court to cover said fund.

Thereupon the said guardian, Roland Roe, presented the following bond:

[Here copy the bond, in full.]

And said bond having been acknowledged in open Court by said Roland Roe, John Smith and Henry Brown, to be their several acts and deeds, and the Chancellor having examined said sureties on oath as to their solvency, and being satisfied that they are solvent and fully worth, above all exemptions and liabilities, more than twice the penalty of said bond, said bond is by the Court approved and accepted, and ordered to be entered in full on the minutes of the Court, which is hereinabove done. And thereupon it was ordered that the Master pay to said Roland Roe, as guardian aforesaid, all the funds in this cause belonging to his said ward, and take and file his receipt therefor. Said receipt will be taken and entered on the Rule Docket, in full.

ARTICLE III.

GROSS VALUE OF LIFE ESTATES.

§ 1070. Value of a Life Estate, How Ascertained.—The Court is often called on to fix a gross sum as the value of a life estate, either in lands or in personality. The most frequent occasion for the exercise of this power is in suits to sell land encumbered by dower, homestead, a tenancy by the courtesy, or other estate for life. 1 In our State there is no arbitrary rule, based on the average expectancy of life, whereby the value of a life estate can be ascertained. Each case is determined on its own facts, the object being to ascertain the market value of the life estate in money, as practical business men would estimate it, if it were put on the market for sale. 2

The principal facts entering into the estimate of this value are: 1, the age of the life-tenant; 2, his health generally, and at the time; 3, his habits affecting his health; 4, the longevity of his parents, and 5, the presence, or absence, of hereditary disease in his parents or their children. The witnesses examined should know the life-tenant, his age, health, habits, and constitution; and, having stated fully their knowledge on these points, should then give their estimate of the value of his life estate in the particular fund. 3 The witness, especially if he is the family physician, may also state how many years the life-tenant will probably live, considering his age, health, habits, and constitution; and whether the probable duration of his life is above or below the general average of persons of his age.

The testimony of life insurance agents may, also, be taken to show the average expectancy of life of persons of the same age as the life-tenant, according to the tables used by reputable life insurance companies. And proof as to the expectancy of life of the life-tenant, and of the general mortality of the community in which he lives, would also be admissible.

The Clerk and Master, or Court, after considering: 1, the mortality and annuity tables proved to be reputable, if any be introduced; 2, the evidence of the witnesses as to the age, health, habits, and constitution of the life-tenant; and 3, the opinion of the experts, if any, as to the probable duration of the life in question, will first determine the number of years the life-tenant will probably live, and then, on that probability, estimate the value of the life-estate in the fund. 4

§ 1071. Mortality Tables, and their Value.—The expectancy of life is ascertained by the average mortality of large numbers; and, for convenience, these averages are gathered into tables. There are several such tables, English and American; and any of them, shown to be used by reputable insurance companies, would be admissible; with such other proof as the parties may offer, either as to the condition of the individual, or the general mortality of the community in which he lives. 5

2 Carnes v. Polk, 5 Heisk., 244.
3 Ibid; Washb. on Real Prop., 248; Railroad v. Ayres, 16 Lea, 729.
4 See cases cited in preceding note.
5 Railroad v. Ayres, 16 Lea, 729. There is comparatively little difference between the various life tables in general use. In Carnes v. Polk, 5 Heisk., 248, the Supreme Court says that the Carlisle Tables may be used in connection with other proof; and Washburn, in his work on Real Property, Vol. I, page 248, says that the Carlisle Tables are generally used in the United States. The American Experience Mortality Table, and the Combined Experience, or Actuaries', Table are the ones generally used by American Life Insurance Companies, and have been adopted by the statutes and decisions of several of the States. The Portsmouth or Northampton Table is, also, recognized by the Courts.
The differences between these various tables are comparatively slight, thus mutually demonstrating their general accuracy. Four of the most valuable tables are here given:

RULE FOR COMPUTATION.

The foregoing three tables are each on the basis of an annuity of one dollar. To ascertain what a person’s life estate in any given sum is worth in gross: (1) calculate the interest on the given sum at six per cent. for one year; (2) multiply the amount of this interest by the value of an annuity of one dollar at the life-tenant’s age, being the amount set opposite his age in the table; and (3) the product is the gross value of the life-estate of such person in the given sum.

EXAMPLES.

1. In Case of the Tenancy by the Courtes}y, or Other Owner of the Whole Life-Estate. Suppose the land is worth, or has realized by sale, the net sum of $1,000, and that the life-tenant is 40 years old. The interest on $1,000 at six per cent. is $60.00. By the Carlisle table an annuity of one dollar on a life at 40 years is worth 12,002 mills. Multiply 12,002 by 60, and the product is $720.12, which is the gross value of a life-estate in $1,000.00 by the Carlisle table when the life-tenant is 40 years old. By the Northampton table, the gross value would be 10,705 multiplied by 60, or $642.30; and by Wigglesworth’s table the gross value of the life-estate would be 11,306 multiplied by 60, or $678.36.

2. In Case of Dower.—Suppose the widow’s age is 37, and that she is entitled to dower in a tract of land worth $300.00. Her dower would be one-third of this amount, or $100.00. Interest on $100.00 for one year is $6.00. Multiply $6.00 by 11,035 mills, the value of an annuity of one dollar at 37 years by the Northampton table, and the product is $66.21, which is the gross value of her right of dower in said land, or in $300.00. By the Carlisle table, her dower would be worth 12,354 mills multiplied by $6.00, or $74.12; while by the Wigglesworth table her dower would be worth 11,472 mills multiplied by $6.00, or $68.83.

§ 1073. Frame of Bills in Suits Based on Matters Actionable at Law.—In suits based on matters actionable in the Circuit Court, the material allegations of the Bill will correspond in substance and in verbiage with the material allegations of a declaration at law on the same cause of action. The Code forms of declarations can be incorporated almost bodily into a bill on the same ground of suit, striking out the words "The plaintiff sues," at the beginning of the declaration, and inserting in lieu:

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

That he sues the defendant for [etc., using the balance of the Code form of declaration, and then adding prayers for process, for a decree for the amount claimed, and for general relief]—

Thus, as an illustration, take Code form No. 1, in a suit by an endorsee against an acceptor of a bill of exchange; the bill, omitting the address and caption, would be as follows:

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

That he sues the defendant for five hundred dollars, and says that sum is due him on a bill of exchange here to the Court shown, drawn by E F. on the day of 19..., if a foreign bill upon the defendant [at....] and accepted by him, payable to one G H, on the day of 19..., and by him and one J K, endorsed to complainant. The said bill not being paid at maturity, was duly protested for non-payment; and the amount thereof, with interest and protest fees, is unpaid.

II.

Complainant therefore prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [etc., see, ante, §§158; 164.]

2d. That complainant be given a decree against the defendant for, or that the complain-

1 Mr. Daniel says: Although the rules of pleading in Courts of Equity, especially in case of bills, are not so strict as those adopted in Courts of law, yet, in framing pleadings in Equity, the draftsman will do well to adhere as closely as he can to the general rules laid down in the books which treat of common law pleadings, whenever such rules are applicable to the case which he is called upon to present to the Court; for there can be no doubt that the stated forms of description and allegation which are adopted in pleadings at law have all been duly debated under every possible consideration, and settled upon solemn deliberation; and that, having been established by long usage, experience has shown them to be preferable to all others for conveying distinct and clear notions of the subject to be submitted to the Court; and if this be so at law, there appears to be no reason why they should not be considered as equally applicable to pleadings in Courts of Equity, in cases where the object of the pleader is to convey the same meaning as that affixed to the same terms in the ordinary Courts of law. * * * And where it is to express things for which adequate legal or technical expressions have been adopted in pleadings at law, the use of such expressions will be desirable as best conducting to brevity and clearness. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 362. In pleadings in Equity the same form of words as are used in pleadings at law, may generally be introduced with advantage. Ibid., 363.

In drawing bills to enforce a legal cause of action, the declaration proper at law in such a case can easily be transformed into a bill in Chancery, as the forms given in this section clearly show. Where a bill is a mere pleading, it should, in its essential averments, be as concise and direct as a declaration at law; but when it is both a pleading and an affidavit, it should clothe the skeleton of the pleading with the muscles, flesh, and features of the real case, and infuse into it all the breath, energy, and passion of life. The failure to keep this distinction in mind results in many bills being so drawn as to possess many of the elements of an affidavit when none of them are at all necessary in the particular cases to be brought before the Court. See, ante, §§ 141; 170; and supra, § 1079.

2 Code, § 2939.

3 Ibid.

4 So far, as will be seen by comparison, the bill follows the declaration, word for word; and the only additions are prayers for process and for special and general relief.
ant have and recover of the defendant, or that the defendant be required to pay complainant,§ said sum of five hundred dollars, and all the costs of the cause.

3d. That complainant may have such further and other relief, as he may be entitled to, and as to your Honor may seem meet. H. Y. Hughes, Solicitor.

§ 1074. Suits on Common Law Counts.—Suits brought in a Court of law on an open account, or on an account stated, or for money loaned the defendant, or for money paid by the plaintiff for the defendant, at the latter’s request, or for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff’s use, or for work and labor done by the plaintiff for the defendant at the latter’s request, or for goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered to the defendant by the plaintiff, are called suits on the common courts. Such suits may now be brought in the Chancery Court by bill. The following form of bill can easily be adapted to all suits of this character, and all similar suits:

GENERAL FORM OF BILL ON COMMON COUNTS.6

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That the defendant is indebted to him in the sum of five hundred dollars due on the.... day of...19.... [insert date] by account; [or, for money loaned by complainant to him on the....day of...19...., [insert date]; or, on an account stated between complainant and defendant on the....day of...19.... [insert date]; or, for goods wares and merchandise, (or specific articles naming them) sold to defendant by complainant on the....day of...19...., [insert date]; or, for money paid by complainant for the defendant at the latter’s request, on the....day of...19....
[insert date], or for work and labor done for the defendant by complainant at the defendant’s request, on the....day of 19...., [insert date], which sum of money with the interest thereon from said date is now justly due.

II. That [If there be any grounds for an attachment, allege them here as shown in suits by attachment, ante, § 873].

Complainant therefore prays:

1st. That Subpoena to answer issue [&c, see, ante, §§155; 164.]

2d. That he be given a decree against the defendant for the amount due by reason of the premises and interest thereon.

3d. That complainant may have such further and other relief as the nature of his case may require. H. N. Cate, Solicitor.

§ 1075. Suits to Recover Money Agreed to be Paid as Liquidated Damages.
Whenever the parties to a contract agree that in the event of its breach a certain amount shall be paid, it is sometimes difficult to tell whether this amount is to be treated as liquidated damages, or as a penalty. If it be liquidated damages, then it can be recovered as in the nature of a fixed liability; if it be a penalty, then only enough of it can be recovered to indemnify complainant against the loss sustained by breach of the contract. In either event, suit can be brought on the agreement, and the Court will determine whether the contract is to be construed as liquidating the damages, or as fixing a penalty; and will decree accordingly. The court will peer through the form of the contract into its heart, and see whether the amount specified to be paid was really intended as a mere security for the contract, or as a fixed, definite and unchangeable sum to be paid without diminution. If the injured party can be adequately compensated by damages, and these damages can be reasonably well ascertained, the Court will incline to regard the amount specified as a penalty, and will allow so much of it to the party injured as will make good his loss.

§ 1074. Either of these three forms of decreeing may be used: the 1st is most common, the 2d most like a common law form, and the 3d most like a Chancery form.

§ 1075. Any one or more of these counts may be joined in one bill against one defendant. Indeed, on a bill against one defendant as many distinct and unconnected matters of suit may be united as the complainant has against him, not including any matters of which the Court has no jurisdiction. See, Code, § 4327; ante, § 140.

For form of a decree on common counts, see, post, 1080.

7. The Code form of declaration in the Circuit Court in suits on the common counts, joins a demand for interest as well as principal. See Code, § 2939, BILL TO COLLECT LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.
[For address and caption, see, ante, §§155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That he and the defendant on the...day of....19.... [insert the true date,] entered into an agreement to [here specify with particularity the details of the agreement.]

II. That complainant was very solicitous to have said work done [in the manner, or] on or before the date specified in said agreement [Show the reasons in full why the agreement specified the payment of damages for the default, but beware of using the word "penalty" anywhere in the bill.]

III. That the defendant realized the importance to complainant of [state what the damages were intended to effect,] and readily agreed to pay said damages as a liquidated debt, on his default.

IV. That the amount of said damages so agreed to be paid was intended as a reasonable liquidation of the loss that would accrue to complainant in case of defendant's failure to comply with said agreement; and the defendant having failed to complete said building in the time and manner specified in said agreement [or having failed to do the thing specified in said agreement, stating what it was] said amount has become due and payable to complainant.

V. Complainant therefore prays:

1. That subpoena to answer issue [&c., see, ante, §§158; 164.]

2. That your Honor give complainant a decree against the defendant [if there are several bound, say defendants] for the amount of said liquidated damages, and interest thereon from the...day of....19...., the date of said breach of agreement.

3. That complainant have such other, further and general relief as the nature of his case may require.

C. T. RANKIN, Solicitor.

§ 1076. Suits to Recover Unliquidated Damages.—The Chancery Court has jurisdiction to award unliquidated damages for breach of any contract, obligation or duty, or for any injuries resulting from negligence. The following is a form of

BILL FOR UN LIQUIDATED DAMAGES FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.
[For address and caption, see, ante, §§155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That on the...day of....19...., [give the date] he made a certain contract with the defendant [if in writing, so state] whereby for the consideration of [specify the consideration] the defendant contracted and bound himself to [here set out what the defendant was bound to do, using the very words of the contract.]

II. That notwithstanding the terms of said contract the defendant failed to [here specify wherein the defendant failed to comply with the contract; give particulars.]

III. That in consequence of defendant's said breach of said contract, complainant was greatly injured and suffered great loss in this. [Here state fully and particularly wherein complainant's damages consist.] And he, therefore, sues for......thousand dollars for said damages.

IV. That [If complainant made any efforts to induce defendant to comply with the contract, so state. If there be any aggravating circumstances connected with defendant's conduct in reference to said contract, so state; and in each case give the particulars.]

Complainant therefore prays:

1. That subpoena to answer issue [&c., see, ante, §§158; 164.]

2. That complainant may be awarded said sum of......thousand dollars as damages for said breach of contract [It may be well to remember that Chancery very seldom awards punitive damages; as a rule, damages are compensatory in Chancery.]

3. That complainant may have such other and further relief as he may be entitled to, and as your Honor may deem meet.

J. WILL TAYLOR, Solicitor.

§ 1077. Suits to Recover Money Due on a Judgment, Decree, Award, Stated Account, Fine or Penalty.—The ordinary way of enforcing a judgment or decree for money is by an execution based on such judgment or decree; but when a judgment or decree is about to be barred by the statute of limitation, Equity jurisdiction will not enforce a penalty. See, even under the Act of 1877. Courts with none but or has been rendered in some other state or country, or some obstacle to its enforcement exists, or where the complainant desires to reach equitable assets for its satisfaction, in any of these cases, it may become important for the owner of such judgment or decree, whether he be the judgment creditor or own the judgment by assignment, to bring suit on such judgment or decree; and he may do so by bill in Chancery. So, an award of money may be enforced in the Chancery Court. An account that has been agreed to, or signed by the parties, or that has been acquiesced in by the defendant, is regarded as a stated account, and the amount shown by it to be due may be recovered by a bill in Chancery. Fines imposed by law or in accordance with some law, or ordinance, and pecuniary penalties imposed by law for its violation, and all money due on a qui tam action, may be recovered in Chancery. In all such cases the law implies a promise to pay the amount adjudged, awarded, stated or imposed.

BILL TO RECOVER MONEY DUE UNDER THIS SECTION.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That on the....day of....19... he recovered a judgment [or decree, or obtained an award, against the defendant, or stated an account with him, or a fine or penalty was imposed on him] in the sum of....dollars. [stating exact amount] all of which is unpaid.

II. That [state any circumstances attending the award, or the stating of the account, to show that the defendant participated, or that he agreed to the award or to the account, or acquiesced therein.]

III. That [state any efforts to collect said judgment, or decree, or award, and give the reasons, if any, why efforts have not been made to collect the same, and explain any delay.]

IV. Complainant therefore prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c, see, ante, §§158; 164.]
2d. That complainant may have and recover of the defendant the amount due on said judgment [decree, award, account stated, fine or penalty,] and interest thereon.
3d. That he have such further and other relief as his case may require, and may be just.

O. T. TINDELL, Solicitor.

§ 1078. Suits on Accounts From Another County, or State.—When suit is brought on a sworn account coming from another county, or State, the bill should explicitly aver that the suit is brought on the account, that the account comes from another county or State, and that it is duly verified; and proffer should be made of the account by making it an exhibit to the bill. The allegations may be substantially as follows:

AVERMENTS OF A BILL ON A SWORN ACCOUNT.

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

That the defendant is justly indebted to him in the sum of one hundred dollars (100.00,) due on an account coming from another county of this State, to-wit: Morgan county, [or, coming from the State of Missouri.] Said account was duly verified in said county [or, State] by the affidavit of complainant to its correctness, and said affidavit is certified according to law. Complainant brings this suit on said account to recover the amount due thereon, and herewith exhibits said account and marks it "A," and makes it a part of this bill.

When such an account is the foundation of the suit, the defendant must deny the account in his answer, and must swear to that denial, otherwise the account will be conclusive upon him. If the defendant's oath to his answer is waived, that does relieve him from the necessity of denying the account on oath, as already shown. He may, however, limit his affidavit to such denial, if he so desires, thus:

AFFIDAVIT DENYING AN ACCOUNT.

State of Tennessee,

County of Roane.

Richard Roe, the defendant, makes oath that so much of his foregoing answer as denies the account sued on by the complainant is true; and that said account is not just or correct in whole, or in part.

§ 1079. Forms of Bills in Cases Actionable at Law.—The Chancery Court now having statutory jurisdiction of most of the cases actionable at law, it may be of importance to the inexperienced pleader to know that any good declaration at common law can readily be transformed into a good bill in Chancery. This is especially true of declarations on awards, in assumpsit, on bills of exchange and promissory notes, against common carriers, on covenants, in debt, and on insurance policies. As illustrations of how this may be done, the following bills are given, each of which is based on a declaration at law, for the same cause of action as is set forth in the bill:

BILL TO ENFORCE AN AWARD.

[Address and commencement, as in §§ 155; 164, ante.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

That there were divers controversies between the complainant and the defendant concerning their mutual accounts, debts, and dealings; and, thereupon, they on the 8th day of August, 1890, by their mutual agreement in writing, submitted and referred said controversies, and all other mutual demands between them, to the final award and determination of A, B, and C, [namning the arbitrators:]; and in and by said writing further agreed [here set out any other material parts of the agreement:] that the award of the said A, B, and C, or any two of them, being duly made in the premises, [in writing, or, and duly notified to the parties. as the case may have been:] should be final and binding.

And complainant avers that the said A, B, and C, after duly hearing both complainant and defendant, did, on August 15, 1890, make and publish their award [in writing,] and did thereby award and finally determine, that there remained a balance due from the defendant to the complainant of five hundred dollars, to be paid to the complainant [on demand.]

Notwithstanding said agreement and award, the defendant has failed to pay said sum of five hundred dollars, or any part thereof, and refuses to pay any part thereof, though often thereunto requested.

W. The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. [For process, as in § 164, ante.]

2d. [For a decree for the amount due on said award, as in § 159, sub-sec. 7.]

3d. For such further and other relief as complainant may be entitled to.

Clem J. Jones, Solicitor.

BILL AGAINST A COMMON CARRIER.

A bailor, who delivers goods to be transported,

vs.

A common carrier who fails to deliver.

[Address and commencement, as in §§ 155; 164, ante.]

That complainant, on January 8, 1888, delivered to the defendant in the city of Memphis, Tenn., two hundred bales of cotton, worth three hundred dollars a bale, on a contract that the defendant would deliver said cotton to complainant in the town of Newport, Tenn., in good order, the defendant, for a valuable consideration, contracting so to do, in a reasonable time. The defendant was a common carrier for hire at the time he [or, it] made said contract.

That none of said cotton has ever been delivered, although the time for so doing has long since expired; and complainant is damaged two thousand dollars thereby.

II. The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. [For process, &c., as in § 164, ante.]

2d. That complainant have a decree against the defendant for the value of said cotton at Newport at the time it should have been there delivered, and for interest on the amount from that date, and for all damages he has suffered by the breach of said contract.

3d. For general relief.

N. Cate, Solicitor.

BILL TO RECOVER A DEBT DUE BY NOTE, OR ACCOUNT.

[Address and commencement, as in §§ 155; 164, ante.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

14 Declarations in all these cases may be found in the notes to 2 Greenleaf on Evidence.
I.
The defendant is indebted to him in the sum of one hundred and ten dollars due by note, dated May 1st, 1891, and due one day after date, and herewith filed as a part of this bill, and marked exhibit 1; or, due on account for goods, wares and merchandise; or, on an account for work and labor done, herewith filed as a part of this bill, and marked exhibit 1; or, due for money paid out for the use and benefit of defendant in payment of taxes on a tract of land in Knox county, of which complainant and defendant are owners as tenants in common; or, due for professional services as physician, or attorney at law, or, for the rent for the year 1890, of the tract of land on which the defendant lived in said year, [describing it briefly.]

Complainant therefore prays:
1st. That the defendant be made a party to this suit by the service of subpoena to answer, [or by publication, if he is a non-resident:] but his oath to his answer is waived.
2d. That complainant be given a decree against the defendant for the amount due on said note, [or account,] including the interest thereon from the maturity thereof, [or from the filing of the bill, in case of an account.]
3d. That complainant may have such other and general relief as he may be entitled to at the hearing.

B. L. Risedan, Solicitor.

BILL BY ENDORSEE AGAINST THE MAKER OF A NOTE.
[Address and commencement, as in §§ 155; 164, ante.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.
That the defendant, on August 8, 1890, by his promissory note in writing, for value received, promised one E F to pay him, or his order, one thousand dollars in ninety days from said date. Said note is herewith filed as a part of this bill, and marked A.

II.
That the said E F duly endorsed said note to the complainant, in due course of trade, for value, and before the maturity thereof; [if such be the fact and it is important to so allege, or, waiving demand, protest and notice, if such be the fact.]

III.
That all of said note, principal and interest, is due and unpaid, and that although the defendant has often promised to pay said note, he yet fails so to do.

The premises considered, complainant prays:
1st. [For process as in § 164, ante.]
2d. For a decree in his favor for the amount due him on said note, principal and interest.
3d. For such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.

F. D. Owings, Solicitor.

BILL AGAINST THE MAKER OF A NOTE.
The administrator of the payee of a note,

vs.
The executor of the maker of the note.

[Address and commencement, as in §§ 155; 164, ante.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.
That A B, [the maker,] on June 4, 1888, for a valuable consideration, executed and delivered to C D, [the payee] a promissory note for five thousand dollars, payable to the said C D, ninety days after date, with interest from date, all of which is unpaid and now due. Said note is herewith filed as part of this bill, marked A.

That since the delivery of said note the said A B has died testate, and the defendant is his executor; the said C D has also died, but intestate, and the complainant is his administrator.

III.
[The prayers are the same as the preceding bill. See, ante, §§ 158; 164.]

BILL AGAINST THE ENDORSER OF A NOTE.
The endorsee of a note,

vs.
An endorser of the note.

[Address and commencement, as in §§ 155; 164, ante.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.
That on March 4, 1889, A B [the maker] made and delivered his promissory note for eight 15 The following is a fuller form, but, perhaps, no better:

That the defendant, on May 1, 1891, for a valuable consideration, executed and delivered to complainant a promissory note for five thousand dollars, payable to complainant ninety days after the date thereof, with interest from date, all of which note, principal and interest, is unpaid and now due. Said note is made a part of this bill, and filed herewith, marked A.

hundred dollars to the defendant, due ninety days after date; and that on the same day [or, thereafter,] the defendant endorsed and delivered said note to complainant, for value and in due course of trade, waiving demand, protest and notice, [if such be the fact.]

II.

That said note was presented to said A B, [maker,] at maturity and payment demanded: it was not paid, and due notice of its dishonor was given the defendant, but he has failed to pay the same or any part thereof. Said note is filed herewith as part of this bill, and marked A. [If demand, protest and notice were waived by the defendant endorser, they need not be averred.]

Complainant therefore prays:
1st. For process [as in § 164, ante.]
2nd. For a decree against the defendant for the amount due on said note, principal and interest.
3rd. For general relief.

HENRY T. COOPER, Solicitor.

BILL ON A WRITTEN CONTRACT.

[Address and commencement as in §§ 155; 164, ante.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

That, on August 9, 1889, the defendant contracted with him in writing to deliver to him at his storehouse in Sevierville, within one month from that day, two thousand bushels of good merchantable wheat, in good sacks.

That as part consideration complainant paid the defendant two hundred dollars in cash on said day, and agreed to pay him eighteen hundred dollars more when said wheat was all delivered according to said contract. Said contract is filed herewith as part of this bill, and marked A.

That the defendant has failed to deliver any of said wheat to complainant, although the time agreed upon for so doing has expired; and said failure has damaged complainant five hundred dollars.

The premises considered, complainant prays:
1st. [For process as in § 164, ante.]
2d. For a decree against the defendant both for said two hundred dollars and for the damages he, complainant, has sustained by reason of the breach of said contract.
3d. For general relief.

JAMES R. PENLAND, Solicitor.

BILL ON A POLICY OF INSURANCE.\(^17\)

[Address and commencement, as in §§ 155; 164, ante.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

That he owned [or, had a lease on] a certain dwelling [or, store] house in Sevierville, Tenn., on July 1, 1891, worth one thousand dollars; and he continued to own [or, have a lease on] said house until the destruction of said house by fire, as hereinafter shown.

That the defendant Company, on said July 1, 1891, in consideration of a premium in money then and there paid to it therefor by the complainant, made and delivered to complainant a policy of insurance upon said house, and thereby promised the complainant to insure five hundred dollars thereon from said July 1, 1891, until July 1, 1892, against all such immediate loss or damage as should happen to said house by fire to the amount aforesaid, to be paid to complainant in sixty days after notice and proof of the same; upon condition that complainant in case of such loss should forthwith give notice thereof to the defendant Company. [And so on, specifying the terms of the policy on this subject.\(^18\)] All of which will more fully appear by reference to said policy, which is hereto exhibited marked A.

That after the execution and delivery of said policy, and before the expiration thereof, to-wit, on September 4, 1891, the said house was accidentally burned, and by misfortune totally consumed; of which loss the complainant forthwith gave notice to the defendant Company, and made the proofs required of him by said policy of insurance, and in all particulars complied with his part of said contract.\(^19\)

That, though requested, and though sixty days after such notice and proof of said loss

\(^{17}\) This bill is based on a declaration in 2 Greenl. Evw., § 404, note.

\(^{18}\) The bill should show what complainant was required by his policy to do to entitle him to the insurance money, following the conditions set forth on the face of the policy.

\(^{19}\) If the policy specifies any acts to be done by the complainant as a condition precedent to payment, such as notice of the loss, and proofs of the loss, the bill must aver a performance of such conditions.

have elapsed, the defendant Company has never paid said sum of five hundred dollars to the complainant, or any part thereof.

v.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That all proper process issue to bring the defendant Company before the Court, and to require it to answer this bill.

2d. That the complainant have a decree against the defendant for the amount due him on said policy, and for interest thereon after the lapse of said sixty days.

3d. That complainant may have such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.

§ 1080. Forms of Decrees in Cases Actionable at Law Where there is a Money Recovery.—The following forms of decrees will, along with what has already been said, sufficiently indicate the form of a decree in cases actionable at law where there is a mere money recovery:

DECREES FOR DEBT ON A LEGAL DEMAND.

This case came on to be heard, this May 27, 1895, before Hon. H. B. Lindsay, Chancellor, upon the original [and amended] bills, the answer of the defendant, Richard Roe, the judgment pro confesso as to the other defendants, the exhibits to the bill and the other proof in the cause, from all which it appearing that the defendants are indebted to the complainant on the promissory note [or on the account, or on the contract sued on,20] in the sum of eight hundred and ten dollars, principal and interest.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed by the Court that the complainant have and recover of the defendant said sum of eight hundred and ten dollars and all the costs of the cause, for which execution is awarded.

SHORTER FORM OF DECREES FOR DEBT.

This cause was heard this day on the pleadings, [pro confesso] and proof, on consideration whereof it was adjudged and decreed that the complainant have and recover of the defendants the sum of eight hundred and ten dollars, and all the costs of the cause, for which execution is awarded.

This form contains all the essentials of a valid decree, and is expressly authorized by the Code.21

DECREE ON AN AWARD.

[For title, commencement and recitals, see, ante, §§ 567.]

On consideration whereof the Court is of opinion that complainant is entitled to the relief prayed for in his bill, and it is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that he have and recover of the defendant the sum of five hundred dollars, the principal of the award sued on, and the further sum of forty dollars as interest thereon from [stating the day when the award began to draw interest,] making in all the sum of five hundred and forty dollars, and also, the costs of the cause, for all of which an execution will issue. On motion of James C. Ford, complainant’s Solicitor, a lien is declared on the recovery in this decree to secure his reasonable fee.

DECREE FOR DEBT ON A COMMON COUNT.

[For title, commencement and recitals, see, ante, § 567.]

On consideration whereof the Chancellor is of opinion that the complainant is entitled to the relief by him prayed for in his bill. It is therefore decreed that he have and recover of the defendant [or defendants] the sum of five hundred dollars, the principal of the claim sued on, and the further sum of eighty dollars as interest22 thereon from May 1st, 1891, the day it was due, [or from the filing of the bill.] making in all the sum of five hundred and eighty dollars, and also the costs of the cause, for all of which let an execution issue.

20 It is not necessary to specify in the decree the particular ground on which the decree is based. It would be sufficient to say “from all of which it appearing that the defendant owes the complainant eight hundred and ten dollars, principal and interest. It is therefore decreed that the complainant have and recover,” &c., as above. See next form.

21 Code, § 4476.

22 Interest will, of course, be calculated from the date fixed by the Chancellor, if any is allowed. When interest will be allowed, see, ante, § 563.
CHAPTER LIX.

SUTIS IN THE NATURE OF A QUO WARRANTO PROCEEDING.

§ 1081. Suits Against Corporations, Public Trustees and Usurpers.

§ 1082. Frame of a Bill Against Corporations, Trustees, and Usurpers.

§ 1081. Suits Against Corporations, Public Trustees and Usurpers.—The Chancery Court, both inherently and by statute, has extensive jurisdiction over corporations, and also over persons acting as officials without authority. A bill will lie against the person or corporation offending in the following cases:

1. Whenever any person unlawfully holds, or exercises, any public office or franchise within this State, or any office in any corporation created by the laws of this State;

2. Whenever any public officer has done, or suffered to be done, any act which works a forfeiture of his office;

3. When any persons act as a corporation within this State without being authorized by law;

4. Or, if being incorporated, they do or omit acts which amount to a surrender or forfeiture of their rights and privileges as a corporation;

5. Or exercise powers not conferred by law;

6. Or fail to exercise powers conferred by law, and essential to the corporate existence.1

A bill will, also, lie (1) to bring the directors, managers and officers of a corporation, or the trustees of funds given for a public or charitable purpose, to an account for the management and disposition of property intrusted to their care, (2) to remove such officers or trustees on proof of misconduct, (3) to prevent malversation, peculation and waste, (4) to set aside and restrain improper alienations of such property or funds, and to secure them for the benefit of those interested; and (5) generally to compel faithful performance of their duty.2

A bill will not lie by citizens in their own names to discharter an incorporated town; the suit must be in the name of the State, by her local Attorney General, on their relation.3 But citizens and taxpayers may maintain a bill to have a charter declared void when antecedent essentials were not complied with.4

The provisions of the Code, § 3410, in reference to suits against the officers of corporations, and against public trustees, do not limit the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court over such matters, but confirms and enlarges that jurisdiction; and in suits in that Court against said officers and trustees, there is plenary jurisdiction to make all such orders, either in Court or at Chambers, and all such decrees, and issue all such process, as may be necessary to prevent or remedy wrongs threatened or done, to restore what has been wasted, and to effectually enforce the full and faithful performance of every duty.

§ 1082. Frame of a Bill Against Corporations, Trustees and Usurpers.

The bill is filed in the county in which the office is usurped or held, or the corporation or supposed corporation holds its meetings, or has its principal place of business;5 or, if against public trustees, in the county where one or more of

The following general form will aid in drawing a bill under this Chapter:

brought in "the county or district." meaning that, when there is a Chancery Court for the county, the bill is filed in the county, but where a Chancery Court is held in a district composed of two or more counties the bill is filed in the district. See, ante, § 177, note 15.

7 See, ante, § 178, sub-sec. 15.

8 Code, § 3415.

9 The statutes sometimes denominate this officer, "District Attorney." See, Code, §§ 519, 527, 669, 715, 716, 719, 900, 981 (Shan.) 1026, (Shan.) 1445, (Shan.) 1557, 1629 (Shan.) 1903a, 2141 (Sh.) 3, 3776, 3952c, 3961, 3900a, 5568, 5596, 5597, and 5598. This seems to be the better designation, and avoids all confusion. There should be but one Attorney General, the jurisdiction co-extensive with the State. See Shannon's Supplement to the Code, pp. 198, 211, 763, and 764.

10 Code, §§ 3411, 3412. As to the meaning of the word "District," in these two sections, see ante, § 177, note 15.

11 Code, §§ 3419-3420.

12 Code, § 3422.

13 Code, §§ 3423; State ex rel. v. Wright, 10 Heisk., 237; Anderson v. Gossett, 9 Lea, 644.

14 Ante, Code, § 3421, does not prohibit such a proceeding. It merely prevents the adjudication in the suit for ouster being pleaded in bar of a second suit for damages, based on the same cause of action. If the original suit was in the Circuit Court a second suit for damages might be necessary, but no reason is apparent why there should be two suits in the Chancery Court about the same matter.

The dictum in State ex rel. v. Wright, 5 Heisk., 612, is not conclusive of this question, the decision not being on the point whether the damages may not be recoverable in the original suit. Besides, the decision was made in 1871, and before the passage of the Acts of 1877 enlarging the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court over matters previously of legal cognizance. Bons judicis est illes divinare, ne ille ex illo ortundatur. (It is the duty of a good judge to put an end to it.) See, ante, §§ 36-38.

15 Code, §§ 3409, 3419-3420.

16 The persistent spirit of technicality, though constantly forbidden to enter the portals of Equity, still frequents its Courts, and often prompts its decrees. But its malign influence there is always on the wane; and the disposition to do complete justice in every suit is constantly increasing.
BILLS AGAINST CORPORATIONS, TRUSTEES AND USURPERS.

To the Honorable Hugh G. Kyle, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Huntsville:
The State of Tennessee, which sues by W. H. Buttram, her Attorney-General, on the relation of A B, a resident of Scott county, complainant,

v.
C D and E F, residents of the same county, defendants.

The complainant, the State of Tennessee, which sues by W. H. Buttram, her Attorney-General, on the relation of A B, a resident of Scott county, respectfully shows to the Court:

I.
That, [Here set forth the particular act of usurpation or forfeiture, or other improper conduct complained of.]

II.
That, [Here set forth the title of the relator to the office or franchise, or his rights in the premises, if any. If no relator, show wherein the usurpation consists, or how the interests and rights of the public are jeopardized; and, in case trustees are sued, specify the particular wrongful conduct complained of.]

III.
That, [Here set forth the facts, if any, that require an attachment of property, or an injunction, or a receiver, or two or all of these, or any other extraordinary preliminary proceeding.]

Complainant therefore prays:
1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c., see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]
2d. That the defendant be enjoined from [doing the act or acts complained of; that their property be attached, if an attachment, statutory or equitable, be necessary and allowable; and that a receiver be appointed, if a proper case for such action.]
3d. That an account be taken [when trustees are sued, to show how the trustees have managed the estate, what disposition they have made of the trust funds, and money, and other property which are or should be in their hands. Specify any special acts of mismanagement, malversation, peculation, waste, improper alienations, or other misconduct, for which an accounting should be had.]
4th. That, at the hearing [Here specify the substantial final relief desired, keeping in mind the Code sections on the subject as well as the general powers of the Chancery Court.]
5th. That, [in the event the relator is shown to have been injured by the conduct of the defendant, and to be entitled to an accounting for fees and moneys and property by him received, or should have been received, that an account be taken thereof, and complainant be given a decree for all damages by him sustained by reason of the acts or omissions of the defendant.]
6th. That complainant have such other and further relief as the nature of the case may require.

This is the first application for an injunction, attachment, or receiver, in this case.

W. H. BUTTRAM, Attorney General.

If the bill is filed on the relation of a private individual, he is liable for such costs as are not adjudged against the defendant, and may be required to give a bond for costs. If he obtains an attachment, or injunction, or both, he must give a bond or bonds to cover damages. If the bill is by the State alone no bond is required for costs.

The bill must be sworn to if any extraordinary process is sought, the relator making the affidavit when the bill is on relation. The bill in all cases on relation must be signed by the District Attorney.
CHAPTER LX.

SUITS FOR WRITS OF MANDAMUS.

§ 1084. Suits for Mandamus Generally Considered.

§ 1086. Form of Bill for a Writ of Mandamus.

§ 1087. Forms of Writs of Mandamus.

§ 1084. Suits for Mandamus Generally Considered.—The Chancery Court has full jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus upon bill or petition, making the necessary allegations, and duly sworn to. The object of a mandamus is to compel the defendant to do some specific ministerial act, which the law requires him to do, but provides no adequate and specific remedy in case of his non-performance. It is usually resorted to where an official refuses to do some specific ministerial act which it is his duty to do, and there is no other adequate and specific remedy for his default or refusal. The Courts are more liberal in granting this writ than formerly, the remedy being freely applied when necessary.

It is a general rule that whenever a statute gives power to, or imposes an obligation on, a particular person to do some particular act, or perform some particular duty, and provides no specific remedy for non-performance, a mandamus will be granted.

While originally a mandamus suit was strictly a common law proceeding, our Code has greatly changed the pleadings and practice and made them conform to those in Chancery; and now the Chancery Court has jurisdiction to award the writ, it would seem that the Court after awarding and enforcing the mandamus, might well go further, the bill so praying, and decree to complainant any damages he might be entitled to by reason of the wrongful conduct of the defendant in the premises. The statute giving the Chancery Court jurisdiction does not convert that Court into a law Court, but merely enlarges its jurisdiction, pro tanta, as a Court of Equity, and enables it in addition to its powers as a Court of Equity, to administer justice in cases where a mandamus is necessary; and the rule in Chancery is that where the Court has jurisdiction for one purpose it will take jurisdiction for all purposes, and determine the entire controversy.

§ 1085. Pleadings in Suits for Mandamus, and Proceedings Thereon.—The bill is in the name of the State, on the relation of the person interested, who is treated as the real complainant, so far as the pleadings and procedure are concerned, and must give a prosecution bond. The rules of pleading and practice in the Chancery Court are proper in a mandamus proceeding. Indeed in many respects the pleadings and practice in a suit for a mandamus, under our Code, resemble those in the Chancery Courts in a suit for a mandatory injunction.

1 Hawkins v. Kercheval, 10 Lea, 535. And the suit may be brought in Chancery when the amount claimed is under fifty dollars. State ex rel. v. Alexander, 7 Cates, 156.
2 See Digests, under the title "Mandamus," for cases where the writ will and will not be granted.
3 Mobile & Ohio R. R. Co. v. Wisdom, 5 Heisk., 125, 152.
5 State, ex rel. v. Williams, 2 Cates, 549. In this case the practice in a mandamus suit is fully treated.
6 Because damages are not awarded in a mandamus suit at law, it is no conclusive reason why they may not be awarded in Chancery. The mesne profits cannot be recovered in an ejectment suit at law, but are recoverable in an ejectment suit in Chancery. The present mandamus bill in Chancery is as different from a mandamus proceeding at common law as an ejectment suit in Chancery is different from an ejectment suit at common law.
7 See ante, §§ 35; 36. It is a maxim of the Chancery Court that Equity will not decree a suit where it may decree a remedy. Fran. Max., p. 42. Indeed the jurisdiction and practice in mandamus is almost identical with mandatory injunctions. See Condon v. Maloney, 24 Pick., 82; Hawkins v. Kercheval, 10 Lea, 545.
8 There are a bill, a suit, an alternative writ, an answer, issues of fact for a jury, third parties allowed or for a specific performance. 9 On the bill being duly sworn to and presented to the Chancellor, 10 he will endorse his fiat thereon for an alternative mandamus as on a bill for an injunction or attachment. On the writ being served on the defendant he will do the act required of him, or show cause in his answer at the next term of the Court, or at the next rule day required by the practice of the Court, why he should not be compelled to do what the writ requires. If an issue of fact is made by the pleadings the Court may determine it or submit it to a jury. If a third person is interested, he may, on being notified by the defendant, become a party defendant, and file an answer upon giving security for costs. 11 It would seem from sections 3571 and 3573 of the Code that the defendant may disclose in his answer a third person claiming title to, or interest in, the matter in controversy; and that if such third person fails to have himself made a party by answering, it would be proper for a subpoena to issue requiring him to answer, and if he is a non-resident or unknown, 12 publication must be made against him, and in either case pro confesso taken against him if he fail to appear and answer. So, it would seem that the complainant might make such interested person a party defendant to the petition, if aware of his interest before the petition is filed.

If the defendant desires to take advantage of any defect in the application for a mandamus, or in the form or substance of the bill, he should do so before filing his answer, by a motion to dismiss, or by a demurrer, or such defect will be waived. 13

If the defendant makes default by not answering the bill, or fails to make other effective defense by motion to dismiss or demurrer, or if a decision is made against him after appearance, the Court will direct a peremptory mandamus to issue against him.

It is ordinarily unnecessary to actually issue a peremptory writ, as the defendant either submits to the decree awarding it, or appeals. If the writ should issue, however, it will be similar in form to the alternative writ, but will: peremptorily command the defendant to do forthwith what the decree requires of him, and to return the writ showing he has fully complied with its commands. If the defendant fail to comply with a peremptory writ of mandamus, an alias writ is the proper remedy, and in addition the delinquent may be punished for contempt. 14 If upon the incoming of the answer the complainant deems it insufficient, he may move for a peremptory writ, which motion would be, in effect, a demurrer to the return, the answer under our Code being the return required by the alternative writ. 15 If the answer shows on its face sufficient cause why the peremptory writ should not issue, complainant must prove its falsity, and the issues made by the pleadings will be determined by the Chancellor, or by a jury, as in other cases in the Chancery Court. 16

Great particularity is required in the answer to the bill, and if the answer fail to deny important facts alleged in the bill, every intendment will be made to intervene, publication as to non-residents, pro confesso, a peremptory command, and costs discretionary, all as in Chancery proceedings. Code, §§ 3567, 3575. Indeed the two proceedings are practically identical, the only material difference being that a bill for a mandamus is in the name of the State, on the relation of the complainant, and even this difference is more by the statute, and perhaps not necessary; and, in any event, is purely technical, and absolutely without substance, as the writs in both instances (injunction and mandamus,) run in the name of the State.

9 On a bill for a specific performance, or for a mandatory injunction, as on a bill for a mandamus, the defendant is required into doing a particular act he is under obligation to do, and the proceedings in each suit are almost identical. So a petition for mandamus in Chancery is entirely at home in that Court. Condon v. Maloney, 24 Pick., 82; Hawkins v. Kercheval, 10 Lea, 535.

10 In the sight of our Tennessee jurisprudence an alternative writ of mandamus may be considered extraordinary process grantable by any Judge or Chancellor. Code, §§ 3946, 4434. The bill may be presented in open Court, and instead of a fiat thereon, an order of record made awarding the alternative writ.

11 Code, § 3571.

12 Code, § 3573. Perhaps for the word "un'mown," we should read "his residence unknown," for the Court would hardly proceed against an unknown person by mandamus.

13 The State, ex rel. v. Board of Inspectors, 6 Lea, 12. See, Waiver, ante, § 71.

14 State, ex rel. v. Memphis, 2 Shan., Cas., 185.

15 Code, § 3570; State, ex rel. v. Williams, 2 Cates, 549. Or the complainant may set the case down for hearing on bill and answer, which is the same in substance. Ibid.

against it: allegations of the bill not denied, nor confessed and avoided, will be taken as true. 17

§ 1086. Form of Bill for a Writ of Mandamus.—There is nothing technical about the form of this bill except that it is in the name of the State, on the relation of the petitioner. Practically, the entire litigation is on the lines of Chancery pleadings, practice and procedure.

BILL FOR A MANDAMUS.

To the Honorable H. B. Lindsay, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Jacksboro:
The State of Tennessee, on the relation of John Jones, 18 a resident of Campbell county, vs.
John Smith, a resident of the same county, defendant.

The State of Tennessee, suing on the relation of John Jones, respectfully shows to the Court:

That, [Here show what right or office defendant is withholding from the complainant. Be particular to state fully and clearly the rights of complainant, and if any notice, or other preliminary act is required to mature these rights, show that these requirements have been fully complied with. The essential facts must be positively averred.]

That, [Here show that demand has been made upon defendant to do the act the complainant insists upon, stating time and place of the demand, and that the defendant refused, and still refuses, to do the act.]

That complainant has no adequate remedy for the wrongs he complains of except the State’s writ of mandamus, and he therefore prays your Honor,

1st. To order an alternative writ of mandamus to issue requiring the defendant to [Here specify fully and particularly the act required to be performed—the precise thing the complainant wishes the defendant to do.] or show cause at the next term of your Honor’s Court, [or, at the next rule day after the service of the writ] why he has not done so, and upon his failure so to do, or upon a decision against him at the hearing, that a peremptory writ of mandamus issue.

2d. That complainant be given a decree against the defendant for damages for wrongfully withholding from him. [Here specify the right or office withheld, and any special damage or other wrong done by the defendant to the complainant, in connection with the subject-matter of the litigation.]

3d. That he have such other and further relief as he may be entitled to.

William J. Bryan, Solicitor.

[Annex affidavit: see, ante, §§ 161; 789.]

The bill must be sworn to before a Judge, Justice of the Peace or Clerk of the Circuit Court. 19

FIAT FOR AN ALTERNATIVE MANDAMUS.

To the Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court at Jacksboro:

File this bill and issue the writ of alternative mandamus as prayed, on the complainant giving bond for costs, or taking the pauper oath in lieu.

This April 1, 1895.

17 State, ex rel. v. Williams, 2 Cates, 549. This is the true rule of both law and logic; and should be applied and enforced as to all answers in Chancery. See, ante, § 455, note. As to the necessity of a full and final answer, see, State, ex rel. v. Alexander 7 Cates, 156.

18 The person, on whose relation the bill is filed, is generally termed the “relator” but the Code terms him the “petitioner.” Code, 3574. Indeed, it would seem that this proceeding is largely statutory, and that the Code did not contemplate that the petition should be in the name of the State, at all; and, therefore, did not contemplate any relator. See Hawkins v. Kercheval, 10 Lea, 315, which was a bill treated as a mandamus suit. No one should give any right to sue in the name of the State, without express authority from the State. This authority has been given generally in suits on official bonds, (Code, § 2797;) and specially in case of (1) motions on official bonds, against Sheriffs, Clerks and other officers (Code, § 3584;) (2) suits against administrators and executors on their bonds, (Code, § 2231;) and (3) proceedings against corporations, usurpers, and public trustees, (Code, § 3469;) but is not given in case of bills or petitions for a mandamus. Nevertheless, in Whitesides v. Stuart, 7 Pick., 710, it is said that the suit must be in the name of the State on the relation of the party complaining. In nearly all of the reported cases prior to Whitesides v. Stuart, the suits were brought directly in the name of the petitioners. In Hawkins v. Kercheval, 10 Lea, 542, a bill in Chancery in the nature of a mandamus suit was sustained; in Brannon v. Wright, 5 Cates, 692, it was held that the State was not a necessary party in a suit in Chancery on a guardian’s bond. What interest has the State in a suit by a teacher to collect her salary? Arrington v. Cotton, 1 Ex., 316. When a mandamus suit is instituted in the Chancery Court, under our statutes, it should not be smothered by the effete technicalities of the common law. Let us favor precedents which make for simplicity and equity, and not bow down to those technical rules which once drove Justice from her native seat in the Courts of common law. The ruling in Whitesides v. Stuart, 7 Pick., 710, is anachronistic and savors of the medieval: it is an addition in the statute, but not an improvement.

19 Whitesides v. Stewart, 7 Pick., 710; Code, § 3567. But an affidavit before a Chancellor or a Clerk and Master is probably within the equity and intention of the Act of 1877.
§ 1087. Forms of Writs of Mandamus.—For the information of the Clerks and Masters the following forms of writs of mandamus are given:

ALTERNATIVE Writ Of Mandamus.

State of Tennessee, } To John Smith: 20
Campbell County. }

Whereas, John Jones, as relator, on the 1st day of April, 1895, presented his bill to the Hon. H. B. Lindsay, Chancellor, alleging that you [Here give a brief but clear statement of the specific act the defendant has failed to do] as will more fully appear by reference to the copy of said bill herewith served upon you; and whereas the said Chancellor has ordered an alternative writ of mandamus to issue as prayed in said bill.

You are therefore commanded to [Here state what complainant, in his bill, prays the defendant be compelled to do, using substantially the special prayer of the bill.] or appear at the next term of the Chancery Court at Jacksboro, to be held on the ______ Monday in __________, 1895, [or, at the next rule day of said Court,] and show cause why you have not done so; and that you then and there return this writ along with your answer to said bill. 21

This April 1, 1895.

Winston Baird, C. & M.

If the defendant’s answer fails to show sufficient cause why the peremptory writ should not issue, complainant will move that the writ be issued. This motion is equivalent to a demurrer to the return for not stating facts sufficient to constitute a defence. 22

MOTION AND ORDER FOR PEREMPTORY WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

The State of Tennessee, on the relation of John Jones,

vs.

John Smith.

In this cause the complainant this day moved the Court for a peremptory writ of mandamus, and argument having been heard, and the Court being of the opinion that the answer of the defendant fails to show cause, it is therefore ordered and decreed by the Court, that a peremptory writ of mandamus issue commanding the defendant forthwith to [Here show what the defendant is required to do, following substantially the prayer of the bill for special relief.] The defendant will return this writ on or before [specifying the time] showing thereon, or therewith, how he has executed the same. He will also pay all the costs of this cause, for which an execution will issue.

If the complainant so desires, and the Court deems it proper, a reference may be made to the Master for an account to show what debt, or damages, the complainant is entitled to by reason of the wrong done. 23

PEREMPTORY WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

State of Tennessee, } To John Smith:
County of Campbell. }

Whereas, in the case of John Jones against you in the Chancery Court of said county it was ordered and decreed by said Court that you [Here set out so much of the decree as specifies what the defendant John Smith is to do, and when and how he is to do it.] all of which more fully and at large appears in said decree.

Now, therefore, you are hereby commanded and enjoined forthwith to do and perform what is required of you by said decree, and that you especially and immediately [Here set out what the defendant is required to do as shown in the preamble of this writ.] And you are further commanded to answer this writ at the next term of the Chancery Court of said county to be held at the Court House in Jacksboro on the ______ Monday of __________, 1895, and show in your answer how you have executed this writ.

This July 1, 1895.

Winston Baird, C. & M.

The Sheriff executes the writ by serving a copy of it on the defendant, and making a return on the original that he has so done, giving the date of such service.

20 The writ is addressed to the defendant. Formerly writs of injunction were, also, addressed to the defendant. See, ante, § 834, note 43.
21 Code, § 3569. The alternative writ must be returnable to the Court, and not to the Chancellor at Chambers. Whit-sides v. Stewart, 7 Pick., 710.

SUITS FOR DIVORCE AND ALIMONY.

ARTICLE I. Matters Relating to the Jurisdiction.

ARTICLE II. Pleadings and Procedure.

ARTICLE III. Trial, Orders, and Decrees.

ARTICLE I.

MATTERS RELATING TO THE JURISDICTION.

§ 1088. Marriage and Divorce Generally Considered. — The relation of husband and wife is not only a personal relation, depending on the consent of the parties for its continuance, but it is, also a status, which is established and enforced by law, and can only be changed, or abrogated by law. A divorce suit, in consequence, not only involves the persons to it, but it also involves a thing, a status, the marriage relation; and it is, therefore, a proceeding partly in personam and partly in rem. And it is on this latter ground that a divorce can be granted, and the children of the marriage given to a resident, when the other party is a non-resident, each State having the right to determine the status of its own citizens.¹

So far as a divorce suit relates to the status of the parties, or their children, it is a proceeding in rem; and so far as it relates to alimony, it is a proceeding in personam. And for this reason, while a valid decree of divorce can be pronounced in favor of a resident against a non-resident defendant, no valid decree for alimony can be rendered against a non-resident defendant, unless he is before the Court by service of subpoena, or by voluntary appearance,² or unless he has property within the jurisdiction of the Court; and in the latter case, only to the extent of such property: indeed, the proceeding against such property is, in effect, a proceeding in rem, also, when the Court has no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.

As parties cannot marry in this State without the consent of the State, such consent being manifested by a license issued by a County Court Clerk, so they cannot unmarry, or divorce themselves, without the consent of the State. This consent our Constitution authorizes the Legislature to grant, through the Courts, for such causes as may be specified by law.³ And before a Court has authority to give this consent for the State, the complainant must allege and prove one of the causes of divorce, specified by the law of the State.

§ 1089. Grounds of Divorce. — The jurisdiction to grant divorces is statutory; and the grounds of divorce are statutory;⁴ and, in consequence of the interest the community has in the enforcement of all marital obligations, the Court is always careful, not only to keep within the limits of its jurisdiction, but to require the complainant to allege and prove everything necessary to clearly justify the divorce prayed. The following are the causes of divorce from the bonds of matrimony:

¹ 5 A. & E. Ency. of Law, 746; 751.
² S. A. & E. Ency. of Law, 762.
³ Const. of Tenn., Art. XI, § 4. All marriages in this State must conform to our statutes, and ⁴ 5 A. & E. Ency. of Law, 749.
1. That either party, at the time of the contract, was, and still is, naturally impotent, and incapable of procreation.

2. That either party has knowingly entered into a second marriage, in violation of a previous marriage still subsisting.

3. That either party has committed adultery.

4. Wilful or malicious desertion, or absence, of either without a reasonable cause, for two whole years.\(^5\)

5. Being convicted of any crime, which, by the laws of the State renders the party infamous.

6. Being convicted of a crime, which, by the laws of the State, is declared to be a felony, and sentenced to confinement in the penitentiary.

7. That either party has attempted the life of the other, by poison, or any other means showing malice.

8. Refusal, on the part of a wife, to remove with her husband to this State, without a reasonable cause, and wilfully absenting herself from him for two years.

9. That the woman was pregnant at the time of the marriage by another person, without the knowledge of the husband.\(^6\)

10. Habitual drunkenness of either party, when the husband or wife has contracted the habit of drunkenness after marriage.\(^7\)

The following are causes of divorce from bed and board, and from the bonds of matrimony, at the discretion of the Court:

1. That the husband is guilty of such cruel and inhuman treatment or conduct toward his wife, as renders it unsafe and improper for her to cohabit with him, and be under his dominion and control.

2. That he has offered such indignities to her person as to render her condition intolerable, and thereby forced her to withdraw.

3. That he has abandoned her, or turned her out of doors, and refused or neglected to provide for her.\(^8\)

But in either of the three next preceding cases the defendant may justify his conduct by proving the ill conduct of the complainant.\(^9\)

A divorce may be granted for any of the foregoing causes, though the acts complained of were committed out of the State, or the petitioner resided out of the State at the time, no matter where the other party resides, if the petitioner has resided in this State two years next preceding the filing of the petition.\(^10\) But where the grounds of divorce arise within the State no term of prior residence in the State is required.\(^11\)

\(\textbf{§ 1090. Local Jurisdiction of the Court.}\) The bill may be filed either: (1) in the county where the defendant resides, or (2) in the county where he is found, or (3) in the county where the complainant resides, if the defendant is a non-resident, or a penitentiary convict, or (4) in the county where the parties resided at the time of their separation.\(^12\) If the defendant is a resident, he will be brought before the Court by service of subpoena; if he is a non-resident, or a convict confined in the penitentiary, he may be brought before the Court by publication.\(^13\) If the wife is complainant, and the defendant lives in the county where the bill is filed, the suit may be tried and a divorce granted, without service of subpoena or publication, if the bill was filed, and subpoena for the defendant placed in the hands of the Sheriff of the county in which the suit was instituted, three months before the time when the subpoena is returnable; but the officer having the subpoena shall execute it if he can.\(^14\) Where no sub-

The officer's return must show that the subpoena was in his hands three full months before the return day, and that he tried to execute it, thus: "Came to hand, March 1, 1893. Search made, but the de-pensa is served upon the defendant, the complainant must prove the facts on which the local jurisdiction of the Court depends.\footnote{Persons suing for an absolute divorce cannot sue under the pauper oath. See, ante, \textsection 182, sub-sec. 1.} If the bill is filed in the wrong county the Court has no jurisdiction to try the case.\footnote{Code, \textsection 2454.}

\textsection 1091. Restoration of Conjugal Rights.—If upon a false rumor, apparently well founded, of the death of one of the parties, who has been absent two whole years, the other party marries again, the party remaining single, may, upon returning, insist upon a restoration of conjugal rights, or upon a dissolution of the marriage; and the Court shall sentence and decree accordingly, to-wit: that the first marriage shall stand, and the second be dissolved; or, \textit{vice versa}; but such bill must be filed within one year after the return.\footnote{Code, \textsection 3158. It cannot be reviewed by a writ of error \textit{coram nobis}. Willis v. Willis, 20 Pick., 382.}

The bill will make the party who has remarried, and the husband or wife of such party defendants, for the latter has a right to be heard, and must, besides, be made a party in order to be bound by the decree. The bill should allege (1) the fact of the first marriage, (2) the absence of complainant for two whole years, (3) the rumor of complainant's death, (4) the second marriage, and (5) the reasons why the complainant prefers a restoration of his conjugal rights, or why he prefers a dissolution of the first marriage, and (6) should pray accordingly. The Court will be governed largely by the wishes of the parties to the first marriage in determining the case.

\textsection 1092. The Procedure in a Divorce Suit.—A divorce suit is commenced in Chancery by a bill, filed by the party seeking a divorce against the other party. On such bill being filed, and security for costs given, or pauper oath taken,\footnote{Richard Roe, not to be found in my County, June 12, 1893. J. K. Long, Sheriff.” As to service of subpoenas, see, ante, \textsection 192.} a subpoena to answer the bill will issue, if the defendant is a resident of the State; if the defendant is a non-resident, or convict confined in the penitentiary, publication will be made.\footnote{Walton v. Walton, 12 Pick., 25.}

The defendant on appearing may move to dismiss the bill, or may demur to it, or may plead to it, or may answer it; he may, also, file his answer as a cross bill, and set up therein any ground of divorce he may have, and pray for a decree of divorce. On such answer and cross bill being filed, the same steps must be taken, as on an original bill, to compel an answer to it.

If either the original or the cross bill is not answered in due time after process served, it may be taken for confessed. The cause stands for trial at the first term after service of subpoena, and the proof may be made by depositions, or by witnesses examined in open Court. At the hearing, the issues of fact may be tried by the Chancellor, or by a jury; and a divorce may be granted the complainant on the original bill, or, if there be a cross bill, the party filing it may be granted a divorce, or both bills may be dismissed, as the justice of the case may require.

The decree of the Court, in so far as it grants or refuses a divorce, can be revised only by an appeal;\footnote{Code, \textsection 2461.} but a writ of error will lie to so much of the decree

§ 1093. Frame of a Divorce Bill.—A bill for divorce should conform to the rules of Chancery pleading, and should show on its face every fact that is essential to the jurisdiction of the Court to pronounce the decree prayed. It should allege,

1. The marriage of the complainant and defendant.

2. One or more of the statutory causes of divorce particularly and specially set forth, giving circumstances of time and place with reasonable certainty.

3. If the cause of divorce originated outside of the State the bill should allege that the complainant has resided in this State at least two years next preceding the bringing of the suit.

4. A statutory ground of local jurisdiction in the Court where the bill is filed.

5. And should pray for a divorce, or for a divorce and other and further relief.

6. And the bill must be verified, by the affidavit of the complainant in person, that the facts stated in the bill are true to the best of the complainant’s knowledge and belief, and that the complaint is not made out of levity, or by collusion with the defendant, but in sincerity and truth, for the causes mentioned in the bill.

A divorce bill may be amended as freely as any other bill; but if the amendment consists in the averment of a fact, such amendment must be verified by the complainant’s oath.

A divorce bill is filed in the proper person and name of the complainant. If the wife is complainant, she files the bill in her own name, as though she were a single woman.

§ 1094. General Form of a Divorce Bill.—In order to illustrate the foregoing section, and to show the various parts of a bill, in their orderly connection, the following general form of a divorce bill is given:

GENERAL FORM OF A DIVORCE BILL.

To the Honorable [insert name of] Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at [insert name of town where the bill is to be filed.]

A B, a resident of [insert name of county where A B resides] complainant,

vs.

C B, a resident of [insert name of county where defendant resides, if a resident of the State; if a non-resident, so state.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That she [or he] and the defendant, C B, were married on the — day of [insert day, month, and year, of the marriage] in — County, Tennessee, in which State they have

That [If the defendant is attempting to take any of the children, or any of his property out of the jurisdiction of the Court, or is about to fraudulently dispose of his property, or is doing or threatening any other act that will justify an injunction, or an attachment, allege all such acts and threats, giving time, place, and circumstance, with considerable minuteness. Follow the precise language of the statute in alleging the grounds for an attachment.]

VIII.

That [If the defendant has conveyed away any of his property, to hinder and delay complainant in her efforts to obtain alimony, and to deprive her of the same, so allege, specifying the property, and fully describing it, and giving the name of the fraudulent vendee, and making him a co-defendant to the suit.]

IX.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That the proper process issue to compel the defendant to appear, and answer the bill, but his oath to his answer is waived.

2d. That at the hearing the bonds of matrimony uniting complainant and defendant be absolutely and perpetually dissolved, and that complainant be forever freed from the obligations thereof, and be restored to all the rights and privileges of an unmarried person; [and if the complainant be the wife, she may add to this prayer, “and that her maiden name (stating it in full, both the given and the surname,) may be restored to her.”]

3d. That [If complainant be the wife, she will, also, pray for alimony pendente lite, and for the suitable support and maintenance of herself and children, out of the defendant’s property.]

4th. That [If the complainant be the husband, he may pray to have his rights to his wife’s property, real and personal, declared according to the statute, in which case he should, in his bill, specify and describe her said property.]

5th. That the exclusive custody of all of said children [or of such of them as is desired.] be committed to complainant.

14 Allegation and proof of the two years’ residence are essential to the jurisdiction of the Court. See Fickle v. Fickle, 5 Verg. 203; 5 A. & E. Ency. of Law, 757. But this allegation and proof is necessary only when the causes of divorce originated outside of this State. Carter v. Carter, 5 Catec. 509.

15 Code, § 2452. Stewart v. Stewart, 2 Swan, 591; Horne v. Horne, 1 Tenn. Ch., 239; Rutledge v. Rutledge, S. Smed. 554. The bill must allege a statutory ground of divorce; and the prudent draftsman will employ the very words of the statute in alleging the particular ground he relies on, and then follow up this general statement of the ground of divorce by a specification of the circumstances and particulars, including the time and place, avoiding all displays of indecency, disgust, or other sentimentality; and using no poetry, rhetoric, or impertinent or profane language. Divorce bills are not the proper papers for sensational literary displays. See, ante, § 410, sub-sec. 7.

16 A second ground of divorce, if it exists, should be alleged with the same definiteness and particularity, as if it were the only ground; and should not be mixed up in a miscellaneous manner with the first ground. The bill may fail as to the first ground, but be sustainable as to the second ground, if it be properly averred.

6th. That an injunction issue to restrain the defendant from removing said children, or any of them, from the State, [if such injunction be necessary.]

7th. That an attachment issue and be levied on enough of the property, real and personal, of the defendant, to satisfy complainant’s claim for alimony, maintenance and support, and she says that — dollars [stating a reasonable sum.] is justly due her on said claim. [Omit this if an attachment is not obtainable, or is not desired.]

8th. That the said conveyance to hinder and defraud complainant be set aside, and for nothing held; and the property so attempted to be conveyed be subjected to the satisfaction of complainant’s right to alimony. [Insert this prayer if any fraudulent conveyances have been alleged in the bill.]

9th. And that complainant have such further and other relief as she [or, he,] may be entitled to. [If any extraordinary process is prayed for:] This is the first application for extraordinary process in this case.

§ 1095. Special Form of a Divorce Bill.—In drawing a bill for a divorce, the essential requirements set forth in the preceding section should be rigidly observed, for, if the bill does not allege a statutory cause of divorce, proof becomes irrelevant and useless, and no decree of divorce can be made. The following is a form of a BILL FOR DIVORCE.

To the Hon. William B. Staley, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Huntsville, for the County of Scott:

Jane Doe, a resident of Scott county, complainant,

vs.

John Doe, a resident of the State of Kansas, and William Brown, a resident of Scott county, defendants.

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That she and the defendant, John Doe, were married in Scott county, Tennessee, on the 31st day of August, 1880, and that she has been a resident of said county ever since.

II.

That more than two whole years ago, the defendant, John Doe, wilfully deserted complainant without a reasonable cause, and has continued said desertion ever since. Complainant and the said defendant, Doe, were, in the year 1881, living with complainant’s mother in said county, and defendant became very angry because her mother suggested to him that he ought to be looking out for a home of his own, and left, declaring he would never live with complainant any more. He, on or about October, 1881, went to Kansas, and has never been back since, and has never written to complainant, nor sent her any message or money, or in any way provided for the support of complainant, and her two infant children. He left complainant, and their two infant children, Mary and Charles, wholly dependent on her parents, and on her own labor. He has written to friends living near complainant, and his letters show that he is passing himself off as a single man, and that he is making love to single women, and that he is spending a great deal of money on them. Complainant has written him several loving letters, none of which has he answered, but has written to a third person to tell complainant to keep her love, and her letters, to herself.

III.

That the defendant, Doe, in addition to the foregoing wrongs, committed adultery with one Sallie Fox, on or about the 5th day of June, 1881, at or near the house of said Sallie, in the 4th civil district of Scott county; and, since he has been in Kansas, has sent affection.

23 Code, § 1469.
24 Code, § 2453. That is, for the statutory causes of divorce relied on in this bill. Code, 2452. This statutory affidavit cannot be materially departed from. DeArmond v. DeArmond, 8 Pick., 41, Sec. contra, Hackney v. Hackney, 9 Ham., 453. Sometimes the word “purposes” is substituted for “causes,” but in such cases the affidavit is fatally defective, the meaning of the two words being wholly dissimilar, as already shown. There is no need of an affidavit to satisfy the Court, that the complaint is for the purpose of obtaining a divorce! See preceding section, note 11.

26 The language of the old statute was “wilful and malicious.” The Code says, “wilful or malicious;” hence, the effect of the cases of Stewart v. Stewart, 2 Swan, 591; and Rutledge v. Rutledge, 5 Sneed, 254, must be somewhat modified. Nevertheless, the Court will require proof to show that the desertion was intentional, and prompted by feelings of ill will, or indifference, towards the complainant; and accompanied by a reckless disregard of complainant’s welfare, and of defendant’s duty towards the complainant.
SUTS FOR DIVORCE AND ALIMONY.

ate messages, and some presents, to said Sallie. Complainant never learned of said adultery until about two weeks ago.

Complainant avers that she has been true to her marriage vows, and has lived chastely, and has given defendant no cause, or just excuse, for his said misconduct, and has not condoned\footnote{27} the same.

The defendant, Doe, has by the death of his father, recently become the owner of a farm in the 2d civil district of this county, described as follows: Beginning on a rock, in William Jones' north line, thence \textit{describing it by metes and bounds}, to the beginning, containing about forty acres, and worth less than one thousand dollars. This tract complainant claims for her homestead. The house on said farm contains an assortment of household and kitchen furniture, and said farm is well stocked with poultry, hogs, sheep, horses, cows and calves, all of which defendant’s father left him by will duly probated. Defendant now, by like devise, has a valuable farm in Kansas, and considerable personal estate there.

The defendant, Doe, also purchased from his father, in the latter’s lifetime, a house and lot in the town of \textit{here locate and describe it.} worth about one thousand dollars. This lot he has fraudulently conveyed to his co-respondent, William Brown, to hinder and delay complainant in obtaining a divorce and alimony, the said Brown aiding and abetting in said fraud; and defendant, Doe, is about fraudulently to dispose of the balance of his property in this State.

The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. That proper process issue to compel the defendants to appear and answer this bill, and that publication be made as to the defendant, John Doe, he being a non-resident of this State. Both defendants are excused from answering on oath.

2d. That alimony \textit{pendente lite} be allowed her, for her support, and to enable her to defray the expenses of this suit, including a reasonable fee to her Solicitor.

3d. That an absolute divorce be granted her, that her maiden name, Jane Jones, be restored to her, and that she be given the exclusive custody of her two children by said marriage, Mary Doe, and Charles Doe, both being very tender infants.

4th. That alimony be decreed her, including said homestead, and all the personal property on it, and in the house.

5th. That an attachment issue, and be levied on all the foregoing property of the defendant, Doe, real and personal, and upon said house and lot conveyed to the defendant, Brown; to secure the amount justly due the complainant as alimony, which amount is two thousand dollars, as she verily believes; and that a receiver be appointed to take charge of said farm of forty acres, and all of the personal property in the house, or on the land, and to apply the rents and profits thereof to the support of complainant, pending this suit.

6th. And that she may have such further and other relief as the justice of her case may require.

This is the first application for an attachment or receiver in this case. \textbf{Jane Doe.}

defendant must answer, if he or she disputes the truth of the bill. If the bill be false, and the defendant have a good cause of divorce, he or she may answer, and file a cross bill, or may file the answer as a cross bill, making in such answer the same allegations as would be contained in a separate cross bill. The usual practice in such cases is to file the answer as a cross bill.

Supposing the original bill to be filed by the wife under section 2449 of the Code the following will serve as a form of

ANSWER AND CROSS BILL.

A B, } vs. C D. } In the Chancery Court at Blountville, Tennessee.

The answer of C B to the bill in said cause, the answer being filed as a cross bill against said A B.

The defendant, C B, for answer to said bill, says:

I. That he admits his marriage to the complainant, at or about the time and place stated; and that they have lived in Tennessee over two years next preceding the filing of her bill; and that she is the mother of three children by defendant.

II. Defendant denies the charges of cruel and inhuman treatment set forth in the bill, and denies that she had any just cause, or excuse, for leaving his home, and denies that he refused, or neglected, to provide for her, as she alleges in her said bill.

III. Defendant admits that he owns the personal property described in the bill, and admits that he is in possession of the farm mentioned in the bill, the legal title to which is in complainant, but he is now tenant thereof by the courtesy.

IV. Defendant denies every allegation in the bill not herein expressly admitted; and avers that the conduct of the complainant was such that, to his great grief, he was obliged to remonstrate, and to deny her some privileges he would have been glad otherwise freely to have accorded her. She is very fond of gay company, and delights in the society of fast young men; and her whole heart is set on fine dress, picnics, theaters, base-ball contests, dances, and all manner of public amusements; so that her name is being bandied to and fro, with winks, and hints, and insinuations, reflecting upon her virtue and general character as a matron. In short, her conduct has been exceedingly unbecoming, for a married woman, the mother of three children. Defendant's remonstrances and reproofs resulted in the alterations she complains of, and the defendant avers that the said ill conduct of the complainant was the cause thereof, and he pleads said ill conduct in justification of all he said or did.09

V. And now by way of cross bill against the said A B, the defendant, C B, respectfully shows to the Court, in addition to the facts hereinabove by him expressly admitted, or alleged:

VI. That the complainant has, since she left defendant's home, and in the month of September, 1889, committed adultery with one George Sly, in the boarding house where she now lives, in the town of Bristol, and that her conduct is emphatically that of an unchaste woman; and that she has been guilty of other adulteries with said Sly, in said town.

VII. Respondent avers that he has not been guilty of like crime, that he has not condoned complainant's conduct, and that he is in no way responsible therefor.

VIII. The premises considered, the defendant prays:

1st. That this answer be filed and treated as a cross bill,31 and that subpoena issue to compel the complainant, the said A B, to answer the same.

2d. That absolute divorce be granted him from the said A B, and that his right to the rents and profits of her said farm be decreed to him during his life,32 and that the custody of said three children be committed to him.

3d. And that he have such further and other relief as he may be entitled, and as to your Honor may seem proper.

State of Tennessee, }
Sullivan County.

C B being duly sworn, makes oath that the facts stated in his foregoing answer and cross bill are true to the best of his knowledge and belief, that the complaint in his cross bill is

30 Code, § 2466.
31 It will not be deemed a cross bill, unless a prosecution bond be given, and process issue. If the defendant to the cross bill answers it, however, without objection for want of bond or process, the Court may decree relief on the cross bill. See, ante, § 736, note 55.
32 Code, § 2472.
not made out of levity, or by collusion with A B, the defendant to said cross bill, but in sincerity and truth, for the causes mentioned in the cross bill.

[Add a proper jurat, as above.]

If the defendant sustains his cross bill the Court will dismiss the original bill, and grant divorce and other proper relief on the cross bill. The wife when sued for a divorce by her husband may, in like manner file a cross bill and obtain a divorce, if the facts justify it.

§ 1097. Alimony Pendente Lite.—When the wife is a party to a divorce suit, she is entitled to alimony pending the litigation, whether she be complainant or defendant; for, in either case, she is still the wife of the other party; and as such, is, if not possessed of sufficient means of her own, entitled to a reasonable allowance for her support, and for the expenses of the suit, including reasonable counsel fees. The granting of such an allowance is discretion ary with the Chancellor; and, in exercising this discretion, he will consider the financial ability of the husband, and the conduct and necessities of the wife as disclosed in the pleadings, or in affidavits, or in both. An allowance pendente lite should be put at a low figure, and proportioned to the husband's income and property; and where her suit is without any just or reasonable foundation, no allowance will be made. Alimony pendente lite ceases upon the dismissal of her suit by the wife or upon the death of her husband. To entitle the wife to alimony pendente lite it should appear:

1. That, if complainant, her bill shows a prima facie case, entitling her to a divorce; or, if defendant, her sworn answer discloses a good defence, or contains positive and specific denials of the material charges of the bill.

2. That she has no means of her own, or no sufficient means, if any, to pay for her support, and the expenses of the litigation.

3. What means she has, and what means her husband has, should be made to appear by affidavit, or by the wife's pleading.

4. She must show diligence in preparing for trial, or alimony will be refused; or, if already allowed, will be discontinued.

The Court may discontinue the payment of alimony pendente lite, in its discretion. An appeal will not lie from an interlocutory order allowing alimony pendente lite, but will lie from a final decree allowing alimony.

The usual mode of ascertaining the amount of alimony pendente lite is by a reference to the Master; but the Court may act without a reference. Where the facts, on which the motion for alimony pendente lite is based, do not appear in the pleadings, they should be brought forward by petition, or affidavit; but on such motion, the question of the guilt or innocence of the wife will not be inquired into, beyond what appears in her own pleading, petition or affidavit, under the rules heretofore given. Counter affidavits will not be heard on applications for alimony pendente lite.

§ 1098. Petition for Alimony Pendente Lite, and Proceedings Thereon.—If the wife is the complainant, either in the original bill, or in a cross bill, she 33 Thompson v. Thompson, 3 Head, 527; Lishey v. Lishey, 2 Tenn. Ch., 3; Shy v. Shy, 7 Heisk., 125. The wife is entitled to alimony pendente lite, if her bill shows a prima facie case, and she has no adequate means of her own. Lishey v. Lishey, 2 Tenn. Ch., 1. In this case, one hundred dollars was allowed for counsel fees; thirty dollars a month, from the filing of the bill until the next term, was allowed for alimony, and forty dollars for incidental expenses, making five hundred dollars in all; and execution was awarded thereon, if the whole amount was not paid within twenty days. The defendant's estate was valued by the Court at twenty thousand dollars, and his income from ten to twelve hundred dollars. In Shy v. Shy, 7 Heisk., 125, two Solicitors were held not to be too many, and one hundred dollars were allowed for their services; and it was held that the Chancellor Court had jurisdiction to allow counsel fees for services in the Supreme Court, also.

34 Lishey v. Lishey, 2 Tenn. Ch., 1. It is almost a matter of course to allow alimony pendente lite, when (1) the wife, if complainant, shows in her bill a meritorious cause of action, and good ground for a divorce; or when (2) if defendant, her sworn answer emphatically denies the charges in the bill, or discloses other adequate defence to the suit. 2 Barb. may pray in her bill, or cross bill, for alimony pendente lite; but if she neglect to do so, or if she be the defendant and has filed no cross bill, she may petition the Court for an allowance to her for her support and expenses during the pendency of the litigation. Such petition may be in the following form:

PETITION FOR ALIMONY PENDENTI LITE.

John Doe,
vs.
Jane Doe.
To the Honorable William B. Staley, Chancellor:

Your petitioner, the above named Jane Doe, respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That the complainant has filed in this Court against her a bill for divorce, alleging that she has wilfully deserted him without reasonable cause, [setting forth the ground of divorce alleged in the bill,] as will more fully appear by reference to said bill.

II. To said bill your petitioner has [this day] filed her answer, showing that the complainant drove her from his home after the most cruel treatment on his part, and that he has since persecuted her, and slandered her; and that she did not desert him, but that he cast her off without cause and without excuse, [stating the substance of the answer;] all of which will more fully appear by reference to her said answer, which is made a part of this petition; and she avers that every statement in her said answer is true.

Petitioner further shows to your Honor that she is in destitute circumstances, having no means of support, and no means to pay her Solicitor in this suit, or to defray any of its expenses, she being dependent on her parents for food and clothing, and being feeble in health, and having a young child. [Stating the facts as they are.] The complainant owns a good farm, fairly well stocked, worth about one thousand dollars, and is out of debt, so far as petitioner knows, or is informed. [State the property the husband possesses, and show fully his ability to support his wife, not by general allegations, but by specifying the property he owns.]

IV. Petitioner, therefore, prays that your Honor will make her a reasonable allowance out of her husband's estate for her support and maintenance during this litigation, and for the support and maintenance of their said child, and to enable her to employ and pay counsel to aid her in this suit, and to defray the other necessary expenses of the suit. She, also, prays for general relief as to the matters aforesaid.

J. E. CASSADY, Solicitor.
[Annex an affidavit and jurat, as in §797, ante.]

The Chancellor may hear oral proof, in open Court, and adjudicate the allowance to be made the petitioner, or he may refer the matter to the Master, as follows:

REFERENCE TO THE MASTER AS TO ALIMONY PENDENTI LITE.

John Doe,
vs.
Jane Doe,
No. 345.
This cause came on to be heard upon the petition of the defendant for alimony pendente lute, and for expenses. And the bill and answer having been read, and argument heard on behalf of the respective parties, the Court ordered the Master to hear proof, and report instanter:

I. What property the complainant is possessed of, specifying its kind, and the value of each kind, and what income he has from it, and from other sources.

II. What means of support the defendant has, if any, and how she and her child are supported.

III. What would be a reasonable allowance for the support and maintenance of the defendant and her child, until the next term of this Court.

IV. What would be a reasonable allowance for her Solicitor's fees, and for the other necessary costs and expenses of this suit.

V. The Master will report any other matter that will aid the Court in coming to an equitable conclusion in reference to any of the foregoing matters.

Until the coming in of said report all other matters are reserved.
If the Court should determine the matter without a reference, as it will ordinarily do, the order of allowance would be as follows:

ORDER ALLOWING ALIMONY PENDENTE LITE.

[Following the foregoing order down to "read,"] and the testimony of witnesses having been heard, and the matters having been argued by counsel for the respective parties, the Court is of opinion that the prayer of the petitioner should be granted.

It is, therefore ordered by the Court that the complainant pay into the office of the Clerk and Master of this Court within thirty days the sum of seventy-five dollars, for the support and maintenance of the defendant and her child, until the next term of the Court; and will pay in the further sum of fifty dollars to pay her Solicitors' fees, and the other necessary costs of this litigation. And if both of said sums are not paid as herein ordered, an execution will issue against the complainant for so much as has not been paid in.

ARTICLE III.

TRIAL, ORDERS, AND DECREES.

§ 1099. Trial of a Divorce Suit.

§ 1100. Kinds of Divorce Granted.

§ 1101. Alimony on Final Decree.

§ 1102. Wife’s Remedies to Secure Alimony.

§ 1099. Trial of a Divorce Suit.—If the subpoena to answer be served upon the defendant, the cause may be tried at the first term of the Court thereafter; and either party may take proof by depositions, or have the witnesses examined in open Court. The issues of fact raised by the pleadings may be determined by the Chancellor, or, at the request of either party, may be tried by a jury. Neither the Chancellor, nor the jury, can, however, act on the admissions of the defendant, or on a judgment pro confesso, but must hear the proof of the facts charged, and determine the case upon such proof. If the defendant is required to answer under oath, and so answers, such answer has no greater weight than an unworn answer, and only serves to make up an issue.

If the statute sets out any acts the complainant must do in order to be entitled to a divorce, such acts must be proven. Thus, if the husband sue for divorce on the ground of the wife’s refusal to remove with him to this State, and of her willful absence for two years without reasonable cause, he must prove endeavors to induce her to live with him after the separation, and that he did not remove from the State where she resided for the purpose of obtaining a divorce. And when a divorce is sought upon the ground of adultery, it must be shown affirmatively, by satisfactory proof, that the complainant has not been guilty of like crime, and has not condoned the offense; and, if the complainant is the husband, that he did not connive at, or allow, his wife’s prostitution, or expose her to lewd company.

1 Code, § 2455. It is no uncommon practice to try divorce causes at the first term after publication made; but this section does not seem to warrant a trial at the first or appearance term, except when the defendant is brought into Court by service of subpoena.

2 Code, § 2462.

3 Code, § 2458.

4 Code, § 2459. The Court cannot divorce the parties on their consenting to such a decree, because the proceedings is in rem, as well as in personam. Consenting to a divorce sometimes savors of collusion, and may bar a divorce. Neither have arbitrators any power to grant a divorce or alimony. Swan v. Harrison, 2 Cold., 534. The Court must hear the evidence, and be satisfied therefrom that the complainant is entitled to a divorce, before a decree of divorce can be granted. Nothing will satisfy the statute except proof, by witnesses, of the facts charged in the bill. Code, § 2459. The Court may, however, decree alimony by consent, being careful to see that the wife is not over-reached, and her children not deprived of their homestead rights.

5 Richmond v. Richmond, 10 Yerg., 347. Such an answer would, when responsive, probably be evidence for the defendant, on the question of alimony.

6 Code, § 2463; Lanier v. Lanier, 5 Heisk., 463.

7 Code, § 2460; Cameron v. Cameron, 2 Cold., 375; Majors v. Majors, 1 Tenn. Ch., 264; Diesmukes v. Diesmukes, 1 Tenn. Ch., 266. Marriage is not only a personal relation, but a public institution, on the purity and integrity of which the welfare of society depends; and for this reason, not only cannot marriages be dissolved by the consent of the parties, but it is the duty of the Court to see that a cause of divorce is duly alleged and fully proved, and that § 1100. Kinds of Divorce Granted.—If the cause of divorce be any of those specified in section 2445 of the Code, relief may be granted either by pronouncing the marriage null and void, from the beginning, or by dissolving it forever, and freeing each party from the obligation thereof, or by a separation for a limited time.8 If the cause of divorce be any of those specified in section 2449 of the Code, the Court may grant relief according to the prayer of the bill by annulling the marriage, or by ordering a separation, perpetual or temporary, or such other decree as the nature and circumstances of the case may require.9 It will thus be seen that, for any cause of divorce, the Court may separate the parties for months, or for years, or forever, as the pleadings and proof may warrant; or may declare the marriage null and void from the beginning,10 when the nature of the case so requires; or may grant a divorce from bed and board, with a reservation of the power to grant an absolute divorce at a subsequent term.11

§ 1101. Alimony on Final Decree.—When a divorce is granted a wife, it is usual to allow her alimony also, when prayed for. The amount of alimony should be in proportion, (1) to the husband’s estate, after his debts are paid; (2) to the amount of the property he acquired through his wife; (3) to the number of children committed to the wife’s custody, and (4) to the wife’s station in society.12 In general, not more than half of the husband’s estate, after deducting his indebtedness, will be allowed as alimony; but each case must be governed by its own circumstances.13 Where a divorce from bed and board is decreed, the Court should make a monthly or quarterly allowance to be paid the wife by the husband, and in such ease, his subsequent earnings, including his official income, and even the proceeds of his personal labor, are all chargeable. A decree of temporary divorce, or divorce from bed and board, does not dissolve the marriage relation: and the husband and wife retain their rights and duties, as such, continuing, except cohabitation and its incidents, and the wife’s right of support. During such a divorce, the wife has no claim on her husband for maintenance, other than such as is set forth in the decree separating them. On the husband’s death, in such a case, the wife has a right to dower, homestead, a year’s support, the exempt property, and a distributive share of his personal estate; and on the wife’s death, the husband has the same rights to her personality and reality as though no divorce, temporary or perpetual, had been made. In short, on the death of either party to a decree of temporary separation, the rights of the other are those as though no divorce from bed and board had ever existed. See Chenaux v. Chenaux, 5 Smeed, 248.

