In the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.
TO MY WIFE,

FRANCES REED GIBSON,

THIS BOOK IS DEDICATED, AS A TOKEN OF MY APPRECIATION OF HER SYMPATHY AND ASSISTANCE DURING ITS PREPARATION
PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.

While there is a general family resemblance between the systems of jurisprudence prevalent in the various States of the Union, the differences and peculiarities in their systems of pleading and practice are, nevertheless, so great that no work, dealing with the procedure in Courts, is of much practical value to the practitioner, unless it is adapted to the jurisprudence and practice of the particular State in which he lives. Books of general practice, with foot-notes of the diverse rulings in various States, are often more confusing than enlightening. What the practitioner needs is a book on Court procedure that omits everything that is not the law in his own State, and contains everything that he is likely to need in the progress of a suit. Such a book I have endeavored to make this, so far as the Chancery practice is concerned.

What ordinarily happens in a litigation can well be compressed into one volume; but what very seldom happens, the unusual and the possible, would fill several volumes. What happens in matters of pleading and practice in 99 out of every 100 suits, I have labored to give; what may happen in the hundredth suit, I have not striven to forecast. The ordinary law is comparatively small in compass: it is the exceptional and the uncommon that necessitate a multiplicity of books, and fill libraries. And while I have not attempted to give what is exceptional and uncommon, my purpose has been to give everything likely to prove of value, to be found in our statutes, decisions, and rules of practice, and in standard authorities on the subject.

1. In Matters of Equity Jurisprudence, this work is based mainly on Pomeroy, Story, and the statutes and judicial decisions of our own State.

2. In Matters of Chancery Pleading, I have followed Story, in so far as consistent with our statutes. Daniel and Barbour have, also, been drawn on, quite largely. The many differences, between our system of pleading and that of the English Court of Chancery, are clearly pointed out, where necessary to prevent confusion.

3. In Matters of Chancery Practice, the works of Daniel and Barbour have been relied on when consistent with our statutes, decisions, rules of practice, and system of jurisprudence.
4. In Drawing the Forms, Pleadings, Orders, and Decrees, brevity, simplicity, perspicuity and precision have been constantly kept in view; and surplusage and prolixity have been avoided and reprehended.

5. In the Arrangement of the Contents of the Book, everything has been given in the order of time in which it usually takes place in the progress of a suit, when possible so to do.

6. In Providing Means for Finding any Particular Matter in the Book, a full index has been given in the back part of the book, and a complete table of contents in the front part of the book; and the titles of the chapters and articles have been given in the top margins of the book, and many cross references will be found in the foot-notes. Each section begins with a statement of its subject, in bold face type.

The object of this work is to aid those who minister in the Chancery Courts; and to contribute somewhat to the improvement of the pleadings and practice in those Courts.

HENRY R. GIBSON.
PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

Whatever a man does he flatters himself he can improve on, and so the author of the first edition of this work, better aware of its deficiencies than anyone else, began the preparation of what he hoped would be an improved edition before the first had been fully printed.

The main object of the original edition was expressed in its Title, and Preface; but it left many suits in Chancery unconsidered, and left others very imperfectly considered. To supply these deficiencies is the main object of the present edition.

The deficiencies in the first edition were caused, first, by an apprehension that the necessary additional matter would make too unwieldy a volume; and second, by the author's duties as Chancellor engrossing too much of his time. In preparing this edition, the author has had adequate time, and the suggestions of a considerable proportion of the lawyers of the State, besides the use of the Law Library of Congress for over ten years: so he hopes the deficiencies have been reduced to the minimum consistent with one volume.

The present edition, (which contains 20 per cent more matter\(^1\) than the original,) treats of every kind of suit in Chancery the average lawyer will be called on to bring, or defend, in an average lifetime,\(^2\) the suits oftenest brought being most fully considered.

The author cannot forbear expressing his gratitude to the Judges and Chancellors of the State, and to the members of the bar, for their kind reception of the first edition: it largely compensated him for the drudgery devoted to its compilation and publication. In this connection it may not be out of place to say, that none of the references to reports and text books in either edition are second-hand, but are the results of original investigation, and can be implicitly relied on.