10 A marriage is voidable from the beginning, (1) when either party was already lawfully married; or (2) when either of the parties is white and the other a negro, or of negro descent; or (3) when the parties are within the prohibited degrees of kinship; or (4) when, for any other reason, the marriage was prohibited by law, and its continuance is in violation of law. A marriage is voidable from the beginning: (1) when either party was insane; or (2) the complainant was under duress; or (3) was under the age of consent; or (4) when the consent was obtained by fraud or force. Code, § 2473. And was given by mistake; or (5) when the defendant was impotent; or (6) when the woman was pregnant by another man without the knowledge of the complainant; or (7) when, for any other reason, the marriage was not binding on the complainant.

11 A marriage is voidable for want of a binding consent it will become valid if the parties live together as man and wife, voluntarily, after the party becomes capable of a binding consent. A voidable marriage is also voidable because there has been no imposition upon the Court. The consent of the State must be obtained before a divorce can be granted; and the Court shall set out the facts and circumstances of the case. If the divorce is decreed, the Court shall then, carefully scrutinize the evidence, listen to the suggestion of third parties, cross-examine the witnesses, require an explanation of suspicious circumstances, and even postpone the case, and endeavor to reconcile the parties, where it seems proper and desirable. S. A. & E. Ency. of Law, 771-772; Swan v. Harrison, 2 Cold., 534; Dismukes v. Dismukes, 1 Tenn. Ch., 266. Code, §§ 1035, ante, § 1089. A decree of absolute divorce forever dissolves the bonds of matrimony, and totally destroys the status of the parties. After such a decree, the complainant and defendant become strangers in law, in rights, in relations and in duties, as though neither had ever been married to the other: they become single persons, and may marry each other, sue each other, and may again marry each other; and may marry whomsoever and whencesoever they please, except the person with whom the decree shows the adultery was committed, for which the divorce was granted. Code, § 2475. Where the husband obtains a divorce, his rights to the rents and profits of the wife’s lands, and to her personally in possession, or in action, continue as though the divorce had not been granted; Code, § 2472; and the wife forfeits all rights of alimony, dower, and distributive share of personal and real estate, Code, §§ 2473. And if the divorce is granted for adultery on the part of the wife, and she afterwards openly cohabits with the adulterer, she is thereby inexcusable and convicted to convey, or devise, any of her lands. Code, § 2474.

If, however, a marriage is declared to have been absolutely voidable from the beginning, it would seem, on principle, that neither party would have any property rights against the other growing out of the void marriage; a void marriage is void for all purposes, and the rights to the property would be exactly the same as though no marriage ceremony had ever been performed; and that the Court would have no right to decree alimony. 11 A marriage is absolute void and incapable of being nullified only on the complaint of the party injured. McAlister v. McAlister, 10 Heisk., 345.

able with such allowance. But where the divorce is absolute, the Court will not bind the husband's future earnings.

As a rule, on a divorce from the bonds of matrimony being granted the wife, she will be decree all the lands of which she is owner, and also all goods, chattels, or choses in action, in her possession and acquired by her own industry, or otherwise. And by express statute, the title to the homestead must be vested in her for her life, and after her death it will pass to their children. If the husband's property is in another State, the Court may give the wife a money decree for alimony, if subpœna has been served on him, or he has voluntarily appeared; the amount of such alimony, however, in case of absolute divorce, must be based on the amount of the defendant's present estate, and not upon his future earnings. All right to alimony ceases upon the death of the husband.

§ 1102. Wife's Remedies to Secure Alimony.—The wife's right to alimony is viewed by the law as a debt due her from her husband, contingent upon her obtaining a divorce; and she has every remedy to secure and enforce her right to alimony that any other creditor has. As a result, she may have a conveyance, made to defeat her right to alimony, set aside; she may have an attachment against her husband's estate to secure her alimony; she may enjoin him from transferring or encumbering his estate; she may have a receiver appointed when necessary to enforce payment of her alimony.

Where a divorce from bed and board is decreed, the Court may secure the alimony allowed by declaring it a lien upon all the defendant's real estate.

§ 1103. Other Relief Granted.—The custody of the children may, in the discretion of the Court, be awarded to either party; or some to one, and some to the other; or the Court may decline to make any disposition of them. In disposing of the children, their welfare alone will be considered, and not the wishes of the child, or of either parent.

The maiden surname of the wife will be restored to her, if she so pray in her bill, upon obtaining an absolute divorce.

If the husband is interfering with her person, or her property, or the children in her custody, or invading her peace, or disturbing her retreat, or threatening and likely to do so, she may obtain an injunction against him, or upon her application in a proper case, the Court, or Chancellor at Chambers, will order his arrest and require of him sureties to keep the peace.

If the child is a citizen of the State, the child is a citizen of the State, the child is a citizen of the State, the child is a citizen of the State. If the Court makes any disposition of the children, or if the children themselves, by next friend, object to such disposition, the right to their custody may be adjudicated upon a habeas corpus; in such a case, the Court will consider the interests of the children, exclusively. § 1104. Frame of a Divorce Decree.—A decree of divorce should show that the defendant answered, or that a pro confesso was duly entered against him for want of an answer, and that one or more of the statutory causes of divorce were charged in the bill and were established by the proof; and that, therefore, a divorce was granted the complainant. If alimony is allowed it should be specifically decreed, and the manner of possessing her of it should be adjudged. If the wife obtain a decree, her rights to her own property, real and personal, should be declared in order to prevent future litigation; and so, if the husband obtain a divorce, his rights to the rents and profits of his wife's lands should be declared, for the same reason. The custody of all the children under fourteen years of age should be determined; and the right of the parent, deprived of the children, to visit them, at certain times and places, should be provided for in the decree, if such right be granted.

If a divorce from bed and board, only, be decreed, full and particular provision should be made for the suitable support and maintenance of the complainant, and of the children committed to her custody, out of the husband's property. The payments should be made quarterly, or monthly, and be enforced by execution; or, in a proper case, a receiver of the husband's real and personal estate may be appointed, and the proceeds from time to time applied to the use of the complainant, and her children.26

In all divorce decrees, where there is any likelihood that further orders may be necessary to enforce the adjudications made, especially in reference to the payment of alimony, or to the custody of the children, or to the protection of the wife, the decree should, on its face, especially retain the cause in Court for such purposes, and either party given leave to apply. This reservation is almost always necessary, when only a temporary divorce is granted, or when maintenance alone is granted.27

The decree should always adjudge the costs. The Court may decree costs against either party, except a wife in whose favor a decree is made.28 If any estate is in the power of the Court, or in the hands of a receiver, the costs may be ordered to be paid out of such property.29 The following is a form of a DEGREE OF DIVORCE AND ALIMONY.

Jane Doe,
V.S.
John Doe.

This cause came on to be heard this September 6, 1880, before Chancellor W. B. Staley, upon the bill of the complainant, Jane Doe, and the answer of the defendant, John Doe, (or, the pro confesso heretofore entered against the defendant,) and the depositions on file, and the oral testimony of witnesses examined in open Court.

And it satisfactorily appeared to the Court from the proof that the facts charged in the bill are true; that the defendant had wilfully deserted the complainant, without a reasonable cause, for more than two whole years before the filing of the bill, as charged; and that he had, also, committed adultery with one Sallie Fox, after his marriage to the complainant, and before the filing of the bill, as charged; and that the complainant is a chaste woman, and gave defendant no cause or just excuse for his said misconduct, and has not condoned the same.

II.

It is, therefore, ordered, adjudged and decreed by the Court, that the bonds of matrimony subsisting between the complainant and the defendant be absolutely and forever dissolved, and that complainant be vested with all the rights of an unmarried woman; and that her maiden name, Jane Jones, be restored to her.

III.

It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the title to the homestead be divested out of the defendant, and vested in complainant during her life, and after her death it shall pass to, and be vested in, Mary Doe and Charles Doe, the children of complainant by defendant.30 Said homestead is situated in the 2d civil district of Scott county, and is described as follows: Beginning on a rock in William Jones' north line, thence [describing it by metes and bounds,] to the beginning, containing forty acres, more or less, and shown by the proof to be worth seven hundred dollars. Complainant is, also, given as alimony, all the household and kitchen furniture in the family residence on said homestead, and any two cows with their calves, and any one horse, she may select out of those belonging to the defendant. She is, also, given all the hogs, sheep and poultry on said homestead. The title to all of said personal property is divested out of defendant and vested in complainant.

The defendant will pay Daniel Jeffers, Esq., the Solicitor of complainant, fifty dollars, his fee in this cause, for services to this date, and will pay into Court, for the use of the complainant, the sum of five hundred dollars. He will, also, pay all the costs of the cause. Execution will issue to enforce the payment of said sums of money and said costs; and a writ of possession will issue to put complainant in possession of all the property, real and personal, decreed to her.

The exclusive custody of Mary Doe and Charles Doe, the infant children of the parties, is committed to the complainant; but she is enjoined from removing them out of this county, without the consent of the Court. The defendant may visit his said children once every two weeks, at some place in their neighborhood, and on a day to be named by the Clerk and Master of this Court, on application of the defendant; but he is enjoined from tampering with them, or endeavoring to prejudice them against their mother during said visits.

This cause will be retained in Court for the enforcement of this decree, whenever necessary, and either party has leave to apply. The bill as to the defendant, William Brown, is dismissed, the conveyance to him being free from any fraud on his part.

§ 1105. Rights of Creditors of the Husband.—The rights of the husband's creditors are superior to those of the wife for alimony, except as to exempt property; and where it appears that the husband is indebted, it is proper to retain the cause in Court, and advertise for the creditors of the husband to present and prove their claims, before decreeing alimony to the wife. If the husband has absconded, or is acting fraudulently, the Court may appoint a receiver to collect the debts due the husband, and may apply the proceeds to the payment of the creditors, and to alimony.32

ARTICLE I.

SUITS FOR AN INTERPLEADER.

§ 1106. When a Bill of Interpleader Will Lie.—A bill of interpleader is ordinarily filed, when two or more persons claim the same debt, or duty, or other thing, from the complainant by different or separate interests; and he, not knowing to which of the claimants he ought of right to render the same debt, duty, or other thing, and fearing that he may suffer injury from their conflicting claims, files a bill against them; and prays that they may be compelled to interplead, and state their several claims, so that the Court may adjudge to whom the same debt, duty, or other thing belongs. The complainant is not required to wait for legal proceedings to be commenced against him; a mere liability to be called on, by different persons for the same demand, gives the right to file the bill; and it is no objection to such a bill, that the right of one of the parties is actionable at law and that of the other actionable in Equity, or that a suit is pending between the claimants.

§ 1107. What a Bill of Interpleader Should Show.—In a bill of interpleader, it is necessary that the complainant shall state his own rights, and thereby negative any interest in, or claim to, the thing in controversy; and he should also state the several claims of the opposing parties. If the bill does not show that each of the defendants, whom it seeks to compel to interplead, claims a right, both of the defendants may demurr; one, because the bill shows no claim of right in him; the other, because the bill, showing no claim of right in the co-defendant, shows no cause of interpleader. A mere pretext of a conflicting claim is not sufficient; the Court must see that there is a real question to be tried. An objection equally fatal will be, that the complainant shows no right to compel the defendants to interplead, whatever rights they may claim. Nor can a bill be filed after a judgment of garnishment against complainant at law, his remedy at law being clear. The bill should not be delayed until after a verdict or judgment has been obtained.

The bill should show that there are proper persons in c.s.s.e.c., capable of interpleading, and of setting up opposite claims; for, otherwise, the object of the bill would be unattainable. The bill would be equally defective, if it did not admit, and show, a claim by each of the defendants. The allegations of a title or claim

3 McEwen v. Troost, 1 Sneed, 186; State I. Co. v. Gennet, 2 Tenn. Ch., 82; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1561.

5 Carroll v. Parkes, 1 Bax., 269.
6 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1561.
7 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 293.
by each of the defendants must be made with positiveness. If the bill fail to show, with certainty, that each defendant is claiming the property, or debt, it will be fatally defective; but the complainant need not state the character or foundation of the hostile claims; indeed, he may aver that he is ignorant of the rights of the respective parties. The complainant should, also, show in his bill, that he claims no interest himself; for it is, in truth, the very foundation of his bill, that he is a mere holder of the stake, which is equally contested by the defendants, and that he is wholly indifferent between them, and not under any liability to any of the defendants.

To justify a bill of interpleader, there should be either some specific chattel, or some definite sum of money, to which different parties in the same right, or in privity of estate, make claim, and the person filing the bill should be a mere stakeholder, having no interest in the matter; so that when the Court deuces an interpleader the complainant can step out of the case altogether.

§ 1108. The Character of the Conflicting Claims.—The claims, if known, may be specifically set forth, so that they may appear to be of the same nature and character, and the fit subject of a bill of interpleader; for bills of interpleader do not ordinarily lie, except in cases of privity of some sort between all the parties; such as privity of estate, or title, or contract, and where the claim by all is of the same nature and character. Where the claimants assert their rights under adverse titles, and not in privity, and where their claims are of different natures, the bill is wholly unmaintainable. Thus, if an estate is put up for sale at auction, and A becomes the purchaser, and pays his deposit; and then, by order of the same owner, it is set up again for sale, and B becomes the purchaser, and pays his deposit; such a case is not a proper case of interpleader, if each demands his deposit from the stakeholder; for A and B do not claim in privity, and their deposits are distinct; but a bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader would probably lie in such a case.

The complainant should admit that he has no title to the property or debt as against either of the defendants; but it is not incumbent on him, if indeed it is proper, to state the cases of the interpleading defendants: these should be stated by the defendants themselves in their answers, the complainant containing himself by showing in his bill the fact that each defendant is setting up a claim, without giving the history, ground, or circumstances, of either claim, leaving these matters to be set up by the defendants themselves.

§ 1109. Interpleader in Case of Tenants and Agents.—The complainant should show a clear right in himself to maintain the bill; for, otherwise, the bill will be dismissed, however proper in other respects the case might be for an interpleader. Thus, for example, if the bill should show that the complainant is an agent of one of the parties only, and had received money by the authority of his principal, and for his use, he would be bound to pay over the money to his principal, notwithstanding any intervening claims of a third person; for, a mere agent to receive for the use of another, cannot be converted into an implied trustee by reason of an adverse claim, since his possession is the possession of his principal.

A tenant, liable to pay rent, may file a bill of interpleader, where there are several persons claiming title to it in privity of contract, or of tenure, to compel them to ascertain to whom it is properly payable. But if a mere stranger should set up a claim to the rent by a title paramount, and not in privity of contract, or tenure; or, if he should set up a claim of a different nature, such as a claim 11 If, however, when the complainant claims some interest in the subject-matter, no demurrer is interposed on that account, the objection will be considered waived. Read v. Street Ry. Co., 2 Cates, 316.

to the mesne profits, in virtue of his title paramount; in either case, no bill of interpleader would lie in behalf of the tenant; for the debt or duty is not the same in nature or character.\footnote{18} The stranger cannot demand rent as such; but if he succeeds in an ejectment, he has only a right to damages for use and occupation, whereas the landlord claims the rent as such, in privity of contract, tenure, and title. Besides, the tenant is under contract to pay the rent to his landlord, and is not allowed to dispute his title either to the land, or to the rent.\footnote{17}

Property put into the hands of a private agent by his principal, is not the subject of an interpleader, on the assertion of a claim to it by a third person under an independent adverse title; but the agent must deliver it to the principal; for the possession of the agent is the possession of the principal. And the like doctrine would prevail in favor of a third person to whom the principal, after the bailment, had transferred the right to the property, where the transfer had been recognized and assented to by the agent. But if the principal has created an interest in, or a lien on, the funds in the hands of the agent, in favor of a third person, and the nature and extent of that interest or lien is controverted between the principal and such third person, there an interpleader will lie.\footnote{18}

\section*{§ 1110. Essentials of a Bill of Interpleader.}—The essentials of a bill of interpleader are, in brief, as follows:

1. Two or more persons must be claiming, adversely to each other, from the same person the same thing, debt, or duty.

2. This thing, debt, or duty, must be specific and definite, and the holder thereof must have no title, claim, or interest, in or to it.

3. The holder must be so situated that, if he comply with the demands of either claimant, he is in danger of being held liable therefor by the other.

4. The holder must not be under any special liability to either claimant with reference to the thing in dispute, but must be absolutely indifferent between them.

5. And there must be annexed to the bill an affidavit of non-collusion, unless the bill avers non-collusion and is sworn to.

\section*{§ 1111. Frame of a Bill of Interpleader.}—There is no set form for this bill. The draftsman usually begins by describing the debt, duty, or other thing, for which the defendants are rival claimants. The fact that each of the defendants is setting up an exclusive claim to this debt, duty, or other thing, will then be clearly stated, and if either or both of the defendants have made any demand, served any notice, made any threats of suit, or brought any suit, these facts will be specifically and fully set forth. The complainant will then show the danger he is in of being held twice liable in the event he complies with the demands of either defendant; and will aver that he does not claim the debt, duty, or other thing, and is willing to pay the debt or duty, or deliver the property, to whichever of the defendants is lawfully thereunto entitled. The bill should offer to pay the money or property into Court, to the end that it may be adjudged to that defendant entitled to it.

As every such bill is founded upon the admitted want of interest in the complainant, and is, at the same time, susceptible of being used collusively to give an undue advantage to one of the contending parties, two things are required as precautions to prevent any abuse of the proceeding. In the first place, the plaintiff must annex an affidavit, that there is no collusion between him and any of the parties; in the next place, if there is any money due, he must bring it into Court, or at least offer to do so by his bill. If he does not do so, it is in strictness a good ground of demurrer.\footnote{19} The defendants by answering the bill

may waive their right to object because of the want of the proper affidavit, or because the money is not paid into the Court.\textsuperscript{20}

If the bill is filed by an officer of a company on behalf of the company, he must not only swear that he does not collude, but, also, that to the best of his knowledge and belief, the company does not collude, with either of the defendants.\textsuperscript{21}

The bill prays that the defendants may set forth their several titles, and may interplead, and adjust and settle their claims between themselves. The bill, also, generally prays for an injunction to restrain the claimants, or either of them, from proceeding at law; and, whenever this is done, the bill should offer to bring the money into Court; and it must be brought into Court before the Court will ordinarily act upon this part of the prayer.\textsuperscript{22}

§ 1112. Form of a Bill of Interpleader.—The following general form will illustrate what has already been said in reference to the bill:

GENERAL FORM OF AN INTERPLEADER BILL.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. [Here show that the complainant owes a debt or duty, or has in his possession a particular sum of money, or piece of property, describing the debt, duty, sum of money, or piece of property.]

II. [Here show that each of the defendants claims said debt, duty, sum of money, or piece of property, and is demanding the same, or suing therefor, or threatening to sue. If any demand in writing has been made, or notice served, so state with particularity.]

III. [Here show that the complainant admits that he, himself, does not deny that he owes said debt, or that he does not own said money or property; but that, on the other hand, he admits that it belongs to one of the defendants, but which one he does not with certainty know, and cannot afford to run the risks of a decision.]

IV. And complainant further shows that he does not in any respect collude with either the said Richard Roe, or said Peter Poe, touching the matters in question; that he has not exhibited this bill at the request of either of them, and that he has not been indemnified by said defendants, or any or either of them, but merely of his own free will, and to avoid being molested and injured, touching the matter contained in said bill.

V. The premises considered, complainant comes into your Honor's Court for relief, and prays:

1st. That process issue to compel the said defendants to appear and answer this bill; but their answer on oath is waived.

2d. That said defendants be required to interplead and settle their rights to [said debt, duty, sum of money, or property;] and that complainant may be at liberty to pay the same into Court; which he hereby offers to do for the benefit of the defendant thereunto entitled.

3d. That the said Richard Roe be enjoined from further proceeding in said suit at law; and that said Peter Poe be, also, enjoined from commencing any suit against complainant, touching the premises, or in any other way, than in this suit, demanding said [money, or property.]

4th. That complainant upon payment of said [debt, duty, sum of money, or property,] into Court, and upon the said defendants being required to interplead, according to the course of this Court, may be decreed to be discharged from all liability to said defendants in the premises, and may have all his costs herein, and that said injunctions may be made perpetual.

5th. And that such further and other relief may be granted to complainant as the nature of his case may require, and as may be according to good conscience.

And complainant further states that this is the first application for an injunction in this case.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That on November 18, 1905, he purchased from the defendant, Richard Roe, two hundred and fifty tons of coal for one thousand dollars, five hundred dollars of which have been paid, and the remainder has not been paid, but is due and owing.

II. That at the time of said purchase and payment complainant supposed the defendant, Richard Roe, was the true and sole owner of said coal, and fully entitled to sell, and receive payment for the same. But so it is, on December 1, 1905, an attachment by garnishment was served on complainant in a suit for six hundred dollars before James M. King, Esq., a Justice of the Peace of Knox county, by the defendant Henry Jones, against the defendant William Smith, said Jones claiming that said coal bought by complainant as aforesaid was really the property of said William Smith, and that the defendant Roe was either his agent or his fraudulent vendee.

III. That on December 2, 1905, a bill in the Chancery Court at Knoxville was filed by the defendant, George Smithson, against complainant, and the defendant Richard Roe, claiming a debt of eight hundred dollars as due from said Roe, and attaching said unpaid five hundred dollars, as the property of defendant Richard Roe; and on the same day the defendant Richard Roe sued complainant for said five hundred dollars before William Knabe, Esq., a Justice of the Peace of Knox county.

Complainant has always been willing to pay the balance due on said coal to such person as shall be lawfully entitled thereunto, but the multiplicity of claimants thereto, and their conflicting interests, so perplex complainant that he does not know to whom to make such payment, and is afraid that he may suffer loss by the complications of the case.

IV. Complainant therefore comes unto your Honor's Court for relief in the premises, and prays:

1st. That the defendants be all required, by subpoena, to answer this bill, and interplead and settle their respective rights and claims, among themselves, to said sum of five hundred dollars due from him as aforesaid, and that he be allowed to pay the same into Court for the benefit of whomsoever of the defendants your Honor may decree to be entitled thereunto.

2d. That each and all of the defendants, their agents and attorneys, be enjoined from proceeding any further against complainant in the said several suits already instituted as aforesaid, and from instituting any other or further proceedings, at law or in equity, against complainant in reference to said sum of five hundred dollars, or any part thereof.

3d. That complainant have such other and further relief as he may be entitled to.

This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

T. A. R. Nelson, Solicitor.

State of Tennessee,
County of Knox.

John Doe, the above complainant makes oath that the statements in the foregoing bill made as of his own knowledge are true, and those made as on information and belief he believes to be true; and that he does not collude with any of the defendants touching the matters in question, nor is he in any manner indemnified by any of the defendants, nor does he file this bill at the request of either of them, but entirely of his own free will, and to avoid being sued, molested, or injured, touching the matters contained in his said bill.

[Annex jurat: see, ante, § 789.]

John Doe.

So much of the above affidavit as does not verify the bill may be included in the body of the bill, as has been done in the preceding general form; and this is, perhaps, the better practice; but the old precedents include it in an affidavit to the bill. The absence of an averment of non-collusion in the affidavit, or in the body of the bill, is a ground of demurrer. This affidavit as to non-collusion is an antiquated relic of the days when Chancery was loth to interfere with matters that might be litigated at law.

§ 1113. Defences to a Bill of Interpleader.—The same defences can be made to a bill of interpleader that will lie to any bill seeking a recovery: the defendants, or either of them, can plead in abatement, demur, or answer; and in their answer can deny or confess and avoid. The most usual defence is by demurrer.
DEMURRER TO A BILL OF INTERPLEADER.

[For title, commencement and conclusion, see, ante, § 310.]

1. Because the bill is filed for an interpleader and yet the complainant has not annexed to his bill an affidavit, nor inserted therein an averment, that he does not collude with any of the defendants touching the matters in question in the bill.

2. Because the bill is filed as an interpleader bill and yet does not contain the affidavit specially required to such a bill as to non-collusion and non-indemnity, nor does the body of the bill contain such averments.

3. Because the bill is filed as an interpleader bill and yet the complainant claims an interest in the subject-matter.

4. Because the bill is filed as an interpleader bill and yet the complainant disputes the amount due the defendants.

§ 1114. Proceedings Upon a Bill of Interpleader.—In an interpleader bill, if the defendants do not deny the statements of the bill, the ordinary decree is, that the defendants do interplead; and the complainant then withdraws from the suit. But the defendants, or either of them, are at liberty to contest and deny the allegations in the bill, or to set up distinct and independent facts in bar of the suit; and, in such a case, the complainant must contest the answer, and take proof in the usual manner, before he can bring the cause to a hearing between himself and the defendants; and at the hearing only, in such a case, can he insist upon a decree, that the defendants do interplead.

If the bill shows that either of the defendants is setting up no claim; or if it shows that the complainant is the agent, or trustee, or tenant, of either of the defendants; or, if it fails to show that it is not filed in collusion with either of the defendants; in any of such cases, either one of the defendants may demur. Or the bill may be dismissed on motion, on any of the grounds herefore specified, on which such a motion may be based.

If the bill is sustained by the Court, an order will be made to that effect, substantially as follows:

DECREES FOR AN INTERPLEADER.

John Doe,

Richard Roe and Peter Poe.

This cause coming on this day to be heard upon the bill of interpleader and the demurrer thereto, [or, the motion to dismiss,] on consideration thereof the Court is of opinion that the bill is well filed, and that the demurrer is not well taken.

It is, therefore, ordered and adjudged that the demurrer be overruled and disallowed; and the defendants not desiring to further contest the bill, it is adjudged that said bill of interpleader is properly filed, and is sustained; and that the defendants do interplead and settle the matters in controversy in this suit between themselves.

The complainant is dismissed with his costs to this time accrued; said costs to be paid out of the fund by the complainant heretofore paid into Court. All other matters are reserved.

§ 1115. Bills in the Nature of a Bill of Interpleader.—Although a bill of interpleader, strictly so called, lies only where the complainant claims no interest in the subject-matter, yet there are many cases where a bill, in the nature of a bill of interpleader, will lie by a party in interest to ascertain and establish his own rights, where there are other conflicting rights between third persons. As, for instance, if a complainant is entitled to equitable relief against the owner of property, and the legal title thereto is in dispute between two or more persons, so that he cannot ascertain to which it actually belongs, he may file a bill against the several claimants, in the nature of a bill of interpleader, for relief. So, it seems, a purchaser may file a bill in the nature of a bill of interpleader against the vendor, or his assignee, and any creditor who seeks to avoid the title of the assignee, and pray the direction of the Court as to whom the purchase-money shall be paid. So, if a mortgagor wishes to redeem the mortgaged estate, and there are conflicting claims between third persons, as to their title to the mortgage-money, he may bring them before the Court, to ascertain their rights, and to have a decree for a redemption, so that he may 23 State I. Co. v. Gennett, 2 Tenn, Ch., 100.

25 See, ante, §§ 266-274; 523-525.
26 If the demurrant desires to contest the bill he will be ordered to answer it, on his demurrer being overruled, as in case of other bills.
make a secure payment to the party entitled to the money. In these cases, the complainant seeks relief for himself; whereas, in an interpleading bill, strictly so called, the complainant only asks that he may be at liberty to pay the money, or deliver the property, to the party to whom it of right belongs, and may thereafter be protected against the claims of both. In the latter case, the only decree to which the plaintiff is entitled, is a decree that the bill is properly filed; or, in other words, that he shall be at liberty to pay the money, or bring the property into Court, and have his costs, and that the defendants interplead, and settle the conflicting claims between themselves. So, a bill, in the nature of an interpleading bill, will lie by a bank which has offered a reward for the recovery of money stolen, and a proportionate reward for a part recovered, where there are several claimants of the reward, or a proportion thereof, one or more of whom have sued the bank. And, in such a bill, all the claimants may be made parties, in order to have their respective claims adjusted.28

ARTICLE II.
SUITs FOR A DISCOVERY.

§ 1116. The Origin and History of Bills of Discovery.—Bills of discovery were invented by the Chancellors of England to prevent a failure of justice, at that period in English jurisprudence when, in a Court of law, neither party to a suit could be a witness. It often happens that the essential facts of a controversy are known only to the immediate parties thereto, and if the Court will not allow the injured party to be a witness, and the wrong-doer cannot be compelled to testify, much injustice will inevitably result. The Courts of law not only rigidly closed the mouths of both parties to a civil suit, but looked with horror upon every attempt to make them witnesses. The result was that crafty men availed themselves of this state of the law to obtain unconscientious advantages of unsuspecting men, and to obtain possession of deeds, mortgages, receipts, notes, contracts, and other valuable writings belonging to others, under circumstances incapable of being proved by third persons. And suits were often brought in the Courts of law to enforce these unconscientious advantages, and to obtain the benefits resulting from the possession of the deeds, or other writings, thus unconscientiously obtained, or withheld.1

To remedy these great wrongs, and prevent the Courts of law becoming the instruments of injustice, the Court of Chancery allowed the injured party to file a bill against the wrong-doer, stating therein the rights of the complainant, and the facts constituting the injury complained of, and calling on the defendant thereto to answer fully, on his oath, a series of searching interrogatories intended to draw forth the full history of the transaction complained of, and to bring to light the papers and other evidence sought for. These papers the Chancellor required the defendant to produce, if he admitted that they were in his possession, or under his control; and these interrogatories

1 Before the adoption of the system of registration, the possession of title papers, mortgages and wills often became necessary in order to show a party’s rights or title, and many such papers were wrongfully withheld from their true owners.
the defendant was required to answer with great minuteness and particularity; and this answer, and the writings, thus obtained, the complainant filed as evidence in his behalf in the Court of law where the suit was pending, whether such suit was by the complainant for the redress of said wrongs, or was brought against the complainant to obtain the benefit of the wrong.

This circuitous procedure was formerly the only way in which the evidence of the opposite party could be obtained in a suit at law. Now, however, that parties are witnesses in our Courts of law, bills of discovery, technically so called, are no longer necessary, and are seldom filed. Indeed, before the passage of the Act allowing parties to testify, there had long been a statute, allowing either party to a suit at law to obtain a discovery from the other party, by a petition and interrogatories filed in the suit at law.

This statute is a short, cheap, and effective substitute for a bill of discovery.

Bills for discovery and reliefs are, however, daily filed in our Courts; and the rules and practice in reference to a discovery continue to be of great practical importance, and will, therefore, be fully considered in the following sections of this Chapter.

§ 1117. The Object of a Bill of Discovery.—It sometimes happens that in a suit at law, a plaintiff or defendant may be unable to successfully maintain or defend the suit, without obtaining the evidence of the other party, or the use of deeds, writings, or other documents, in his possession, or under his control. In such a case, a Court of Equity will, on a bill filed for that purpose alone, aid him in obtaining such evidence, or documents.

Every bill for relief is, in part, a bill of discovery when it asks from the defendant, an answer upon oath as to the matter charged in the bill, and seeks from him a discovery of all such matters. But a bill of discovery, emphatically so called, of which we are now treating, is a bill (1) for the discovery of facts, resting in the knowledge of the defendant; or (2) the discovery of deeds, or writings, or other things, in his custody or power; and (3) in either case seeking no relief in consequence of the discovery, although it may pray for the stay of the proceedings at law, until the discovery is made. The bill is commonly used in aid of the jurisdiction of some Court of law, to enable the party who prosecutes, or defends an action at law, to obtain a discovery of the facts which are material to the prosecution or defence thereof. When a discovery is sought from a corporation, it is allowable to make a principal officer or agent of the corporation a party to the bill in so far as it seeks a discovery, even when no relief is sought against such officer, or agent, but a discovery, only.

§ 1118. The Nature of the Discovery Required of the Defendant.—If the discovery sought is one that the Court will enforce, the following general rules determine the manner and extent of this discovery:

1. Assuming that the matters called for are proper subjects of a discovery; that they belong to the complainant's case, and not to the defendant's; that they are not privileged, or are not exempt within the operation of any other doctrine then the defendant must disclose all material facts; in other words, if he answers at all, he must answer fully. The Court will, however, in the exercise of its discretion, judge of the materiality of the discovery sought, and guard him against oppressive, vexatious, or impertinent inquiries.

2. The answers of the defendant must be complete, so that the information which they give will be of substantial use to the complainant, and must be to the best of the defendant’s knowledge, remembrance, information, and belief.

5 Where the defendant's oath is waived to his answer, the bill is for relief only; where his oath is required to his answer, the bill is for both relief and discovery.

A defendant is bound to obtain information from all means reasonably within his power. If documents are ordered to be produced, it is no excuse for non-production that they are in possession of a third person, or even that a third person has a lien upon or an interest in them. But if documents belong wholly, or in part, to a third person, not a party to the suit, their production will not be compelled.

3. The answers must be distinct, positive in their statements, not leaving facts to be inferred argumentatively, and specific replies must be given to specific questions; but they must not be unnecessarily minute and prolix, especially in setting forth accounts.

§ 1119. The Discovery and Production of Documents.—Bills of discovery, and bills for both discovery and relief, are often filed to compel the discovery and production of documents in, or supposed to be in, the defendant’s possession or power. The following rules and general principles will be found of value in determining when and what documents the defendant is bound to discover and produce.

The production of documents rests wholly on the defendant’s own admissions, contained either in his answer to the bill, or in his answers to interrogatories. If his answers are evasive or insufficient, he may be called upon to make them more specific, and to admit or deny; but when he has once directly denied the possession of documents, or their materiality to the complainant’s case, the Court will not compel their production. The admission authorizing an order to produce must cover two facts: (1) the possession of the documents, and (2) their materiality. Manual possession is not essential. It is enough if the documents are either in the actual possession of the defendant, or are under his control; that is, are in the custody of an attorney, agent, or other third person, whose custody of them the defendant can, by the exercise of his lawful powers, control, or from whom he can, by the exercise of such powers, obtain the possession himself. The rule is the same even when the third party has some lien on the papers. But if the documents belong wholly, or in part, to a third person not a party to the suit, or if they are in the joint possession of the defendant and of some third person not a party to the suit, by virtue of the latter’s separate interest or right in them, their production will not be compelled without the consent of such third person.

It should be carefully borne in mind that the doctrine concerning the production and inspection of documents relates entirely to their disclosure for the purpose of being used as evidence, or to aid in the trial of a pending or contemplated litigation, and has no connection whatever with the ownership of, or final right of possession to, the documents in question. In most instances, the ownership of the documents sought to be produced will not be at all in issue. But even in an action expressly brought to establish the complainant’s title to documents, and to recover their possession, the production of them before the hearing must be governed by settled rules as to discovery. The complainant has otherwise no right to possess or to see them until a decree is rendered in his favor; for such right is the very matter in issue, and to decide that it existed would be to decide the whole merits of the controversy upon a preliminary application. It is well settled, therefore, that the matter of the production and inspection of documents depends upon the same principles and doctrines which govern discovery in general.

§ 1120. The Frame of a Bill of Discovery.—A bill of discovery in aid of a suit at law, or in aid of a defense to a suit at law, should (1) set out in full the facts of the controversy; (2) should show why and wherein the discovery is necessary, detailing the facts; and, if a suit at law has been begun, (3) should recite the institution of the suit, and the parties thereto, and so show the issues involved that the Court of Chancery can see the materiality of the discovery sought. The bill must state that a suit at law has been brought, or is intended to be brought, and that the discovery is to aid complainant in such suit; and, if such suit is not yet brought, the nature of the controversy, and with whom, must be set forth with reasonable certainty.

In regard to the frame of a bill of discovery, it may be generally stated that it must clearly show that it is brought by persons, and for objects, and under circumstances, entitling it to be maintained by the Court. One of the fundamental rules of this branch of Equity, jurisprudence is, that the complainant is entitled only to a discovery of what is necessary to maintain his own title; as, for example, a discovery of deeds under which he claims. But he is not entitled to have a discovery of the title of the other party, from whom he seeks the discovery. Hence, as a general rule, the bill must show such a case, as renders the discovery material to the complainant in the bill, to support or defend a suit. The bill should, also, show that the complainant has a title and interest, and what that title and interest are, in the subject-matter, respecting which the discovery is sought; for a mere stranger cannot maintain a bill for the discovery of another’s title. So the title and interest must be shown to be present and vested.

The bill must not only show an interest in the complainant in the subject-matter, to which the required discovery relates, and such an interest as entitles him to call on the defendant for the discovery; but it must, also, state a case which will constitute a just ground for a suit, or a defence, at law. The object of the Court in compelling a discovery, is to enable some other Court to decide on matters in dispute between the parties, the discovery of which is material. If the bill does not show such a case as renders the discovery material to support or defend a suit, it is plainly not a case for the interposition of the Court. A bill must, also, set forth with reasonable certainty the title of the complainant; and, if it seeks the discovery of deeds and accounts it must, also, describe them with reasonable certainty.

A bill of discovery cannot waive the oath of the defendant to his answer; and should the oath be waived, and the defendant submit to answer, no exception can be taken to the answer for insufficiency.

A bill for discovery alone, prays for no relief outside of the discovery sought, unless an injunction is necessary to stay the suit at law until a discovery is had, in which case the injunction may be prayed for.

When the bill seeks to remove the final determination of a cause from a Court of law to the Chancery Court, on the ground of the necessity of a discovery from the defendant, it must aver that the facts cannot be proved by other evidence than that of the defendant: such a bill, however, is not a bill for discovery, in the technical sense of this Article: it is a bill for discovery and relief. A bill for discovery alone, in aid of a suit at law, need not so aver, for such a bill can be maintained in aid of other proof, or because of the uncertainty of other proof, or even to save the expense of other proof.

§ 1121. Form of a Bill for Discovery, and Relief.—A pure bill of discovery prays for no relief, unless an injunction is prayed for to stay the suit at law until the discovery can be obtained. Every bill that prays for relief, and that calls for an answer on oath, is, also, a bill of discovery in so far as it requires the defendant to discover facts, or produce documents. A bill for discovery and relief differs in no respect in form from a bill praying relief without discovery, except in that it particularizes the facts and documents charged to be in the defendant's possession, and calls on him specifically to make the facts known, and to produce the documents. The following form will illustrate the

ORDINARY PRAYERS FOR A DISCOVERY.

1st. That the defendant be made a party hereto by the issuance and service of a subpoena, requiring him to answer this bill, and upon his corporal oath to make a full and true disclosure and discovery of each and all of the several matters aforesaid, according to the best of his knowledge, remembrance, information, and belief; and especially

(1) That he set forth and discover: whether said testator, Robert Roe, ever made or attempted to make any last will and testament, or any paper of like form or character; and if so, that he produce the same, or else state its entire contents and explain fully what became of it, and where it now is;

(2) That he, the said defendant, set forth a list, or schedule, and description of every deed, book, account, letter, paper, note, memorandum, or other writing, relating to the matters aforesaid, or to any of them, now in his possession or power, or ever in his possession or power, or known to him; and if not now in his possession or power, let him state and fully discover where and in whose possession or power said writings or papers, or any and which of them are, or have been; and the full description and character of said writings or papers;

(3) That the defendant set forth in his answer a full, true, and particular account of all rents, profits, and fruits of said tract of land, [or, of all moneys, notes, choses in action, evidences of debt, goods, wares, merchandise and other things of value belonging to the complainant, or belonging to said firm,] received or collected by him, or by any person acting for him, specifying each item and date thereof;

(4) That the defendant set forth and disclose fully the exact amount of money [or, other property,] by him received from said Robert Roe, deceased, and in what said money was invested, and how much he now has in his possession, and what became of that not invested and not now in his possession;

(5) That the defendant file with his answer the receipt executed by him to said Robert Roe referred to in the bill, and, if it is not in his possession or control, that he disclose and make known what became of said receipt, and where it now is; and he will answer whether he ever saw, or ever executed, such receipt, or any similar writing, and if a similar writing, he will file the same, if in existence, or give a perfect copy thereof if it be destroyed, lost, misplaced, or otherwise out of his reach; and, if he give a copy, he will explain why he cannot, or does not, file the original.

And the defendant will full, true, direct, and perfect answers make, according to the best of his knowledge, remembrance, information, and belief, to all and singular the matters, charges, and interrogatories aforesaid.

2d. [Then will follow the usual prayers for extraordinary process, if any, and for special and general relief, also, if the bill seeks both discovery and relief.]

On a bill for discovery and relief being sustained, and answered, the complainant, if his bill so prays, may have relief not only as to the equitable matters involved, but, also, as to any legal matter; for, when the Chancery Court has jurisdiction for one purpose, such as a discovery, or an injunction, it will take jurisdiction for all purposes, and will award damages where recoverable at law.

The following is a form of a pure bill of discovery:

BILL OF DISCOVERY.

[For address and caption, see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That a suit is now pending against him by the defendant in the common law Court at Bath, in the State of Maine: in this suit defendant claims that complainant owes him three

28 This bill is based on the supposition that the old common law practice prevails in the Court at Bath, and that parties cannot be witnesses, and that a bill of discovery in Chancery is the only method whereby a defendant at law can obtain the testimony of the plaintiff. Both parties reside in Memph, Tennessee. The plaintiff sues in Bath in order to attach complainant's town lots there. As the Tennessee Chancery Court has jurisdiction of the person of the defendant this bill could have been called on to enjoin and prohibit the defendant from further prosecuting his lawsuit in Bath, and this, perhaps, would have been the wiser course, but he was not so advised! A bill of discovery will lie in our Chancery Courts in aid of a suit, or a defense to a suit, in another State, or in a foreign country. 2 Barb. Ch. Pr., 102.

thousand dollars for lumber purchased from him by complainant in said State, and defendant has obtained an attachment on Complainant's town lots in said city of Bath.

II.

That on or about the 24th day of December, 1905, complainant and defendant, who both reside in the city of Memphis, Tennessee, met at the Gayosa House in Memphis, and amicably, and as complainant thought, satisfactorily, adjusted all their accounts against each other, including said claim of three thousand dollars for lumber, and they exchanged receipts in full of all demands, but by some accident, due perhaps to the festivities of the Christmas season, complainant mislaid said receipt, and after diligent search has been unable to find it.

III.

That complainant charges that the defendant took the receipt he gave complainant, and put it in his pocket, perhaps by mistake, as complainant put the receipt he had given defendant in his pocket, but discovering it next day, handed it to the defendant, with apologies.

IV.

That complainant has no way of proving said settlement or the existence of the said receipt in full of all demands, given to him by the defendant at said Gayosa Hotel in Memphis, as aforesaid, or that he has fully paid said lumber claim, except by the testimony of the defendant himself.

V.

Complainant therefore prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue requiring the defendant to appear and answer the bill, and upon his corporal oath to make a full, true, direct and perfect disclosure and discovery of each and all of the several matters aforesaid, according to the best of his knowledge, remembrance, information and belief, and especially that he answer, set forth and discover:

(1.) Whether at said Gayosa House, on December 24, 1905, or at any other near time and place, he and complainant entered into a settlement of all their mutual demands, including said Maine lumber bill, on which said lawsuit at Bath has been brought.

(2.) Whether any and what receipts, or other papers, were then and there, or at any other near time and place, signed by complainant and defendant, or by either of them covering said lumber among other matters.

(3.) What was the purport and tenor or substance and object of the papers so signed.

(4.) Whether the papers so signed did or not cover all outstanding and unsettled matters and demands each party at that time held against the other, and if not, state fully and particularly what they did cover, and what were their purpose and purport.

(5.) Let the defendant answer on his corporal oath as aforesaid, and to the best of his knowledge, remembrance and belief whether at said place and time, or at some other place and time thereafter, he signed, or put his name to, a writing purporting to be a receipt in full of all demands he at this time held against complainant.

(6.) And if he did not sign, or put his name to such a writing, let him answer on his oath, as aforesaid, the character and purport of the writing he did then and there or thereabouts sign or put his name to.

(7.) Let the defendant file with his answer the paper or papers, receipt or receipts, writing or writings, he so signed as aforesaid; and if not in his possession, or under his control, he will state what became of the same, and where the same now is or are, or is or are supposed to be; and if the same is or are mislaid, lost or destroyed, he will state which, and give the date and substance thereof to the best of his knowledge, recollection and belief.

(8.) If there be any other matter in defendant's knowledge, or in his memory or belief, relating to said settlement or writings, not set forth or alluded to in his answers, let him here state it as fully as though specially and particularly called on so to do by complainant.

(9.) Let defendant answer directly on his corporal oath, whether he has, or has ever seen, or has any remembrance, or recollection of ever having had, or ever having seen, any receipt in any way resembling the one referred to in the body of the bill; and if so, let him give its date and substance.

(10.) Let defendant answer directly on his corporal oath whether said lumber account, on which said lawsuit at Bath has been brought, has in any way, at any place, ever been paid.

And the defendant will full, true, direct and perfect answer make, according to the best of his knowledge, remembrance, information and belief, to each and all of the matters, charges, and interrogations aforesaid.

2d. Complainant also prays that an injunction issue to restrain and prohibit the defendant from the further prosecution of said lawsuit at Bath until the further order of your Honor in the premises.

And complainant will ever pray as aforesaid.

This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

EUGENE WEBB, Solicitor.

[Annex affidavit, see, ante, §§ 161; 789.]

27 While a bill for discovery only, prays no relief, a prayer for an injunction is allowable and not considered as relief, the object of the injunction being merely to stay the lawsuit until the defendant has fully answered the bill, for otherwise the discovery would be fruitless. 2 Barb. Ch. Pr., 108.

28 When no injunction is prayed, and the bill does not seek to draw the jurisdiction of the whole controversy from the law Court into Chancery, no affidavit to the bill is necessary. Parsons & Wilson v. Stephens, 2 Tenn., 260.
§ 1122. The Statutory Petition for a Discovery.—But now, by the Code, either party to a suit at law is entitled, by means of a sworn petition in the cause, to a discovery, from the other party, of any matters material to the issue of such suit, in all cases where the same party would, by the rules of Equity, be entitled to a discovery in aid of such suit. The contents of such petition for a discovery and the procedure thereon are fully detailed in the Code; and this method of obtaining a discovery is so simple, speedy and convenient, that it has practically superseded the method by a bill in Equity in aid of a suit at law. But this statute does not affect the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court, unless the complainant has had the benefit of a discovery in the law Court under the statutory proceedings by petition, in which case a bill for discovery will not lie in Equity.

§ 1123. Defences to Bills of Discovery.—The defence to a bill of discovery is usually made by demurrer or by plea in bar, and if not so made, as a rule, the defendant must answer the bill. The following are the principal grounds of demurrer:

1. Demurrer Because the Discovery May Subject the Defendant to a Penalty, or a Forfeiture. The defendant cannot be compelled to answer what may subject him to a penalty, or forfeiture, or criminal accusation. But the fact that his answer may reflect on his moral character, or show that he has been guilty of fraudulent dealings not indictable, will not excuse him from answering.

2. Demurrer Because the Discovery Would be Immaterial. The defendant cannot be compelled to discover anything immaterial to the relief prayed.

3. Demurrer Because the Discovery Would Involve a Breach of Professional Confidence. A Solicitor cannot be required to discover any fact derived from his client. Public policy forbids such disclosures.

4. Demurrer Because the Discovery Relates Only to the Defendant’s Title. A complainant has no right to pry into the title of his adversary: he may demand a discovery only in so far as is necessary to establish his own case as set out in his bill.

5. Defences by Plea and by Answer. If any of the grounds, for which a demurrer would lie if apparent on the face of the bill, really exist, but are not disclosed by the bill, the defendant may bring such matters forward by a plea in bar.

The same matters that would be proper for a plea in bar, may be incorporated in an answer. On exceptions to such an answer, for insufficiency, the Court will determine whether the defendant is bound to make the discovery he resists. The defendant cannot, however, demur to a part of the bill of discovery, and answer to a part, the rule being well settled that if he answers at all, he must answer fully, except as to matters which the Court will not require to be answered.

§ 1124. Proceedings upon a Bill of Discovery.—Upon a bill of discovery being filed, if it be demurrable the defendant may have it dismissed on demurrer: if it be not demurrable, or his demurrer is overruled, he must answer; and in his answer he must admit or deny every material allegation in the bill, and must directly and fully respond to every interrogatory propounded in the bill, demur to the relief and answer to the discovery. But he cannot demur to the discovery alone, and not to the relief, when the discovery is merely incidental to the relief; for that would be to demur, not to the thing required, but to the means by which it was to be obtained.

29 Code, 3891-3900. 30 See Fort v. Orndoff, 7 Heisk., 174; Ducktown Co. v. Fain, 1 Cates, 56. 31 Elliston v. Hughes, 1 Head, 227; 2 Sto. Eq. Jur., § 1481, note 3. In some other States, however, the contrary ruling prevails. See, 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1556, note 10; 1 Pem. Eq. Jur., §§ 133, 197; 230. 32 Bumpass v. Reams, 1 Sneed, 595. See, Spurlock v. Fults, 1 Swan, 289, where a bill of discovery was sustained, after the enactment of the statutory remedy by petition. 33 2 Barb. Ch. Pr., 109. Where the bill is for discovery and relief, the defendant may, if he pleases, 29 2 Barb. Ch. Pr., 112-114.
and discover every matter inquired about in the bill to the best of his knowledge, information, remembrance, and belief.

As a bill of discovery prays for no relief, except a temporary injunction, the defendant is entitled to be dismissed with his costs, and to have the injunction dissolved, as soon as he files a perfect answer. If his answer is not excepted to in twenty days after complainant's Solicitor is notified of its filing, or if the exceptions to it have all been finally disposed of, the answer is deemed to be full and perfect; and the costs are adjudged, and the injunction dissolved as a matter of course.\(^40\)

A bill of discovery may be amended, or a supplemental bill of discovery filed by leave of the Chancellor, as in case of bills praying relief, especially where the ground of the amendment is furnished by the answer.\(^41\)

DECREE ON A BILL OF DISCOVERY.

John Doe, vs. Richard Roe.

Order of Dismissal.

In this case, the defendant having fully and perfectly answered, on his motion the injunction is dissolved, and the costs of the cause are adjudged against the complainant and A B, C D, his prosecution sureties, for which an execution will issue.

The bill in this case being for discovery only, and, therefore, no further proceedings in the cause necessary, the cause will be discontinued from the docket.

SUITS TO PERPETUATE TESTIMONY.

\(^{2}\) 2 Sto. Eq. Jur., 1399.
which the complainant is desirous of perpetuating evidence. Thus, for example, if the object of the bill is to perpetuate the testimony of the witnesses to a deed respecting real estate, the deed should be properly described, and the names of the witnesses, who are to prove the same, set forth. And if the object of the bill is to perpetuate the evidence of witnesses to facts in pari, it is not sufficient to state generally that they can give evidence as to certain facts; but the bill must state specially what these facts are. The bill should also show that the complainant has some interest in the subject-matter, which may be endangered if the testimony in support of it is lost; for, unless he has some interest, he is not entitled to maintain the bill. A mere expectancy, however strong, is not sufficient; the party must have a positive interest. But if there be any vested interest, however slight, that is sufficient, and whether it be absolute, or contingent, whether it be present, or remote and future in enjoyment, is wholly immaterial.3

On the other hand, it seems equally indispensable to a bill of this kind that it should state, that the defendant has, or pretends to have, a title to, or that he claims the right to contest the title of the complainant in, the subject-matter of the proposed testimony. For, unless the defendant has, or claims some interest, it is utterly fruitless to perpetuate the testimony, since it can have no operation upon those who are really the parties in interest.4

§ 1127. As to the Necessity for Perpetuating the Testimony.—The bill must also show some ground of necessity for perpetuating the evidence; as that the facts, to which the testimony of the witnesses proposed to be examined relate, cannot be immediately investigated in Court; or, if they can be so investigated, that the right of action belongs exclusively to the other party; or that the other party has interposed some impediment, such as an injunction, to an immediate trial of the right in the suit at law; so that, before the investigation can take place, the evidence of a material witness is likely to be lost, by his death or departure from the country.5 In the former case, the bill must allege that the complainant is in possession of the property, or the right, without any disturbance by the other party, upon which an action at law can be founded. In the latter case, the bill must allege the specific facts on which the complainant puts his case; and also that the witnesses are old, or infirm, or in ill health, and not likely to live; or, that he has no present right to maintain an action; as if he have a title in remainder, or reversion only, after a present existing estate for life. Without such allegations, the bill will be clearly demurrable; since, if the subject-matter is capable of being immediately investigated at law, there is no ground to perpetuate the testimony; but it will be the party's own laches not so to try his right.6

§ 1128. The Prayer of the Bill, and the Affidavit Thereto.—The prayer of the bill also requires attention. It should pray leave to examine witnesses touching the matter stated, to the end that their testimony may be preserved and perpetuated. It should also pray the proper process of subpoena. But it should not pray that the defendant may abide such order and decree as the Court shall think proper to make, for that will turn it into a bill for relief, which is inconsistent with the nature of a bill to perpetuate testimony. If the bill should pray relief, it will of course be demurrable, and may be dismissed for this cause. Care should be taken not to mix up in the bill other matters not pertinent.7

Where a bill is framed on the ground that the testimony of a witness may be lost by his death, or departure from the State before the case can be investigated in a Court of law, it seems proper, also, in order to avoid any objection, to annex to it an affidavit of the circumstances, by which the evidence, intended to be perpetuated, is in danger of being lost.\footnote{8}{Sto. Eq. Pl., § 304.}

§ 1129. Form of a Bill to Perpetuate Testimony.—Bills to perpetuate testimony continue to be filed in our Courts, notwithstanding the statutory remedy by petition, hereafter more fully referred to. The following form will illustrate the foregoing requirements as to the frame of the bill.

BILL TO PERPETUATE TESTIMONY.

To the Hon. W. S. Bearden, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Shelbyville, for the County of Bedford:

Jane Doe, a resident of Bedford county, complainant,

vs.

John Doe, a resident of the same county, defendant.

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That she is the sole heir and devisee of David Doe, who died in the said county of Bedford on July 13, 1891, seized and possessed of the following tract of land: [Describing it by metes and bounds, or other accurate description.]

II. The said David Doe left a last will and testament wherein and whereby he devised to complainant said tract of land, in fee. Said will has been duly probated in common form in the County Court of Bedford county. A certified copy of said will is herewith filed as an exhibit to this bill, marked "A," and will be read as evidence at the hearing.

III. David Doe was an Englishman, and complainant was born in England. Complainant's mother, whose name was Jenny Doe, was the lawful wife of said David Doe; and she died soon after giving birth to complainant. The defendant charges that complainant is not the daughter of said David Doe, and that said David Doe never was married to complainant's mother, Jenny Doe. He, also, charges that said will is a fraud and forgery, concocted by complainant and her two uncles, Daniel Doe and Donald Doe, who witnessed and proved said will. The defendant maintains and avers that he is the sole heir, and only living and lawful child of said David Doe.

IV. Complainant further shows and alleges, that said Daniel Doe and Donald Doe are residents and citizens of England, and are here on a temporary visit only, and expect to sail for England within the present year. By them she can prove that David Doe was lawfully married in England to said Jenny Doe, whose maiden name was Jenny Davis, that complainant was born of said Jenny Doe more than a year after her said marriage to the said David Doe, and that complainant is the lawful child and heir of said David Doe.

V. Complainant further alleges and shows, that she can prove by said Daniel Doe and Donald Doe, who are the sole witnesses to said will, that her said father was of sound mind and disposing memory when said will was by him executed, that he signed and acknowledged it before them, and declared it to be his last will, and that they witnessed it in his presence, and at his request, and that neither of them is interested in any devise or legacy under said will, and that no fraud, deception, or undue influence was practiced upon said David Doe by them, or by complainant, or by any one.

VI. Complainant further shows to the Court that the defendant, John Doe, is a son of her father by a second wife; and that he is very hostile to complainant, and threatens to institute suit to have said will set aside, and to recover said farm, as soon as said Daniel Doe and Donald Doe sail for England. Complainant fears that she will not be able to prove the facts charged in this bill, if she should lose the testimony of said Daniel Doe and Donald Doe; and she avers that their testimony cannot be supplied by any evidence within the jurisdiction of the State.

VII. The premises considered, complainant prays:

1st. [For proper process and for the defendant to answer, in the usual form.]

2d. That the testimony of said Daniel Doe and of said Donald Doe be taken and perpetuated; and duly enrolled.

3d. That complainant may be given the liberty to read and make use of said testimony on all future occasions, as she shall be advised.

4th. That all orders be made necessary to effectuate fully the prayers and object of this bill.

IVIS & IVIS, Solicitors.

While there seems to be no rule requiring such a bill to be verified, nevertheless, out of abundant caution, a prudent Solicitor will require his client to make oath to it, and thus avoid the question.

§ 1130. Defences to the Bill, and Subsequent Proceedings.—The defendant may have the bill dismissed, or may file a demurrer to the bill, in any case where such defences will lie to an ordinary bill for relief.

The bill is never brought to a hearing, but after the bill is sustained, either on a pro confesso, or an answer, the Court makes an order to have the depositions of the witnesses taken and perpetuated, on due notice to the defendant.

§ 1131. Statutory Petition to Perpetuate Testimony.—The Code provides for a more summary method of perpetuating testimony, and this method has almost entirely superseded the method in Equity, above given. The petition required by the Code should contain the substance of a bill in Equity in a like case: it should set forth the reasons for the application, the subject-matter of controversy, the names of the parties interested, and the names of the witnesses, and should pray that the depositions of the witnesses be taken and perpetuated. The proceedings under the Code, down to the taking of the depositions, are substantially the same as those on a bill in Equity to perpetuate testimony; and the defence to such a bill would equally avail against the petition. The main differences between the proceeding under the Code and a bill in Equity are, that the former may be resorted to in a pending litigation, and is, also, more summary and less formal. It must not, however, be supposed that the statutory provisions for perpetuating evidence in any way repeal, or otherwise affect, the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court; such jurisdiction continues unimpaired, and a bill to perpetuate testimony will lie in that Court as formerly. Such a bill may be filed in this State, in aid of a suit in another State, when the jurisprudence of the latter allows such a procedure.

§ 1132. Form of a Petition to Perpetuate Testimony.—The form of a petition to perpetuate testimony must conform to the statutory requirements already given. The following form will serve as a guide:

PETITION TO PERPETUATE TESTIMONY.

To the Hon. Thomas M. McConnell, Chancellor of the Third Chancery Division: Your petitioner, John Den, a resident of Hamilton county, respectfully shows to your Honor:

I. That there is now pending in the Supreme Court of Tennessee, at Knoxville, a suit brought against him, in the Chancery Court at Chattanooga, by Richard Fen, to recover the following tract of land situated in Hamilton county: [describing it fully.] Said suit was dismissed by said Court on motion [or, on demurrer,] and complainant Fen appealed to said Supreme Court.

II. Said Fen’s supposed cause of action is based on a deed for said tract he fraudulently procured from your petitioner, on or about the month of January, 1890. Petitioner can prove the fraud by John Doe and Richard Roe, both residents of Chattanooga, who were present and witnessed the deed. John Doe is an old man in very feeble health, and Richard Roe expects soon to go as a missionary to Japan. Without the testimony of these two witnesses, your petitioner will be unable to prove the fraud by which said Fen obtained said deed.

III. It will be more than six months before the said Supreme Court will pass on said appeal. If the decree of the said Chancery Court is affirmed, the said Fen declares that he will bring another suit; and if the said decree is reversed the suit will be remanded to be proceeded in. Thus, in either event, the testimony of said two witnesses is of great importance to your petitioner.

IV. Your petitioner, therefore prays that the depositions of said two witnesses may be taken and perpetuated as provided by the statute for such case made; and that your Honor will make all orders necessary to that end.

[ Annex affidavit as in § 789, ante.]

John Den.

§ 1133 SUITS TO TAKE TESTIMONY DE BENE ESSE.

THE CHANCELLOR'S ORDER.

Upon consideration of the foregoing petition, it is ordered by me that said Richard Fen appear before me, in the Clerk and Master's office in Chattanooga, on July 20, 1891, and that he then and there show cause, if any he have, why the prayer of the said petition should not be granted; and that a copy of said petition, and of this order, be served on him at least five days before said July 20, 1891.

THOS. M. McCONNELL, Chancellor.

If the opposite party fail to appear, or appearing, show no sufficient cause to the contrary, the Chancellor will make the following further order, on the petition, or on a paper annexed thereto:

ORDER TO PERPETUATE THE TESTIMONY.

Upon further consideration of said petition, and of said notice, and of sufficient cause to the contrary being shown, after due notice to said Richard Fen, service of such notice duly appearing, it is ordered by me that the depositions of said John Doe and Richard Roe be taken by J. B. Ragon, Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court at Chattanooga, on July 25th, 1891, and succeeding days if necessary, at his office in Chattanooga; and that, when taken, said petition, the notice and the orders made thereon, and said depositions be registered in Hamilton county, and that the petitioner pay all the costs incident to this proceeding.

July 20, 1891.

THOMAS M. McCONNELL, Chancellor.

ARTICLE IV.

SUITS TO TAKE TESTIMONY DE BENE ESSE.

§ 1133. The Object of the Bill.

§ 1134. The Frame of the Bill.

§ 1133. The Object of the Bill.—This species of bill bears a close analogy to bills to perpetuate testimony, and is often confounded with the latter: but they differ materially. Bills to perpetuate testimony can be maintained only when no present suit can be brought at law, by the party seeking the aid of the Court to try his right. Bills to take testimony de bene esse, on the other hand, are sustainable only in aid of a suit already pending. The latter may be brought by a person who is in possession, or who is out of possession, and whether he is complainant or defendant, or whether the suit concerns rights and property, or grows out of a contract, or even a tort.

The object of the bill is to take the testimony of witnesses for the trial at law, where the testimony may otherwise be lost; where the witnesses are aged, or infirm, or about to depart from the country. So, if a witness is the only witness to the matter to which he is to be examined, a bill will lie, on account of the general uncertainty of human life, to take his testimony de bene esse, notwithstanding he is neither aged nor infirm. In general, a witness is not treated as being aged in the sense of the rule, unless he is seventy years of age. But if he is infirm, or in ill health, to an extent likely to endanger or destroy his life, or to prevent his attendance at the trial, his testimony may be taken at any age. If a witness is going out of the jurisdiction of the Court, although only into a state or country under the same general sovereignty, his testimony may also be taken; as, for example, if he is going from England to Scotland; or in America, if he is going from one State to another.

§ 1134. The Frame of the Bill.—In framing the bill, therefore, care should be taken to allege all the material facts, upon which the right to maintain the bill depends, whether it is dependent upon the age, or the infirmity of the witness, or upon his being about to depart from the country, or upon his being a sole witness. And there should be annexed to the bill an affidavit of the circumstances, by which the evidence, intended to be perpetuated, is in danger of being lost, as by death, departure from the country, or otherwise. The affidavit should be positive as to the material facts. Thus, for example, if it relies upon the fact, that the witness is the only witness to a material fact, it will not be sufficient that the affidavit states, that he is so in the belief of the party; but it must be positively stated, that he is the only witness who knows the fact.

In other respects, the general rules, already stated in regard to bills to perpetuate testimony, are for the most part applicable to bills to take testimony de bene esse; and therefore it is unnecessary to repeat them in this place.

§ 1135. Statutory Substitute for the Bill.—The Code provides a method of taking testimony de bene esse, so simple and efficacious, that a bill in Equity for that purpose has become practically almost obsolete; and the main purpose of considering the remedy in Equity has been to present all the sorts of bills known to Equity pleading, as well as to throw light upon the statutory substitute for the bill. Under the Code, depositions of witnesses may be taken at any time after action brought, in the following cases:

1. When the witness from age, bodily infirmity, or other cause, is incapable of attending to give testimony at the trial.

2. When he is under the necessity of leaving the State before the cause is tried, or even before it is at issue.

3. When he is about to leave the county in which the suit is pending, and will probably not return until after the trial.

4. When he is the only witness to a material fact.

5. When he is going out of the Chancery division, or does not reside in such division.

In any and all of the foregoing cases, the depositions of the witnesses are taken, on the same notice, and in the same manner, as though the cause was duly at issue.

Testimony de bene esse may, also, be taken in the manner pointed out in the previous Article, the Code expressly providing that evidence may be taken under sections 3876-3888, "to be used in pending, or expected, litigation." And if any case should arise for the taking of evidence de bene esse not included in section 3888 of the Code, application could be made by petition, under sections 3876-3888 of the Code, or a bill de bene esse might be filed.

Where a case is appealed to the Supreme Court before proof is taken, and where an action in the Circuit Court is enjoined before the trial, it often becomes highly important to take the testimony of witnesses de bene esse; and if there be any danger of the depositions being lost, or destroyed, it would be safer to have the evidence perpetuated, under the statute, by registration.

THE OFFICERS AND RULES OF THE CHANCERY COURT.

CHAPTER LXIII.

THE CHANCELLOR: HIS POWERS AND DUTIES.

ARTICLE I. The Qualifications and Powers of the Chancellor.

ARTICLE II. Duties of the Chancellor.

ARTICLE III. Provisions when the Chancellor is Incompetent.

ARTICLE IV. Etiquette of the Chancery Court.

ARTICLE I.

THE QUALIFICATIONS AND POWERS OF THE CHANCELLOR.

§ 1136. Qualifications and Disqualifications of Chancellors.

§ 1137. Appointment of Clerk and Master.

§ 1136. Qualifications and Disqualifications of Chancellors.—Every Chancellor must be at least thirty years old; and must at the time of his election or appointment, have been a resident of the State for five years, and of his Chancery Division for one year. Before entering upon the duties of his office, the Chancellor must take an oath, or affirmation, to support the Constitution of the United States, and that of the State; and to administer justice without respect of persons, and impartially to discharge all the duties incumbent on him as Chancellor to the best of his skill and ability; he must also take the oath against duelling.

The Chancellor is incompetent except by consent of all parties:
1. Where he is interested in the event of any cause;
2. Or connected with either party, by affinity or consanguinity within the sixth degree, computing by the civil law;
3. Or has been of counsel in the cause;
4. Or has presided on the trial in an inferior Court;
5. Or, in criminal cases for felony, where the person upon whom, or upon whose property, the felony has been committed, is connected with him, by affinity or consanguinity, within the sixth degree, computing by the civil law.

The Chancellor is required to reside in the Chancery Division for which he was elected or appointed, and a removal therefrom will create a vacancy in the office.

The Chancellor cannot practice law, or perform any of the functions of attorney or counsel in any of the Courts of this State, except in cases which he may have been employed as counsel previous to his election or appointment.

§ 1137. Appointment of Clerk and Master.—The Chancellor appoints the Clerks and Master’s for the various Courts of his Division. This is a most responsible duty, and one attended with many trials and embarrassments, and hedged about by many difficulties and perplexities.

In appointing a Clerk and Master the Chancellor should keep in mind: 1, that a public office is a public trust, and that the people of the county are the persons to be benefited by the appointment; 2, that in appointing a Clerk and Master he is executing a public trust, and is bound so to execute it that the beneficiaries, the people of the county having business in the Court, shall derive the greatest possible benefit from his execution of that trust; and 3, that this benefit can be derived only by appointing to the office of Clerk and Master a man who is worthy of the office, and capable of discharging its duties, and who will discharge them, in person, diligently, honestly, impartially and courteously.\(^{26}\)

The appointment of the Clerk and Master should be in writing, somewhat as follows:

APPOINTMENT OF CLERK AND MASTER.

Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 1, 1882.

Mr. S. P. Evans:

Having full confidence in your ability, integrity, and diligence, I hereby appoint you Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court of Knox county for the full term of six\(^{27}\) years. Respectfully,

W. B. Staley, Chancellor.

§ 1138. Appointment of Special Terms.—The Chancellor of any Court may appoint a special term thereof whenever he may deem it necessary for the dispatch of business. This appointment may be made either (1) at the regular term by an entry on the minutes to that effect, designating the time, or (2) in vacation, by publication in some newspaper in the division, and giving notice thereof in writing to the Clerk and Master, at least thirty days before its commencement.\(^{28}\) If the appointment is made on the minutes, it may be as follows:

APPOINTMENT OF A SPECIAL TERM.

A special term of this Court being necessary for the dispatch of business, is hereby appointed to begin on the second Monday of March next, to which time this Court doth now adjourn.

If the appointment is made in vacation, the newspaper notice may be as follows:

SPECIAL TERM OF THE CHANCERY COURT.

A special term of the Chancery Court for Greene county being necessary for the dispatch of business, is hereby appointed to be held in the Court House in Greeneville on the 1st Monday of April next.

February 24, 1891.

John P. Smith, Chancellor.

And the notice to the Clerk and Master may be as follows:

To the Clerk and Master, at Greeneville:

You are hereby notified that a special term of the Chancery Court for Greene county is appointed to be held in the Court House in Greeneville, on the 1st Monday in April next.

February 24, 1891.

John P. Smith, Chancellor.

At such special terms the Chancellor has and may exercise the same powers, and all the business of the Court, of every nature and kind, shall be conducted in the same manner, as at the regular terms.\(^{29}\) Special terms are not, however, mere continuations of the regular term, even when appointed at the regular term by an entry on the minutes thereof: they are distinct terms, and no order can be made at a special term in any way changing the orders of the previous regular terms, nor can any order be made, or any act be done, at a special term in any way changing the orders of the previous regular terms.

\(^{26}\) No man should be appointed Clerk and Master, and no man should accept such an appointment, who does not expect to perform the duties of the office in person.

Be it remembered that, at a special term of the Chancery Court for Greene county, begun and held in the Court House in Greeneville, on the 1st Monday of April, 1891, being the 6th day of said month, in pursuance of an appointment duly made, present and presiding Hon. John P. Smith, Chancellor of said division, the following proceedings were had:

§ 1139a. Powers at Chambers.—The Chancellor exercises many powers at Chambers, which have hereinbefore been fully considered.

ARTICLE II.

DUTIES OF THE CHANCELLOR.

§ 1139. Duties of the Chancellor.
§ 1140. Suggestions When Pleadings or Proofs are Inadequate.

§ 1139. Duties of the Chancellor.—The Chancellor must not do any official act until after he has taken the oath of office; nor must he remove out of his Chancery division, as shown in the preceding section. He must also discharge the following duties:

1. Duties as to the Bonds of the Clerk and Master. The Chancellor must (1) examine and attest the bonds required by law to be given by the Clerks and Masters of his division; (2) must cause the bonds to be recorded in the minutes of the Court, and a certificate of such recording to be endorsed upon them by the Clerks and Masters giving them; and (3) he must forward the Clerks and Masters' revenue bonds to the Comptroller, and their other bonds to the Secretary of State.

The Chancellor must, also, on the first day of each term, examine the bonds of the Clerks and Masters, and see that they are in conformity to law; and that the sureties thereon are good and solvent, and worth the penalties of the bonds. If the Chancellor, in any manner, ascertains that the bonds of any Clerk and Master, within his Chancery division, are from any cause insufficient, it is his duty forthwith to make an order on the minutes of the Court, requiring such Clerk and Master, within thirty days, to make his bonds sufficient, by executing new bonds or giving additional security, and complying with any other order of the Chancellor in regard to such bonds. If the Clerk and Master fail to comply with such order, it is the imperative duty of the Court to remove him, and appoint a new Clerk and Master.

2. Duty to Remove a Clerk and Master, When. It is the duty of the Chancellor, in Court, to remove the Clerk and Master from office (1) when he is convicted of making a false financial report; or (2) when he repeatedly fails to order from the People as a whole, acting in their constitutional capacity as a State. These orders are contained in the Constitution and statutes of the State; and to loyally obey these the Judges not only impliedly contract, but, also, solemnly swear in writing and subscribe their names to their oaths. Hence, the sole measure of a Judge's duty as a public servant is the Constitution and laws of the State, and an unceasing disposition to apply this Constitution and these laws, intelligently, conscientiously, impartially, and inflexibly, in the determination of all matters lawfully submitted to him for his official adjudication. And in making such determinations it is most prudent to follow in the footsteps of his best predecessors, and not try to be wiser. Boyd v. McLean, 1 Johns. Ch., 587. See, ante, § 62, sub-sec. 4, note 6.

make a report upon a reference; 5 (3) when he is convicted of failing or refusing to issue an execution, or of failing to make the proper endorsements upon an execution, or the proper entries upon his execution docket; 6 or (4) when he is convicted of any other misdemeanor in office, or of a felony; or (5) when he removes from the county in which his Court is held; or (6) when he fails to give security as required by law; or (7) when he fails to pay over public moneys, or moneys collected officially; or (8) when he is incapable of discharging the duties of his office, or neglects his duties, or misbehaves in office; or (9) for any other cause to which the penalty of removal is attached by law. 7

3. Duties in Reference to His Courts. He is required to hold the terms of his Court at the regular times appointed by law, unless prevented by sickness of himself or family, or by some other unavoidable necessity. 8

He is, also, required to have the minutes of his Court read each morning in open Court, and to sign them. 9

§ 1140. Suggestions When the Pleadings or Proofs are Inadequate.—It not unfrequently happens that, at the hearing, it is discovered that the merits of the controversy, as shown by the evidence, are with the complainant; but that the averments or prayer of his bill are not such as to justify the Court in granting him full relief, or even any relief. It, also, often happens that one side or the other, generally the complainant, fails at the hearing in consequence of some manifest slip of counsel, or some oversight in supplying a connecting link in the chain of evidence, or some unexpected exceptions to evidence, or some failure to produce or properly prove a deed or other writing, or some other error, or omission, or defect in evidence, which can almost certainly be supplied or cured without much, if any, delay or additional cost. 10

In such and similar cases, the question arises: What is the duty of the Chancellor? It is true, he is sworn to be impartial, but is he not, also, sworn to "administer justice;" and must he be so "impartial!" as not to "administer justice?" In other words, must a Chancellor, presiding over a Court that was originally established to rescue justice from the deadly clutch of forms, and the arbitrary and technical rules of other Courts, sit dumb and motionless while justice is being outraged in his own Court, before his own eyes, and within reach of his own arms? 11

The authority and duty of the Chancellor to allow, or even suggest, amendments in all cases when manifestly necessary to the administration of justice, is well settled. In such cases, the Supreme Court often remands causes on its own motion in order that the proper amendment may be made, or that additional proof may be made. 12

But the Chancellor, while thus open-eyed to see that justice is done to one party, should not be blind to the rights of the other party; and if any amendment or delay is the result of negligence, or increases costs, or causes a continuance, such amendment or delay should only be allowed on the payment of 15 Courts are not mere arenas for the display of skill in juridical dialectics, or forensic fence; nor are Judges mere umpires to enforce fair play between judicious combatants at their arts, and to bestow the rewards of victory upon the shrewdest, the most eloquent, or the most skilful. Judges have affirmative duties to discharge: they are sworn to "administer justice;" and are bound by that oath to see that justice is done.

heavy costs. He who seeks equity should be required to do equity. Forms and correct pleadings are necessary to the safe and orderly administration of justice, and a Chancellor fails to measure up to the full stature of his office when he ignores the rules of pleading and practice; and yet he cannot always afford to sacrifice a party in order to punish his Solicitor. The best he can do in many cases is to allow amendments on costs.\(^\text{13}\)

§ 1141. Suggestions as to Other Matters.—There are various other matters which the Chancellor will be called on to consider in connection with the discharge of his various duties, among which the following may be specially noted:

1. As to Amendments. He should be very liberal in allowing meritorious amendments, but very rigorous in requiring a big price to be paid for them. A Chancellor has no right to grant favors to one party at the expense of the other party. It is not selling justice to require a party to pay costs in such cases, because the party is in default, and is merely paying costs as a penalty in order to be relieved from such default. A Chancellor who allows his heart to control his rulings has forgotten both his oath and his duty.

2. As to Continuances. Continuances after the lapse of six months, should never be granted without terms, such terms to include a large part of the costs, unless the continuance is based on accident or mistake, unmixed with negligence, or on the fraud or misconduct of the other party, or of some of the officers of the Court. Special affidavits should support every motion for a continuance, unless the facts are admitted in writing, or the continuance consented to by the adverse party. Continuances should seldom be granted at the term next preceding the meeting of the Supreme Court.\(^\text{14}\)

3. As to Pleas and Demurrers. Pleas and demurrers should not be encouraged. The matter of a plea in bar can generally be as well set up in an answer as in a plea, and unless the ground of a plea is unquestionably decisive, the plea should be overruled, with leave to rely upon it in the answer. Demurrers are often filed merely for delay. If a demurrer is frivolous, and has also caused delay, the demurrant should, on his demurrer being overruled, not only be taxed with all the costs of the cause then accrued, but should be required to file his answer within two days, if not instantaneously; and certainly before the end of the term; or if Court is not in session, before the next rule day.

4. Agreements Should be in Writing. The Chancellor should have a rule requiring all agreements between counsel or parties, intended to be brought to the attention of the Court, as a ground of action, or as evidence, to be reduced to writing, and duly signed by the agreeing parties, or their Solicitors, or agents. This rule will prevent those unseemly wrangles that inevitably arise at the bar from imperfect or discordant memories, or an imperfect understanding of oral agreements in reference to evidence, continuances, and compromises.\(^\text{15}\) After the adoption of the rule, it should be rigorously enforced, and the moment an agreement is disputed the gavel should fall, and the rule be enforced, without allowing either Solicitor to say another word in reference to the supposed agreement.

5. As to the Testimony of the Parties. It is the experience of Judges and Chancellors that often the real merits of the controversy can be best ascertained by a careful consideration of the statements and admissions of the parties themselves, where the transaction in question was immediately between them.\(^\text{16}\) Besides, a Chancellor cannot well avoid feeling that if his decision is based on the admissions of a party, such party is, at least, in no condition to complain. When, therefore, the transaction was between the parties, and they have testified, the Chancellor, after reading the pleadings, should next carefully and discriminatingly read their depositions, using the balance of the proof rather as a means of correcting and interlining, as it were, the depositions of the parties, than as independent evidence of the facts. Where the transaction in question was between the agents or servants of the parties, the same rule will apply. The Chancellor can consider admissions made orally by counsel, but such admissions should be recited in the decree in \textit{hoc verba}, or reduced to writing and signed and filed.

6. As to Sales of Land. The Chancellor should jealously guard the interests of those so unfortunate as to be forced to submit to a Court sale of their lands, especially of their homesteads; and in no case allow the incapacity of Solicitors, greedy for their fees, to bring about sales for part cash, when a cash payment is not required by law, and is sure to diminish the price.

7. As to Preparing and Reading Orders and Decrees. All orders and decrees should be read in open Court before their entry on the minutes. This practice has several good results: (1) It notifies all concerned of the exact nature of the order or decree made, and thus gives opportunity to object, or to obviate objections, if ground therefor exist; (2) It enables the Chancellor, or the adverse side, to make any corrections before the order or decree is entered, and thus avoids unseemly erasures and alterations and interlineations on the minutes after entry; (3) If the Solicitor is an expert draftsman, the younger members of the bar become familiarized with the proper forms of orders and decrees; and if he is an inexpert draftsman, the Chancellor is thus enabled to ascertain whether the proposed entry needs correction or amendment at his hands.

8. As to Allowing Appeals. Wherever the granting of an appeal will probably hasten the final determination of the suit, or lessen the costs, the Chancellor should exercise his discretion in favor of appeals, but not otherwise. Therefore, when the Supreme Court will meet before another term of the Chancery Court, an appeal should ordinarily be allowed from a decree determining the principles involved, and ordering an account or a sale or partition, before the account is taken, or the sale or partition is made; and, under like circumstances, an appeal should, as a rule, be allowed on overruling a demurrer when the question involved is largely or exclusively one of law, and its solution is not manifest.

Where the suit is one that will probably be appealed, the Chancellor should require the parties, and especially the complainant, to be diligent in preparing the case for hearing, to the end that it may go to the Supreme Court at the earliest day possible.

9. As to Signing Bills of Exceptions. One of the sacred rights of every litigant is to have a true record of everything done by a Court or a Judge thereof during the course of a litigation; and a Judge is as much violating his oath and his duty who fails or refuses to sign a bill of exceptions in which the truth of the case is fairly stated, as he would be in refusing to grant an injunction, or attachment, or a final decree to a party clearly entitled thereto. No Chancellor should ever make a ruling, or do an act, in the progress of a suit that he would have any hesitancy in having the Supreme Court review; and if he should have such hesitancy, he should either promptly undo what he has done, or, if out of his power, should by signing a truthful bill of exceptions put it in the power of the Supreme Court to correct his error. A proper sense of judicial honor would be satisfied with no alternative.

Chancellors should not be sensitive when a bill of exceptions to their rulings

17 See, ante, § 623, note 11. Every homestead is sacred, especially when it belonged to our ancestors, and has been long in our possession. We were made of its dust; our fathers and mothers sleep in its bosom; and we expect to repose by their side. Our dearest memories cluster about it; it was our father’s kingdom, and the home of our youth where we were princes. To sell it away from us is like a sacrifice, and to turn us out of possession is like driving us out of our Eden, and forcing us forever from our holy land. And all this is true, whether the home be a cabin on a mountain side, a cottage in a valley, or a palatial mansion, in the midst of a princely estate; for home is home, and there is no place on earth so dear to the human heart, be that home humble, or be it grand; for, after all, it is our home. Fortunately for the unfortunate, the homestead laws, like the Chrebnim of Eden, protect the home in very many cases.
fairly states the truth of the case; nor should any false pride or any feeling of false dignity cause them to put any obstacles in the way of an exceptant in obtaining a bill of exceptions that fairly states the facts of the case. They should rather cheerfully aid the exceptant, and not allow the opposite party to thwart or retard him in the preparation of his exceptions. The path of every party to the Supreme Court should be made as clear and smooth as possible, and the Chancellor should, in every legitimate way, promptly and gladly aid an appellant in getting his case into such a shape that, as nearly as possible, it shall appear to the Supreme Court exactly as it appeared in the Chancery Court, to the end that any error committed by the Chancellor may be corrected, and full justice be done.

10. Summary of Rules Governing a Chancellor in Deciding a Suit. A Judge, as Judge, has no ears to hear anything as to the merits of a suit before him except in open Court, or at Chambers, and in presence of the parties; no eyes to see anything except the record in the cause; no heart to feel anything except the inspiration of duty, and no tongue to speak anything except what the law or Equity requires. The following rules will be found of some service to Chancellors, and perhaps, of more service to Solicitors, as showing the latter how Chancellors proceed in reaching a conclusion:

1. The Chancellor Looks into the Bill, and cross bill if any, to see what matters are submitted to him for his decision.

2. He Looks at the Answer to see what defence the defendant sets up; and what matters in avoidance, or for affirmative relief, are brought forward, if any. The pleadings absolutely limit his powers of adjudication; and if he decides any matter not submitted by the pleadings, his decision is, to that extent, coram non judice, and absolutely void, unless consented to.

3. He Looks at the Evidence to see whether the case charged in the bill is made out; or whether the matters in avoidance set up in the answer are sustained by the proof.

4. He Looks at the Prayers of the Bill, and of the cross bill, if any, to see what he is specially asked to do. He can ordinarily do no more than he is asked to do; but, on a prayer for general relief, he may grant such relief as the complainant would, ordinarily, be entitled upon the pleadings and proof.

5. In Determining Questions of Fact, he is governed by the preponderance of probabilities, treating presumptions as witnesses, and using an intellectual discernment as dispassionate as scales of iron.

6. In Determining Questions of Law, he is governed by the Constitution of the State, the statutes, and the adjudications of our own Supreme Courts, if they apply; if not, he considers the common law as evidenced by reputable text books and the decisions of other Courts.

7. In Determining Questions of Equity, he is governed by our statutes and the decisions of the Supreme Court, if they apply; if not, he considers the doctrines, principles, rules and maxims of Equity jurisprudence, as evidenced by reputable text books and the decisions of other Courts.

8. In Reaching His Conclusions, he has no more sympathy for one side, nor prejudice against the other, than has the book in which the law is printed;

18 Franklin v. McCorkle, 16 Lea, 639. The question before a Court of law is not what is morally right, but what is legally right. State v. Crutchfield, 3 Head, 116; the question before a Court of Equity when no statute clearly forbids, is what do good reason and good conscience require. See, ante, § 38.

18a See, ante, § 62, sub-sec. 1. Judicis est judicare secundum allegata et probata. (It is the duty of a Judge to decide according to the pleadings and the proofs.)

19 Judex non reddit plus quam good petens ipsa requirit.

20 When a question of fact appears doubtful to a prejudiced Solicitor, it generally appears wholly free from doubt to an unprejudiced Chancellor. Hence, counsel should not be surprised when they lose what is to them a doubtful case.

21 What compasses are to mariners, maxims are to Chancellors; they will point the way out of many perplexing labyrinths of the law. See, ante, §§ 31-64.