The Code references are, unless otherwise noted, to the Code of 1858: the reasons for this are, 1st, it is the only Statutory Code of the State; 2d, all subsequent Codes contain it, so far as extant; and 3rd, this work may outlive the temporary Codes of individuals, (of which there have already been four,) but cannot hope to outlive the Code of the State. Statutes passed since the Code of 1858 are usually referred to by the date and chapter of the Act.

The quotations of maxims to illustrate the text will, it is believed, prove helpful. No book that treats of Equity is complete without them. They are not the mere gewgaws of pedantic lore, but the crystallized wisdom of the law, polished and preserved by the masters of jurisprudence.

\(^1\) 61 old sections have been omitted or consolidated, and 244 new sections added. Over 1,000 of the old sections have been re-written, or revised.

§ 1. The Civil Law: Its Development.—The system of jurisprudence called Equity was originally largely derived from the civil law of the Romans; and its early development in England was similar to the development of an analogous system in the jurisprudence of Rome. Therefore, in endeavoring to trace the origin of the Chancery Court, it may be well to notice, briefly, the development of the civil law.

The early laws of Rome, like the old common law of England, were exceedingly stern, rigid, formal and arbitrary, paying little attention to abstract right and justice. Their judicial proceedings were technical to the last degree. Absolute accuracy was required in complying with the established phrases and acts in the enforcement of civil rights. Any omission, or mistake, of a word or a movement was fatal. As civilization, however, progressed in Rome, subtle technicalities gave way to simpler methods of pleading; but even then it was found that cases occasionally arose to which the improved formulas were inadequate. These extraordinary cases were decided by the prætor without being referred to the ordinary tribunal, and without being hampered by any technical requirements as to the proper formula, or kind of action, he himself determining both the law and the facts of the case! The complainant stated the facts of his case, the defendant set up his defense, the prætor decided. This extraordinary method of determining suits, so simple, so free from technicalities, so easily moulded to the exigencies of every case, was found so superior to even the improved formulas, that eventually it superseded them, and became the only mode of procedure.—much as, in many of the States and in England, the procedure by bill and answer has supplanted the rigid formulas of common law actions. 3 Not only were the pleadings thus simplified by the Roman jurists, but the law was correspondingly improved; and a deliberate and persistent effort was made to bring their jurisprudence into perfect harmony with an absolutely impartial equity, that should do equal and perfect justice to all. 4 And, thus, was perfected that system of jurisprudence known as the civil law, from which are derived many of the maxims, principles and doctrines of Equity, now followed and enforced in the Chancery Courts. 5

§ 2. Evolution of Equity in England.—The development of the extraordinary jurisdiction of the Chancery Court of England was similar, in its causes, progress and results, to the development of the system of Equity in the Roman law, as already intimated. 6 In England, the King was regarded as the "fountain of justice," and, when any person conceived that he had been wronged, either in court or out of court, he had the privilege of petitioning the King for redress. The King, being unable to hear and determine all of these complaints because of their number and complexity, generally referred them to his chief secretary, who was called his Chancellor. This officer was an ecclesiastic, trained in the law and theology of Rome, 7 and was sometimes called the "keeper of the King's conscience." 8 When thus directed to adjudicate the rights, and determine the remedies, of those petitioning the King for justice, the Chancellor naturally had recourse to the civil law of Rome, being most familiar therewith; and, also, finding therein a diviner sort of justice, and a simpler and more efficient form of procedure. Besides, these Chancellors, who were generally very able and very learned men, were no doubt, disposed to regard the English common law as a barbarous code compared with the Roman civil law. 9 The Chancellor's office was one of great trust and confidence: he was the King's adviser and confidant, the chief member of his council, and the keeper of his great seal of State. He is spoken of, at a very early day, as one who "annuls unjust laws, and executes the commands of a pious prince, and puts an end to what is injurious to the people or to morals." 10