22 The decisions of the Chancery Court of New York, especially those contained in Johnson's and Paige's Reports, are next in authority to those of our own Supreme Court. Our Equity system was modelled upon that of New York, and our own Reports are full of references to the adjudications of the New York Chancellors.
but is moved by a cool and dispassionate reason, and governed by a conscientious intelligence, absolutely oblivious of the sex, color, creed, rank, politics, or condition in life, of any of the parties.

9. In Making His Adjudications, he seeks to determine all the material issues, and leave no roots out of which a fresh crop of litigation may arise.

10. In Announcing His Decisions, he is under no obligations to give his reasons therefor, and it is often prudent not to do so. The losing party will not be satisfied with his reasons, and the winning party will be satisfied with them.

ARTICLE III.

PROVISIONS WHEN THE CHANCELLOR IS INCOMPETENT.

§ 1142. When the Chancellor is Incompetent to Decide.

§ 1144. Provisions in Case of the Chancellor's Inability.

§ 1142. When the Chancellor is Incompetent to Decide.—A Chancellor is incompetent, except by consent of all parties, to sit in the following cases: 1, where he is interested in the event of any cause; 2, or is connected with either party by affinity or consanguinity within the sixth degree, computing by the civil law; or 3, has been counsel in the cause; or 4, has presided on the trial in an inferior Court; or 5, in criminal cases for felony, where the person upon whom, or upon whose property the felony has been committed, is connected with him by affinity or consanguinity within the sixth degree, computing by the civil law.

§ 1143. Provisions in Case of the Chancellor's Incompetency.—Where the regular Chancellor is incompetent in any civil case, the parties may by consent select some member of the bar to preside as Chancellor in the case, and this consent entered of record, shall vest the person so selected with the full power and authority of the regular Chancellor in the particular case.

When any Chancellor is incompetent to try any cause in his Court, he may notify the Circuit Judge, whose duty it shall be at the next term of the Circuit Court in the county in which the incompetency exists, and while holding said Court, to hear and determine the cause as Chancellor, for which purpose the Clerk of the Chancery Court shall bring before him all the papers in the cause, and the necessary entries shall be made on the minutes of the Chancery Court, and signed by the Circuit Judge presiding.

Any Circuit Judge may, also, during the sittings of a Chancery Court, upon notification of a cause in which the Chancellor is incompetent, as provided in the foregoing paragraph, take the place of the Chancellor on the bench, and hear and determine the cause as Chancellor, the necessary entries being made on the minutes of the Chancery Court and signed by him.

And when the Chancellor is incompetent from any cause to try any case pending in his Court, and the parties thereto cannot agree upon some member of the bar to try the same, it is made the duty of the Chancellor, upon the application of either of the parties to said suit, to cause the same to be transferred to the nearest Chancery Court where the like incompetency does not exist, and the same shall be there tried as though it had originated in such Court. In such case the original papers, with a certified copy of all orders, including entries on the rule docket, shall be immediately transmitted to the Court to which the venue is changed.3

§ 1144. Provision in Case of the Chancellor’s Inability.—If the Chancellor is unable from sickness or other physical debility to hold any of his Courts at the time and place required by law, the Governor is required to commission a special Chancellor to hold said Courts. The special Chancellor has all the power and authority of the Chancellor in whose place he is appointed, including the power to interchange, and continues to hold the Courts and exercise the duties of the regular Chancellor, until notified by the latter that he is in a condition to resume his functions.4

§ 1145. Other Provisions for the Chancellor’s Incompetency, or Inability. When from any cause the Chancellor fails to attend, or being in attendance cannot properly preside in any cause or causes pending in his Court, or shall be unable to hold a term of his Court, the Solicitors present, who are residents of the State, are authorized to elect one of their number to hold the Court for the occasion. The Solicitor thus elected Chancellor pro tempore must have all the qualifications of the regular Chancellor, and, during the period in which he acts, shall have all the powers and be liable to all the responsibilities of a regular Chancellor.5 These qualifications are: 1, the age of thirty; 2, five years’ residence in the State; 3, one years’ residence in the Chancery division.

In case the election of a Chancellor is contested, the Governor is authorized to appoint a temporary Chancellor to hold the office until the contest is judicially determined, and the regularly elected Chancellor duly commissioned.6

§ 1146. When Chancellors May Interchange.—Chancellors may interchange with each other, or with the Judges of the Circuit, Criminal, and other special Courts: 1, when causes7 exist making an interchange necessary; and 2, where it is mutually convenient. In case of the absence of the Chancellor of any Division, or of his death or inability to hold Court, any other Chancellor may hold his Court in his stead. When a Chancellor is presiding by interchange, he has the same power and jurisdiction as the Chancellor in whose place he is acting.8

While a Chancellor is holding a Chancery Court by interchange with another Chancellor, the latter may hold any other Courts in his Chancery Division.9

§ 1147. Provisions for the Chancellor’s Incompetency During Vacation.—Whenever the Chancellor of the Division in which a cause is pending, is incompetent in vacation: 1, to issue any process; or 2, to dissolve, restore, or modify any injunction; or 3, to appoint a receiver; or 4, to hear and determine any motion; or 5, to make any interlocutory order to speed a cause; or 6, to appoint a commissioner to take an account; or 7, to appoint persons to serve original, mesne, or final process; or 8, to regulate and control, set aside, modify, or alter any proceeding in the Master’s office; or 9, to do and perform any other duty that may be performed by such Chancellor in vacation, the statute provides that the Chancellor of any adjoining Division shall have power in vaca-

But in such case the party making the application shall show, by affidavit, that the regular Chancellor is incompetent, and shall notify the opposite party of the application, such notice to be the same as to time and place as is prescribed for taking depositions.\(^\text{10}\)

ARTICLE IV.

THE ETIQUETTE OF THE CHANCERY COURT.

§ 1148. The Court and the Bar.

§ 1149. Department of the Solicitors Towards the Court.

§ 1150. Department of Solicitors Towards Each Other.

§ 1148. The Court and the Bar.\(^1\)—There are certain proprieties in the conduct of Solicitors toward each other, and in the relation of the Chancellor and the Solicitors of his Court which, if duly observed, will greatly promote that good feeling and manly courtesy so necessary to the proper conduct of Court business, as well as to that dignity which should characterize a temple of justice. The Chancellor should ever remember that he was once a member of the bar, and will probably become one again; and he should endeavor to discharge his official duties in the way he would have liked to have seen them discharged while he was at the bar; and should carefully avoid doing, or omitting to do, anything that he, while at the bar, deemed below the high standard of a perfect Judge. On the other hand, the Solicitors should keep in mind that while the Chancellor was once in their ranks, he is now their official superior, and is entitled to that measure of deference, respect, and courtesy they would like to have accorded to them should they at any time occupy his place; and they should, also, consider that they are the trusted officers of the Court, and that not only are the dignity and decorum of the proceedings of the Court mainly dependent on them, but that everything which lowers the standard of the Court necessarily lowers the standard of the law, and tends to degrade the bar.\(^2\)

Solicitors should always speak respectfully of all Courts, and of the Legislature and of the Governor, and of Congress, and the President, and of the laws of the land. Abuse of our officials, laws, and institutions, while at times, perhaps, pardonable in political arenas, is execrable at the bar.

The Chancellor and the Solicitor should each magnify their respective offices, and conscientiously endeavor to make incarnate in themselves their respective ideals of official perfection, making diligence, courtesy, dignity, and good faith their tests of excellence, as well as the true means of attaining it.

§ 1149. Department of the Solicitors Towards the Court.\(^\) While Court is in session, and the Chancellor is on the bench, Solicitors should not fail to keep in mind that the interval between the bench and the bar tables is the line of demarcation, and should not be crossed without special leave of the Court. If there be papers to be passed from the bar to the bench, or from the bench to the bar, let the officer waiting on the Court, or the Clerk, perform this task.

Remarks of a personal nature should be sparingly passed between members of the bar and the Chancellor on the bench, and exchanges of wit should be studiously avoided. As a rule, and a rule to which the exceptions are few, and \(^{10}\) Code, §§ 4416 a-4416 b.

\(^1\) If any Solicitor objects to the ethics laid down in this Article, he should, at once, examine himself, and see if his standard of professional deportment is not too low.

\(^2\) (Let this class of men be free from fault, and an example to all others.) This was one of the laws of the XII Tables.
those few very questionable, a Solicitor should never address any remark to the Chancellor on the bench, except (1) from his place behind the bar tables, and (2) in reference to some suit in Court, or to some matter proper to be brought to the attention of the Court.

Solicitors should always stand behind the bar tables when addressing the Chancellor on the bench, or when reading pleadings, or proof, or decrees, or orders. It is in exceedingly bad taste for a Solicitor to stand alongside the bench, or lean on it, while addressing the Court, or reading any paper to the Court. He is standing on forbidden ground, and it would be the duty of the Chancellor to command him to retire to his proper place behind the bar tables.

Solicitors should refrain from holding any private conversation with the Chancellor while Court is in session, unless leave has been first publicly asked and obtained. Bystanders, litigants, and jealous Solicitors are sometimes inclined to suspect that the object of private conversation with the Court is to obtain some unfair advantage, or to tamper with the Chancellor, or to tell tales on an adversary, or else that the Chancellor has favorites among the Solicitors to whom he grants special privileges and secret audiences, and with whom he exchanges especial confidences and tokens of mutual partiality. The opposite side look with ill-concealed distrust upon a Chancellor who engages in secret conversation with a Solicitor during the trial of a cause. However innocent such conversation may be, and however foreign to the cause pending, adverse parties are prone to suspect that it has direct reference to their suit, and that it is evidence of partiality on the part of the Chancellor. Solicitors and parties should never embarrass the Chancellor by making little presents in open Court, such as fruit, flowers, cigars, and the like. The Chancellor is coerced by common courtesy to accept these evidences of good will; and while, as a man, he appreciates these tokens of friendliness, nevertheless, as a Chancellor, he realizes that there are Solicitors and parties who regard such acts with jealousy and suspicion, and deem them attempts to tamper with the Court. To avoid all such suspicious and heart-burnings, let Solicitors and parties forego all such little tokens of courtesy and good will.

§ 1150. Deportment of Solicitors Towards Each Other.—Nothing does so much to elevate a Solicitor in the estimation of the Court and his fellows as uniform courtesy to the other members of the bar. Bystanders of the ruder sort may consider a bullying, dominoering disposition an evidence of greatness; and in criminal and police courts displays of rudeness and incivility are sometimes overlooked; but in a Court of Chancery the deportment of Solicitors towards each other should constantly exhibit chivalric courtesy, and the punc-tilious observance of all of those proprieties that adorn and distinguish honorable, refined, and educated men, and true gentlemen.

§ 1151. Deportment of the Chancellor Towards the Bar.—The intercourse between the Chancellor and the members of the bench should be such as to inspire
(1) unlimited confidence in his integrity, (2) an absolute assurance of his perfect impartiality, (3) a certain knowledge of his industrious investigation of the facts of the cases tried before him and of the law applicable thereto, (4) a feeling, without misgivings, that all legitimate argument is heard without indifference, weariness or reluctance, and (5) an undoubting faith that he is prompted by an invariable and unwavering dispostion to determine all matters submitted to him according to the law and the facts, and without fear, favor, or affection.

The Chancellor's deportment should be such that, while not cold or indifferent, it will not invite fawning, or flattery, or undue familiarity. There are sometimes those who take undue advantage of a Judge's courtesy, and endevor to make him believe that their good will is necessary to his success,

---

3 This duty is privately recognized by the Chancellor, even when he forbears to publicly exercise it.  4 The Chancellor should nip altercation in the bud.
The Etiquette of the Chancery Court.  § 1152 and endeavor to make others believe they own the Court, and that a wink or hint from them is more influential than facts, law, and sound argument from other Solicitors not so favored. The fact that such things take place should be conclusive proof to the Chancellor that his familiarity is bringing him into contempt, and should remind him that parasites seldom cling to what is pure and sound.

Nevertheless, there should be no iciness in the atmosphere surrounding the Chancellor, but a gentle warmth of respectful courtesy, assuring to the timid and not too encouraging to the presumptuous. Every lawyer, litigant, or official having intercourse with him on official business, should receive the full measure of considerate attention requisite for the proper discharge of the particular duty he is called on to perform; and should never be made to feel that they are trespassing upon his time, or consuming too much of his attention. The Chancellor is a public official, and his time is not his own, but belongs to his duties, and to those who have official business with him. When a Chancellor forgets this fact, he forgets that he is a public servant, and is in danger of becoming a public master.

§ 1152. Deportment of the Chancellor While Hearing a Cause.—While the evidence is being read, or argument is being made, the Chancellor should studiously avoid any appearance of impatience or partiality; and should keep constantly in mind that the first duty of a Judge is to hear. He will find it a good rule not to express any opinions during the argument, because such an expression may embarrass the Solicitor, or it may turn out that the Chancellor was in error, and then he will be embarrassed by his prejudgment.

THE CLERK AND MASTER: HIS POWERS AND DUTIES.

§ 1154. His Appointment and Induction Into Office.
§ 1155. Powers and Duties of the Master in Relation to the Institution of a Suit.
§ 1156. Powers and Duties of the Master in Relation to the Prosecution of a Suit.
§ 1157. Powers of the Master to Make Orders on Rule Days.
§ 1158. Powers of the Master to Make Orders on Other Than Rule Days.
§ 1159. Powers of the Master in Reference to Depositions.
§ 1160. Powers and Duties of the Master in Making Reports.
§ 1162. The Master's Book Report.

§ 1153. The Office of the Master Generally Considered.—By the Code, the Clerk of the Chancery Court, in addition to all the duties and powers conferred upon Clerks of Courts generally, and in addition to various other special duties and powers, is "authorized to perform all the functions of Masters in Chancery, unless restrained by the provisions of law;" so that he is both Clerk and Master.

There is a wide difference between the Clerk of a Court and a Master in Chancery. The duties of a Clerk are almost exclusively clerical; and his powers are strictly defined by law, or the orders of the Court; he exercises no judicial functions, and has but little discretion. The Master, on the contrary, is a judicial officer, and is clothed with many of the powers of the Chancellor himself; and examination of the Chancery Reports, and of works on Chancery Practice, will show that the prompt and proper administration of justice requires that large powers, and no little discretion, be vested in the Master.

The matters referred to the Master for his action are almost as numerous as the matters subject to the jurisdiction of the Court. Among the duties he may be called upon to discharge are the following: 1. To determine whether it is necessary to sell a decedent's land to pay his debts; 2. whether a tract of land should be sold rather than partitioned; 3. whether it is to the interest of a minor or married woman to sell her property, real or personal; 4. whether any taxes are due on land sold, or any other encumbrances exist; 5. what are the assets and liabilities of a decedent, a partnership, a corporation, or other person, whose assets are in the custody of the Court; 6. the amount of any particular liability; 7. the relative rights or priorities of various creditors, or claim

1 Code, §§ 4085-4086. There seem to be no restraining provisions of special importance, and it will be seen by a careful study of the English Chancery Practice prior to 1858, that our Masters in Chancery have nearly all the powers exercised at that time in England by the Masters in Chancery. The Clerk and Master has various duties to perform as Clerk of a Court, and various other and more responsible duties to perform as a Master in Chancery; hence, in speaking of him in connection with his duties as Clerk, he is generally termed Clerk; and in speaking of him in reference to his duties as Master in Chancery, he is generally termed Master.

2 When matters are referred to a Clerk to be reported on, or when any discretion is vested in him, or when he is required by the Court to make sales, or to discharge any quasi judicial duty, he, to that extent, is clothed by the statute, with the powers of a Master in Chancery. Code, § 4651.

ants; 8, the state of the account between a guardian, executor, administrator, receiver, or other trustee, and the beneficiaries, or between persons having mutual dealings; 9, the validity and amount of a particular claim; 10, to sell property, real and personal, and take the sale money, or the secured notes of the purchaser; 11, to invest money belonging to persons under disability, or to persons who fail to draw the same out of Court; 12, to loan out money on security; 13, to investigate the title to lands; 14, to fix the compensation of guardians, personal representatives, receivers, trustees, guardians ad litem, Solicitors and others; 15, to determine the proper allowance for the maintenance of married women, infants, or persons of unsound mind, or for the education of infants; 16, to inquire for heirs, next of kin, and legatees, whose estates are in Court; 17, to hold documents, securities, or other personal property involved in a litigation; and 18, to ascertain the amount of damages in any case where damages are claimed. Indeed, it may be stated that in general, there is no question of law, or Equity, or disputed fact, which the Master may not have occasion to decide, or respecting which he may not be called upon to report his opinion to the Court.\(^4\)

Besides these duties, there are others specially devolved upon the Master by statute, most of which are of a judicial nature, and call for the exercise of discretion. Among these duties are the following: 1, to appoint guardians ad litem; 2, to take and set aside orders pro confesso; 3, to hear proof of a party’s death, issue process to revive, and order a revivor; 4, to extend the time for taking proof, or filing an answer; 5, to award attachments against witnesses and defendants for default; 6, to determine whether an answer is sufficient; 7, to ascertain what, if any, matter in a pleading, petition, or deposition, is scandalous, impertinent, or unnecessarily prolix; 8, to pass on exceptions to depositions, or to answers; 9, to make orders for taking depositions; 10, to restrict or enlarge the time of notice to take depositions; 11, to allow witnesses to be re-examined; 12, to appoint commissioners; 13, to take depositions; 14, to rule a complainant to take steps in a cause; 15, to order a non-resident party to answer interrogatories; and 16, to open and adjourn Court, in the absence of the Chancellor.

The foregoing enumeration of powers and duties clearly show that the office of Master is one of great authority, and large and varied responsibility, requiring for its efficient discharge, a good judgment, great diligence, an inflexible impartiality, an enlightened conscience, and a thorough acquaintance with the practice of the Court, coupled with good, clerical qualifications, and a large executive capacity.

§ 1154. His Appointment and Induction Into Office.—The Clerk and Master is appointed by the Chancellor of the Court, and holds his office for the full term of six years from his induction into office.\(^5\) The appointment is usually made in writing.\(^6\) There should be a record of his appointment and qualification and induction entered on the minutes of the Court. The following form is suggested:

INDUCTION OF THE CLERK AND MASTER INTO OFFICE.

Appointment and Induction of
J. B. Ragon as Clerk and Master.

On this 17th day of October, 1888, came J. B. Ragon, in his own proper person, into open Court, and presented the following letter of appointment as Clerk and Master of this Court, and tendered the three following bonds, and offered to take and subscribe the necessary oaths of office as such appointee, and moved the Court to induct him into said office of Clerk and Master:

CLERK AND MASTER'S OFFICIAL BOND.

[Here copy it in full. This is the bond for the safe-keeping of the records, and for the faithful discharge of the duties of the office. Code, § 326.]

CLERK AND MASTER'S REVENUE BOND.

[Here copy it in full. This is the bond to account for taxes, fines, and forfeitures. Code, § 327.]

CLERK AND MASTER'S SPECIAL BOND.

[Here copy it in full. This is the bond to cover property or funds which may come into the Master's hands as special commissioner or receiver. Code, § 328.]

And each of said three bonds being found by the Chancellor to be correct in form and in penalty, and each of the obligors having unconditionally acknowledged each of said three bonds in open Court before the Chancellor, and the Chancellor being satisfied that they are jointly worth largely more than the aggregate penalties of said three bonds, said three bonds were by him approved and accepted, and said acknowledgment and approval by him endorsed on each of said bonds.

Thereupon the following oaths of office were by the Chancellor administered to, and taken and subscribed by, said J. B. Ragon:

OATHS OF OFFICE.

[Here copy them in full. These oaths are, 1. The oath of office; Code, § 332; and 2. The oath against duelling, Code, § 752; Acts of 1859-'60, ch. 56. These oaths should be endorsed on the official bond of the Master first above set out. Code, § 756.]

Whereupon, the said motion was allowed, and said J. B. Ragon was then and there inducted into the office of Clerk and Master of this Court, for the full term of six years from this day; and he aforesaid entered upon the discharge of the duties of his said office.

§ 1155. Powers and Duties of the Master in Relation to the Institution of a Suit.—All of the steps relative to the institution of a suit, except where extraordinary process or preliminary relief is sought, are taken in the Master's office. These steps are the following:

1. Filing of the Bill and the Taking of Bonds. The first step in the institution of an ordinary suit is the filing of the bill, and giving the required security for costs, or taking the pauper oath, in lieu. 8a All papers and documents referred to in the bill as exhibits, must be filed in the Master's office at the time the bill is filed, unless, by special order of the Chancellor or Master, it is otherwise ordered. 8b

2. Issuance of Process. The next step is the issuance of a subpoena to answer, and any attachment, injunction, or other extraordinary process ordered. 9

3. Ordering and Making Publication. If the bill show a case where personal service is dispensed with, and the bill is sworn to, or the requisite facts appear by a separate affidavit, or by the return on the subpoena, the Master will forthwith make a publication order upon his rule docket, and publish the same. 10

4. Granting Attachments of Property. The Clerk and Master may grant and issue an attachment in any case in his Court where an attachment may be issued by the Clerk of the Circuit Court. 11

§ 1156. Powers and Duties of the Master in Relation to the Prosecution of a Suit.—After the bill has been filed, and process issued, or publication made, various duties and powers devolve on the Master, connected with the prosecution of the suit, and the preparation of the same for a hearing before the Chancellor, among which are the following:

1 See, ante, § 1137.

1. Entering and Setting Aside Judgments Pro Confesso. It is the duty of the defendant to enter his appearance before the Master, on the return day, by filing with him the pleading containing his defence to the suit, and all the exhibits thereto, if any. If he fail so to do, the Master may, on motion of the complainant, order the bill to be taken for confessed. If, thereafter, the defendant show good cause, and tender a sufficient answer, the Master may set aside the order pro confesso, as already fully shown. The Master may, before a pro confesso, grant the defendant, upon good cause shown, further time within which to file an answer.

2. Appointing Guardians ad Litem. If a sworn bill, or a separate affidavit, show that a defendant is an infant without a general guardian, the Master may, upon motion of complainant, appoint a guardian ad litem for such infant. Who should be appointed, and the powers, duties, and liabilities of the person appointed, have heretofore been stated.

3. Acting on Exceptions to Pleadings. He must act on all exceptions to answers, and give the requisite notices to the proper parties in reference to answers, so that the parties aggrieved may take an appeal to the Chancellor. The Master also acts on exceptions to bills, petitions, or other pleadings, when referred to him for revision because of scandal, impertinence, or prolixity.

4. Appointing Commissioners. The Master may appoint commissioners to take depositions, or to swear a defendant to his answer, or to take an injunction bond in another county.

5. Issuing Attachments for Failure of a Witness to Appear, or Failure of a Defendant to Answer. If a witness, after having been duly summoned, fails to appear, the Master may issue an attachment for him. So, where the time for answering has expired, the Master may, on application of the complainant, issue an attachment against the defendant for want of an answer.

6. Extending the Time for Answering, or for Taking Proof. The Master may grant a defendant further time in which to answer, on good cause shown, even after he has been attached for contempt. He may also extend the time of either party for taking proof, on good cause shown by affidavit, and on terms. But in these cases, the Master is expected to act with legal discretion, just as the Chancellor would, and not grant every application indiscriminately, merely because requested so to do. The Master should be diligent himself, and should require diligence of all others.

7. Making Orders in Relation to Proof. The Master has large powers relative to the taking of proof. Thus, he may extend a party’s time for taking proof after his time has expired; he may allow a witness to be re-examined to the same facts by the same party; he may restrict or enlarge the notice for taking proof; he may authorize the deposition of a witness to be taken before a cause is at issue; he may make a peremptory order on a party to answer interrogatories filed: he may determine whether notice to take depositions shall be given to each of several parties, and if not, to which of them notice shall be given. In all these matters the Master should exercise the same discretion as the Chancellor would under the same circumstances; and he may condition his orders and rules upon the payment of such costs as the Chancellor may impose in the particular case. As a rule, a party asking a favor should pay costs.

8. Steps Taken by Parties in the Master’s Office. A defendant may make a rule on the complainant to take any step necessary to the progress of a cause; notice of this rule shall be immediately given to the party interested, or his § 1157. The Clerk and Master: His Powers and Duties.

9. Giving Notice of Rules, Orders and Other Proceedings. The Master must give the opposite party, or his Solicitor, notice of any rule, order, or other proceeding, taken at his office affecting such party, in order that the latter may take such step as he may desire in the premises, or may take an appeal to the Chancellor. He must, also, notify the complainant or his Solicitor of the filing of answers and pleas, and notify the defendant’s Solicitor to file a sufficient answer. Notice of a rule to take steps must be immediately given to the complainant, or his counsel.

10. Setting Causes for Hearing. Formerly, a cause was set for hearing when the time for taking proof had expired; but this practice is now obsolete; and the only way in which a cause is now set for hearing is by entering it on the trial docket, and this the Master is required to do so soon as the cause is at issue.

§ 1157. Powers of the Master to Make Orders on Rule Days.—The Master holds a sort of Court on the first Monday of every month at his office, when and where various rules and orders are made by him, for the preparation of causes for hearing; and other proceedings take place in reference to suits. These first Mondays are called rule days because on these days rules are made. Each day of the term is also a rule day; but Solicitors generally prefer to make their motions and obtain their orders and rules from the Chancellor in open Court, rather than from the Master, when the Court is in session.

The memorandum book the Master is required to keep is his office docket, and the rule docket is to his office what the minute book is to the Court: these two books contain a full history of every motion made, every paper filed or issued, every rule or order made, every original or mesne writ issued, and every other proceeding in the Master’s office of which a minute is required to be made, except rulings on exceptions, and entries on the execution docket.

While motions, orders, and rules can, as a rule, be made on any day in the Master’s office, there are some orders and rules that can only be made on rule days, and it is important to keep the distinction in mind. The following are the principal and, perhaps, the only orders and rules that must be made only on rule days:

1. Orders Pro Confesso. As a defendant is not bound to appear before the Master and make defence, except on a rule day, it seems that he is not in default on any other day: hence a pro confesso cannot be entered against him on any other day. But it would seem that if a defendant has actually appeared and made defence, and that defence has been declared insufficient, or stricken from the files for any good reason, a pro confesso may be entered against him patch, it is not to be discouraged. Indeed, it is exceedingly uncertain what orders and rules other than the three above named, must be made on rule days. Code, § 4418. Any order improperly made on a day not a rule day would, no doubt, be valid unless appealed from to the Chancellor, and by him set aside. Such appeals are seldom taken, and hence the growing disposition to disregard rule days.

28 In presentia majors creant potentia minoris.
29 Prior to the Act of 1851-2, Code, § 4421, only the first Mondays of the month and the first day of the term were rule days, and it was held in Lannum v. Steele, 10 Hum., 280, that rules proper to be made by the Master, except judgments pro confesso, could not be made, even by the Court, except on these rule days. This decision, which was made in 1849, probably caused the Act of 1851-2, (Code, § 4421), making each day of the term, as well as the first Monday of every month in vacation, a rule day. Lannum v. Steele is often cited, without reference to the Act of 1851, which, in effect, overruled the case as an authority.
30 Post, § 1169.
31 Lannum v. Steele, 10 Hum., 280; Seay v. Seay, 1 Tenn. Ch., 2. But see note 33 supra.
2. Appointment of Guardians ad Litem. Inasmuch as parties are bound to appear and make defence only on rule days, in theory an infant is not before the Master except on a rule day; hence the Master cannot appoint a guardian ad litem for him on any other day, as the infant must be present in law when the appointment is made. A temporary guardian of a person found to be of unsound mind by a jury may, however, be made by the Master on any day after the verdict.

3. Revival of Suits. The revival of suits in the Master’s office is in the nature of an order pro confesso, and must be made on a rule day, for the reason above given. The Master may, however, issue the writ of scire facias to revive, or file a bill of revivor and issue process thereon, at any time.

4. Rules to Take Steps. It would seem that a rule by the defendant on his adversary to take a necessary step in a cause should be made on a rule day.

§ 1158. Powers of Master to Make Orders on Other Than Rule Days.—As has been mentioned in a note to the preceding section, the distinction between what orders must be made, and what may not be made, by the Master on rule days, does not clearly appear in our practice. The Code says that the rules, orders and other proceedings made with, or by, the Clerk and Master shall be made at the rule days, unless otherwise authorized by the Code; but so many are expressly or impliedly authorized by the Code to be made on other days that great uncertainty results, and in practice nearly, if not quite, all rules, orders and other proceedings, except as stated in the preceding section, are made on any day the Master can be found in his office.

§ 1159. Powers of the Master in Reference to Depositions.—The Clerk and Master has all the powers of a Commissioner in taking depositions; and has, in addition, other and much greater powers. These will be here considered, for convenience, in connection with some of his other powers in reference to depositions:

1. He Can Determine the Length of the Notice. The Master may, upon good cause shown by affidavit, either restrict or enlarge the usual time of notice for taking depositions.

36 Code, §§ 4369; 4400-4407; 4395; 4464. See note to the preceding section.
37 In strict law, neither the Chancery Court nor the County Court has jurisdiction to appoint a guardian for an infant who is not before the Court in person, or by service of some process.
38 Code, § 3700.
39 See, also, Code, § 4429; Foster v. Burem, 1 Heisk., 783.
40 Code, §§ 4426; 4429.
41 If, however, such a rule should be made on any other than a rule day, and the complainant notified thereof, and failed to appeal, the Chancellor would, no doubt, treat the rule as valid. Chancellors regard substance, not ceremony.
42 Code, §§ 4417-4418.
43 It would seem from a consideration of Code, sections 4418-4421, that the rules and orders referred to in section 4420 are all required to be made on rule days, but when other sections of the Code are considered, this conclusion is found to be erroneous. (1) § 4420, sub-section 1, is modified by § 4426, which says in substance, "the Clerk and Master shall issue scire facias, or notice, at any time, upon motion of complainant, entering the same upon his rules." (2) § 4420, sub-section 3, is modified by §§ 4354-4355, which make the Clerk to make the order for publication upon the rule docket "as soon as the necessary affidavit is made," and this affidavit may be made whenever a bill is filed, and the bill may be filed at any time. See, also, Code, §§ 3518-3520, which show that in attachment cases, the order of publication may be made and entered on the rule docket "at any time." (3) § 4420, sub-section 3, seems to be modified by § 4369, sub-section 5, and by §§ 4400-4407, so that a pro confesso might be entered at the end of thirty days after notice of exceptions allowed, even if the thirtieth day came on other than a rule day. By § 4395, it would seem that a bill may be taken for confessed at the end of the time prescribed by the Court for answering, although other than a rule day; and it would seem from § 4464 that when interrogatories are not answered by the given day, a pro confesso may be entered at once, without waiting for a rule day. § 4420, sub-section 3, seems, also, to be modified as to setting aside orders pro confesso, by §§ 4373-4376, which authorize the Master to set aside a pro confesso "at any time." Besides the delays that would be occasioned by waiting for rule days to set aside pro confessos would be intolerable. (4) § 4420, sub-section 5, seems to be modified, by § 4462, which authorizes the Clerk and Master "at any time after the bill is filed" to make an order to take depositions in certain cases, being, perhaps, the only cases, "where such orders are necessary." (5) § 4420, sub-section 6, gives the Master authority to open causes for proof, "in the same way as the Chancellor might do." This would seem to imply that there is no restriction as to rule days; and, under Chancery Rule II, § 4, the practice is to extend the time for taking proof on any day the Master or Chancellor, can be found. And, thus, the making of the orders and rules specified in Code, § 4420, except the one in reference to guardians ad litem, is seen not to be confined to rule days. It may be said that the various sections of the Code, giving authority to make these rules "at any time," mean on any rule day; but such a construction is contrary to usage, and too narrow. It may be safely said that the only orders absolutely required to be made on rule days, are: 1st, Orders pro confesso for failure to make any defense; 2d, Orders of appointment of 3d, Orders reviving a suit; and, perhaps, 4th, Rules to take steps in a cause.
44 Code, § 4460. If the witness is present, or in easy reach, the time of notice should be reduced to
2. He May Allow a New Examination. The Master may, upon good cause shown by affidavit, give a party leave to have a witness again examined in chief or cross-examined, after his deposition has been finally closed.45

3. He May Attach a Witness for Failing to Appear. If a witness, after having been duly summoned, fails to appear before the Master, upon the return of an officer or proof by affidavit showing that the witness has been summoned, the Master shall issue an instanter attachment for such witness, and designate therein the penalty of the bond conditioned for his appearance before the Chancellor at a time and place to be specified if practicable, or before the Court at the next succeeding term, if it be not then in session, to show cause why he should not be fined or committed according to law.46

4. He May Commit a Stubborn Witness. If a witness should appear and refuse to answer legal interrogatories, he shall be committed by the Master, until he consent to give his testimony.47

§ 1160. Powers and Duties of the Master in Making Reports.—When the Master is directed to make a report, he must make and file it within the time prescribed by the order or decree, or give a satisfactory written excuse to the Chancellor.48 If the Court does not fix the time within which the account shall be taken, and the report made, the Master shall fix the time, and give five days’ notice thereof to the parties, and the Solicitors, also, if both reside in the county, and if not he will notify the one, party or Solicitor, who does reside in the county. If the parties are numerous, notice shall be served on such of them as the decree or Master may designate.49 The law requires the Master to be diligent in taking accounts, making sales, and making reports, and he must proceed with the least practicable delay to comply with the terms of the reference.50 For each neglect he is subject to a fine of fifty dollars, and for repeated neglect may be removed from office.51

§ 1161. The Master’s Financial Report.—The Master is required to report on the first day of each term the amount of money in his office, and the causes to which the several sums belong, excepting costs, but including State revenues. This report is not only for the inspection of the Court, but for the benefit of Solicitors and parties interested. It is made the duty of the Court to have this report inspected, the money counted, and to see that the report is in every respect correct.52 This report should include, not only all the moneys actually in Court, except costs, but, also, the moneys loaned out by order of the Court, on note, or mortgage, or trust deed, giving the name of the security, its date, when due, and the names of the sureties. Money loaned out by order of the Court, is in the eye of the law, money in Court. The following is a form of the report:

MASTER’S FINANCIAL REPORT.

To the Hon. Thomas M. McConnell, Chancellor:

I submit the following report of the amount of money in my office, and the causes to which the several sums belong, not including costs:

one or two days; and, if both parties are present, taking depositions, and the witness is present, the time should be reduced to one hour. If the parties, while taking proof, refuse to take the deposition of any witness or witnesses present, or in easy reach, the Master should, on application, promptly authorize instanter notice to be given. He should endorse his action on the affidavit for restricted notice, and filings made in connection therewith, and the instanter bond to be returned, with the endorsement, to the party in whose favor it was given.

45 Code, § 4461; Ch. Rule, II, § 6; post, § 1191.
46 Ch. Rule, VII, § 3; post, § 1196. Masters should promptly comply with this rule: it is imperative, and the effect is good. Justice cannot be done, if witnesses refuse to attend and give in their evidence. The Master should have the witness carried, or bound to appear, before the instanter is taken, if possible, so that his evidence may be had in time for the next term of the Court. Witnesses must be taught to respect the process of the Court. He who will not testify for another deserves to suffer himself for want of the evidence of another. To bear witness to the truth is a sacred duty; and the administration of justice would become impossible if witnesses should withhold their testimony. To conceal material evidence is to aid in the perpetration of injustice, and is akin to crime.

47 Ch. Rule, VII, §§ 4, post, § 1196. A witness cannot be compelled to answer a question that (1) will criminate him, or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; or (2) that will involve a breach of professional confidence toward his client. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 942-943.

§ 1162. The Master’s Book Report.—It is the duty of the Clerk and Master to keep at all times in his office the Reports of the Decisions of the Supreme Court; and at the first term of his Court each year to file a report showing the number and name of each of said Reports in his office, and to spread the same at length on the minutes of the Court. The following is the form of this report:

These reports, after being presented to the Court, will be referred to two or more Solicitors, and on their report will be entered in full on the minutes, thus:

ENTRY OF REPORTS, AND THEIR REFERENCE.

In the matter of the Clerk and Master’s Financial Report, and Report of Supreme Court Reports.

The Clerk and Master this day presented his Financial Report, and his Report of Supreme Court Reports, which Reports are as follows:

[Here copy, 1, Report of Money on Hand; and 2, Report of Sup. Court Reports.]

On consideration whereof, the Chancellor appointed John W. Green and James C. Ford, Esquires, Solicitors of the Court, to examine said Reports; and thereupon, after due examination, they reported as follows:

[Here copy their report, which is ordinarily as follows:]

To the Chancellor:
We respectfully report that we have examined the foregoing financial [or, book] report of the Master, and find it correct, in every respect, and the money and notes [or, books] in his hands as reported.

Respectfully submitted, March 5, 1907.

John W. Green,
James C. Ford.

§ 1163. Powers of the Master in Relation to the Revivor of a Suit.—The Master may, on a rule day, receive and enter on his rule docket the suggestion 53 Act of 1887, ch. 246. This is an important statute, and the Chancellor should make all needful orders to compel the Clerk to collect up all missing Reports so as always to have them in the office. Too often these Reports are deemed nobody’s in particular, and everybody’s in general.

and proof of a party’s death, and order and issue the necessary process to revive, such process being a scire facias, or notice.\(^{54}\) The process must be made returnable to a rule day, and the suit may be revived at the next rule day after the return, if no defence is made.\(^{55}\) The entries on the rule docket in all matters relative to revisors should be as full, and in the same form, as entries on the minute-book in term time. The procedure in reviving suits is fully given elsewhere.\(^{56}\)

§ 1164. Powers and Duties of the Master in Making Deeds.—The Court may, by decree, divest the title to property, real or personal, out of any of the parties, and vest it in others, or vest it in the purchaser; or the Court may authorize the Master to execute all necessary conveyances, releases, and acqui-tances, either in his name as Master, or in the name of the parties by him as Master, as the Court may think proper; and the instrument so executed will be as valid as if executed by the party.\(^{57}\) The deed when executed by the Master must be by him acknowledged in the presence of two subscribing wittesses, or acknowledged before the Clerk of the County Court, or a Notary Public, to the end that it may be registered.\(^{58}\)

§ 1165. When the Clerk and Master May Adjoin the Court.—If the Chan-celloir is, for any reason, unable to open his Court at the time fixed by law, he may by letter, or otherwise, instruct the Clerk and Master to keep the Court open until he can get there; or, if he is unable to hold the Court at all, he may instruct the Clerk and Master to adjourn the Court to a time, by him, the Chancellor, fixed for holding a special term. If the Clerk and Master has no instructions from the Chancellor, he may adjourn the Court, in the absence of the Chancellor, from day to day, for three days in succession, or longer, if in his judgment the interest of the public requires it, and then adjourn it to the Court in course.\(^{59}\)

§ 1166. Powers and Duties of the Master in Receiving and Paying Out Money.—The Master must always keep in mind the fundamental fact that in receiving, holding, and paying out money, he is the mere hand of the Court, and the trustee of the parties interested in the money. None of the money belongs to him, nor has he any right whatever to use any portion of it, not even his own costs, until the Court so orders; nor can he lawfully pay out any of it to any one on any pretence whatsoever, except in obedience to some express and plain law, or on the express command of the Court. He has no discretion vested in him, whom to pay, when to pay, where to pay, or how to pay; but must pay the very person lawfully entitled under the decree, and must make the payment in the precise manner specified by the statute, or by the decree; and must pay at his office without delay, upon application of the party entitled, his agent, or attorney.\(^{60}\)

The Clerk and Master has authority to receive the amount of any decree rendered by his Court, either before or after the issue of an execution thereon;\(^{61}\) but he has no authority to receive anything in payment of any decree calling for money, except money, unless the decree in plain and express terms authorizes something else to be received, and then the decree must be strictly followed.

The Clerk has no right or authority to pay money in his hands in a cause to anyone, except in obedience to an order of Court, or in compliance with some statute.\(^{62}\)

he must appeal. See 2 Perry on Trusts, §§ 476 a;

\(^{63}\) Craig v. Governor, 3 Cold., 244.
When a Clerk and Master dies, the moneys in his hands as such are not assets for the payment of his debts, or for distribution, but belong to the office, and should be paid into Court; and when a Clerk and Master dies, or is removed, or his term expires, it is the duty of his successor to demand, and take possession of, all the assets and other property belonging to the office; and the money may be recovered by motion; and the books, papers and other property may be recovered as provided by sections 806-811 of the Code.

When the Clerk and Master is liable to any party to a suit for money in his hands, it may be recovered on motion, or a petition may be filed in the cause without bond against him and his sureties, or against the personal representatives of the Clerk and his sureties, if any of them be dead. An original suit in the Circuit Court on the Clerk and Master's bond would be irregular, and, if no order had been made for the Clerk to pay over the money, such a suit would be improper, and not maintainable.

§ 1167. How Married Women are to be Paid.—The laws of Tennessee jealously and zealously hedge married women around with safeguards against improvident husbands, improvident agents, importunate acquaintances, and imprudent Court Clerks; and no Clerk and Master can safely pay out the proceeds of real or personal property belonging to married women unless he strictly conforms to every requirement of the statute. These requirements are as follows:

The proceeds of real or personal property belonging to a married woman cannot be paid to any person, except by consent of such married woman upon privy examination by the Court; or, unless a deed or power of attorney is executed by the husband and wife, and her privy examination taken, as in other cases. A married woman may, in person, receive the money; or, upon privy examination by the Court, or by any person commissioned to take such examination, direct how the same shall be paid or invested, which direction shall be reduced to writing, and entered on the minutes of the Court. She may also, by power of attorney, duly executed by her with her husband, upon privy examination as in other cases, authorize and direct the money to be paid or invested as they may see proper, which power of attorney shall be filed with the papers, and form a part of the record of the cause.

The Court may, on proper application, order the proceeds of a wife's lands to be re-invested in other lands for her benefit, or otherwise permanently invested.

§ 1168. How Moneys Belonging to Infants and Lunatics are Paid Out.—The law regards infants and persons of unsound mind with all the solicitude of an affectionate and prudent parent, and guards their financial interests with a jealous and unceasing watchfulness, and enforces its protective powers with a comprehensive vigor.

1. How Money Belonging to an Infant is Paid Out. Infants are deemed in law to be wholly unable to manage their financial affairs, and a person who is both an infant and a wife is under a double disability; and the Clerk and Master must, in the first place, see that he is clearly authorized by a decree before he pays out the money in his hands belonging to an infant, and especially to an infant wife; and he must, in the next place, see that he follows the directions... of such a decree with scrupulous exactness. The husband of an infant has no right to funds in Court belonging to her,73 nor has her guardian any right thereto, unless the Court so orders. The husband of the infant may be an infant, also, in which case his guardian would have no right to the funds belonging to his wife, whether she be an infant or an adult. No guardian has any right, in any case, to draw funds from the Chancery Court without an express order of the Court, and then only on complying fully, and in good faith, with the terms of such order.74 Money belonging to a minor may be paid him when he attains his majority on his affidavit, or a deposition being filed to establish his majority,75 or it may be paid to his regular guardian when the Court so orders.

2. How Money Belonging to a Non Compos is Paid Out. Persons of unsound mind are regarded by a Court of Equity as the objects of the greatest solicitude, and their interests are protected with a stringent and scrupulous fidelity. The Clerk and Master, in paying out the funds of such persons, must look exclusively to the decree of the Court for his authority and method of procedure; and the injunctions and directions above given in reference to infants apply with equal, if not greater force, in case of payment of money belonging to idiots and lunatics.76

§ 1169. The Books the Clerk and Master is Required to Keep.—The Clerk and Master is required by law to keep certain office books; and on the proper keeping of these books greatly depend the ease, accuracy, and facility with which the business of the Court, and the business of the Clerk and Master's office, are transacted. The safety and integrity of these books are essential to the security of property, the final determination of rights, and the repose of society; and they should be preserved with a jealous fidelity, and an inviolable sanctity; and any defacement, obliteration, or alteration of them, should be deemed a sacrilege. The books to be thus kept by the Clerk are the following:

1. A Minute Book. The Clerk and Master is required to keep a wellbound book, in which shall be entered the minutes of each day's proceedings during the session of the Court, in the order in which they are made. This is the most important of all the Court books, and should be bound well enough to last a hundred years. It should be preserved unmutilated, and unchanged, with scrupulous vigilance and fidelity. And inasmuch as it contains the perpetual memorial of the decrees of the Court, the entries should be made in a bold, round hand, and with the most durable black ink. This book being under the constant personal supervision of the Chancellor, no detailed directions as to the keeping of it are necessary.77

2. A Judgment Index Book. The Clerk and Master is required to keep a judgment index, in which the name of each person, partnership, firm or corporation against whom a judgment or decree is rendered shall be entered under the proper alphabetical [initial] or letter of such person, partnership, firm or corpora-73 He may borrow the money, if he gives the required security. Chees, duty appointed, 2 Term. Ch. 816. There may be an application to enforce the wife's equity in her estate. See ante, § 968.

74 Code, §§ 4053-4054, which sections are as follows:
The proceeds of the real or personal property of an infant can only be paid to a guardian who has given bond with good security, as such, to the satisfaction of the Court.
If the infant is also a feme covert, the funds can only be paid out upon the order of the Court, directing how, and to whom, the same shall be paid.
75 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1800-1801.
76 Code, § 4045. This section is as follows:
So, also, if the person entitled to the proceeds of either realty or personalty, sold by order of Court, is of unsound mind, the funds can only be paid to a guardian, or committee, duly appointed, who has given bond and security according to law, satisfactory to the Court making the sale.
77 The Chancellor should allow no contested decree to be entered on the minutes, until it has first been submitted to the adverse Solicitor, and all his objections passed on; and every uncontroverted decree should be approved by the Chancellor before its entry on the minutes. In no other way can the minutes be preserved from erasures, interlineations, and alterations, which are both a reproach to the Chancellor and to the Clerk, and an impairment of the inviolable sanctity which every Court record should possess that is deemed absolutely verity. Besides, authorized alterations suggest and may induce unauthorized alterations. If an alteration or interlinear insertion is made, it should, for obvious reasons, be in the handwriting of the Clerk, or of the Chancellor. For like obvious reasons, no decree or order should ever be vacated by writing "Vacated" across it, or in any similar way; but it should be vacated by another decree or order duly entered on the minutes of the date of the order of vacation; and a memorandum like this entered on the margin of the vacated decree or order: "Vacated; see page ———" poration, giving the date, number of the cause, and amount of such judgment. Each page of said index shall have four [five] columns, as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name.</th>
<th>Date.</th>
<th>No.</th>
<th>Cause.</th>
<th>Amount.</th>
</tr>
</thead>

Two sets of these columns may be on each page.\(^{77a}\)

3. An Execution Docket. This book is next in importance to the minute book, as it shows all the decrees of the Court in the order of their rendition, giving the dollar-and-cent result of the litigation, the costs of the suit, to whom owing, what is paid into Court on the final decree, by whom paid in, and to whom paid out. There are severe penalties imposed by law on Clerks for misfeasance in connection with the execution docket.\(^{78}\) The following facts must be shown on the execution docket in each case:\(^{79}\)

1. The style of the cause, giving the names of all the complainants, and all the defendants, in full.
2. The day and year of the rendition of the decree.
3. The amount of the decree, and in whose favor and against whom rendered; and if various amounts are decreed against various parties, or in favor of various parties, these facts must be shown.
4. The amount of the costs, showing the name of each officer, witness, or other person, to whom costs are due, and each item due each person and on what account owing, and the fee due on each item, all with particularity and certainty.
5. The character\(^{80}\) and number of the executions issued; the date of their issuance, and to what county or counties issued; the persons to whom delivered, and the date of delivery, or, if sent by mail, the day it was mailed, and to whom addressed.\(^{81}\)
6. The fact and dates of the return of the executions, and the dates and substance of the officers’ returns. It is better to give the returns in full, including the officers’ names.
7. The dates and amounts of all moneys paid into the office, and by whom paid, and on what accounts.
8. The dates and amounts of all moneys paid out of the office, to whom paid, and on what account, showing the facts clearly and particularly.

All of the entries in reference to executions, and payments, must be made on the execution docket at the time of the transaction.\(^{82}\)

4. A Cash Book. The Clerk and Master is required to keep a cash book as one of the public records of his office, in which he shall enter, under each case, all sums of money received or disbursed by him, showing the date of receipt or disbursement, on what account received or disbursed, and from or to whom received or disbursed. This book must be indexed direct and reversed. It shall at all times be open to the inspection of the public; and it is a misdemeanor for the Clerk and Master to fail to keep this book, or to fail to allow its inspection.\(^{83}\)

5. A Rule Docket. The Rule Docket must be a well-bound book, kept exclusively for the entry of all rules, notices, orders, and other proceedings in a cause made with or by the Clerk and Master.\(^{84}\) This book is to the Master what the minute book is to the Chancellor; and should contain a perfect and detailed record or minute of every step taken in the Master’s office, from the beginning of the suit to the final decree. As some guide to the Master in keeping his Rule Docket, the following summary of Rule Docket entries is given:

\(^{77a}\) Act of 1897, ch. 27.

\(^{78}\) Code, § 3017.

\(^{79}\) Code, §§ 3016; 4040.

\(^{80}\) A writ of possession is a species of execution.

\(^{81}\) Code, § 3358.

\(^{82}\) Code, § 3016. The Clerk and Master is not only liable in damages for neglecting to keep his execution docket according to law, Code, § 3017; but he is also, guilty of a misdemeanor, and is liable to removal from office, when his omissions are wilful. Code, § 4065. Nothing but scrupulous exactness and promptness in making his entries will save the Clerk harmless. Every entry should invariably be made on the execution docket at the very time of the transaction. See, post, § 1171 a, sub-sec. 15.

\(^{84}\) Code, § 4417; 4085. See, post, § 1171 a, sub-secs. 10, 11, 13, 14.
1. He will enter the cause as soon as the bill is filed; giving the names of all the complainants and all the defendants.\(^{85}\)

2. The names of the complainant’s Solicitors.\(^{86}\)

3. The date and fact of the filing of the prosecution, injunction, attachment or other bonds, the penalties of the various bonds filed, and the names of the sureties on each.

4. The minute, hour, day, month and year on which the bill is filed, being especially careful as to the minute and hour in case of attachment bills.

5. The date, fact and filing of each exhibit to the bill.

6. The date and fact of the issuance of each subpoena to answer, and of each writ of injunction and attachment, and the officer to whom issued; and if sent by mail so show, and what fees were advanced, if any, and by whom.

7. Every order of publication in full, dated and duly signed by the Clerk and Master.

8. Every order extending the time for answering the bill.

9. The date and fact of the return of all original and mesne process, including subpoenas to answer, writs of injunction, attachment and scire facias, giving the officers’ returns thereon in full, including the date, and his name.

10. The date and fact of the filing of all demurrers, pleas, answers, and exhibits to answers.

11. The names of the defendant’s Solicitors.\(^{87}\)

12. Every order taking a bill for confessed. This order, and the following orders, must be set out in full, and duly dated.

13. Every order appointing a guardian ad litem.

14. The suggestion and proof of a party’s death, and the award of a scire facias.

15. Every order reviving a cause upon return of a scire facias, or of a subpoena to answer a bill of revivor.

16. Every order setting aside a judgment pro confesso.

17. The date and fact of the filing of every deposition, the names of the witnesses, and by what party filed. The Code says these entries in reference to depositions may be made in a separate book.\(^{88}\)

18. The date and fact of the filing of documents, exhibits to depositions, transcripts, deeds, wills, plats, and other sorts of evidence, and by whom filed.\(^{89}\)

19. The date and fact of the filing of every other paper, of the making of every other rule, or order, and of every other proceeding in the cause not herebefore in this section specified, and not entered on the minute book, or execution docket.

All the entries in the rule docket will be made under the style of the cause to which they belong, and will be made in the order of time in which the acts were done, and the correct date will be attached to each entry.\(^{90}\)

6. A Memorandum Book. The Clerk shall keep a memorandum book in which shall be noted every subpoena for witnesses, commissions to take depositions, with the day of issuance, and any other proceedings of the Clerk not entered on his records, rule docket, or minutes; and such memorandum books shall be open for parties, or their attorneys, to make such memorandums for the direction of the Clerk as may be necessary.\(^{91}\)

---

85 It is of great importance to have the names of all the parties, complainant and defendant, appear on the rule docket, because the pleadings are now seldom enrolled, and the minutes of the Court seldom give the names of all the parties; and the rule docket, in case any pleading is lost, may contain the only record showing the names of all the parties to the suit.

86 The entry of the names of the Solicitors on the rule docket is a record of their authority to appear and act.

87 This entry is of importance; but is often neglected.

88 Code, § 4417. The Master should make it an imperative and invariable rule to make all of his rule docket entries at the very time the act is done, thereby making the entry on the rule docket a part of the transaction itself. All neglects and postponements are reprehensible; and wilful omissions or failures should be punished by removal from office.

89 Code, § 4065. A rule docket well kept is indispensable to the rights of litigants, and the certain dispatch of business.

90 Code, § 4433.
This book is kept by very few Clerks and Masters, and yet it is a book of importance and great usefulness. When properly kept, it will constitute a sort of office docket, in which Solicitors may make memorandums for the direction of the Clerk, such as directions to issue alias or counterpart subpœnas to answer, or subpœnas to testify, directions as to sales, executions, or writs of possession, directions to enter judgment pro confesso when the proper time arrives, directions to appoint guardians ad litem, directions in reference to the taking of accounts, or making reports, directions in reference to the revivor of suits, directions in reference to exceptions to answers or depositions, or any other directions, or memorandums, in reference to any matter to which he desires to call the Master's attention, or on which he desires the Master to act, in reference to any cause, whether brought, or about to be brought, or already determined.

7. A Deposition Book. The Master is also required to keep a well-bound book, in which shall be entered under the name of each case, the depositions taken and filed in the case, the names of the witnesses, and the date of the filing, and by whom. This book may be dispensed with, by keeping the rule docket in such way as to enable the entries here required, to be made therein, without interfering with the entries regularly belonging to that docket.

8. An Insolvent Book. Inasmuch as many large insolvent estates are administered in the Chancery Court, the statute requires the Clerk and Master to keep in his office a book marked "Insolvent Book," in which will be entered the character and amount of all claims filed in insolvent suits, the several claims and amounts allowed, the amount to be distributed among the creditors, and the pro rata to be paid each. This is an important book: it preserves the record of an insolvent estate, and obviates the necessity of entering long schedules on the minutes of the Court.

9. Trial Dockets. The Clerk must keep three trial dockets, one for the Chancellor, one for the bar, and one for himself. These dockets should be well-bound books, large enough to last several years, and should be kept with the same care and fidelity as other record books. A cause should be entered on this docket as soon as it is at issue, and should bear the same number as on the rule docket. The following is the form of a trial docket, the No. of the cause, names of the Solicitors, style of cause, and pleadings when filed, being on the left-hand page; and the rules, orders and decrees and the memorandums being on the right-hand page.

§ 1170. Other Duties of the Clerk and Master.—There are various other... duties of the Clerk and Master, important in themselves, but not necessary to be treated in detail in this book. 97 The principal of these duties are the following:

1. To reside in the county wherein the Court is held, to keep his office at the county seat of said county, and give due attendance at his office for the performance of official duties. 98

2. Not to practice law in his Court, nor become security for the prosecution of suits in his Court, nor upon any bonds, or other obligations, required to be executed by the parties in the progress of such suits. 99

3. To issue all original, mesne, and final process from the Court; 100 and to sign all subpoenaes, injunctions, attachments, executions, and all other writs issued from his Court, and to endorse on the back thereof the date of issuance.

4. To record in well-bound books, within six months after the final determination of any suit or prosecution, such proceedings as he is required by law to enroll.

5. To make and keep indexes, direct and reversed, for all books and docket required to be kept by him.

6. To keep all the papers, books, dockets, and records belonging to his office with care and security; the papers filed, arranged, numbered, and labeled, so as to be of easy reference; and the books, dockets, and records properly lettered; and to allow parties to inspect the records free of charge. 101

7. To attend Court, during the session thereof, with all the papers belonging to the term, so filed as to be of easy reference; to keep in the Court House during such session, the execution docket for the two preceding terms; and to administer all oaths and affidavits in relation to causes or proceedings pending therein.

8. On application and payment of the legal fees therefor, to make out and deliver to any person applying for the same, a correct transcript, properly certified, of any paper or record in his office.

9. To perform such duties in regard to the State and county revenue as are prescribed by law.

10. To issue executions within the time prescribed by law. 102

11. It is the duty of the Clerk when a cause is taken by appeal in the nature of a writ of error to the Supreme Court, to make out, and transmit by mail, to the Clerk of the Supreme Court of his Division, a transcript of the record, within forty days after the entry of appeal, unless the entry has been within temporary dockets are generally destroyed as waste paper, after the term closes. This practice is reprehensible. The statute contemplates only one trial docket, and that a cause shall be entered only once on this docket. This docket is made in triplicate, as stated in the text. The memoranda made by the Chancellor on his docket, and the memoranda made by the Clerk on his docket, are in the nature of records, and will support decrees nunc pro tunc, will evidence a Solicitor's appearance in a cause, and will be proper to be taken as evidence of the facts or as at a past term, of the Court. This shows the importance of keeping the trial dockets in book form, and of preserving them as records. If causes are entered on the trial docket in the order in which they are entered on the rule docket, much confusion is avoided, the same number can be given on each docket, and the records of the Court made to correspond.

97 For these various duties, see Code, §§ 4035-4036.
98 Code, § 4038.
99 Code, § 4039.
100 Code, § 4040.
101 The Clerk has no authority to allow the papers, books, dockets, and records, belonging to his office, to be taken out of his office by any one except the Chancellor, who is entitled to take a file in a pending cause to his own room or office to enable him the more thoroughly to investigate and consider the pleadings and proofs in the cause. The Clerk should, in extraordinary cases, and subject to proper safe- guards, allow reputable Solicitors to take out a file for a few days; but no file should ever be allowed to be taken out of the county, nor should any record book ever be allowed to be taken out of the office, or the Court House, on any pretext or by any person. The Chancellor has no lawful authority to order the Clerk to allow any file or record to be taken out of his office. The Clerk is charged with the exclusive custody of all his records, and gives a bond for their safe keeping, and his office is the only proper place for such records. Nothing does more to create delays and confusion and annoyances and suspicions, and criminations and recriminations in the progress of a suit, than the practice of allowing any one and every one connected with the suit to take out the files in a cause, or the files referred to in a cause. The Clerk should adopt and enforce rigid rules to enable him to retain the custody of his records; and the Chancellors should sustain their Clerks in so doing, and not encourage, much less undertake to authorize the miscellaneous losing of the Clerk's office by parties and the Solicitors of the Court. Those who would reissue the Clerk for retaining the files, would be loudest in their denunciation of him if any file should be lost, despoiled, or misplaced. Pleadings, exhibits or depositions may, by leave of the Chancellor, be withdrawn from the files, when material to a prosecution for perjury. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 784; or when material in any other litigation. But certified copies of all papers withdrawn should be substituted.

forty days of the regular term of the Supreme Court, or during such term, and then forthwith, and transmit without delay to the Clerk of the Supreme Court. The certificate of the postmaster of his county, that the transcript has been deposited in the postoffice within the time prescribed, is presumptive evidence of the transmission required.

12. It is the duty of the Clerk, upon application of the party entitled, his agent, or attorney, made at the office of the Clerk, to pay and deliver to the applicant without delay, any money or property in his hands, received by virtue of any decree, judgment, or order, of the Court, or any Judge thereof, or by virtue of his office. A failure so to do is a misdemeanor in his office, and, moreover, subjects the Clerk to motion against himself and his sureties.

13. The Clerk, in all cases where there are two or more defendants, and a subpoena for witnesses, or other process, issues on application of part only of the defendants, shall mark thereon at whose instance such process was issued.

14. Upon the suspension or removal from office of any Clerk, he shall, on demand of his successor or order of the Court, deliver over to such successor, the books, papers, and other articles belonging to the office; such delivery to be enforced as provided in sections 805-811 of the Code.

15. To pay into the State Treasury all sums of money, funds, or witness fees that may have remained in his hands or Court unclaimed, or uncalled for, by the party or parties legally entitled to the same, for a period of six years.

16. To perform such other duties as are, or may be, by law required of him.

§ 1171. Duties of the Master During the Sitting of the Court.—The Clerk and Master should, during the sitting of the Court, be always ready to perform any duty connected with his office, or to respond to any question propounded to him by the Chancellor, or by a Solicitor, or party, touching the status of any particular matter relative to his office, files, or duties. To enable the Master to discharge these duties to the satisfaction of himself and all others concerned, he should not undertake to write up the minutes, or to take depositions, or to perform any duty that will take him out of the Court room. He should have a deputy to do all clerical work, and if the deputy is needed to take depositions or prepare reports, the Master should have a competent amanuensis employed to write up the record of each day's proceedings. Nothing is so irritating and demoralizing to all concerned as to have the minutes in arrears, and the Master in vain trying to write them up and at the same time to answer questions, make payments, take depositions, make reports, search for papers and perform other duties of a like character. Everybody is liable to become irritated by such perplexities; and the Master who undertakes such a task not only undertakes the impossible, but he makes the Court a scene of unseemly confusion, and causes a multitude of petty annoyances, and sometimes, in his hurry and confusion, commits serious mistakes.

The statute provides that the minutes of the previous day's proceedings should be read each morning; and the Chancellor should not allow the minutes to lag behind the Court. The Master should be required to have the necessary clerical force to keep the minutes up to date. A positive rule positively enforced will prevent all the annoyances incident to the delays in the entering of the orders and decrees, especially at the close of the Court. The Master should not be allowed to degenerate into a copyist while Court is in session: better things are expected and required of the Master, and he should endeavor faithfully to justify these expectations in the fullest.

duties of Clerk and Master, the following additional rules for their guidance have been formulated, the observance of which will greatly increase the efficiency, accuracy and dispatch of business in the office. These rules are, in the main, declaratory of the law; and are only supplemental to those given in the preceding sections.

1. His Duty in Taking an Account. The Clerk and Master will begin the taking of every account in due season, as required by the Code, (sec. 4474;) and he will file every report at least five days before the first day of the succeeding term, (Chancery Rule IV, sec. 8;) or file a sufficient excuse, or be liable to the penalties specified in the Code, (secs. 4472 and 4473,) and in Chancery Rule VII, § 9.

2. His Report Must Specify the Evidence. Every report based on evidence will refer to the particular evidence upon which each fact or item is based, giving the page; and, if a deposition is referred to, the number of the question and answer relied on must also be given. A general reference to a document or deposition will be insufficient. (Chancery Rule IV, sec. 7.)

3. His Financial and Book Reports Must be Prompt. The Clerk and Master will have his Financial Report and Report of Supreme Court Reports ready to present to the Chancellor as soon as he takes the bench at the opening of the term, the latter Report to be made at the first term only in each year. The Financial Report must show not only the amount of money in his office, and the causes to which the several sums belong, but will, also, show what money he has out on loan, and in what cases; and he will file the notes given by the borrowers with his Report. The money and notes specified in said report, the Clerk and Master must keep in his hands during the sitting of the Court ready to be produced, instanter, if so ordered by the Court; and no excuse will be accepted for failing to file said Reports, or to have said money, notes and books on hand.

4. He Must Report Taxes on Lands Sold. Whenever real estate is sold the Master will immediately after the sale, ascertain and report to the Court whether there are any taxes due and unpaid which were a lien upon said real estate on the day of sale; and if so, the amount of such taxes, the years for which due, and the amount due for each year. Said report shall be attached to said report of sale.

5. His Report of Sales Must Describe the Land. In making his Report of Sale, the Clerk and Master will describe the land by metes and bounds, if such description be found in the Record, and if not, then by the best description the Record gives, unless the decree of sale contains the required description, and then a reference to the tract or lot described in the decree of sale will be sufficient.

6. He Will Require Receivers, Trustees and Commissioners to Itemize Their Reports. The Clerk and Master will require the reports of Receivers, Trustees and Special Commissioners to be minutely itemized so as to show in full detail all receipts, when and whence received; and all expenditures, when, to whom and on what account made, accompanied by the receipts of persons paid, and other proper vouchers. Receivers will not be allowed to employ counsel, except at their own expense, without first having obtained the consent of the Chancellor.

7. He Must Have Proof of Publication Ready. When publication is made as to defendants, the Clerk and Master will file the printer’s affidavit of publication, as required by the statute; or, else, have the newspapers containing the publication in open Court on the first day of the appearance term.

8. He Will Enter no Decree Unless in Ink. The Clerk and Master will enter no

RULES FOR THE GUIDANCE OF THE CLERK AND MASTER.

Rules for the Guidance of the Clerk and Master, (sec. 1171 a) The Chancellor may, by an order like the following, formally declare these rules; and thus make them more effective:

109a The Chancellor may, by an order like the following, formally declare these rules; and thus make them more effective:
He Will Write Amounts in Words, When. The Clerk and Master will, in entering decrees, write all amounts decreed to be paid, to or by any party, in words, (except hundredths of dollars,) even when the draft contains figures. The amounts in figures may be added, in parenthesis.

He Will Enter Cases on His Rule Docket, When and How. The Clerk and Master will enter every case on his Rule Docket as soon as the bill has been filed, giving the name of every complainant and every defendant, the names of the Solicitors, the penalties of the various bonds, and the names of the sureties on each bond.

He Will Note What and When in His Rule Docket. The Clerk and Master will note on his Rule Docket the minute, hour and day of the filing of every bill, especially attachment and injunction bills. He will, also, note on the Rule Docket, in order of time, every other paper filed or issued in the cause, including bonds, subpoenas to answer, demurrers, pleas, answers, exhibits, subpoenas to testify, notices, depositions, affidavits, transcripts, deeds, plats, records, and every other document or thing left with him to be filed in the cause, except decrees. This notation will include the name of the paper or thing, by whom and when filed; and if a deed shall give the names of the vendor and vendee, if a subpoena to answer or to testify, or depositions, or affidavits, the names of the parties to be summoned or testifying will be stated, and every paper or thing filed will be so described as to identify it. Said notation will be prima facie evidence of the filing the paper or thing noted; but will not be deemed notice to the opposite party when actual notice is necessary.

He Will Enter all Bonds in Full, Where. The Clerk and Master will register in a book to be kept for that purpose every prosecution, attachment, injunction and replevin bond, and every bond given by receivers, special commissioners, trustees, or other persons required by the Court to give bond during the progress of a cause, except appearance bonds and guardian bonds: the last two named will be entered in full on the minutes of the Court.

He Will Enter Orders and Rules Made by Him, When and Where. Every pro confesso, rule in reference to taking depositions, order for scire facias, order appointing a guardian ad litem, order setting aside a pro confesso, order extending the time for answering or for taking proof, order opening an account, order of revivor, order of publication, order requiring original documents to be filed, and every other order or rule made by the Clerk and Master, shall be, at the time of making the same, entered in full on his Rule Docket, and duly dated and signed.

He Will Enter all Returns on His Rule Docket. The returns of officers on subpoenas to answer, on writs of scire facias, on writs of injunctions and attachment, and other process not final, shall be entered in full on the Rule Docket. The Clerk and Master will require all officers to write their returns in ink.

He Will Keep His Books in Detail. The Clerk and Master is imperatively required to keep his Judgment Index Book, his Cash Book, and his Execution Docket in the manner required by law. Code, §§ 3016 and 4040. Bills of Costs must be entered in full on the Execution Docket before any execution is issued, and must specify each officer, party, witness or other person to whom costs are due, and on what account owing, giving each item of account and the fee due on each item. No item of cost will be taxed that does not appear on the Rule Docket or Minute Book, except costs of final process. The Clerk and Master will be especially careful to enter in full, on his Execution Docket, the officers' returns on all executions and writs of possession.

He Will Appoint Guardians ad Litem, When. The Clerk and Master will, at § 1172. The Clerk and Master: His Powers and Duties.—The Clerk and Master has authority to appoint a Deputy,110 who, before entering on the discharge of his duties,111 must take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and of this State,112 the anti-duelling oath,113 and an oath faithfully to discharge the duties of his office to the best of his skill and ability,114 which oaths shall be filed in the office of the County Court Clerk.115 The Deputy Clerk and Master may be appointed by parol,116 but the better practice is to make the appointment in writing, and spread it on the minutes of the Court, the consent of the Chancellor therefor having first been had. The Clerk and Master, ordinarily, requires his Deputy to give him a bond, conditioned to faithfully discharge all the duties of the office of Deputy Clerk and Master, and to account for and pay over all money and property of every kind that may come or should come into his hands as such Deputy: this bond may be moved on by the Clerk and Master for any default on the part of his deputy.117 The Deputy, thus appointed, has full power to transact all the business of the Clerk and Master,118 may receive money on a decree and receipt therefor,119 and administer any oath the Clerk and Master can.120 He may sign official papers as Deputy, thus: "Witness my hand, this — day of ———. Richard Roe, D. C. & M.;" or thus: "Witness my hand, this — day of ———. John Doe, C. & M., by Richard Roe, D. C. & M."121 In case of the death of the Clerk and Master, his Deputy holds the office until the vacancy is filled by appointment.122

§ 1173. The Office and Status of a Solicitor.—Solicitors have always been considered and treated as authorized officers of the Chancery Court. They constitute a part of the Court; and it is safe to say that our Courts would be unable to administer justice without the aid of a body of trained lawyers to present the issues involved in the controversy, to prepare the proofs, to produce the law applicable to the particular case, and by argument to develop the turning points in the controversy, and aid the Chancellor in reaching a just conclusion. No person is allowed to practice as an attorney or counsel in any of the Courts of this State without a license, obtained for that purpose, and without having first taken an oath, in open Court, to support the Constitution of the State, and of the United States, and to truly and honestly demean himself in the practice of his profession, to the best of his skill and abilities.

Attorneys and Solicitors are licensed to practice law in the Courts of this State by the Supreme Court, upon the certificate of the State Board of Law Examiners made after an examination as to their qualifications. The rules governing this Board in its examinations of applicants for such a license are prescribed by the Supreme Court. If, upon such certificate, the Supreme Court shall find that the applicant is of full age and good moral character, and otherwise qualified, it enters an order on its minutes licensing and admitting him to practice as attorney and counselor in all the Courts of the State. This license, if procured by fraud, may be revoked at any time within two years. If the applicant is already licensed to practice in another State, or country, he may be permitted to practice upon producing such license, and satisfactory evidence of good character, and complying with the rules made by the Supreme Court on the subject. Judges and Chancellors are prohibited from practicing law in any of the Courts of this State. The Clerks of the several Courts, and their deputies, are 1 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1840; 2 Greenl. Ev., § 147. Formerly, the sworn Clerks of the Courts were the only agents of parties prosecuting causes in Chancery; but, in consequence of these Clerks being unable to transact the increasing business of the Court, the Court admitted Solicitors, as officers of the Court, to appear for and represent suitors in the Court. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1840; 1 Smith's Ch. Pr., 676.

Attorneys and Solicitors are recognized as officers of the Court by our statutes, as well as by immemorial usage. See Code, §§ 3965-3980; Lawyers' Tax Cases, 8 Heisk., 569; 582; 585; 631; 635; 650; Rogers v. Park, 4 Hum., 480; Jones v. Williamson, 3 Cold., 379; State v. Underwood, 2 Tenn., (Overt.), 92; Hunt v. McClanahan, 1 Heisk., 509.

The term "Solicitor" is generally used in this book to designate a lawyer who practices in the Chancery Court. This is the term almost universally used in Courts of Chancery; and is recognized by the Code and the Chancery Rules. Code, §§ 4369; 4400; 4402; 4403; 4422-4424; 4464; Ch. Rules, I, §§ 1, 5, 7, II, §§ 3, 7, IV, §§ 2, 3; X, §§ 1, 2. The term "Attorney" is only occasionally used when referring to Chancery practice. Code, §§ 4344; 4433: 4483. A lawyer who practices in the Circuit and Criminal Courts of our State is usually termed an attorney.

also prohibited from practicing in their own Courts, or in any causes commenced, brought to, or carried from their Courts, or commenced in any Court from which an appeal lies to their Court. Sheriffs and other executive officers shall not practice law in the county for which they are elected, or in any cause originating or pending in the Courts of that county. 5

The Court, the Clerk, and the adverse party are all interested in knowing who a party’s Solicitor is, as they each have occasion to deal with him in the progress of a cause. The names of the complainant’s Solicitors are usually signed to the bill, and those of the defendant’s Solicitors are signed to the plea, demurrer, or answer. Such Solicitors are termed Solicitors of record; and a party suing or defending by a Solicitor is not at liberty to change his Solicitor without notice of record; and until such notice the former Solicitor will be considered his Solicitor, and he will be bound by his acts. 6

§ 1174. His Retainer and Appearance in a Cause.—Retainer is the act of a client by which he engages an attorney or Solicitor to manage a suit for him in Court. 7 This act may be written or verbal, direct or indirect, express or implied. When a Solicitor appears in a cause, his authority so to do is presumed. 7a The mere fact of his appearance is always deemed enough evidence of his authority; and neither the opposite party nor the Court expects or requires any other, in all ordinary cases. 8 This appearance may be (1) by signing, or having his named signed to, some pleading or other paper filed in the cause; or (2) by entering his name on the rule or trial docket as a Solicitor in the cause; or (3) by appearing before the Chancellor or Master in vacation, or before the Court, as such Solicitor. 9

Solicitors should be careful to have evidence of their retainer to bring a suit, especially when they become surety on the prosecution bond. If their client sign any paper filed in the cause, that will be a sufficient recognition of the suit. 10

§ 1175. The Powers of a Solicitor in a Cause.—A Solicitor has, by virtue of his retainer, full authority to do anything connected with the prosecution, defence or general management of the suit, which his client might himself lawfully do. He may make agreements in reference to the filing or amendment of pleadings or proofs, may waive notices, may let a pro confesso be set aside, may make stipulations as to evidence, may extend the adversary’s time to plead or take proof, may agree to a continuance, or do any other act connected with the preparation of the cause for hearing, or with the pleadings, references, proofs in the cause, or with the procedure at the hearing. 11

A Solicitor cannot, however, receive anything but money in satisfaction of his client’s recovery, without express authority; nor can he bid his client’s debt on land, or take a deed of trust to secure a debt, or assign a judgment, so as to bind his client thereby. He cannot compromise a suit without the sanction of his client; but he may assent to a decree; 12 if such assent be unfairly obtained, however, his client may have it set aside on a bill filed for that purpose. 13 By an express provision of the statute, an attorney and counsel has power to execute, in the name of his client, all bonds or other papers necessary and proper for the prosecution of the suit at any stage of its progress. 14

5 Code, § 3969.
6 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1847. Formerly, an order of Court was necessary in order to enable a party to change his Solicitor. Ibid.
7 The client should seek the Solicitor, not the Solicitor the client: it is highly unprofessional for a Solicitor to seek a retainer. Ingersoll v. Coal Creek Co. M.S., Knoxville, 1906.

§ 1176. The Duties and Liabilities of a Solicitor.—The legal duties of a Solicitor towards his client are care, skill, diligence and integrity. He should fully disclose to his client every fact in his knowledge important for his client to know. 15 He is required to exhibit the utmost good faith in all his dealings with his client; and will not be allowed to use his influence to obtain gifts, conveyances, or good bargains from his client while that relation exists, except on full proof of the utmost fairness and good faith in the transaction. 16 A Solicitor is liable to his client for any loss suffered by his client in consequence of his want of reasonable diligence, or want of ordinary skill; he is, also, liable for all moneys or other property by him received by virtue of his retainership. 17

1. The Duties of a Solicitor to the Court are: 1. To faithfully observe such lawful rules as the Court has prescribed for the government of the bar; 2. To observe the utmost good faith in all his intercourse with the Court and its officers; 3. To conduct himself as a gentleman while present in Court; and 4. At all times and places to obey the law of the land, and maintain an honorable reputation.

2. The Duties of a Solicitor to His Client are: 1. To manage his cause with care, skill and integrity; 2. To keep his client truly informed as to the state of the case; 3. To keep inviolate the secrets of his client and of his client's business; and 4. In all matters to observe the utmost good faith. 18

§ 1177. Summary Jurisdiction of the Court Over Solicitors. The Court exercises a summary jurisdiction over Solicitors in reference to all matters relating to their employment, their conduct in a cause, their deportment in Court, and their dealings with their clients and with the other officers of the Court. This jurisdiction extends to: 1. Staying or dismissing proceedings begun by a Solicitor without authority, and taxing the Solicitor with the costs thereof; 2. Compelling a Solicitor to observe good faith with his clients; 3. Preventing him from disclosing privileged communications; 4. Requiring him to surrender documents or funds received by him as Solicitor in a cause, and which he has no right to retain; 5. Taxing him with the costs incident to striking impertinent or scandalous matter out of a pleading drawn or filed by him; 6. Suspending them pending charges against them; 7. Striking them from the roll for unprofessional conduct, or gross misbehavior, or general disreputable deportment; 19 and 8. Requiring them to serve as guardians ad litem and Solicitors, without fee, for persons under disability, and paupers. 19a The statutory provisions on this subject are as follows:

The several Courts of this State may strike from their rolls any person not authorized to practice in such Courts, and also any practicing attorney or counsel, upon evidence satisfactory to the Court that he has been guilty of any such misdemeanor, or acts of immorality or impropriety, as are inconsistent with the character, or incompatible with the faithful discharge of the duties of his profession. If charges are preferred against an attorney or counsel to any Court, they must be reduced to writing, and a copy furnished the person accused, who may appear and show cause against the charges. The person stricken from the rolls on any of the foregoing grounds, or for other good cause, shall not be permitted to practice the profession in any Court of Record in this State. He may, however, appeal from the decision of the inferior Court to the Supreme Court, as in other cases. 20

The statute requires Solicitors to faithfully account for all money received 17 A Solicitor impliedly contracts (1) that he possesses the requisite legal skill and knowledge; (2) that he will exercise due diligence; and (3) that he will observe the utmost good faith. 2 Greenl. Ev., § 144; 1 A. & E. Ency. of Law, 958-963.

by them; and provides that any lawyer collecting or receiving money in his professional capacity, by suit or otherwise, and failing to pay the same to the party entitled, on demand, may be moved against by the party aggrieved, as prescribed in sections 3616-3619, of the Code; and that if the execution issued upon the judgment recovered by motion, is returned unsatisfied as to any part of the principal or costs, it shall be the duty of the Court to strike the name of such delinquent lawyer from the list of attorneys; and he shall be disqualified from practicing in any Court in this State, until the judgment and costs are paid.21

Solicitors, being officers of the Court, may be required to perform various duties by the Court, without compensation. They may be called on to examine the financial report of the Clerk and Master, to see that the same is correct in every respect.22 And it is enacted by the Code, that at the return term of the process, the Court shall appoint counsel for the plaintiff, in actions prosecuted in the manner prescribed for paupers; and also for the defendant, if he make oath that, owing to his poverty, he cannot employ counsel.23

§ 1178. Confidential Communications to Solicitors.—The relations between a Solicitor and his client are of the most confidential nature, and have always been deemed sacred;24 and the Courts have uniformly protected the client against any betrayal on the part of the Solicitor. In Tennessee, it is provided by statute, that no attorney or counsel shall be permitted, in giving testimony against a client, or person who consulted him professionally, to disclose any communication made to him as attorney by such person, during the pendency of the suit, before or afterwards, to his injury; and that any attorney offering to give testimony in any such case shall be rejected by the Court, and is guilty of a misdemeanor, for which, on conviction, he shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, to be assessed by the jury, and imprisoned not exceeding two years; and, if a practicing attorney, shall also be stricken from the rolls.25

Facts communicated by a client to his counsel are under the seal of confidence, and cannot be disclosed in proof. This is a rule of protection to the client, and not a privilege to the attorney. The latter is not allowed, if he would, to break this seal of secrecy and confidence. The rights of clients require that their intercourse with their attorneys should be protected by profound secrecy; and that all their communication should be free, and unembarrassed by any apprehensions of disclosure or betrayal.26

This rule has been adopted out of regard to the interests of justice, which cannot be upheld, and to the administration of justice, which cannot go on, without the aid of men skilled in jurisprudence, in the practice of the Courts, and in those matters affecting rights and obligations which form the subject of all judicial proceedings. If the privilege did not exist at all, every one would be thrown upon his own legal resources. Deprived of professional assistance, a man would not venture to consult any skilful person, or would only dare to tell his counsellor half his case.27

27 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 571.
Communications, however, are not privileged: 1, Where the communication was made before the attorney was employed as such, or after his employment has ceased; or 2, Where, although consulted by a friend, because he was an attorney, yet he refused to act as such; and was therefore only applied to as a friend; or 3, Where there could not be said, in any correct speech, to be a communication at all; as where, for instance, a fact, something that was done, became known to him, from his having been brought to a certain place by the circumstance of his being the attorney, but of which fact any other man, if there, would have been equally cognizant, (and even this has been held privileged in some of the cases); or 4, Where the matter communicated was not in its nature private, and could in no sense be termed the subject of a confidential disclosure; or, 5, Where the thing disclosed had no reference to the professional employment, although disclosed while the relation of attorney and client subsisted; or, 6, Where the attorney made himself a subscribing witness, and thereby assumed another character for the occasion; and, adopting the duties which it imposes, became bound to give evidence of all that a subscribing witness can be required to prove; or, 7, Where he and his client engaged in the perpetration of a fraud, he will be required to testify in regard to it, for contriving frauds is no part of his professional occupation. In all such cases, it is plain that the attorney is not called upon to disclose matters, which he can be said to have learned by communication with his client, or on his client’s behalf; or matters, which were so committed to him in his capacity of attorney; or matters, which in that capacity alone he had come to know.

The Solicitor is not only required to plead this professional privilege, but if he fail so to do, it is the duty of the Court to forbid the disclosure of any privileged communication, especially if such action of the Court is invoked by the client, or by a Solicitor of the client. A Solicitor cannot be compelled to discover any privileged communication, even when made a defendant to a bill of discovery, and it is his duty to raise the objection by demurrer if it appear on the face of the bill, or by plea, if it do not appear.

§ 1179. His Compensation for Services in a Cause. A Solicitor is entitled to reasonable compensation for his services, in the absence of an express contract fixing the amount of his fee. Where a definite contract has been made, the client is liable therefor, and this liability continues even if he discharge his Solicitor without cause, or compromise the suit.

Where the parties are sui juris, the Court ordinarily declines to do more in reference to fees than, on application of the Solicitor, to declare a lien in his favor upon the recovery obtained by his client in the cause. But where the complainant is an executor, administrator, guardian, or other trustee, and where the bill is to wind up an insolvent estate, or insolvent corporation, or is a general creditors’ bill, or a bill in the nature of a general creditors’ bill, or a bill by an executor, or other trustee, for the construction of a will or other trust instrument, the Court will, as a rule, on the application of the complainant, fix and decree the amount reasonably due his Solicitor for his services in the cause; and will order it to be paid out of the general or trust fund. In partition suits the Court may, in its discretion, order the fees of the Solicitors for the complainant and the defendant to be paid out of the common fund, where the property is sold for partition, and taxed as costs in cases where the property is partitioned in kind.

§ 1180. When a Solicitor Has a Lien for His Fee.—By statute a Solicitor who begins a suit has a lien to secure his fees upon the complainant’s right of action from the filing of the bill; and a Solicitor employed to prosecute a suit, already begun, has a like lien from the date of his employment, provided he gives notice of his employment on the rule docket, or files a memorandum stating his employment, with the papers in the case, or notifies the defendant thereof. Under this statute the Solicitor’s lien attaches to all that is recovered by the complainant as the result of the litigation, whether the recovery be money, chattels, lands, or interests or equities in chattels or lands.

But aside from the statute, a Solicitor has a lien to secure his reasonable fee upon everything that comes into his hands, or that comes to his client by virtue of his retainer or services in a suit; and this lien attaches to all papers, deeds, or documents, choses in action, or other property obtained by him from his client, and to all money, chattels, lands and equities in chattels or lands, recovered by his client as the result of the litigation; and he has a right to have his lien upon such recovery declared, and perpetuated of record in the cause and thus made secure against the treachery or ingratitude of his client, or the rapacity of his client’s creditors.

The Solicitor’s lien attaches to the recovery, and when there is a recovery, either by the decree of the Court, or by the compromise of the parties, or by an award of arbitrators pursuant to a submission in a pending suit, this lien fastens itself thereon, and cannot be loosened or nullified by any act of the parties to the suit, or by any intervention of any creditor of the complainant. As soon as there is any such recovery the Solicitor’s lien not only attaches to it, but it relates to the beginning of the suit, and is superior to the lien of any attaching, garnishing, judgment or other creditors, and is superior to any contracts or compromises between the parties during the suit, or after the decree. If property is impounded by attachment, injunction or other impounding process, or is in the hands of a receiver, or the Clerk of the Court, the lien of the complainant’s Solicitor attaches thereto, as the property is in the custody of the Court, and this lien is not affected by any compromise, or adjustment between the parties or by the dismissal of the suit.