§ 3. Character of the First Chancery Suits.—The Chancellors, following the example of the Roman prætors, 11 applied the equitable principles of the civil law to the determination of all suits referred to them by the King. The suits thus referred were, generally: 1, applications to obtain redress for injuries and acts of oppression where from the power of the offender, or for any other cause, a fair trial in the ordinary courts could not be had; 2, cases where there were fraud, deceit and dishonesty beyond the reach of the common law; 12 and 3, cases where the common law was inadequate to the requirements of justice. In those times of disorder and oppression, many were the appeals to the King by the poor and the weak for protection against the rich and the strong, the local magistrates being often overawed; and many were the complaints of want of remedy at law. The King, unable to give personal attention to so many petitions, finally conferred upon the Chancellor full authority to give relief in all matters of "Grace," as these applications for redress were termed; and from this period petitions began to be addressed to the Chancellors themselves, and not to the King. This delegation of authority was made in the year 1348; and, in the next fifty years, the Equity jurisdiction of the Chancellor was clearly established.

§ 4. Principles on which the Early Chancellors Acted.—When matters of Grace were thus referred to the Chancellor, he issued a writ commanding the party complained against to appear and answer the complaint, and abide by the order of the Court. The principles on which the Chancellor based his decisions were those of Honesty, Equity and Conscience. By “Conscience” was meant those obligations one person is under to another to exercise that good faith the other has a right to expect. On an application to Parliament for redress, the petition was referred to the Chancellor, with the command: “Let there be done, by authority of the Parliament, that which right and reason, and good faith and good conscience, demand in the case.”

Matters of Grace being thus brought before the Chancellor, as the keeper of the King’s conscience, and he being required to do justice in the King’s name, he felt under no obligation to determine the rights of petitioners by that law from which they had fled to the King for relief; and, for reasons already stated, the Chancellors, at an early day, adopted the equitable principles and simple procedure of the civil law of Rome, adapting them, with wisdom and prudence, to the emergencies of the particular cases. The matters referred to them being matters of Grace and of conscience, the Chancellors felt bound to decide the cause according to conscience. The jurisdiction of the Chancellor being thus established upon Grace and conscience, and his judgments being in the name of the King, and by his authority, whenever the Courts of common law were inadequate to the demands of justice, the party unable to obtain relief therein would have recourse to the Chancellor, who in his Court, called the High Court of Chancery of England, undertook, like the prætor of Rome, to administer an equity not found in the law, himself determining all questions both of law and fact, and rendering a decree adapted to all the exigencies of justice.

§ 5. The Common Law as Compared with the Civil Law.—The common law was then utterly incapable of doing complete justice in many cases; and, in not a few cases, it furnished no remedy or relief whatever. It had certain rigid molds or formulas, into some one of which every cause of action had to be cast; and if the cause could not be run into any of these molds, there was no redress; and if it could be run into one of the molds, only such redress as the formula gave could be had, regardless of the equities of the case, and the real rights of the parties. The fictions, formalisms and arbitrary technicalities of the common law, and its dialectical refinements, were inexplicable and incomprehensible jargon to the public, and often a costly mockery of justice to the litigants. Those who asked for bread were often given a stone, and those who applied for a fish sometimes received a serpent.

Equity, on the other hand, disregarded forms, ignored fictions, subordinated technicalities to the requirements of justice, and indulged in no dialectical refinements. Its pleadings were simple and natural, and its doctrines were founded upon the eternal principles of right as interpreted by a lofty Christian morality. Its great underlying principles, the constant sources, the never failing roots of its particular rules, were the principles of equity, justice, morality and honesty, enforced according to conscience and good faith, and so adapted to the requirements of each case and the complications of business affairs, that the rights and duties of all the parties were fully determined. 19