The Solicitor of a defendant who is sui juris has no lien upon property, real or personal, merely protected by him in a litigation where he has made a successful defence for his client. To entitle any Solicitor to a lien there must be

See Yourie v. Nelson, 1 Tenn. Ch., 615; Moses v. Ocoee Bank, 1 Lea, 414; Keith v. Fitzhugh, 13 Lea, 42; Whitesell v. City Building Association, 3 Tenn. Ch., 526; Rains v. Rainey, 11 Hum., 261. The principle recognized in all these cases, except the first, is that where a bill impounds or secures a fund in which third persons may share, or where the bill is for the common benefit of all interested in a fund, the Solicitor of the complainant is entitled to be paid out of the fund, for his services have been for the benefit of all who come in under the bill. But Solicitors who represent defendants or petitioning creditors may lose their lien by betraying their own clients for their fees. Moses v. Ocoee Bank, 1 Lea, 414; Keith v. Fitzhugh, 15 Lea, 49.

At common law, unless the lien is declared of record, or notice of the lien otherwise given the defendant, he may pay the complainant the full amount of the decree, or may otherwise satisfy and adjust it with the complainant, in which case the Solicitor must look alone to the complainant for his reasonable fees. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1842-1845; 1 A. & E. Evry, of Law, 969-973. While perhaps not necessary now by reason of said statute, it is a prudent course to have the lien declared by the Court upon the recovery, and, in case of an appeal and affirmation, by the Supreme Court. Covington v. Bass, 4 Pick., 499. Such a declaration gives the lien, and gives it additional force and dignity. See Guild v. Bomer, 7 Bax., 266.

Garner v. Garner, 1 Lea, 29. The words, “where there has been no actual recovery,” at the an actual recovery of money or property by his client as the result of the Solicitor's services in the cause.\(^45\) So if a Solicitor for a defendant obtains a recovery for his client he is entitled to a lien upon it for his reasonable fee.\(^46\)

§ 1181. His Lien, How Enforced.—Where the fee is not fixed by contract, all the Court will do, ordinarily, where the parties are all sui juris, will be, on application of the complainant's Solicitor, to declare a lien upon the recovery for his reasonable compensation as Solicitor in the cause.\(^47\) In such a case, it will be necessary, in case of disagreement between him and his client, for him to file an original bill to enforce his lien on the fund, or on the property recovered, as the case may be.\(^48\) If the lien is upon a fund in Court, the Solicitor usually directs the Clerk to retain the amount he claims, and to pay out the balance.\(^49\) Where the fund is in Court, however, at the time of the decree, the Court would have jurisdiction, on petition by the Solicitor, to which his client is made a defendant by personal service of process, to order the Master to ascertain and report: 1, whether there was any contract between the Solicitor and his client as to the amount of the fee, and if so, the amount so fixed; and 2, if no contract, what would be a reasonable fee for the Solicitor for his services in the cause. On the incoming of the report, the Court would determine the amount of the fee, and direct the Master to pay it out of the fund in Court.\(^50\) But such a petition cannot be filed in the original cause after the close of the term at which the final decree was pronounced.\(^51\)

The form of declaring a lien upon the recovery in a cause is substantially as follows:

DECLARATION OF LIEN FOR FEE.

[After the recovery has been adjudged, add:] And upon application of Greene & Shields, the Solicitors of the complainant, [or, defendant, in case there is a recovery by the defendant], a lien is hereby declared in their favor upon the recovery of their client in this cause for their reasonable fees as his Solicitors in this cause, [or, for their reasonable fees for their services as his Solicitors in this cause; and such lien is declared to be superior to the attachment lien of A B, in the case of said A B vs. C D (complainant in the original cause,) consolidated with this cause.]

§ 1182. Guardian ad Litem Fees.—Where the ward has an estate in the hands of the Court, or has property involved in the litigation, the Court will allow the guardian ad litem a reasonable fee for all services rendered his ward, as his Solicitor in the cause, such fee to be paid out of any fund in Court belonging to the ward.\(^52\) If the guardian ad litem and Solicitor has obtained a recovery of land or money for his ward, the Court will declare a lien on the recovery for a reasonable Solicitor's fee, which fee the Court will ordinarily fix. As a rule, Solicitors for defendants who are sui juris have no lien on property protected by them in a litigation; but guardians ad litem who render services as Solicitors are entitled to a lien upon the wards' property protected, for reasonable compensation for services rendered in protecting the same;\(^53\) and if there be no fund in Court, the property will be put in the hands of a \section*{§ 1183. Some Suggestions for Young Solicitors.} — Young Solicitors must remember that law does not grow naturally in the brain, however large the cranium may be, and however great the vacant spaces therein. A knowledge of the law can only be acquired by constant and thoughtful study; and neither rich raiment, nor fine cigars, nor choice liquors, stimulate the growth of this knowledge. A young lawyer’s proper place in business hours, when not elsewhere professionally engaged, is in his office; and his proper work there is either reading up on some legal questions on which he is deficient, or investigating the law or the facts of cases wherein he has been retained. Men who have money are generally men who have sense, and they do not go to loafing places to find a lawyer, they well knowing that good lawyers have no time to loaf, and that loafers are generally lazy and negligent of business — even if they know the law, which they seldom do.

Men who have money are discerning, and they look out for a sober, diligent, studious, attentive and trustworthy lawyer when they have important legal business. Nowhere do industry, application, temperance and integrity reap a more bountiful reward than in the legal profession, and nowhere is true merit so sure of ultimate success.

The following further suggestions may be of benefit to the younger members of the bar:

1. Fidelity to Clients, and its Limits. To your clients be true; but do not allow your fidelity to them to tempt you to be false to yourself. Fidelity to a client in Chancery goes no further than what is lawful and proper to do and say in enforcement or protection of his legal or equitable rights. A Solicitor is under no legal or moral obligation to assert an illegal or inequitable claim, or to set up an illegal or inequitable defence, or to take an unconscientious advantage of an adversary, in order to promote his client’s welfare. The law is an honorable profession, intended for the promotion of justice, and not a trade of trickery, for the purposes of fraud or oppression. Be content with a moderate fee, one rather low than large.\textsuperscript{56}

2. Retainers Where Previous Counsel. A Solicitor should not accept a retainer in a suit already brought without first satisfying himself that such retainer will be perfectly agreeable to the counsel already retained in the cause, except in cases where the original counsel are neglecting their client’s interests, and his welfare imperatively requires immediate, affirmative action.

3. Agreements, How Made and Performed. All agreements in reference to the pleadings, proof, procedure, or progress of a cause made with the opposite counsel, should be complied with in the utmost good faith, even though your client disapprove such agreements. Never, however, make an agreement affecting the merits of the suit without the consent or authority of your client; and never make any agreements with the opposite party in the absence of his counsel.

\textsuperscript{54} Persons v. Young, 7 Lea, 293.

\textsuperscript{55} Code, § 3330. The Court generally appoints some reputable member of the bar both guardian ad litem and Solicitor. See Kerbaugh v. Vance, 5 Lea, 113. If the defendant has a Solicitor already employed, the Court would have no authority to appoint one; but, in such a case, the guardian ad litem has the extra duty devolved on him of guarding the interests of his ward against such Solicitor, who is sometimes really in the employ of parties whose interests are not always the interests of the ward.

\textsuperscript{56} A mongrel dog will fight off all other beasts of prey only to devour the lamb himself. Patronus si clienti fraudem fecerit sacer esto. (If an attorney perpetrates a fraud upon his client let him be condemned to death.) This was one of the laws of the XII Tables.
4. When a Witness in Your Own Cause. Never argue a cause in which you are a witness, unless, perhaps, in cases where your testimony is absolutely undisputed. And, if in any case, your testimony is very material, and is liable to be controverted, make it a point of honor to decline a retainer in the cause.

5. When and Where to Make Motions. If you have any motion to make, or any matter to bring to the attention of the Court, do not wait until the Sheriff has been directed to adjourn the Court for dinner, or until the next day; but bring your matter forward in due season, and from your place behind the bar table. It is decidedly unprofessional to bring up your matters before the Chancellor by drawing near to the bench as the Chancellor is about to leave it, or by seeking him on the street, or in his room. Such conduct is decidedly offensive to the Chancellor, although his courteousness may conceal from you the great repugnance he has for such unprofessional deportment on your part.

6. Manner of Making an Argument. The most effective style for the Chancery Court is a plain, business-like, matter-of-fact manner of presenting your case, conversational in tone and gesture, and far removed from the declamatory and gesticulatory style usual before juries, and on the stump.

Address your argument to the Chancellor, and to his intellect; not to his eyes, nor to his ears, nor to his heart. Avoid putting questions to adverse counsel during your argument: questions provoke replies, and replies are often unseemly, and nearly always profitless. Courts are places of business, and the public time should not be unnecessarily wasted by contentions between counsel. When you have no longer anything to say, close your argument, and take your seat.\(^{57}\)

Never open your argument with an apology. Apologies discourage your clients, dishearten your friends, disgust the Court, and satisfy nobody but your adversaries. An apology is a confession of weakness, or of ignorance, or of negligence. If you are not prepared to make an argument, do not undertake to stuff undressed and uncooked food down the throat of the Court. The very best argument you can make when fully prepared, may give very little light to the Chancellor; and if you have not put oil in your lamp, don’t light it, as it will emit nothing but smoke and a bad smell. In such a case, act the man, return your client the fee he has paid you, and apologize to him for ever taking it: this is the only apology that is proper in such a case. If you have made preparations, and yet open with an apology, your insincerity and hypocrisy will nauseate and disgust all who hear you. Hence, whether you are prepared or unprepared, never open an argument with an apology. A great majority of all apologies are insincere, and are often mere results of vanity or weakness.

7. Use of Hackneyed Expressions at the Bar. Never use such hackneyed expressions as, “This is in many respects the most outrageous case that ever was tried in a Court House;” “This is the plainest case ever submitted to a Court;” “I have never, in all my practice as a lawyer, seen or heard of a grosser case of fraud;” “This enlightened Court;” “This intelligent jury;” “Such an argument is ridiculous,” or “too absurd to waste time on;” “The most remarkable proposition ever stated in a Court;” “Your Honor is bound to find” so and so; “Your Honor can’t do” so and so; “Your Honor would stultify yourself” by doing so and so; “It would be a gross outrage on justice for your Honor to do” so and so, and the like.

You need not “thank the Court for its attention:” it is the Court’s duty to attend; and, if your argument is of any value and duly brief, the Chancellor feels like thanking you.

\(^{57}\) The Court should adhere with pertinacity to the rule allowing the affirmative to open and close. Some Solicitors for the negative are never content unless they have the last argument. These should be made to conform to the rule, otherwise the rule is broken down and the affirmative deprived of a legal right.

The right to open and close the argument is his on whom the pleadings devolve the burden of proof. If the burden of proving any of the issues is on the complainant, he has the right to open and close the argument. If, on the other hand, the entire burden of proof is on the defendant, he ought to have the right to begin and conclude. Best Pr. Ev., § 637.
8. Reference to Matters Dehors the Record. Some Solicitors seem to rely not little on facts they assume that the Chancellor knows, and endeavor to inter-polate them into the record, when often the Chancellor does not know them at all; or, if he does, cannot consider them.58 Such Solicitors, in argument, will say, ‘Your Honor knows that (such an one, naming him,) is a good and reliable man,’ or ‘Your Honor knows (him) too well to require any proof as to his character,’ or ‘Your Honor knows the farm,’ [house, creek road, or other locality,] or ‘Your Honor knows the business of,’ or ‘the price of,’ or ‘the value of’ such and such things, or ‘Your Honor has had experience,’ or ‘knows,’ or ‘has seen,’ or ‘has heard,’ or ‘has read’ so and so about the case, or about some person, thing, place or occurrence connected with the case.
All such references, allusions, assumptions and implications are indirect atttempts to make the Chancellor a witness in the case; and, while not always so intended, are really attempts to tamper with the Court.
9. Posture While Addressing the Court. Solicitors, unless excused because of some infirmity, should stand while addressing the Court. To sit on the railing of the bar, or on a bar table, or on the back of a chair, or to lean against a pillar, or a desk, or to rest one foot upon a chair, or to otherwise prop one’s self up, or to make any other exhibition of laziness or indifference while addressing the Court, is not only a gross violation of propriety, and an evidence of boorishness and ill-breeding, but is, also, a sign that the Solicitor so offending has either no respect for the Court, or no confidence in his cause, or both. The conviction of a man that he is in the right stiffens his backbone, contracts his muscles, and causes him to assume, unconsciously, an erect, dignified and manly attitude; and the impulses of an inherent politeness give him a grace of posture that at once adorns the speaker, and commands the respect and admiration of those who hear him.
10. How to Take an Adverse Decision. Solicitors should remember that both sides cannot be right, and cannot be victors, in the same suit. What appears plain to their prejudiced sight may appear very doubtful to a person who is absolutely indifferent. The Chancellor’s business is to decide, and one party or the other must lose. The winning side should never exhibit any evidences of triumph; and the losing side should carefully conceal any emotions of chagrin, disappointment, or displeasure.
Some Solicitors, as soon as the Chancellor has delivered an opinion adverse to them, turn to the Solicitor sitting nearest, and intimate or charge that the Chancellor’s opinion shows that he neither understood the law nor the facts of the case; and that they will reverse him in the Supreme Court from top to bottom. Other Solicitors, on losing a case, make a personal matter of it, and have a spell of the pouts, like a school girl whose chewing gum has been taken away from her. Solicitors who so act, however, are generally young and inexerienced, whose professional skins are thin and tender, and not yet hardened by the blows received in battles at the bar. Veteran Solicitors take defeat in such good humor that the Chancellor sometimes regrets his inability to decide in their favor. The triumph of the victor is often eclipsed by the genial, gracious manner in which the vanquished submits to his fate.59

§ 1184. Briefs of the Facts and the Law.—The Chancery Rules require that when a cause is reached, each Solicitor shall produce and read to the Court a brief written in ink, plainly showing the points in the cause raised by the 58 See, ante, §§ 62, sub-sec. 1: 451.

59 Some few Solicitors endeavor to break their fall, or rally their spirits, by rising and moving for a new trial, or praying an appeal, as soon as the jury deliver their verdict, or the Chancellor announces his decision. Such exhibitions of petulance not only excite the ridicule or contempt of the bal-ce of the bar and the bystanders, but are downright disrespectful and discourteous to the jury and to the Court, and is the outgrowth of criminal practice where a motion for a new trial is necessary to prevent a convicted defendant being prayed into the custody of the Sheriff. The proper time in a civil case to pray for a new trial or an appeal is at the next motion morning after the decision, unless there be some special reason for urgency. Dignity and courtesy are two of the brightest jewels in a law-ner’s crown.
pleadings and the proof, together with the authorities relied on in argument. All Courts are anxious to have briefs: they greatly aid in eliminating the surplus rubbish in the cause, and in enabling the Judges to concentrate their attention upon the turning points in the controversy. One of the principal offices of the Solicitors of a Court is to aid the Court in reaching a conclusion both on the facts and on the law; and they are rightfully expected to sift and marshal the facts, and search out the law, in advance of the hearing, to the end that the Chancellor may be profited by their labors and knowledge, and his own labors be proportionately lessened. Hence, it may be laid down as a fundamental rule, that no Solicitor does his full duty to himself, or to his client, or to the Court, unless he produces at the hearing the brief required by the Chancery Rule.

The following general form may be of some service in the preparation of briefs for the Chancery Court:

FORM OF A BRIEF.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al.

Brief for Complainant.

I. The first question of fact in this case is: [Here state it clearly and briefly; and not argumentatively.] Complainant maintains that [Here state it briefly, thus: that there was a contract, or, a fraud, or, a notice, or, a deed, or, a debt, or, a trust, or, a lien, or some other equity claimed in the bill.] Dep. of John Doe, q. and ans., 9. Letter of Richard Roe, exhibited to his dep., xq. and ans., 12.

II. The second question of fact is: [Here state it clearly and briefly.] Complainant maintains that [Show the precise point in issue, and the precise proof sustaining your contention.] Dep. of Wm. Brown, qs. and ans., 8, 16, 20, 21; xqs. and ans., 5 to 7. Deed from Wm. Brown to Richard Roe, exhibited to Roe’s answer. Henry Jones, defendant’s witness, is contradicted by Wm. Brown: q. and ans., 6; and is, also, discredited by David Doe and John Smith.

The first question of law in the case is: [Here state it briefly and clearly, without any argumentation, thus: Whether the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations. Complainant maintains that it is not, because 1st, The defendant was complainant’s agent and concealed the cause of action; and 2d, Defendant held the money [or property] as express trustee. See Peebles vs. Green, 6 Lea, 474, as to both points.

IV. The second question of law is: [Here state it briefly and plainly, without argument, thus: Can an administrator, by filing a bill to sell the land of his intestate to pay debts, defeat the right of the purchaser of an heir’s title at a judicial sale made before the administrator’s bill was filed?] Complainant contends that he cannot. A bona fide purchaser from the heir may hold the heir’s interest against the administrator, or a creditor. Smith vs. Thomas, 14 Lea, 324. Gibson vs. Jones, 13 Lea, 684. Rahn vs. Meck, 5 Pick., 274.

Then why may not a purchaser of the heir’s interest at a judicial sale hold such interest? H. H. INGERSOLL, Solicitor.

61 The younger lawyers are inclined to be too elaborate in their briefs, and the older lawyers to be too laconic. The following general rules may well be observed in preparing briefs:

1st. That the Court knows the elementary law.
CHAPTER LXVI.

THE SHERIFF: HIS DUTIES.

§ 1185. The Office of the Sheriff.—All Courts are powerless without officers to execute their process, and to enforce their mandates. The Legislature may enact laws; the Chancellor can deliberate, determine and decree, in pursuance of those laws; and the Clerk and Master can issue the process ordered by the flat or decree of the Chancellor; but it remains for the Sheriff to make those laws, and that flat or decree, effective by executing the process awarded; and thus (1) compelling the defendant to do what the law and the Court require of him, and (2) conferring upon the complainant the benefit decreed by the Court to be his due under the law.

As, therefore, the Court is powerless without its Sheriff, it is incumbent on the Sheriff to be always present and ready, in person or by deputy, to discharge every duty that may be imposed upon him, while the Court is in session: and to discharge all duties with diligence, efficiency and good faith.

If the Sheriff be absent, or cannot be relied on, the Chancellor may, upon special application, appoint any other person to serve original, mesne or final process, or to execute the orders of the Court.\(^1\)

§ 1186. The General Duties of the Sheriff.—The duties of Sheriffs are set out in detail in the Code, and need not be stated here.\(^2\) The Sheriff should keep three great facts constantly in mind: 1, That it is his duty to obey all lawful orders of the Chancellor while the Chancery Court is in session; 2, That it is his duty to execute all orders, decrees, and process of the Chancery Court issued by the Clerk and Master, or Chancellor; and 3, That in the execution of process he must use a degree of diligence exceeding that which a prudent man employs in his own affairs.\(^3\) He must, with all reasonable speed, execute all process issuing from the Chancery Court, and make due return thereof, according to law and the requirements of the process.\(^4\) The Sheriff must enter upon the execution of instanter and extraordinary process, in person or by deputy, the moment it is placed in his hands; and should not allow one day to elapse, in any case, after original process has been put into his hands, before he sets out to execute it. The Sheriff should consult the Solicitor affirmatively interested, or the Clerk and Master, or in an extraordinary case, the Chancellor, as to his duties in executing a writ, or order of Court.

§ 1187. Duties of the Sheriff while Court is in Session.—The Sheriff is an officer of the Court; and it is his duty to be present, in person or by deputy, all the time the Court is in session. The statute makes it his duty to attend upon all the Courts held in his county while in session, and to obey the lawful orders and directions of the Court. He is also required to cause the Court room to be kept in order for the accommodation of the Court; and properly heated and supplied with drinking water.\(^5\) It is also his duty to see that all parties keep the peace in and about the Court room.\(^6\)

§ 1188. Some Suggestions in Reference to the Sheriff's Duties in Term Time.

In some of the counties, the Sheriffs are somewhat negligent in discharging their duties to the Chancery Court. In such cases, it might be well for the Chancellor at the opening of the term to call the attention of the Sheriff to his five great duties during the sitting of the Court:

1. To Keep the Court Room in Order. This means that the room should be kept clean, that the windows and doors are in proper order, that there are sufficient tables and chairs for the use of the bar, and that they are kept clean.

2. To Keep the Court Room Duly Supplied With Water. Fresh water for the bar, the Clerks, the litigants and the witnesses should be kept constantly in the Court room, in clean buckets, and supplied with clean dippers, tumblers, or other drinking vessels.

3. To Keep the Court Room Comfortably Heated. In cold weather a comfortable room is necessary. The Clerk cannot write with fingers benumbed with cold; the Solicitors cannot do justice to their clients while chilled to the bone; and the Chancellor cannot properly consider the evidence read, and the arguments made, if his mind is disquieted by the manifest discomforts of those about him, and his body is suffering from exposure to chilling drafts coming from open doors, or broken windows. The Chancellor owes it to himself, and to all concerned, to refuse to hold Court under such circumstances.

4. To Keep Good Order in the Court Room. The Chancellor should instruct the Sheriff at the opening of the term, (1) to suppress all smoking, loud whispering, or talking outside of the bar, while the Court is in session; (2) to keep down all noises, disputes and other disturbances, in the neighborhood of the Court room; and (3) to suppress any thing or act that tends to annoy, disturb or disquiet the Court.

5. To Stay in the Court Room. The Court room is the place for the Sheriff while the Chancellor is on the bench; an urgent demand for his services may arise any moment, and the Court may be compelled to wait until he can be found, and brought in. If process is to be executed, jurors to be summoned, or other duties discharged outside of the Court room, the Sheriff should either discharge these duties by a deputy, or should leave a deputy in the Court room to discharge his duties. It is disgraceful to a Sheriff to be called to come into the Court room by order of the Chancellor while Court is in session. The statute requires him to attend upon the Court while in session, and he has no right to leave the Court room without the Chancellor's permission. A sheriff has no more rights than a Chancellor; and what would be thought of a Chancellor who spent his time attending to matters about town, when the Solicitors, Clerks, and litigants are waiting for him to hold his Court?

Some Sheriffs wait for the Chancellor to direct them in every little thing. They wait to be told: 1, to get water; 2, to keep up the fires; 3, to keep the doors or windows closed; 4, to stop smoking or loud talking; 5, to suppress disorder in and about the Court House; 6, to come into the Court room, and 7, to discharge other plain duties. Chancellors have more important matters to engage their attention than overseeing Sheriffs or acting as Sheriff; and it is a downright imposition on the Chancellor to thus compel him to do what the Sheriff is sworn and paid to do. The Sheriff who waits to be directed in the foregoing matters is of but little more service to the Court, or to the people, than an ordinary porter who waits for orders.

§ 1189. Rules of Practice of the Chancery Courts.—In every system of jurisprudence, professing to provide for the due and orderly administration of public justice, some forms of proceeding must be established, to bring the matters in controversy between the parties, who are interested therein, before the tribunal by which they are to be adjudicated. And for the sake of the dispatch of business, as well as for its due conduct with reference to the rights and convenience of all the suitors, many regulations must be adopted, to induce certainty, order, accuracy, and uniformity in these proceedings. Hence it will be found that the jurisprudence of every civilized country, ancient and modern, has established certain modes, in which the complaints and defences of parties are to be brought before the public tribunals; and has authorized the latter, by rules and orders, to prescribe the time, the manner, and the circumstances, in which every suit is to proceed, from its institution to its determination.1

As our system of Equity Jurisprudence is mainly that of England, so our rules of practice in our Courts of Equity are mainly those in use in the High Court of Chancery of England at the time of the American Revolution.2 The following are the statutory rules of practice now in force for the government of the Chancery Courts:

RULES OF PRACTICE OF THE CHANCERY COURTS.

AN ACT TO REVISE THE RULES OF CHANCERY PRACTICE.3

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, That the Rules of Practice of the Chancery Courts of this State shall be as follows; and all other rules of practice of said Courts, heretofore in force, and all sections of an Act entitled the Code of Tennessee, inconsistent with the same, or so far as the two are inconsistent, be, and the same are hereby repealed; and the rules submitted to this General Assembly by the Chancellors of this State, be adopted, as herein set out by rules, heads and sections, as follows:4

Section 1. The residence of complainants and defendants shall be stated in all bills, if the same are known, and if unknown, then so stated.

1 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 1.
2 See, ante, § 18; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1-2, note. Sec Appendix to Cooke, (Cooper's ed.), where will be found all the old rules of practice adopted by our Courts.
3 Acts of 1871, ch. 97. A large proportion of these Rules are directory and may be relaxed when their rigid enforcement would work manifest injustice. See Marsh v. Crawford, 1 Swan, 116; Lowe v. Morris, 4 Swed., 72; Pawley v. Mc Germsey, 7 Yerg., 503; Van Brocklin v. Wolkott, 5 Heisk., 745; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1. note.
4 As will be seen by this section, this Act repeals the Rules of 1858, and all sections of the Code in-
Sec. 2. All papers and documents referred to in pleadings or depositions, as exhibits, shall be filed in the Master's office, at the time the pleadings or depositions are filed, unless by special order of the Chancellor or Master it is otherwise ordered, but the same shall be filed at any time thereafter upon the order of the Chancellor or Master; and no pleadings or depositions shall be received and filed by the Master until this rule shall have been complied with; provided, however, the paper is not of record in the Court. 5

Sec. 3. The Master shall note upon the pleading or other paper filed in his office, the date of the filing.

Sec. 4. If exceptions be filed to an answer for insufficiency, or for scandal or impertinence, the Clerk and Master shall examine and report upon them with all convenient speed; and if either party be dissatisfied with his report, he may appeal to the Chancellor in Court. 6

Sec. 5. Exceptions to an answer for insufficiency 7 shall be filed within twenty days after notice served of the filing of the answer.

The party filing the exceptions shall set them down for hearing before the Master within ten days after they are filed, and upon failure to do so, the answer shall be deemed sufficient.

Upon the exceptions being set down for hearing, the Master shall act upon them immediately, and if allowed, he shall notify the defendant's Solicitor to file a sufficient answer within thirty days, from which order the defendant may, within said time, appeal, but if the defendant, in obedience to said order, shall file an answer deemed sufficient by the Master, he shall notify the complainant's Solicitor, and he may appeal within ten days after the notice.

Upon appeal so taken, the Chancellor shall act immediately, or as soon as convenient.

Sec. 6. Exceptions filed shall not delay taking depositions, or otherwise preparing the cause for hearing.

Sec. 7. If a defendant obtain time to answer the complainant's bill he shall not file a plea or demurrer, unless the order giving time expressly embrace those modes of defence. 8 § 1191. Rule II.—Depositions, 9 Evidence, 10 and Time for Taking Proof.

Section 1. The Commissioner before whom a deposition is taken, is required to annex a bill of cost of taking the same.

Sec. 2. Proof of notice to take depositions may be made either before the Master or before the Commissioner, by the affidavit of a competent witness, or the return of a proper officer.

Sec 3. If either party reside out of the State, notice may be served upon his agent or Solicitor.

Sec. 4. After a cause is set for hearing, 11 the same shall be opened to both parties for proof without leave of the Court, and without remanding the cause to the rules, but each party must take his proof in chief within four months, and the rebutting proof within two months;12 Provided, the Chancellor or Master may extend the time upon sufficient cause shown by affidavit, upon terms.13

Sec. 5. All exceptions to depositions for want of notice, because not filed in reasonable time; or for other cause going to the admissibility thereof, except objections to the competency of the witness or his evidence, shall be made and disposed of before the commencement of the hearing or trial, otherwise they will be considered as waived. It is the duty of the Clerk to act upon the exceptions made before the hearing forthwith; and from his decision an appeal lies to the Chancellor or Judge, to be disposed of before the cause is heard or triede.14

Sec. 6. A witness once examined in a cause, by either party, shall not be re-examined to the same facts by the same party, unless by order of the Court, or of the Master, on sufficient cause shown by affidavit.

§ 1192. Rule III.—Decrees.15

Section 1. Each decree shall be written upon not less than a half sheet of paper, and in ink; and the date of its entry endorsed upon the same.

Sec. 2. Each decree in a cause, as it is entered, shall be securely fastened together at the top with the other decrees in the same cause, by the Master.

§ 1193. Rule IV.—Accounts,16 Reports,17 and Exceptions18 to Reports.

Section 1. When a matter is referred to the Master to take an account, and make a report, the Court may, in the decree, fix the time in which the account shall be taken and the report made, and upon whom the notice of taking the same shall be executed, if in the discretion of the Court any notice is necessary.

Sec. 2. If the decree does not fix the time within which the account shall be taken, and the report made, the same shall be made to the succeeding term upon the following rules, viz.: The Master shall assign a time and place to consider the same, and shall issue a notice thereof to the parties interested in the account, and to be affected by it, and also their respective Solicitors, if both the party and Solicitor reside in the county; and if the Solicitor reside in the county and the party does not, then the Solicitor, and vice versa. In all cases in which the party is a non-resident, then the notice shall be served upon the Solicitor.

Sec 3. Said notice shall be executed five days before the day assigned, and it shall be expressed in the notice, that if the party or his Solicitor, as provided above, shall fail to attend, the account will be proceeded with ex parte.

Sec. 4. If the parties or their Solicitors attend, the Master may, upon affidavits of either party showing sufficient cause, adjourn the matter from day to day, or to another day prior to the time he is required to file the report, at which time, unless he adjourn the same, he shall proceed to take the account and make the report.

Sec. 5. If the parties are numerous, the notice shall be served upon such of them as the decree or Master may designate.

12 The time for taking proof begins to run from the filing of the plea, or answer. Exceptions to an answer do not suspend the preparation of a cause for hearing, or delay the taking of depositions. Rule 1, § 2; ante, § 1198; Code, § 4457.

13 Neither party is entitled, of right, to the four and two months within which to take proof; but the cause stands for trial, and may rightfully be heard, at the first term after answer filed, whether such term come one or five months thereafter. Code, §§ 4328; 4401; 4432.

14 Proofs of matters in evidence is proof in chief. Rebutting proof may be taken at any time within the six months, but proof in chief must be taken within the four months. Ante, § 465.

15 See Chapter on Decrees, ante, §§ 555-581.

16 For the practice in taking accounts, see, ante, §§ 603-610. The Court has no power to order a reference for an account, except by consent, or upon a hearing of the cause. Wessels v. Wessels, 1 Tenn. 60. 58.

17 On the subject of reports, see, ante, §§ 611-620.

18 Exceptions to reports have been heretofore fully considered. Ante, §§ 615-617.
Sec. 6. After the evidence has been closed, the Master shall proceed without delay to make the report in writing, in ink, with the pages marked thereon.

Sec. 7. In said report, he shall refer by page to the particular parts of the record upon which he bases each item allowed.19

Sec. 8. Said report when completed shall be filed five days before the first day of the succeeding term, and the fact shall be noted upon the hearing docket, and also upon the Chancellor’s docket, opposite the cause.

Sec. 9. If either party fail to attend, the account shall be closed, and no other evidence shall be introduced or heard, unless the party offering it shall, within ten days, by special affidavit, show that he has material evidence which was not before the Master at the time fixed for taking the account, and which he could not by proper diligence have produced according to the provisions of the notice, in which case the Master may open the account for the reception of evidence upon the same notice prescribed for the original account; provided, however, the Court at any time before confirmation, may, in its discretion, open the account for additional evidence.

Sec. 10. Upon a reference, a witness cannot be examined, either by the Master or the party whose witness he is, to the same matter, to which he has been examined in chief before the hearing of the cause, without an order of the Court or of the Master upon affidavit showing sufficient cause therefor, but he may be examined touching any other matter.

Sec. 11. A witness once examined by the Master may be re-examined by him at his discretion.

Sec. 12. The exceptions to the Master’s report shall be filed on or before the second day of the term to which the report is made returnable, unless the cause is sooner reached on the docket, and in that event the exceptions must be filed at the calling of the cause; and in either case, the exceptions shall be immediately set down by the Clerk for argument, and shall be disposed of by the Court when the cause is reached for trial.

Sec. 13. The exceptions shall clearly and distinctly state the matter or item excepted to, and shall refer to the page or pages of the report which show the item or matter excepted to, and shall also refer to the page or pages of the depositions, or other part of the record by which it is sought to impeach the report.20

Sec. 14. After the time allowed for filing exceptions shall have expired, and none have been filed, the report may be confirmed, unless for good cause shown a longer time is allowed.

Sec. 15. All exceptions to reports shall be heard and disposed of as other motions, provided they shall be disposed of when the cause is reached.

Section 1. It shall not be necessary to give notice to a party upon a reference for an account, when the cause is standing upon a pro confesso decree against such party, unless said party resides in the county.

Sec. 2. In all cases in which a pro confesso decree is set aside, pending the cause, and the party allowed to answer, upon filing the answer the defendant shall have the right to cross-examine the witnesses, whose deposition has already been taken, without any leave of the Court, and may have all proper process to compel their attendance, but must give notice to the opposite party of the time and place, as in other cases of taking depositions.

§ 1195. Rule VI.—Injunctions;22 Granting and Dissolving.23

Section 1. In all cases of injunction bills, in which the oath of the defendant to the answer is waived, he may, nevertheless, for the purpose of a dissolution of the injunction, swear to his answer without leave of the Court; and upon notice to dissolve upon bill and answer, the answer may be looked to for that purpose as fully as if permission of the Court had been obtained.

Sec. 2. The notices of a motion to dissolve an injunction shall, in all cases, state upon what the motion is based, whether for want of Equity on the face of the bill, or upon bill and answer. 24

Sec. 3. Upon the hearing of a motion to dissolve an injunction upon bill and answer, the fact that the answer has been excepted to, or that the time to file exceptions has not elapsed, shall not postpone the hearing of the motion to dissolve, but the Chancellor may, without passing upon the exception, dispose of the motion to dissolve.

Sec. 4. If, in a bill tendered for a fiat for an injunction, the complainant admits any money to be due the defendant, or fails to allege any sufficient Equity against any part of the matter sought to be enjoined, the Judge or Chancellor shall either order the issuance of the injunction as to so much only as to which there is sufficient Equity, or, in case the whole matter is enjoined, it shall, besides the bond required by law, be also required that the complainant pay into Court the amount admitted to be due, or otherwise perform the fiat as to any part of the matter sought to be enjoined, and as to which no injunction is ordered, before injunction issues. 25

§ 1196. Rule VII.—Contempt. 26

Section 1. If a contempt is committed in the presence of the Court, the offending party may be arrested by the officer waiting upon the Court, upon the verbal order of the Chancellor, without process or notice, and the contemner shall not be bailable, but the Court may proceed at once to fine or imprisonment, or both; but the minutes shall show the penalty inflicted, and the matter of contempt.

Sec. 2. In all cases of contempt committed not in presence of the Court, the mode of proceeding shall be as follows:

(1.) A petition shall be filed stating the contempt complained of, supported by affidavit, together with such exhibits and returns of officers, or certified copies thereof, as may fully show how the contempt arose.

(2.) Thereupon the Chancellor, if sufficient cause is shown, shall order the issuance of an attachment for the body of the contemner, fixing in said order the time and place of the appearance to answer, and also the amount and character of the bail bond to be taken.

(3.) The Chancellor, upon the appearance and answer of the contemner, or production of his body and refusal to answer, shall hear said proceedings at the time and place designated, unless upon cause shown he shall give further time, upon the petition, affidavit and exhibits, and answer thereto, in case the contemner answers, and if he fails to answer, then upon the case made by the petition.

(4.) In case the contemner does not appear as required by his bond, judgment shall be rendered against the parties thereto for the full amount thereof; and in case an alias attachment be issued, and the contemner be arrested, no bail shall be taken, unless the contemner show good cause for his default, either before the Clerk and Master in vacation, or before the Chancellor in term time.

(5.) If a forfeiture is taken upon the bond and the term of the Court is passed, the Chancellor shall certify the fact, together with the papers, to the Master, who shall immediately enter judgment upon the bond for the amount of the same against the principal and his sureties, and also for costs, and award a facias, and the same when collected shall be paid into Court, and all or so much thereof as is deemed proper by the Court, shall be awarded to the injured party, and the balance shall be paid by the Master into the treasury of the State.

Sec. 3. If a witness, after having been duly summoned, fails to appear before the Master upon return of an officer or proof by affidavit of such service, the Master shall issue an instanter attachment for him, and designate therein the penalty of the bond conditioned for his appearance before the Chancellor at a time and place to be specified if practicable, or before the Court at the next succeeding term, if it be not then in session, to show cause why he should not be fined or committed according to law.

Sec. 4. If a witness should appear and refuse to answer legal interrogatories he shall be committed by the Court or Master, until he consent to give his testimony.

Sec. 5. The Master may, on application of complainant, issue an attachment against a defendant for want of an answer, where the time for answering has expired.

Sec. 6. If the Clerk and Master fail to comply with an order of reference made by the Court under the provisions of law, and the rules as above, he shall forfeit and pay fifty dollars for every such failure, unless he show by oath, to the satisfaction of the Court, he has been guilty of, no contempt or culpable neglect of duty.

§ 1197. Rule VIII.—Continuances. 28

Section 1. [After a cause shall have been once continued by either party, no other continuance shall be granted except upon payment of all costs then accrued, including State and county tax, and execution shall issue for such costs against the party continuing, and his sureties. 29]

Sec. 2. When a cause shall be continued by consent, the Chancellor may tax the costs as he may deem proper, or reserve the same until final decree. 30

§ 1198. Rule IX.—Motions.

Section 1. The Court may hear motions at such times as may be convenient.

§ 1199. Rule X.—Hearing.

Section 1. The complainant or his Solicitor, before presenting a cause for hearing, shall cause all the depositions and other papers intended to be used by him on the trial, except the pleadings, to be neatly put together in one or more packages, and securely fastened together at the top, and the same paged, and a general index of the contents made at the conclusion or beginning thereof.
The defendant or his Solicitor shall in like manner prepare all papers and depositions intended to be used by him. 31

Sec. 2. When a cause is called, each Solicitor shall produce and read to the Court, a brief written in ink, plainly showing the point in the cause raised by the pleadings and the proof, together with the authorities relied on in argument; otherwise, the Court may, in its discretion, delay the hearing until these two rules are complied with. 32

§ 1200. Rule XI. 33 Process: 34 When Returnable.

Section 1. Whenever the terms of a Court shall continue for a sufficient time, all process which shall have been issued for more than five days before the first day of the term, may be made returnable to any Monday of the term; and if the same shall be executed five days before such return day, the defendant shall cause his appearance to be entered and make defence, or obtain time

28 Sec. ante, §§ 519-521; 525-529.
29 This section was repealed by the Act of 1872, ch. 8. This Act was passed at a Special Session; and its title is an attempt to bring it within the scope of the Governor's proclamation. The constit-tutionality of the Act is questionable.
30 Ante, § 529.
31 The Chancellors will find that the enforcement of this Rule will save much labor, and many annoyances.
32 Chancellors find these briefs of such very great value that they actually have a feeling of thankfulness when briefs are handed them. No Solicitor does his duty either to the Court or his client unless he fully complies with this rule. Briefs are good case-winners. See form, ante, § 1184.
33 The main object of this Rule was to repeal Code, § 4351.
34 See Chapter on Original Process in Chancery, ante, §§ 184-193.
therefor within the three succeeding days, and the cause shall stand to be proceeded in at that term.

Sec. 2. If such process is executed within the five days before such return day, then the same shall be returned to the succeeding Monday, and the defendant allowed the three succeeding days thereafter to cause his appearance to be entered and make defence or obtain time therefor, and the cause shall stand to be proceeded in at that term.

Sec. 3. The two foregoing rules shall also apply to cases in which publication is made for a defendant. 35

Sec. 4. * Alias or misnsc* process taken out at any time, may be returnable to any Monday of the term, and if executed five days before the return day, the defendant shall have the first three days of the term, if the Court hold so long, otherwise on the first day of the term, in which to cause his appearance to be entered, or to make defence or to obtain time therefor, and after said three days or said first day, as the case may be, the same shall stand to be proceeded in for all purposes. 36

Sec. 5. If said alias or misnsc process shall be executed within the five days before the return day, the cause shall stand over to the succeeding Monday, and then to be proceeded in as in Section 4 above.

§ 1201. Rule XII.—Corporations. 37

Section 1. Any person opposing the organization of a corporation, shall be required to make defence by plea, motion to dismiss, demurrer or answer, as in other cases in Chancery.

Sec. 2. If the opposition is made by answer, the same shall be put in under oath, and shall state in brief the causes why said organization should not be allowed.

Sec. 3. The petition and answer shall merely operate to make the issue or issues.

Sec. 4. All the evidence in such cases shall be by depositions taken as in other suits in Equity.

Sec. 5. All applications for the organization of corporations shall be put upon the rule docket, and if not opposed, shall be heard upon motion. Applications which are opposed shall be put upon the hearing docket upon the filing of the answers, and shall in all respects be proceeded in as other causes in Equity.

§ 1202. Rule XIII. 38—Enrollment.

Section 1. After any paper is filed in a cause, either party may have the same enrolled by paying to the Master the enrolling fee thereon, which may or may not, at the discretion of the Court trying the case, be taxed to the losing party, and collected as other costs. 39

Sec. 2. Any paper lost or mislaid may be supplied from the enrollment book, the Master certifying that the same is a full, true and perfect copy; and shall be used on the trial of the cause, or the enrollment book itself may be used.

Sec. 3. Whenever, in the opinion of the Court finally determining an Equity cause, it is necessary and proper that the proceedings should be enrolled, such Court shall, upon application of either party, order the enrollment; and the Clerk shall make the same accordingly, and the party applying for the order shall be taxed with the costs thereof. 40

§ 1203. Rule XIV.—Re-Sales.

35 If publication is begun more than five days before the first day of the term, it may require the defendant to appear on any Monday of the term coming five or more days after the last publication. Wessells v. Wessells, 1 Tenn. Ch. 60. And a pro confesso can be taken and final decree pronounced at the appearance term. Ibid.

36 But publications, it would seem, could not be made under this section so as to give a right of trial at the same term. McGavock v. Young, 3 Tenn. Ch. 529.

37 The Act of 1875, ch. 142, § 28, having repealed the law authorizing the Chancery Courts to grant letters of incorporation, this Rule becomes valueless. Subito fundamento cadit opus.

38 The original Rule XIII, of the Act of 1871, has been all repealed, except section 2. See Acts of 1872, ch. 8; Acts of 1877, ch. 45.

39 Acts of 1877, ch. 45.

40 Acts of 1877, ch. 45, § 5. This section was not enacted as a Chancery Rule, but as an amendment of Code, § 3227: nevertheless, it is a Chancery Rule, and comes appropriately here.
Section 1. If the purchaser of property sold at the Master's sale fail to make payment or comply with the terms of sale, the Master may again expose the property to sale on the same day, or after giving due notice of the time and place, according to the directions contained in the decree.41

§ 1204. Rule XV.—Re-Hearing.42

Section 1. Every petition for re-hearing shall contain the special matter or cause on which a re-hearing is applied for, be signed by counsel, and the facts therein stated, if not appearing from the proceedings in the Court, shall be verified by oath or affirmation. Such petition must be presented to the Court during the term at which the decree complained of is entered upon the minutes.

§ 1205. Rules and Regulations of Practice for Particular Chancery Divisions. The Rules of Practice adopted by a majority of the Chancellors, or enacted by the Legislature, are obligatory upon all the Chancellors, and cannot be changed. But in the absence of any such rule, or rules, on any particular matter, or matters, of practice, each Chancellor may make rules and regulations of practice for the purpose of expediting business in his own Chancery Division.44 These rules and regulations must not be in conflict with any rule made by the Chancellors as a body, nor with any statute of the State.

The following rules and regulations, nearly all of which are in beneficial operation in some one or more of the Chancery Divisions, are suggested as a basis for the action of individual Chancellors.45

43 These Rules, while signed by the then Chancellors, were thoroughly revised by the Legislature, through its Senate Judiciary Committee, and enacted into a law. Acts of 1871, ch. 97. Three members of that Committee afterwards became Chancellors, one of whom is the author of this book.
45 These rules are in force in the 2d Chancery Division, and most of them in other Divisions. See similar rules in 2 Tenn. C.H., 789-790. See Appendix to Cooke, where Judge Cooper has collected all the preceding rules of Court practice contained in our Reports.
46 Rules and Regulations of Practice for the Chancery Division would be a title more consonant with the statute. Code, § 3936; but the title given is more brief, and, perhaps, as applicable. These rules, in so far as they impose costs, are based on the law of compensation. The law has no favorites as between equals, except in so far as it favors those who are diligent. Nor has a Chancellor the right to grant a favor to one party at the expense of the other. Favors should be paid for in costs; otherwise, the party in default is rewarded, and the party who has done his duty is punished.

As "he who seeks equity must do equity," so he who seeks a favor in Court must do a favor. And where a favor must fall on one of two parties, it should be borne by him whose default occasioned the loss; otherwise, he would derive an advantage from his own wrong. Hence, a party asking leave to amend his pleadings, or to answer after a pro concesso order against him, or to take proof after his time has expired, or to continue a trial when the other side is ready, should not ask such a favor without offering to pay all costs occasioned by the favor he is asking. Nor should a Chancellor deprive one party of the fruits of his diligence in order to relieve the other party of the penalties of his negligence.

And, above all, it must ever be remembered that Courts are made to do full justice, and that justice delayed is only half done.

The main purpose of the following rules is to give the speediest trial consistent with the highest justice; and the bar is solicited to co-operate in the effort to effect this purpose.
inal amended or supplemental bills, bills of revivor, cross bills, bills of review and petitions, and all writs of scire facias, shall be made returnable to the first Monday of the month coming five or more days after the issuance of such process: but, if a regular term of Court comes before such first Monday, such process shall be made returnable to the first day of such term. This rule includes process by publication in all cases, the last publication being deemed equivalent to the issuance of a subpoena under this rule but in attachment cases the last publication must be at least one week before the return day.

RULE 2. When Defence Must be Made. Every defendant served with such original or mesne process, whether by personal service or by publication, shall plead, demur, or answer, on or before the first return day coming five or more days after such service, in all cases except in attachment cases, and then on or before the first return day coming at least one week after such service. Service by publication in all cases shall be deemed to have been made on the day of the last publication: if, however, the return day is the first day of a term of the Court, the defendant must make his defence within the first three days of the term, and will be liable to a pro confesso thereafter.

RULE 3. When a Pro Confesso May be Taken. If any defendant, not a minor or person of unsound mind, fails to make defence on the return day, a pro confesso order may be taken and entered against him on the next or any subsequent rule day in vacation; and if the first day of the term is the return day, then a pro confesso order may be taken and entered against him on any rule day after the third day of the term. Each day of the term, and the first Monday of every month in vacation, are rule days for the purpose of taking pro confessos, and for all other business proper for rule days.

RULE 4. Limitation on the Foregoing Rules. The foregoing Rules are all subject to Chancery Rule XI, under the operation of which: 1. Any original writ issued, or any publication commenced, more than five days before the first day of the term, may be made returnable to any Monday of the term; 2. Alias and mesne process, taken out at any time may be made returnable to any Monday of the term; 3. If any process issued as aforesaid, is executed within five days before the return day, the next succeeding Monday shall be the return day; and 4. In all of said cases the cause may be proceeded in as though the process had been duly executed five or more days before the first day of the term.

RULE 5. Copies of Subpoenas to be Issued. The Clerk will issue with each subpoena as many copies thereof as there are adult defendants to be served, and the officer executing the writ will leave one of said copies with each adult defendant, in addition to the service now required by law. At the bottom of each of said copies shall be a notice to the defendant named therein, specifying the day on which he is required to plead, demur or answer, and warning him that if he fail so to do, the bill may be taken as confessed as to him.

RULE 6. Answer When to be Filed on Demurrer Being Overruled. When a plea or demurrer is overruled, the defendant must file his answer on the next rule.
day. The Chancellor may, however, allow further time to file an answer when the plea or demurrer is not deemed frivolous; but in no case will the Master allow further time to answer after a plea or demurrer has been overruled.

RULE 7. Any Defendant Desiring Leave to File a Plea or Demurrer after a pro confessso entered against him in vacation, or desiring an extension of time to make defence with leave to file a plea or demurrer, in vacation, must apply to the Chancellor, and not to the Master, for such leave, and must exhibit his plea or demurrer and a copy of the bill with his application, along with an affidavit showing good cause for setting aside said pro confessso, or for said extension, as the case may be.

RULE 8. Defence on Leave Must be Made Within the Leave. When a defendant has obtained time from the Chancellor or Master to make a defence, he shall make his defence in the manner and time specified in the order giving time; and the Master will not receive or file any pleading presented by the defendant after the time specified for making his defence shall have expired, without the written consent of the complainant, or an order from the Chancellor.

RULE 9. Plea When Deemed at Issue. If the complainant fail to set down a plea with the Clerk to be argued, or fail to take issue upon it, on or before the first rule day coming twenty or more days after the filing of such plea, it will be deemed at issue, as though a general replication had been filed.

RULE 10. Notice to be Given of Filing of a Plea or Demurrer. When a plea or demurrer is filed, whether in vacation or in term time, the Clerk and Master shall at once notify the complainant, or his Solicitor.

PRO CONFESSOS, WHEN AND HOW TAKEN.

RULE 11. Pro Confesso a Legal Right: Not to be Set Aside Unless. When the defendant has failed to make his defence in the time and manner required by the rules of the Court, the complainant has a legal right to have an order by the Master or the Court, taking his bill for confessed, as of course; and such pro confessso order will be made whenever legally demanded, and will not be set aside either by the Master or the Chancellor when the defendant was served with subpoena, except with the written consent of the complainant, or on good cause shown by affidavit, accompanied by a sworn answer, showing a meritorious defence, and on the payment of costs.

RULE 12. Pro Confessos at Rules. All pro confessos under these rules may be taken before the Master in vacation, or in open Court in term time. The defendant has the whole of the return day in vacation to file his defence, and hence, a pro confessso cannot be taken against him until the next rule day.

RULE 13. Proof in Support of Pro Confessos. No motion for a pro confessso on a bill will be considered in term time, unless the proof that the subpoena has been served, or the publication has been made, is produced in open Court, and filed with the written motion. The Master will keep on file the newspapers containing the publication, or the printer's affidavit thereof.

RULE 14. Further Time to Make Defence, When. Whenever the complainant fails to take a pro confessso on the first rule day at which a pro confessso may be taken, under these rules, he may take said pro confessso on any subsequent rule day, provided the defendant has not in the meantime filed his plea, demurrer, or answer; and provided, further, that on good cause shown by affidavit, the Master may at rules, or the Chancellor may at Chambers, or in open Court, extend the time to make defence; but if defendant's time is extended by the Master, he shall answer and not plead or demur.

56 In strict law, the defendant would be entitled to have his plea taken for confessed. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 696; but the rule is more consonant with our practice. Selfreid v. People's Bank, 2 Tenn. Ch., 21; Allen v. Allen, 3 Tenn. Ch., 145. See, ante, § 350, note 3.

61 This subsequent rule day may be either the first Monday of a month, or any day of a term.
AMENDMENTS, WHEN AND HOW MADE.

RULE 15. A Bill May be Amended in any particular, without leave, before answer filed or demurrer argued; but if the complainant should thereafter deem it necessary to bring new parties or matters before the Court, he may do so by supplemental bill, as of course, and without leave, at any time within two months after defence made; but after two months, only by leave of the Chancellor or Court.

RULE 16. An Answer May be Amended at any time before the complainant begins taking proof, as of course, in any matter of form, or by filling a blank, correcting a date or name, filing or referring to a document, or in other small matters, on application to the Master.

RULE 17. If a Material Amendment to the Answer is Desired to be made, or any amendment after the complainant has begun taking proof, the defendant must apply to the Chancellor in vacation or in open Court; and if in vacation he must give the complainant or his Solicitor five days’ notice of the application. 61a RULE 18. No Amendment to a Pleading That Causes a Continuance by either party will be allowed, except on the payment of the same costs as would result under these rules from a continuance on application of the party asking to amend.

RULE 19. All Amendments to be Made Within Time Allowed. All amendments to pleadings must be made within the time allowed or they will be considered to have been abandoned. When no time is fixed for making an amendment it shall be made within thirty days after leave given.

THE TAKING OF PROOF, AND TIME ALLOWED THEREFOR. 62

RULE 20. Proof When to be Taken. Each party must take his proof in chief within four months after the filing of the plea or answer, and his rebutting proof within two months. Provided, the Chancellor or Master may extend the time upon sufficient cause shown by affidavit, and upon terms. 63

RULE 21. Proof Defined. Proof in chief is proof that tends to establish the affirmative allegations in the pleadings; rebutting proof is proof that tends to refute those allegations, or assails the evidence or witnesses of the other party. Proof of matters in avoidance is proof in chief. Rebutting proof may be taken at any time within the six months, but proof in chief must be taken within the four months. 64

RULE 22. Writings When to be Filed and Proved. All deeds, transcripts of records, original records, or other written or printed documents, intended to be offered as evidence, on the hearing of a cause, by either party, shall be filed with the Clerk before the cause is heard: if filed during the term at which the cause is heard, notice thereof in writing shall be given the adverse party or his Solicitor, at least one day before the beginning of the hearing. If a party intends to prove any document or exhibit viva voce, at the hearing, he shall give the adverse party, or his Solicitor, at least one day’s notice of such intention. The evidence of witnesses so examined will be reduced to writing by the Master, and filed as evidence in the cause. 65

RULE 23. Exceptions to Answer to Cause no Delay. The filing of exceptions to the answer shall not delay the taking of depositions, or otherwise preparing the cause for hearing. 66

61a See Article on Amended and Supplemental Answers, ante, §§ 434-437.
62 See Article on When Proof must be Filed, ante, §§ 463-468.
63 Ch. Rule, II, § 4; sec, ante, § 1191. The Chancery Rules of 1830, §§ 9; 18, allowed only five months. Cooke, 446; 448. "Three months and no more" are allowed by the U. S. Equity Courts. See their Rules, § 69. In England all proof must be taken "within eight weeks after issue." 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 889. As to when a cause stands for trial, see, ante, §§ 465; 533.
64 As to the time allowed for taking proof, see, ante, § 465.
65 2 Tenn. Ch., 789.
66 Ch. Rule, I, § 6; see, ante, § 1190.
RULE 24. Taking of Proof Not Delayed, When. When a defendant obtains further time to plead or answer, or time to amend a plea or answer, the time thus obtained shall be counted as part of his time for taking proof; and, when such further time is obtained, both parties shall have the right to take proof before the plea or answer is filed, or the amendment made, as to any and all matters contained in the pleadings on file.

RULE 25. If the Complainant Consent to Such Further Time to file or amend a plea or answer, such time shall also be charged to him, and both parties shall be at liberty to take proof as fully as though the plea or answer had been filed, or the amendment made.

RULE 26. Cause Triable, When. A cause may be heard at the first term after the answer is filed, and if not then tried each party has only the remainder of the four and two months in which to take his proof, unless he obtains further time.

RULE 27. No Further Proof Can be Taken After Limit Has Expired. After the four and two months have respectively expired, or such further time as the Court may have allowed, no further proof can be taken by either party without mutual consent in writing, or without leave of the Chancellor or the Master, upon sufficient cause shown by affidavit and upon terms.

RULE 28. Proof Taken After the Lapse of Said Period of four and two months will be suppressed, on exceptions by the adverse party, unless taken or filed as above prescribed.

RULE 29. The Order Granting an Extension of Time to Take Proof should specify the names of the witnesses allowed to be examined, and the time allowed for that purpose; and should, also, specify the terms, these terms in no case to be less than the costs of all proof thereafter filed.

RULE 30. Notice Where Party is Out of the State. When a party is a non-resident, or is out of the State when notice is issued, or cannot be found by an officer authorized to serve notice, in all such cases notice to take depositions, and all other notices, may be served on the Solicitor of such party.

RULE 31. Witness Examined at Court, When. When a party has been unable, after due effort, to take the deposition of a witness, he may have him subpoenaed to appear before the Chancellor on the first day of the term, when leave will be given to take his deposition instanter. But no party shall subpoena more than one witness to the same term under this rule.

RULE 32. Exceptions to Depositions When to be Made and Disposed of. When a deposition is filed twenty or more days before Court, all exceptions thereto shall be made by the opposite party, and disposed of by the Master, on or before the first day of the Court; and when a deposition is filed within twenty days before Court, or is filed during the term, all exceptions thereto shall be made and finally disposed of during said term, and before the case is called for trial. Exceptions and grounds of exceptions not made and disposed of in the time herein specified will be considered as waived, except exceptions to the competency of the witness, or his evidence. If the Master sustains the exceptions he shall, at once, notify the party taking the deposition, or his Solicitor.

RULE 33. Costs on Continuances. The party continuing a cause after he has 69 The fact that the evidence of the other party was filed at the last moment allowed for so doing, is no ground for enlarging the time for taking evidence, if the evidence so filed is confined to matters distinctly put in issue by the pleadings. 1 Dan. Ch. Fr., 800. But where a party closed his proof in chief just before the term began, the Court would consider that fact on a motion for a continuance by the other party, supported by a special affidavit of rebutting evidence.

had five months' time to take proof, will be taxed with the costs of all the proof thereafter filed, unless he show good cause for not being ready.

RULE 34. If He Has Had Six Months' Time to Take Proof, the party con-ing will be taxed with one-half of the costs of the cause not previously adjudged.\(^74\)

RULE 35. If Two Regular Terms Have Elapsed since his time to take proof began to run, the party continuing will be taxed with all the unadjudged costs of the cause.

RULE 36. Costs on a Second Continuance. When costs have once been adjudged against a party on a continuance, no second continuance will be granted him except on payment of all the unadjudged costs of the cause.

RULE 37. Costs in Case of Consent. A party may consent to a continuance by his adversary on his paying costs according to these rules; but when both parties agree to a continuance after six months' time to take proof, without providing for the payment of one-half of the unadjudged costs, each party will be taxed with one-half of all the costs of the cause not previously adjudged.\(^75\)

RULE 38. Continuances After Six Months' Time to Take Proof. No continuance will be granted after six months' time to take proof, except by consent, or on affidavit showing good cause; and not then except on the terms as to costs hereinbefore stated. A party waiving an affidavit for a continuance by his adversary shall be deemed to consent to such a continuance, and costs will accordingly be imposed on both, if six months' time to take proof have elapsed.

RULE 39. Further Time to Plead or Amend How Considered. When the defendant obtains further time to file or amend a plea or answer, the time thus obtained shall, in considering his application for a continuance, be counted as part of his time for taking proof; and if the complainant consent to such further time, it shall also be charged to him.

RULE 40. Injunction and Attachment Suits to be Hurried. All injunction, attachment, or other suits that stay proceedings at law, or stop public improvements, or prevent a party collecting a debt or using property he claims, must be prepared by the complainant for final hearing with extra diligence, especially when he has given no bond to pay damages.

RULE 41. Exceptions to Above Rules. The rules on the subject of continu-ances are not to be so construed as to prevent the Court, on its own motion, or with the assent of both parties, ordering a cause to be continued, to await the adjudication of another cause, or the payment of the debt sued for when it is not disputed, or the incoming of a compromise that has been made or is in progress, or in any other case when justice would be manifestly promoted thereby.\(^76\)

the Court, a decree may be entered as though the Master had reported that the facts were not as alleged by the said party.\textsuperscript{78}

\textbf{RULE 44. Report Without an Order, When.} An account may be taken and a report made by the Master in vacation, without an order of the Court, provided the parties or their solicitors file with the Master a written agreement to that effect, specifying particularly the matters to be reported on; and, also, when the cause is remanded by the appellate Court for that purpose.\textsuperscript{78a}

\textbf{RULE 45. Account on Bill Taken for Confessed.} When a bill praying for an account and report by the Master is taken for confessed in vacation as to all the defendants, he shall at once proceed to hear evidence and make the report prayed for.

\textbf{RULE 46. Proceedings at Taking of an Account.} All parties to an account before the Master shall bring in their respective accounts duly itemized, and in the form of debtor and creditor. When the items in these accounts are based in whole or in part on books, the name and page of the book shall be given when the item was taken.\textsuperscript{79} The books of account shall not constitute any part of the record in the cause without the order of the Court, but may be used by the Master or counsel for the purpose of examining and cross-examining the parties, or their witnesses.\textsuperscript{80}

\textbf{RULE 47. Master May Reconsider His Report, When.} When the exceptions to a Master’s report raise a question of fact, the Master may at once consider them, and if he deem them, or any of them, well taken, he may amend his report accordingly.\textsuperscript{81}

\textbf{RULE 48. Proceedings on a Scire Facias Before the Master.} Upon the death or marriage of a defendant, proof thereof may be made before the Master on a rule day, and a \textit{scire facias} may at once be ordered and issued against the heirs or personal representatives or husband, as the case may be; or a bill of revivor may, at any time, be filed against said heirs, representatives or husband; and, in either event, process shall be made returnable to the next rule day, and the suit revived by the Master, as of course, unless good cause to the contrary be shown on the return of the process. If it shall appear by the return of the Sheriff upon the \textit{scire facias}, or upon the subpoena to answer a bill of revivor, that any defendant named therein is not to be found, or if it be shown by affidavit filed, that any of the causes exist which are specified in the 1st, 2d, 4th and 5th sub-divisions of section 4352 of the Code, as ground for dispensing with personal service of process, as to any defendant to such writ of \textit{scire facias}, or bill of revivor, the Court in term time, or the Master in vacation, may make an order requiring such defendant to appear at a time specified, and show cause why the suit should not be revived against him, a copy of which order shall be published for four successive weeks, as in other cases of publication; and if the defendant in such case fail to show cause, the suit shall be revived against him in the same manner as when personally served with process.\textsuperscript{82}

\textbf{RULE 49. A Guardian ad Litem May be Appointed by the Master at rules, whenever it appears by a sworn bill or by affidavit that a defendant, duly in Court, is a minor without regular guardian. In making such appointment, the Master will be careful to appoint a capable person, and one whose interests and duties are not in conflict with the interests of the minor.}

\textbf{RULE 50. Report by the Master as to Taxes on Lands Sold.} Whenever real estate is sold under a decree of this Court, the Master shall ascertain and report to the Court whether there are any taxes due and unpaid which are a lien upon said real estate; and if so, he will report the amount of such taxes, the years for which due, and the amount due for each year. Said report shall be made to the same term to which the report of said sale shall be made, and shall be attached to said report of sale.

RULE 51. How the Files are to be Kept. The Master will keep all the pleadings, bonds, subpoena to answer and proof in each cause, securely protected by a strong envelope or other suitable cover; and under no circumstances will he allow any of them to be taken out of his office without the written receipt of the Solicitor taking the same.

RULE 52. Injunction Bonds to be Filed, When. Every bill or petition, on which a fiat for an injunction, attachment or other extraordinary process has been granted, shall be filed within five days after the date of such fiat, and the bond, or pauper oath, required by the fiat shall be filed within ten days after the date of such fiat, or the fiat shall become functus officio and void, unless continued by special order of the Chancellor after due notice to the defendant.

PROCEEDINGS AT CHAMBERS.

RULE 53. The Chambers Docket. The Chancellor will keep, at his office in [Knoxville,] a docket for the entering of all motions, appeals or other matters on which his action is invoked in vacation. This docket will be called the "Chambers Docket;" and during his absence83 from his office will be deposited with the Clerk and Master at [Knoxville,]84 who is hereby appointed Chambers Clerk, with authority to appoint a deputy.

RULE 54. Entries in the Chambers Docket, Effect of. In the absence of the Chancellor from his office, any and all motions, appeals, or other matters to be brought before him at Chambers, may be entered, by the party bringing the same, on the Chambers Docket, on the day specified in the notice thereof, if notice shall have been given; and if no notice is necessary, then on any day; and when so entered shall have the same force and effect as though orally made before the Chancellor in person, or by the party in person; and no alias notice of such motion, appeal or other matter shall be necessary.

RULE 55. The Chancellor Will Consider 2nd Act on Such Motion, appeal or other matter, at his earliest convenience after his return to the office, or may continue the hearing thereof, and will notify the parties interested of his action in the premises.

RULE 56. What May be Filed With the Chambers Clerk. Either or both parties may file with the Chambers' Clerk any notice, pleading, affidavit, written motion, brief or other writing to which the attention of the Chancellor is desired, and may enter a memorandum thereof on said Chambers Docket, or have the said Clerk enter the same.

RULE 57. Fees on Motions at Chambers. Each party making a motion or application at Chambers, in a cause pending in another county, will pay to the Chambers Clerk thirty-five cents, and to the Clerk and Master of the county where the cause is pending, thirty-five cents, to pay postage, expressage and registration fees under the Acts of 1903 and 1905.85

MOTIONS, WHEN AND HOW MADE.

RULE 58. No Motion will be Considered by the Court, or by the Chancellor at Chambers, unless reduced to writing in proper form to be entered on the minutes.

RULE 59. Every Motion Must Show on Its Face clearly the grounds on which it is based; and if these grounds do not appear of record they must be made to appear by affidavit, or petition.

83 Absentia ejus qui reipublica causa absit, neque et neque alius damnos esse debet. (The absence of one who is away in the service of the State ought to be prejudicial neither to him nor to others.)

84 This "Chambers Docket" will ordinarily be kept in the Court House of the town where the Chancellor resides.

85 See, ante, §§ 776-783.
RULE 60. No Motions Will be Made or Heard in Court, except on motion mornings, unless both parties be present and consenting.

THE HEARING, AND PRACTICE THEREAT.

RULE 61. Briefs Imperatively Required. Rule X of Chancery Practice in reference to briefs will be rigidly enforced, and must be strictly complied with by both parties in all contested cases, and especially by the party demanding a hearing. The Chancellor reserves the right to continue any cause until proper briefs are presented; and a failure to comply with said Chancery Rule may be treated as a contempt of Court.

RULE 62. All Agreements Must be in Writing. Every agreement between parties or their Solicitors, except agreements made in open Court, must be reduced to writing and duly signed, before brought to the attention of the Chancellor. This rule applies to all agreements in reference to process, pleadings, proceedings in the Master's office or at chambers, evidence, continuances, motions, reports, decrees, sales, compromises and all other matters to be considered by the Chancellor.

RULE 63. Jury Trials. In order to make proper preparations therefor, all jury trials must be demanded in the pleadings, or in open Court, or before the first day of the term after the cause is at issue; and at that term the issues to be submitted must be made up and entered of record; and unless both the demand and the issues are so made and entered of record, a jury trial will be conclusively deemed to be waived.

FORMS OF PLEADINGS AND DECREES.

RULE 64. Prolixity Reprehended. The Code makes it the duty of the Court "to discountenance prolixity and unnecessary and false allegations in all Chancery pleadings." It is, therefore, recommended: 1st, That the "protestation" formula be omitted from the commencement of demurrers, and that their conclusion be: "And the defendant prays the judgment of the Court hereon;" 2d, That the "saving and reservation" clauses be omitted from the commencement of answers, and that answers commence thus: "The defendant for answer to said bill says;" and 3d, That bills of revivor, and amended and supplemental bills omit all recitals of the allegations in the original bill, unless the circumstances of the case specially require such recital.

RULE 65. Bills and Answers to be Paragraphed. It is recommended that every bill be divided into paragraphs consecutively numbered, each paragraph containing a separate fact and its special circumstances; and that the answer be likewise divided into paragraphs numbered consecutively, each paragraph containing as nearly as may be a separate and distinct allegation, admission, or denial.

RULE 66. Bounds of Lands and Debts Must be Specified. Bills to sell, recover, or clear up title to lands, must on their face describe the lands by metes and bounds, or by the adjoining tracts, or by natural objects, so as to identify the lands fully: a reference to exhibits will not suffice. And bills to sell the lands of a decedent to pay his debts must, also, specify the debts sought to be thus paid, to whom owing, on what account, and how evidenced.

RULE 67. General Replication to a Plea. The general replication to a plea shall be: "The complainant joins issue on the plea."

RULE 68. Form of a Pro Confesso. Pro confesso orders shall be drawn substantially as follows:

Here insert the style of the cause.

In this cause, it duly appearing to the Court that [here name the defendants in default] simplify and yet preserve the substance, subserve the ends of justice. Lawson v. State, 3 Ida, 314. See ante, § 157; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 356. See ante, § 378; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 731. See ante, § 350.
have been regularly brought into Court by service of subpoena, [or, by publication,] and have made no defence, but are in default, it is ordered, on motion of the complainants, that, as to said defendants, the bill be taken for confessed, and the cause set for hearing ex parte.

RULE 69. Figures and Blanks Not Allowed in Decrees, When. In drawing decrees, amounts decreed to be paid to or by any party must be expressed in words, except hundredths of a dollar. Decrees for the sale of land must describe the land to be sold, by metes and bounds, if possible; if not, then by adjoining tracts or by natural objects, so as definitely to identify it. A reference to the pleadings or exhibits for a description, will not suffice. Decrees must contain no blank dates, blank amounts, or other material blanks, when presented to the Chancellor, unless the Solicitor presenting the same is seeking instructions in reference to filling such blanks, or otherwise perfecting the decree. All blanks must be filled, in any event, before the decree is handed in to be entered on the minutes.

RULE 70. Consent Decrees Must be Signed. Every order or decree purporting on its face to be by consent must show on its face who are the parties consenting thereto; and must be signed by such parties, or their respective Solicitors; otherwise, it will not be entered by the Clerk and Master, unless on the order of the Chancellor.

RULE 71. Decrees How Written. Each decree shall be written upon no less than half a sheet of legal cap paper, and in ink. 92

MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS.

RULE 72. All Motions for a New Trial must be in writing, and specify the particular grounds relied on. 93

RULE 73. Diligence, Courtesy, Dignity and Good Faith should characterize the conduct of all who minister in the Courts of Justice. "Is ordo vitio careto, ceteris specimen esto."

RULE 74. Rules May be Relaxed, When. When the rigid enforcement of these rules would work manifest injustice, the Chancellor may relax them. 94

PROCEEDINGS FOR THE CORRECTION OF ERRORS.

CHAPTER LXVIII.

NEW TRIALS, AND REHEARINGS.

ARTICLE II. New Trial After Verdict in Chancery.
ARTICLE III. Rehearing in Chancery.

ARTICLE I.

NEW TRIAL AFTER JUDGMENT AT LAW.

§ 1205a. Methods of Correcting Errors. —The remedies for the redress of wrongs, and the vindication of rights are many, and ordinarily adequate to all exigencies.

1. New Trial After a Judgment at Law. If an unjust judgment has been rendered in a Court of law as the result of fraud, accident, surprise, or mistake, without any fault on the part of the losing party, or his attorneys or agents, he will be given a new trial by the Chancery Court.

2. New Trial After a Verdict in Chancery. If there has been a trial by jury, the losing party may have a new trial if any substantial injustice has been done him, or if the verdict be contrary to right and justice.

3. Rehearing in Chancery. If the cause was heard by the Chancellor, and an error committed, or injustice done by reason of some omission, or oversight, a rehearing may be had, if applied for before the term ends, or thirty days elapse.

4. Bill of Review. If the term has ended, or the thirty days elapsed, any party aggrieved by a decree by reason of some error of law on its face, or by reason of newly discovered evidence, may file a bill of review, and have the wrong righted.

5. Writ of Error Coram Nobis. If an error of fact has occurred whereby a party has been wronged in a proceeding of which he had no notice, or in which he was prevented from making defence by disability, or by surprise, accident, mistake, or fraud, without fault on his part, he may have such error corrected by a writ of error coram nobis.

6. Appeal to the Appellate Court. If no one of the foregoing remedies is available, or desired, the injured party may appeal the cause to the Supreme Court, or to the Court of Civil Appeals, and there assign the errors of which he complains.

7. Writ of Error in the Appellate Court. If for any reason an appeal is denied, or is not applied for, or is otherwise not available, the party aggrieved by an error apparent on the record, may take the cause to the Supreme Court, or to the Court of Civil Appeals, by a writ of error.
§ 1206
NEW TRIAL AFTER JUDGMENT AT LAW.

8. Supersedas by Judge of Appellate Court. If during the progress of a suit, and before a final decree, a party is injured by an affirmative act or interlocutory order, from which no appeal will lie or can be had, he may have it superseded by one of the Judges of the proper appellate Court, or by the Court itself.

9. Bill to Impeach a Decree for Fraud. If none of the foregoing remedies are available in consequence of the fraud of the successful party in obtaining the decree, the party injured may file a bill to impeach the decree for fraud. Such a bill having been already fully considered, will not be further noticed.

§ 1206. Suits to Obtain a New Trial After Judgment at Law.—It is one of the oldest maxims of the Court of Chancery that “Equity hath power, upon circumstances, to relieve against penalties, judgments and executions;” and in considering a difficult case the circumstances often move the conscience of the Chancellor when the ordinary rules and principles of adjudication fail. One of the greatest outeries against the Chancery Court of England in its infancy was its action in nullifying and modifying the judgments of the Courts of law. But the Chancellors adhered boldly to their maxim that “Equity would not suffer a right to be without a remedy.”

When, therefore, by the fraud of the plaintiff, or by reason of some accident, surprise or mistake, without any fault on his part, an unjust judgment had been rendered in a Court of law, the defendant was granted relief in Equity. Indeed, relief in such cases was one of the occasions that called the Court of Chancery into existence.

§ 1207. When a New Trial Will be Granted After Judgment at Law.—It is not enough to move a Court of Conscience to action that an unjust judgment has been rendered against the party complaining, but there must be circumstances to show that the judgment was brought about by the fraud of the other party, or was the result of accident, surprise or mistake on the part of the complainant without any fault or negligence on his part. It is a great exercise of power in one Court to set aside the judgments of another Court, especially when the other Court is one of concurrent jurisdiction; besides, it is a maxim of Equity that the welfare of society is promoted by having litigation come to an end.

The Court of Chancery, therefore, will not grant a rehearing of a suit decided in a Court of law, unless: 1st, it be clearly shown that the judgment complained of is unjust and contrary to good conscience; and 2d, that it resulted from the fraud of the other party, or from accident, surprise or mistake unmixed with negligence on the part of the complainant or his agent or attorney.

§ 1208. Frame and Form of Bill to Obtain a New Trial After Judgment at Law.—As already stated, whenever a complainant goes into a Court of Equity asking extraordinary relief he must show extraordinary care in fully disclosing the facts of his case. To set aside the solemn judgment of another Court is a very different matter from a suit upon a note of hand or the enforcement of a lien. Hence, the Court requires the complainant not only to show that the judgment complained of is unjust, but to clearly set forth in his bill the particular facts constituting the alleged fraud of which he complains, or circumstances causing the accident, surprise or mistake, if one of these be his ground for relief. It is not sufficient to charge in general terms that he was prevented from making his defence by the fraud of the defendant, or by accident, surprise or mistake, or to allege in general terms that he used diligence, or was not guilty of negligence.

BILL FOR A NEW TRIAL AFTER JUDGMENT AT LAW.

[For address and caption see, ante, §§ 155; 164.]

Complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That he was on [the day the suit was brought against him in the Circuit Court, giving the date,] the owner in fee of the following tract of land in DeKalb county, [describe it as described in his deed,] and was lawfully in possession thereof.

That on said day the defendant brought an action of ejectment against him in the Circuit Court of DeKalb county, and filed his declaration, to which complainant pleaded "not guilty."

II.

That at the May term thereafter of said Circuit Court while complainant was absent from the Court the defendant insisted on a trial of said suit, and obtained a judgment for said land, and for the costs, on which judgment a writ of possession and an execution for the costs have issued and are now in the hands of the sheriff of said county.

That complainant would not have been absent from said Circuit Court when said ejectment suit was tried had it not been for the assurance of the defendant that the case could not be tried at said May term, the defendant claiming that the criminal business would consume the whole term, and saying that he was going home that day, which was two days before the said ejectment suit was tried, and at his earnest solicitation complainant agreed to go home, and did go accordingly.

V.

That before complainant left said Court, as aforesaid, his life was threatened by some lawless men somewhat intoxicated, and complainant charges that the defendant incited them and treated them on whisky, and then came to complainant and told him of said threats and advised him to go home, and so complainant went, influenced in part by said threats and in part by defendant's assurances that he was going home, and that said ejectment suit would not be tried at that term.

VI.

That before complainant left said Court at said May term his attorney in said ejectment suit was taken very sick and had gone to his home in the city of Nashville. Complainant was wholly ignorant of this fact when he left Court for his own home as aforesaid, but the defendant was fully informed of the fact, and told complainant's said attorney that he, the defendant, was, also, going home and that said ejectment suit would not be tried at that term.

VII.

That complainant has a perfect legal title to said tract of land based on a conveyance connected with a State grant and thirteen years' adverse and exclusive possession thereof under his said deed, whereas the defendant's claim to said land is based on a grant to him made two years ago for five thousand acres, sometimes called "a wildcat" grant, under which he has had no possession, and which if valid as to any one is void as to complainant because no notice was given of his entry on which it is based.

VIII.

Complainant therefore prays:

1st. That subpoena to answer issue [&c., see, ante, §§ 158; 164.]

2nd. That the said judgment in ejectment against him in favor of the defendant be set aside and declared null and void, that the questions in issue in said Circuit Court suit be determined in your Honor's Court, and that said grant in so far as it covers complainant's said tract be declared a cloud on complainant's title.

3rd. That if your Honor prefer not to take jurisdiction to retry said questions in issue that a new trial be granted him in said Circuit Court.

4th. That defendant, his agents, tenants and privies, and the said Sheriff, be enjoined from taking any step under said judgment in ejectment, and especially from in any way enforcing said execution and writ of possession.

5th. That complainant have such other, further and general relief as he may be entitled to.

This is the first application for an injunction in this case.

Charles E. Snodgrass, Solicitor.

[Annex affidavit: see, ante, §§ 161; 789.]

§ 1209. Character of Relief Granted on a New Trial.—The proper procedure under the present jurisprudence of our State, when a bill for a new trial is sustained, is to take full jurisdiction, and determine all questions in issue in the Court below. Under the old practice, a new trial was granted in the Court below. 7

7 In Holcomb v. Canady, 2 Heisk., 610, a bill to enjoin a judgment in an action of ejectment and obtain a new trial, the Supreme Court ordered the judgment below to be set aside, and awarded a new trial in the Court below. But, in this case, the bill prayed for a new trial in the Court below, and the defendant answered without demurring; so the Supreme Court granted the special praver. Besides, this decision was before the Act of 1877.
When Chancery has jurisdiction for one purpose it will take jurisdiction for all purposes, as already shown. The reason Equity Courts have in many cases awarded new trials at law was because their jurisdiction did not include actions at law, and besides they were not provided with juries; but neither of these reasons apply in this State since the Act of 1877, and our Chancery Court has now both the jurisdiction and the equipment to try any action at law, except a few involving unliquidated damages.

DECREES GRANTING A NEW TRIAL.

[For title, commencement and recitals, see, ante, § 567.]

On consideration whereof it is ordered, adjudged and decreed:

1st. That the judgment in ejectment obtained by the defendant against the complainant in the Circuit Court of DeKalb county, on the .... day of ........., 19....., [giving the exact date,] was obtained by fraud and is grossly inequitable and unjust, and the defendant, his solicitors, attorneys, agents and privies, are perpetually enjoined from taking any steps to enforce the same and from setting up any claim thereunder.

2d. That the title to the tract of land sued for in said ejectment suit is in the complainant, and the grant obtained by the defendant from the State on the .... day of ........., 19....., [giving its date,] and numbered 19,847, is void as against complainant's title to said tract of land and is a cloud thereon, and the defendant is perpetually enjoined from setting up any claim thereunder to complainant's said tract.

3d. That the defendant pay all the costs of this cause, for which an execution will issue.

If the Court decides to grant a new trial in the Circuit Court,9 the second paragraph of the above decree will be as follows:

2d. The defendant, his agents, attorneys and privies, are enjoined to consent that the said judgment in said Circuit Court be set aside, and the cause wherein it was rendered be reinstated on the docket and a new trial granted therein, and that said cause then stand in exactly the same plight and condition as though it had been continued by consent on the third day of the term at which said judgment was rendered, and had remained so continued ever since.

ARTICLE II.

NEW TRIALS AFTER VERDICT IN CHANCERY.

§ 1211. Motion for a New Trial. § 1214. Form of a Bill of Exceptions.

§ 1210. New Trials in the Chancery Court.—Where there has been a jury trial in the Chancery Court the losing party, if in any material way unjustly aggrieved by the verdict, may obtain a new trial, if the motion therefor is made in due season, and the grounds properly presented.

§ 1211. Motion for a New Trial.—If any party is dissatisfied with the finding of the jury on the issues of fact submitted to them at the hearing of the cause, he may move the Court to set their verdict aside, and grant him a new trial. This motion may be made on any day during the term of the Court at which the trial is had, unless such term continues longer than thirty days, in which case it must be made and acted on within thirty days after the decree is entered on the minutes, unless within the thirty days the time is extended.1 The proper time for entering a motion for a new trial is before the decree is

8 See, ante, §§ 36; 38.
9 The Chancery Court cannot directly grant a new trial in another Court: all it can do in that regard is to compel the parties to consent to a new trial, which is, at best, an awkward procedure as compared with a decree in Chancery, disposing of the whole matter. Why impose on an innocent complainant the burden of another trial? Equity, says the maxim, prevents a multiplicity of suits and circuity of action. Equity delights to do complete justice and not by halves. See, ante, §§ 36; 38. See notes 3 and 7, supra. Interest republcae ut sit finis litium.
1 Ellis & Gresham v. Ellis, 8 Pick., 471. See, ante, § 576.
pronounced; and if not then entered, the delay must be satisfactorily excused. It often happens, however, that the ground of the motion did not become known until after the decree was entered, in which case an affidavit of the fact would be a sufficient explanation for not making the motion before the entry of the decree.

If a new trial is granted, the cause retains its place on the trial docket, and stands in the same plight and condition as though no trial had been had, and no verdict been rendered; and the losing party is not in any way prejudiced by the verdict. The cause may be remanded to the rules for further proof, on motion of either party as on a continuance. Depositions may be taken in the cause to be read at the next trial, and the depositions on file may be re-read when the cause is again heard. The witnesses, however, must all be re-sumoned, if their testimony is again desired.

If a new trial is refused, the losing party must either submit to the consequent decree, or must tender a bill of exceptions and appeal to the proper appellate Court.

The form of a motion for a new trial, and of the action of the Court thereon, is substantially as follows:

MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL.

John Doe, et al.,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al.
No. 789.

In this cause, the defendant moved the Court to set aside the verdict and findings of the jury on the issues of fact submitted to them, because of the following errors: 1st, [specifying them;] [and in support of his motion read the affidavits of himself, Sam E. Young, George Brown and Henry Price, stating what affidavits or papers were read, although this is not necessary.]

And argument of counsel having been heard, and the premises considered, it is ordered and adjudged by the Court that said motion be [allowed, and the verdict and findings of the jury on the issues of fact submitted to them are set aside, and a new trial is granted, because of error of the Chancellor in charging the jury, or in admitting or excluding evidence, or of misconduct of the jury, or other ground. (It is not necessary to state the ground, but well to do so.) Or,] disallowed and overruled, and a new trial refused. To which order and ruling of the Court the defendant excepted, and tendered his bill of exceptions to said ruling and to former rulings of the Court, which bill is signed by the Chancellor, and made a part of the record of the cause.

§ 1212. Grounds for a New Trial.—The following is a summary of the ordinary grounds upon which a motion for a new trial in Chancery is based:

1. Errors Preliminary to the Trial. The Court may have committed some material error in overruling a motion for a continuance; or in overruling issues of fact presented, or in admitting issues of fact objected to.

2. Errors in Empaneling the Jury. The Court may have admitted an incompetent juror over proper objection, to the prejudice of the objector; or other error may have been committed in selecting or qualifying the jury, to the great prejudice of the losing party.

3. Errors in the Admission of Illegal Evidence. Illegal evidence of a hurtful character may have been admitted over the objection of the losing party, especially evidence likely to prejudice or mislead the jury.

4. Errors in the Exclusion of Legal Evidence. A party is entitled to have all the legal evidence he offers submitted to the jury, and if any such evidence is excluded by the Court, and there is a probability that such evidence may have had some weight with the jury, a new trial will be granted the party injured by such exclusion.

—2The motion for a new trial should not be entered in the presence of the jury, 1st, Because it is discourteous and disrespectful to the jury; and 2d, Motions are not then in order. The motion should be made at the time fixed by the rules of Court for the making of motions. In Criminal Courts it is necessary to enter the motion earlier, in order to entitle the defendant to bail. Code, § 5151a. But Solicitors should not import the manners of the Criminal Courts into the Courts of Chancery. See, ante, § 1183, note 39, and post, § 1269, note 62.

—3Trott v. West, 10 Yerg., 500; Turner v. Ross, 1 Hum., 16; Ferrell v. Aider, 2 Swan, 77; Railway Co. v. Mahoney, 5 Pick., 311. The Court should have a rule requiring applicants for new trials to specify in writing the particular grounds on which their applications are based. Railroad v. Johnson, 6 Cates, 632. In case of such a rule, grounds not specified are deemed waived, and cannot be assigned for error in the Supreme Court. Ibid.
5. Errors in the Charge of the Court. If the Chancellor make any error in his charge to the jury (1) by charging material instructions not law, and liable to mislead; (2) by refusing to charge propositions submitted by the losing side, such propositions being legal, material, pertinent, and not covered by the charge delivered; or (3) by otherwise misdirecting the jury in any matter to the prejudice of the losing party, or refusing to properly direct them as to any matter when such refusal was prejudicial to the party asking a new trial.

6. Misconduct on the Part of the Jury. If the jury has been tampered with, or render a gambling verdict, or hear material evidence from one of their number, or otherwise misconduct themselves, to the detriment of the losing side, a new trial will be granted.

7. Surprise by Unexpected Evidence. If a witness gives material testimony which can be fully rebutted, or if he can be wholly discredited, and the losing party could not well have anticipated such testimony, a new trial will, ordinarily, be granted him.

8. Newly Discovered Evidence. If the losing party discovers material evidence of a controlling character, after the testimony was closed, evidence he could not well have discovered before, and there has been no want of diligence on his part, a new trial will, generally, be given him, to let in such evidence.

9. The Verdict is Contrary to the Weight of the Proof. If the verdict, in the opinion of the Chancellor, is clearly contrary to the weight of the proof, it will be set aside and a new trial granted, on motion of the losing party.

10. Other Grounds for New Trial. If, for any other reason, injustice has been done the losing party, either by some affirmative act of the Chancellor, or the jury, or the opposite party; or if, by the failure of the Court, or the jury, or some member of the jury, to do what the losing party was entitled to have done, he has been denied a fair trial, the Court will, on his motion, on a plain case made out, set the verdict aside and grant him a new trial.

§ 1213. Bill of Exceptions.—When a cause is heard by the Chancellor, the proof is all in writing, except in divorce cases; and, by statute, all the depositions and exhibits that were read on the hearing of the cause constitute a part of the record, as if they were incorporated into the decree. When, however, issues of fact are submitted to a jury, the trial is conducted as in the Circuit Court, and witnesses are examined before the jury. In such a case, if the losing party desires to appeal from the action of the Court refusing him a new trial, he should tender a bill of exceptions, detailing therein the evidence, the exceptions, the rulings of the Court, the charge to the jury, and the requests refused, as well as any other matter of fact either party may desire to incorporate therein pertinent to the application for a new trial, including the affidavits and other evidence introduced in support of the application. If the truth of the case is fairly stated in the bill of exceptions, it is the duty of the Chancellor to sign it, and thereupon it becomes a part of the record of the cause. The bill of exceptions may be signed at any time during the term, in the absence of a rule of the Court requiring it to be tendered within some reasonable period after the trial; but it cannot be signed after the adjournment of the term at which the trial was had; unless the Chancellor, in his discretion, allow further time, not to exceed thirty days after the adjournment; in which case it must be both signed by the Chancellor and filed with the Clerk and Master within the extension; and these facts must affirmatively appear or it will not be considered a part of the record.11

Unless made a part of the record by the Chancellor, as heretofore shown,12 none of the following matters can be properly incorporated in a transcript of a record for review in the appellate Court, unless first made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions, and if copied into the record by the Clerk, without such authority, will be utterly disregarded in the appellate Court:13

1. Evidence Submitted to a Jury. None of the evidence submitted to a jury, not even the depositions, exhibits, deeds and other documents duly filed before the trial, will be regarded in the appellate Court, on the question of a new trial, unless duly made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions.14

2. Oral Testimony in a Divorce Suit, decided by the Chancellor, must be incorporated in a bill of exceptions, if a party wishes to use it in the appellate Court.15

3. Affidavits, and Exhibits Thereto, constitute no part of the record of the cause, and will not be considered by the appellate Court, unless incorporated in a bill of exceptions, or unless made a part of the record by notation of the Chancellor on their face,16 or by a decree so ordering and explicitly identifying them.

4. Papers, Depositions, Documents and Other Writings, Rejected as Evidence during the trial, are thereby banished and outlawed, and cease to constitute a part of the record even if once properly filed, unless made a part of the record anew by being incorporated in a bill of exceptions,17 or unless the action of the Chancellor thereon is verified by his signature as heretofore shown.18

5. The New Matters Presented as Grounds for a New Trial. By new matters is meant matters not a part of the record before the trial began. Every affidavit, or other paper showing any misconduct on the part of the jury or others, affidavits of surprise, of new evidence, or of other matters, and the rulings of the Court thereon, must all be made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions. or they will come to naught, and will not be heeded by the appellate Court even if copied into the transcript of the cause.

6. The Charge of the Court, and the Rulings During the Trial, although reduced to writing and filed in the cause, constitute no part of the record, and will not be looked into by the appellate Court unless duly incorporated into a proper and duly signed bill of exceptions. If either party, and especially the losing party, desires to assign errors upon the charge of the Court, or any of the refusals of the Court to charge propositions or requests, or upon any ruling of the Court in admitting or excluding evidence, or upon any other act of the Court, the Chancellor, the jury, or any other person during the progress of a suit or trial, he must incorporate such matters in a bill of exceptions, and have it signed, before the term closes.19

In brief, nothing constitutes a part of the record for review in the appellate Court except the pleadings, exceptions thereto, process, bonds, reports of the Master, exceptions thereto, the orders and decrees on the minutes, the bill of exceptions, and, if the cause is tried by the Chancellor without a jury, the depositions, the written exceptions thereto, and rulings thereon, and the exhibits, read on the hearing of the cause.

If an original record of the Court is read in another cause, the decree should so show on its face, or it should be so shown in a bill of exceptions, otherwise there will be nothing to show that it was read in the cause. A transcript of a record is duly filed in the cause wherein it is read, but an original record is not filed, and cannot be, in another cause.

If a deposition is not read, the decree, or Chancellor’s notation, should so show; or if a deposition taken by one party is read by the other party, the decree should so show. In short, every fact material to the case, which will not appear in the appellate Court, or will incorrectly appear, must be made to appear, or to correctly appear, by a bill of exceptions, by the notation of the Chancellor, or by proper recitals in the final decree. If questions or answers, or both, contained in a deposition are excluded by the Chancellor at the hearing, on exceptions taken, they are out of the case, unless incorporated in a bill of exceptions, or duly noted and made a part of the record by the authentication of the Chancellor, or by recitals in the decree. And a party will lose the benefit of his exceptions to questions or answers in a deposition, or his exceptions to other evidence, unless he has the decree to recite them, or makes them appear in a bill of exceptions,18 or has them authenticated by the Chancellor, as heretofore shown.19

§ 1214. Form of Bill of Exceptions.—No particular form is essential to a bill of exceptions. Its office is to give a fair statement of the facts it purports to set out. A bill of exceptions may be taken to any action of the Court as to any matter the history of which does not or will not fully appear in the record. If taken at any term but the trial term they are often styled “wayside bills of exceptions.”20 The form of such a bill of exceptions, and of all others, may well be understood by the following illustration:

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

John Doe, et al.,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.

Bill of Exceptions.

On the trial of this case, the following is all the evidence that was submitted to the jury [or to the Court, if there was no jury:]

Evidence in Behalf of the Complainant.

1. The deposition of John Doe, the complainant, was read as follows: [The Clerk will here copy it, in full.] During the reading of said deposition, the defendant objected to direct question 10, and the answer thereto, because they relate to a letter which is not shown to be lost, or mislaid, or out of the complainant’s reach, but the Court overruled said objection, and admitted the question and answer. [So show every other exception made to the evidence contained in the deposition. These exceptions must be explicit: general exceptions go for nothing. If questions or answers were objected to before the commissioner who took the deposition, the objections must be renewed at the hearing, or they will be deemed to have been waived, or abandoned.]

2. The complainant next read the following documents:

(1) Exhibit A to the bill, as follows: [Here copy it, in full.21] This exhibit was proven viva voce in open Court by the testimony of Henry Jones.

20 A wayside bill of exceptions would begin as follows:

WAYSIDE BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

John Doe, et al.,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.

Wayside Bill of Exceptions.

On the hearing of the motion [or petition, or application, or other matter, specifying it so as to identify the question before the Court.] at the August term, 1891, of the Court, the following was all the evidence submitted to, or heard by, the Court:

1. The petition of George Johnson was read, as follows: [Here set it out, in full.] The affidavit of Sam Jones was read, as follows: [Here set it out, in full.]

2. Deed from John Doe to George Jones was read, as follows: [Here insert it, in full.]

3. William Brown testified orally, in open Court, as follows: I am the receiver in this cause [&c., giving his testimony.]

4. Henry Jones testified orally, in open Court, as follows: [Here give his testimony. And so with all the other evidence introduced, or offered to be introduced.]

5. The Chancellor ruled [so end so, giving all of his rulings that do not appear on the minutes of the Court.]

To the action of the Court [in doing, or refusing to do, what is complained of, specifying it, the complainant [or defendant, or petitioner, or other person] excepts, and tenders this, his bill of exceptions, which is signed by the Chancellor, and made a part of the record in the cause.

August 26th, 1891.

A. J. Abernathy, Chancellor.

21 In the hurry usually attendant upon the making out of a bill of exceptions, it is not necessary to actually copy therein the writing offered in evidence, whether grants, deeds, receipts, notes, depositions, transcripts, records, or other documents; but the bill of exceptions must show, by a sufficient description, that they were read, or offered in evidence, and then make them parts of the record by the use of the words: “Here insert,” or “The Clerk will here copy, in full,” or similar words, in parentheses, or brackets. This is a direction to the Clerk to put the paper described into the bill of exceptions when he
(2) Grant 21,846 from the State to John Brown, as follows: [Here copy it, in full.]

(3) Deed from John Brown to the complainant John Doe, as follows: [Here copy it, in full.]

To the reading of this deed, the defendant objected because not properly probated for registration, but the objection was overruled by the Court, and the deed admitted as evidence.

(4) The original record in the case of John Doe, the complainant, vs. Roland Roe, the ancestor of the defendants, in this Court was read in evidence. By consent of all parties, however, it was agreed that only the pleadings and decrees in said cause were material, and it was agreed that they only should be incorporated in this bill of exceptions: they are as follows: [Here copy them, in full, in order of time.]

(5) A part of a letter from defendant Richard Roe to complainant was offered in evidence, but was objected to by said Roe upon the ground that all of the letter was not offered, which objection was sustained by the Court, notwithstanding the complainant testified that the balance of the letter was on other matters in no way connected with the matters in controversy, and for that reason was by him destroyed. Said paper is as follows: [Here copy it.]

(6) Article to show, every other deed, document or paper of any sort, read to the jury, or offered to be read. Show what objections were made to any document, and what the ruling of the Court was thereon. If any document or paper was excluded, so show, and set it out in full, or direct the Clerk to copy it.

3. Henry Jones testified as follows: [Here give the material part of his evidence, and especially state what questions and answers were objected to, and the ground of the objection, and the ruling of the Court on the objections, thus:22] Complainant asked witness the following question: [Here state the question.] The question was objected to by the defendant on the ground that: [Here state the ground of objection.] The objection was sustained, [or overruled,] by the Court, to which ruling of the Court the complainant [or defendant] excepted. [The objection may be to the answer of the witness, and not to the question, or it may be to both: in either event the facts must be clearly set forth. The objection may be to the witness himself, on the ground that he is incompetent to testify at all, or incompetent in the particular case, or as to the particular fact. The first objection would arise when the witness has been convicted of an infamous crime, and judgment of infamy pronounced against him. If such a witness is excluded, it may not be necessary for the bill of exceptions to show what he would have proved, or what was proposed to be proved by him, the objection being not to what he may say, but to the right of the party introducing him to have him say anything. Nevertheless, if the party objecting be satisfied that the complainant proposed to prove him, in order to show the materiality of his evidence, [Where the witness is generally competent, but incompetent in the particular case or matter because a party, and at the same time an administrator, or executor, or a guardian, or a party and a witness against an administrator, executor, or guardian, or a husband or wife of a party, the relationship of the witness should be shown, and the facts offered to be proved by the witness, or the questions asked, should be set out, and the grounds of the objections to the evidence fully stated, and the rulings of the Court, so that the questions of law raised may specifically and distinctly appear.]

4. George Jones testified as follows: [Here set out the substance of his evidence. If any other witnesses were examined by the complainant, or any other documentary evidence introduced by him, set out the testimony or documents as above shown, stating fully and particularly what objections were interposed to the witness, or to his testimony, or to the document, or to its contents, giving the grounds of the objections, and show what were the rulings of the Court on such objections, being careful to put everything in the bill of exceptions in the order of time in which it occurred, so that the bill of exceptions may be a faithful photograph of the facts.]

comes to make it out as a part of the transcript for the appellate Court. But the Clerk cannot copy into the bill of exceptions any matter not in existence when the bill was signed. See note 17a, supra. If there was any objection made to any deposition, paper, writing, or other document, at the time it was offered in evidence, the objection should appear in the bill of exceptions in accordance with the facts, and the ruling of the Court thereon should be given, as in other cases.

22 It is needless to set out the whole testimony of a witness. As a rule, a mere abstract of the material part is all-sufficient. Thus:

1. Henry Jones proved the execution of the following paper. [Here copy the facts as read to the jury.]

2. William Smith proved the existence of Jonadah Snobs.

3. Thomas Brown testified that he was present at the time and place testified to by witness Snobs; was in hearing of the material fact, and heard and knew what such talk as Snobs testified to.

4. James Johnson proved the good character of Thomas Brown, and that he was never a disreputable witness.

5. Jane Johnson testified substantially as did Thomas Brown.

Jane Brown testified that the defendant told her on or about Christmas, 1891, that he [was going to do, or] had done [so and so, briefly stating it.]

It is safe to say that nine-tenths of the average bill of exceptions is mere surplusage. The young lawyer thinks the appellate Judges read the evidence in jury cases. They do not realize that it would take at least a year for each of the Judges to read all the records filed in any one of their three Courts. The Judges, as a rule, pay no attention to the evidence in jury causes, except in so far as is necessary to understand the questions of law raised.

Ordinarily, all the evidence that is necessary in a bill of exceptions is a general statement that there was proof that tended to show certain facts; that such and such evidence was offered and ruled out on objections; and that such and such evidence was objected to but admitted, stating the specific grounds of the objections. This is all the appellate Court cares to know about the evidence. Their business is not to sit as a jury and sift and weigh facts, but to sit as a Court to hear and determine questions of law. Our bills of exceptions in jury cases need reforming. See 4 Pick, 719; Glass v. Bennett, 5 Pick., 485; Dossett v. Miller, 3 Sneed, 75; Huffman v. Hughlett, 12 Lea, 549. And stenographic reports of evidence only make what was bad a great deal worse.
II.

Evidence in Behalf of the Defendant.

1. Richard Roe, one of the defendants, testified as follows: I am one of the defendants. The complainant made and delivered to me this title-bond; [Here copy it, in full.] I paid him four hundred dollars on the day he gave me the bond, and he gave me this receipt for it: [Here copy the receipt.] I took possession of the land in dispute under this title-bond. [And so on, giving tersely the testimony of this witness, and of all other witnesses introduced by the defendants.]

2. The deposition of Thomas Stokes was read as follows: [Here copy it, in full.]

3. The deposition of James Walker was offered in evidence, but the complainant objected to its being read because he had excepted to it, and the Clerk and Master had sustained his exceptions, and there had been no appeal from the ruling of the Clerk. The defendant then asked to be allowed to appeal; but the Court refused the request, and excluded the deposition. Said deposition, exceptions and ruling are as follows: [Here copy the deposition in full, and copy the exceptions and the ruling of the Clerk, or the Chancellor.]

4. Henry Smith was offered as a witness, but he stated, when examined on his voir dire by the complainant, that he did not believe in a future state of rewards and punishments, and on being objected to by the complainant on that ground, the Court ruled that he was incompetent to testify. The witness, also, stated that he believed a man's conscience punished him for his sins, and that he deemed it both a sin and a crime to testify falsely.

5. William Johnson testified as follows: [Here set out his testimony, and, also, the objections to his testimony, if any, and the rulings of the Court on each objection.]

The defendant here closed his proof, and the complainant introduced the following rebutting evidence:

III.

Rebutting Evidence by the Complainant.

1. Henry Doe, one of the complainants, testified as follows: I am one of the complainants, Defendant, Richard Roe, told me he was not able to pay for the land in dispute, and agreed that the rents of the land were worth as much as he had paid on the title-bond. He said he had lost the bond, and agreed to surrender the possession at the end of last year. He gave me a writing to that effect. This writing I forgot to bring to Court with me. On objection by the defendants, all of the evidence of this witness as to the writing, and as to its contents, was ruled out by the Court on the ground that the writing itself was the best evidence of its contents. [And so on, with the testimony, and with the objections and rulings, to the end of the case.]

2. George Wilson and Samuel Carper both testified that they knew the witness, Richard Roe, that they knew his general reputation in the neighborhood where he lived, that such reputation was bad, and that from that reputation he was not entitled to credit on oath in a Court of Justice, and that witnesses would not believe him on his oath. Samuel Carper, on cross-examination, stated that he and Richard Roe were not friends, and that Roe had once sued him, and got a judgment against him, which judgment the witness Carper testified was unjust, and obtained by perjured evidence.

IV.

Rebutting Evidence by the Defendant.

1. The defendants then introduced George Bowers and Andrew Jones, who both testified that they well knew the general reputation of Richard Roe, that it was fair, and that his reputation entitled him to be believed on oath in a Court of Justice, and that they would believe him.

This was all the evidence in the case.22

v.

The Charge of the Court.

The Court charged the jury as follows: [Here copy the charge, in full.]

vi.

Requests for Additional Instructions.

At the conclusion of the charge to the jury, and before the jury retired, the defendants requested the Court to charge the following propositions:

No. 1. [Here copy it.]

No. 2. [Here copy it; and set out all of them in regular order, as numbered.]

Thereupon the Court charged the jury further, as follows: [Here copy the further charge.]

vii.

Motion for a New Trial.

The jury having found in favor of the complainants on the issues of fact submitted to them, the defendant moved the Court for a new trial, and in support of his motion read the following affidavits:

1. Affidavit of Richard Roe, as follows: [Here copy it.]

2. Affidavit of Henry James, as follows: [Here copy it.]

3. Affidavit of Charles Thompson, one of the jurors, as follows: [Here copy it.]

22 The bill of exceptions must show that it contains all the evidence. Ransom v. State, 8 Cates, 366.
VIII. Conclusion.

The Court overruled the defendants' motion for a new trial, and pronounced a decree upon the findings of the jury. To which action of the Court the defendants excepted, and now except; and they also except to the rulings of the Court upon the evidence herein set out, and to the refusal of the Court to charge the jury as requested, and to the charge of the Court to the jury, and to the said decree, and tender this their bill of exceptions to all of said matters, which bill is signed by the Chancellor, and made a part of the record of the cause. August 26, 1891.

There should be an entry on the minutes, showing the fact that the bill of exceptions was duly presented, and signed by the Chancellor, and made a part of the record of the cause.24

ARTICLE III.
REHEARINGS IN CHANCERY.

§ 1215. Rehearings Generally Considered.
§ 1216. Grounds of a Rehearing.
§ 1217. Who May Have a Rehearing.
§ 1218. When and Where Petition Must be Filed.

§ 1215. Rehearings Generally Considered.—In a suit at law, if either party has suffered injustice, because (1) of some error of law committed by the Judge, or (2) some error of fact committed by the jury, or (3) the unexpected introduction of evidence by the adverse side, or (4) because of his inability to produce newly discovered evidence in his own behalf, his remedy is to move for a new trial. So, if there has been a trial by jury in the Chancery Court, and a like injustice has been done, the injured party's remedy is to move the Court for a new trial, as already shown in the preceding Article. But it sometimes happens that some similar injustice is done some of the parties by the decree of the Court when the Chancellor decides the cause without a jury. The method of remedying such a wrong is by a petition for a rehearing.2 If, however, the error is manifest, the Chancellor will ordinarily correct it on motion, if the matter be brought to his attention while his control of the decree continues. Indeed, our Chancellors will often, on motion, re-examine a case where it is made very probable that he has committed some material error of law or fact, to the detriment of the party complaining, without requiring him to file a formal petition for a rehearing. In such a case, however, the motion should be in writing, and should be as specific in its assignment of errors as a petition to rehear.3 If the injustice complained of was done on motion, the proper method of correcting it is by motion.4

A rehearing in any case is not a matter of right, but rests in the sound discretion of the Court;5 nevertheless, as all Courts, and especially Courts of Equity, have been established that justice may be done, the Chancellor will always so exercise that discretion as to rehear a cause when justice requires it.6 The Chancellor may refuse a rehearing, where there is reason to suspect

24 See, ante, § 1211.
1 An application for a rehearing stands upon the footing of an application for a new trial at law. Mays v. Wherry, 3 Tenn. Ch., 222; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 421, note.
2 The Chancellor may, however, require a petition to rehear to be filed; and should require such a petition, unless the opposite side consent to this informal method of rehearing. The appellate Court will not review the action of the Chancellor in case he refuses to rehear a case on motion. Taylor v. Boyd, 6 Heisk., 613; Frazer v. Tubb, 2 Heisk., 669; Galloway v. Dunnington, 10 Lea, 216.

5 A rehearing is usually granted if there be colorable ground for the application. Travis v. Waters, 1 Johns. Ch., (N. Y.), 48. In England, one rehearing appears to be a matter of course. Land v. Wickham, 1 Paige, (N. Y.), 257. A rehearing will, also, be granted, if course, if the decree was pronounced without argument, even though the case be submitted by consent. Blake's Ch., 165.
it is intended for delay, or may impose such terms upon the applicant as may be necessary to preserve the rights of the other party from injury resulting from the delay. 9

A petition for a rehearing suspends all proceedings upon the decree until the petition is disposed of. 7 There should, however, be an entry on the minutes showing the filing of the petition, and suspending the execution of the decree until further orders, as follows:

ORDER STAYING PROCEEDINGS ON PETITION TO REHEAR.

Elijah Robertson, et al., vs. William Macklin, et al.

Petition to Rehear.

The defendants having presented and filed their petition for a rehearing of this cause, on consideration thereof it is ordered by the Court that until said petition is heard and disposed of, all further proceedings in this cause be stayed, including proceedings upon the decree pronounced at the present term.

§ 1216. Grounds of a Rehearing.—The ordinary grounds of a rehearing are: 1. Some material mistake by the Chancellor in a matter of law, to the detriment of the party complaining; 2. Some erroneous deduction drawn by the Chancellor from the evidence, materially injuring the party complaining; 3. The unexpected introduction of material evidence by the adversary which can be fully refuted, or explained away; 4. The unexpected exclusion of material evidence at the hearing; 8 and 5. The discovery of new evidence sufficiently strong to reverse or materially modify the decree, and which could not have been previously discovered by due diligence. 9 This newly discovered evidence must be pertinent to the issues raised by the pleadings: if new facts are discovered constituting a new issue, they may be brought before the Court by a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review. Such a bill can only be filed by leave of the Court; and if such leave is granted, then a petition to rehear should be filed at the same time, and such a petition should be presented along with the supplemental bill. 10

A rehearing will not be granted to let in newly discovered evidence which is merely cumulative; nor to contradict a witness examined by the adverse party; nor where the new evidence sought to be introduced could have been had at the hearing, if reasonable diligence had been used, 11 nor to supply omissions of proof. 12 And not only must the new evidence be material and forcible, 13 and due diligence be shown; but the Court must be satisfied that it exists, and that it can and will be produced if a rehearing is granted. 14

A rehearing should not be applied for when the error complained of is one which may be corrected on motion, as heretofore shown. 15

§ 1217. Who May Have a Rehearing.—Any party to the record, injuriously affected by the decree, may have it reheard, but a stranger to the cause cannot be heard in this way: he must assail the decree by an original bill, making proper parties. The right to a rehearing is not confined to the parties against whom the decree is rendered; if the party obtaining the decree has not been given such a decree as he was entitled to, even if taken upon a pro confeso, he is entitled to have it reheard. 16

The question in relation to newly discovered evidence is not what the petitioner knew, but what with reasonable diligence he might have known. See, Bill of Review, post, § 1238.
10 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 362-365; Sto. Eq. Pt., §§ 421-423. This supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review will be heard at the same time the original cause is reheard; and if a rehearing is allowed, and the supplemental bill permitted to be filed, the order should provide that the party have leave to file the bill, that the cause be reheard, and that the supplemental bill be heard at the same with the rehearing of the original cause. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 365. See Bills in the nature of bills of review, post, § 1231.
14 Scales v. Nichols, 2 Yerg., 140. This case shows that a rehearing may be granted whenever a bill of review will lie, the object of the rehearing being to obviate the necessity of a bill of review; and herein our practice goes one step further than the English practice.
15 Ante, § 573.
16 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 354.
§ 1218. When and Where Petition Must be Filed.—A petition to rehear must be filed in the Court that pronounces the decree complained of, and must be presented to the Court during the term at which the decree complained of is entered upon the minutes, unless such term continues longer than thirty days, and then it must be presented within thirty days after the decree. If the decree is final, and the term at which it was entered has passed, the decree cannot be reconsidered by the same Court, except upon a bill of review. The party injured, in such a case may, however, have the decree reviewed by the proper appellate Court, on a writ of error.

§ 1219. Frame of Petition to Rehear.—The petition being in the nature of a motion for a new trial, must specify the particular matter or cause on which the application for a rehearing is based; and if the facts therein stated do not appear of record in the cause, the petition must be verified by oath or affirmation: it must, also, be signed by counsel.

The petition concludes with a prayer that the cause may be reheard, and that the decree may be reversed, or that it may be altered in such points as are alleged to be erroneous or unjust, and that the petitioner be allowed to bring forward the proof specified in the petition, if any be shown.

§ 1220. Form of Petition to Rehear.—A petition for a rehearing should show: (1) the particular matter and manner wherein the petitioner has been aggrieved by the decree, or other action of the Court; (2) wherein and whereby he is entitled to have the wrong done by him redressed, setting forth specially the supposed errors of the Court, or the new evidence relied on; and (3) should pray that the cause be reheard, and the decree modified, or set aside, according to the case made. The following is a form of

PETITION FOR REHEARING.

Elijah Robertson, et al.,

vs.

William Maclin, et al.

To the Hon. W. S. Beards, holding the said Chancery Court:

Petitioners, the above named defendants, respectfully show to the Court:

I. That they are much aggrieved by so much of the decree rendered in this cause on the 22nd day of the present month, (November,) as adjudged that complainants were entitled to recover 1666 acres of the land conveyed by Joseph Hynds to petitioners’ father, William Maclin, as to which Landon Carter recovered judgment of four hundred dollars damages against Elijah Robertson, deceased. Petitioners are, also, aggrieved by so much of the said decree as onerates them with the costs of the suit.

II. The Court held petitioners liable for said 1666 acres, on the supposition that they were a part of the lands sought to be recovered by complainants in their bill; whereas, petitioners aver the fact to be that said 1666 acres are entirely outside of the bounds of the tracts, to recover which the bill was filed; and neither complainants nor Elijah Robertson, in his life time, ever set up any claim to, or possessed any interest or estate in said 1666 acres, or any part thereof. Said 1666 acres are not only outside of all the grants specified in complainant’s

17 Ch. Rule, XV, § 1; Code, § 3119; Haywood v. Marsh, 6 Yerg., 58; Robertson v. Maclin, 4 Hay., 53; Overton v. Bigelow, 10 Yerg., 48.
19 Allen v. Barksdale, 1 Head., 238; Robertson v. Maclin, 4 Hay., 53. Not even an interlocutory decree can be reheard at a subsequent term. Overton v. Bigelow, 10 Yerg., 48.
20 Ch. Rule, XV, § 1; post, § 1204.
21 Sales v. Nichols, 2 Yerg., 140.

22 Mays v. Wherry, 3 Tenn. Ch., 219. If the witnesses, however, are not in reach, the statement of that fact in the petition would probably be a sufficient excuse for not filing their affidavits.
23 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 356. If new matters are discovered after decree, but at the same term, they must be brought forward by a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 362.
bill, but are a part of an entirely different and older grant, the lands covered by which are many miles from the lands in dispute.

III.

Petitioners were greatly surprised by the production of the said judgment in favor of Landon Carter, not having been notified until the 19th of this month that it would be filed as evidence in this cause; and not suspecting, for a moment, that it would, or could by any possibility, be used as evidence that petitioners' father, William Maclin, held as trustee or otherwise for complainants any of the lands sued for by the complainants.

IV.

Petitioners had no opportunity to show that said 1666 acres were wholly outside of all the grants claimed by complainants; but petitioners aver that such is the fact, and this fact they will be abundantly able to prove if the cause is reheard. Petitioners refer to the affidavit of William Hickman, and to two letters of Elijah Robertson, deceased, herewith filed, and marked respectively exhibits 1, 2, and 3, in support of this petition.

V.

Petitioners therefore pray that your Honor will grant a rehearing of this cause, to the end that said decree may be reversed and set aside, (1) in so far as it divests the title to said 1666 acres out of petitioners and vests it in complainants, and (2) in so far as it adjudges the costs of the suit against petitioners. P. C. Smithson, Solicitor.

[Annex affidavit of the truth of the petition, as in § 789, ante.]

§ 1221. Proceedings When a Rehearing is Granted.—No answer is, ordinarily, required or made to a petition to rehear, but the Chancellor may call on the parties to present briefs on the points raised. If a rehearing is granted because of some error of law, or of some erroneous deduction from the evidence, the cause is usually reheard upon the same record, and at the same term at which the decree was rendered; and in such case so much of the record is read as is necessary to enable the petitioner to show, and the Court to understand, the errors complained of. At the rehearing, the petitioner has the right to open and close the argument, for the burden of showing error rests upon him.

If a rehearing is granted to allow the reading of evidence on file, but by mistake overlooked and not read at the hearing, the case is heard upon the pleadings and the evidence originally read, and upon the evidence overlooked, the latter only being read as a rule, unless the Chancellor directs the former to be re-read. If a rehearing is granted to let in new evidence, the case is heard anew, and the pleadings and evidence are read in the same manner, as upon an original hearing; and the same defences may be set up, the same objections to evidence may be made, and the same claims to relief urged, as upon an original hearing. But in any rehearing no one will be heard to assail the decree except the party who obtains the rehearing: and, if any other party is injured, he must join in the petition, or file a separate petition for a rehearing. Where a rehearing is granted to let in new evidence, the parties should not, as a rule, be allowed to go into further proof generally; but the petitioner should be confined to the proof mentioned in his petition, and the other party should be confined to the proof in rebuttal thereof.

The Court will give the complainant the same right to amend as he would be entitled to on an original hearing.

§ 1222. Orders and Decrees Upon a Rehearing.—On a rehearing, the cause is entirely open as to the party in whose favor the former decree was rendered; but as to the other party it is open only as to the parts of the decree by him complained of. And so upon a petition by a defendant for a rehearing, the Court may give the complainant more extensive relief than was given him by the original decree. The object of a rehearing is, ordinarily, to ascertain whether certain alleged material errors of law or fact exist, and when such allegations are found to be true, the decree on the rehearing is changed accordingly.

25 The petition must be signed by counsel; and must be verified by oath or affirmation unless the facts appear of record. Ch. Rule, XV, § 1; post, § 1204.

ORDER DISMISSING A PETITION TO REHEAR.

John Doe, vs. No. 689.
Richard Roe.

In this cause, the defendant having this day [or, at a former day,] presented a petition to rehear, and the Chancellor having heard argument, and considered the matters raised by the petition, refused a rehearing. It is, therefore, ordered that the petition be dismissed, and that the petitioner pay all the costs thereof.

ORDER GRANTING A REHEARING.

[Follow the above form down, and including, the words “raised by the petition,” then add:] granted the prayer thereof, and ordered that the decree therein complained of, entered in this cause on June 10, 1890, on the 95th and 96th pages of this book, be reheard; and that until such rehearing all proceedings on said decree be suspended and stayed.

DECREE ON THE REHEARING OF A CAUSE.

Elijah Robertson, et al., vs. William Maclin, et al.

This cause, coming on to be reheard this 27th day of August, 1891, before Hon. W. S. Bearden, Chancellor, upon the petition to rehear, and the whole record in the cause, including the proofs filed in support of the petition to rehear, and argument of counsel having been heard, on consideration of all which, it is ordered and adjudged by the Court that the prayer of the petition be granted, and the cause reheard.

And thereupon it is ordered and decreed that the decree pronounced in this cause at the last [or, present] term adjudging that [Here briefly state what was decreed,] be recalled, reversed, and annulled, and that the bill in this cause, be dismissed, and that complainants, and John Johnson, their prosecution surety, pay all the costs of the cause, for which execution is awarded.

1228. Where the Bill Must Be Filed.

§ 1223. Object of a Bill of Review.—It sometimes happens (1) that the Chancellor makes an erroneous legal deduction from the pleadings and the facts as recited in his decree, and that, as a consequence, his decree is erroneous on its face; and it sometimes happens (2) that after the time for taking proof has expired, new evidence comes to light sufficient to have changed the decree had it been before the Chancellor. The only remedy, in Chancery, in such cases is a bill of review, which has for its object the reversal, alteration, or explanation, of the decree, so that it may conform to the law of the case where there is error of law, or may conform to the real facts of the case where there is new proof.

Inasmuch as on a bill of review for error of law apparent, the evidence cannot be looked to, if the evidence when looked to will disclose error not apparent on the face of the decree, the party injured by such error should take the case to the appellate Court by a writ of error, which is far more efficacious than a bill of review. A writ of error opens the whole case, and enables the appellate Court to correct all errors, whether apparent or not, and whether errors of law, or erroneous deductions of fact.

§ 1224. Grounds of a Bill of Review.—The power of a Court of Chancery to review a decree, after the adjournment of the term at which it was pronounced, rests on the first of the Ordinances in Chancery of Lord Bacon; which is as follows: “No decree shall be reversed, altered, or explained, being once under the great seal, but upon bill of review. And no bill of review shall be admitted, except (1) it contain either error in law, appearing in the body of the decree, without further examination of matters of fact, or (2) some new matter, which hath arisen in time after the decree, and (3) not any new proof, untrue if our statutory writ of error in Chancery causes is meant. The distinction should be kept in mind. The writ of error at common law lies only upon matter of law arising upon the face of the proceedings, and not to reverse any error in the determination of facts. 3 Black. Com. 406. Whereas, our statutory writ of error in Equity causes carries up the evidence read at the hearing, and requires the Supreme Court to review and examine the cause, as if brought up by appeal. Code, § 3108; Winchester v. Winchester, 1 Head, 500.
which might have been used, when the decree was made. Nevertheless, upon new proof, that is come to light after the decree was made, and could not possibly have been used at the time when the decree passed, a bill of review may be grounded by the special license of the Court, and not otherwise.13 This Ordinance authorizes a bill of review (1) for error of law; (2) for new matter; and (3) for new proof.4 Any two or more of these grounds may be properly joined in the same bill,5 without making it multifarious.6

§ 1225. What Decrees May be Reviewed.—A bill of review lies only after a final decree. A decree is final in the meaning of the rule when it is such a one as finally adjudicates and disposes of all the merits of the controversy, and reserves and leaves nothing further for the Court to do in the cause; and when the term of the Court at which the decree was pronounced has ended; or when the term has not ended, but thirty or more days have elapsed since the decree was entered on the minutes.7 In short, a decree will be deemed final for the purpose of a bill of review when a writ of error would lie to have it reviewed in the appellate Court.8 But an interlocutory decree may be reviewed by a bill, or a supplemental bill, in the nature of a bill of review, to put in issue material and determinative new matter discovered after the making of such decree 8a

§ 1226. Who May File a Bill of Review.—No persons, except parties and their privies in representation, such as heirs, executors, and administrators, can have a bill of review, strictly so called.9 But other persons in interest, and in privity of title and estate, who are aggrieved by the decree, such as devisees and remainder-men, are entitled to maintain an original bill in the nature of a bill of review, so far as their own interests are concerned.10 Of course, no persons, but persons having an interest, are entitled to maintain a bill of review. And even persons, having an interest in the cause, if not aggrieved by the particular errors assigned in the decree, cannot maintain a bill of review, however injuriously the decree may affect the rights of third persons.11 It may be generally stated that all the parties to the original bill aggrieved by the decree ought to join as complainant in a bill of review, and all the others should be made defendants.12 A person not a party, or not in privity with a party, cannot be affected by the decree, and therefore cannot maintain a bill to impeach it.13

§ 1227. When the Bill Must be Filed.—As to the period within which a bill of review must be filed, the law provides that no bill of review shall be brought, or a motion made therefor, except within three years from the time of pronouncing the decree; saving to infants, married women, persons of unsound mind, or imprisoned, a right to a bill of review within three years after such disability has been removed.14

The bill must show on its face, affirmatively, that it is filed within the time allowed by the statute, and until this is done the complainant has no standing in Court.15 But the parties under disability need not wait until their disability is removed: they may file their bill during disability by next friend.16

a Eaton v. Dickinson, 3 Sneed, 397; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 404. What is meant in the Ordinance by a decree "being under the great seal," is that the decree has been enrolled. In some text books and reports this meaning of the phrase "under the great seal" is substituted therefor. The enrolment of a decree in the meaning of the Ordinance, and an adjournment of the term of the Court at which a decree has been made, are in our practice synonymous terms. Bledsoe v. After one bill of review has been dismissed on demurrer, another bill of review will not be allowed, although error be patent.\textsuperscript{17}

\textbf{\S 1228. Where the Bill Must be Filed.}—A bill of review is a proceeding for reversal applicable to a Court of Chancery only, and can be filed in that Court only.\textsuperscript{18} As such a bill seeks to reverse, alter, or explain, the decree of a Chancery Court, and as one Chancery Court has no revisory jurisdiction over another Chancery Court, it necessarily follows that a bill of review must not only be filed in the Chancery Court, but also in that Chancery Court wherein the decree complained of was pronounced.\textsuperscript{19}

A bill of review, therefore, will not lie in an appellate Court to review one of its own decrees;\textsuperscript{20} nor will it lie in the Chancery Court to review a decree of an appellate Court for error of law apparent on the face of the decree.\textsuperscript{21}

\textbf{\S 1229. Preliminary Relief Obtainable at the Filing.}—On a bill of review being filed, an injunction may be had if prayed for and proper, to stay proceedings under the decree assailed, if still unexecuted,\textsuperscript{22} or to enjoin a transfer of the property alleged to have been wrongfully decreed to a defendant to the bill of review, or when necessary to secure such property it may be attached, or impounded. But no extraordinary preliminary relief should be granted unless a very clear case is made out by the bill, and then only on bond and ample security being given.\textsuperscript{23} If the decree complained of requires the party filing the bill of review to pay any money, or to deliver up any notes, bonds, stocks, or the like, he should be required to pay the money into Court, and to deliver the choses in action to the Clerk, and no injunction should be granted in such cases. Under proper circumstances, a receiver may be appointed, especially where the property is such that it cannot be turned over to the Court.

\textbf{\S 1230. Hearing of a Bill of Review.}—A bill of review for error apparent is heard along with the original pleadings, orders, and decrees; and, if sustained, the decree complained of is reversed, altered, or explained, as Equity may require, and as far as the errors specified in the bill, but no further.

A bill of review for newly discovered evidence is heard on both the pleadings, proofs, and decrees, in the original cause, and the pleadings and new proofs since filed, the two records constituting one for the purpose of reviewing the case on the old and new proof.\textsuperscript{24}

On a bill of review being sustained, whether on error apparent or on new proof, the Court reverses, alters, or explains the decree complained of as to do what is right on the case as it then stands, and, when necessary, will resort to any process, ordinary or extraordinary, to remedy any wrong done the complainant by the decree he complains of.\textsuperscript{25} But these remedies must be confined to those who were parties to the original suit, and to their representatives; and an innocent purchaser, since the original decree, cannot be disturbed by proceedings under a bill of review.\textsuperscript{26}

\textbf{\S 1231. Bills in the Nature of Bills of Review.}—It may happen, however, that the new matter is discovered before the term ends at which the decree

But a voidable decree in an appellate Court may be attacked and annulled. Ibid. See, ante, § 914, sub-sec. 3. Whether a bill of review will lie in the Chancery Court of original Jurisdiction to review a decree of an appellate Court on the ground of newly discovered evidence of a controlling character, the complainant being free from fault and negligence, does not seem to have been expressly adjudicated either in Wallen v. Hitt, or in Hurt v. Long, supra. The question is raised in Madox v. Apperson, 14 Lea, 617, but not decided. Such a bill may be filed in the English Chancery Court after an affirmation of a decree upon an appeal by the House of Lords. 2 Barb. Ch. Pr., 93; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1579; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 418; and such seems to be the general rule, see authorities cited; also, Stafford v. Bryan, 2 Paige, (N. Y.), 45, People's note, Law. Ed. The general language of Hurt v. Long, 6 Pick., 445, would seem to imply, however, that no bill will lie in Chancery to review any decree of an appellate Court, unless fraud has intervened in obtaining the decree, or some new equity has arisen, which would authorize an original bill in the Chancery Court to set aside the decree.

complained of is pronounced, or before the Chancellor's power to change it has terminated, or after an interlocutory decree, such as a decree of reference to the Master. In such a case, the new matter is brought forward by a supplemental bill, or a new bill, in the nature of a bill of review; and it ought to be accompanied by a petition to rehear the original cause, at the same time that it is heard upon the supplemental bill. Such a supplemental bill cannot be filed without the leave of the Court, nor without an affidavit, or petition, similar to that required in the like case of a bill of review. If necessary, a bill of review may also be incorporated into such a supplemental bill. And where a different kind of relief is sought, or a different principle from that on which the original decree is given, there it must be sought by a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review.

It seems to be a general rule, that a supplemental bill for newly discovered matter should be filed as soon after the new matter is discovered, as it reasonably may be. If, therefore, the party proceeds to a decree after the discovery of the facts, upon which the new claim is founded, he will not be permitted afterwards to file a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, founded on those facts; for it was his own laches not to have brought them forward at an earlier stage of the cause.

A supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review, nearly resembles in its frame a bill of review, except that, instead of praying, that the former decree may be reviewed or reversed, it prays, that the cause may be heard with respect to the new matter made the subject of the supplemental bill, at the same time that it is reheard upon the original bill; and that the complainant may have such relief as the nature of the case, made by the supplemental bill, requires.

It should, also, state the circumstances positively, which entitle the party to file it.

ARTICLE II.

BILLS OF REVIEW FOR ERRORS OF LAW.

§ 1232. When a Bill of Review for Errors of Law Will Lie.

§ 1233. What are Errors at Law.

§ 1234. How Errors of Law are Ascertained.

§ 1235. Errors Deducible From the Evidence Not Errors of Law.

§ 1236. Rationale of a Bill of Review for Error of Law.

§ 1232. When a Bill of Review for Errors of Law Will Lie.—In regard to errors of law, apparent upon the face of the decree, the established doctrine is, that you cannot look into the evidence in the case in order to show the decree to be erroneous in its statement of the facts. That is the proper office of an appellate Court, upon an appeal, or writ of error. But, taking the facts to be, as they are stated to be in the pleadings and on the face of the decree, you must show that the Court has erred in point of law. If, therefore, the pleadings and the decree do not contain a statement of the material facts on which the decree proceeds, it is plain that there can be no relief by a bill of review, but only by an appeal to the appellate Court. In England, decrees were for-merely drawn up with a special statement of the material grounds of fact on which the decree was based. In the Courts of Tennessee the decrees are more or less general, and often without any statement of facts. In England, the decree formerly embodied the substance of the bill and answers. In our Courts, the decree usually contains a mere reference to the antecedent proceedings without embodying them. But, for the purpose of examining all errors of law on a bill of review, the original bill, answers, and other proceedings, not including the evidence, are in our practice treated as a part of the decree itself; for it is only by a comparison with the pleadings that the correctness of the decree can be ascertained.2

By error apparent on the face of the decree the antecedent pleadings, is not meant such error as springs out of inadmissible or improper evidence, or erroneous deductions from the evidence, or even utter absence of evidence, but such error of law as necessarily results from the facts assumed in the decree, and alleged in the pleadings.

§ 1233. What are Errors of Law.—The error of law complained of must be a violation of some statute, or of some settled principle or rule of law or Equity, or of the practice of the Court.3 The bill cannot be maintained for clerical errors, or for mistakes in the calculation of interest, or clerical omissions or mistakes apparent from the record and papers in the cause.4 The errors of law which a bill of review may be filed to have corrected are such as are injurious to the party filing the bill, and such as he has the right to complain of, by virtue of his having been a party to the original suit, or of his being a privy of a party, or a party by representation.

On the hearing of a bill of review, no errors of law can be noticed except those specifically pointed out by the bill;5 and even these cannot be noticed unless the complainant shows himself aggrieved by them.6

§ 1234. How Errors of Law are Ascertained.—In our practice the pleadings are considered as incorporated in the decree, for the purposes of a bill of review; and the decree made must be such a decree as, supposing every necessary allegation to be proved, might lawfully be made upon the pleadings. The decree cannot be reversed merely because not sustained by the proof. But, if no proof, which could legally be introduced under the pleadings, could justify such a decree, the decree is erroneous for error apparent upon its face.7 If the decree complained of is not warranted by the pleadings in the cause, there is error apparent on its face. That is to say, if, taking the facts to be true as recited in the pleadings and in the decree, the decree is contrary to law, or not warranted by the allegations of the pleadings, a bill of review for error apparent will lie. So a decree which goes beyond the allegations of the bill, or fails to dispose of matters of Equity raised by the pleadings, is erroneous on its face, and may be reviewed.8

§ 1235. Errors Deducible from the Evidence not Errors of Law.—Upon a bill of review for errors of law the evidence cannot be looked to for any purpose whatever. The pleadings, however, are regarded as recited at length in the decree, and the decree can be compared with the pleadings in order to test its correctness, and to make apparent any error therein. But the evidence is, so to speak, de hors the record, in ascertaining errors of law; and if the evidence be set out in a bill of review for errors of law, a demurrer would lie on that ground, or the evidence might on motion be stricken out,9 or if not challenged would probably be deemed mere surplusage, and utterly ignored. If a party desires to go outside of the pleadings and decree, and have the evidence reviewed, and the Chancellor's conclusions of fact corrected, he must take a writ of error. A party may, however, file a bill of review both for error of law and new proof, and such bill would not be multifarious.

§ 1236. Rationale of a Bill of Review for Error of Law.—A bill of review for error of law apparent is in the nature of a special demurrer to the pleadings and the decree, the bill making profert of them, so to speak, and thereupon, in effect, demurring thereto:

1. Because the particular part of the decree specially complained of in the bill of review is greatly injurious to the complainant, and wholly unwarranted by the premises on which it was founded, these premises being the allegations of the pleadings and the recitals of the decree; or,

2. Because the said premises show that the complainant was entitled to the specific relief set out in his bill of review, whereas no such relief, and no part thereof, was given him in and by the decree complained of.

Therefore it is, that a demurrer to a bill of review for error apparent does but little more than make an issue of law, its ground being "that there are no errors of law in the decree in said bill of review mentioned."

For the foregoing reasons, it is all-important at once to good pleading and to good faith, that a bill of review for error of law should fully and fairly set forth the pleadings and decree complained of, and the specific errors of law relied on to have the decree reversed, altered, or explained. If this be done, the whole matter in issue on the bill of review can be determined on demurrer, and if not done, the defendant may plead the former decree and demur to the opening of the same; or he may make both defences in an answer. On demurrer to the bill, the Court will, on its own motion, if necessary, consider the original pleadings and decrees as though incorporated into the bill of review: this is the proper practice, and enables the defendant to demur even when the bill does not fully and fairly set forth the pleadings and decree sought to be reviewed; and enables the Court, on such a demurrer, to decide whether there be error of law apparent, or not.

ARTICLE III.

BILLS OF REVIEW FOR NEW MATTER, OR NEW PROOF.

§ 1237. Bills of Review for New Matter.—The Ordinance authorizes a bill of review for "some new matter which hath arisen in time after the decree, and not any new proof which might have been used when the decree was made." By "new matter which hath arisen in time after the decree," is not meant matter which has come into existence since the decree, but matter which was in existence but had not come to the knowledge of the party to be benefited by it, and therefore could not have been used when the decree was made. This new matter must be something material to the issues determined by the decree complained of; for, if it be new facts not in issue in the original suit, but come into existence since the decree, such new facts, if grounds for relief, must be brought before the Court by an original bill. Hence, as the new matter resolves itself into new evidence, this ground for a bill of review is resolved into proof discovered after the decree. This ground will be considered along with the ground for proof discovered before the decree, but too late to be used at the hearing, the requisites of such proof being the same in each case.

§ 1238. Bills of Review for New Proof.—A bill of review may be brought upon the discovery of new proof, such, for example, as the discovery of a release, or a receipt, or a deed, or other cogent evidence which would change the merits of the claim upon which the decree was founded. The new matter must not only be relevant and material, but it must be such as, if known, would have produced a different determination. In other words, it must generally be new matter to prove what was before in issue, and not to prove a title not before in issue; not to make a new case, but to establish the old one. In the next place, the new matter must have first come to the knowledge of the party too late to have been used in the cause at the original hearing. Lord Bacon’s Ordinance says, in one part, it must be “after the decree.” But that seems to be corrected by the subsequent words, “and could not possibly have been used at the time when the decree passed,” which words point to the expiration of the time for taking testimony. And, accordingly, it is now the established exposition of the Ordinance, that the new matter shall not have been discovered until after the party’s time for taking proof has expired, and too late to apply to the Chancellor, or Master, for leave to obtain the benefit of the discovery.

The new proof must not be merely cumulative; it should be of so clear and decisive a nature as, unless successfully met, to compel a reversal. If newly discovered witnesses be admitted, it should be done with great caution, because tending to open the door to perjury.

More or less new evidence comes to light on each side after a trial, and if a cause be reheard on mere cumulative evidence, every original hearing would be a mere preliminary skirmish. The new cumulative evidence discovered by each party since the hearing must ordinarily be deemed equiponderant.

In the next place, the matter must not only be new, but it must be such as the party, by the use of reasonable diligence, could not have known; for, if there be any laches or negligence in this respect, that destroys the title to the relief. The rule is well settled that the new matter must not have been discovered until after the time for taking proof had expired; but if the nature of the new evidence is such that the party, or his Solicitor, with proper diligence might have had it at the hearing, no relief will be granted. The inquiry is not what the applicant knew, but what by due diligence he might have known.

§ 1239. As to New Matter Originally Not in Issue.—It has been questioned, whether the discovery of new matter, not in issue in the cause in which a decree has been made, could be the ground of a bill of review; and whether the new matter, on which bills of review must be founded, must not always be new matter to be used as evidence to prove matter in issue, in some manner, in the original bill. A case, indeed, can rarely happen, in which new matter discovered would not be, in some degree, evidence of matter in issue in the origi-inal cause, if the pleadings were properly framed. But the doctrine seems now to be fully established, that matter discovered after a decree has been made, although not capable of being used as evidence of anything which was previously in issue in the case, but constituting an entirely new issue, may yet be the subject of a bill of review, or of a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review. 13

ARTICLE IV.

THE LEAVE TO FILE A BILL OF REVIEW.

§1240. When Leave to File the Bill is Necessary.

§1241. How Leave is to be Obtained.

§1240. When Leave to File the Bill is Necessary.—The practice as respects the filing of a bill of review is the same in Tennessee as it was in England at the beginning of the Revolution; and a bill of review for errors of law may be brought as a matter of right, no leave of the Court being necessary. But a bill of review brought upon the discovery of new evidence is not a matter of right, and cannot be filed without leave of Chancellor: this leave cannot be given in vacation, but must be granted in open Court; 1 and if filed without such leave may be demurred to on that account. 2 But the grant of leave to file does not bind the Court to sustain the bill when filed, and, in a proper case, it may be dismissed on demurrer. 3 If, however, a deficient bill for both error of law and new proof be presented for leave to file, while the Chancellor should allow it to be filed for error apparent, and refuse to allow it to be filed for new proof; yet, if he refuses to allow it to be filed at all, for any purpose, it will not be reversible error, for if the bill is insufficient on both grounds, the appellate Court will not remand it to be filed in order that it might be immediately thereafter dismissed. 4

When a bill of review is grounded on both errors of law and new proof, it may be filed as a bill for error apparent even when the Court refuses to allow it to be filed as a bill grounded on new proof. If such a bill be filed without leave being asked, it may stand on both grounds, unless the adverse party challenge it, in due time and form, as a bill for new proof.

§1241. How Leave is to be Obtained.—The application to file a bill of review, for newly discovered proof, is usually made by petition; 5 but it may also be made by motion, supported by affidavit. 6 The petition should state the nature of the suit, reciting the bill, answer and other pleadings, and the proceedings thereon to final decree, giving the substance thereof with fullness and particularity. The petition should set out the newly discovered evidence in detail, and give the names of the witnesses, if any, and show the circumstances of the discovery of the new evidence, the exact date of such discovery, and the reasons why it was not discovered before. The petition must rebut any presumptions of want of diligence that may arise from the circumstances of the case. It is not sufficient that the petitioner expects to prove certain facts;

If it were an open question, it might with great force be contended that this is the sort of "new matter which hath arisen in time after the decree," referred to by Lord Byron in his Ordinance.
1 Colville v. Colville, 9 Hum., 524; Finley v. Taylor, 8 Bax. 237; Winchester v. Winchester, 1 Head, 640; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 412; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1577.
4 Puryear v. Puryear, 5 Bax., 640.
5 Winchester v. Winchester, 1 Head, 460; Long v. Granberry, 2 Tenn. Ch., 85; ante, § 1231.
he must set out the exact evidence by which he can establish them. He must, also, clearly show the pertinency of this evidence, and its effect upon the decree sought to be reviewed.

Upon the application the Court must be satisfied, not only of the relevancy and materiality of the new matter, but also that it has come to the knowledge of the applicant and his agents, for the first time, since the period at which he could have made use of it in the suit; and that it could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered sooner; and that it is of such a character that, if brought forward in the suit, it would have altered the decree. If the nature of the new evidence is such that the party, or agent attending to the suit in his absence, or his Solicitor, might, with proper diligence, have had it upon the original hearing, no bill of review will be allowed. The material point in such cases is, not what the party knew, but what he, or his agent, or Solicitor, by due diligence might have known. Diligence must be affirmatively shown to entitle a party to file the bill.

But when application for leave to file a bill of review for newly discovered proof is made on behalf of an infant, the rule that reasonable diligence must be shown does not apply, and diligence need not be shown, negligence not being imputable to an infant in such cases.

On application for leave to file a bill of review for new proof, the verifying must be done by the complainant himself, whether the new proof is brought forward by affidavit, petition, or bill. The statements as to the newness of the discovery, the degree of diligence used, and other matters required to be presented under oath, cannot be made by proxy; the complainant himself must make oath to them; or it must be clearly made to appear that another person has had the exclusive control of the complainant’s affairs, in which case the other person may do the verifying. But matters sworn to on information and belief, without any personal knowledge thereof, should not weigh heavily on an application to file a bill of review for new proof.

It is not absolutely required that the new evidence should have come to the knowledge of the party asking leave, since the decree complained of was pronounced. It is sufficient if such evidence be discovered after his time for taking proof had expired, but too late to obtain leave to take it before the trial. In such case, however, the party should ask for a continuance; and if that be refused, should file a petition to rehear; and if he did neither, he should be required to satisfactorily show why. For a party should not be allowed, either to experiment with his case by going willingly to trial without the new proof, or to neglect the remedy by rehearing when it was available.

§ 1242. How the Bill may Serve for a Petition for Leave.—The better practice in obtaining leave to file a bill of review for new proof is by petition under oath; nevertheless, there has grown up in our State a practice of ignoring the petition, and making the bill itself answer all the purposes of a petition. This practice probably arose from the Court sometimes allowing the petition itself to be filed as bill of review, after successfully discharging its function as a petition for leave. A bill thus drawn to answer the double purpose of a petition and pleading must, of course, contain all the essentials of each; and if it does contain these essentials, and is properly verified, the Court having regard to the substance and not to the form, would on motion, allow such a bill to be filed without further requirements. But even when the Court has granted leave to file such a bill, or any other bill of review for new matter, the de-defendant thereto is not in any way precluded from moving to dismiss it, or from demurring to it, or from making any other defence to it.17

§ 1243. When Leave may be Properly Denied.—The leave to file a bill of review for newly discovered evidence is not a matter of right, even when all the ordinary prerequisites have been complied with, but rests in the sound dis-ccretion of the Court. It may, therefore, be refused, although the facts, if admitted, would change the decree, and although good diligence in discovering such facts be shown, where the Court, looking at all the circumstances, shall deem it injurious to innocent parties, or otherwise unadvisable, to allow further litigation.18

And on the hearing of the application for leave, the Court may look to the record in the case sought to be reviewed, and may consider any matter therein that avoids the allegations of the proposed bill of review.19

FRAME AND FORM OF A BILL OF REVIEW.

§ 1244. General Requisites of the Frame. § 1246. What Should be Stated in a Bill of Review for New Proof.

§ 1248. Forms of Bills of Review.

§ 1244. General Requisites of the Frame.—In a bill of this nature, it is necessary to state: 1, the former bill, and the proceedings thereon; 2, the decree, and the point in which the party exhibiting the bill of review conceives himself aggrieved by it; and 3, the specific ground of law, or new proof discovered, upon which he seeks to impeach it. No errors can be noticed except those specified in the bill of review.1 And if the decree is impeached on the ground of new proof, it seems necessary to state in the bill the leave obtained to file it, and the fact of the discovery.

The bill may simply pray that the decree may be reviewed, and altered or reversed, in the point complained of, if it has not been carried into execution.
But if the decree has been carried into execution, the bill should also pray the further decree of the Court, to put the party complaining of the former decree into the situation in which he would have been if that decree had not been executed. If the bill is brought to review the reversal of a former decree, it may pray that the original decree may stand.

If the original suit has become abated, the bill may, also, be at the same time a bill of revivor. And a supplemental bill may likewise be added, if any event has happened which requires it. If any person not a party to the original suit becomes interested in the subject, he must be made a party to the bill of review by supplement. All the parties to the original bill ought to be made § 1245. What a Bill of Review for Error of Law Should Show.—When the bill seeks to review a decree for error of law apparent, it should not only state fully the pleadings and decree, but should either file a transcript of them as an exhibit, and make such transcript a part of the bill itself, so as to be considered on demurrer; or, if it seeks no other relief but a review of errors apparent, it should be filed in the original cause, and make the original pleadings and decree a part thereof, by proper averments and prayers. But if the bill of review also partakes of the character of an original bill, it would not be proper to file it in a cause already in Court. Nevertheless, in whatsoever manner the bill seeks to review a decree for error of law apparent, it should so bring such decree, and the antecedent pleadings, before the Court that, on demurrer, the Court may, by an inspection of such decree and pleadings, finally determine the question whether the errors pointed out in the bill of review exist or not. The practice is, to look into the pleadings and decree in the original case on the hearing of a demurrer to a bill of review for error of law apparent, and the Court would no doubt be justified in so doing even though the bill of review did not properly incorporate them, or make them a part of itself.

Where the bill seeks to review errors of law only, no reference to the former evidence is proper, and any reference to new evidence would be mere surplusage. The bill must be rigorously confined to errors of law, apparent from an inspection of the decree complained of and the antecedent pleadings. Every matter outside of these should be kept outside of the bill.

In drawing a bill of review for error of law apparent on the face of the decree complained of, the draftsman must keep in mind that on such a bill: 1, Nothing can be looked to except the pleadings and decree in the original cause, and the errors therein specifically designated by the bill of review; 2, No part of the evidence whatever in the original cause can be looked to for any purpose whatever; 3, No error in admitting or in excluding evidence, and no erroneous deductions from evidence, and no overlooking of evidence, can be considered; 4, No error of fact to be ascertained by examination of the evidence can be presented or regarded, however glaring such error may be; 5, No new evidence can be brought forward, however strong, for any purpose; and 6, That a bill of review for error of law apparent does not open up the whole case, as does an appeal or writ of error in an appellate Court. The language of the ordinance is plain and inelastic. The error to be complained of, in such a bill, must be "error of law appearing in the body of the decree without further examination of matters of fact." Nevertheless, our Reports show the filing and dismissal of many bills of review for error of law apparent, the draftsman of which relied not on errors apparent, but on errors to be made apparent, forgetful of the inflexible and inexorable rule that on such bills there can be no "further examination of matters of fact." The stumbling-block in drawing such bills

1 2 Barb. Ch. Pr., 97-98; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1580; Str. Eq. Pl., § 420; Fuller v. McFarland, 6 Heisk., 79. In this case the bill was dismissed on demurrer because of the want of a material party. This was a harsh ruling, the ordinary practice in such cases being to allow an amendment to bring in the party omitted. Gray v. Hays, 7 Hum., 588. See also, ante, § 1111.

2 2 Barb. Ch. Pr., 98.

4 Donaldson v. Nealis, 24 Pick., 638. The true question in such a case is, not what name is given to the ruling, but does the bill assert in such a cause for relief. See ante, §§ 43; 269; 431, note 4; 681; 719; 139, note 19.

5 Burton v. Dossor, 1 Heisk., 758; Anderson v. The Bank, 5 Sneed, 661.
6 The original pleadings and decree were examined by the Court, on demurrers to bills of review for error of law apparent, in the following cases: Burson v. Dossor, 1 Heisk., 754; Brown v. Severson, 12 Heisk., 381; Rogers v. Dibrell, 6 Lea, 74; Livingston v. Neel, 1 Lea, 55; Arnold v. Meek, 2 Lea, 308; Durant v. Davis, 10 Heisk., 532; Sanderson v. Gregory, 3 Heisk., 578; as well as in other cases; and in every case it was assumed to be the proper practice so to do. See that it may be safely laid down as a rule of practice that, on demurrer to a bill of review for error of law apparent, the pleadings and decree in the original case may be looked to as though they were a part of the bill of review, for the purposes of ascertaining whether the bill is proof against the demurrer. Hurt v. Long, 6 Pick., 445.
seems to be a failure to discriminate between bills of review for errors of law apparent, and bills of review for new proof recently discovered, coupled with a failure to recognize the fact that bills of review are not intended as a substitute for appeals or writs of error to the proper appellate Court.

§ 1246. What Should be Stated in a Bill of Review for New Proof.—In addition to setting forth the pleadings and decree as heretofore stated, the new proof on which a bill of review is rested must be so stated in the bill, as to enable the Court to determine that the evidence, when produced, will be controlling; and that the complainant has been guilty of no negligence in not discovering and producing it on the former hearing. It is not sufficient for the bill to state that the complainant expects to prove certain facts, but he must state the exact evidence he can produce to establish them.\(^7\) And the bill should be so drawn as to enable the Court to determine these matters upon a demurrer.\(^8\)

§ 1247. Essentials of a Bill of Review.—For convenience in drafting bills of review, and in testing their validity when drawn, the following summary of their essentials is given:

I. Whether Based on Law, or on Facts.
1. The decree sought to be reviewed must be final, and beyond recall or change by the Court pronouncing it.
2. The bill must be filed by a party, or his heirs, executor, administrator, or other privy aggrieved by the decree complained of.
3. The bill must be filed in the Court that rendered the decree complained of, unless the decree was rendered by an appellate Court, and then it must be filed in the Court from which the case was carried to the appellate Court.\(^9\)
4. All the parties to the original decree, and, also, all persons who have subsequently become interested under the decree, must be made parties.
5. The bill must be brought, or motion therefor made, within three years from the date of the decree, or the removal of a disability to sue.

II. If Based on Error of Law, Alone.
1. The error must be specifically pointed out.
2. The error must be manifest when pointed out, and not a doubtful point of law.
3. This error must appear in the body of the decree, the pleadings being considered as a part of the decree, in such a case.
4. No error arising from the evidence, or the illegality or absence of evidence, in the cause sought to be reviewed, can be considered, except in so far as such evidence may appear in the pleadings, or be stated in the decree.

III. If Based on Newly Discovered Facts, Alone.
1. The facts must not be merely cumulative, but of such a cogent nature as to have been decisive, if they had been before the Court at the hearing.
2. These facts must have been discovered too late to have been used at the hearing.
3. There must have been no want of diligence in not previously discovering these facts.
4. These facts must be pertinent to the controversy, and proper to be used on the issues made by the pleadings.
5. Leave to present these facts in a bill of review must be obtained of the Court, by motion supported by affidavit, or by sworn petition, or by presenting the bill itself, so drawn as to include the matter of a petition.
6. The affidavit, petition, or bill should be verified by the party in person, and not by his agent, or Solicitor, unless good reason therefor be shown.

§ 1248. Forms of Bills of Review.—As already stated, a bill of review must recite the filing of the former bill, its object, the proceedings thereon, the decree, the point in which the complainant considers himself aggrieved by it, and the ground of law or fact upon which he seeks to impeach it; and must pray that the decree may be reviewed and reversed, and the desired relief granted. The following is a form of a BILL OF REVIEW FOR ERRORS AT LAW.

To the Hon. Thos. M. McConnell, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Chattanooga:

Richard Roe, executor of David Doe, deceased, and Charles Jones, by Henry Jones, his next friend, both residents of Hamilton county, complainants,

vs.

Rachel Doe, a resident of the same county, defendant.

Complainants respectfully show to the Court:

I.

That on the 10th day of January, 1890, the defendant, Rachel Doe, filed her original bill in this Court against them, alleging that she was the widow of David Doe, complainant Roe's testator, that her husband died without leaving any lineal descendants, that she was his widow, that he devised all his personal estate to the complainant, Charles Jones, that she had, in due time and form, dissented from his will, and claiming that by reason of the premises she was entitled to all of the said personal estate remaining after the debts of the testator were paid, and praying to have the same decreed to her.

Complainants answered said bill admitting all the material facts thereof except that she was the widow of the said David Doe. And thereupon proof having been taken, the cause was heard at the last term of this Court, and a decree pronounced, adjudging that the now defendant, Rachel Doe, was the widow of David Doe, deceased, and entitled to all of his personal estate remaining after the payment of his debts, and of the expenses of executing his will; and a reference was made to the Master to take the necessary account, which reference is now pending. All of which matters will more fully appear by reference to the record in said cause, which reference is here made.

Complainants show further to your Honor, that they are aggrieved by said decree, and ought not to be bound thereby, and that said decree is erroneous, and ought to be reviewed and reversed and set aside, for the reason that the effect of the dissent of the defendant as widow did not entitle her to all the said residue of said personal estate, but to only one-third thereof, and that the complainant, Charles Jones, is entitled to the other two-thirds, and the same should have been decreed to him, instead of to her. And for this error in said decree, apparent on the face thereof, complainants bring this their bill of review to be relieved in the premises.

The premises considered, complainants pray:

1st. That proper process issue to compel the defendant, Rachel Doe, to answer this bill [but her oath to her answer is waived.]

2d. That said decree may be reviewed, reversed and set aside to the extent of the error hereinbefore complained of; and for the following errors therein:

3d. That complainants may have such other, further, and general relief as they may be entitled to at the hearing.

BILL OF REVIEW FOR NEW MATTER.

[A bill of review for new matter is substantially of the same form as a bill of review for errors of law. Supposing, in the foregoing form, that proof had recently been discovered that Rachel Doe had been duly divorced by her husband, in the State of Pennsylvania, where they lived until David Doe moved to Tennessee, the third paragraph of the foregoing form would be so modified from the words “reversed and set aside” as to read:]

1st. The effect of the dissent of the defendant as widow did not entitle her to all, the residue of said personal estate, but only to one-third thereof, and that the complainant, Charles Jones, is entitled to the other two-thirds, and the same should have been decreed to him instead of to her, which error is apparent on the face of said decree.

2d. Since said decree, and within the last thirty days, complainants have discovered the facts to be that the defendant, Rachel Doe, was not the lawful wife of the testator, David Doe; but that they had been lawfully divorced in the State of Pennsylvania, shortly before the said David Doe removed to this State; that said David sickened and died soon after coming here, and complainants knew nothing of his marital relation, and knew nothing of 10 If there be more errors than one, the phraseology should be: For the following errors therein appearing on its face:

11 If the bill assails the entire decree, this allegation should be: No decree ought to have been pronounced in favor of the then complainant, and her said bill ought to have been dismissed.

12 If the errors complained of entitle the complainants to have the whole decree reversed, this prayer should be: 2d. That said decree may be reversed, reversed, and set aside, and no further proceedings be had thereon, and that said bill be dismissed.
his family and kindred. Complainant Charles Jones is a minor of tender years, incapable of conducting a lawsuit, and has no relatives or acquaintances in Pennsylvania, they and he having always lived in Tennessee. The defendant, Rachel Doe, produced certified evidence of her marriage to the said testator, and complainants were thereby deceived and lured into acquiescence in her claims of widowhood. Complainants file the transcript of the record of said divorce, which shows the defendant to be an artful, treacherous, and adulterous woman, and make it an exhibit to this bill, and mark it "Exhibit A," and will read it at the hearing. (The Clerk, however, will not copy it in making a copy of this bill for the defendant.) The defendant hurried her case to a hearing at the first term, which came only twenty-seven days after the bill was filed, and complainants charge that her purpose in delaying the filing of the bill, and in hastening the hearing, was to prevent complainants from making investigation into her said claim. Complainants did not know these new facts when said decree was pronounced, and could not by reasonable diligence have known them previous to said decree: this is especially true of complainant, Charles, by reason of his tender age and the foregoing facts. And these new matters complainants are advised, and charge, entitle them to have said decree wholly reversed, and set aside, and said bill dismissed.

IV. Therefore, complainants come into your Honor's Court, and the premises considered, pray:

1st. That proper process issue to compel the defendant, Rachel Doe, to answer the bill, but her oath to her answer is waived.

2d. That said decree may be reviewed, reversed and set aside, and the said bill by the defendant filed against complainants may be dismissed.

3d. That complainants may have such other, further, and general relief as they may be entitled to at the hearing.

[Annex affidavit and jurat. See § 789, ante.]

ARTICLE VI.

DEFENCES TO A BILL OF REVIEW.

§ 1249. Defences to a Bill of Review for Error of Law.

§ 1251. Demurrers to Bills of Review.

§ 1249. Defences to a Bill of Review for Error of Law.—If a bill of review for error of law fairly state the pleadings and the decree complained of, a demurrer is the proper defence. In our practice, it is usual not only to state fully the pleadings and decree, but also to make them exhibits to the bill of review for greater certainty; and to pray that they may be taken and treated as a part of the bill, for all the purposes thereof. When this is done, a demurrer will be decisive of the case: if the issue be in favor of the demurrant, the bill will be dismissed; and, if in favor of the complainant, the prayer of the bill will be allowed, and the decree complained of will be reviewed, and reversed, altered or explained, in the matters specially complained of, as justice may require.

2. Anderson v. Bank, 5 Sneed, 661. In this case, the Supreme Court say: "The bill is defective in not exhibiting the record which it proposes to review, for the inspection of the Court. It will not do to call upon the other side to produce it; the complainant has the means of getting it a part of his case." If true, the bill in this case was filed in the Chancery Court at Tazewell to review a decree of the Chancery Court at Rogersville; and it is, also, true that the syllabus seems to confuse the rule as to exhibiting the record, to such a case. The rule, however, is a good one in all cases; and the Court does not confuse the rule to the exceptional case, as does the Reporter. In Burson v. Dosser, 1 Heisk., 758, Judge McFarland says: "The action of the Court upon a demurrer to a bill of review, for errors apparent on the face of the record, necessarily disposes of the whole case. Whether or not the error appears, must be determined from the bill and the original record, and cannot be changed by an answer to the bill of review, or proof." This is certainly the legal view of the matter. And in Hurt v. Long, 6 Pick., 445, it is laid down that, under our practice, upon a demurrer against opening the decree, the original decree, and the pleadings in the case in which it was pronounced, are before the Court for inspection to determine whether the alleged errors exist or not. Durant v. Davis, 10 Heisk., 522. An examination of the reported cases will show that nearly all the bills of review for error of law apparent have been finally determined on demurrer; and that, on the hearing of the demurrer, the pleadings and decree in the original cause were considered by the Court. Such is the correct practice. Saunders v. Gregory, 3 Heisk., 578; Hurt v. Long, 6 Pick., 445. The contrary rule was laid down in L. & M. R. R. Co. v. Rainey, 7 Cold., 431.
§ 1250. Bills of Review. 996

But if the bill of review fails to set forth the pleadings and decree fully and fairly, the defendant may plead the original pleadings, and decree in bar of the bill of review, and demur to the relief sought by the bill on the ground that there is no error of law in the decree. Or the defendant may make both of these defences by answer under our statute and set out therein such parts of the decree as the complainant has omitted or mistated, or may exhibit to the answer a certified copy of the pleadings and decrees; or may make the original record an exhibit. The defendant may also set up in his answer any matter of defence that would avail as a plea, such as: 1, that the decree complained of was made by consent; or 2, that the matters contained in said decree have been adjusted since the decree, on valuable considerations; or 3, that complainant has in some other way debarred or stopped himself from having the decree re-opened; or 4, any other matter proper for a plea in bar, such as the defence of innocent purchaser.

A bill of review for error of law may be filed as a matter of right, and no leave therefore is necessary; and when error of law and discovery of new proof are joined in the same bill, the bill may be dismissed in so far as it sets up new proof, for want of leave to file it; but such dismissal will not take it out of Court as to the error of law apparent. A demurrer to the whole bill will, also, be overruled if the bill can, on its face, be sustained either for error of law, or for new matter, and yet not for both. The demurrer must be confined to so much of the bill as is demurrable, or such demurrer will be overruled.

§ 1250. Defences to a Bill of Review for New Proof.—A bill of review on the discovery of new proof should state the newly discovered evidence and its pertinency with such particularity and fullness, and should set forth the time and manner of its discovery, and the circumstance of diligence connected therewith, with such definiteness, as clearly to show the complainant’s right to have the decree complained of reviewed as prayed. If he fails so to do in his bill, a demurrer will lie to it for want of these essentials: for our practice requires that in such bills, the complainant should make such a full and specific statement of the various grounds on which his bill is based, that their sufficiency may be fully tested by demurrer.

If the bill be proof against a demurrer, the defendant may answer and traverse the allegation that the evidence offered is newly discovered; and may set up in avoidance of such new matter any defence that would have availed if such new matter had been charged in the original bill. The defendant may also show that the decree was made by consent, or plead a release, compromise, or any matter in estoppel, or any other matter in bar, as shown in the preceding section.

If the bill of review be both for error of law and for new proof, and be maintainable on one of these grounds, only, a demurrer to the whole bill would be too broad, and would for that reason be overruled. The demurrer should be specifically confined to so much of the bill as it will destroy, and the balance of the bill should be otherwise answered unto.

If a bill of review for new proof be filed without leave given in open Court, it may, on motion, be taken from the files, and if demurred to for want of such leave, the Court may treat the demurrer as equivalent to a motion to dismiss for want of leave.\textsuperscript{16} But a demurrer to a bill of review on other grounds is a waiver of the objection that the bill was filed without leave.\textsuperscript{17}

§ 1251. Demurrers to Bills of Review.—Such demurrers have already been considered;\textsuperscript{18} and it is only necessary to say that where the error alleged is one of law apparent upon the decree, the practice now is, in Tennessee, to test the validity of the bill by demurrer;\textsuperscript{19} and, on the argument of the demurrer, to consider the pleadings in the original suit, and the decree complained of, as though they were incorporated in full in the bill of review.\textsuperscript{20} Indeed, a bill of review for error apparent is but little more than a demurrer itself, the errors alleged being in the nature of grounds of demurrer, and the pleadings and decree in the original suit being in the nature of a bill, or a declaration.\textsuperscript{21}

On the hearing of a demurrer to a bill of review for error apparent, the evidence cannot be looked into or considered for any purpose whatsoever, no matter what manifest error or injustice in the decree may appear by an examination of the evidence. If the party wishes the evidence reviewed, he must take the case to the proper appellate Court.

A demurrer will lie to a bill of review for error apparent:
1. If there be no material error apparent on the face of the pleadings and the decree.
2. If there be no such error which aggrieves the complainant, and of which he has the right to complain.
3. If the bill be filed before the Court has lost control of the decree complained of; or
4. If the bill be filed after the period limited by statute for the filing of such bills, and its allegations do not bring the complainant within any statutory exceptions to the limitation.\textsuperscript{22}

§ 1252. Form of a Demurrer to a Bill of Review.—The following form contains various grounds of demurrer, all of which perhaps never will appear in any one bill, but some one or more of them may exist in any case.

DEMURRERS TO A BILL OF REVIEW.\textsuperscript{23}

[Give the usual caption and commencement of a demurrer as in § 310, ante.]

I.
That there is no such material error of law in the decree complained of as complainant in his bill alleges; but on the other hand the decree is correct in the particular set out in the bill as a ground of review.

That the error complained of, if it exists as complainant avers, is not an error that aggrieves him, nor is he injured thereby, nor is it one of which he has the right to complain.

That the newly discovered evidence, if true and proved, would not warrant the Court in reviewing the decree in the particulars complained of, said evidence not having the probative force requisite in such a case.

That admitting the newly discovered evidence would warrant the Court in reviewing the decree as prayed, nevertheless the bill does not affirmatively show that measure of diligence on the part of the complainant either in making the discovery, or in the bringing of the suit after the discovery, requisite in such a case.

That the bill shows on its face that it was not brought within three years from the time of pronouncing the decree complained of, and the allegations of the bill do not show that complainant has been laboring under any statutory disability.

\textsuperscript{23} On the hearing of a demurrer to a bill of review for error of law, the original decree and the original pleadings may be looked into, in order to ascertain whether there be any such error or errors in the decree as the complainant, in his bill of review, alleges. The whole question, whether there be errors of law, will be determined on a demurrer, and no plea or answer is necessary. Hurt v. Long, 6 Pick., 445; Burson v. Doss, 1 Heisk., 758.
§ 1253. Form of a Demurrer and Plea to a Bill of Review.—If the bill of review for error of law fails to fully set forth the pleadings and decree in the original cause, the defendant may set them up by a plea, and demur to the relief on the ground that there is no error of law in the decree.

DEMURRER AND PLEA TO A BILL OF REVIEW.

John Doe, vs. Richard Roe.

No. 987.—In Chancery, at Knoxville.

The demurrer and plea of the defendant to the bill of review filed against him in this cause.

The defendant for demurrer to so much of the bill as prays to have the original decree opened and reviewed for error of law, says that there is no such error of law in said decree as the complainant supposes, and that said decree contains no error of law of which the complainant can complain, and that said decree contains no error.

The defendant, not waiving his said demurrer, but relying thereon, for plea to so much of the said bill as undertakes to set forth the [pleadings and] decree in the original cause, says that the said bill does not truly set forth said [pleadings and] decree; therefore the defendant pleads said [pleadings and] decree, which are in the words and figures following: [Here set out the (bill, answer and) decree in the original cause, in full.]

And the defendant demands the judgment of the Court whether he shall be compelled to make any other or further answer to said bill of review.

V. A. Huffaker, Solicitor.

24 If the bill sets forth the pleadings correctly it will be necessary to plead the decree only. As to this method of defence by demurrer and plea, see Hurt v. Long, 6 Pick., 445.
CHAPTER LXX.

WRITS OF ERROR CORAM NOBIS IN THE CHANCERY COURT.

§ 1254. Office of a Writ of Error Coram Nobis.—A writ of error coram nobis is equivalent to an original bill in the nature of a bill of review;¹ and its office is to enable a Court to correct its own judgment or decree when, while just on its face, it is nevertheless unjust in fact, because of a matter of fact not before the Court when the judgment or decree was rendered, which matter the party injured was prevented from bringing before the Court, because he had no notice of the writ, or was under disability, or was prevented by surprise, accident, mistake or fraud, without fault on his part.² It is called a writ of error coram nobis because the record sought to be corrected by the writ remains, and is to remain "before us," that is, in the Court issuing the writ.³ The writ does not lie to enable the petitioner to obtain the benefit of newly discovered evidence,⁴ or to controvert any fact already adjudicated upon issues made up, or to dispute the probative force of the evidence upon which the adjudication was based, or to show an error of law upon the face of the record. And in a Court of law the writ does not lie to contradict or dispute any return of an officer,⁵ or any fact recited in the judgment, or otherwise appearing affirmatively in the record. But in the Chancery Court the rule is different, and if the record recites any jurisdictional fact which is false, or if the officer’s return show service of subpoena on the petitioner, when in fact there has been no service, or if the record show an appearance by counsel, when in fact petitioner had no counsel, and made no appearance, upon a petition for a writ of error coram nobis in the Chancery Court, the record as to these matters may be contradicted and shown to be false by parol proof, as on a bill to impeach a decree for fraud.⁶

The grounds of this remedy are errors of fact, and not errors of law;⁷ and these errors of fact must be matters which do not appear on the face of the record. Errors of fact which do appear of record cannot be corrected by this method of procedure; they must be corrected by a motion for a new trial, or a rehearing, or a bill of review, in the same Court; or by appeal, or writ of error, in the proper appellate Court.⁸

§ 1255. When a Writ of Error Coram Nobis Will Lie.—This writ is intended for the correction of decrees erroneous in fact, where the party ag-

² Code, §§ 3110; 3116. The decisions of the Supreme Court in cases at law, and especially in cases prior to the Code, are not to be followed in Chancery, without diligently discriminating between (1) the practice at law and the practice in Equity, and (2) between the law in reference to this writ before the Code and the law in the Code. The Code, § 3116, adds a new and most extensive ground of jurisdiction in cases of writs of error coram nobis, to wit: surprise, accident, mistake, or fraud, without fault on the petitioner’s part. Tibbs v. Anderson, 1 Thomp. Cases, 268. This new ground is almost co-extensive with the remedy in Equity in such cases, and was, no doubt, intended to be so exercised.

⁶ Leftwick v. Hamilton, 9 Heisk., 310. The opinion of the Court, in this case, by Turney, afterwards Chief Justice, shows how a Court of Equity can disenfranchise itself from the entanglements of technicalities in cases where a Court of law would be so enmeshed by its own rules to be powerless to do justice.
⁸ Patterson v. Arnold, 4 Cold., 368; Brandon v. Diggs, 1 Heisk., 476.
grieved by the error was in no fault, but was prevented from making his defence by reason of some one or more of the following facts:

1. Want of Notice of the Suit in which the decree complained of was rendered, coupled with a good defence on the merits. Thus, if a decree is rendered, on motion, against a person as surety on some bond executed in a cause in the Court, or a summary judgment is rendered on motion against a person as co-surety or principal, or as a sheriff, clerk, or deputy of either, or as Solicitor, or as otherwise liable to judgment on motion, such person may have such decree or judgment set aside by this proceeding: 1, if he had no notice of the judgment, and 2, if he had a real defence to the motion. A real defence means a defence on the merits, such as (1) non est factum, (2) payment, (3) statute of limitations, (4) former judgment, (5) novation, and the like.

2. Some Disability not appearing of record, such as infancy, coverture, or unsoundness of mind. Thus, if the person against whom the decree was rendered was, at its rendition, an infant, or married woman, or person of unsound mind, this fact not appearing of record, such person is entitled to this remedy to have the decree set aside.

3. Some Surprise, Accident, Mistake or Fraud, which prevented the person aggrieved from making defence, he himself being without fault. In such a case, the petitioner must show: 1, a real defence on the merits; 2, the specific facts constituting the surprise, accident, mistake or fraud; and 3, the absence of fault on his part, or on the part of his agents. 1. A judgment after a continuance would be a surprise. 2. High water making the road to the Court impassable, or sudden and great sickness preventing the petitioner from either attending Court, or employing an agent, or Solicitor, would constitute an accident. 3. Where a non-resident defendant supposed on sufficient grounds that he had employed an attorney to make defence, and the attorney happened to be one of the plaintiff's attorneys, the defendant being ignorant thereof, and as a consequence judgment by default and final judgment were rendered against him, this was held to be a case of mistake.

4. Where the defendant's Solicitor drew his answer denying the equities of the bill, and a deposition was taken by consent disproving the bill, and both answer and deposition were delivered to the complainant's Solicitor on his promise to file them both.
with the Clerk and Master, instead of which he filed neither, but took an order pro confesso, and then a final decree, just as the term was about to close, in the absence of the defendant's Solicitor, and without his knowledge or consent, this would be a case of fraud. 18

§ 1256. When and How the Writ is Obtained.—The writ of error coram nobis is obtained by a sworn petition therefor, presented to the Chancellor of the Court 17 making the decree, at his Chambers, or in open Court. The petition must be presented, allowed to be filed, and filed within one year from the rendition of the decree complained of. 18 No notice of the presentation of the petition need be given the adverse party. If, on reading and considering the petition, the Chancellor should be of opinion that a case for the writ is made out, he will endorse upon the petition his

FIAT FOR A WRIT OF ERROR CORAM NOBIS.

To the Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court at [place of Court making the decree complained of:]

Upon a prosecution bond being given, file this petition, and let it operate as a writ of error coram nobis, returnable to the first day of the next term. Notify the opposite party, or his Solicitor, of the filing of this petition; and the suing out of the said writ: [Upon the petitioners giving a special bond therefor, as prescribed by the statute, issue a supersedeas to stay all further proceedings upon the decree and execution complained of. 19] At Chambers, August 8, 1891.