§ 6. Some of the Deficiencies of the Common Law.—The common law then was not what it has since become under the benign inspiration of the Chancery jurisprudence. 20 At common law, 1, a vendor's lien could not be enforced; 2, a fraudulent conveyance could not be set aside; 3, a defective instrument could not be reformed; 4, a mistake or accident could not be effectually relieved against; 5, a debt, note or account could not be assigned; 6, a resulting trust could not be set up; 7, a beneficial interest in property could not be enforced; 8, a void instrument could not be cancelled; 9, a will or trust could not be construed in advance of action thereon; 10, testimony could not be perpetuated; 11, a trust fund could not be impounded; 12, a specific performance could not be decreed; 13, an equitable partition of land could not be had; 14, a deed could not be declared a mortgage; 15, title to land could not be effectually quieted; 16, waste, trespasses and other violations of rights could not be stayed; 17, a forfeiture or penalty could not be relieved against; 18, a set-off could not be obtained; 19, land could not be redeemed from a mortgagee; 20, a lien on realty could not be enforced; 21, a lost instrument could not be set up; 22, the estates of minors and lunatics could not be administered; 23, a pro rata distribution of assets could not be had; 24, a contract could not be apportioned; 25, a cloud could not be removed from one's title; 26, securities could not be marshalled; 27, a partnership could not be wound up; 28, a subrogation or contribution could not be obtained; 29, trusts were not recognized, and could be violated with impunity; 30, a wife's equities did not exist; 31, a title bond was no defence to an action of ejectment; 32, an injunction could not be had in any case, or for any purpose, however great the wrong; 33, receiverships were unknown; 34, equitable rights and interests were not recognized, and, 35, frauds could not be adequately remedied. 21

§ 7. How the Law has Followed Equity.—Under the influence of the principles of Equity as administered in Chancery, the rugged features of the common law have grown constantly more and more smooth and humane, and its capacity to do justice has constantly increased. The evolution of the law in England and in America has been on the lines marked out by Equity, 22 until, in the language of Lord Hale, "by the growth of Equity on Equity the heart of the common law has been eaten out." 23 To show the effect of the principles and doctrines of Equity upon our own statutes the following illustrations are cited: 1, the law in reference to gambling and wagering contracts; 24, the whole law of landlords', mechanics', laborers' and other liens; 25, the law of notice through registration of deeds; 26, 4, the pro rata distribution of insolvent estates; 27, 5, the apportionment of rents; 28, 6, the provisions for the benefit of married women; 29, 7, the guardianship over the estates of infants and persons of unsound mind; 30, 8, the allowance of set-offs; 31, 9, the right to sue upon a debt, note or account purchased from the original creditor; 32, 10, the statutory remedy of interpleader; 33, 11, the right to set aside the satisfaction of a judgment; 34, 12, the proceeding by garnishment; 35, 13, the right to a sale of land

20 The present common law of England is as dissimilar from that of Edward III as is the present state of society. Jacob v. State, 3 Harris, 493; Fox v. Lanier, 4 Cates, 408. Equity jurisdiction was established in England in the reign of Edward III. Green v. Allen, 5 Hum. 197. Edward III was born in 1312, and died in 1377.

\textbf{§ 8. The Divine Law of Justice the Rule of Decision.}—The statement, often made, that the Court of Chancery was established to mitigate the rigor of the common law, and to supply its defects, is not wholly true.\textsuperscript{48} This Court was established to do justice, regardless of any and all law. The King deemed it a duty imposed upon his conscience, both by his oath and by religion, to "decrease justice," and in decreeing justice he deemed himself bound rather by the Divine Law than by human law;\textsuperscript{49} and, when the Chancellor acted in his stead, he based his decisions, not upon the law of the land, but upon honesty, equity and conscience, for so was he commanded to do in exercising the King's prerogative of Grace.\textsuperscript{50} In short, the Chancery Court was established rather as a Court based on the precepts of Religion than as a Court based on the rules of Law.\textsuperscript{51}

It is unquestionably true that the harshness of the common law, its unfitness to cope with fraud, its incapacity to do justice in many cases, the defects in its remedies, the opportunities it gave the strong to oppress the weak, and its general inadequacy to meet the requirements of equity, greatly contributed to perpetuate the existence of the Chancery Court, and to enlarge and justify its jurisdiction. Nevertheless, the vital principle from which the Court sprung was the prerogative doctrine that the King was the "fountain of justice;" and that, when a citizen could not get justice in the ordinary Courts, he might come to this fountain.\textsuperscript{52} The King, in administering justice in such cases, deemed himself above all the laws and customs of his realm, and bound only by his conscience and his will. As it was not a matter of right in a citizen to draw on this reserve source of justice, when remedy was given it was deemed "granted as of Grace."\textsuperscript{53}

\textbf{§ 9. Other Causes Contributing to the Establishment of the Chancery Court.}—As the Chancery was the office out of which all writs at common law issued, the Chancellor retained cases for his own disposition when the facts were such that no common law writ was adapted to the requirements of the case, or when the common law Courts were unable to furnish adequate relief; and some contend that herein originated the extraordinary jurisdiction of the Chancellor. In this class of cases, the Chancellor determined the matters in dispute, so that the court of the King might not be deficient in doing justice.\textsuperscript{54} But it is believed that the equitable jurisdiction of the Chancellor originated mainly, if not exclusively, from the reference to him by the King of petitions for justice and redress, as already stated. It is unquestionably true, however, that, had it not been for the deficiencies of the common law, the number of these petitions to the King would have been comparatively few.