B. M. WEBB, Chancellor.

The petitioner, having obtained this fiat, gives the bond required, and thereupon the Clerk and Master files the bond and the petition. No writ of error coram nobis in fact issues, the fiat of the Chancellor being in the nature of such a writ, and so operating, upon the prosecution bond being given and the petition filed. 20 The notice of the suing out of the writ must be served on the opposite party, or his Solicitor, at least ten days prior to the term of the Court to which the writ of error coram nobis is returnable. 21 This notice is usually issued by the Clerk and served by an officer; 22 but it would seem it may be given by the petitioner after the manner of giving notice of the taking of a deposition, or notice of a summary proceeding by motion. 23

§ 1257. Frame of the Petition.—A petition for a writ of error coram nobis should be addressed to the Chancellor of the Court making the decree complained of, and should set forth fully and particularly the following:

1. The general facts of the existence and nature of the suit, the names of the parties, and the character and date of the decree complained of.

2. Such an error of fact, meritorious in its nature, as would have prevented the decree, at least, to the extent complained of, if the fact had duly appeared at the hearing.

3. That the petitioner was prevented from showing this fact because (1) he had no notice of the suit, 24 or (2) was under the disability of infancy, coverture, or insanity; or (3) he was the victim of surprise, accident, mistake or fraud, without fault on his part.

18 TUCKER v. JAMES, 12 Heisk., 333.
17 In Elliott v. McNairy, 1 Bax., 342, the question is raised, but not decided, whether the writ can be granted by any other Judge or Chancellor. It would seem from a consideration of the various sections of the Code pertinent to the question, that the doubt should be resolved in favor of the power of any Judge or Chancellor to grant the writ, if it be in the nature of extraordinary process. Code, §§ 3915; 3946; 4434; CHADWELL, EX PARTE, 7 Heisk., 630.
16 Code, § 3111. Obtaining a fiat on the petition within the year in which the suit was commenced, if the petition itself be not filed and bond given within the year. Elliott v. McNairy, 1 Bax., 342; CAIN v. COCKE, 1 Tenn., 288. If the Clerk should file the petition and fiat within the year, and, by leave of the Clerk, bond be given before the next term, this would probably save the petitioner's right, as on bond being given it would relate to the filing of the petition and not vice versa, unless the fiat required the bond to be first given.

22 Code, § 3115, shows that process may issue, or publication be made, as to the defendant.
23 CRAWFORD v. WILLIAMS, 1 Swan. 341; and cases there cited.
24 If the officer's return show service of the writ on the petitioner, the return may be controverted, as in CHANCERY, LEFTWICK v. HAMILTON, 9 Heisk., 318. The rule in the Circuit Court is otherwise, because, at law, parol evidence cannot be heard to contradict a record. State v. DISNEY, 5 Sneed, 598; ante, § 914, notes.
4. And praying for a writ of error coram nobis, for proper process to notify the opposite party, and, if necessary, for a supersedeas.

This petition, after being duly verified, may be presented to the Chancellor at Chambers, or in open Court; and he may, on granting the writ of error, also order it to operate as a supersedeas. A petition for a writ of error coram nobis in the Chancery Court must: (1) inject into the case a fact that does not therein appear, but which, if it had appeared, would have either prevented the decree, or would have made it reversible on appeal; or (2) it must deny some fact appearing in the record which, if it had not appeared, would have prevented the decree, or would have made it reversible on appeal; and (3) the petition must, in either of these two cases, go further, and show that the petitioner was prevented from proving the new fact alleged in his petition, or from disproving the fact denied, by reason of want of notice, or some disability, or some surprise, accident, mistake, or fraud without fault on his part. And on alleging and proving the existence of one of these reasons for not making his defence, the decree will be recalled and annulled; and the petitioner allowed to make the defence set up in his petition.

§ 1258. Form of a Petition for a Writ of Error Coram Nobis.—The petition for a writ of error coram nobis, and, indeed, the proceedings on such a petition are very analogous to a bill for a new trial, or a bill to avoid a decree, and the proceedings thereon. Indeed, it would seem that one of the purposes of this remedy was to enable a party to obtain, in a less formal way, that redress ordinarily obtained by original bill in such cases. The following is a general form of a petition for the writ.

To the Hon. [name of] Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at [town where the decree was made]:

A B, a resident of Davidson county, petitioner, vs.

C D, a resident of the same county, defendant.

Your petitioner, [name of person aggrieved] respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That on [date] a decree was pronounced against him in your Honor's Court in the case of C D, vs. A B, No. 4168, in favor of said C D for [number of] dollars. Petitioner is much aggrieved by said decree by reason of a material error of fact therein. Said decree was based upon [Here show, in full, the ground on which the decree was based, stating explicitly whether it was on a note, bond, or other evidence, of debt, and whether it was rendered against him as surety, or on some other ground. If an execution has issued on the decree, state the fact.]

Your petitioner further shows that [Here set forth the petitioner's defence to said decree, to-wit, non est factum, failure of consideration, payment, former judgment, statute of limitations, novation, or other defence on the merits.]

II. Your petitioner would have made said defence to said decree, but [Here show: 1, that he had no notice of said decree, or of any proceeding, or intention to proceed, against him in said cause; or 2, that he was prevented by some disability, specifying it, from showing or correcting such error; or 3, that he was prevented from making said defence by surprise, accident, mistake, or fraud, giving the particulars thereof in detail, and showing that there was no fault or negligence on his part, or on the part of his agent, or Solicitor.]

IV. Your petitioner is advised that had the foregoing facts appeared at the hearing of said motion, [or, cause,] no decree would have been pronounced against him, and that by reason of said error of fact occurring in said proceeding, and said want of notice [disability, surprise, accident, mistake, or fraud, as the case may be,] he is entitled to a writ of error coram nobis, 25 Code, § 3111.
26 Code, § 3111.
27 The efficiency of this writ, and its scope, have been greatly enlarged by our statutes. Patterson v. Arnold, 4 Cold., 367; Jones v. Pearce, 12 Heisk., 296; Tibbs v. Anderson, 1 Thomp. Cases, 268. And, in a Court of Chancery, a petition for the writ will lie to attack the record itself, and will, in such a case, be given all the force of a bill to avoid or impeach a decree. Leftwick v. Hamilton, 9 Heisk., 310.
28 The better practice in Chancery is to give the petition a caption of its own, as though it were an original bill. The Code designates the petitioner as the plaintiff in error, and the other party as defendant. Code, §§ 3114-3115. See, also, Hicks v. Haywood, 4 Heisk., 598; and Leftwick v. Hamilton, 9 Heisk., 310. In the Circuit Court the petition is usually, but not always, entitled as of the original cause. The petition, however, being a new suit, should be entitled as such, especially in Chancery. See, Elliott v. McNairy, 1 Bax., 345. A bill of review bears its own title.
to the end that said decree may, for said error of fact, be reversed and annulled; and he, therefore, prays:

1st. That your Honor, by proper fiat, will order this petition to be filed, and that notice thereof be issued and served on the said, \[naming the adverse party,\] requiring him to make defence at the next term of this Court; and that your Honor’s said fiat operate as a writ of error coram nobis.

2d. That a writ of supersedeas be, also, ordered to be issued to stay all further proceedings on said decree, [and said execution,] until further order of your Honor.

3d. That at the hearing hereof, said decree be recalled, reversed and annulled;

4th. And that your petitioner may have all such other writs as may be necessary on a petition for a writ of error coram nobis, and that he may have all such other, further, and general relief as he may be entitled to by reason of the premises in a Court of Equity.

X Y, Solicitor.

\[Annex affidavit and jurat, as in § 789, ante.\]

The following is another and more specific form\(^2\) of a

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF ERROR CORAM NOBIS:

To the Hon. W. F. Cooper, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Nashville:

Pauline Wilber, a resident of Davidson county, petitioner, \[vs.\] Lizzie Norris, a resident of the same county, defendant.

Your petitioner, Pauline Wilber, a resident of Davidson county, respectfully shows to your Honor:

I. That on the 10th of April, 1871, a decree was pronounced against her, in the cause of Lizzie Norris \(vs.\) Pauline Wilber, No. 6842, in your Honor’s Court, in favor of said Lizzie Norris, for the sum of two hundred dollars, and the costs of the cause. Petitioner is much aggrieved by said decree, by reason of a material error of fact therein. Said decree was based upon a bill taken \(pro confesso\), and an alleged account for said sum, the account consisting of items of goods, wares and merchandise, alleged to have been sold to petitioner by the complainant in said cause. Petitioner denies that she, in law or equity, was ever liable for said account, or for any part thereof. Petitioner is a married woman, living with her husband, George Wilber, in the city of Nashville, and such of said items as were ever received by petitioner, were for the family of which her husband is the head.

II. Petitioner further shows that she never, at any time, promised to pay for any of said items; and that many of them were never received, or used by her. She shows and avers that her husband has a good defence to the whole of said account, by reason of a cross account, or set-off, against the same, for work and labor done, and materials furnished for the complainant.

III. Petitioner further shows to your Honor that she would have made said defence to said decree, but was prevented from so doing by reason of the fact that she had no notice of the proceedings in said cause, until the Sheriff came today with an execution to enforce said decree; and that the return of the officer showing service of subpoena upon her is utterly false, as she will be able abundantly to show, if given the opportunity. And petitioner further shows that she was at the time said suit was brought, and has ever since been under the disability of coverture, being a married woman, the wife of George Wilber, as before stated, and would thereby have been prevented from making said defence, had notice of said proceedings been given her.

IV. Petitioner is advised that had the foregoing facts appeared at the hearing of said cause, no decree would have been pronounced against her; and that by reason of her said defence on the merits not appearing in the proceedings, and because of said disability, and said want of notice, she is entitled to a writ of error coram nobis, to have said decree recalled, reversed and annulled, and she therefore prays:

1st. That your Honor will, by proper fiat, order notice hereof to be served on said Lizzie Norris, who lives at No. 983, Summer Street, Nashville, requiring her to make defence at the next term; and that your Honor’s said fiat shall stand and operate as a writ of error coram nobis.

2d. That a writ of supersedeas be ordered to be issued to stay all further proceedings on said decree, and on said execution, or else that a restraining order be made to the same end and effect.

3d. That at the hearing hereof said decree be recalled, reversed and annulled.

4th. And that your petitioner may have all such writs as may be necessary on a petition for a writ of error coram nobis; and may have all such other, further, and general relief, as she may be entitled to in a Court of Equity, by reason of the premises.

\(^2\) This form is based upon the cases of Norris \(vs.\) Wilber, 1 Bax., 365; and Leftwick \(vs.\) Hamilton, 9 Heisk., 310.
§ 1259. WRITS OF ERROR CORAM NOBIS.

And if a next friend for the petitioner be deemed necessary by your Honor, Frank Heart hereby joins in this petition in that character and capacity; and he in his own proper person avers on information and belief, that the foregoing facts are each and all true as hereinabove alleged, and he adopts this petition as next friend of said Pauline Wilber. 80

County of Davidson.}

Personally came Pauline Wilber and Frank Heart81 and severally made oath that the statements made in their foregoing petition as of their own knowledge are true, and those made as on information and belief they believe to be true.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this July 5, 1876.

John Jones, D. C. & M.}

§ 1259. Proceedings Upon the Petition.—The opposite party, or his Solicitor, will be personally served with notice of the filing of the petition if either of them is a resident; if the opposite party be a non-resident, and have no known Solicitor in the State, the Court, Chancellor, or Master, upon affidavit of these facts, may order him to be notified by publication, as in other non-resident cases. The notice must be served ten days prior to the term specified in the notice, or the cause cannot be heard at that term without the consent of the party entitled to notice.82

The petition must contain the two following requisites: First, it must show some error of fact which if it had appeared at the hearing would have been a good defence, and would have prevented the decree complained of; and second, it must show that the petitioner was prevented from making said defence because (1) of want of notice, or (2) because of some disability, or (3) because of some surprise, accident, mistake or fraud, without fault on his part. If the petition fail to show either of said two requisites, or if showing them it is not filed within one year since the decree, it may be dismissed on motion.83

The petition, however, may be amended on good cause shown, by affidavit, the new facts to be sworn to on the personal knowledge of petitioner, or of some other person acquainted with the facts.84

MOTION TO DISMISS THE PETITION.

John Bell, vs.
Henry Dunn. No. 682.

The defendant, Henry Dunn, moved the Court to dismiss the petition for a writ of error coram nobis.

1st. Because said petition was not filed within one year from the rendition of the decree complained of.

2d. Because the petition does not disclose a meritorious defence, the facts therein set up not being such as would have prevented the decree complained of had they judicially appeared at the hearing.

3d. Because the petition does not set up any sufficient reason for not making defence to said decree.

And said motion having been argued by both the parties the Court is pleased to allow the same, [or, to disallow the same.] It is therefore adjudged that said petition be dismissed, that the decree complained of be affirmed, and that the petitioner, Henry Dunn, and Frank Hill, his prosecution surety, pay all the costs incident to said petition, for which execution is awarded. [If a supersededas issued render judgment on the bond therefor against the sureties, for the amount of the decree superseded, statutory interest thereon, and costs of the suit.85]

80 Being a married woman, it might be urged that she must appear by next friend, and in Lettwick v. Hamilton, 9 Heisk., 310, that practice was followed. It is believed, however, that the Court would entertain her petition without a next friend. The complaint having sued her without a next friend, she should be estopped to deny her a hearing should she make her defence without a next friend.

81 In Lettwick v. Hamilton, 9 Heisk., 311, it was expressly decided that the next friend was the proper person to swear to the petition. In Smith v. Republic L. Ins. Co., 1 Tenn. Ch., 631, it was expressly decided that the oath of the next friend amounts to nothing, and that the married woman must swear to her bill. Therefore, to be safe, let both swear to the petition. See, ante, § 785, note 4. An affidavit to the petition by an "agent" is a nullity. Reid v. Hoffman, 6 Heisk., 440.

82 Code, §§ 3113; 3115.

83 Gellana v. Sudheimer, 9 Heisk., 189. This motion may be made at any term or time before issue is joined upon the errors assigned. Elliott v. McNair, 1 Bax., 342.

84 Baxter v. Grandstaff, 5 Tenn. Ch., 244.

85 In all cases of affirmance of the judgment, or dismissal of the writ for any cause, where the original judgment has been superseded, judgment shall be rendered against the plaintiff in error and his sureties for the amount of the former judgment, with interest at the rate of twelve and one-half per cent. per annum from the rendition thereof, and all costs. Code, § 3114.
If no motion to dismiss is made, the Court may direct petitioner to assign errors according to the practice in the Circuit Court, or according to the rules prescribed for that purpose. This assignment must follow, and be strictly confined to, the errors specified in the petition. The following assignment is based on the preceding petition:

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

Pauline Wilber,

vs.

Lizzie Norris.

The petitioner, Pauline Wilber, assigns the following errors of fact in the decree complained of, and avers that they are true:
1. She was a married woman at the rendition of said decree, she being then the lawful wife of George Wilber.
2. She had no notice of the proceedings in the cause wherein said decree was made.
3. She did not owe the account on which said decree was based, or any part thereof.

W. M. ROBERTSON, Solicitor.

If the grounds alleged in the assignment for not making defence be insufficient, the opposite party may demur to them; but as the questions raised by such a demurrer have ordinarily been previously raised by a motion to dismiss the petition, demurrers seldom lie. If no ground of demurrer exists, the defendant must plead to the assignment, if he dispute its truth. The following is a form of a

PLEA TO THE ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS:

Pauline Wilber,

vs.

Lizzie Norris.

The defendant, Lizzie Norris, for plea to the assignment of errors in this case, says that there is no error in the record, as in said assignment alleged.

R. H. McEWEN, Solicitor.

§ 1260. Proper Practice in Chancery Upon a Petition.—A proceeding by writ of error coram nobis is a proceeding according to the forms of the common law; and nearly all of the cases in our Reports are cases at law. When the Chancery Court was given jurisdiction in such cases by the Code of 1858, it could not have been contemplated that the common law forms of pleading should be used by this Court. It has been adjudicated it was not so contemplated by the Act of 1877 increasing the jurisdiction of this Court. Nevertheless, when suits of this character began to be brought in Chancery, under the Code of 1858, Solicitors, without considering the difference between the forms of procedure in the two Courts, and unduly influenced by the History of a Lawsuit, adopted the practice and pleading in use in the law Courts. Not until the case of Leftwick v. Hamilton, was the attention of Solicitors and Chancellors called to the difference of procedure when such a suit is instituted in Chancery. In that case the petition is dealt with as a bill to avoid a decree. This is the solution of all the many perplexities, inconsistencies, and incongruities exhibited in the reported cases in Chancery. Chancery cherishes forms no further than they contribute to the main object of its existence — the attainment of substantial justice.

The proper practice in Chancery in these suits is to regard the petition as in 88 Elliott v. McNairy, 1 Bax., 342; Gallena v. Sudheimer, 9 Heisk., 190.

38 Gallena v. Sudheimer, 9 Heisk., 189.
39 If the assignment should be submitted to a jury, it might be necessary to frame issues of fact, as follows:
1st. Was Pauline Wilber a married woman at the time the decree complained of was made?
2d. Did she have notice of the proceedings in which said decree was made?
3d. Did she, at the time of said decree, owe the account on which said decree was based? or, any part of said amount? if any part, how much in amount?
40 Chan., 97; Jackson v. Nimmo, 3 Lea, 597.
41 9 Heisk., 310. Chancellor Cooper, afterwards one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, calls attention to the irregularity of this proceeding when instituted in Chancery. Bolling v. Anderson, 1 Tenn. Ch., 331.
42 In Bolling v. Anderson, 1 Tenn. Ch., 127, both Solicitor and Chancellor seemed groping in darkness. See also, Colbert v. Ham., 2 Tenn. Ch., 356. In Hleft's Manual of Ch. Pr., §§ 333-334, the novelty and confusion of transferring the practice and pleading at law to the Chancery Court is alluded to, and the road of escape suggested.
43 Birdsong v. Birdsong, 2 Head, 301. See ante, §§ 1252; 269; 431; 681; 719.
the nature of a bill to impeach, avoid, or review, a decree on some one or more of the grounds specified in the statute authorizing this writ. On such a petition being filed, subpœna to answer it should be issued, or publication made when necessary, and the defendant to the petition should make to it the same defences, and make them at the same time and in the same manner as bills are defended against, to-wit: by motion to dismiss, demurrer, plea in bar or answer; and upon such defence the Court should make such order or decree as is proper in law and Equity according to the course of procedure in the Chancery Court.

If the case is not tried at the first term, the defendant may, on a sworn answer, denying the facts alleged in the petition, move the Court to discharge the supersedeas. If the motion be allowed the defendant must give a refunding bond with good security to perform the decree, in case the suit should be eventually decided in favor of the petitioner.

§ 1261. Hearing and Decree.—The parties would be entitled to the same time for taking their proof as upon an original bill. When the case is prepared for a hearing, either party may demand a jury as in other suits, and in such an event the issues of fact will be made up as usual under the direction of the Court.

At the hearing, if the reason assigned for not making defence to the decree complained of be not satisfactorily proved, the petition will be dismissed; or if such reason be proved, but the defence on the merits be not proved, the petition will be dismissed. In all cases where the original decree has been superseded, if the petition is dismissed, or if the original decree is affirmed on any ground, a decree must be rendered against the petitioner and his sureties on the supersedeas bond for the amount of the original decree, with interest thereon at the rate of twelve and one-half per cent. from the rendition thereof, and all costs.

The Code, contemplating, probably, the difference of practice and pleading in the two Courts, has provided that the Court may prescribe rules for the assignment of errors, for making issues thereon, and for all such other matters as are necessary to give full effect to this proceeding. Code, §3115; Hicks v. Haywood, 4 Heisk., 598, sustains the text. In this case, the proceeding was by petition, after execution had issued on the decree complaining of. The petition was answered and on the issue thus made proof was taken. It is true, the petition was dismissed, but it was dismissed on the merits, Chief Justice Nicholson, in delivering the opinion of the Court, treated the petition as a petition for a writ of error coram nobis, although the petition itself did not so pray, but did pray for a supersedeas. The case was heard on the merits, the practice by bill and answer was clearly recognized, and if the merits had been opposed with the petitioner, he would have been granted relief.

If, on the other hand, the petitioner makes out his case substantially as set forth in his petition, the original decree will be recalled, reversed and annulled; and the costs thereof adjudged against the complainant in that decree.\textsuperscript{53} The costs incident to the petition may be adjudged as the Chancellor, in his discretion, may deem equitable.

The petitioner may succeed in opening the decree, and yet he may, in Chancery, be adjudged liable to the original complainant in a sum less than the amount of the original decree. In such a case, the original decree will be modified accordingly; but only simple interest upon it will be allowed, and the costs of the original cause may be divided, if deemed equitable. As he who seeks equity must do equity, the Chancellor may, while granting relief to the petitioner, require him to submit to such a decree in favor of the original complainant as may be equitable. And in general, when the original decree is once opened, the Court may pronounce such a decree upon the whole record as may be required by the rules and principles of Courts of Equity.

CHAPTER LXXI.

APPEALS IN THE CHANCERY COURT.

§ 1262. Office and Effect of an Appeal.—The object of an appeal is to enable a party dissatisfied with the Chancellor's rulings, orders, and final decree, to have the cause reheard and redetermined by an appellate Court, upon all the matters of law and fact appearing in the record; and where an appeal has been prayed, granted, and perfected, and the term ended, or the thirty days elapsed, the cause is thereupon transferred from the Chancery to the appellate Court, and the jurisdiction of the Chancellor ended. But at all times during the term, if within thirty days after its entry, the decree is under the control of the Court; and may, during that period, be modified, or even vacated; or the order granting an appeal may, during the same period, be vacated, or modified. So, during that period, a final decree and a prayer and a grant of an appeal therefrom may all be set aside, and an interlocutory order made in the cause, and thereafter the final decree, prayer, and appeal be re-entered.

The office of an appeal is to transfer the adjudication of the cause to the appellate Court, to the end that the appellant may have a re-examination in that Court of the whole matter of law and of fact appearing in the record.

An appeal absolutely devitalizes a decree as an adjudication, and confers full jurisdiction on the appellate Court to deal with the cause as though no decree had ever been pronounced. Nevertheless, the inanimate decree is in the record, and may, by order of the appellate Court, or the consent of both parties, or the act or neglect of the appellant, be revitalized, in whole or in part.
If a party is dissatisfied with only a part of the decree, he may appeal from such part only, expressly limiting his appeal to such part. Often a suit is divisible in its nature, or may contemplate different objects, or seek relief against different defendants, and the complainant may obtain part of the relief he seeks, or may obtain a recovery against some of the defendants. In such a case he may appeal from so much only of the decree as denies him the remainder of the relief he sought. And so, if a defendant be dissatisfied with a part only of a decree, he may confine his appeal to such part.

§ 1263. Who May Appeal.—Any one or more of the parties to an appealable judgment or decree of the Chancery Court may pray and obtain an appeal. Indeed, all parties, both complainant and defendant, may, and often do, appeal from a Chancery decree. And what is meant by parties is not only all persons who appear as complainants and defendants on the face of the bill, or the cross bill, including guardians ad litem and next friends of minors, but also, all quasi parties. Quasi parties include: 1. persons who file petitions or claims in a cause; 2. persons who purchase property at a Master’s or commissioner’s sale; 3. persons who become the sureties of purchasers; 4. persons who become record assignees of such purchasers; 5. persons held liable on garnishment proceeding; 6. persons who set up claims to the property in litigation by intervening in the suit; 7. persons against whom judgment is rendered for whatsoever cause; and 8. persons who sought to become parties, or sought an adjudication which was denied.

§ 1263a. To What Court the Appeal Must be Taken.—Appeals from the Chancery Court lie to either the Supreme Court, or to the Court of Civil Appeals. If the case involves an amount, exclusive of costs, exceeding one thousand dollars, or involves the constitutionality of a statute of the State, or a contested election for office, or the State revenue, or is an ejectment suit, the appeal must be taken to the Supreme Court; but appeals from the Chancery Court in all other cases must be taken to the Court of Civil Appeals, as hereinafter shown.

§ 1264. When and How an Appeal is Obtained.—An appeal must be prayed during the term at which the decree complained of was entered on the minutes, and if more than thirty days elapsed after the decree is rendered, and before the term ends, an appeal must be prayed within thirty days after the decree. And not only must an appeal be prayed within the period stated, but it must be perfected within that period; unless the Court within that period grants appeal, and thus the costs of the appeal be greatly reduced.

Rules, § 29; 1 Pick., 757; Denton v. Woods, 2 Pick., 37; Wood v. Frazier, 2 Pick., 500; 5 Pick., 774-775; 6. The very fact that the Supreme Court rules require errors to be assigned conclusively shows that the decree appealed from has such latent efficacy that, unless affirmatively shown to be erroneous, it will be affirmed. If the decree be vacated, "nullified," and "made void," by an appeal, the burden in the appellate Court would rest upon the complainant; whereas, if the appeal in the Court of Chancery be taken by the appellant, Wood v. Frazier, 2 Pick., 500. See, also, Smith v. St. Louis M. L. Ins. Co., 3 Tenn. Ch., 509; 7. Under the present practice an appeal only challenges the correctness of the decree, and if the appellant fail to make good his challenge the decree stands. In the appellate Court, it is the appeal that is prosecuted, not the suit. Stone v. Hugging, 1 Shan. Cas., 564. On the effect of an appeal, see Singes v. Singes, 1 Tenn. (Ovt.), 3 note; and on the difference between an appeal and a writ of error, see, post, § 1367, and Smith v. Holmes, 12 Heisk., 466.

Gilchrist v. Cannon, 1 Cold., 581. But if he pray for a limited appeal from the entire decree, the whole case will be subject to review. Wood v. Cooper, 2 Heisk., 454; Caldwell v. Hodden, 1 Lea, 45.

10 In cases of a limited appeal, the record to be sent up to the appellate Court may, by consent, be limited, accordingly, to such matters as are necessary to fully present the questions raised by the appeal, and thus the costs of the appeal be greatly reduced.

further time within which to give the appeal bond, or take the pauper oath, in which case the bond or oath must be filed strictly within the time granted. 17

In strict practice, a party is not entitled to an appeal unless: 1, the decree he complains of is one from which an appeal will lie as a matter of right; 2, unless the appeal is prayed during the period when the Court has the right to grant it; and 3, unless a proper appeal bond, or pauper oath in lieu, is tendered with the prayer. The Court will, however, generally allow some time, not exceeding thirty days, in which to give an appeal bond, but in such case the bond must be filed in the time so given, or the right to the appeal will lapse. 18

A decree rendered at a former term cannot be appealed from at a subsequent term even when some order is made in the cause intended to carry into effect the former decree. 19

It is not enough to pray for an appeal: an appeal must be both prayed for and granted. 20 A prayer without a grant, and a grant without a prayer, are equally ineffectual either to oust the Chancery Court of its jurisdiction, or to vest jurisdiction in the appellate Court. To put the Chancellor in error for refusing to grant an appeal when the party praying therefor is thereunto entitled, he must not only pray an appeal in open Court, within the thirty days after decree, but he must, also, tender a proper appeal bond, or proper pauper oath. The following is a form of a

PRAYER FOR AN APPEAL.

From which decree [and from all former decrees made in this cause at the present term] the defendant [or complainant] prays an appeal to the [present, or] next term of the Supreme Court at Nashville, [Knoxville, or Jackson:] and he having tendered a sufficient appeal bond, said bond is filed and the appeal granted; [or which appeal is granted upon his giving a sufficient appeal bond, or taking the pauper oath: and ten (twenty or thirty) days are allowed him in which to file said bond, or take said oath.]

PRAYER FOR A LIMITED APPEAL.

From so much of said decree as adjudges that complainant is not entitled to [specify what the Court denied him] the complainant prays an appeal [&c., as above. If the defendant appeals, then say: From so much of said decree as adjudges that the defendant is liable for (specifying what) the defendant prays an appeal, &c., as above.]

§ 1265. What Decrees May be Appealed From.—An appeal may be had in Chancery either when allowed by the Chancellor in cases subject to his discretion, or when obtained as a matter of right.

1. Appeals as a Matter of Discretion. 22 The Chancellor may, in his discretion, allow an appeal: 1, from a decree determining the principles involved and ordering an account, or a sale or partition before the account is taken, or the sale or partition is made; or 2, he may allow an appeal on overruling a demurrer; or 3, he may allow any party to appeal from a decree which settles his right, although the case may not be disposed of as to others. 23 An appeal by the complainant will not lie, however, from a decree dismissing the bill on demurrer as to some of the defendants; 24 but it will lie on application of a defendant whose demurrer has been overruled, the cause remaining in the Chancery Court as to the other defendants. 25

18 In such a case, however, a writ of error may be obtained.
19 Caldwell v. Hodden, 1 Lea, 45. In this case, the appeal was from the order then made, and from all the decrees and orders made in this case thereto.
20 Vanvabre v. Staton, 4 Pick, 351.
21 If the appellate Court be in session when the appeal is prayed the appeal must be to the present term. Pond v. Trigg, 5 Heisk., 532.
22 In Abbott v. Fagg, appeals are divided into (1) appeals as a matter of favor, and (2) appeals as a matter of right. 1 Heisk., 748.
23 Code, § 3157. This discretion should generally be so exercised as to terminate the case as speedily as possible, and at the least expense. Hence, if the appellate Court meets before another term of his Court, the Chancellor should consider whether it would not be well to allow an appeal. On the other hand, if another term of his Court will come before the sitting of the appellate Court, he should consider whether it would not be better to have the case prepared at his next term for a final decree, so that on appeal it may be terminated. Where an appeal lies in the discretion of the Chancellor, a grant of an appeal without more will be held to be an exercise of this discretion. Harrison v. Farnsworth, 1 Heisk., 751; Andrews v. Warner, 3 Pick, 1; and Younger v. Younger, 6 Pick, 25.
24 Hunter v. Cardenhire, 10 Lea, 87; Peters v. Neely, 16 Lea, 290.
25 Sigler v. Vaughn, 11 Lea, 131. This case, in effect, overrules Mosby v. Hunt, 7 Lea, 82, in case it was held to be an improper exercise of his discretion for a Chancellor to grant such an appeal. See, also, Barksdale v. Butler, 6 Lea, 450.
2. Appeals as a Matter of Right lie only from final decrees. Any party dissatisfied with such a decree may appeal from it. A decree is final when it so disposes of the cause that nothing remains to be done, but to issue the final process awarded. When a decree decides and disposes of the whole merits of the cause, and reserves on its face no further questions or directions for the future judgment of the Court, so that it will not be necessary to bring the case again before the Court for a decision, it is a final decree, even though it omits to adjudicate the costs, or to award an execution in case of a money recovery.

A decree which, although determining the principles involved, orders an account, or orders a sale or partition of land, is not final, because the account or sale or partition will require the further action of the Court; and much less is an order or ruling final, which is made in the progress of a cause, prior to a decree determining the principles involved in the litigation.

No appeal will lie, even by consent of the Chancello and of the parties, from an interlocutory order or ruling, such as: 1, orders granting, dissolving, or modifying, injunctions or attachments; 2, orders appointing, removing, or instructing, receivers, or refusing so to do; 3, orders allowing, or refusing to allow, amendments of any sort, either to pleadings, or other proceedings; 4, orders in reference to the giving of prosecution, injunction, attachment, or other bonds; 5, orders granting or refusing leave to take further proof; 6, orders sustaining or overruling exceptions to reports, or to any other action of the Master; 7, orders disallowing motions to dismiss bills or petitions; 8, orders allowing or disallowing pleas; 9, orders allowing or refusing a decree pro confesso; 10, orders setting aside, or refusing to set aside, a decree pro confesso; 11, orders refusing or allowing a new trial by jury; 12, orders allowing or refusing a reference to the Master, before any decree determining the principles involved; nor from any other order that is interlocutory, except an order overruling a demurrer.

Nor will an appeal lie from an order intended to carry into effect a decree not appealed from, nor from a judgment for contempt in the presence of the Court, nor from an order, in a suit by the State, directing funds in litigation to be deposited in the State treasury.

The aim of the law is to allow all parties a fair opportunity to have all the errors to their prejudice revised on one appeal, and one only. To allow appeals from every ruling of the Chancellor from the beginning of the suit to the final decree would be to absolutely clog the wheels of justice; suits would become interminable, the appellate Courts would be overwhelmed by an avalanche of petty appeals on insignificant matters; and the delays would amount to a practical denial of justice. For this reason, neither writs of error, nor appeals of right, will be entertained by the appellate Courts to revise any interlocutory order, proceeding, or decree, even though the parties themselves acquiesce in the appeal or writ of error. A party is entitled to only one hearing, in any one cause, to have the errors therein corrected; and he is not entitled to, and will not be allowed, several appeals or writs of error, at several times, in the same cause, to have the supposed errors therein revised and corrected. He must wait until a final decree before he appeals as a matter of right, or takes a writ of error.\(^{38}\)

The distinction between interlocutory and final decrees has been fully considered in the Chapter on Decrees.\(^{39}\)

When issues of fact are made up on demand of either party, and tried by a jury according to the forms of a Court of law, errors therein cannot be corrected by appeal, but must be corrected by an appeal in the nature of a writ of error.\(^{40}\) But errors in divorce cases can be corrected by an appeal only.\(^{41}\)

\section{§ 1266. An Appeal in the Nature of a Writ of Error.}—When a cause is tried by the Chancellor alone upon written proofs, the party dissatisfied with his decree must take an appeal; but if the cause is tried by a jury, on issues of fact, the party dissatisfied with the decree based on the jury’s verdict must take an appeal in the nature of a writ of error.\(^{42}\) This is a remedy purely statutory, and is intended to operate as a writ of error and \textit{supersedeas} would at common law.\(^{43}\) An appeal in the nature of a writ of error may be had from a decree in Chancery, upon the same terms and subject to the same regulations as an appeal.\(^{44}\) The bond required from the appellant, and the proceedings in the appellate Court upon an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, are also the same as in case of an appeal.\(^{45}\)

The effect of an appeal in the nature of a writ of error is quite different from that of a simple appeal. An appeal practically abrogates and annuls the decree appealed from, and absolutely devitalizes it as an adjudication; whereas an appeal in the nature of a writ of error leaves the decree intact, but wholly suspends its operation and activity until the appellate Court passes on the objection made to it by the appellant.\(^{46}\) On an appeal, the complainant continues to be the complainant, and the burden rests upon him of satisfying the appellate Court that the decree appealed from is substantially correct;\(^{47}\) whereas an appeal in the nature of a writ of error is a new suit, and the appellant, whether complainant or defendant below, becomes a plaintiff in the appellate Court, and on him rests the burden of showing that the decree complained of is erroneous in some substantial matter.\(^{48}\)

In practice, however, the distinction between an appeal, and an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, from decrees in Chancery, is not rigorously observed; and if a party pray an appeal when he should have prayed an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, or \textit{vice versa}, the appellate Court will probably treat the cause as though brought up by a proper prayer, if the bond is in proper form.\(^{49}\) And now, inasmuch as the rules of practice in the appellate Courts require errors to be assigned in cases brought there by a simple appeal, as well as in cases brought there by appeal in the nature of a writ of error, the burden of the argument in each set of cases is practically the same, because all decrees are deemed \textit{prima facie} correct,\(^{50}\) and the appellant is required to point out the errors in all decrees of which he complains.\(^{51}\)

48 Maskall v. Maskall, 3 Sneed, 508.

51 Sup. Court Rule, 20; 5 Pick., 775, Wood v. Frazer, 2 Pick., 300. Prior to the Act of 1819, ch. 21, decrees in Chancery could be reviewed in the Supreme Court only by writ of error, or by an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, in neither of which cases could any facts be considered except those appearing in the decree itself, the evidence in the case not being otherwise reviewable. McEffie v. Shirley, 1819, ch. 21, and Penjivan v. Thaxton, 1822, ch. 14, on appeals the original papers, including the depositions, were delivered by the Clerk and Master to the Clerk of the Supreme Court to be read by the Judges thereof. Car. & Nich., 220. By the Act of 1835, ch. 20, all depositions and exhibits, read at the hearing in the Chancery Court, were made a part of the record, and since then the difference between an appeal and an appeal in the nature of a writ of error has practically ceased to exist, the power of the Supreme Court to review the facts being the same in each case.
§ 1267. Difference Between an Appeal and an Appeal in the Nature of a Writ of Error.—In addition to the differences stated in the preceding section, a simple appeal is the proper remedy in all cases tried strictly according to the forms of the Chancery Court; but where an issue of fact has been made upon demand of either party, and passed upon by a jury, according to the forms of the Circuit Court, there an appeal in the nature of a writ of error is the proper remedy to correct the decree based on the action of the jury. Where a case is tried by the Chancellor according to the forms of the Chancery Court, an appeal opens up the whole case, and the appellate Court determines it as though it had been originally instituted in that Court, pronouncing a final decree, if proper, and enforcing it by the necessary final process. Where, however, there has been a trial by jury on the demand of either party, and an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, the appellate Court, if of opinion that there was a proper ground for a new trial, cannot go on and pronounce a final decree, but must remand the cause to the end that a new trial by jury may be had.

§ 1268. Appeal Bond, or Oath in Lieu.—Before a party is entitled to an appeal, or an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, he must tender a sufficient appeal bond, or a pauper oath in lieu, when such oath is allowed by the Court. If the decree is for a specific sum of money and against the party in his own right, the appeal bond must be for the amount of the decree and damages and costs, but in all other cases a bond for costs only is sufficient. Where, however, real estate is ordered to be sold to enforce a vendor’s lien, a mortgage, or trust deed, or a partition, or for maintenance or reinvestment, and the owner prays and obtains an appeal, he shall only be required to execute a bond to pay the costs in both Courts.

APPEAL BOND.

We, Frank Bright and George Friend, acknowledge ourselves indebted to Victor Mann in the sum of [$the amount of the decree, damages and costs.]

But this obligation to be void if the said Frank Bright, who has prayed an appeal to the next term of the Supreme Court, [or Court of Civil Appeals,] at Knoxville from a decree rendered against him in favor of the said Victor Mann by the Chancery Court at Murfreesboro, at its June term, 1891, shall pay and satisfy the amount of the debt, damages and costs. the said Supreme Court, [or Court of Civil Appeals,] may adjudicate against him, in the cause.

(To be dated, signed, witnessed, and filed.)

A party cannot, however, obtain an appeal on the pauper oath unless the Court expressly so allows. If the appeal is granted upon a bond being given, and time is allowed in which to give such bond, the Clerk has no authority under such an order to accept the pauper oath in lieu of the bond required; and should he accept such oath, the appeal will be dismissed in the appellate Court on motion, for want of an appeal bond. In fact, unless the bond is filed, or other condition upon which the appeal is granted complied with, there is no appeal, and the jurisdiction of the appellate Court does not attach.

Pauper oaths for appeals to the appellate Courts can readily be framed by reference to the forms given in sections 182-183, and to the forms following:

\section*{§ 1269. Practical Suggestions Concerning Appeals.—Having determined to appeal,\textsuperscript{63} see to it that you get everything into the record you have a right to have in. If any of your evidence has been ruled out, or any improper evidence of your adversary admitted, or if any depositions were not read, or were read by the party not taking them, see that these facts properly appear either in the decree, or by a bill of exceptions.\textsuperscript{63} If you think the inspection of an original document by the appellate Court will aid you, have the decree direct the Clerk to make it an exhibit to the transcript. If any parol admissions were made by the adverse side during the trial for the action of the Chancellor, let the decree so show. If any original records were read, let the decree so recite. If any agreements or admissions in writing were made by the other party, see that they are duly filed as part of the record, and it may be well to let the decree recite that the decree was based on such agreements or admissions, as well as on the balance of the record. If there be any large maps, or plats, it will save expense to have them sent up as part of the transcript, without being copied. If you have any doubt whether any document or other evidence is properly a part of the records, make it such by a bill of exceptions.

If a party desiring an appeal is unable to give the requisite appeal bond, or is absent at the term when the decree is pronounced so that his Solicitor does not know his wish, or is prevented in any way from taking an appeal from a final decree, he may wait and file the record for a writ of error. In such a case, his Solicitor should see to it that every matter his client is entitled to have in the record, or in the final decree, is put in. If a bill of exceptions is necessary, for any purpose, it should be prepared and signed by the Chancellor, and properly made a part of the record by an order to that effect. In short, the Solicitor should take every step he would take in case of an appeal. Then he can have the transcript made out, and if necessary obtain a supersedeas, before the Clerk and Master executes the decree, or before the Sheriff executes any final process in his hands. In this way nearly all the benefits of an appeal can be had.

Above all, remember that the last moments of a Court require great vigilance on the part of an appealing party to see that all proper entries are made, and \textsuperscript{62} Or, "in the case of John Doe v. Richard Roe."

\textsuperscript{63} Solicitors should remember that Courts are made to decide, and that when a decision is made one party or the other must lose. Any display of feeling or vexation, or even of annoyance, by the losing Solicitor, is not only disrespectful to the Court, but savors of boorishness. A few Solicitors make it a point to appeal as soon as the Chancellor delivers his opinion; but, as a rule, their standing at the bar is not eminent. Well balanced and courteous Solicitors never appeal from the Chancellor's opinion; they wait until the decree has been certified to writing, and settled, and then appeal from the decree. If the Chancellor should grant an appeal from his opinion it would profit the appellant nothing, but would expose him to merited derision. The Chancellor's opinion may be erroneous, while his decree may be correct. The Supreme Court does not take cognizance of the opinion of the Chancellor, even if erroneous: it looks alone to what is decreed. Boyd & Sims, 3 Pick, 780. So, in jury trials, no motion for a new trial should be made until after the jury has retired. Common courtesy and ordinary politeness require this much. It is a mistake to suppose that a Solicitor will lose any right, or suffer any loss of dignity, by waiting for the jury to retire, before entering his motion for a new trial, or by waiting until the decree is drawn, before praying an appeal therefrom. See ante, §§ 1183, note 59: 1211.

\textsuperscript{63} See Bill of Exceptions, §§ 1213-1214, ante.
that nothing necessary to his appeal is omitted, and that nothing not duly authorized is entered.

If you are dissatisfied with a decree determining the principles involved and ordering an account, or a sale, or partition, pray an appeal: if the Chancellor declines to grant it, your prayer will show that you did not acquiesce in the decree. If you are dissatisfied with any decree that may be deemed final, pray an appeal from it, and let the Court adjudge as to its finality.

If you are uncertain to which of the appellate Courts to appeal, appeal to the Court of Civil Appeals, for that Court has authority, if it finds that the appeal should have been to the Supreme Court, to transfer the case to that Court; whereas the Supreme Court has no power to transfer to the Court of Civil Appeals a case that should have been appealed to it, and is bound to dismiss the appeal. But in the latter case you can have the decree you complain of reviewed on a writ of error, in the Court of Civil Appeals.

WRITS OF ERROR, AND OF SUPERSEDEAS.

ARTICLE I. WRITS OF ERROR.

§ 1270. Office of a Writ of Error.

§ 1271. Who May Have a Writ of Error.

§ 1272. To What Decrees a Writ of Error Will Lie.

§ 1273. When the Writ Must be Obtained.

§ 1274. How a Writ of Error is Obtained.

§ 1275. Form of Petition for Writ of Error, and of Notice.

§ 1276. Effect of a Writ of Error.

§ 1270. Office of a Writ of Error.—A writ of error is a writ addressed by an appellate Court to an inferior Court, commanding the latter to transmit to the former the whole proceedings, in a specified cause, to final judgment inclusive, to the end that the appellate Court may examine the whole record in the cause, both of law and of fact, and render such judgment thereon as may appear to be right upon the face of the record. In practice, however, the writ in fact never issues, the applicant otherwise obtaining the benefit thereof.

The office of a writ of error is to enable a party to have corrected the errors in a decree rendered against him: 1, Where he had no day in Court; or 2, Where he was absent, and therefore could not appeal; or 3, Where he was present, and did not discover the error, or for any other reason did not appeal; or 4, Where he was an infant, or of unsound mind, or imprisoned, or she was a married woman, when the decree was made; or 5, Where an appeal, or an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, is dismissed because not filed in time; or 6, Where in any other case, an appeal, or an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, from a final decree has not been taken, or having been taken, has not been perfected, or whether taken or not has been dismissed by the appellate Court without a hearing upon its merits.

§ 1271. Who May Have a Writ of Error.—Any party to a suit who would have been entitled to an appeal, or an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, is entitled to a writ of error. Under the term “party,” is included next friends and guardians ad litem, and all quasi parties against whom a decree has been made, or who have been denied relief by them prayed, such as makers of notes or bonds, given in the cause, sureties on such notes or bonds, and claimants who have filed petitions in a cause. And so the personal representatives or heirs or assignees of a party, or a quasi party, may have this writ when they stand in the shoes of the decedent, and in a will case, persons interested in the result of the litigation are entitled to a writ of error, even though not parties of record.

1 Stephens on Pldg., 117-122; Cain v. Cocke, I Lea, 289.
3 Code, §§ 3182-3185; Acts of 1901, ch. 15.
4 Code, §§ 3172; 3176. See, ante, § 1253. A writ of error is in the nature of a new suit, and may be obtained as of right by any person entitled to it, exactly as he is entitled to a subpoena on filing his bill and giving a prosecution bond, or taking the pauper’s oath. Ridgely v. Bennett, 13 Lea, 208; and cases there cited. The party who prosecutes a writ of error in a suit at law is termed plaintiff-in-error, whether plaintiff or defendant in the Court below, and the other party is termed defendant-in-error; but in a Chancery cause defendants continue to be defendants in the appellate Court, even when they bring up a case by writ of error, because the statute provides that Chancery causes removed to an appellate Court by writ of error, or appeal in the nature of a writ of error, shall be reviewed as if brought up by appeal. Code, § 3108.
5 A guardian ad litem may prosecute a writ of error on the pauper oath. Alexander v. Morris, 1 Cates, 724.
6 Caldwell v. Hodges, I Lea, 305.
7 Linch v. Linch, I Lea, 536.
Upon an application for a writ of error more than two years after the rendition of the decree sought to be reviewed, and upon an application by an heir, assignee, or other privy, the proper mode of proceeding is by petition, stating the facts which take the petitioner out of the period of limitation, as well as giving the assignment of errors to be used on the trial. They must establish a prima facie case entitling them to the writ. If the defendant in error contest the facts alleged in the petition, he must do so by a plea. He cannot do so by a motion to dismiss, for, upon such a motion, the petition will be taken as true.

§ 1273. When the Writ Must be Obtained.—A writ of error cannot be had unless the party applying therefor notify the adverse party of his intention to apply for the writ, and present the transcript and bond therefor (1) to the Clerk of the appellate Court within one year after the decree, or (2) to the appellate Court, or to a Judge thereof, within two years after the decree. But persons who are under the disability of infancy or coverture, or who are of unsound mind, or imprisoned, may prosecute writs of error within the time prescribed after their disability is removed. To entitle a party to a writ of error, he must not only make application therefor within the time allowed by law, but also within that time file a transcript of the record, execute a cost bond, with security, or take the pauper’s oath, and notify the adverse party. If this be not done, the writ will be dismissed on motion of the defendant, notwithstanding a flat for the writ may have been obtained within the statutory time.

§ 1274. How a Writ of Error is Obtained.—A writ of error must be obtained from that appellate Court, or a Judge thereof, which would have had jurisdiction of the case on appeal, as heretofore shown. The first step to be taken by a party who wishes to obtain a writ of error is to procure from the Clerk and Master a complete and duly certified transcript of the record in the cause. If less than one year has elapsed since the entry of the decree complained of, he may file the transcript with the Clerk of the appellate Court, of that Division wherein the decree was made; and, upon giving a bond for costs, or taking the pauper oath in lieu, the Clerk will file the transcript and notify the other party of the filing of the transcript, and the granting of a writ of error, if the party filing the transcript has not already given such notice.

If a year or more has elapsed since the entry of the decree complained of, the party complaining must not only procure the transcript as stated; but he must, also, prepare a petition addressed to the appellate Court, or to one of its Judges, if in vacation, giving a statement of the case, and the precise points raised by the pleadings, and the errors of fact or law relied upon to reverse or modify the decree, giving appropriate references to the record, and citing the pages thereof. The statement must conform to the requirements of a brief, and is all the brief the petitioner will be allowed to rely on in the appellate Court. The petition must, also, be accompanied by a copy of the notice served on the opposite party, or his counsel, and if no notice be served, an excuse therefor must be given satisfactory to the Court or Judge to whom the petition is presented. The petition should pray for a writ of error, and if a supersedeas is desired, it should so pray. The petition should be sworn to if it alleges any fact not appearing of record, or if a supersedeas is prayed for.

If the appellate Court of the Division in which the decree was made be in session, the transcript may be presented in open Court accompanied by the petition containing the brief to be used on the trial; and the writ moved for. If proper notice of the application for the writ has been given to the adverse party, such notice will be exhibited with the transcript; if no notice be given a sufficient excuse must be presented; and thereupon the appellate Court will allow the transcript to be filed, and grant the writ.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe.

This day appeared Richard Roe, and presented a transcript of the record in the case of John Doe vs. the said Richard Roe, lately determined in the Chancery Court at Nashville, accompanied by a petition for a writ of error, containing a brief assigning errors in said record, and a copy of the notice served on the said John Doe, and moved the Court for a writ of error in said cause; and it satisfactorily appearing to the Court that due notice of this application has been given the adverse party, it is ordered by the Court that said motion be allowed, and that said transcript be filed upon proper bond being given, and thereupon said bond was accordingly given and said transcript and notice filed. *[If notice of the application has not been given, omit all after “errors in said record,” and insert: and accompanied by an affidavit giving a sufficient excuse for not serving said Doe or his counsel with a notice of petitioner’s intention to apply for a writ of error. And thereupon the said Richard Roe moved the Court for a writ of error, [and supersedeas,] in said cause. On consideration of all which, said transcript was ordered to be filed, and said writs to issue, upon proper bonds being filed therefor, which bonds having been duly filed, the Clerk was thereupon ordered to give notice to said John Doe of the granting of the writs of error and supersedeas in said cause.]*

If the appellate Court of the proper Division be not in session, the transcript, petition, and notice may be presented to any Judge of the appellate Court, or the Clerk of the appellate Court in the proper Division. If presented to the Judge, he will endorse on the petition his 19 Supreme Court Rules, § 27; 5 Pick., 777. This rule is as follows:

On presenting records to one of the Judges, or to the Court in term time, for writs of error or writs of error and supersedeas, a petition must accompany it, containing the brief to be used on trial, and attached to record; accompanied, also, by copy of notice served on opposite party or counsel, or such reasons given for absence thereof as the Court or Judge deems sufficient to excuse party from giving notice. The character of this brief will be shown hereafter: See, § 1306.

20 Five days’ notice in writing shall be given the adverse party. Code, § 3183.

21 For forms, see, post, §§ 1275; 1278.

22 In "Anonymous," 1 Thomp. Cases, 81, the Supreme Court held that the writ of error issued of right out of the Clerk’s office, as a matter of course; and that it was not proper to apply to the Court for a writ of error. But now, see Code, § 3177, authorizing the applicant to move for the writ in the Supreme Court.

Clerk's Endorsement on Transcript for Writ of Error.

John Doe, vs. Richard Roe.

Transcript for writ of error and bond therefor filed by Richard Roe, and writ granted, this Feb. 23, 1907.

C D, Clerk.

Where the applicant for the writ is a personal representative, or heir, or assignee, or other person entitled, whose right does not appear in the record, his petition for the writ should not only contain his brief, to be relied on at the hearing, but he should go further, and make out a prima facie case of his right to have the writ.24

If the appellate Court, or any Judge thereof, or the Clerk thereof, grant the writ and allow the record to be filed without any previous notice of the application to the adverse party,25 the Clerk will issue the proper notice. In any case, notice given to the adverse party five days before the hearing of the cause will be sufficient.27 The law favors the writ, and allows no unnecessary obstacle to be interposed between the applicant and its allowance;28 nevertheless, the writ cannot be had without filing the transcript therefor, and giving bond to the appellate Court Clerk, or taking the oath in lieu. Giving an appeal bond in the Chancery Court, and having the Clerk send up a transcript, when no appeal is prayed or granted, will not entitle the party so doing to any relief in the appellate Court.29 The bond for the writ is the same that is required for an appeal; and the proceedings in the appellate Court after the transcript has been filed are exactly the same as though the case had been brought up by appeal.30

The practice in obtaining writs of supersedeas will be considered in a separate Article.31

§ 1275. Form of Petition for Writ of Error, and of Notice.—The following are forms of a petition for a writ of error, and of the notice of the application for the writ:

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF ERROR [AND SUPERSEDEAS.]

To the Honorable Supreme Court of Tennessee, [or Court of Civil Appeals,] sitting at Knoxville, [or Nashville, or Jackson,] or to any of the Judges thereof:

The petition of the complainant in said cause for a writ of error [and supersedeas] respectfully shows:

I. That on the ... day of ..., 19..., a final decree was rendered against him in said cause [state briefly the substance of the decree. If execution or writ of possession has issued on said decree, and a supersedeas is desired, state the fact, and date when issued.] All of which will more fully at large appear in the record in said cause, a transcript of which is hereto attached.

II. Petitioner avers that said decree is erroneous in this [giving very briefly the main errors alleged.] All of which will more fully appear by the reference to the brief attached to this petition, and made a part thereof.

III. Petitioner has given the adverse party due notice of his intention to make this application, a copy of which notice is hereto attached, and marked A.

IV. The premises considered, petitioner prays that a writ of error [and supersedeas] be granted him, that the errors in said cause be corrected, and justice done him, and for general relief. [If a supersedeas is prayed for add to the petition:] This is the first application for a supersedeas in this case.

NOTICE OF INTENTION TO APPLY FOR WRIT OF ERROR [AND SUPERSEDEAS.]

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.

In the Chancery Court at Jamestown.

The complainant in said cause will take notice that at 10 a.m. on the .... day of ........., 19...., at [designating the precise place] in the City of Chattanooga, [or other town, naming it.] I will present a transcript of the record in said cause to one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, [or Court of Civil Appeals,] and apply for a writ of error [and supersedeas] in the cause.

This .... day of ........., 19....

L. T. SMITH, Solicitor of Defendant.

§ 1276. Effect of a Writ of Error.—A writ of error does not stay proceedings in a cause in the Chancery Court, nor prevent the enforcement of the decree complained of. To do this the plaintiff-in-error must, also, obtain a supersedeas.32 If the decree below has been executed by a sale of property, either real or personal, before the writ of error is obtained and supersedeas granted, the right, title and interest of any purchaser acquired under such sale and decree, will not be disturbed or affected by the reversal of the decree.33 A writ of error and a supersedeas, obtained before a sale or other execution of a decree, has, however, all the force and effect of an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, and suspends the decree until the decision of the cause in the appellate Court.

ARTICLE II.

WRITS OF SUPERSEDEAS.

§ 1277. Office and Effect of a Supersedeas.—A supersedeas is a common law writ used by appellate Courts in aid of their revisory jurisdiction, and specially adapted to staying proceedings upon final decrees and final process, and in staying the enforcement of affirmative interlocutory orders and mesne process. The office of the writ is to keep matters in statu quo, until the appellate Court can pass upon the merits of the final decree, or interlocutory order, whose enforcement is stayed or superseded;1 and, as a consequence, the effect is to de-vitalize the decrees, orders, and process to which it applies. Even if a levy on personality has been made by virtue of an execution, the effect of a supersedeas is to release the levy, and restore the property to the defendant in the execution.2 And the supersedeas takes effect from the date of the fiat, whether notice of the fiat, or the supersedeas, was issued and served, or not; and all proceed-

31a See next Article, §§ 1277-1279. 32 See, post, §§ 1278-1279. 33 Code, § 3186. The plaintiff-in-error has the right to have errors in the record revised, and whether such revision will benefit him or not, is not a question for the Supreme Court to consider. McBee v. M-Bee, 1 Heisk., 565. But see, Lewis v. Baker, 1 Head, 356. 1 M. & M. Railroad v. Huggins, 7 Cold., 217; Ma-bry v. Ross, 1 Heisk., 773. 5 Post, § 1279.
ings on the decree or process superseded, subsequent to the award of the supersedeas, are void.3

If, however, the supersedeas is applied for, and granted, merely to stay an interlocutory order, or decree, or the enforcement thereof, or both, the effect of such a limited supersedeas would be to stay such decree or enforcement only, and would not prevent the Chancery Court from proceeding in all other matters to a final decree, in the same manner as though the interlocutory order or decree superseded had never been made. The effect of such a supersedeas is to wholly suspend the order superseded until final decree.4

The appellate Court, or a Judge thereof, may grant a supersedeas to a Chancery decree in two cases: 1. Where an improper interlocutory order or decree has been made; and 2. Where a writ of error has been granted to a final decree. These two cases will be separately considered.

§ 1278. Supersedeas of Interlocutory Orders and Decrees.—The appellate Court, in term time, or either of the Judges thereof, in vacation, may on proper application therefor, grant writs of supersedeas to an interlocutory order or decree of the Chancery Court, or to an execution issued thereon, as in case of final decrees.5

1. What Interlocutory Orders or Decrees Will be Superseded The object of the statute is to enable the appellate Court in term time, or one of its Judges in vacation, to stay the execution of an order or decree of the Chancery Court, which, in advance of the final hearing, undertakes to deprive the litigant of rights or property. The orders and decrees intended to be embraced in the statute are only such as are of a nature to be actively enforced against the rights or property of the litigant.6

The power conferred by the statute is to supersede such interlocutory orders and decrees, or executions issued thereon, as may be superseded upon granting a writ of error on a final decree; that is, such orders and decrees as adjudicative rights and admit of active execution. The statute does not apply to orders or decrees of a negative or prohibitory character, or to such as have already been executed. There must be something affirmative to be done, or in process of being done, that may be stayed by supersedeas. Hence, an order, or a flat, granting an injunction, or dissolving an injunction previously granted, cannot be superseded;7 neither can an order appointing a receiver, or discharging a receiver, or refusing to appoint a receiver, when the order is within the discretionary power of the Court, or Chancellor.8

The statute was intended to meet those cases, fortunately rare, where, in advance of a decree on the merits, from which the losing party may appeal, the Chancery Court makes an order actually determining a party’s rights, and orders its enforcement.9 Thus a supersedeas will lie (1) to an interlocutory order improperly requiring a party to pay money into Court, and enforcing it by execution;10 (2) to an interlocutory order improperly awarding a mandatory injunction;11 (3) to an interlocutory order improperly dispossessing a party in a case not within the discretionary power of the Court to appoint a receiver.12 A supersedeas will not lie to an interlocutory order or decree that an appeal would be of no avail, if the Court undertook to do by interlocutory order what only ought to be done by the final decree. Blake v. Dodge, 8 Lea, 466.

2 Claiborne v. Crockett, Meigs, 607; Rocco v. Par- zny, 9 Lea, 328.
3 M. & M. Railroad v. Huggins, 7 Cold., 224. The object of the supersedeas is not to revise or reverse the interlocutory order or decree superseded, but merely to stay the execution thereof. Lea, 1278.
4 Hence, the final hearing of the cause by the Chancellor, when an appeal will lie as a matter of right. At the final hearing, the Chancellor may make the order or decree superseded a part of his final decree, or he may modify it, or ignore it, or reverse it, and this final decree may be enforced, unless appealed from; and if appellees do not appeal, the decree will be confirmed. If right in itself, notwithstanding there may be errors in some of the interlocutory orders and decrees. See § 1317. 6 Code, §§ 3953; 4513. The reason of this statute was, that under our system of jurisprudence, an appeal lies of right from only final decrees, and such an appeal would be of no avail, if the Court undertook to do by interlocutory order what only ought to be done by the final decree. Blake v. Dodge, 8 Lea, 466.
5 Mabry v. Ross, 1 Heisk., 769; Blake v. Dodge, 8 Lea, 465; 7 M. & M. Railroad Co. v. Huggins, 7 Cold., 217; Mabry v. Ross, 1 Heisk., 769; Park v. Meek, 1 Heisk, 78.
6 Baird v. Turnpike Co., 1 Lea, 394; Bramley v. Tiree, 1 Lea, 531; Roberson v. Roberson, 3 Lea, 50. See, also, Troublier v. Akin, 1 Cates, 451, citing this book, §§ 895-896, (now 294-295.)
7 Park v. Meek, 1 Lea, 78.
8 Blake v. Dodge, 8 Lea, 466; Park v. Meek, 1 Lea, 80.
10 Baird v. Turnpike Co., 1 Lea, 397.
orders an account, or a sale, or a partition, or that merely protects, restrains, or impounds; nor will it lie to an affirmative interlocutory order or decree, which, though superseded if application had been made in season, has been already executed.13

2. How a Supersedeas is Obtained. The writ of supersedeas in case of an interlocutory order or decree may be granted as in case of final decree.14 Therefore, in order to obtain a supersedeas the application must be made by petition addressed to the appellate Court of the Division in which the order or decree complained of was made, if the Court be in session in such Division; if not so in session, the petition must be addressed to one of the Judges of the Court, even though, in fact, the Court be in session in another Division.15 An appellate Court sitting in one Division has no jurisdiction of any matter coming from an inferior Court in another Division.

The petition should contain a full and clear historical statement of the litigation in which the order or decree complained of was made, giving the various steps, in order of time, taken in the cause down to the particular order or decree complained of, and should then show wherein such order or decree aggrieves and oppresses the petitioner, and why it should be superseded. The petition must, also, be accompanied, as an exhibit, by a perfect transcript of the record in the cause wherein the order or decree complained of was made; and the petitioner must give to the adverse party, if a resident, or if he be a non-resident, to his Solicitor, reasonable notice of the time, place, and Judge, when, where, and to whom the application for a supersedeas is to be made.16 The petition should state that it is the first application for a supersedeas in the case.18 The application must be to that appellate Court, or a Judge thereof, having jurisdiction of the case on appeal.18a If made to a Judge it should be addressed to him; and when made to the Court, it should be addressed to "The Honorable Supreme Court of Tennessee, [or Court of Civil Appeals] sitting at Knoxville," or at Nashville, or Jackson, as the case may be. The following form of the notice and petition will serve as a guide in drawing such papers for either appellate Court:

NOTICE OF APPLICATION FOR A SUPERSEDEAS.

Mr. John Doe:
Take notice, that I will on the 2d day of August, 1890, at his residence in Chattanooga, present a transcript of the record in the case of John Doe vs. Richard Roe, in the Chancery Court at Kingston, Tenn., to Hon. D. L. Snodgrass, and apply to him thereon for a supersedeas to the interlocutory decree made in said cause on July 17, 1890, requiring me to pay five hundred dollars into said Court.

July 24, 1890.

RICHARD ROE, by E. E. YOUNG, Solicitor.

PETITION TO SUPERSEDE AN INTERLOCUTORY ORDER.

To the Hon. David L. Snodgrass, one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, residing at Chattanooga:
Your petitioner, Richard Roe, a resident of Roane County, respectfully represents to your Honor that he is much aggrieved by an interlocutory order made on July 17, 1890, in and by the Chancery Court at Kingston, in the case of John Doe against petitioner in said Court, requiring him to pay into Court within thirty days the sum of five hundred dollars, and on his failure to do so, ordering the execution to issue against him therefor.

The complainant, a former ward of petitioner, filed his bill in said cause against petitioner, alleging that petitioner was largely indebted to him as his guardian, and praying an account. Petitioner answered said bill, denying any indebtedness as guardian, and pleading a stated 16 Baird v. Turnpike Co., 1 Lea, 394. If the petition be presented to the Court while sitting in a Division other than that wherein the order or decree complained of was made, it will be deemed presented to the Judge to whom the record is assigned. Ibid.

18 There is, perhaps, no direct adjudication that a transcript of the record must accompany the petition; but the practice is to file such a transcript. Baird v. Turnpike Co., 1 Lea, 394. The practice in obtaining a supersedeas in such cases is practically the same as in obtaining a supersedeas on a writ of error, as will fully appear by an examination of the cases cited in this Article.
18a There seems to be no statute or express rule requiring such notice, but natural justice requires it, especially when a supersedeas on the pauper oath is applied for; and the reported cases often affirmatively show that such notice was in fact given. See, Code, § 3133; Baird v. Turnpike Co., 1 Lea, 395; Campbell v. Boulton, 3 Bax., 355. Supreme Court Rule, 27, does not apply to a supersedeas to an interlocutory decree.

dred dollars left in his hands on said settlement by said John Doe to secure petitioner as his security on a bail bond for said Doe's appearance at the then next term of the Circuit Court, which came in August, 1889. Said Doe failed to appear at said term, having fled to Texas, and a forfeiture was taken on said bond against him, and against petitioner as his surety on said bail bond, and judgment pronounced against them jointly and severally for the sum of five hundred dollars, which judgment is in full force, unappealed from and unsatisfied. All of these facts are set forth in petitioner's answer to said bill, and in his answer he offers to pay said five hundred dollars to complainant when said judgment and costs are satisfied, and his said liability entirely discharged and ended.

On said answer, the Chancery Court declared said five hundred dollars a trust fund, and made the order on petitioner aforesaid, of which he now complains. All of the foregoing facts will fully and at large appear by reference to the record in said cause, a perfect transcript of which is herewith filed as a part of this petition, and marked A.

Petitioner has served a notice on the complainant Doe that he will present said record to your Honor on this day, and move for a supersedeas to said interlocutory order, a copy of which notice is herewith filed, marked Exhibit No. 1.

The premises considered, petitioner prays your Honor to grant him an order superseding said order of said Chancery Court, and staying all further proceedings on said order.

This is the first application for a supersedeas in this case.

E. E. Young, Solicitor.

[To be sworn to by the petitioner in person, or by his agent or attorney, as in § 797, ante.]

If, on examination of the record, a case for a supersedeas is made out, the Court in term, or the Judge in vacation, will grant a supersedeas; and may require the petitioner to give bond with good security. If the writ is granted by the Court an order therefor will be entered on the minutes, as follows:

ORDER FOR A SUPERSEDEAS TO AN INTERLOCUTORY ORDER.

John Doe, vs. Richard Roe.

In the Chancery Court, at Kingston.

The defendant, Richard Roe, having this day presented to the Court a petition for a supersedeas to an interlocutory decree made in this cause, on July 17, 1890, ordering an execution to issue against him on his failure to pay into Court the sum of five hundred dollars within thirty days, and having exhibited to said petition a transcript of the record in this cause, and due notice of this application having been given the said Doe, on consideration thereof, it is ordered by the Court that, upon the petitioner giving bond and good security, the prayer of said petition be granted; and a writ of supersedeas will issue to stay all further proceedings on said interlocutory decree until the further order of this Court. Said bond will be in the penalty of one thousand dollars, payable to the complainant, John Doe, and conditioned to pay the amount of said decree, if so required upon final hearing; and further to pay all such costs and damages as the complainant may sustain by reason of said supersedeas.

If the writ is granted by a Judge he will endorse on the petition his

FIAT FOR A SUPERSEDEAS.

To the Clerk of the Supreme Court at Knoxville:

Upon this petition being filed, and a bond given in the penalty of one thousand dollars, conditioned as required by the statute in such a case, you will issue the writ of supersedeas as prayed in the petition.

M. M. Neil, Judge of the Supreme Court.

August 2, 1903.

The Court or Judge may require the petitioner to give a bond with good security, payable to the opposite party, conditioned to pay the amount of the interlocutory order or decree if so required upon final hearing, and further to pay all such costs and damages as the opposite party my sustain by reason of the supersedeas. The Clerk of the appellate Court will, upon order therefor being made, issue the supersedeas as ordered; and will also transmit to the Chancery Court a copy of the petition and supersedeas to be filed in the cause, and to constitute a part of the record.

If a supersedeas has been improperly granted, the petition therefor may be dismissed, and the supersedeas discharged, on motion of the adverse party, made before the Court in the Grand Division wherein the order or decree superseded was made.

19 Code, § 3933. 20 Code, § 3934. 21 Park v. Meck, 1 Lea, 78; Roberson v. Roberson, 3 Lea, 50.
§ 1279. Supersedeas of Final Process.—A writ of error does not stay proceedings on the decree complained of; and inasmuch as the decree may be executed before the appellate Court can pass on the errors assigned, it often becomes of great importance to the plaintiff-in-error to obtain a stay of proceedings until the hearing of the cause in the appellate Court. This stay is obtained by means of a supersedeas.

1. How a Supersedeas is Obtained. In order to obtain a supersedeas of a final decree, or of process issued thereon, the applicant must present the transcript of the record of the cause to some Judge of the appellate Court, accompanied by a petition, containing the brief to be used at the hearing of the cause in the appellate Court, and praying for a writ of error, and a supersedeas. The petition must also be accompanied by a copy of the notice served on the opposite party or his counsel, or by an affidavit giving a good and sufficient reason for not serving the notice. If the writ has already been granted, then the prayer will be for a supersedeas only. If a case for a supersedeas is made out to the satisfaction of the Judge, he will endorse on the petition his

FIAT FOR A SUPERSEDEAS.

To the Clerk of the Supreme Court at Jackson:

Upon this petition being filed, and a bond given for the amount of the decree complained of, and damages and costs, [or, upon the petitioner taking the pauper oath.] you will issue a writ of supersedeas, as prayed for in said petition. W. D. Beard, Chief Justice.

February 23, 1907.

The application for a supersedeas is usually made at the same time that the writ of error is applied for, and if both are granted the following would be the

FIAT FOR A WRIT OF ERROR AND SUPERSEDEAS.

To the Clerk of the Supreme Court at Jackson:

File this transcript and petition for a writ of error, which writ is granted upon a proper prosecution bond for costs being given, [and notify the defendant hereof, if not already notified.] And upon the plaintiff in error giving a sufficient supersedeas bond for the amount of the decree and damages and costs, issue a supersedeas to stay all further proceedings on said decree, [or, issue a writ of supersedeas as prayed in said petition.]

February 23, 1907. W. K. McAlister, Judge of the Supreme Court.

If the appellate Court of the Division in which the decree was pronounced be in session, the application for a supersedeas may be made in open Court as already shown.

2. The Bond for a Supersedeas. A writ of error does not suspend, or in any way interfere with, the proceedings in the Chancery Court to enforce the decree, and for this reason the statute allows any person to obtain the writ, without a supersedeas, by giving bond and security for costs alone; or, if unable to give security he is allowed to take the pauper's oath. But inasmuch as a writ of error and a supersedeas stay all proceedings on the decree complained of, in the same manner as does an appeal, the statute requires that, when both are granted, the bond shall be the same as on appeal, that is for the amount of the decree and damages and costs, if the decree is for a specific sum of money and against the party in his own right; in other cases, the bond is for costs only.

A supersedeas in aid of a writ of error may, however, be granted on the 22 See Goodman v. Floyd, 2 Hum., 59. On presenting records to one of the Judges in vacation, or to the Court in term time, for writs of error, or writs of error and supersedeas, a petition should accompany it, containing the brief to be used on the trial, and copy of notice to adverse party or counsel, or sufficient excuse for not giving the notice. Supreme Court Rules, § 27; 5 Pick., 777. The petition is only required to aid the Judge in the performance of his duty, and the supersedeas would be good if granted without a petition. Mowry v. Davenport, 6 Lea, 84. And so, the Judge may grant a supersedeas without any brief being filed; but a Solicitor who would apply for such extraordinary process without taking extraordinary pains to show himself entitled, either lightly esteems the writ, or is ignorant of the proper practice, or thinks the Judge has more time to sift out the errors in the record than he himself is willing to devote to the task.

23 A writ of error without a supersedeas may be obtained by giving bond and security for costs alone, or by taking the pauper oath. Code, § 3178 a; but where a supersedeas issues, the bond should be for the amount of the decree and damages and costs. Code, §§ 3164; 3184.
24 See ante, § 1274.
25 Code, § 3178 a. The oath may be taken before any officer authorized to administer oaths, Campbell v. Woulton, 3 Bax., 354; Knoxville Iron Co. v. Smith, 2 Pick., 45.
26 Code, §§ 3184; 3164; see, ante, § 1268.
pauper oath; but where there has been a levy on personal property, this should seldom be done, first because the levy shows that the plaintiff in error is not a pauper, and second, because the supersedeas releases the levy, and may thereby deprive the defendant in error of his only chance to make his debt. To enable the defendant in error to resist a supersedeas on the pauper oath, the statute provides, in cases of certiorari in the Circuit Court, that no supersedeas shall issue on the pauper oath without an express order of the Judge dispensing with security, and that such order may be made only on notice to the adverse party of the application to take the pauper oath; and this statute has been held to apply to like applications for a supersedeas made to an appellate Judge to stay proceedings on a final decree in the Chancery Court. A supersedeas granted on the pauper oath without notice to the defendant in error, would, nevertheless, be valid.

The following are the ordinary forms of writs of error and writs of supersedeas:

WRIT OF SUPERSEDEAS.

State of Tennessee.

Whereas it has been represented to us by the petition of Richard Roe, that John Doe has obtained a decree against him in the Chancery Court of Roane county, on the 17th day of July, 1890, for the sum of five hundred dollars, and that said decree is erroneous and unjust: And furthermore, that execution has issued, or is likely to issue, to enforce the collection of the same; and the aforesaid Richard Roe, having obtained an order from his Honor, David L. Snodgrass, one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of said State, for a supersedeas to issue in said case;

These are, therefore, to command you, the Sheriff aforesaid, that if you have the property of the said Richard Roe already levied upon, by virtue of said decree and execution, forthwith to restore the same to the said Richard Roe at your peril; and you will also notify said John Doe that said execution is superseded, and that he is inhibited from further proceeding with said decree and execution, until the further order of this Court. And how you shall have executed this process, you will make known to this Honorable Court, at the Court House, in Knoxville, the second Monday in September next.

Witness, D. D. Anderson, Clerk of our said Court, at office, in Knoxville, the second Monday in September, 1890.

D. D. ANDERSON, Clerk.

NOTICE OF WRIT OF ERROR.

State of Tennessee.

Whereas, Richard Roe having filed in the Supreme Court Clerk's Office for the Eastern Division of said State, at Knoxville, a certified transcript of the record in the case of John Doe vs. Richard Roe, recently determined in the Chancery Court of Roane county; and having entered into bond as required by law, and demanded a writ of error;

These are, therefore, to command you, the Sheriff aforesaid, that you notify the said John Doe thereof, and that he be and appear before the Judges of our said Supreme Court, at Knoxville, on the second Monday of September next, then and there to show cause, if any there be, why the judgment of the Court below, in said cause, should not be reversed or annulled; and have you then and there this writ.

Witness, S. E. Cleage, Clerk of our said Supreme Court, at office, in Knoxville, the second Monday of September, 1906.
CHAPTER LXXIII.
TRANSCRIPTS FOR APPEALS, AND WRITS OF ERROR.

§ 1280. Transcripts of Records, as Evidence, and for Review.
§ 1281. What a Transcript for an Appeal, or a Writ of Error, Should Contain.
§ 1282. Requisites of a Transcript.
§ 1283. Form of a Transcript for an Appeal, or a Writ of Error.
§ 1284. Abbreviated Transcript in Cases Appealed.
§ 1285. Suggestions in Reference to Making Out Transcripts.
§ 1286. Clerk's Fees for Transcripts.

§ 1280. Transcripts of Records, as Evidence, and for Review.—There is some confusion among the younger members of the Bar as to what transcripts' should contain. This confusion arises from the fact that what is a good transcript to be used as evidence, may not be a good transcript to be used in an appellate Court for the purpose of correcting errors.

1. Transcript for Use as Evidence. A transcript is often obtained to be used as evidence either (1) as the proof of a decree or judgment on which suit has been or is to be brought; or, (2) as a link in a chain of title; or, (3) as evidence of a former adjudication; or, (4) for any of the other purposes of proof. Such a transcript is quite a different thing from a transcript to be filed in an appellate Court in order that alleged errors therein may be reviewed and corrected. When the transcript is to be used as evidence, it consists of: 1, The process whereby the defendant was brought before the Court, and the Sheriff's return thereon; 2, The pleadings in the cause; 3, The various orders made of record in the cause; and 4, The decree. If the reports made in the cause, or the bill of exceptions, or any deposition filed in the cause, or other paper in the file, or the executions issued on the judgment, be needed for any purpose as a part of the original file in the cause, any one or more or all of them may be incorporated into the transcript, and thus be made evidence; but where the object of the transcript is to obtain the benefit of the decree, or of any order in the cause, as evidence, then nothing is essential to a perfect transcript except the process and the return thereon, the pleadings, orders on the minutes, and final decree.

2. Transcripts for Purposes of Review in an Appellate Court. When a transcript is needed to be filed in an appellate Court on an appeal, or an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, or for a writ of error, it must contain not only all that is required when the record is to be used as evidence, but it must, also, include the bonds filed in the cause, all the entries on the minutes, the reports of the Master and receiver, the depositions, all exceptions to pleadings, reports and depositions, the exhibits, the bill of exceptions, and all documents duly filed in the cause as evidence upon the issues presented by the pleadings.

The papers and matters that are no part of a record, and cannot be included in a transcript, unless duly incorporated in a bill of exceptions, or otherwise authenticated, have already been enumerated, and need not be repeated.

§ 1281. What a Transcript for an Appeal, or Writ of Error, should Contain. For the convenience of Clerks and Masters the following summary of what constitutes a transcript in case of appeal, or for a writ of error, is here given:

1 See Coffee v. Neely, 2 Heisk., 304. A decree in Chancery may be proved by a certified copy of the bill, answer, and decree. 1 Greenl. Ev., § 511. The caption of the decree should precede it. Ibid. In Lowry & Harris v. McLurkott, 5 Yerg., 225, it was held that a decree could be read in evidence without producing the bill and answers upon which it was made. See, Code, § 2030, sub-sec. 18; and § 2071. The adverse party can produce the balance of the record if it invalidates the decree. 2 As to the probative force of a record, see, ante, § 446. 3 See, ante, §§ 538; 1213-1214.
1. Bonds. All bonds given, and recognizances taken, during the prosecution of the cause, including prosecution, injunction, attachment, refunding, and replevin bonds, administrators', guardians', and receivers' bonds, and appeal bonds, and pauper oaths in lieu of bonds; and the endorsements thereon.

2. Process. All original and mesne process whereby a party is brought before the Court, such as original, mesne, and counterpart subpoenas to answer, attachment writs both original, alias, and ancillary, attachments to compel an answer, and judicial attachments; and the endorsements and returns thereon.

3. Pleadings. All pleadings filed in the cause, such as bills, amended and supplemental bills, pleas in abatement, demurrers, pleas in bar, replications to pleas, answers, amended and supplemental answers, cross bills and petitions to rehear, and the endorsements thereon; and all issues of fact submitted to a jury.

4. Exceptions to Pleadings. All exceptions to pleadings because of scandal, impertinence, or insufficiency, and the rulings of the Master and Chancellor thereon, including all appeals to the Chancellor.

5. Evidence. All exhibits to pleadings or to depositions, all depositions, grants, deeds, transcripts, or other writings or documents duly filed as evidence in the cause.

6. Reports and Exceptions Thereto. All reports by the Master, or a special commissioner, or a receiver, or a guardian, including reports on a reference and reports of sale; and all exceptions to all reports. But no guardian's or receiver's report should be included in a transcript unless some question is to be made on them in the appellate Court.

7. Rule Docket Entries. All orders made in the cause on the rule docket, such as publication orders, pro confessos, orders appointing guardians ad litem, orders setting aside pro confessos, orders awarding writs of scire facias and reviving a cause, and any other orders on which a question has been made in the Chancery Court.

8. Orders and Decrees. All the orders and decrees in the cause appearing on the minute book, and all orders made by the Chancellor in vacation; prefixing to the orders and decrees of each term the caption of the term, and to the orders and decrees of each day the caption of the minutes of that day.

9. The Bill of Exceptions. The bill of exceptions when incorporated into the transcript should omit all such expressions as "Here insert," or "Here copy," or "Here set it out;" and, in lieu, the particular deed, deposition, affidavit, or other paper referred to, should be copied in full, according to the direction.

10. Bill of Costs. The transcript should contain an itemized bill of costs, such as appears, or should appear, on the execution docket, showing the amount due each officer, witness, or other person, and on what account, and giving the State and county taxes.

11. Index. No transcript is complete without a good index, giving in alphabetical order the name of every paper, bond, writ, pleading, report, deposition, witness, order, and decree in the cause.

12. Certificate. Every transcript should be duly certified, and it is in good form for the Clerk to affix his seal of office to his certificate.

13. Transcript on a Second Appeal. If a cause once appealed to an appellate Court and remanded is again appealed, the transcript already in the appellate Court on the first appeal constitutes a part of the record in the cause, and the Clerk is required to make out and transmit a transcript of such proceedings only in the Chancery Court as were subsequent to the remandment of the cause.4

In making out all transcripts for the appellate Courts, Clerks should keep in mind that everything, from the filing of the prosecution bond to the final decree, must be entered in the order of time in which the papers were filed.

4 Code, § 3171.
and motions, orders, and decrees were made, so that nothing which was filed or done afterwards shall precede in the transcript what was previously filed or done, except in transcribing the evidence on which a report is based.

§ 1282. Requisites of a Transcript.—The appellate Courts have adopted the following rules in reference to transcripts:

1. All transcripts from the inferior Courts shall be written in a large, plain and legible hand, or printed, or type-written. It shall be so written on only one side of the paper, with black ink, upon law paper, in length fourteen inches, and in width eight and one-half inches, with half an inch between the lines, having a blank margin on the left of every page, and the whole firmly attached at the top.5

2. Clerks shall make out transcripts so that process, pleadings, rules, orders, decrees, judgments, and steps of whatever kind, shall be entered in the order of sequence as they occurred in the progress of the cause. The date of issuance of process and of the filing of pleadings, and the date of rules made in the Clerk's office, and the date and terms of rules, orders, decrees, judgments, and steps of every kind made in Court, shall precede the entry of the same, respectively, in the transcript; and the Clerk shall make a minute and perfect index of the contents of the transcript. In case there be any failure, omission, or defect as to any of these particulars by the Clerk of the inferior Court, he shall not be allowed any cost for the transcript wherein such failure, omission, or defect occurs.6

3. Unless there is a question on the same in the Court below, no notice to take depositions, nor caption of any deposition, nor affidavit, nor any other unnecessary paper, shall be inserted in the transcript; nor shall any fee be allowed any clerk for such matter. But the date of service of each paper so omitted shall be given, and also the time and place at which the deposition was taken, and who of the parties were present. And in copying depositions taken upon interrogatories, the answer shall follow each question. Reports and accounts shall follow the orders or decrees on which they are based, when practicable, and be followed by the proof on which they are taken. No report of receivers, or other matter not affecting the questions in controversy, shall be put in the transcript unless required by counsel, and then it shall be stated at whose instance it was done, and the cost thereof will be charged accordingly.7

4. In all cases appealed the transcripts must be filed in the appellate Court8 within forty days after the filing of the appeal bond, or a pauper oath in lieu, and, upon any Clerk and Master failing to comply with this rule, all costs for making the transcript will be disallowed. No transcript, after it has been filed, shall be taken from the Court House by counsel engaged in a cause without the Clerk's permission, or a receipt given therefor; and no transcript shall be carried out of the city in which the Court is held unless upon the order of the Court or one of the Judges, or unless it is otherwise directed by rule or general order of the Court, or where counsel desire the record in order to prepare brief required under these rules; in which case they will be allowed to take such records without order upon giving receipt therefor to the Clerk.9

5. When a Clerk of an inferior Court shall fail to make out and file with the 5 Supreme Court Rule, 2, adopted June 21, 1891; 6 Pick., 769. 7 ibid., 4. 8 There seems to be no express statute requiring Clerks to make out and file in the appellate Court transcripts of the record in case of appeals. Formerly, the original papers in an Equity cause were transmitted to the appellate Court, and the cause there heard de novo, as though originating there. See 2 Scott's Rev., 36; 485; Car. & Nich., 229; Cook, Appendix, 438; 2 Tenn., (Overt.), 395, note. Comm. Error (Act.) Sec. The statute in reference to transmitting transcripts is as follows: It is the duty of the Clerk of each of the several Courts, when a cause is taken by appeal in the nature of a writ of error, to the appellate Court, to make out and transmit by mail, to the Clerk of the Appellate Court of his Division, a transcript of the record, within forty days after the entry of appeal, unless the entry has been made within forty days of the regular term of the appellate Court, or during such term, and then forthwith, and transmit without delay to the Clerk of the appellate Court. Code, § 4041. The certificate of the postmaster of his county, that the transcript has been deposited in the post-office within the time prescribed in the preceding section, is presumptive evidence of the transmission required. Code, § 4042; Act of Feb. 12, 1907. 9 Sup. Court Rule, 5, as amended June —, 1905.

Clerk of this Court a transcript of the record in any cause in which the State of Tennessee is a party, in which an appeal is prayed and granted, in the time and manner prescribed by law, no cost will be allowed to such Clerk in such case. 10

6. In all transcripts, civil and criminal, hereafter sent to this Court, the Clerks of the inferior Courts shall indorse on the same the names of counsel for plaintiffs and defendants in their Courts, and of plaintiffs and defendants in the appellate Court, (if known to them,) and on their failure to do so, they will forfeit their fees in such cases. 11

§ 1283. Form of a Transcript for an Appeal, or a Writ of Error.—In order to further aid Clerks and Masters in making out transcripts for the appellate Courts, the following form is given:

MASTER’S REPORT.
Oct. 17, 1889, report filed, as follows: [Here insert it.]