When the lay Chancellors succeeded the ecclesiastics, no material changes were made in the jurisdiction of the Court. Its system of jurisprudence was, however, enlarged and made more comprehensive, precedents were more closely followed, and the decisions of the Chancellors more carefully preserved. But the equitable principles of the civil law were as fully enforced, and the peculiar proofs and practice of the Court in all things continued, the lay Chancellors being greatly aided herein by the Masters in Equity, who were permanent officers of the Court.

Thus was established the High Court of Chancery of England; and thus originated that grand system of jurisprudence known as Equity; both maintaining their existence by virtue, alone, of their inherent merits, and their wonderful fitness for the purposes of administrative justice. It may be well here to remark that, by an Act of the British Parliament, which went into operation in 1875, all the great Courts of England, including the High Court of Chancery, were consolidated, and a system of pleading and practice adopted similar to those in use in Chancery. The Act of Parliament also provides that "in all matters in which there is any conflict or variance between the rules of Equity and the rules of the common law, with reference to the same matter, the rules of Equity shall prevail." And thus in England the triumph of the righteous principles of Equity over the rules of the common law is complete, and, no doubt, final.

56 1 Spence Eq. Jur., §§ 712-713. It will be seen from this review that Equity may be defined to be that system of jurisprudence, based on good reason, good conscience, and the Civil Law, introduced and developed by the Chancellors of England, by authority of the King and acquiescence of the Parliament, to do justice where justice was denied by the common law, or to do more perfect justice than could be done through the common law.
57 And under its beneficent influence the common law has become so transfigured that it no more resembles the common law of Coke than the image of Molech stained with the blood of butchered babes resembles the living Jesus blessing the little children of Judea.

THE HISTORY OF THE CHANCERY COURTS OF TENNESSEE.

§ 10. The Chancery Court of North Carolina.

§ 11. Introduction of Courts of Equity into Tennessee.

§ 12. Development of our Chancery Courts.

§ 13. How our Chancery Courts were Finally Established.

§ 15. Equity Jurisprudence, Pleadings, and Practice, in Other States.

§ 10. The Chancery Court of North Carolina.—When North Carolina was colonized by the English, they brought with them, as part of their jurisprudence, the principles and practice of the English Court of Chancery, and incorporated them into their judicial system. As early as 1713, we find a Court of Chancery in existence in North Carolina; and it is safe to say that this Court was coeval with the first legal institutions of the colony. The Court of Chancery is referred to in the Acts of 1720, ch. 6; of 1723, ch. 10; of 1746, ch. 2; of 1748, ch. 2; and of 1762, ch. 5. The court thus established by the Lords Proprietors of North Carolina, under the general power given them by the Charter of King Charles II, was similar to the Chancery Court, of England, and was held by the Governor and Council.1

This court continued until the outbreak of the American Revolution; but no provision having been made for its re-establishment under the State authority, it ceased to exist, for a few years—the struggle for Independence and the conflict of armies absorbing public attention. The people of North Carolina, however, in their Constitution of 1776, expressly provided for Courts of Equity,2 and thus recognized the jurisprudence administered by the Chancery Court as a fundamental part of the law of the new State. Although no Court of Chancery was established, equitable rights continued to exist, notwithstanding;3 and in 1782 the people discovered, and through their Legislature solemnly declared, that "the Courts of law were not equal to the redress of all kinds of injuries, that many innocent men were withheld of their rights, and some deprived of them altogether, for want of a Court or Courts of Equity."4 It was established, are not equal to the redress of all kinds of injuries, but many innocent men were withheld of their rights, and some deprived of them altogether, for want of a Court or Courts of Equity.