DEPOSITION OF JOHN SMITH.16
May 2, 1889, filed. This deposition was read on the preliminary hearing, and will be found on page 17, ante.

DEPOSITION OF WM. SMITH.
Oct. 16, 1889, deposition filed. This deposition was taken by consent in the Master’s office, in presence of both parties and their Solicitors, and is as follows: [Setting it out.]

EXCEPTIONS TO MASTER’S REPORT.
Oct. 18, 1889, exceptions filed, as follows: [Here insert them, giving their form and style as closely as possible.]

COURT’S ACTION ON REPORT AND EXCEPTIONS.
Oct. 19, 1889, [Here copy the caption of the minutes of this day; and then give the entry showing the action of the Court on the report, and the exceptions thereto.

LEAVE TO FILE SUPPLEMENTAL BILL.
Oct. 20, 1889, [Here copy the caption of the minutes of this day, and then give the order allowing the supplemental bill to be filed.]

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL.
Oct. 20, 1889, supplemental bill filed, as follows: [Here insert it.]

14 For forms of captions, see, ante, §§ 532; 1138. The caption of the minutes of each term at which any entry was made in the cause should precede the caption of the minutes of the day when the entry was made; but where several entries are made at one term the caption of the term need not be repeated.

15 When an inspection of an original document will aid the appellate Court in reaching a conclusion as to its genuineness, integrity, age, meaning or other characteristic, the Chancellor may order it sent up with the transcript. See, ante, § 450, note 76.

16 The proof on which a report is based must follow the report in the transcript. Sup. Court Rule, 4.
ANSWER TO SUPPLEMENTAL BILL.
Nov. 2, 1889, answer filed, as follows: [Here insert it.]

DEPOSITION OF ROLAND ROE.
Dec. 3, 1889, deposition filed. This deposition was taken on notice served Nov. 10, 1889, and was taken at Concord, on Dec. 1, 1889, in presence of both parties, and the Solicitor of the defendant. Said deposition is as follows: [Here insert it.]

RECORD IN CASE OF JOHN DEN VS. RICHARD FEN.
Dec. 5, 1889, record filed, as follows: [Here copy the transcript, if it be a transcript: if it be an original record, copy it exactly as though you were making a transcript of it for the Supreme Court, on an appeal.]

DEMAND FOR A JURY.
April Term, 1890, [Here copy the caption of the minutes of the April Term, 1890.]
April 15, 1889, [Here copy the minutes of April 15, 1890, showing the demand for a jury in the cause.]

April 16, 1890, issues filed, as follows: [Here copy them.]

TRIAL BY JURY, AND VERDICT.
April 17, 1890, [Here copy the caption of the minutes of this day, and then give the entry on the minutes showing the trial, verdict, motion for a new trial, &c.]

FINAL DECREES.
April 18, 1890, [Here copy the caption of the minutes of this day, and then give the final decree.]

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.
April 20, 1890, bill of exceptions filed, as follows: [Here copy the bill of exceptions. Put the name of each witness on a separate line preceding his testimony or deposition; put the title of each deed, exhibit, or other paper, on a separate line; and in general so copy the bill of exceptions that every separate matter in it can easily be seen at a glance at the page it is on. This can only be done by the use of proper head-lines. There should be a separate head-line for every writ, pleading, deposition, deed, or other paper, the charge of the Court, and other important matter contained in the bill of exceptions.]

APPEAL BOND.
May 2, 1891, bond filed, as follows: [Here copy it.]

BILL OF COSTS.
[Here copy it in full, exactly as it appears on the execution docket; and then add the fees due the Clerk for making out the transcript, and for transmitting it.]

CERTIFICATE.
I, W. L. Trent, Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court at Knoxville, certify that the foregoing is a full, true and perfect transcript of the record and bill of costs, remaining in my office, in the case of John Doe and William Doe against Richard Roe, Roland Roe, Romeo Roe, Rupert Roe and Rachel Roe.

[And so continuing to the end. It is often proper to index the same matter under two heads: thus the depositions of witnesses should be indexed under the head of depositions, and, also, under the name of each witness in his alphabetical order.]
Remember that nothing contained in brackets [ ] in the foregoing form should go into the transcript, the matter in brackets being simply directory or explanatory to the Clerk.

Above all, remember the large, plain and legible hand in which the transcript must be written; and if printed or type-written it must be equally as plain and legible as though written. And it must be written or printed on only one side of the paper, and with good black ink, and upon law paper, with half an inch between the lines, having a blank margin on the left of every page, and the whole firmly fastened together at the top.\(^1\)

\(\text{§ 1284. Abbreviated Transcript in Cases Appealed.}\)—Often, if not generally, on appeals to an appellate Court, a large part of the matters contained in the transcript are so unnecessary that they are regarded by both counsel and Court as mere surplusage, needlessly encumbering and enlarging the transcript, and increasing the difficulty of finding what is really material to the questions sought to be raised in the appellate Court. To save the unnecessary expense, as well as the unnecessary burden to Court and counsel, arising from the insertion of unnecessary matters in a transcript it has been enacted that the appellant, or his Solicitor, in a case appealed, may designate in writing such parts of the record and papers in the case as he may desire to be put in the transcript, and the Clerk shall transcribe the same. The appellant, or his Solicitor, shall notify the opposite party, or his Solicitor, thereof, when the latter may, if desired, designate the remainder, or such parts of the remainder, of the record and papers of the cause as he may wish transcribed; and thereupon the Clerk shall transcribe the same. The Clerk may, however, proceed to transcribe all the record and papers until otherwise directed. If the appellate Court considers the designation of the remainder or additional parts of the record and papers unnecessary and burdensome it will adjudge the costs thereof against the party requiring the same.\(^2\)

The notice by the appellant may be as follows:

DESIGNATION BY APPELLANT OF WHAT TO GO INTO THE TRANSCRIPT.

John Doe, et al.,
vs.

To the Clerk and Master:

In the above case appealed by the defendants to the Supreme Court, the defendants hereby designate the following parts of the record and papers for insertion in the transcript:

1. Original bill and exhibits thereto.
2. Answer.
3. Depositions of Roland Roe and Wm. Smith.
5. Final Decree.

I desire no other parts of record or papers in said cause put into the transcript.

Aug. 1, 1905.

Jas. C. Ford, Solicitor for Defendants.

The designation must, of course, be filed with the Clerk and Master, and the appellant should notify the opposite party, or his Solicitor, thereof. This may be as follows:

NOTICE OF DESIGNATION AS TO TRANSCRIPT.

John Doe, et al.,
vs.

In Chancery at Knoxville.

\(^1\) Supreme Court Rule, 2. The importance of legible and well constructed transcripts cannot be easily over-estimated.

\(^2\) They are Essential to Justice. If a transcript is illegible, confused, or unsystematic, it may fail to be understood, and thus full justice fail to be done.

2. Ease and Expedition of Business Require Them. The Judges are under no obligation to strain their eyes out of their heads, or perplex their brains, in vainly striving to decipher the hieroglyphics often found in transcripts. Clerks are paid to so do their work that every part of the transcript shall be so plain as to be read without effort. See Glass v. Bennett, 5 Pick., 485.

3. Clerks' Costs for Transcripts Disallowed. It is no uncommon thing for the Supreme Court to strike out all of the costs for making out a transcript, when it is badly written, or otherwise imperfect. TRANSCRIPTS FOR APPEALS AND WRITS OF ERROR. § 1285

(defendants) have designated the following parts of the record and papers in said cause for insertion in the transcript.

[Here insert the parts contained in the designation.]

Aug. 1, 1905. JAS. C. FORD, Solicitor for Appellants.

If the appellees desire an abbreviated transcript they may, on receiving this notice, make a designation of additional parts of the record to be put into the transcript, as follows:

DESIGNATION BY APPELLEES AS TO THE REMAINDER OF TRANSCRIPT.

John Doe, et al.,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al.
To the Clerk and Master:

In this cause, which has been appealed to the Supreme Court by the defendants, who have designated certain parts of the record and papers for insertion in the transcript, the complainants hereby designate the following parts of the remainder of the said record for insertion:

1. Interlocutory decree, ordering a report.
2. Master's report.
3. All proof taken by the Master or filed with him by the parties for his consideration in making his report.
4. Exception to Master's report.
5. Court's action on report and exceptions thereto.

We wish no other parts transcribed.

If the appellees desire the entire remainder of the record and papers to go into the transcript, they need make no response to the notice of designation given them by the appellants.

The Clerk and Master will copy these designations and notices in the transcript, as they (1) are his authority for the omission from the transcript of those parts of the record not specified in the notices of designation; and (2), they are necessary to enable the appellate Court to adjudge the costs of the transcript in accordance with the statute.

The parties may make their designations of record at the foot of the decree or order granting the appeal, in which case no notice to the opposite party by the appellant is necessary.

Until a designation has been duly made the Clerk and Master may proceed to transcribe all the record and papers in the cause; and if, after he has begun his transcription, a designation is filed with him he should include in the transcript all that he has transcribed down to date of designation, and note the fact thus:

NOTATION OF TRANSCRIPTION BEFORE NOTIFICATION.

The record in this case was transcribed to this point before the following designation was filed: [Here insert the designation of appellants, and if the appellees have made a designation insert that also; and then proceed to transcribe what is specified in the designation, or designations.]

§ 1285. Suggestions in Reference to Making Out Transcripts.—Clerks and Masters will find that the observance of the following rules will save them time, labor, perplexity, and annoyance, in making out a transcript in a cause:

1. Arrange all the Papers in Due Chronological Order. Do this at the outset, before you copy a paper. If you have properly kept your rule docket, it will give in due order of time every paper filed in the cause, and thus greatly aid you.

2. Make a Memorandum of the Date of Every Entry on the Minutes. By consulting the index you will have no trouble in obtaining these dates. Put each date, the subject of the entry, and the page of the minute book where entered, on a separate piece of paper, the size of the back of an ordinary paper when duly folded for filing. This done, insert these slips or pieces of paper among the other papers in the cause in their proper order of time.
3. Separate the Reports and Accounts, the Decrees Ordering Them, and the Proofs on Which they are Taken, from the Balance of the File. If there be a report, or an account, in the cause, let it follow the order or decree of reference, and let the proof on which it is based follow it.\textsuperscript{19} As a rule, the proof will follow it, in due order of time; but sometimes the Master bases his report, in part or in whole, on proof taken before the order of reference. When such proof was heard by the Chancellor before the reference, it should go into the transcript in strict order of time; but the Master should make a reference to it in giving the proof on which his report is based, as heretofore shown. Your file being thus properly assorted, in due order of sequence, as required by the appellate Court Rules,\textsuperscript{20} may now be delivered to the copyist.

4. Put a Proper Caption to Every Bond, Writ, Pleading, Deposition, Deed, Order, Report, Decree, or Other Separate Paper Copied. Put this caption on a separate line in a plain, bold, legible hand, as shown in the foregoing form. Make the caption short, not exceeding four or five words.

5. Follow Each Caption with the Date of the Filing, or Entry. The Rules of the appellate Courts require that the date shall \textit{precede} the entry of every paper, rule, order, or decree.\textsuperscript{21} Facts cannot be understood when divorced from their dates,\textsuperscript{22} and hence the vast importance of knowing the date before the fact is made known.

6. Omit Unnecessary Matters. Notices to take depositions, captions and certificates to depositions, affidavits relating to the transmission of depositions, reports of receivers, subpoenas for witnesses, notices, or other matter not affecting the questions in controversy, should not be incorporated into the transcript, unless required by counsel; and then the Clerk will state at whose instance it was put in. Affidavits, used in support of a motion made in the cause, are no part of the record unless made so by a bill of exceptions, or by express order on the minutes to that effect; and, therefore, should not be copied into the transcript.

7. How to Make Out the Index. Prepare about twenty-six small sheets of paper, and letter them A, B, C, &c., consecutively, and put each sheet in the index to any of your record books, putting sheet A on page A, sheet B on page B, and so on. Then your transcript being completed and bound, go through it, and as you reach a head-line, say Bond for Costs, turn to the letter B in your index, and put Bond for Costs on the memorandum sheet B you have previously put there. In this way go through the whole transcript. Then take your memorandum index sheets out of your index, and have them copied into the transcript, in due alphabetical order.

\section*{§ 1286. Clerk's Fees for Transcripts.}—In case of appeals, or appeals in the nature of a writ of error, it is the duty of the Clerk and Master to make out and duly transmit to the Clerk of the appellate Court a full, true, and perfect transcript of the record in the cause, without his fees being prepaid, even when the appeal is on the pauper oath. But when any person or party applies to the Clerk for a transcript in any other case, as for a writ of error, or a writ of \textit{supersedeas}, or to file as evidence, the Clerk may, and generally does, require his fees to be paid, or well secured, before he begins the work, or delivers the transcript.\textsuperscript{23}

After a Clerk has duly made out and filed a transcript, his duty in that regard is at an end; and if such transcript be lost, destroyed or mutilated, it must be supplied as provided in the statute, and the Clerk cannot be required to make out another transcript, unless his fees therefor are paid before delivery.\textsuperscript{24}

CHAPTER LXXIV.

THE COURT OF CIVIL APPEALS: ITS HISTORY AND JURISDICTION.

§ 1287. The Court of Civil Appeals.
§ 1288. Jurisdiction of the Court of Civil Appeals.
§ 1289. How Causes are Heard in the Court of Civil Appeals.

§ 1287. The Court of Civil Appeals.—Such had been the increase of litigation in Tennessee, consequent on the increase of population and wealth, that it was impossible for our Supreme Court to hear and determine all the appeals, in civil and criminal causes, with due deliberation and accurateness, notwithstanding the extraordinary industry of the Judges, and the admirable rules by them devised for the speedy dispatch of business and the ready attainment of correct results.

In order to aid the Supreme Court, the Legislature in 1883, authorized its Judges to appoint a commission of three lawyers as referees for two years to whom the Court might refer such cases on its dockets as it saw fit. This commission sat as a quasi Court, heard arguments, and made written reports to the Supreme Court of their findings of facts and law. Upon these findings parties dissatisfied therewith filed assignments of errors, as in case of exceptions to Masters' reports, and the cases were heard in the Supreme Court upon these assignments.

While the Commission of Referees was of great assistance to the Supreme Judges, it was not continued. But the dockets of the Supreme Court continued to be crowded with appeals, and further relief became indispensable to the speedy determination of these causes.

Inasmuch as in appeals from Chancery decrees the Supreme Court was required by statute to re-examine the whole matter of law and fact appearing in the record, it was considered that the best method of aiding the Supreme Court would be by relieving it of the necessity of passing on the facts of the case in Chancery causes. Accordingly the Court of Chancery Appeals was established, not as an independent appellate Court, but rather as a handmaid of the Supreme Court in the ascertainment of the facts in cases appealed from the Chancery Courts.

While the Court of Chancery Appeals, composed of learned, diligent and impartial Judges, from its creation, gave great satisfaction to all concerned, nevertheless, in consequence of appeals being allowed therefrom to the Supreme Court in all cases, the dockets of the latter Court continued overloaded, notwithstanding the industry of its Judges, and its stringent rules as to arguments and briefs. Therefore, to further relieve the Supreme Court the Legislature, in 1907, made three important changes in the Court of Chancery Appeals: 1st, it increased the number of Judges to five; 2d, it greatly enlarged its jurisdiction; and 3d, it changed its name to "Court of Civil Appeals," in conformity with its increased jurisdiction over both civil actions at law and suits in Chancery.

§ 1288. Jurisdiction of the Court of Civil Appeals.—The jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery Appeals was dependent upon the action of the Supreme Court assigning causes for its determination; but the jurisdiction of the Court of Civil Appeals is absolute and wholly independent of any assignment by the Supreme Court. \(^5\) Causes were not appealed to the Court of Chancery Appeals, but to the Supreme Court. Under the said Act of 1907, all causes of which it has jurisdiction are appealed, or otherwise taken, direct to the Court of Civil Appeals. The language of the Act is as follows:

"The jurisdiction of the Court of Civil Appeals is appellate only, and extends (1) to all cases brought up from Courts of Equity or Chancery Courts, except cases in which the amount involved, exclusive of costs, exceeds one thousand dollars, and except cases involving the constitutionality of the statutes of Tennessee, contested elections for office, State revenue and ejectment suits; and (2) to all civil cases tried in the Circuit and Common Law Courts of the State, in which appeals in the nature of writs of error, or writs of error, may be applied for the purpose of having the action of said trial Court reviewed. In all cases in which appellate jurisdiction is conferred upon said Court of Civil Appeals, the appeals and appeals in the nature of writs of error from the lower Court shall be taken directly to the Court of Civil Appeals; and this Court, or any Judge thereof, is given the same power to award and issue writs of error, certiorari and supersedeas, which the Supreme Court had in such cases, returnable to the Court of Civil Appeals. The practice in such cases in the latter Court shall be the same as that prescribed by law for the Supreme Court." \(^6\)

The Court of Civil Appeals has all the powers of the Supreme Court necessary to fully enforce and effectuate its appellate jurisdiction; and the Court, or any Judge thereof, may grant writs of error, certiorari, and supersedeas, returnable before it. \(^6\)

And in the cases within its jurisdiction, the Court has full authority by certiorari, mandamus, or otherwise, to obtain a perfect record, and to adopt and use all the means necessary to the full and efficient exercise of an appellate jurisdiction.

The Court is empowered to prescribe its own rules of practice. \(^7\) And the Clerks and Marshals of the Supreme Court are, also, the Clerks and Marshals of the Court of Civil Appeals, and are required to perform the same duties. \(^8\) The concurrence of a majority of the Judges is sufficient for all purposes. \(^9\)

§ 1289. How Causes are Heard in the Court of Civil Appeals.—The rules of practice, the course of procedure, and the forms of orders, decrees and writs, are the same as those of the Supreme Court; and for convenience and brevity they are incorporated in a subsequent Chapter on the proceedings and practice in both Courts. \(^10\)

§ 1290. The Decrees of the Court of Civil Appeals.—Unless superseded, modified or reversed, as hereinafter shown, the decrees and judgments of the Court are final; \(^13\) and executions, writs of possession, and all other proper pro-

---

\(^5\) The Act of 1907 prohibits the Supreme Court from assigning cases to the Court of Civil Appeals. See § 7 of Act of appeals, and not to the Supreme Court. Why cases involving the constitutionality of a statute, contested elections, and revenue and ejectment suits, brought in the Circuit Courts, must be appealed to the Court of Civil Appeals, when like suits in the Chancery Courts must be appealed to the Supreme Court, is not apparent; nor are some other features of the Act. It would, perhaps, have been better to have had no restrictions on appeals, appeals in the nature of writs of error, and writs of error, from one Court that do not apply to all Courts alike; and the Act will, probably, be so amended.

\(^6\) The meaning of the Act seems to be, 1st, that in all cases tried in the Chancery Courts involving not exceeding one thousand dollars, exclusive of costs, except cases involving the constitutionality of statutes, contested elections and revenue and ejectment suits, and 2d, that in all civil cases, without limit or restriction, tried in the Circuit and Common Law Courts, all appeals, or appeals in the nature of writs of error, and all writs of error, shall be to the Court of Appeals, and not to the Supreme Court. Why cases involving the constitutionality of a statute, contested elections, and revenue and ejectment suits, brought in the Circuit Courts, must be appealed to the Court of Civil Appeals, when like suits in the Chancery Courts must be appealed to the Supreme Court, is not apparent; nor are some other features of the Act. It would, perhaps, have been better to have had no restrictions on appeals, appeals in the nature of writs of error, and writs of error.

cess may issue thereon. The fact that a cause has been certiorari\textit{d} by the Supreme Court will neither prevent the issuance of final process on the judgments and decrees of the Court of Civil Appeals, nor stay the enforcement of such process after its issuance.\textsuperscript{14} Final process can be stayed by a supersedeas, only.

The Court of Civil Appeals may affirm, modify or reverse any decree brought before it for review, or it may remand the cause for further proceedings.

The decrees and judgments of the Court of Civil Appeals are as conclusive as those of the Supreme Court, unless changed as herein shown, and are a lien on the debtor's land.\textsuperscript{15} On affirmance of a money decree of the Court of Civil Appeals by the Supreme Court, interest thereon from the date of its rendition to the day of affirmance will be allowed.\textsuperscript{16}

The forms of decrees in the Court of Civil Appeals are the same as those in like cases pronounced by the Supreme Court, except, of course, their commencements. The following forms will serve as illustrations:

\textbf{DECREE AFFIRMING DEGREE BELOW, WITH MODIFICATION.}

This cause came on to be heard before the Honorable Court of Civil Appeals upon the transcript of the record from the Chancery Court of \textit{........} county, the assignment of errors by the appellants and the reply of the appellees thereto and argument of counsel, from all of which it appears that there is no error in the decree of the Chancellor dismissing the bill, and that portion of his decree is affirmed.

But this Court is of opinion, and does accordingly adjudge and decree that the Chancellor was in error in reinstating the injunction in this cause, and said injunction is hereby dissolved, the error assigned to that portion of the decree by the defendant being sustained, but all other errors assigned are overruled.

It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed by the Court that complainants John Doe and John Den as principals, and Frank Friend as surety on the prosecution bond, pay all the costs of the cause both in this Court and in the Chancery Court, for which execution may issue.

\textbf{DECREE REVERSING THE DEGREE BELOW.}

This cause came on to be heard before the Honorable Court of Civil Appeals, upon the transcript of the record from the Chancery Court of \textit{........} county, the assignment of errors by the appellants, the reply of the appellees thereto, the briefs and arguments of counsel, on consideration of all which the Court is of opinion, and so adjudges and decrees, that there is manifest error in the decree of the Chancellor, and the same is reversed accordingly.

The Court is of opinion, and so adjudges and decrees that [Here insert the matters decreed, and adjudge the costs; or if the cause is remanded for further proceedings, so show, and specify what is to be done on remandment.]

\textbf{§ 1291. \textit{How the Decrees and Judgments of the Court May be Reviewed in the Supreme Court.}}—No appeal, nor appeal in the nature of a writ of error, lies from the judgments and decrees of the Court of Civil Appeals to the Supreme Court. The Act, however, provides two methods by which the revisory power of the Supreme Court may be exercised over such judgments and decrees.

\textbf{1. The Court of Civil Appeals, on its Own Motion,} may certify to the Supreme Court any case on its docket, as to which it desires the opinion and decision of the latter Court, in which event the Supreme Court will take jurisdiction of such case, and finally determine the same, upon the original transcript filed in the Court of Civil Appeals. It would be proper for the latter Court to exercise this discretion in any case, 1st, where the magnitude of the case, or the importance of the question involved, made it proper that the Supreme Court should determine it; and 2d, where it was doubtful whether the case should \item \textsuperscript{15} Acts of 1897, ch. 131, § 12.

\item \textsuperscript{16} Cowan, McClung & Co. v. Donaldson, 11 Pick., 327.
\end{itemize}
have been brought before it for review, or should have been taken directly to the Supreme Court. 17

2. Upon Petition of a Party Aggrieved. Any party dissatisfied with a final decree or judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals may present to the Supreme Court, or to one of the Judges thereof, a petition sworn to, stating the substance of the case he complains of, accompanied by an assignment of error, or errors, and brief in support thereof, and pray for a writ of certiorari, [error; 18] and, also, for a writ of supersedeas. On a prima facie case being thus presented, the Supreme Court, or one of its Judges, in term time or in vacation, may award a writ of certiorari; and, in a proper case, and on such terms and bond as the Court, or one of its Judges, may prescribe, a writ of supersedeas may be ordered in aid of the certiorari. 19

Upon the award of such certiorari, the cause in question is, ipso facto, transferred to the Supreme Court, where it stands to be heard, in its order upon the docket, upon the original transcript, the petition for the certiorari, the assignment of errors, the brief and the writs of error 20 and supersedeas when issued—these constituting the record in the Supreme Court.

But no such certiorari, or supersedeas, shall be issued after the lapse of ninety days from the final decree or judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals. 21 If no supersedeas issues the decree or judgment can be enforced, in spite of the award of a certiorari; but if the decree or judgment should be reversed by the Supreme Court it will award a writ of restitution, or a writ of restitution in the nature of a writ of fieri facias, as right and justice may require. 22

The following is a form of a petition to remove a case from the Court of Civil Appeals to the Supreme Court: 23

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF ERROR AND SUPERSEDEAS.

To the Honorable Supreme Court of Tennessee, sitting at Knoxville, [or Nashville, or Jackson] or to any of the Judges thereof:

In the Court of Civil Appeals, on appeal from the Chancery Court of Knox County.

Your petitioner, the said John Doe, complainant in said cause, respectfully represents:

I. That he is much aggrieved by a final decree made in said case by the Court of Civil Appeals on the...day of......, [giving the date] dismissing his bill, and taxing him with the costs, and awarding an execution therefor to the Sheriff of Knox county.

II. That the substance of said case is as follows: [Here set out briefly what the bill charged, what the answer was, and what the proof showed. If the bill was dismissed on motion, or demurrer, give the ground of the motion, or demurrer.]

III. Petitioner avers that said decree is erroneous because the law and the facts are not as found by said Court, in these particulars: 1st, [Here give briefly the errors complained of. See, post, §§ 1303 and 1305.] All of which will more fully appear in the brief hereto attached, and made a part hereof, marked A. [For form of brief see § 1306, post.]

IV. Petitioner more than five days ago had notice served on the defendants that he would present this petition here and now. A copy of said notice is hereto attached marked B.

V. The premises considered, petitioner prays [ &c., as in § 1275, ante, where forms of flat and notice will be found, the changes necessary being obvious.]

17 This discretion will, perhaps, be oftener exercised in civil cases brought up from the Circuit Courts, as there is no limit to the jurisdiction of the Court of Civil Appeals in such cases.

The Act will, probably, be amended so as to impose the same limits on appeals from the Circuit Courts as are imposed on appeals from the Chancery Courts. See note 6, supra.

18 The Act says, "writ of certiorari," but evidently a writ of error is intended. See note 20, infra.

19 Act of 1907, § 8.

20 The language "writs of error and supersedeas," in the 9th section of the Act of 1907, shows that the words "writ of error" are used as synonymous with certiorari. See note 18, supra. But, in fact, no writ issues as the record is already in the custody of the Clerk of the Supreme Court, he being, also, ex-officio, Clerk of the Court of Civil Appeals.

21 The ninety days will, probably, begin to run from the day the decree or judgment is entered on the minutes of the Court. Bank v. Johnson, 21 Pick. 521; unless there be a petition for a rehearing, and then from the day such petition is finally disposed of by an entry on the minutes. But on this point, see Patterson v. Bank, 17 Pick. 511.

22 See, ante, § 657, sub-sec. 1. In the head-line of this sub-section the word "injunction" should be "execution."

23 See, ante, § 1263a, note 15a.

24 See, ante, § 1275, for a form of petition. The practice and forms in §§ 1270-1279, relating to writs of error and supersedeas apply to like writs in bringing up cases from the Court of Civil Appeals.
CHAPTER LXXV.

THE SUPREME COURT: ITS HISTORY AND JURISDICTION.

§ 1292. Short History of the Supreme Court. — Prior to the year 1809 the Superior Courts of Law and Equity, which were the predecessors of our Circuit and Chancery Courts, were the highest Courts in our State; and their decisions were final, except when reviewable by the Supreme Court of the United States. In the year 1809, a Supreme Court of Errors and Appeals was established, composed of two Supreme Judges and one of the Circuit Judges. The Judges were elected by the Legislature, and the Court was held at Jonesboro, Knoxville, Nashville and Clarksville; and writs of error lay to it from the Circuit Courts. In 1811, this Supreme Court of Errors and Appeals was given exclusive original jurisdiction in all causes in Equity; and the Equity causes then pending in the Circuit Courts were transferred to it, the original files being sent up, along with transcripts of the entries on the minutes in each case. Its powers and jurisdiction in Equity causes were the same the Circuit Courts had previously possessed, except that issues of fact had to be tried by a jury in the Circuit Court most convenient to the parties. The same statute repealed the former law requiring one of the Circuit Judges to sit in the Supreme Court, and enacted that unless both of the Supreme Judges should concur in a reversal, the judgment of the Circuit Court should be affirmed.

In 1813, the Circuit Courts were vested with concurrent original jurisdiction of all causes in Equity, this jurisdiction to be governed by the rules and regulations governing the Supreme Courts of Errors and Appeals. In 1819 an appeal was allowed from what the statute terms the "Chancery Circuit Court" to the Supreme Court of Errors and Appeals, where the cause was re-examined upon the whole matters of law and fact as though originally commenced in the Supreme Court. In 1815, the number of the Judges of the Supreme Court of Errors and Appeals was increased to three, and they were required, by arrangements among themselves, to hold a Court of Equity twice a year at various places, each Court being held by one of the Judges only. In 1823, the number of Judges was increased to four, and in 1824 to five, and then reduced to four again. In 1827, all laws giving the Judges of the Supreme Court of Errors and Appeals original Chancery jurisdiction were repealed, and two Chancellors were chosen by the Legislature to hold the Chancery Courts of the State, the State being divided into two Chancery Divisions: 1, the Eastern, whose Courts were held at Rogersville, Greeneville, Kingston, Carthage and McMinnville; and 2, the Western, whose Courts were held at Franklin, Columbia, Charlotte, Jackson and Paris.

In 1825, it was enacted that where the Chancellor was incompetent, the cause should be transferred to the Supreme Court; and in 1829, there was a similar enactment, this being after the creation of the office of Chancellor: in these 4 Acts of 1819, ch. 31, § 2; 2 Scott's Rev., 485. See Code, § 3155. This is the first statute that speaks of Chancery Courts, and the first that allows an appeal to the Supreme Court. Errors of the Circuit Courts before this Act were reviewed on writs of error. See acts of 1809, ch. 4, § 26.

transferred cases, the original papers were sent up, and the cause heard de novo, the Supreme Judges being given the power to revise all orders and decrees made prior to the transmission of the cause.\(^9\)

In 1834, an amended Constitution was adopted by which a Supreme Court was established, composed of three Judges, elected by the Legislature for twelve years, one of whom should reside in each of the three Grand Divisions of the State: its jurisdiction was declared to be appellate only.\(^10\) In 1835, it was enacted that this Supreme Court should sit once a year at Nashville, Knoxville, and Jackson; and various laws were passed in reference to the appellate jurisdiction of the Court, and when and how appeals and writs of error would lie from the inferior Courts, being substantially the same as those now in force.\(^11\) In 1853, by a special amendment to the Constitution, the Judges were made elective by the people.\(^11\)\(^a\) The Constitution of 1870 increased their number to five, and provided that one of them should preside as Chief Justice; but made no material change in the status, powers or jurisdiction of the Court, except to fix its sessions at Knoxville, Nashville, and Jackson.\(^12\)

\(\S\) 1292a. Great Duties of the Supreme Court.—1. To see that the rights and privileges reserved to themselves by the People in their Constitution are maintained inviolate;\(^12\)\(^b\) 2. To keep the Legislature,\(^12\)\(^b\) the Courts, municipal corporations, and all other creatures of the law, within their Constitutional and lawful jurisdiction; 3. To revise and correct, or remand for correction, every error made by any inferior Court, whereby the complaining litigant was in any way injured, or deprived of his legal rights; and 4. To issue all process, and make all orders, rules, judgments, and decrees necessary to fully effectuate its appellate jurisdiction, or to fully enforce its own mandates.\(^12\)\(^c\)

\(\S\) 1293. Nature of its Jurisdiction.—The object of the People in ordaining and establishing the Supreme Court was to have a tribunal to supervise all the other Courts of the State; to keep them within the limits of the law and the Constitution; to see that right and justice are duly administered by them; to revise all their rulings, orders, judgments, and decrees, and correct all errors therein, or remand the cause for their correction in the Court where made; and finally to give a uniform and harmonious exposition and construction of the law, so that the law might be one and the same in all the counties, Circuits and Divisions of our State.\(^13\) To effectuate these great objects, the Constitution declares that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court shall be appellate only, with such other jurisdiction as was conferred by law at the adoption of the Constitution.\(^14\) This other jurisdiction is confined exclusively to such matters as are necessarily incident to, or are absolutely necessary to carry out and complete, its appellate jurisdiction.\(^15\) The Supreme Court has no original jurisdiction;\(^16\)

\(12\) Acts of 1853-4, Res. xvi.
\(13\) Const. of 1870, Art. VI, §§ 1-3.
\(14\) While the Supreme Court cannot restrain the Legislature directly, it can enjoin the enforcement of its unconstitutional acts, and declare them null and void. The judiciary must magnify and protect the supreme law.\(^6\) Caruthers, J., in Alexandria v. Dearborn, 2 Sneed, 103, 125.
\(15\) As to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, see 2 Meigs' Dig., § 928. It would seem that the Supreme Court, while sitting in one Grand Division of the State, has no jurisdiction of any cause originating in another Division. Baird v. Turnpike Co.\(^1\) Lea. 394
\(16\) The Supreme Court, in exercising its appellate functions, keeps in mind the following considerations:
1. To review causes from the Courts below on the hypothesis that all things have been rightly and regularly done; and not be actuated by a spirit of censoriousness or hyper-criticism.

2. To so rule that all inferior Courts will be kept within the orbits of their respective jurisdictions.
3. To give a healthy tone to the practice of the lower Courts, and the general jurisprudence of the State.
4. Where there are questions of doubt in matters of law, not controlled by our own decisions or statutes, to resolve them according to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, for thus a uniform national jurisprudence is built up.
5. Where there are doubts arising from a difference between the common law and the principles of Equity, to decide them for the Confederation, and thereby our jurisprudence is made more consonant to the essential requirements of perfect justice.
6. But, in all cases, and at all times, to keep in mind that the welfare of the People is the object of all law and the purpose of all government.

The Supreme Court was constituted by the People in their sovereign capacity, and the Legislature cannot impair its Constitutional powers, or limit its Constitutional jurisdiction.

\(14\) Const. of 1834, Art. XI, § 2.
and none can be conferred upon it by the Legislature, or assumed on its own motion, or obtained by consent of parties. And it can issue no process except in aid of its appellate jurisdiction, or in enforcement of its orders, rules, judgments and decrees. It can exercise jurisdiction over litigation and litigants only after suit has been instituted in a lower Court, and after some party to such suit has brought up the record thereof in some legal mode for the purpose of having some, or all, of the proceedings in the cause in the lower Court revised, reversed, or superseded.

By the Act of 1907, the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is confined to appeals, appeals in the nature of a writ of error, and writs of error, 1st, in all criminal cases, and 2d, in all cases brought up from Courts of Equity, or Chancery Courts, (1) where the amount involved does not exceed one thousand dollars, exclusive of costs, or (2) where the constitutionality of a Tennessee statute is involved, or (3) contested elections for office, or (4) revenue, or (5) ejectment suits. The Court has no jurisdiction of any civil case tried in the Circuit or common law Courts; and no jurisdiction of any cases tried in the Chancery Courts except the five classes above stated.

But the Supreme Court may, by writ of error, (called a writ of certiorari in the Act of 1907,) bring up and review any case wherein the Court of Civil Appeals has pronounced a final decree, or judgment; and may affirm, modify or reverse such decree, or judgment, or may remand the cause to be further proceeded in, as right and justice may require.

§ 1293a. How Causes are Heard in the Supreme Court.—The rules of practice, the course of procedure, and the forms of orders, decrees and writs, in the Supreme Court, are set out in the next Chapter, somewhat generalized so as to adapt the Chapter to the practice, procedure, and forms of the Court of Civil Appeals.

20 The following letter from the then Judges of the Supreme Court is here given as evidence of the correctness of the exposition of the Supreme Court rules given herein:

SUPREME COURT OF TENNESSEE,
KNOXVILLE, TENN., Oct. 21, 1891.

Hon. Henry R. Gibson,

"Dear Sir: We have examined your late work on Suits in Chancery, and take pleasure in congratulating you on the completion of a work which manifests great research, and the utmost precision.

"The arrangement of subjects, and system of sub-heads, is excellent. We are certain that it is a work which will find a permanent place in the legal literature of the State; and that it will prove to be of inestimable value to the practitioner in our Courts of Chancery. We are particularly gratified to find a Chapter devoted to the Exposition of the Recent Rules of the Supreme Court.

"The forms you give for briefs, assigning errors, and reply briefs of appellies, will be of great value as a guide to practice under these rules.

"Very respectfully,

PROCEEDINGS AND PRACTICE IN THE APPELLATE COURTS.

ARTICLE I. Matters Relating to their Jurisdiction and Powers.

ARTICLE II. Briefs in the Appellate Courts.

ARTICLE III. Motions in the Appellate Courts.

ARTICLE IV. The Hearing and Decrees.

ARTICLE I.

MATTERS RELATING TO THEIR JURISDICTION.

§ 1293b. Proceedings in Both Appellate Courts Substantially the Same. Inasmuch as the practice and procedure, the motions and hearings, the writs, orders and decrees, in the Court of Civil Appeals are substantially the same as those in the Supreme Court, they are all considered in this Chapter, immaterially generalized, to avoid unnecessary repetition and to economize space; and both Courts are treated under the general name of “Appellate Courts.”

§ 1294. How their Jurisdiction is Obtained.—In the lower Courts, original jurisdiction is obtained by the issuance of original writs to bring the defendant before the Court. The appellate Courts, however, having no original jurisdiction, can issue no original writs. All the cases brought within their jurisdiction must first have originated in some lower Court, and must have been there proceeded in until some order, judgment, or decree was made or rendered which some party thereto desires to have reviewed, in some method sanctioned by law.

The various methods provided for bringing causes from the Chancery Courts into the appellate Courts are:

1. By a Supersedeas, which is granted by the appellate Court, or by any of its Judges, on petition, accompanied by the record of the cause; and which operates not to remove the cause permanently, but to stay some affirmative interlocutory order of the lower Court, until final decree, when the whole cause may be removed and reviewed, by one of the methods following.

2. By an Appeal, which is prayed and granted in the Chancery Court and which brings up the whole case for re-examination as to every question of law and fact in the record.

3. By an Appeal in the Nature of a Writ of Error, which is practically the same as an appeal, and is obtained in the same way, and has mainly the same effect, except in cases of trials by jury.

4. By a Writ of Error, which is obtained after a final decree below by filing a transcript of the cause with the Clerk of the appellate Court, or by petition to the proper appellate Court, or to one of its Judges.

§ 1295. Supersedeas of Interlocutory Decrees of the Lower Courts.—Sometimes the inferior Courts make affirmative orders or decrees, and issue executions or other final process in enforcement thereof, before final decree, in cases or under circumstances not warranting such orders or process; and, as no appeal or writ of error will lie except from a final decree, the party aggrieved is without remedy in the Court below. In such a case he may, on a sworn petition, obtain from the appellate Court in term time, or from any one of the Judges in vacation, a supersedeas to such interlocutory order, or decree, or to the execution or other final process thereon.\footnote{Code, §§ 3933; 3934; 4513; 3178. For the form of petition, see § 1276, ante. An appellate Court, while sitting in one Grand Division of the State, will not supersede an order in a cause originating in another Grand Division; but the Judge to whom the record in such a case is assigned will act on the application. Sneed, 21 Pick., 711.}{\footnote{Vanvabry v. Staton, 4 Pick., 341.}}}}\footnote{The Courts will not require the Chancellor to sign a particular bill of exceptions when he disputes its correctness. Ibid.}}\footnote{§ 1296. Mandamus in Aid of their Jurisdiction.—The appellate Court can issue any writ aderate to overcome any attempt to prevent a party entitled from taking a cause to that Court for review; and if it be necessary to compel a Judge, Clerk, or other officer to do some act necessary to enable a party entitled to obtain a proper record of the proceedings he complains of, or to perfect his appeal, or to obtain a transcript, the appellate Court will issue a mandamus to the Judge or other officer in default, to do the act sought to have done, or show cause why he should not be compelled to do it. Thus, if a Judge of an inferior Court improperly refuses to sign a bill of exceptions, the appellate Court will award an alternative writ of mandamus to compel him to sign it, or show cause to the contrary. To entitle a party to a mandamus, however, he must have done, himself, everything necessary to entitle him to the grant of the appeal, or to the signature of the Judge to the bill of exceptions, or to the other act he seeks to have done. Thus, to entitle him to an appeal, he must pray for one at the proper time and place, and must tender a proper appeal bond, or pauper oath; and to entitle him to a bill of exceptions, he must tender one at the proper time and place, and it must contain the truth of the case fairly stated. If it does not fairly state the truth of the case, the Chancellor should so change it as to make it conform to the facts.}}\footnote{§ 1297. Certiorari in Aid of their Jurisdiction.—The writ of certiorari is one of the recognized agencies whereby the appellate Court brings up the record of another Court, or tribunal, in enforcement of its appellate jurisdiction, and is resorted to in two cases: 1. In cases of a judicial nature where an appeal, or an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, will not lie, or is improperly refused. In such a case a}{\footnote{x Turnpike, 1 Lea, 394; Enochs v. Wilson, 11 Lea, 232.}{\footnote{M. & M. R. v. Huggins, 7 Coll., 218; Blake v. Dodge, 8 Lea, 466.}{\footnote{M. & M. R. v. Huggins, 7 Coll., 218; Baird v. Turnpike, 1 Lea, 394; Troughber v. Akin, 1 Cates, 431.}}}} supersedeas will, also, be granted on application, when necessary. These writs are granted on a petition addressed to the appellate Court. 2

2. A writ of certiorari will, also, issue in order to perfect the record of a case already before the Court. It would often little benefit a party to take an appeal to an appellate Court, if the Clerk and Master should fail to send up a perfect transcript of the record; and the power of the Court to do justice would be well nigh destroyed, if the Clerks could strain out of a record what they thought immaterial, to say nothing of the effect of undue influences being brought to bear on them to suppress matters essential to the vindication of the rights of the appellant. If it be made to appear to the Court, in due form and in due season, that the transcript is imperfect, the Court will award a certiorari to the Clerk in default, commanding him without delay to make out, certify, and transmit instantly, or to the next term of the Court, a full, true, and perfect transcript of the record in the particular cause, on file in his office. The writ usually contains at its foot a memorandum specifying what parts of the record are missing. If the Clerk should certify that the missing paper is lost and cannot be found, the appellate Court will remand the cause that the lost paper may be supplied under the statute but if the Clerk certifies that no such paper is on file, and that he has made diligent search for the missing papers, a certiorari will not be awarded.

The appellate Court, when hearing an Equity cause, is a Court of Equity; and may, like any other Court of Equity, award a certiorari, or take any other steps to perfect the record, on its own motion.

§ 1298. Their Power to Make Rules of Practice.—Every Court has inherent power to make and enforce rules for the proper conduct of causes, parties, and Solicitors, provided that such rules deprive no party of a legal right, and violate no law of the State; and these rules it may change from time to time as it may deem expedient, and especially as the exigencies of the Court may require, arising from the increase of litigation and the necessity of keeping its dockets clear. The Court has, also, the inherent authority to make and enforce all rules of practice, necessary to effectuate its appellate jurisdiction.

§ 1299. Their Powers in Enforcement of their Own Decrees.—It is a fundamental rule that every Court has inherent power to enforce all its lawful rules, orders, and decrees. The grant of jurisdiction to determine a cause is impliedly a grant of power to enforce that determination, by all necessary and appropriate process. Each appellate Court is clothed with this power, both by necessary implication and by statute; and it may be stated generally, that it has the right to issue any writ or process in the enforcement of its rules, orders, and decrees that the Circuit or Chancery Courts could issue in a like case. Thus, it awards executions, writs of possession and restitution, and writs of attachment for the person; and may issue a mandamus to compel the levying of a tax to satisfy a judgment against a county, or municipality.

Executions may be issued on its final decrees at any time after the ten days allowed for filing a petition to rehear.

§ 1300. Receivers and Restraining Orders.—When an Equity cause goes to an appellate Court, it stands there, in many respects, as it stood in the Chancery Court before the hearing, and the powers of the appellate Court in the cause are very similar to, if not identical with, those of the Chancery Court.

21 Tenn. Central R. R. v. Campbell, 1 Cates, 646. This was a case where a railroad was proceeding to condemn land, sec. post, § 1311.

23 Mynitt v. Huhbs, 1 Heisk., 323. The lost paper in this case was a deposition.
24 Nave v. Nave, 1 Heisk., 324. There seems to have been no motion for a certiorari in this case.

30 The term "execution," in the statute, may be construed to include all final process. See, ante, § 647, note 8.
31 Acts of 1903, ch. 58.
§ 1301. Revivor of Causes and Decrees.—If any Equity cause abates in the appellate Court, either before or after decree, it may be revived in the same way as in Chancery. The party seeking to revive may file a bill of revivor according to the practice in Chancery, or may adopt the statutory method by scire facias. The parties entitled to revive, or liable to be revived against, may enter their appearance, and have the cause revived in their names on motion, without the issuance or service of process. If the parties against whom a revivor is sought are non-residents, or their names or residences are unknown, and cannot be ascertained on diligent inquiry, a bill of revivor is the better practice in Chancery causes, for in such cases publication must be made.⁴⁴ A bill of revivor, however, in the appellate Court cannot bring new parties or new matters before the Court, but must be strictly a bill of revivor, pure and simple; for if new parties or new matters were brought before the Court, to that extent the bill would be original, and a new suit.⁴⁵ But an administrator ad litem cannot be appointed in the appellate Court.⁴⁶

§ 1302. Some Fundamental Rules of Adjudication in the Appellate Courts. There are some fundamental rules of adjudication in the appellate Courts, which, if observed by counsel, would not only greatly lessen the bulk of their briefs, and the number of supposed errors assigned, but would lessen the labors of the Judges. The following are some of these rules:

1. The Appellate Courts have no Original Jurisdiction, and can exercise none, not even when attempted to be conferred by the Legislature,¹ or by consent of parties.²

2. The Appellate Courts will not Search a Record to Find Errors: the party appealing must point out the errors he complains of in the record he brings up, and must plainly show that injustice has been done him, or the decree will be affirmed.³

³ Foster v. Burem, 1 Heisk., 785. In this case, the Supreme Court adopted rules of practice for the revivor of causes in that Court. The words "bills of revivor" in said rules, on page 786, should read "bills of revivor." See, also, Supreme Court Rules of 1891; Rules, 12-15; 5 Pick., 772. These rules, and all other rules of practice of the Supreme Court, are effective in the Court of Civil Appeals.

⁷ Gibson v. Widener, 1 Pick., 16; Gunley v. Railroad, 7 Pick., 486.
3. The Appellate Courts will presume Everything the Record will Permit to sustain a decree, but nothing to reverse it. 6
4. The Appellate Courts will not reverse a Decree on a question of the Chancellor's discretion, unless the exercise of such discretion was not only clearly erroneous, but oppressive. 6
5. The Appellate Courts will not reverse a Decree as to facts found by the Master on a proper reference, when his finding is confirmed without exceptions, or concurred in by the Chancellor on exceptions. 7
6. The Appellate Courts will not reverse a Verdict for want of evidence when there is no evidence, at all, to sustain it. 8
7. The Appellate Courts will not reverse a Decree which is substantially Correct even though errors were committed in the progress of the cause, 9 or though the decree be based on incorrect grounds, or unsound reasons. 10
8. The Appellate Courts will not reverse, or rule out, a Decree when Collaterally Attacked, except for want of jurisdiction in the Court to render it; and this want of jurisdiction must affirmatively appear on the face of the record itself. 11
9. The Appellate Courts will not rehear a Cause unless it be plainly shown, by petition duly filed, that the opinion is manifestly erroneous in some important particular, by reason of some controlling matter of law or fact having been obviously overlooked by the Court. 12

§ 1303. Briefs: Their Character.—The appellate Courts have established certain rules of practice in the hearing of causes at their bars; 13 and especially rules prescribing the frame of the brief to be filed. According to these rules the brief must contain in the order following:

1. A Statement of What the Case is, and the precise points raised by the pleadings, with such reference thereto as may be necessary. 14

2. The Substance of the Verdict and Judgment Thereon, or judgment without verdict, or decree, with reference to the pages of the transcript wherein each appears. 15

3. A Statement of the Errors of Fact, or Law, Relied Upon to reverse the judgment or decree; and, 1, in case it is an error of fact, the brief shall refer to the evidence relied on to show the error, citing the pages of the record on which it appears; and, 2, in case it be an error of law, the propositions of law relied on shall be stated; and following such propositions the authorities relied on to sustain the same shall be cited. 16

4. All Points of Fact and Law Relied on Must be Stated as required in the preceding paragraph, and all authorities relied on must be cited; but counsel will not be confined to the authorities cited, nor required to cite when none are known to counsel.\textsuperscript{17}

5. When the Error Assigned is to the Action of the Court Upon a Preliminary Motion, Demurrer, or Plea, the substance of such motion, demurrer or plea must be stated, and the action of the Court thereon set forth, citing the pages of the transcript where the same appears.\textsuperscript{18}

6. When the Error Alleged is as to the Admission or Rejection of Evidence, the specification must quote the full substance of the evidence admitted or rejected, citing the pages of the record where the evidence and the ruling thereon may be found.\textsuperscript{19}

7. When the Error Alleged is as to the Charge of the Court, the specification must set out the part of the charge referred to, whether it be instructions given, or instructions refused, citing the pages of the transcript wherein such instructions are found.\textsuperscript{20}

8. When the Error Alleged is as to a Ruling Upon a Report of a Master, the brief must set out the exception to the report, and the ruling of the Court thereon, so that it may plainly appear what the question was; and, if it be a question of fact, the brief must state whether the Master and Chancellor have concurred or disagreed in reference thereto.\textsuperscript{21}

9. Assignments of Errors in General Terms are Treated as Nullities. To say that the Court erred in doing so and so amounts to nothing, unless the assignment goes further, and specifies how, wherein and wherefore the Court erred, so the appellate Court may see the error from the facts stated in the assignment, without resorting to the record.\textsuperscript{22} Such assignments as (1) “that the Court erred in giving complainant a decree,” for so and so; or, (2) “in dismissing the bill;” or, (3) “in dismissing the cross bill;” or, (4) “in overruling the demurrer;” or, (5) “in sustaining the demurrer;” or, (6) “in admitting or rejecting certain evidence;” or, (7) “in its charge to the jury;” or, (8) similar general assignments, are all nullities; and will be noticed only to be overruled.

10. The Failure to File the Brief Required by the Rules of the Court will be taken as an abandonment of the appeal, or writ of error, as the case may be; and errors not specified in the brief will be treated as waived. The Court, however, may at its option, notice an error overlooked by counsel.\textsuperscript{23}

11. Brief by the Appellee. The Counsel for the appellee must file with the Clerk of the Court, a brief in support and defence of the judgment or decree assailed. This brief must be of like character with that above described, except that no specifications of error are required, and no statement of the case unless that already filed is controverted.\textsuperscript{24}

12. References to Text-Books and Reports must be to the side pages, if any; but if none, then to the top pages, except that the references to books which treat of subjects by sections must be to the sections.\textsuperscript{25}

13. Mechanical Execution of Briefs. Briefs are required to be written in a large and legible hand-writing with black ink and upon law paper, or printed, or type-written.\textsuperscript{26}

\textsuperscript{20} Rule 20, § 3. The brief should give the substance of that part of the report to which the exception applies.
\textsuperscript{22} Rule 20, § 4. The appellate Court presumes that every ruling, decree and judgment of the lower Court is correct in form, lawful in substance, and just in results; and, therefore, requires a party who disputes this presumption to plainly point out, in the proper manner and time, any errors in such rulings, decrees and judgments, which clearly show that substantial injustice has been done him; and if such party fail so to do, the Court will presume there are no such errors, and will affirm the judgment or decree appealed from. See, ante, §§ 565, note 11; 1302, sub-sec. 2 and 3, notes 3 and 4.

\textsuperscript{25} Ibid.\textsuperscript{26}
14. Written Arguments are Not the Briefs Required by the Rules. There seems to be a disposition on the part of the bar to distinguish between the assignment of errors and the brief. Such distinction is not warranted by Rule 20, which clearly shows that the brief shall contain a statement of what the case is, and the precise points raised, a statement of the errors of fact and law relied upon to reverse or modify, the authorities relied on, the exceptions to the Master's report and the ruling of the Court thereon, and so on. Said Rule further declares that the failure to file a brief as required by this Rule (20) will be taken as an abandonment of the appeal; and that the counsel for a defendant-in-error or appellee shall file a like brief in support and defence of the judgment, or decree, assailed.

This Rule (20) evidently contemplates that the appellant's whole case should be concisely summarized in the brief; but a practice seems to have gradually grown up of making the assignment of errors one thing and the brief another thing, using the brief not for the assignment of errors, but to bolster up and fortify the assignment; construing the word brief to mean the written argument counsel are allowed to present by Rule 21, which written argument, however, the Rule explicitly declares will not supersede the necessity of a brief.

As, however, substance, and not forms or names, determines the rights of litigants, it will continue to be immaterial whether a brief is an assignment of errors or a written argument, so long as errors are assigned as required by Rule 20. It seems to the author, however, from an examination of our reports, that the practice of converting the brief into a written argument has largely augmented the labors of the appellate Judges, by requiring them to go through both the assignment of errors and the so-called brief, which latter is often attached to the assignment and declared to be a part thereof, and the assignment often declares that the brief hereto attached is made a part thereof, and thus they are so wedded as to make a voluminous compound out of what was originally intended to be a concise brief.

§ 1304. When and Where Briefs Must be Filed.—It is of great importance to the appellant to have his brief duly filed; for, if not so filed, he will be deemed to have abandoned his appeal, and the Chancellor's decree will be affirmed, as of course, when the case is called for hearing; and errors not specified will be treated as waived. The rules of the appellate Courts on this subject are as follows:

1. When and Where the Appellant Must File his Brief. The counsel for appellant, or plaintiff-in-error, in all civil causes shall file with the Clerk of the Court, at least ten days before the call of the county from which the cause comes, a written or printed brief, which shall be attached by the Clerk to the transcript. If the record be filed at so late a date as not to permit the brief to be filed for the time required before the hearing, then such brief may be filed at any time after the filing of the transcript, and before the cause is called for argument.

2. When and Where the Appellee Must File his Brief. The counsel for a defendant-in-error, or appellee, shall file with the Clerk of the Court, at least three days before the calling of the cause (if the record is filed in time; if not, then at any time before the calling of the cause,) a brief in support and defence of the judgment or decree assailed. This brief shall be of like character with that required of the plaintiff-in-error or appellant, except that no specification of error shall be required, and no statement of the case, unless that already filed is controverted.

28 This disposition to denominate the brief an assignment of errors, and to denominate the written argument a brief, probably originated in the practice of the Supreme Court Commission, where the assignment of errors was so called, and the argument in support of the assignment was often called a brief; but it is a misnomer to so name the brief under Supreme Court Rule 20.
29 Rule 20, § 6.
30 Rule 20; 5 Pick., 774-775. The Court of Civil Appeals will, for good cause, relax both this and the next rule.
31 Rule 20, § 5; 5 Pick., 775.
§ 1305. Rules Limiting Hearings in the Appellate Courts Necessary.—Formerly the Supreme Court had time to hear the whole record read when a suit in Chancery was appealed, and then the appeal opened up the whole case, and it was tried de novo, the trial often consuming several days. But now, in consequence of the enormous increase in the number and importance of cases appealed, the appellate Courts to avoid being overwhelmed by the accumulation of cases upon its dockets, has been forced to adopt rules that so limit the hearings in cases appealed from the Chancery Courts as to leave a decree appealed from in such force that, unless reversible error be pointed out in accordance with these rules, it will be affirmed. The result of these rules is that the decree is considered to be prima facie correct, and all interlocutory proceedings are presumed to be regular.31 Whoever challenges the correctness of such proceedings and decree must put his finger upon material errors; and on his failure so to do, in the manner and time prescribed by said rules, the record of the case will be closed against him, and the decree appealed from affirmed, and put in force.

§ 1306. Form of Briefs.—As some aid to the young Solicitor, the following briefs are presented, showing alleged errors both of law and of fact:32

IN THE SUPREME COURT, [OR, IN THE COURT OF CIVIL APPEALS.]

BRIEF OF THE APPELLANTS.33

STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

Complainant, who is a creditor of Richard Roe, filed this bill to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance of a stock of goods by said Richard Roe, to his brothers and co-defendants, Robert and Roland Roe, and to sell the goods to satisfy his debt. The defendants all answered, denying the fraud and denying that the transfer was voluntary, Robert and Roland answering separately from Richard. The only issue on the pleadings is one of fact: Was the transfer fraudulent?

The deposition of John Brown was taken by the complainant, but was suppressed by the Chancellor on exceptions. This deposition fully proved that the transfer was both fraudulent and voluntary. No other proof was taken by the complainant, and no proof at all was taken by the defendants. At the hearing, the Chancellor dismissed the bill as to the defendants, Robert and Roland Roe, and gave complainant a decree for his debt against Richard Roe, but taxed him with all the costs of the cause down to the decree. Complainant appealed. [Transcript, p. 44.]

I. ERRORS OF LAW RELIED ON.34

1. The Chancellor erred in ruling out the deposition of John Brown, a witness for the complainant.

The deposition was excepted to by the defendants on the ground that its certificate showed that it was reduced to writing by the commissioner's clerk. This exception was sustained by the Master, and, on appeal, was sustained by the Chancellor. [Trans, p. 42.]

No objection having been made to the commissioner's clerk at the time he was acting, the defendants were estopped from objecting afterwards.

Herman on Estoppel, § 1984.

Jones. v. Brown, 1 Cal., 963.

See "Waiver," Gibson's Suits in Ch., § 71.

31 Omnìa præsumuntur solènnius esse acta. (All Court proceedings are presumed to have been properly done.)

32 See letter of Supreme Judges, § 12938, note 20, ante. On an appeal, the appellant may show any and all errors committed by the Court below, at any time between the beginning and the ending of the suit, provided they appear in the record. The appellate Court will review any and all rulings of the Chancellor upon its attention being properly called to them, by the party complaining, in the manner and time prescribed by the rules of the Court. The most ordinary matters complained of in the appellate Court, outside of the final decree, are: 1, the overruling of demurrers; 2, the overruling of pleas; 3, the allowance or disallowance of amendments of pleadings; 4, the extension, or refusal of extension, of time to take proof; 5, the admission of illegal evidence, or the exclusion of legal evidence; 6, the suppression of, or refusal to suppress, depositions; 7, the allowance or disallowance of exceptions to reports; 8, the refusal to recommit reports, and, 9, in injury cases, the refusal to grant a new trial, on allegations of errors in empaneling the jury, or of errors of the Chancellor in admitting or excluding evidence, or in misdirecting the jury, or in refusal to give proper directions on request, or of misconduct of the jury, or of surprise at the introduction of adverse testimony, or of the discovery of new evidence, or of other grounds for a new trial.

33 The appellant in his assignment of errors must not only state the action of the Court complained of, but must show why or wherein it is erroneous. Powers v. McKenzie, 6 Pick., 167.

34 Assign no errors that are not material; select the most material. Ten assignments are better than twenty, and five are better than ten. Make no fine points, no hypercriticisms. Apices juris non jura. Judges use no microscopes.
This deposition, if admitted, would have proved that the transfer was fraudulent; and its suppression was a grievous error.

2. The Chancellor erred in ruling that the burden of proving that there was no consideration for the transfer was on the complainant. [Tr., p. 38.]

When the consideration is impeached, and the proof casts suspicion upon it, the burden is then on the conveyee to show that a valid consideration was paid.

Alley vs. Connell, 3 Head, 579.
Dunlap vs. Haynes, 4 Heisk., 478.

The proof showed the defendants were brothers; [Tr., p. 17.] None of the defendants testified: this casts suspicion on the transaction.

II. ERRORS OF FACT RELIED ON.

1. The Chancellor erred in finding that there was no fraud.

John Brown clearly proves the fraud. [Tr., p. 47.]
The Chancellor refused to consider this deposition; but it was in the file, and a part of the record; and this Court will consider it.

Jones vs. Brown, 2 Cal., 928.
Stokes vs. Stiles, 1 N. C., 792.

The defendant conveyees admitted in their answer that they were brothers of the conveyor. [Tr. p. 9.]
The defendants all declined to testify. This raised a presumption of guilt against them.

Dunlap vs. Haynes, 4 Heisk., 476.
Howard vs. Massengale, 1 Lea, 577.

III. ADDITIONAL ERROR OF LAW.

The Chancellor erred in taxing the complainant with all the costs of the cause down to the decree. [Tr., p. 44.]

There is abundant proof of the bad faith of the defendants; and of the good faith of the complainants.

2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1381.

Richard Roe should, at least, have been taxed with the costs of the cause. A decree for the amount of the debt was rendered against him. [Tr., p. 44.]

IN THE SUPREME COURT, [OR, IN THE COURT OF CIVIL APPEALS.]

BRIEF OF THE APPELLEES.35

John Doe, vs. Richard Roe, et al. }

From the Chancery Court, at Knoxville.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

In addition to the facts set forth in the Appellant’s brief, the record shows that the answer of the defendants on oath was called for; [Tr., p. 41.] and that the defendants, Robert and Roland, the transferees, answered on oath, emphatically and explicitly denying all fraud, and specifying the consideration paid, and in what it was paid, showing good faith and full value.

[Transcript, pp. 14-16.]

Complainant having made witnesses of the defendants, is bound by their answers, unless overturned by two witnesses, or one witness and corroborating circumstances; and there is no contrary evidence.

I. REPLY TO ALLEGED ERRORS OF LAW ASSIGNED BY THE APPELLANT.

1. The Chancellor ruled correctly in suppressing John Brown’s deposition.

The commissioner’s certificate does not show that his clerk was not of kin or counsel, or not interested. [Tr., p. 40.]

Railway Co. vs. Arnold, 5 Pick., 107.

2. The Chancellor was correct in holding that the burden of proof was on the complainant. [Tr., p. 38.]

The proof did not cast any suspicion on the consideration. There was no proof, except the answers of the defendants.

Relationship, alone, is not enough to raise a suspicion of fraud.

Wait’s Fraud. Convey., § 242.
Robinson v. Frankel, 1 Pick., 478.

35 See letter of the Judges of the Supreme Court; ante, page 1041, note 20.
II. REPLY TO ALLEGED ERRORS OF FACT ASSIGNED BY THE APPELLANT.

1. The Chancellor was correct in finding there was no fraud.

(1) John Brown's deposition cannot be looked at here. That would take the defendants by surprise.

Besides, the deposition having been suppressed, and not having been made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions, or order of record, or by authentication of the Chancellor, is not properly a part of the Transcript, and cannot be looked to in this Court, for any purpose.

Perry vs. Pearson, 1 Hum., 431.
Spurlock vs. Fulks, 1 Swan, 289.
Steele vs. Frierion, 1 Pick., 430.

Gibson's Suits in Ch. §§ 538; 1213, sub-secs. 4 and 6.

(2) If looked at it will not overcome the sworn answers of the defendants.

(3) The defendants had already testified in their answers, and had no need to testify again.

III. REPLY TO ADDITIONAL ALLEGED ERROR OF LAW ASSIGNED.

The Chancellor did not err in taxing complainant with all the costs of the cause down to the decree. [Tr., p. 44.]

There is an express statute requiring the costs to be taxed as they were.

Code, § 4292; Gibson's Suits in Ch., § 390.

The decree of the Chancellor is manifestly correct, in all the particulars wherein it is assailed; and should, therefore, be affirmed.

H. H. INGERSOLL, Solicitor.

§ 1307. Suggestions in Reference to Briefs.—Nothing is so valuable to a Court as a good brief that is brief; and nothing is more worthless than a poor brief, especially one that is long, confused, obscure, diffuse, and digressive. In constructing a brief, the following suggestions may be of value:

I. The Statement of the Case.37 This statement should not be an abstract of the whole cause, nor an abstract of the pleadings; it should be exactly what the appellate Court Rule declares it should be: a statement of what the case is, and the precise points raised by the pleadings. 1. "A statement of what the case is" may often be made in a few words, thus: This is a suit to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance; or, This is a suit to specifically enforce a contract; or, The object of the bill in this case is to partition a tract of land; or, The bill in this case was filed to enforce a mechanic's lien. 2. "The precise points raised by the pleadings" may, generally, be very briefly expressed, thus: The questions raised by the pleadings are two: 1st, Was there a contract in writing actually signed by the defendant. 2d, If so, are its terms sufficiently proved; or, The issues raised by the pleadings are: Whether, 1st, there ever was a mechanic's lien in favor of the complainant, who was a mere journeyman; and 2d, if so, whether he did not waive that lien by taking a note and security for the amount of his debt?

II. The Substance of the Verdict and Decree.38 This is ordinarily stated in a few words, thus: The jury found the issues of fact in favor of the complainant, and the Court thereupon granted him the relief prayed in his bill, [the character of this relief having been given in the statement of the case;] or, the Court found that there had been a contract of sale duly signed by the defendant, and that its contents were sufficiently proved, and thereupon decreed that the contract be specifically performed; or, the Court decreed that the complainant had a mechanic's lien, and that he had not waived it by taking a note and security for the amount thereof.

The brief must contain such a statement of facts that, when the specific errors are assigned, the Court will be able to see, from the brief itself, that a prima facie case of error is made out.39 Errors of law arise out of the facts, and the facts must be so stated that the pertinency and truth of the errors of law alleged will appear.

37 Rule 20, § 1; 5 Pick., 774. These suggestions are all based on the Supreme Court Rules, and are intended as a mere commentary on them, to aid young Solicitors in complying with them. See, ante, note 20 to § 12938.
38 Sup. Court Rule, 20, § 1; 5 Pick., 774.
39 Gorrell v. Mayor, 1 Ch. Apps., 133.
III. The Statement of the Errors of Fact. 40 The success of a brief as to the facts depends largely upon its clearness and conciseness in stating the errors of fact relied on to reverse or modify the decree complained of. The following illustrations will show how these statements may be made:

1. The Court erred in finding that there was a contract of sale. [Tr., p. 65.]
   (1) Witness, John Brown, who proves it, could not read, and never heard it read. [Tr. p. 28, xys., 9 and 10.]
   (2) The complainant's history of the case is in conflict with Brown’s. [Tr., pp. 21, q. 4; and p. 26, sq. 9.]
   (3) The defendant positively denies that he ever signed the writing. [Tr. p. 31.]
   (4) Susan Brown, wife of witness John Brown, says she was in the room, and had a good chance to see and hear what was done, and that she did not see any writing of any kind done there by any one; and that there was no ink in the house. [Tr. pp. 35-36.]
   The existence of the unsigned writing is not disputed: the one question of fact is:
   Did the defendant sign it?

Where the witnesses and facts are numerous, the error of fact may be well stated in this form:

2. The Court erred in finding that the true boundary between the parties ran from the walnut to the white oak stump. The Court should have found that the line ran to the standing white oak, twenty poles south of the said stump.

Three witnesses saw the standing oak marked as a corner.
   (1) John Smith. [Tr., p. 93, q. 6.]
   (2) Wm. Brown. [Tr., p. 94, q. 4.]
   (3) Henry James. [Tr., p. 96, q. 2.]

Three witnesses heard the defendant admit that the standing oak was the corner.
   (1) Wm. Brown. [Tr. 93, q. 2.]
   (2) George Stokes. [Tr., p. 89, q. 6.]
   (3) Samuel Jones. [Tr., p. 40, xq. 9.]

He is the defendant's witness.

The standing oak is on the line according to the course called for, after allowing for the variation of the needle.
   (1) Prior Lee. [Tr., p. 36, qs. 6-7.]
       His deposition was taken by the defendant, but read by the complainant.
   (2) George Stokes. [Tr., p. 97, q. 17.]

IV. The Statement of the Errors of Law. 41 Solicitors must keep in mind that a brief is one thing, and an argument is another thing. A brief is the mere skeleton of an argument, an argument stripped to the bone. Many otherwise good briefs are rendered ineffective by having arguments injected into them. Errors of law should be stated with preciseness and conciseness, thus:

1. The Chancellor erred in holding that a wife's earnings could not, by contract with her husband, become her separate estate. [Tr., p. 116.]

The law may once have been, but it is otherwise now.

Carpenter vs. Franklin, 5 Pick., 142.

2. The Chancellor erred in refusing the defendants a trial by jury on their demand. [Tr., p. 112.]

(1) The rule promulgated by the Chancellor requiring the demand for a jury to be made on the 1st day of the term is in violation of the statute, and void. 42 [See Rule, Tr., p. 113.]

40 Sup. Court Rule, 20, § 2. The assignment of errors must be specific. The day of generalities has passed. Demurrers must be special. Exceptions to depositions or to evidence must be special. Whoever finds fault in Court must put the tip of his finger on the error. Hence, errors complained of in the action of the lower Court must be specified. See Deaton v. Wood, 2 Pick., 37; Wood v. Frazier, 2 Pick., 500. The appellate Court does not hunt for errors: the Solicitor of the appellant must rush the game. The Court presumes the decree below to be correct. See, ante, § 1302, sub-sec. 3.

41 The briefs should consider the errors of fact separately from the errors of law. Sup. Court Rule, 20, § 2; 5 Pick., 774.

As a rule, briefs are greatly overloaded with superfluous law. The Court needs but little aid from counsel in matters of law; and if many authorities are cited, few, or none, of them will be examined. The Court has no time to hunt up, or run down, twenty-five or fifty citations. One or two authorities on any given point of law, and these the latest and most direct, are sufficient; one is better than two, ordinarily; and ten are worse than none. The main use the Court makes of the citations in a brief is as an aid in citing authorities in their written opinions. The point must be a very novel one, indeed, that requires authorities. None of the authorities cited in the briefs contained in this Article would be of any value to the Court, the law on the various points being as familiar to the Judges as the letters of the alphabet. If you take care of the facts, the Judges will take care of the law; and if you make your brief of the facts short and specific, it will be read and appreciated.

42 The Supreme Court has sustained such a rule. Ante, § 547.
M. & V's, Code, § 4467.
Duncan vs. King, 1 Tenn., (Overt,) 79.
Allen vs. Saulpaw, 6 Lea, 481.
Acts of 1889, Ch. 220.

(2) But the rule, if valid, is not absolutely binding, and could have been departed from; and ought so to have been, for the reasons stated in defendant's affidavit. [Tr. p. 94.]
Marsh vs. Crawford, 1 Swan, 116.
Lowe vs. Morris, 4 Sneed, 72.
Gibson's Suits in Ch., § 62, sub-sec., 8, on "Showing Cause."

V. Statement of Error of the Court Upon a Motion, Demurrer, or Plea. What the appellate Court wants in a case of this kind is a clear statement, based on the record, showing what was done, and why, and giving the substance of the motion, demurrer, or plea. The following forms are given:

1. The Chancellor erred in discharging the attachment levied on the defendant's property.

This action was taken on motion of the defendant after he had answered the bill. The ground of the motion was that the bill did not aver it was the first application for an attachment.

(1) No such averment was necessary, the ground of attachment being statutory.
Gibson's Suits in Ch., § 872.
(2) The ground of motion had been waived by answer to the bill.
See "Waiver," Gibson's Suits in Ch., § 71.

2. The Chancellor erred in sustaining the defendant's demurrer to the bill. [Tr., p. 9.]

The bill was filed as a detinue bill to recover an iron safe valued at two hundred dollars. The demurrer disputed the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court to try such a case. This involves the construction of the Act of 1877, Ch. 97.

This statute has been liberally construed, and held to cover cases of mandamus, ejectment, money lost at gaming, covenants running with land, damages on bonds, and conversion of property.
Hawkins vs. Kercheval, 10 Lea, 542.
Frazier vs. Browning, 11 Lea, 253.
McGrew vs. City P. Exchange, 1 Pick., 572.
Williams vs. Burg, 9 Lea, 455.
Glen vs. Moore, 11 Lea, 256.
State vs. Keller, 11 Lea, 399.
Coal Co. vs. Moses, 15 Lea, 300.

The above cases are not less legal in their nature than is the one raised by the bill and demurrer. The statute is all-comprehensive, and the Legislature having named the exceptions to it, the Courts can add no others.

Expressio unius est exclusio alterius.
Broom's Max., 638.
Guion vs. B. Academy, 4 Yerg., 253.
Cooke vs. McGinnis, Mart & Yerg., 361.

3. The Chancellor erred in overruling appellant's motion for a new trial. [Tr., p. 74.]

There was an overwhelming preponderance of evidence against the verdict. The following witnesses swore positively that the defendant signed the contract in controversy.46
(1) John Jones, [Tr. p. 32, q. 5.]
(2) Henry Brown. [Tr. p. 36, q. 6.]
This contract was the foundation of appellant's suit.

VI. Statement of Errors in Admitting or Rejecting Evidence. The appellate Court will not consider an objection to evidence, unless the objection is specific, and duly made at the hearing in the Court below, and ruled on against the appellant.47 A brief relying on such an error may state it thus:

1. The Court below erred in admitting the statement by the witness, Wm. Brown, that George Jones, the tenant of the complainant, told him that the land in dispute really belonged to the defendant. [Tr., p. 29.]

46 Sup Court Rule 20, § 3; 5 Pick., 774.
44 Rule 20, § 3. In such a case, the preceding statement of the case should show the points raised by the bill and the demurrer.
45 This assignment is nugatory: so are all similar ones. See, e. g., § 1302, sub-sec. 6. The appellate Court will not reweigh the evidence: if there be any evidence at all to sustain the verdict the appellate Court will not consider the maius or minus of it. The only assignment the Court will consider is: "There is no evidence to sustain the verdict."

47 Bridge Co. v. Barnes, 14 Pick., 409.
This statement was objected to when made, on the ground that it was res inter alios acta; and that the complainant could not be bound or affected by such a declaration by his tenant.

Stranahan vs. Terry, 9 Lea, 560.

2. The Court below erred in rejecting the evidence of what the wife of the defendant Roe said to the witness, Jones. [Tr., p. 48.]

Where a wife is acting as the agent of her husband, what she says about the business of such agency is admissible against the husband as principal. She was proved to be his agent. [Tr., p. 46.]

Reilly vs. English, 9 Lea, 16.

She told the witness, Jones, that her husband got the money complainant gave her for him. [Tr., p. 48.]

VII. Statement of Errors in the Charge of the Court. In stating such errors the particular part of the charge objected to must be set out, whether it be instructions given, or instructions refused, in substance as follows:

1. The Chancellor erred in charging the jury that "if corner marks of the proper age were on the white oak tree, that would be very strong and almost conclusive evidence that it was the true corner." [Tr., p. 61.]

This charge has been several times determined to constitute reversible error.

Marr vs. Marr, 5 Sneed, 385.

James vs. Brooks, 5 Heisk., 158.

This case strikingly resembles the one at bar.

2. The Chancellor erred in refusing to charge the jury that "if they should believe that the clerk of the defendant illegally appropriated the money left with him, without the knowledge or assent of the defendant, the defendant would not be liable for it." [Tr., pp. 82-83.]

This request went to the very heart of the controversy, and its ground was not covered by any part of the charge. This is a reversible error.

Crumbless vs. Sturgess, 6 Heisk. 190.

VIII. Statement of Errors in Rulings Upon a Master's Report. One of the most arduous tasks of a Court is in dealing with exceptions to Master’s reports; and it requires great skill in preparing a brief that will aid the appellate Court reaching a conclusion. The following may be of some aid in making such a brief:

1. The Chancellor erred in sustaining defendant’s 1st exception to the Master’s report. [Tr., pp. 89-91.]

The Master reported that the painting done on the house was worth $219.80; whereas the proof shows that it was not worth exceeding $150.00. [Tr. p. 89.]

George Jones puts it at $140.00. [Tr., p. 41.]

Wm. Brown puts it at $137.50. [Tr., p. 47.]

Henry Stokes puts it at $150.00. [Tr., p. 39.]

These witnesses are all practical painters, and disinterested.

Complainant’s witnesses, four in number, put it from $150 to $250. [Tr., pp. 89; 54; 73.]

But they were all in the complainant’s employ.

2. The Chancellor erred in sustaining the complainant’s 3d exception to the Master’s Report. [Tr., pp. 86-87.]

The Master reported that defendant had paid complainant $1640.10; but on complainant’s exception that the amount was only $1431.10, the Chancellor so held. [Tr., p. 92.]

The contest is over an alleged payment of $209.00.

This payment was proved by the defendant and another.

By defendant. [Tr., p. 64.]

By Wm. Brown. [Tr., p. 51, q. 30.]

The Court held that this payment was on a different matter. [Tr., p. 92.]

IX. The Mechanical Execution of Briefs. The Rule requires that briefs shall be written in a large and legible handwriting, with black ink, and upon law paper, or printed, or type-written. It matters not how excellent a brief is, if it be illegible it is a light put under a bushel, and may as well never have been written. As between a poor brief printed or plainly written, and a good brief poorly written, the former will prevail.

ARTICLE III.
MOTIONS IN THE APPELLATE COURTS.

§ 1308. Motions, When and How Heard.
§ 1309. Motions to Dismiss Appeals.
§ 1310. Motions to Dismiss Writs of Error.
§ 1311. Motion for a Certiorari to Perfect the Record.
§ 1312. Other Motions in the Appellate Courts.

§ 1308. Motions, When and How Heard.—The Clerk keeps a motion docket, on which must be entered all motions which are made in Court, and not at once disposed of. Thursdays and Fridays are motion days, when motions may be made, and the motion docket called. All motions not disposed of when made must be entered on the minutes and on the motion docket, and notice thereof immediately be given to opposite counsel. Motions are disposed of only on written briefs,1 if there be any contest, or litigated matter involved. The Court will not, ordinarily, hear oral arguments, either in support of, or against motions.

The Court should not rise to make a motion in the appellate Court unless: 1. The time therefor is clearly mature; 2. The particular kind and character of motion has been definitely determined on; 3, the necessary evidence in support of the motion is in hand ready to be presented; and 4, due notice of the motion given the adverse side, when such notice is necessary.

§ 1309. Motions to Dismiss Appeals.—If for any cause the appellate Court ought not to entertain an appeal it may be dismissed on motion.2 The ordinary grounds for dismissing an appeal are the following:

1. Because the appeal was not granted,3 or was improperly granted,4 or prematurely granted, or granted to the wrong term,5 or granted to the wrong appellate Court.5a

2. Because the appellant failed to perfect his appeal in the Court below by giving a proper bond; or by failing to give it, or to take the oath, in the time allowed for that purpose.6

3. Because the appellant was not entitled to an appeal, for the reason (1) that he was not a party or a quasi party to the suit, or (2) that he consented to the decree appealed from.7

A motion to dismiss an appeal because of any deficiency or irregularity in granting or obtaining it, or in filing the record, or other ground not affecting the merits of the controversy, must be made at the term after the appeal was granted.8 Where, however, the ground of the motion to dismiss is a defective bond or pauper oath, the Court will not sustain the motion if the appellant file a sufficient bond or oath within some short time designated by the Court.9 And

1 Sup. Court Rule, 16.
2 The doors of the appellate Court do not swing loosely inward, and no litigant can enter without a wedding garment in the shape of (1) an order of record by the Court below granting an appeal, or an appeal in the nature of a writ of error; or (2) a writ of error granted by the appellate Court itself, or of one of its Judges or Clerks; or (3) a writ of supersedeas; or (4) a writ of certiorari.
3 An appeal must not only be prayed in the Court below, but granted; and the record must so show. Teasdale & Co. v. Manchester Co., 20 Pick., 267. An appeal not granted confers no jurisdiction on the appellate Court, and the case will be stricken from the docket. Bailey v. State, 11 Pick., 391. The recital in an appeal bond, or in bill of exceptions, that an appeal was granted, is not sufficient: the record must show it. Sellars v. Sellars, 17 Pick., 606. But a final decree which recites the prayer for an appeal and gives time to file an appeal bond sufficiently shows the appeal was granted. Bank v. Johnston, 21 Pick., 521.

4 As to what decrees may be appealed from, see ante, § 1265.

5 In Pond v. Trigg, 5 Heisk., 532, it was held that an appeal prayed to the next term of the Supreme Court when the Supreme Court of that Division of the State is in session, may be dismissed at the term of the Supreme Court then being held.

5a Sec. ante, § 1263a.

6 Staub v. Williams, 1 Lea, 36.

7 Williams v. Nell, 4 Heisk., 280.

8 Greer v. Williford, Peck, 290; Snyder v. Sumners, 1 Lea, 481; Gillespie v. Goddard, 1 Heisk., 777; Tedder v. Odom, 2 Heisk., 33.

even after an appeal has been dismissed, if the decree is one that may be appealed from as a matter of right, the appellant may file the record and obtain a writ of error, and in a proper case a supersedeas, also.

§ 1310. Motions to Dismiss Writs of Error.—A writ of error may be dismissed on motion if any of the prerequisites to the writ are wanting, or if the complainant in error was, for any reason, not entitled to the writ. The principal grounds on which to base a motion to dismiss are:

1. Because the decree complained of was not a final decree. A writ of error will lie from a final decree only, and a final decree is one which may be appealed from as a matter of right.

2. Because the record was not filed in the time allowed by law for suing out a writ of error.

3. Because a cost bond, or pauper oath in lieu, was not filed in the time prescribed by law.

4. Because notice of the intention to apply for the writ was not given the adverse party within the time required by law.

A motion to dismiss a writ of error must be made at the first term after the defendant-in-error has notice of the filing of the writ. He cannot move to dismiss for want of notice, as his motion shows that he has notice.

Where the ground of dismissal is some defect in the bond or pauper oath, the Court will allow a sufficient bond or oath to be filed, if tendered, or if given within some short period designated by the Court, on application therefor.

§ 1311. Motion for a Certiorari to Perfect the Record.—It frequently happens that the Clerk fails to incorporate some material paper in the transcript, and the side injured thereby may be unwilling to have the cause heard on the imperfect record. In such a case, if the omission does not appear from the record itself, or is not admitted by adverse counsel, an affidavit must be made specifying the omission. On motion, supported by such affidavit or other proof, the Court will award a certiorari to the Clerk and Master commanding him without delay, to make out, certify and transmit a full, true and perfect transcript of the record in the cause, on file in his office. There is usually a note placed at the foot of the writ specifying the particular paper called for.

The Rules of the Court require suggestions of the diminution of the record to be made before the cause is called for trial, and at such time as will give opportunity to have the record perfected for the hearing, or the imperfection will be considered as waived, and the cause heard on the record as it exists. The Court will, however, ordinarily consider any amendment brought before it previous to the announcement of its opinion in the cause. But if a party goes to trial upon an imperfect record, it will be too late for him, after the cause has been decided, to petition for a rehearing in order that the defect in the record may be supplied. The suggestion of a diminution, and the award of a certiorari may be as follows:

10 Ante, § 1265; Gibson v. Widener, 1 Pick., 16.

12 Meigs' Dig., § 958.

13 In Chest v. Foster, 6 Pick., 515, it was decided that unless this notice was given within the two years the writ would, on motion, be dismissed. See ante, § 1273.

14 Sec. infra.

15 Sup. Court Rule, 26. This rule is as follows: Suggestions of diminution of record shall be made before the cause is called for trial, and at such time as gives opportunity to have the record perfected for the hearing, or the imperfection of the record will be waived; Provided, however, That any amendment thus supplied, brought before the Court before the cause is finally disposed of after hearing, may be considered. See, ante, § 1297; and LaFollette Co. v. Smith, 7 Cates, 584.

16 Railway Companies v. Hendricks, 4 Pick., 720. A party will not be allowed to experiment with the Court in any such way. See Hubbard v. Cravell, 12 Lea, 310. If he goes to trial on a record, he is conclusively deemed to waive all defects therein. See Waiver, ante, § 71. If the defect is discovered too late to move for a certiorari, the appellant may dismiss his appeal, and then file a perfect transcript for a writ of error. This shows the importance of an early and careful scrutiny of the transcript, and an early suggestion of a diminution, if any exist.

Nevertheless, if manifest justice required it, and counsel of parties have satisfactory excuse for not suggesting a diminution before the hearing, the Court may, in a clear case, disregard its rule, and award a certiorari, and rehear the cause. See Trott v. West, Meigs, 163.
ORDER FOR A CERTIORARI FOR PERFECT TRANSCRIPT.

John Doe, et al.,

Richard Roe, et al.

In this case, the Solicitor of the appellant suggested to the Court that the transcript in the cause is imperfect, and the Court being satisfied thereof by his affidavit, (or, by the admission of adverse counsel, or, by an inspection of the transcript, when the transcript on its face shows the omission,) on his motion a certiorari will issue to the Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court at Bristol, commanding him without delay to file in this Court a full, true and perfect transcript of the record on file in his office in this case.

The writ of certiorari in such a case usually has an addendum specifying the parts of the record that have been omitted from the transcript, and may be as follows:

* CERTIORARI FOR PERFECT TRANSCRIPT.

State of Tennessee,
To the Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court at Bristol:

Whereas, in the case of John Doe, et al. vs. Richard Roe, et al., now pending in our Supreme Court [or the Court of Civil Appeals,] at Knoxville, on a suggestion that the transcript was imperfect, a certiorari was ordered to issue for a perfect transcript;

You are, therefore, hereby commanded without delay to make out, certify and transmit to the present term of our said Court, a full, true and perfect transcript of all the record in said cause, on file in your office, and make due return of this writ, showing how you have obeyed the same.

Witness, S. E. Cleage, Clerk of our said Court, at office in Knoxville, the second Monday in September, 1906.

N. E.—The missing parts of the record specially desired are, [Here insert the parts specified by the parties, or their Solicitors, and add:] and any other part of said record found to be omitted.

S. E. Cleage, Clerk.

§ 1312. Other Motions in the Appellate Court.—The principal other motions made in the appellate Court are the following:

1. Motion for Further Time for the Argument. If the case is very complicated, or very novel in its questions of law, or of unusual importance, or if several causes have been consolidated, or if for any other reason one hour’s time to each side is insufficient for the argument, on motion and due presentation of the facts, made in advance of the hearing, the Court may allow further time, such further time, however, not exceeding one hour to the side, and often not exceeding half an hour.

2. Motion That More Than One Counsel May be Heard on a Side. If, for any of the foregoing reasons, or for any reason, it is important or desirable that more than one counsel may be heard upon any side, the Court may, on motion in advance of the hearing, allow two to be heard. An increase in the number of counsel heard does not, however, imply an increase of the time for argument. Counsel not heard can always file briefs, or written arguments.

3. Motion for a Writ of Error. Any party entitled to an appeal of right may, without praying an appeal, or after failing to prosecute an appeal, present the record of the cause to the appellate Court while in session, and move for a writ of error thereon, which motion will be allowed of course if bond, or pauper oath, be filed; provided the motion is made, and the transcript and bond or oath filed, and the notice to the adverse side given, within two years after the final decree complained of. On making such a motion, counsel must present a perfect transcript of the record and a petition for the writ, containing the brief to be used on the trial, and accompanied by a copy of the notice served on the adverse party, or by a good excuse for not giving such notice.

4. Motion for a Supersedeas. A supersedeas will be granted on motion, in a proper case, whether the decree sought to be superseded is a final decree or an affirmative interlocutory decree. On making such a motion, the transcript, petition, brief, and notice will be required in support thereof as where a writ of error is moved for; but the bond, in case of a supersedeas of a final decree, would probably be sufficient. See, ante, § 903, note 9.

17 Chester v. Foster, 6 Pick., 515. A writ of error may be had from the Clerk, as a matter of course, if applied for within a year. See, ante, § 1273.

18 Sup. Court Rule, 27. This excuse should be in the form of an affidavit. Any excuse that would be sufficient to sustain an ex parte application for a receiver would probably be sufficient. See, ante, § 903, note 9.

§ 1313. Decrees of the Appellate Courts.—In hearing and determining Chancery suits brought up by appeal, the appellate Court sits as a Court of Chancery. Formerly, when the business of the Court was not so great, a Chancery cause was re-examined as to all matters of law and fact appearing in the record: it was tried de novo, as though originating in the appellate Court; but the accumulation of business in the Court is so great that it has become absolutely necessary to confine the re-examination of law and facts to such matters as are specially complained of in the brief of the appellant.

The Court pronounces such a decree as the Chancellor should have pronounced. It is in no way restricted by the decree appealed from, or by any antecedent order or decree, but has unlimited power of adjudication.

26 See Dibrell v. Eastland, 3 Yerg., 533. In this cause, Catron, Ch. J., said, that the decrees appealed to the Supreme Court were "generally, in some respects, altered, and often reversed and entirely changed."
1. When the Chancellor Has Denied Any Relief and dismissed the bill, the appellate Court may: 1, affirm in toto; or 2, affirm in part, and grant partial relief; or 3, reverse in toto, and grant the full relief prayed.

2. When the Chancellor Has Granted Some of the Relief prayed but denied the remainder, the appellate Court may: 1, affirm in toto; or 2, affirm in part, and reverse in part; or 3, reverse in toto, and dismiss the bill.

3. When the Chancellor Has Granted all of the Relief prayed the appellate Court may: 1, affirm in toto; or 2, affirm in part, and reverse as to the remainder; or 3, reverse in toto, and dismiss the bill.

4. Without Either Affirming or Reversing the Decree of the Chancellor, the appellate Court may remand the cause: 1, that new parties may be made; or 2, that the pleadings may be amended; or 3, that new pleadings may be filed, such as a supplemental bill, or a cross bill; or 4, that additional proof may be filed as to a particular matter; or 5, that some other thing may be done necessary to complete justice, or to proper practice, the Court in such cases having all the powers and discretion of the Chancellor, and statutory powers of its own.2

The appellate Court in Chancery causes has the same discretion as to the taxation of costs that the Chancery Court has; and may tax the costs in a different manner, and against different parties, than did the lower Court.3

§ 1314. The Hearing in the Appellate Courts.—The business of each circuit is taken up and disposed of by counties in the order in which they stand on the docket. The entire business of each county is disposed of when such county is called, before proceeding to the business of the other counties of the circuit. There is only one call of the docket of each county of every circuit; on that call every cause is tried or continued. The law causes are disposed of before the Equity causes are called, and so of the Equity causes before the State causes are called. State causes in counties are taken up immediately after the civil docket has been tried.4 The Equity causes are heard in the appellate Court in the same manner as in the Chancery Court, except:

1. The Record in the Cause is Not Read Previous to the Argument. Counsel may, however, during argument refer to and read such parts of the record as may be necessary to illustrate, or establish, the points made and relied on.5

2. The Argument Must be Exclusively Oral, or Exclusively in Writing, as counsel prefer.6 Counsel are not allowed to expatiate orally while reading a written argument, nor are they allowed to sandwich an oral argument with parts of a written argument. A written argument, however, does not supersede the necessity of a brief.7

3. Only One Counsel and One Hour Allowed Each Side, unless otherwise ordered by the Court before the hearing of the case is begun,8 on application therefor by motion. Other counsel, if any, can file briefs, or written arguments.9

4. No Oral Argument, When. All civil cases in which the subject in dispute is of value less than five hundred dollars, exclusive of costs and interest, except 1, those involving the constitutionality of a statute; 2, a question of revenue; or, 3, the title to real estate, will be heard upon the assignment of errors and briefs, and written argument if desired; but no oral arguments will be heard in such cases.10

5. The Reading of Books, or Reports of Opinions, Not Allowed During Argument. Counsel may quote therefrom, if they desire, either in their written or oral argument; but they must quote from memory, if their argument is oral. The Court may, however, call on counsel to read any authority quoted, in which case no comments during the reading will be allowed, but such comment, if any, must precede or follow the reading. 11

§ 1315. How the Appellant Should Present His Case.—Counsel will find that their arguments will be of the greatest benefit to their cause and the Court if the following suggestions are duly observed:

1. Their Statement of the Facts of the Case. A case well stated is half won. Counsel should remember that the Court knows absolutely nothing about the case; and that all the Court needs to know, or wishes to know, is enough of the case to enable it to understand the errors of fact or law relied on for a reversal. In making their statement of the case, counsel should address themselves exclusively to the intellect of the Court, and endeavor, by a plain, short, clear statement, made in a conversational tone and style, to possess the mind of the Court of the material facts of the case, if the question be one of fact; and if the question be one of law, counsel should, in the same manner, state such facts as are necessary, and no more, to enable the Court to understand the question of law raised, and to perceive its pertinency to the issues involved. In making their statement of the facts, counsel should be careful to keep absolutely inside the record, and to say nothing not fairly warranted by the record. Chancery causes often raise no questions but those of fact; and in such a case it should be the aim of counsel to photograph the more prominent features of the case upon the mind of the Court, not going into the minute details unless necessary in weighing the testimony of witnesses. As a rule, counsel pay too little attention to their statement of the facts, and pay too much attention to the supposed questions of law. The law arises from the facts, and, as it were, the shadow of the facts. As the Court understands the facts, so it adjudicates the issues. The Solicitor who gets a Court to see the facts as he sees them is far more apt to win the suit than the Solicitor who gets the Court to see the law as he sees it. The Judges know the law, but are ignorant of the facts: give them the information they need, and let the other side give them the law they do not need. 12

2. Their Statement of the Law of the Case. Ordinarily, counsel quote too much elementary law. The Court needs but little aid from counsel, in matters of law. Ordinarily, all that is necessary is to state the facts out of which the question of law springs, and then to state how the Chancellor held, and where-in you think he erred. The Court will apply the law, and judge the right of the case as you proceed. Having stated what you maintain is the law, you may then cite the authorities contained in your brief on that point. In general, if you possess the Court of the facts, the Court will possess you of the law.

§ 1316. How the Appellee Should Present His Case.—The object of the appellant is to reverse or change the decree of the Chancellor, and he will be strongly tempted to omit, or hurry over, matters deemed by the Chancellor material to the case. These matters the counsel of the appellee should fully, clearly and dispassionately present, without any criticism of adverse counsel for failing to give them their due weight. This supplying of omissions is the main duty of the counsel of the appellee in his argument before the Court on questions of fact. He should not undertake to restate the whole case, unless adverse counsel has so misstated it that a new and correct statement is absolutely necessary to enable the Court to understand the grounds on which the Chancellor based his ruling, order or decree.

His argument on the points of law involved should consist (1) in showing that the argument of counsel for the appellant is unsound, or the authorities cited by him do not apply, or have been overruled or modified, or are mere dicta; or (2) in presenting authorities or arguments of his own in support of the Court below; in doing all which he should maintain a calmness of demeanor, and a good-natured, courteous manner, using a conversational style of delivery, and forbearing to make any reflections or animadversions on the manner or argument of his opponent.

§ 1317. When Causes Will be Reversed.—It is a fundamental rule of the appellate Courts not to reverse any decree of the Chancery Court except for errors which affect the merits. The appellate Court in Equity causes regards substance and not form, and will not reverse where the equities of the case have been attained by the decree, even though the steps taken have been irregular or informal, the Court looking at the correctness of the results reached by the Chancellor, rather than at the process by which they were reached. But if the Chancellor’s decree is illegal or inequitable, and not such as should have been rendered, the appellate Court will reverse the Chancellor, and render such a decree as in their judgment should have been rendered in the Court below. And if the Chancellor, by some interlocutory order, denied a party a right affecting the merits, or gave a party an advantage he was not entitled to, the Court will, on complaint of the party injured, relieve against such action, by a final decree, if practicable, or if not, then by remanding the cause with proper directions to effectuate the ends of justice.

In jury cases, however, where the jury has been demanded by one of the parties, the appellate Court will grant a new trial, and reverse the decree, for any error connected with the jury trial that would have entitled the appellant to a reversal if the cause had been appealed from the Circuit Court, in a cause tried by a jury.

§ 1318. When Causes Will be Remanded.—It may be laid down as a general rule that the appellate Court will remand a Chancery cause (1) whenever complete justice cannot be done the appellant on the merits by reason of some error of the Chancellor in an interlocutory order, or in his rulings in excluding evidence, whereby the appellant was not enabled to properly present his case; or (2) whenever, for any other reason, not resulting from the misconduct, or culpable negligence of the party complaining, he has not had a fair opportunity to amend his pleadings, or prepare his proofs.

As illustrations of this rule, causes will be remanded in the following cases:
1. Where the bill was improperly dismissed on motion, demurrer, or plea.
2. Where the bill was improperly dismissed in consequence of some rule, or interlocutory order.14
3. Where the Chancellor erroneously refused to allow a material amendment of a pleading.
4. Where a reference, or account, or the recommittal of a report was erroneously denied, and such denial not cured by other action of the Court.
5. Where, by an improper ruling of the Chancellor, the party complaining was prevented from taking or using material evidence, or was erroneously denied a continuance.
6. Where, in a jury trial demanded by one of the parties, the Chancellor committed some material error in admitting or excluding evidence, or in charging, or failing to charge the jury, or in refusing a new trial on some other ground.
7. Where, on the facts proved, the complainant shows a probably meritorious cause of action, but the facts are not sufficiently alleged, or the pleadings do not raise the necessary issues, or a cross bill is necessary, and the complainant asked, but was refused, leave to make the proper amendments.15

15 In Governor v. Montgomery, 2 Swan, 613, on remanding the cause, the Supreme Court suggested the adding of a new count to the declaration; in McEwen v. Troost, 1 Sneed, 186, the case was remanded with leave to complainant to amend his bill, and leave to a defendant to file a cross bill if she thought proper; in Dulaney v. Dunlap, 3 Cold., 305, the case was remanded, with leave to the defendant to amend its cross bill, or, at its option, proceed by motion at law; in Charles v. Taylor, 1 Heisk., 328, the case was remanded to make new parties; so, also, in Saylors v. Saylors, 3 Heisk., 525; in Stewart v. Glenn, 3 Heisk., 581; in Humbert v. Kerr, 8 Bax., 291; and in Onsel v. Smith, 10 Lea, 343. But the appellate Court will not remand for amendment of pleadings unless the right to relief on amendment
Where the record shows that there is more satisfactory evidence obtainable which will enable the Court to come to a more satisfactory conclusion. 16

9. Where complete justice cannot be done by reason of some defect in the pleadings, or want of proper parties, or oversight without culpable negligence. 17

10. Where the complainants have a meritorious cause of action, but complete justice cannot be done for want of necessary parties. 18

11. Where in any way the party complaining has been erroneously prevented from presenting his case as to enable the appellate Court to do him full justice on the merits.

12. Where a part of the record is lost, the cause may be remanded with directions to supply the loss. 19

§ 1319. Petition to Rehear.—If it appear from the opinion of the Court, whether such opinion be oral or written, that the Court has made a manifest mistake, oversight, or omission, in some controlling matter of law or fact, which results in manifest injustice, the party aggrieved by such mistake may petition the Court to rehear the cause; and on such petition the Court will correct the mistake, if any appear. Petitions to rehear should be filed only (1) to raise some new question of controlling importance, not considered in the Court’s opinion; or (2) to bring to the attention of the Court some decisive matter of law or fact which was manifestly overlooked; or (3) to bring forward some other matter as to which the decree of the Court is manifestly erroneous. 20

The Court has the right to presume that a petition to rehear seeks to raise some one or more of such questions or matters; and it is on the faith of this presumption that a petition is allowed to be filed. A petition, therefore, that merely seeks to have a rehearing of matters already heard, or a reconsideration of questions already considered, or a re-argument of matters already argued, is both a gross misuse of the office of a petition to rehear, and a gross abuse of the confidence of the Court in allowing it to be filed; and approaches dangerously near the borders of bad faith. 21

be clear. Randolph v. Merchants’ Bank, 9 Lea, 63. In several of the foregoing cases, the Court seems to have remanded or given leave to amend, on its own motion. See Rose v. Ramsey, 3 Head, 17; Furman v. North, 4 Bax., 296; Bond v. Montague, 1 Pick., 727, 736; also, McEwen v. Troost, 1 Sneed, 186, which was remanded with leave to amend pleadings and file a cross bill; Dulaney v. Dunlap, 3 Cold., 306, where the cause was remanded with leave to amend the cross bill. Code, § 3170. But the appellate Court will not remand for amendment of the pleadings if the party so asking has been guilty of culpable negligence in not making the amendment. Bank v. White, 6 Cates, 63. On a remandment, where there has been some negligence or oversight, the party in default will ordinarily be taxed with all the costs of the cause. Hearst v. Profitit, 7 Cates, 560.

16 Cowan v. Dodd, 3 Cold., 278; Gridier v. Harbison, 3 Cold., 208; in which two cases the Supreme Court remanded, but, that the parties might have the opportunity of adding additional proof, as injustice might otherwise result; Wood v. Neely, 7 Cates, 586, which was remanded by the Supreme Court to enable the complainant to prove that the note sued on had been assigned to the complainant; Smith v. Carter, 16 Lea, 527, which was remanded by the Supreme Court to enable the complainant to prove that the lots they were claiming as a homestead were worth less than one thousand dollars; Smith v. Heisk, 15 Lea, 527, which was remanded with leave to complainant to prove additional debts.

19 Seasy v. Hughes, 5 Sneed, 155; Myatt v. Hubbs, 1 Heisk., 321; Denton v. Woods, 11 Lea, 506. Seasy v. Hughes, 5 Sneed, 155, if the appeal to this Court cannot be supported with such a rehearing in the Court below, or curious matter injected into it, before or after the transcript was made out or filed by the Clerk and Master, it would seem to be proper to remand the cause and transcript with proper directions to have the transcript conformed to the true state of the record in the Court below.

20 Andrews v. Crenshaw, 4 Heisk., 151. The appellate Courts lay down these rules substantially once or twice, at almost every term. They were stated fully by Caldwell, J., in Case v. Bell, at Knoxville, in 1890. A petition to rehear should not be presented unless to bring to the attention of the Court some plain, and obvious, and palpable error, or omission, or mistake, in something material to the decree. Jenkins v. Eldredge, 3 Story, 299, cited in note to Sto. En., PI. § 421. And see Hubbard v. Fravel, 12 Lea, 205. The case of Bledsoe v. Pilot Mountain C. & M. Co., 5 Pick., 204, gives an illustration of a petition to consider what had not been considered at all. See form of petition in this section. The other petition is based on Williams v. Coal Creek M. & M. Co., 7 Cates, 578. See Senter v. Bowman, 5 Heisk., 14; Briggs v. Hinton, 14 Lea, 224; Hooper v. Rhea, 2 Shaw, 106.

The case of Nicholson v. Patterson, 2 Hym., 448, was a proper case for a petition to rehear. See, Nicholson v. Hedgecoth, 1 Sneed, 394. Hedgecoth was the attorney by whose oversight the point was not made, and the plaintiff in error was himself an eminent lawyer, and afterward Chief Justice of the State. Lindal v. Thompson, 1 Tenn. Ch., 272; 275. See ante, § 537, note 27.

21 Of a majority of petitions to rehear it may be said that they present nothing important that is new, and nothing new that is important.
error, omission, or mistake consists; and should contain no argument or elaboration. The following is a form:

PETITION TO REHEAR ON A QUESTION OF FACT.

C. F. G. Bleidorn, et al. vs. Pilot Mountain C. & M. Co. From the Chancery Court of Morgan county.

To the Honorable Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee:

Your petitioners, the complainants and appellants in this cause, respectfully show to the Court that they are much aggrieved by the opinion announced [or decree rendered] in this cause, on September 30, 1890, whereby it was adjudged that they had no title as to any land inside of entry 1727. This decision is based on the assumption that Scarborough's possession No. 2 has perfected the title to entry 1727. In making this decision, the Court manifestly overlooked the fact that this possession was inside of entry 1925, and, therefore, could not have been adverse to 1949, 1925 being a superior outstanding title.

Petitioners, therefore, pray for a rehearing on this particular point; and that said decree be so corrected as to give petitioners all the lands inside of the interlap of 1727 and 1949, and outside of 1925; and for general relief.

Pickle & Turner, Solicitors.

A petition for a rehearing, before being presented to the Court, must be furnished to the opposite counsel; and after both sides have prepared briefs on the points raised by the petition, the record, together with the petition and briefs, will be presented to the Court, without argument. If the Court determines that the cause shall be reheard, the counsel will be notified, and the point or points on which re-argument is desired will be indicated, and the time for the re-argument designated. But petitions for rehearing must, in all cases, be presented to the Court within ten days after the announcement of the opinion in the case which is sought to be re-examined, except decisions made within the last ten days of the term, and in such cases, the petitions must be presented as soon after the decisions are made as practicable. No such petitions will be received on the last day of the term. 22

PETITION TO REHEAR ON A QUESTION OF LAW.

R. A. Williams, vs. Coal Creek M. & M. Co., et al. From the Chancery Court of Morgan County.

To the Honorable Supreme Court:

Your petitioners, the defendants (and appellees) in this case, respectfully represent to the Court that they are much aggrieved by so much of the Court's opinion in this cause as holds that the recovery of the complainant, as a tenant in common with others not parties to this suit, enures to their benefit, and entitles the complainant to the possession of the entire tract for his and their benefit.

Petitioners are advised that, while there are authorities sustaining the Court's holding, the question is a new one in our State, and the weight of authority confines the complainant's recovery in such a case to his own interest, and does not entitle him to the possession of the whole tract.

Petitioners, therefore, pray for a rehearing on this particular point; and that complainant's recovery be limited to his own undivided interest; and for general relief.

Lucky, Sanford & Fowler, Solicitors for Defendants.

§ 1320. The Hearing in the Appellate Courts.

Attention is called to the fact that Mr. Freeman, who in his work on Cotenancy and Partition, § 300, sustains the opinion of the Court, admits in a note to Marshall v. Palmer, supra, that there is "a growing inclination to restrict the recovery of a tenant in common to his undivided interest."

When the question raised is a mere point of law the authorities relied on may be subjoined to the petition, as above shown. But if the brief covers several pages it should be separate from the petition.

Brief of Petitioner for a Rehearing.

John Doe, vs. Richard Roe.

Petitioner respectfully shows to the Court that its opinion in this case is erroneous in the following particulars:

I. [Here set out the error of fact alleged in the petition.]

The Court will see by reference to the record [R., p. 94] that [So and so, showing a controlling fact which was evidently overlooked, and which manifestly makes the opinion (and decree) erroneous.]

II. [Here set out the error of law alleged in the petition.]

In the opinion of the Court the case of Gudgeon vs. Juggler, 1 Fox, 00, was evidently not considered. This case is later than Den vs. Pen, relied on in the opinion, and overrules it, laying down the law as petitioner contends.

III. [Here set out any other matter alleged in the petition, and cite the pages of the record where the matter to the contrary is found, if it be a question of fact; and if a question of law cite the authorities relied on to controvert the opinion.]

Respectfully submitted,

X Y Z, Solicitor.

§ 1320. When and by Whom Decrees must be Prepared.—Counsel may present decrees at any time when the Court is not engaged in hearing a cause; but decrees about which counsel do not differ may be entered without being presented to the Court. The decrees and judgments will be prepared by counsel of the successful party, and submitted to counsel on the other side. In the event of disagreement about a decree, the party disagreeing must note his objections, in writing, and these objections, along with the decree or judgment prepared, and such briefs as counsel on either side may desire to present therewith, will be handed to the Court, when the decree or judgment will be examined and corrected, if necessary, or further instructions given counsel. If found correct, it will be given to the Clerk with order to enter it. 23

§ 1321. Forms of Orders and Decrees in the Appellate Courts.—Counsel must always keep in mind that in determining all Chancery causes brought up by appeal, (but not by an appeal in the nature of a writ of error,) the appellate Court is a Chancery Court, composed of five appellate Chancellors; and that in determining all questions that arise in such causes, they are governed by the doctrines and principles of Equity Jurisprudence, and the rules and procedure of Equity Practice. Hence, in drawing decrees in Chancery causes in the appellate Court, the same form of phraseology will be observed as in like cases in the Chancery Court. The following forms may be of service as guides:

MOTION TO ALLOW FURTHER TIME FOR ARGUMENT.

In this case the complainants (appellants) moved the Court to allow them the further time of thirty minutes in which to make their argument, which motion was allowed [or, disallowed; or, taken under advisement.]

Decree Reversing the Decree Below.

Appeal from the Chancery Court, at Knoxville. REVERSED.

This cause came on to be heard this September 25, 1891, before the Honorable Supreme 23 Sup. Court Rule, 25.
Court, [or before the Honorable Judges of the Supreme Court,] upon the transcript of the record in the cause from the Chancery Court of Knox county, [or, at Knoxville,] and the briefs and argument of counsel; upon consideration of all which the Court is of opinion that the decree of the Chancellor [or, of the said Chancery Court, or of the Court below,] is manifestly erroneous, and that the complainant is entitled to no relief whatever [or, that the equities alleged in the complainant’s bill] are fully met and denied by the answers of the defendants, and are not sustained by the proof.

It is, therefore, ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the Court, that the complainant's bill be, and the same is, dismissed, and the complainant and Daniel Doe, his prosecution surety, will pay all the costs of the cause in the Court below, [or, in the Chancery Court;] and the complainant will pay all the costs incident to the appeal [or, all the costs accrued in this Court,] for all of which executions are respectively awarded.

DEGREE AFFIRMING DEGREE BELOW.

John Doe,
vs. Richard Roe.

From the Chancery Court at Kingston.

AFFIRMED.

This cause was this day heard, [or was heard on a former day of the present term,] upon the transcript of the record from the Chancery Court at Kingston, and the briefs of the appellants and appellees, and argument of counsel, upon consideration of all which the Court is of opinion that there is no error in the record:

It is therefore ordered and decreed that the decree of the Chancery Court be, and the same hereby is, in all things affirmed; and that the complainant, the said John Doe, have and recover of the defendant, Richard Roe, and John Jones, his surety on the appeal bond, the sum of four thousand dollars, the amount of the said decree, and the further sum of two hundred dollars interest thereon to this day, aggregating four thousand and two hundred dollars, and all the costs of the cause in this Court and in the Court below, for which an execution will issue.

On motion of T. L. Carty, Esq., a lien is declared in his favor on the above decree to secure his reasonable fee as complainant's Solicitor in this cause.

DEGREE OF AFFIRMANCE WHEN NO ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

[Here insert the style of the cause: see preceding decree.]

This cause came on this day to be heard upon the transcript of the record from the Chancery Court at Cookeville, and there being on file no brief assigning errors, as required by the rules and practice of this Court, it is therefore ordered and adjudged that the decree of the said Chancery Court be in all things affirmed, [and that the bill be dismissed, and that complainant, and John Jones, his prosecution surety, pay the costs accrued in the Chancery Court, and complainant and James Smith, his surety on the appeal bond, pay all the costs incident to the appeal, for which executions will issue respectively. [If the decree below was in favor of the complainant, omit all after the word “affirmed,” and add: and that complainant have and recover of the defendant [here set out verbatim the decree below, and adjudge the costs of the appeal, award executions, and if necessary, remand for further proceedings.]

The only material difference between decrees pronounced by the Supreme Court in cases heard on appeal or writ of error from the Chancery Court, and cases heard on certiorari or writ of error from the Court of Civil Appeals, is in their commencement and recitals, as will appear by the following form:

DEGREE OF SUPREME COURT ON DEGREE OF COURT OF CIVIL APPEALS.

John Doe,
vs. Richard Roe.

From the Chancery Court of............County.

AFFIRMED, [or MODIFIED, or REVERSED.]

This cause was heard before the Supreme Court upon the transcript of the record from the Chancery Court of............County, the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals, the brief of the appellant and reply by the appellee, and argument of counsel, from all of which the Court is of opinion that [etc., as shown in the following forms.]

DECREES AFFIRMING, REVERSING AND MODIFYING THE DEGREES OF THE COURT OF CIVIL APPEALS.

John Doe,
vs. Richard Roe.

From the Chancery Court at ..........

AFFIRMED, [REVERSED, MODIFIED.]

This cause was heard this day, [or, on a former day of the present term,] upon the transcript of the record from the Chancery Court at.........., the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals, the briefs of the parties and arguments of counsel, upon consideration of all which, it appears to the Court that there [is no error in the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals.]

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the said decree be, and the same hereby is, in all things affirmed; and that [Follow the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals in every particular; but if the Supreme Court reverses said decree, then proceed as follows, omitting everything after the asterisk () above:] are manifest errors in the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals as set forth in the first and fifth assignments of error, (which are sustained, and all other assignments overruled,) and that the equities of the bill are fully met and denied by the answer, and not sustained by the proof, it is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals be, and hereby is, reversed and set aside, and the decree of the Chancery Court in all things affirmed, and that the bill of complaint be and hereby is dismissed, and that the complainant and John Jones, his prosecution surety, pay all the costs of the cause in the Chancery Court, and that complainant pay all the costs incident to the appeal,24 for which let executions issue respectively. \[If the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals is modified, then omit all after the asterisk () above, and proceed as follows:] are manifest errors in the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals as set forth in the first, third and fifth assignments of error, said assignments are sustained, and all other assignments are disallowed and overruled, and the balance of said decree is affirmed.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed, that \[Here set out the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals as modified by the Supreme Court. If the decree of the Supreme Court requires the remandment of the cause, then add:] It is therefore ordered that the cause be remanded to the Chancery Court at ................., to be further proceeded in according to this decree and to the opinion of the Supreme Court in the cause. \[Then adjudge the costs according to the said opinion.\]

DECREES AFFIRMING DECREES OF COURT OF CIVIL APPEALS.

John Den, \[vs.\] Richard Fen. \{From the Chancery Court at Cookeville.\]

AFFIRMED.

This cause was heard this day \[or, at a former day of the present term.] upon the transcript of the record from the Chancery Court at Cookeville, the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals, the briefs of both parties, and the arguments of counsel, upon consideration of all which, the Court is of opinion that there is no error in the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the decree of the Court of Civil Appeals be, and the same is hereby, affirmed; and that the complainant, John Den, have and recover of the defendant, Richard Fen, and John Smith, his surety on the appeal bond, the sum of twelve thousand and nine hundred and ten dollars, the amount of said decree and interest thereon to date, and all the costs of the cause, for which execution will issue.

And on motion of James C. Ford, Esq., a lien is declared in his favor on the above recovery to secure his reasonable fee as complainant's Solicitor in this case.

DECREES AFFIRMING THE DECREES BELOW.

John Den, \[vs.\] Richard Fen, et al. \{Writ of Error25 to the Chancery Court, at Athens.\]

AFFIRMED.

This cause was heard upon the record thereof from the Chancery Court at Athens, and upon the briefs of counsel, and was argued by counsel, at a former day of the term, and taken under advisement by the Court; and on consideration of all which the Court is of opinion that there is no error in the record, and in the decree of said Chancery Court.

It is, therefore, ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the writ of error be dismissed, and that the decree of said Chancery Court be, and the same is, in all things affirmed; and that \[Here set out the mandatory part of the decree below.26\]

It is further ordered and decreed that the supersedeas be discharged, and that the defendants, Richard Fen and Frank Fen, who alone prosecuted the writ of error, and John Brown and Jesse Jones, their prosecution sureties, pay all the costs of the same, for which an execution is awarded.

And the complainant, having moved the Court for judgment on the bond for a supersedeas executed by the defendants in this cause, it is ordered and adjudged by the Court that Richard Fen and Frank Fen as principals, and John Brown and Jesse Jones as sureties, to said bond, pay complainant said sum of \[naming the amount of complainant's recovery.] dollars, for which an execution will issue.

24 In this case the defendant is supposed to have appealed.

25 When a Chancery cause is taken to an appellate Court by appeal, it retains its style in the appellate Court; and such is the practice when a Chancery cause is taken up by an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, or by a writ of error. But when a cause, from the Circuit Court, is carried up by an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, or by a writ of error, the party so doing, whether plaintiff or defendant in the Court below, is termed plaintiff-in-error, and is treated in the appellate Court as the plaintiff in that Court, and as prosecuting a suit there to reverse the action of the lower Court.

26 This is not necessary in case of a writ of error, but is good practice in cases of appeal, or of appeal in the nature of a writ of error, for then the decree appears in full on the records of each Court. If, however, the decree is wholly affirmed without modifications and remanded for execution, all that is necessary is to adjudge that the decree of the Chancellor be in all things affirmed. Clift v. Clift, 3 Pick., 28.
§ 1322. What Cases Can be Carried to the Supreme Court of the United States.—If the judgment or decree of the Supreme Court of the State involves what is termed a "Federal question," in certain cases such judgment or decree may be reviewed in the Supreme Court of the United States, on a writ of error. The statutes of the United States provide that a final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest Court of a State, in which a decision in the suit could be had, may be re-examined, and reversed, modified, or affirmed, in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a writ of error, in any of the following cases:

1. Where the validity of a treaty or statute of the United States has been drawn in question, and the decision of the State Supreme Court has been against its validity.

2. Where the validity of an authority exercised under the United States has been drawn in question, and the decision has been against its validity;

3. Where the validity of a statute of any State has been drawn in question on the ground of it being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision has been in favor of its validity;

4. Where the validity of an authority exercised under any State has been drawn in question on the ground of it being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision has been in favor of its validity;

5. Where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty, or statute of the United States, or under any commission held, or authority exercised, under the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority.

In any of these cases, the judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the United States have been drawn in question, the decision has been against its validity, and the case has been reversed, modified, or affirmed, in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a writ of error, in any of the following cases:

1. Where the validity of a treaty or statute of the United States has been drawn in question, and the decision of the State Supreme Court has been against its validity.

2. Where the validity of an authority exercised under the United States has been drawn in question, and the decision has been against its validity;

3. Where the validity of a statute of any State has been drawn in question on the ground of it being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision has been in favor of its validity;

4. Where the validity of an authority exercised under any State has been drawn in question on the ground of it being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision has been in favor of its validity;

5. Where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty, or statute of the United States, or under any commission held, or authority exercised, under the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority.

In any of these cases, the judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the United States have been drawn in question, the decision has been against its validity, and the case has been reversed, modified, or affirmed, in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a writ of error, in any of the following cases:

1. Where the validity of a treaty or statute of the United States has been drawn in question, and the decision of the State Supreme Court has been against its validity.

2. Where the validity of an authority exercised under the United States has been drawn in question, and the decision has been against its validity;

3. Where the validity of a statute of any State has been drawn in question on the ground of it being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision has been in favor of its validity;

4. Where the validity of an authority exercised under any State has been drawn in question on the ground of it being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision has been in favor of its validity;

5. Where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty, or statute of the United States, or under any commission held, or authority exercised, under the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority.

In any of these cases, the judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the United States have been drawn in question, the decision has been against its validity, and the case has been reversed, modified, or affirmed, in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a writ of error, in any of the following cases:

1. Where the validity of a treaty or statute of the United States has been drawn in question, and the decision of the State Supreme Court has been against its validity.

2. Where the validity of an authority exercised under the United States has been drawn in question, and the decision has been against its validity;

3. Where the validity of a statute of any State has been drawn in question on the ground of it being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision has been in favor of its validity;

4. Where the validity of an authority exercised under any State has been drawn in question on the ground of it being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision has been in favor of its validity;

5. Where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty, or statute of the United States, or under any commission held, or authority exercised, under the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority.

In any of these cases, the judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the United States have been drawn in question, the decision has been against its validity, and the case has been reversed, modified, or affirmed, in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a writ of error, in any of the following cases:

1. Where the validity of a treaty or statute of the United States has been drawn in question, and the decision of the State Supreme Court has been against its validity.

2. Where the validity of an authority exercised under the United States has been drawn in question, and the decision has been against its validity;

3. Where the validity of a statute of any State has been drawn in question on the ground of it being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision has been in favor of its validity;

4. Where the validity of an authority exercised under any State has been drawn in question on the ground of it being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision has been in favor of its validity;

5. Where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty, or statute of the United States, or under any commission held, or authority exercised, under the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority.

In any of these cases, the judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the United States have been drawn in question, the decision has been against its validity, and the case has been reversed, modified, or affirmed, in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a writ of error, in any of the following cases:

1. Where the validity of a treaty or statute of the United States has been drawn in question, and the decision of the State Supreme Court has been against its validity.

2. Where the validity of an authority exercised under the United States has been drawn in question, and the decision has been against its validity;

3. Where the validity of a statute of any State has been drawn in question on the ground of it being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision has been in favor of its validity;

4. Where the validity of an authority exercised under any State has been drawn in question on the ground of it being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision has been in favor of its validity;

5. Where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty, or statute of the United States, or under any commission held, or authority exercised, under the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority.
State, when final, may be re-examined, and reversed, modified or affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a writ of error; and the latter Court may, in its discretion, award execution, or remand the cause to the State Supreme Court. The right to prosecute a writ of error in such cases does not depend on the amount in controversy.

§ 1323. How Cases are Carried to the Supreme Court of the United States. A case is carried to the Supreme Court of the United States from the Supreme Court of the State by a writ of error. If you desire to have the Supreme Court of the United States pass on the Federal question involved in the case, if decided against you in the State Courts, you should raise that question clearly in your pleading, if it can be there done; or in a request to the Chancellor for an instruction to the jury, if there be a jury trial; and in your brief in the State Supreme Court; and also, have the State Supreme Court distinctly adjudicate the question in its decree.

If the decision is against you, you will then prepare a petition to the Chief Justice of the State Supreme Court for a writ of error, giving therein enough of the record to show that a Federal question is so involved in the case that the petitioner is entitled to have the case reviewed in the United States Supreme Court, on a writ of error; and praying that such a writ may be allowed. You will then apply for a writ of error to the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States at Washington, or to the Clerk of the United States Circuit Court in the District wherein the decision of the State Supreme Court was made. You will, thereupon, present your petition, and the writ of error, and a bond for the prosecution of the writ, to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, who, if satisfied with the sufficiency of the bond, and that a Federal question exists, will approve the bond, and write on the writ of error, to the left of the Clerk's signature, his allowance thereof, thus "Allowed by W. D. Beard, Chief Justice." The Chief Justice will, at the same time, issue a citation notifying the adverse party to appear before the Supreme Court of the United States at Washington, and show cause why the decree complained of should not be corrected, and speedy justice done.

The petition, writ, bond, and citation when served, and an affidavit of the service of the citation, will all be filed with the Clerk of the State Supreme Court, who will, thereupon, forward to the Clerk of the United States Supreme Court, a transcript of the cause, including the opinion of the State Supreme Court in the cause, along with the bond, citation, affidavit of service, and the writ of error and his return thereon.

30 This course is highly expedient, but not absolutely necessary.
31 It being more convenient for local practitioners to apply to the Clerk of the U. S. Circuit Court, that Clerk usually issues the writ of error. Curtis' Jur. U. S. Courts, 46; 81 U. S. Rev. Stats., 1004. The U. S. Circuit Court Clerk, in such a case, is a sort of statutory deputy for the United States Supreme Court Clerk.
32 The Chief Justice of the State Supreme Court will, ordinarily, allow the writ of error on petition therefor; and leave it to the Supreme Court of the United States to determine whether a Federal question is involved, or not.
33 All of this fully and at large will appear in the books giving the practice in the Federal Courts, but is outside of the plan of this treatise.
PART XI.
CHANCERY SUITS IN THE CIRCUIT AND COUNTY COURTS.

CHAPTER LXXVII.
CHANCERY SUITS IN THE CIRCUIT COURT.

§ 1324. What Chancery Suits May be Brought in the Circuit Court.—The North Carolina Act of 1782 gave the Courts of Law exclusive Equity jurisdiction; and these Courts continued to exercise that jurisdiction until separate Chancery Courts were established, as heretofore shown. In some cases, this Equity jurisdiction is still retained by the Circuit Courts, concurrently with the Chancery Courts. Such jurisdiction, however, is seldom exercised, complainants generally preferring to institute such suits in the Courts of Chancery. The ordinary cases of concurrent jurisdiction are the following:

1. Suits for divorce and alimony;
2. Suits to partition lands between tenants in common, or to sell lands for partition among them;
3. Suits to sell the lands of decedent to pay his debts;
4. Suits for the allotment of dower, and of homestead;
5. Suits to release testamentary and other trustees, and suits to appoint trustees in place of those released or dead;
6. Suits on petition of trustees by will or otherwise, to sell the trust property, real or personal;
7. Suits in the name of the State against corporations, and suits to prevent the usurpation of office; and
8. Suits by a distributee or legatee against the personal representative to compel the payment of his distributive share or legacy.

In entertaining and determining any of these suits, the pleadings, processes, procedure and forms of orders, reports and decrees, are the same as in like suits in the Chancery Courts, as will be more fully shown in the next section. The common law forms will not be used, being wholly inapplicable.

The equitable jurisdiction of the Circuit Court is exclusively statutory; and, as a consequence, in order to maintain its jurisdiction in any matter of exclusive equitable cognizance, a state of facts must be shown to exist coming within the provisions of some statute, giving jurisdiction thereof to the Circuit Court. The Chancery Courts having exclusive original jurisdiction of all cases of an equitable nature, where the debt exceeds fifty dollars, unless otherwise provided by law, the presumption is that every such case must be instituted in those Courts, and where a suit of an equitable nature is brought in the Circuit Courts, the complainant, on the question of jurisdiction being properly raised, must be able to point out some statute specifically conferring upon the Circuit Courts jurisdiction of that particular suit. This concurrent equitable jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts cannot be extended by construction, but must be strictly confined to the express limits designated by the statutes.

§ 1325. How a Chancery Suit in the Circuit Court is Conducted.—In every case where the suits mentioned in the preceding section are commenced in the Circuit Court, the procedure, from the filing of the bill or petition to the final decree, and the procedure in enforcing the final decree, are precisely the same as in like suits in the Chancery Court, except (1) the name and title of the Circuit Judge will, in all cases, be substituted for the name and title of the Chancellor; (2) the word Circuit will be substituted for the word Chancery in all pleadings, processes, orders, reports, and decrees, and (3) the name and title of the Clerk will be substituted for the name and title of the Clerk and Master.8

A bill or petition in the Circuit Court will begin as follows:

ADDRESS AND COMMENCEMENT OF A BILL IN THE CIRCUIT COURT.

To the Hon. William R. Hicks, Judge of the Second Judicial Circuit, holding the Circuit Court at Jackson: John Doe, a resident of Anderson county, complainant, vs. Richard Roe, a resident of Campbell county, defendant.

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. [Here set out the facts on which the suit is based, in the same manner as in a Chancery bill based on the same facts, dividing the bill into proper sections; and]

II. [Pray for the same process, and the same special and general relief, as in a Chancery bill seeking the same relief; and swear to the bill, if a verification would be necessary in a like case in the Chancery Court.]

The statute provides that the suits above mentioned, when brought in the Circuit Court, shall be conducted after the manner of suits in Equity, and according to the practice and procedure in the Chancery Court;9 and in such cases the Clerks of the Circuit Courts are vested with all the powers of the Clerks and Masters of the Chancery Courts.10

The Clerk of the Circuit Court will take the prosecution bond, file the bill, issue a copy of the bill with the summons, take bills for confessed, appoint guardians ad litem, set aside an order pro confesso, make reports, sell lands, revive causes, and will do any other thing, or make any other order, necessary or proper for the Clerk and Master to do, in a like case.11

The defendant to a Chancery suit in the Circuit Court must make his defence in precisely the same manner as though the suit had been brought in the Chancery Court. He may (1) plead in abatement, or (2) move to dismiss, or (3) demur to the bill, or (4) plead in bar, or (5) answer, or (6) may file his answer as a cross bill, or file a separate cross bill.12 These defences must also be made in the same order and manner as in like suits in the Chancery Court. The answer may be excepted to for insufficiency, impertinence or scandal, as in Chancery; and the same proceedings will be taken, and the same rulings and orders made, on such exceptions, as on exceptions to answers in Chancery.

The Circuit Court may, also, make all such references to the Clerk, and require all such reports by him, as would be necessary or proper in like cases in the Chancery Court; and the orders and decrees of the Court will be enforced in the same way the Chancery Court enforces its decrees. In short, all suits of an equitable nature brought in the Circuit Court, are brought, defended and litigated, and heard and determined, in accordance with the pleadings, prac-

8 These differences are insignificant, and yet they are all. The forms of pleadings, processes, orders, reports and decrees in the Chancery Court can thus be easily adapted to the Circuit Court.
9 As to divorce suits, see Code, § 2454; as to suits in partition cases, see Code, § 7374; as to suits to sell lands of a decedent to pay his debts, see Code, § 2269; as to suits for distributive shares, see Code, § 2314; as to suits in the name of the State against corporations and against usurpation of office, see Code, §§ 3415-3417; and as to all Chancery suits in the Circuit Court, see Code, §§ 2949; 4236.
10 Code, § 4051.
11 Code, §§ 4051; 4420-4428.
12 But he cannot, by means of a cross bill, enlarge the equitable jurisdiction of the Circuit Court. In his cross bill, he cannot pray for any affirmative relief except such as the Circuit Court has jurisdiction to grant on an original bill, or original petition. Thus, in a divorce suit, the defendant may file a cross bill praying a divorce; but a defendant in a partition suit cannot, by cross bill have a deed reformed, nor can he enforce a vendor's lien against any of the other parties to the suit.
tice, proofs and principles prevailing in the Chancery Court; and in such suits the Circuit Court has power to perform all the functions of the Chancery Court. 13

All depositions, exhibits, and other documentary evidence actually read at the hearing, become parts of the record, and on appeal, no bill of exceptions is necessary as to them; but depositions or documents rejected at the hearing must be made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions. 14 And appeals are prayed and granted, and time given to execute appeal bonds, in the same manner as in Chancery.

§ 1326. Chancery Suits in the Circuit Court Particularly Considered. While the pleadings and practice in Equity causes are the same in the Circuit Court as in the Chancery Court, nevertheless the Circuit Court jurisdiction in such causes is not always entirely co-extensive with that of the Chancery Court.

1. Divorce Suits in the Circuit Court. The forms of bills, answers, orders, references, reports and decrees, and the measures of relief, in divorce suits in the Circuit Court, are the same as those already given in the Chapter on Divorce Suits in the Chancery Court; and, therefore, need not be repeated. 15 The Circuit Court, however, could not, it would seem, decree maintenance to a wife, except as an incident to a perpetual, or a temporary divorce.

2. Partition Suits in the Circuit Court, and suits to sell lands for partition, are conducted in the same manner as in Chancery. The bills, answers, references, reports and decrees being precisely the same in both Courts. 16 The Circuit Court cannot, however, entertain jurisdiction to adjudicate equities between the parties that are not incidental to the partition.

3. Suits to Sell the Lands of a Decedent to Pay His Debts are brought, proceeded in and concluded in the same manner, whether brought in the Chancery or the Circuit Court, as has already been fully shown. 17 The pleadings, proofs, orders, references, reports, decrees, and proceedings to execute the decrees, are the same in both Courts. In the Circuit Court, however, no equities between the parties can be adjudicated in this proceeding, the jurisdiction of the Court being limited to the sale of the property, and the disbursement of the proceeds.

4. Suits in the Name of the State Against Corporations, and to Prevent the Usurpation of Office, are commenced, conducted and concluded in the same manner in both the Circuit and Chancery Courts, and the jurisdiction of both Courts is substantially the same, except that the Chancery Court has fuller powers and better processes for reaching all the assets of a corporation, and settling all the equities between the corporation, its stockholders, debtors, and creditors.

5. Suits for Distributive Shares are begun, prosecuted and determined in the same manner in the Circuit Court as in the Chancery Court, as will fully appear by reference to that subject. 18

6. Suits for the Allotment of Dower and Homestead are fully considered in the Article on that subject in the Chapter treating of Chancery suits in the County Court. 19 The Circuit Court, however, has a larger jurisdiction in such suits than the County Court in determining the legal rights of the parties to the land, in case of disputed title.

14 Hill c. Bowers, 4 Heisk., 274.
16 See, ante, §§ 1088-1105. While the Circuit Courts undertake, in divorce suits, to exercise unlimited equitable jurisdiction, declaring and enforcing liens and trusts, setting aside fraudulent conveyances, declaring deeds to be mortgages, granting injunctions and ne exeatis, and marshalling securities, when deemed necessary to alimony, it is very ques-tionable whether there is any authority for such exercise of jurisdiction, aside from common usage. CHANCERY SUITS IN THE COUNTY COURT.

ARTICLE I. Chancery Suits in the County Court generally Considered.

ARTICLE III. Suits to Settle Insolvent Estates.

ARTICLE I.

CHANCERY SUITS IN THE COUNTY COURT GENERALLY CONSIDERED.

§ 1327. What Chancery Suits May be Brought in the County Court.

§ 1327. What Suits may be Brought in the County Court.—In the following cases the statute has conferred Equity powers and jurisdiction upon the County Court:
1. Suits for the allotment of homestead and dower.
2. Suits to partition land by division, or sale.
3. Suits to partition and distribute the estates of decedents; and for these purposes the power to sell the real and personal property belonging to such estates, if necessary to make the partition and distribution, or if manifestly for the interest of the parties.
4. Suits to sell the land of a decedent to pay his debts in cases where the whole estate is not insolvent.
5. Suits to settle insolvent estates, and for this purpose to sell real or personal property belonging thereto, at the instance of the personal representative, or the creditors, where the amount of the estate does not exceed three thousand dollars.
6. Suits to enforce vendors' liens when the amount is less than fifty dollars.
7. Suits by a distributee or legatee against the personal representative to compel the payment of his distributive share, or legacy.

The County Courts are not Courts of general jurisdiction, as are the Circuit and Chancery Courts; their jurisdiction is statutory and limited, especially in those cases where their jurisdiction is concurrent with the Circuit and Chancery Courts. In order to ascertain the jurisdiction of the County Courts, the statutes must be consulted; and, unless a statute can be found expressly giving them jurisdiction in a particular matter, no such jurisdiction exists. The County Courts derive no jurisdiction from the common law; and they have no

1 Code, §§ 2407; 4201. The statute does not expressly give the County Court jurisdiction to assign homestead; but seems to proceed on the supposition that such jurisdiction already existed. While jurisdiction is not generally conferred by implication, the implication in this case seems to be sufficiently strong; and the County Courts throughout the State are exercising the jurisdiction without question. See M. & V's Code, §§ 3250; 3251; 3997; 4020; 4036; Rhea v. Meredith, 6 Lea, 605; Steel v. Mahoney, 15 Lea, 141. Contemporanea expostio est optima et fortissima in lege. Broom's Leg. Max., 654.
2 Code, § 5766.
3 Code, §§ 3206; 4201; Acts of 1873, ch. 64. But the County Court cannot partition land when it is necessary, as a preliminary step, to settle questions as to the title. Nor will the want of jurisdiction be waived by the defendant answering the bill. Dean v. Snelling, 2 Heisk., 485; Walsh v. Crook, 7 Pick., 388.
5 Code, §§ 4201-4203. In the administration of insolvent estates, the County Court has exclusive jurisdiction, where the real and personal estate does not amount to one thousand dollars in value. Code, §§ 2323; 2362; 2364; Acts of 1871, ch. 105; Connell v. Walker, 6 Lea, 709; Steel v. Mahoney, 15 Lea, 141.
6 Acts of 1887, ch. 141.
7 Code, § 2312; Stewart v. Glenn, 3 Heisk., 581.

jurisdiction of any matter of equitable cognizance, unless it be expressly conferred by some statute.9

§ 1328. How Chancery Suits in the County Court are Conducted.—In suits to partition lands, or to sell lands for partition, and in suits to sell the lands of a decedent to pay his debts, the pleading, practice and procedure in the County Court are the same as in Chancery, with the exception of the change in the style of the Court and of its Clerk.10 In such cases, the following is a form for the address and commencement of a

BILL, OR PETITION:

To the Worshipful County Court of Davidson county:

John Doe, a resident of Davidson county, complainant; [signature]

Richard Fen, a resident of the same county, defendant. [signature]

The complainant (or, petitioner,) respectfully shows to the Court:

I. [Proceed to set out the facts on which the suit is based, in the same manner as in a Chancery bill; and]

II. [Pray for the same process, and the same special and general relief, as in a Chancery bill of like character; and swear to the bill, if a verification would be necessary in Chancery.]

The Clerk will issue a copy of the bill with the summons, and the defendants will make defence by plea in abatement, motion to dismiss, demurrer, plea in bar, or answer, as in like suits in the Chancery Court. The County Court may make such references to the Clerk, and order such reports as would be necessary and proper if the suit were in Chancery; and may make any and all orders, and decrees necessary to adjust, determine, and enforce, the rights of the parties in the subject-matter of the suit, or necessary to enforce its decrees, and may appoint special commissioners to make sales, and may render judgment on notes given in the cause, and open the biddings, set aside sales, issue writs of possession, and, in general, do anything necessary for the purpose of exercising and effectuating its jurisdiction that the Chancery Court might lawfully do in a like case.11

The Clerk of the County Court, in all Chancery causes in his Court, is vested with all the powers of a Clerk and Master; and may take bills for confessed, appoint guardians ad litem, set aside orders pro confesso, extend time for taking proof, hear suggestion and proof of party’s marriage or death, issue scire facias to revive, order a revivor of the cause, and, in an equity cause, do any other act in vacation that a Clerk and Master may lawfully do.12

The law, pleadings, practice and procedure, decrees and proceedings thereon, and appeals therefrom, and process to enforce decrees, in suits to partition lands or sell lands for partition, and in suits to sell the lands of a decedent to pay his debts, will be found fully set forth in the Articles especially devoted thereto; and need not be repeated here.13

The County Court has no jurisdiction, on a bill by an executor and trustee, to sell the lands of minor legatees for the purpose of converting them. Cross v. Bloomer, 6 Bax., 73. Nor has the County Court jurisdiction of a bill, by an administrator with the will annexed, to sell lands for a division between legatees. Barton v. Cannon, 7 Bax., 402.

§ 1329. Application for Homestead and Dower, How Made. — The widow may make application verbally, or in writing, to the County Court of the county where her husband last resided before his death, to have her homestead and dower assigned her,\(^1\) having previously given five days' written notice of her application to the personal representative, if there be one, and to the heirs or devisees, or to their guardian if any be minors and have a guardian. The notice may be in the following form:

NOTICE OF APPLICATION FOR HOMESTEAD AND DOWER.

To A B, the administrator [or, executor.] and C F, the heir [or, devisee.] of E F, deceased:

You are hereby notified that I will make [verbal or] written application to the County Court of Davidson county on the first Monday of April next, to have homestead and dower assigned me as the widow of said E F, out of the real estate of which he died seized and possessed. This March 3, 1891.

This notice may be acknowledged or served, and service proved, in the same manner as in case of notices to take depositions.\(^2\) Where the application is verbal, the entries on the minutes showing the application should recite enough facts to show that the Court has jurisdiction of the matter, and that notice of the application was given as required by the statute, and should describe the land out of which homestead and dower are to be assigned.

Where a suit is pending to which a widow entitled to homestead and dower is a party, she may, on answer or petition filed in the cause, praying therefor, have homestead and dower assigned, without being compelled to institute original proceedings for that purpose.\(^3\)

When land encumbered by right of dower is sold on a bill by an administrator to pay debts, or on a bill by tenants in common for partition, or in any other proceeding in Court to which the widow is a party, she may consent to have her dower sold along with the fee, and to take her dower out of the proceeds of the sale.\(^4\)

§ 1330. Frame and Form of the Petition.—The better practice, however, in making application for homestead and dower, is to file a petition alleging: 1, the husband's death; 2, the fact that he died seized and possessed of certain lands, describing them; 3, that the petitioner is his widow; 4, that, if there be a will interfering with her homestead and dower right, she has duly dissented therefrom;\(^5\) and 5, praying that the administrator and heirs, or devisees interested in the real estate, naming them, be made parties, and that homestead and dower be assigned her according to law.\(^6\) The same notice may be given of

\(^2\) Code, § 2410.

\(^3\) Martin v. Lincoln, 4 Lea, 289; Code, § 2411.

\(^4\) The case of Lane v. Courtney, 1 Hels., 331, is so far as it intimates that a widow cannot by answer set up her claim to dower, is not law. See case above cited, and also, Code, §§ 2411, 2414. But, of course, an answer will be held good unless the heirs are before the Court.

\(^5\) See Code, §§ 3305-3307. For the method of ascertaining the value of the life estate, see Art. on Gross Value of Life Estates, ante, §§ 1070-1072.

\(^6\) If she has not already signified her dissent in open Court, and her petition for homestead and dower is filed in the County Court, she may signify her dissent in said petition. The safer and better practice in such cases is to signify her dissent from her husband's will in open County Court, and to have the fact of such dissent duly entered on the minutes of the Court. Code, § 2404.

\(^5\) If her bill is filed in the Chancery or Circuit Court she may also pray for and recover rents for the time her dower has been wrongfully withheld. Walker v. Walker, 6 Cold., 381; Loudon v. Loudon, 1 Hun., 1. In the latter case, there is the form of a decree adjudging dower and back rents. See, also, Clift v. Clift, 3 Pick., 17.
ASSIGNMENT OF HOMESTEAD AND DOWER. § 1331

the filing of such petition as is required to be given in case of a verbal application for homestead and dower; or a subpoena to answer the petition may be issued by the Clerk. The following is a form of a PETITION FOR HOMESTEAD AND DOWER.

To the Worshipful County Court of Davidson county:
G F, widow of E F, deceased, a resident of Davidson county, petitioner,

A B, the administrator, and C F, the heirs of said E F, deceased, all residents of Davidson county defendants.

The petitioner respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

That she is the widow of E F, who died intestate in the county of Davidson, wherein he last resided before his death. The defendant, A B, has been duly appointed administrator of his estate, and C F is his only child and heir, she being an infant less than one year old, and without a general guardian. [If the decedent died testate so state, state that A B is his executor, and add:] The petitioner has, heretofore, in open Court, duly signed her dissent from the will of her said husband, and said dissent has been entered on the minutes of your Worships' Court.

II.

The said E F, at the time of his death, was seized and possessed of the following tract of land in the Ninth civil district of Davidson county; bounded as follows: Beginning on a walnut at [describing the land by metes and bounds, according to the title papers.]

III.

Petitioner, therefore, prays the Court:
1st. That a notice of the petition be duly served on said defendants [If notice has already been served, this prayer is unnecessary and will be omitted.]
2d. That homestead and dower be assigned her out of said tract of land, in the manner and to the extent prescribed by law, and for general relief.

G F.

The petition need not be sworn to, in an ordinary case in the County Court.

If the widow does not know of what lands her husband died seized and possessed, she may, if her bill is filed in Chancery, pray for a discovery against the heirs, and the Court will compel them to produce the title papers, and to discover any matter necessary to enable her to ascertain the extent of her husband's landed estate: she would probably not be entitled to a discovery in any other Court; but she could have a subpoena duces tecum served on the heir, and thus make a witness of him to prove the facts.

§ 1331. Proceedings in Court upon the Application.—No answer or other defence to the application will be necessary, unless (1) the petitioner is not the lawful widow of E F, never having been lawfully married to him, or else having been divorced from him; or (2) unless there is a marriage contract waiving, for a consideration, all rights of dower and homestead; or (3) unless there is a will, and she has failed to dissent therefrom in the time and manner prescribed by law; or (4) unless the land belongs to the heir unencumbered by rights of homestead and dower, as when his father had a mere life-estate with remainder to his heir, or when the land was bought and paid for with the heir's money, and a trust results to the heir.

The proceedings upon the application for homestead and dower are summary, and are heard and determined at the first term after notice. If the averments of the petition be proved, the prayer of the petition will be granted. The fact that petitioner lived with decedent as his wife is, ordinarily, sufficient proof of a legal marriage; his death may be proved by any neighbor, or by herself; and the deed or actual possession may ordinarily be sufficient proof that the decedent owned the land. She is not bound to introduce the original deed, but may produce a certified copy from the Register's office.

7 Clift v. Clift, 3 Pick., 17. This is important when dower is sought in lands held in common, and in mines. 8 Walker v. Walker, 6 Cold., 573.
The following is the form of an ORDER APPOINTING COMMISSIONERS TO LAY OFF HOMESTEAD AND DOWER.
G F, widow of E F, deceased,

A B, the administrator, and C F, the heir of said E F, deceased.

G F, the widow of E F, deceased, this day made application to the Court, [by petition, if such be the fact] for the appointment of Commissioners to assign to her homestead and dower out of the lands of which the said E F lately died seized and possessed. And it duly appearing to the Court that she is the widow of said E F, who resided in this county at the time of his death; and that the said E F died seized and possessed of the following tract of land in the Ninth civil district of this county, bounded as follows: [describing it by metes and bounds]; and it appearing that five days’ notice in writing of this application was given the defendants, it is ordered by the Court that said application be granted; and I J and K L, two free-holders of the Court, and M N, the County Surveyor, all of whom are unconnected by affinity or consanguinity with any of the parties, are appointed Commissioners to allot and set apart to said G F, out of said tract, first a homestead of the value of one thousand dollars, and then one-third of the remainder of the tract, according to quality and quantity, as dower. The Commissioners will make their report, accompanied by a plat, to the next term of the Court.

When the application for homestead and dower is made in the Circuit or Chancery Court, a third person, claiming title paramount to the widow’s husband, may, on his own petition, intervene and be made a party defendant, and as such resist her claim to homestead or dower. In strict practice, he would be required to file an original bill in the nature of a cross bill, but under the statute, on his sworn petition showing that he has a superior title to the widow’s husband, he may be allowed to appear and defend against her claim. Such third person may, also, in a summary way, show the County Court that the land is his, and thus defeat the widows’ application.

§ 1332. Proceedings and Report of the Commissioners.—The statute prescribes what the Commissioners shall do in laying off homestead and dower. They must in their report describe the homestead by metes and bounds, if less than the entire tract is assigned as a homestead; and they must describe the dower by metes and bounds, unless the balance of the homestead tract, or a whole tract, is assigned as dower; and where a part of a tract is assigned as homestead or dower, the Commissioners’ report must be accompanied by a plat showing plainly the metes and bounds set apart to the widow. The following is a form of a

COMMISSIONERS’ REPORT OF HOMESTEAD AND DOWER.

G F,

A B, admr., &c, et al.

To the Worshipful County Court of Davidson county:

The undersigned commissioners appointed in this cause at the last term of this Court, and duly sworn, to allot and set apart to G F her homestead and dower out of the tract of land described in the order appointing them, respectfully report as follows:

1st. They have allotted and assigned to her the following portion of said tract as her homestead: Beginning on a cedar: [giving the metes and bounds] to the beginning, containing twenty acres, and including the family residence, and the appurtenances.

2d. They have allotted and assigned to her, as dower, the following portion of the remainder of said tract: Beginning on a cedar, a corner of said homestead and [giving the metes and bounds] to the beginning, adjoining the said homestead, and containing sixty-seven acres, being one-third in value in said remainder.

Said homestead and dower are shown on the plat herewith exhibited as a part of this report, marked “A.”

Confirmation of the Report, and Final Decree.—The report may be excepted to by the heir, or his vendee, because too much has been allowed; or it may be excepted to by the widow because too little has been allowed. These exceptions will be heard summarily in open Court, on oral or other evidence. The Court may overrule these exceptions, or sustain them and set aside the report, with instruction to the Commissioners how to proceed. When the report is confirmed it will be incorporated in the decree.

DECREE CONFIRMING REPORT.

G F, vs. Dower.
A B, &c., et al. [Here copy it, and the plat, in full.]

This cause coming on this day to be heard on the report of the Commissioners appointed at the last term, which report is as follows:

And said report being unexcepted to, is in all things confirmed; and the said G F is vested with all the right, title, and interest in and to said homestead and dower tracts to which she is rightfully entitled according to law, as the widow of E F, deceased, and, on her application, a writ of possession will issue to put her in possession of said lands.

It is further decreed by the Court that the petitioner, G F, pay all the costs of this cause, for which execution may issue.

If any of the defendants to the petition are in possession of the homestead and dower assigned, the Court may award a writ of possession to put the widow in possession of the land decreed her.

§ 1341. Distribution of the Assets.

§ 1334. Extent of the Jurisdiction of the County Court.—The County Court has exclusive jurisdiction to administer the assets, real and personal, of an insolvent estate, when the amount thereof is less than one thousand dollars; and concurrent jurisdiction with the Chancery Court in all cases where the amount of the estate exceeds one thousand dollars. As an incident to such jurisdiction, the Court may order all necessary accounts, declare pro rata, sell the decedent’s real estate, and do all such other things as may be necessary to distribute the entire net estate among the creditors.

An estate is insolvent, in the meaning of the statute, when the personal assets are insufficient to pay the decedent’s debts. Any creditor may, also, be made. James v. Fields, 5 Heisk., 399. The Surveyor is made a Commissioner expressly to make the survey and plat, and he should be allowed no compensation unless he discharges this duty. The only excuse for not making a survey and plat is the fact that the whole of a tract or of a lot was assigned; and, hence, no survey and plat was necessary. If a stream make a natural boundary of the homestead or dower, it would be a sufficient designation to assign all of the tract on one side of such stream.

suggest the insolvency of an estate. On such suggestion being made, the Clerk will order the administrator to give due notice to all creditors to file their claims by a stated time. This order and the suggestion of insolvency must be entered by the Clerk, or his deputy, in the Minute Book of Insolvent Estates, as follows:

SUGGESTION OF INSOLVENCY, AND ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

Estate of John Smith, deceased.

No. 490.

On this March 5, 1890, came Samuel Smith, the administrator of the estate of John Smith, deceased, and suggested to me the insolvency of said estate. It is, therefore, ordered by me, that the said Samuel Smith, as such administrator, give notice and advertisement of the estate, and also at the Court House door in Knoxville, for all persons having claims against said estate to appear and file the same in this Court, authenticated in the manner prescribed by law, on or before the first day of August next, [or some other day, to be fixed in the notice, which day shall not be less than three nor more than six months after the date of the notice;] and warning them that any claim, not filed within said date, will be forever barred, both in law and equity.

John W. Conner, Clerk.

The administrator will thereupon, at once give the notice required by the Clerk’s order. This notice may be in the following form:

NOTICE OF INSOLVENCY.

To the creditors of John Smith, deceased:

By order of the Clerk of the County Court of Knox county, notice is hereby given to all persons having claims against the estate of John Smith, deceased, to appear and file the same with the Clerk of the said Court, authenticated in the manner prescribed by law, on or before the 1st day of August next. The insolvency of said estate having been suggested, and claim not filed on or before said day, will be forever barred, both in law and equity. March 5, 1890.

Samuel Smith, administrator of John Smith, deceased.

§ 1336. Effect of the Suggestion and Publication of Insolvency.—The object of the statute in providing for the administration of insolvent estates is: 1, To prevent the assets of the estate being consumed by the costs incident to multiplicity of suits; and 2, To so distribute the net assets among the various creditors that each one may receive his ratable share thereof. To effectuate this object, the statute provides that the suggestion of insolvency, and the advertisement thereof, shall operate as an injunction, in all cases, against the bringing of any suit, in any Court whatever, against the personal representative of the insolvent estate. In case of suits instituted before such suggestion, the Court, or Justice, before whom the same is pending, shall, upon the fact of the suggestion of insolvency being proved, proceed in the cause no further than to render final judgment; and if such judgment is against the personal representative, the Court, or Justice, rendering the same shall, instead of awarding execution, cause it to be certified to the County Court before which the suggestion is made.

Another effect of the suggestion and advertisement of insolvency is to confer upon the Clerk of the County Court before whom the suggestion is made, exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all claims, large and small, legal and equitable, against the estate, on which suit has not been brought before the advertisement of insolvency, his decisions, however, being subject to the ap-approval of the County Court, and to the right of appeal to the Circuit and Supreme Courts.

§ 1337. Filing Claims, and Proceedings Thereon.—Upon the suggestion and advertisement of insolvency, all creditors and claimants must file their claims with the Clerk of the County Court. If his claim is not due, or if suit has been brought and no judgment yet recovered, he must, nevertheless, file his claim within the time fixed in the advertisement, or before an appropriation of the funds of the estate is made, or it will be forever barred.9 The personal representative must in like manner and time file any claim he, in his own right, may have against the estate. No particular formality is necessary in filing claims. A sworn petition may be filed giving a history of the claim when an explanation is advisable; or the claim, if an open account, may be sworn to in writing and filed. If the claim is a note, or other written acknowledgment of indebtedness, signed by the decedent, it is conclusive, unless the execution thereof is denied under oath by the personal representative, according to the best of his knowledge, information and belief.10 The following is the form of March 20, 1891.

John W. Conner, Clerk.

The Clerk should set a day for the hearing of any and all parties who have filed claims. Ordinarily, when the personal representative admits a claim, it will be allowed unless 1, some creditor or other claimant disputes its amount or validity, or 2, it is barred by the statute of limitations, or bears on its face other evidence of its invalidity. Any creditor has a right (1) to contest any claim of the personal representative, or of any other claimant; and has the right (2) to show that the personal representative has not filed a true and perfect schedule of all the assets of the estate; and either the personal representative, or any claimant, may appeal to the next term of the Circuit Court from any adjudication of the Clerk, disallowing his own claim, or allowing any other claim, or from any other decision of the Clerk as to claims or assets. The party appealing must give bond with surety, as in case of an appeal from a Justice of the Peace; and thereupon the Clerk must certify his decision to the next term of the Circuit Court where such an issue will be made up under the direction of the Court as will present the questions in issue for decision, without any formal pleading. 128 The judgment of the Circuit Court, or of the Supreme Court, if an appeal be taken to it, shall be certified back to the County Court. 13

§ 1338. Schedule of Assets.—After the time fixed in the advertisement for filing claims has expired, and the claims contested have all been adjudicated, the Clerk must make an order on the administrator, or executor, that on or before a day to be appointed in such order, he shall file with the Clerk a true and perfect schedule of the estate, consisting of all the available funds, choses in action, and other effects, including real estate.

ORDER TO FILE SCHEDULE.

Estate of John Smith, deceased. } No. 490.

In this case, it is ordered by me that Samuel Smith, the administrator, file with me, on or before August 25, 1891, a true and perfect schedule of the assets of said estate, including therein the available funds, choses in action, and other effects, also, the real estate.

August 5, 1891.

John W. Conner, Clerk.

The schedule may be in the following form:

SCHEDULE OF ASSETS.

To the Worshipful County Court of Knox county, and to its Clerk:

In obedience to the order of the Clerk of this Court, I submit this schedule of the assets of the estate of John Smith, deceased:

1. Proceeds of personal property. (See Account of Sales on file.) $ 310.00
2. One note on George Brown, and interest to date, $ 220.00
3. One judgment against Henry Jones in the Circuit Court at Knoxville, and interest, $ 70.00
4. One tract of land, containing 300 acres, in the 12th district of Knox county, worth about $ 2,000.00
5. A lot of notes and accounts probably worthless, (See list herewith filed, marked A.)

Total available assets, $2,600.00

August 20, 1891.

Samuel Smith, Admr.

Samuel Smith makes oath that the foregoing is a true and perfect schedule of the assets of said estate, including all available funds, choses in action, real estate, and other effects.

13 Code, §§ 2334-2336. If the estate is of less value than one thousand dollars, the appeal will be to the Circuit Court; if of greater value, the appeal will be to the Supreme Court. But where an appeal would properly lie to the Circuit Court, by consent of both parties it may be taken direct to the Supreme Court. Code, §§ 3147-3148; Phillips v. Hoffman, 5 Cold., 232.
§ 1339. Petition to Sell the Lands.—When the schedule filed by the personal representative contains real estate, he must file a petition to have it sold. The petition will be addressed to the County Court of the county in which the estate is being administered; and will state: 1, the death of the decedent; 2, his testacy or intestacy, as the case may be; 3, the appointment of complainant as executor, or administrator; 4, the suggestion and advertisement of the insolvency of the estate; and 5, the necessity for a sale of the decedent’s lands to pay his debts, and will 6, describe the lands and pray for their sale. The widow and heirs, or devisees, must be made defendants; and they must be brought before the Court by service of subpoena, or summons, and a copy of the petition, if residents; and by publication, if non-residents.\footnote{14}{Code, § 2338.}

This petition may be substantially as follows:

PETITION TO SELL THE LANDS OF AN INSOLVENT DECEDENT.

To the Worshipful County Court of Knox county:
Samuel Smith, administrator of John Smith, deceased, a resident of Knox county, petitioner, against

Martha Smith, the widow, and Charles J. Smith, and James Smith, the heirs of said John Smith, deceased, all residents of Knox county, defendants.

Petitioner respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That John Smith, late of Knox county, is dead, intestate, and petitioner has been duly appointed his administrator by this Court. The defendant, Martha Smith, is the widow of said John Smith, and the other two defendants, Charles J. and James Smith, are the only heirs of said John Smith.

II. The estate of said John Smith is insolvent: its insolvency has been duly suggested, and due advertisement thereof been made. The claims that have been filed and adjudicated, aggregate more than two thousand and three hundred dollars, whereas the total personal assets, as will be seen by reference to petitioner’s schedule thereof, heretofore filed in this Court, amount to only about six hundred dollars.

III. The said John Smith died seized and possessed of the following tract of land in the 12th civil district of Knox county. Beginning on a maple, [describing it fully by metes and bounds to the beginning,] containing three hundred acres, more or less. The said widow is now living on said tract, and claims homestead and dower therein. It will be necessary to sell said tract to pay said decedent’s debts.

IV. The premises considered, petitioner prays:

1st. That the said widow and heirs be made defendants heretofore by service of process, and copy of this petition, and be required to make answer hereto, but not on oath.

2d. That if said widow claims homestead and dower in said tract, and is entitled thereto, that the same be laid off to her by commissioners at her expense, in the manner provided by law.\footnote{15}{Code, §§ 2338-2341.}

3d. That said tract, or so much thereof as is proper, be sold on a credit of not less than six, nor more than twenty-four months, and in bar of all right of redemption; and, that its proceeds be inserted in said schedule, and applied to the satisfaction of the indebtedness of said estate.\footnote{16}{See Article on Process by Publication, ante, §§ 196-198.}

4th. That petitioner have such further and other relief, as may be necessary to enable him fully and properly to discharge his duties in the premises.

Samuel Smith, Admr.

If any of the parties are non-residents or minors, or of unsound mind, the petition so alleging must be sworn to, or the facts made to appear by a separate affidavit.

§ 1340. Proceedings upon the Petition, and Decree of Sale.—If there be non-residents, publication must be made as in a Chancery cause;\footnote{17}{See Article on Process by Publication, ante, §§ 196-198.} and if any of the defendants are minors, or of unsound mind, a guardian ad litem must be appointed for them, as in suits in the Chancery Court.\footnote{18}{See Article on Guardians ad litem, ante, §§ 106-108.}

If the defendants are all adults, and make no defence when duly brought before the Court, an order pro confesso may be entered against them in open Court. If any of them are minors, or of unsound mind, they must answer by their guardian ad litem, as in a Chancery suit. Upon proof of the insufficiency of the personal assets to pay the adjudicated claims against the estate, the Court will order the land to be sold. The usual proof is made by the administrator and the Clerk, the administrator proving the amount of the available personal assets, and the Clerk, or administrator, proving the amount of the allowed claims. The administrator's schedule of assets, if properly sworn to, will be prima facie proof of the amount of the personal assets available for the payment of debts; and the Clerk's report of adjudicated claims will be prima facie proof of the indebtedness of the estate.

If the widow claims her homestead and dower, which she may do orally, or in answer, and shows herself entitled thereto, the Court will appoint commissioners to assign the same. The petition to sell the land may be heard, and a decree of sale made, at the first term after the petition is filed, provided the defendants have all been duly brought before the Court, and the answers of the minors, if any, are in by their guardians ad litem, duly appointed by the Clerk, or by the Court. For good cause, however, a continuance may be had by either party. The decree for sale may be in the following form:

DECREES TO SELL LANDS OF A DECEDEENT.

Samuel Smith, Adm.,

Martha Smith, Charles J. Smith, and James Smith.

This cause coming on this day to be heard upon the petition to sell the lands of John Smith, deceased, to pay his debts, and upon the answers of the widow and heirs of said John Smith, [or, upon judgment pro confesso heretofore taken and entered against the widow and heirs of said John Smith,] and upon the proof, from all of which it duly appears to the Court that the insolvency of the estate of said John Smith has been duly suggested and advertised; that the personal assets are wholly insufficient to pay the claims allowed against said estate, and that a sale of the real estate of which said John Smith died seized and possessed is necessary to satisfy the bona fide unpaid claims against said estate; it is, therefore, ordered and decreed by the Court that the Clerk of this Court proceed, as required by law for execution sales, to sell on the premises, [or, at the Court House door in Knoxville,] the tract of land described in said petition; which tract is situated in the 12th civil district of Knox county, and bounded as follows: [describing it fully by metes and bounds to the beginning], containing three hundred acres, more or less. Said tract will be sold on a credit of six and twelve months, subject to the homestead and dower rights of Martha Smith, the widow of said John Smith, as heretofore defined and decreed by this Court. The sale will be in bar of all right of redemption, the complainant so praying in his petition and now at the bar of the Court. The Clerk will take notes bearing interest from date, with good security, from the purchaser, and will retain a lien on the land for further security. The Clerk will report to the next term of the Court.

§ 1341. Distribution of the Assets.—The proceeds of the sale of the land, after the payment of the costs incident to the petition and sale, and of any taxes that are a lien thereon, are inserted in the administrator's schedule of assets, and completes the fund to be applied in discharge of the indebtedness of the estate. The Clerk, thereupon, takes and states an account showing therein:

1. Any articles exempt from execution in the hands of the decedent at his death, specifying them, that went into the hands of the administrator, if any.
2. The widow's year's support, if set apart in kind, and not paid over to her.
3. All fees, costs, commissions, and compensation legally due in the administration of the estate (1) to the personal representative, (2) to his Solicitor, and (3) to the Clerk, specifying the amount due each, and on what account.
4. Claims allowed, or adjudicated, that are entitled to priority of satisfaction.

24 The better practice is to set out all the names of the defendants in the decree of sale, or in the decree confirming the sale, because the petition may get lost or mislaid. such as express and statutory liens, giving the name of each preferred creditor, the character of his lien, the amount due him, and on what particular fund the lien rests.

5. Claims for funeral expenses; and

6. Debts and arrearages due the State, specifying their amount and character. These items will be deducted from the fund for general distribution, and will be paid over to the parties entitled in full, if there be sufficient; if not, they will be paid in the order of priority above given. After the above items have all been deducted, the balance of the assets, real and personal, will be distributed among the unpreferred creditors.

The Clerk, after setting out in his account the names of the owners of the above six preferred items, and the amount due each, and after deducting the total amount thereof from the total amount of assets, will then proceed with his account, and set out therein the name of each preferred creditor, and the amount due him, and the amount of his pro rata of the assets remaining after making the deduction above stated.

This account is to be reported to the Court, and may be in the following form:

§ 1342. Proceedings upon the Clerk's Report of Assets and Claims.—The Clerk's report may be objected to by any person interested, and such exceptions may be taken to the account as he may think proper. The persons interested in excepting to the account are: (1) the personal representative; (2) any claimant whose claim has been allowed, and (3) any claimant whose claim has been disallowed. A claimant whose claim has been allowed may except to the report because another claim has been allowed, or because more has been allowed to another claimant than he was justly entitled to.

The form of exceptions to the report, and the manner of disposing of such exceptions, are the same as in like cases in the Chancery Court. The County Court may confirm the report, or may modify it, or may remand it to the Clerk for such alterations as may to the Court seem just. Any person interested in the decision of the Court upon exceptions to the report, may appeal therefrom to the Circuit or Supreme Court, or Court of Civil Appeals, on giving bond with surety for costs as in other cases. The following is a form of a

DECEDE CONFIRMING REPORTS, AND APPEAL THEREFROM.

In the matter of the Estate of John Smith, deceased.

This cause came on this day to be heard upon the Clerk's report of assets, creditors and pro rata, and upon the exceptions of William Brown because his claim was disallowed, and upon the exceptions of George Jones to the action of the Clerk in allowing William Johnson eight hundred dollars, on consideration of all which it is ordered and adjudged by the Court, that said exceptions be all overruled and disallowed, and that said report be in all things confirmed. The Clerk will record said report in his book of Accounts of Insolvent Estates, and Samuel Smith, the administrator of said estate, will forthwith make distribution of the assets reported in his hands among the creditors, according to said report, paying to each unpreferred creditor eighty per cent. of the amount of his claim; and an execution will issue on demand of any creditor for the amount due him upon said report after due notice of such demand.

From this decree William Brown and George Jones pray an appeal to the next term of the Supreme Court at Knoxville, and each of them having given bond with surety for costs, said appeal is granted. In making out the transcript for the Supreme Court the Clerk will copy (1) the account of William Brown, and the adjudication thereof; (2) the report in so far as it refers to the claim of William Johnson; (3) the note of said Johnson; (4) the exceptions of said Brown and said Johnson to the report; (5) the depositions relating to said account and said note; and (6) this decree. The original note of said Johnson will be sent up with the transcript.

The appeal, however, shall not affect so much of this decree as is not appealed from, and the administrator will pay all the preferred creditors in full, and seventy per cent. of the pro rata allowed the other creditors, except William Johnson, retaining the balance of the assets subject to the further orders of this Court, after the decision of said appeal.

The report when confirmed is recorded in the Accounts of Insolvent Estates. Any legatee, distributee, widow or creditor, may, at any time before the final settlement of an estate, suggest to the County Court, and show by proof, that the personal representative has not returned a complete inventory, and have the omissions charged to him. When an administrator's account has been finally settled by the County Court any party interested therein may appeal from the judgment of such Court confirming such settlement, to the Circuit or Chancery Court.

EXCEPTIONS TO THE CLERK'S REPORT.

(The exceptions may be written at the foot of the report, or on a separate sheet of paper attached thereto, as follows):

William Brown

George Jones

William Brown excepts to the foregoing report, because the Clerk has disallowed his account filed in this cause for fourteen dollars.

George Jones excepts to the foregoing report because the Clerk has allowed William Johnson eight hundred dollars on a note which is barred by the statute of limitations.

GENERAL INDEX

HOW TO USE AN INDEX.

A perfect index to the contents of a book would be larger than the book itself, as is proved by Cruden's Concordance to the Bible, which, though a mere index, is much larger than the Bible. A perfect index, then, to a law book is not to be expected.

In an index, the same matters are often repeated under different heads: thus, the same matters may be indexed under depositions, evidence, proof, testimony, and, to a limited extent, under documents, exceptions, exhibits, and notice. So, many incongruous matters may be put under the same head: thus, under exceptions may be put exceptions to answers, to bills, to depositions, to evidence, to reports, to witnesses, to the rulings of the Court, and bills of exceptions; and under notice may be put notice of prior equities and rights, notice to take depositions, notice by scire facias, notice by publication, notice to take accounts, notice to creditors, notice of motions, notice of suing out writs of error coram nobis, and notice of writs of error in the Supreme Court. It requires, therefore, no little discernment to prepare a good index that will not be too voluminous; and it requires a corresponding amount of discernment to successfully use an index. The following rules may aid you in finding what you seek:

1. The Principal Subject Must be Consulted, and not the Secondary. Thus, if you are looking for exceptions to depositions, look under depositions; if you are looking for exceptions to answers, look under answers.

2. The Noun Must be Looked for, not the Adjective, or Participle. Thus, for speaking demurrers, look under demurrers, and not under speaking; and for constructive fraud, look under fraud, and not under constructive.

3. The Most Pertinent Subject Must be Consulted. Thus, for notice to take depositions, look under notice, or depositions, and not under evidence, or proof, or testimony, or witnesses.

4. The Table of Contents, in the front of the book, may greatly aid you in finding what you seek. This table gives a complete analysis of the book, and shows the plan of its arrangement, and the location of the matter you are seeking.

5. All References are to the Sections, and not to the Pages, unless otherwise expressly stated. In a few instances, where the sections are very long, the references are to the pages, and are so noted.

6. Index to Forms. While all the forms are included in the General Index, nevertheless for your convenience, and to enable you more quickly to find any form in the book, a separate Index of Forms is given.

7. Cross-References in the Indexes. The cross-references in the Indexes are used both to aid the user of the Index, and to economize space by thereby avoiding unnecessary repetitions.

8. References in the Foot Notes. The foot notes often refer to other sections of the book where further and frequently fuller information on the same subject may be found, and are in the nature of special indexes to the matters treated of.

WRITS OF SUPERSEDEAS.

(See Supersedesas.)

ERRATA:

Errors on the part of both author and printer appear in all books. Those who have read many proofs in a printing office know how this is, but those without such experience often consider such errors the results of ignorance, or carelessness.

Some errors have already been detected in the foregoing pages, all however immaterial; and no doubt others exist of, perhaps, no greater importance. It may be proper to state that some apparent errors of phraseology are the results of the author using, verbatim, the language of the statute, or other authority he cites, he not having felt at liberty to make any changes therein.

The following are the most important errors detected down to the day of publication:

Page 20, note 5: "at the hearin" should read "at the hearing."
Page 32, § 38, sub-section 8: "precedents absolute" should read "precedents obsolete."
Page 43, § 49, line 9: "wronged as do" should read "wronged as to do."
Page 47, § 56, line 7: "labor or property" should read "labor or property."
Page 52, § 62, sub section 1, line 10: "sit judicis should read "sit judici."
Page 223, chapter xiv: head-line of § 274 should be inserted in table of head-lines.
Page 270, note 44: Goodloe v. Goodloe is reported in 8 Cates, page 252.
Page 472, § 588: the number of this section should be 598.
Page 486, § 616: in Decree on Exceptions to a Report, after the words "second exception taken as aforesaid," at the end of line 8, insert: "is not well taken, the same is overruled. And upon the third exception, taken as aforesaid."
Page 522, § 657, sub-sec. 1: the words "Nature of an Injunction," in the head-line should be "Nature of an Execution."
Page 572, note 35: "See, ante, § 524, note," should be: "See, ante, § 437."
Page 631, § 825, line 2: "obligations of the contract" should be "obligations of the contract."
Page 702, § 908: the words "five thousand dollars," at the beginning of the 9th line of the Fiat for an Injunction, should read "five thousand dollars."
Page 744, § 954: the words, "When the bill is Open" at the end of the 4th line should be "When the account is Open."

1 A single erratum may knock out the brains of a whole passage.—Cowper.