1. Griffin v. Graham, 1 Hawks N. C. Rep. 97, 132; Green v. Allen, 5 Hum., 235. The decree in the case of William Duckinfield v. John Ardenne's heirs, pronounced May 13, 1713, is probably the most ancient memorial of the Chancery Court of North Carolina in existence. 2 Rev. Stats. of N. C. (by Iredell & Battle,) 528. This decree was confirmed in August, 1720, by the Provincial Legislature. Iredell's Laws of N. C. 36. In Locke's Fundamental Constitutions of North Carolina, made in 1690, it was provided that: "§ 35. The Chancellor's Court, consisting of one of the Proprietors and his six councillors, who shall be called vice-Chancellors, shall have the custody of the seal of the Palatine. * * * To this Court, also, belong all invasions of conscience." Iredell & Battle's Rev. Stats. of N. C., 454.

2 Const. of North Carolina, §§ 13; 21; 26. The meaning of the term "Equity" was not defined. The Constitution assumed that it was known, as in case of other words used without definition; and we are, therefore, to look to the jurisprudence then in existence for a proper understanding of the term. Franklin v. Armfield, 2 Sneed, 555.

3 Griffin v. Graham, 1 Hawks, 132.

4 Acts of 1782, ch. 11, § 1. The 1st and 2nd sections of this Act are as follows:

I. Whereas the Courts of Law as at present

II. "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of North Carolina, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, that from and after the expiration of the present session of the General Assembly, each Superior Court of Law in this State shall also be, and act as, a Court of Equity for the same district, and possess all the powers and authorities, within the same, that the Court of Chancery which was formerly held in this State under the late Government used and exercised, and that are properly and rightfully incident to such a court, agreeable to the laws in force in this State, and not inconsistent with our present Constitution." This statute also made the Courts of Equity courts of record, Hayw. & Cobb, 173.

It will thus be seen that the Courts of Equity of North Carolina, established in 1782, were Courts of general Equity jurisdiction. This was not only so declared by the statute referred to, but was also a necessary implication from the language of the Constitution itself. And from the date of that Act down to the session of Tennessee to the United States, the powers and jurisdiction of the Courts of Equity accompanyingly enacted in that year by the Legislature of North Carolina that each of the Superior Courts of Law should also be Courts of Equity, and possess all the powers and authorities formerly held by the Court of Chancery under the Colonial government, and that were properly and rightfully incident to such a Court, and not inconsistent with the laws and Constitution of the State.\(^6\) This Act prescribed a procedure for the Court, and granted subpœna, and such process to enforce decrees as belonged to Courts of Chancery. All matters of fact were triable by jury, as in suits at Law; costs were to be paid by either party at the discretion of the Court; the proceedings of the Court were to be kept distinct from those of the Law Court; and it was expressly declared that the Court should be ‘‘a Court of record.’’\(^7\) The English Court of Chancery was not a Court of record, and the statement in some of our reports that ‘‘by our Acts of 1787 and 1801, our Court of Equity is a Court of record,’’ while true, ignores the previous Act of 1782.

\[\text{§ 11. Introduction of Courts of Equity into Tennessee.—When counties were created in the territory now Tennessee, by the Legislature of North Carolina, they were at first made parts of adjoining Judicial Districts in that State; but in 1784, the counties of Washington, Sullivan, Greene and Davidson were constituted a separate Judicial District, and named the District of Washington. This District covered the whole of the territory now Tennessee; but, in the following year, Davidson county was given a separate Court. The Courts thus established in this territory by North Carolina, were vested with general jurisdiction in Law and Equity.}\(^8\)

\[^8\] In 1787, the two-fold Court of Law and Equity was divided, and it was enacted that the Chancery branch of the Court should be styled the ‘‘Court of Equity,’’ and a ‘‘Clerk and Master in Equity’’ was appointed for each Court of Equity. But both Courts continued to be held by the same Judge. This Act authorized publication as to non-resident and absconding defendants; and provided that executions to enforce money decrees might issue as at law, instead of the then mode of enforcing money decrees by ‘‘attachment, \textit{habeas corpus}, attachment with proclamation, and commissions of rebellion.’’\(^9\)

In 1790, the territory now Tennessee was deeded to the United States by North Carolina; and the Act and Deed of Cession provided that ‘‘the laws of North Carolina should continue in full force within the territory until repealed, or otherwise altered, by the legislative authority of the territory.’’\(^10\)

In 1793, by an ordinance of William Blount, Territorial Governor, the counties of Knox and Jefferson were formed into a Judicial District, called the District of Hamilton, and the Courts of Law and Equity therein were ordered to be held at Knoxville.\(^11\) The first session of the 1st Territorial Legislature met in Knoxville in 1794; and the first Act passed by it declared that the North Carolina Act giving Equity jurisdiction to the Superior Courts of Law should be in full force and effect.\(^12\) This same Legislature created the Judicial Districts of Washington, Hamilton and Mero, and vested in the Courts thereof the general Equity jurisdiction conferred by the Act of 1782; and thus the peculiar powers, pleadings, proofs and practice of the Chancery Court were formally made a part of the jurisprudence of the new Territory.\(^13\)

\[\text{§ 12. The Development of our Chancery Courts.—In 1796, this system of Equity jurisprudence was incorporated into the Constitution of the new State, and thus imbedded in the very foundations of the government. In 1801, an Act was passed to regulate the proceedings of the Court of Equity: this Act pre-\] sibres; in detail, the practice of the court; and a large proportion of the provisions of the Act are in force today. Among the changes made in the practice by this Act was the power conferred on the Chancery Court to divest title to land, instead of requiring parties to convey, as had hitherto been the practice.\textsuperscript{14}

In 1809, the Superior Courts of Law and Equity were abolished, and Circuit Courts established in their stead, and invested with all of their powers and jurisdiction both at common law and in Equity.\textsuperscript{15} A Supreme Court of Errors and Appeals was created by the same statute, to be composed of two Supreme Judges and one of the Circuit Judges. By the Act of 1811,\textsuperscript{10} this Supreme Court was given "exclusive jurisdiction in all Equity causes arising in the Circuit Courts," and either party was given the right to take depositions. Previous to this Act, the evidence in Equity suits was generally oral. The Act of 1811, repealed so much of the Act of 1809 as authorized Circuit Judges to sit with the Supreme Judges.\textsuperscript{17}

In 1813, the Circuit Judges were given concurrent jurisdiction with the Supreme Court in all Equity causes, and the Circuit clerks were made Clerks and Masters in Equity.\textsuperscript{18}

In 1817, it was provided that Equity causes, wherein a Circuit Judge was uncompetent, might be adjourned to the Supreme Court, and there heard on the original papers, as though brought there originally.\textsuperscript{19}

In 1819, the old practice allowing witnesses to give oral evidence in Chancery suits, and the law compelling their attendance, were repealed; and it was enacted that depositions should be taken in all Chancery cases.\textsuperscript{20} In this Act, the Circuit Courts sitting in Equity causes, are styled "Courts of Chancery."\textsuperscript{21}

In 1822, it was enacted that the Chancery Courts should be held by one of the Judges of the Supreme Court; and in 1824, a Chancery Court was required to be held twice a year in each circuit. Finally in 1827, the laws giving the Supreme Judges original Chancery jurisdiction were repealed, and two Chancellors were appointed to hold the Chancery Courts. At the same time the State was laid off into two Chancery Divisions, the Eastern and the Western, with one Chancellor for each. The Chancellors were declared to be Chancellors for the State, and were given authority to interchange.\textsuperscript{22}

\section{How our Chancery Courts were Finally Established.}

In 1834, a new Constitution was formed, which recognized "the several Courts of Equity" as part of the judicial power of the State, and authorized the establishment of Courts of Chancery, and the appointment of Chancellors and Clerks and Masters.\textsuperscript{23} This Constitution continued all laws and ordinances then in force and use, until altered or repealed.\textsuperscript{24} The first Legislature under this Constitution increased the number of Chancellors to three, and vested them with "the same powers, privileges and jurisdiction in all respects that the Chancellors then had by existing laws, and that were properly and rightfully incident to a Court of Chancery, agreeable to the laws then in force in the State, not inconsistent with the Constitution."\textsuperscript{25} This statute, in substance, re-enacts the North Carolina Act of 1782; and is in force today.\textsuperscript{26}

The number of Chancellors was increased to three by the same statute, and a Middle Division established. The Act required Chancellors to make rules "with a view to the attainment of the following improvements in the practice:

1st, the abbreviating of bills and answers and other proceedings; 2d, the expediting of the decision of causes; 3d, the diminishing of costs; and, 4th, the remedying of such abuses and imperfections as may be found to exist in the practice. 27 Each Chancery Division was subdivided into Districts, each District composed of from one to four counties, and the Court was held at some one place in each District.

The number of Chancellors and the number of Chancery Divisions have been increased from time to time down to the present; but no further changes were made in the status of the Chancery Courts, until 1870, when the present Constitution was adopted. By it the Chancery Courts are made Constitutional Courts, and thus put beyond the reach of the Legislature. 28 In 1877, the jurisdiction of the Chancery Courts was so enlarged as to "include all civil causes of action triable in the Circuit Courts, except for injuries to person, property or character, involving unliquidated damages." 29 The far-reaching effect of this statute is hardly yet fully comprehended; but the Courts are giving it that liberal construction evidently intended by the Legislature, and the result is not only a great increase in the power of the Chancery Courts to do full justice, legal as well as equitable; but a great increase in their prestige and popularity.

§ 14. Growth of the Court in Public Favor.—The Chancery Court has been struggling, for over five hundred years, to justify its existence, and to vindicate the superiority of its jurisprudence. Having had a foreign origin when originally established in England, and its jurisdiction interfering with the common law, these circumstances naturally created a prejudice against the Court. The fact that its proceedings were out of sight of the people, that it had no juries, that no witnesses were examined before it, and that its decrees were pronounced by a single Judge, all tended to strengthen this prejudice. The Court, too, laid a heavy hand on great and rich men, and exposed and righted the wrongs committed by designing and crafty men, and required guardians, trustees and even husbands and fathers to do right towards those depending on them; and above all, was quick to detect and correct frauds and unconscientious conduct. Wicked men, thus thwarted in their schemes of wrong-doing, endeavored to justify themselves by abusing the "one man" Court. But, notwithstanding these adverse influences, the Chancery Court of England continued to grow in power and popularity as the English people grew in civilization and intelligence, until now its principles are supreme in all the Courts of that country. 30

As in England, so in Tennessee, the Chancery Court has had its adversaries, and has had its triumphs. Its history, as already briefly shown, demonstrates the fact of its constant growth in popular favor, from the beginning of our existence as a State down to the present. By various Acts of the Legislature, its jurisdiction has been greatly increased, 31 its powers have been much enlarged, its practice has been simplified and improved, and its process made more efficacious. In the language of Judge Freeman, "The Chancery Court has been steadily advancing and widening the boundaries of its jurisdiction from its earliest history to the present day." 32 In Tennessee, these extensions of the boundaries of the Court have been made by the people, through their legislatures, thus giving conclusive evidence of the growth of the Court in public favor. And now, by the Constitution of 1870, it is made a Constitutional Court, and by the Act of 1877, it has been given jurisdiction of all civil actions triable in the Circuit Court except actions for injuries to person, property or character, involving unliquidated damages, thus making its vindication complete, and its triumph perfect and permanent.

Equity, founded upon the eternal verities of right, justice and morality, rather than upon arbitrary customs and rigid dogmas, and acting according to the dictates of reason and good conscience, rather than unadjustible formulas, has the capability to reach and cover every civil case which can possibly arise out of the transactions of mankind, its doctrines and rules furnishing a sure means of accurately and justly determining the rights and duties of all the parties, and its flexible remedies inherent and statutory, adjusting and adapting themselves to all the intricacies of every emergency;\textsuperscript{33} so that in our Courts of Chancery there is now absolutely nothing wanting that man can devise for the perfect administration of complete equity; and there can never be any failure to do adequate justice, in any suit, unless the proof fails to disclose the real facts and circumstances of the transaction, or the Chancellor fails to comprehend the doctrine, or apply the remedy, applicable to the case.

\textsection{15.} \textbf{Equity Jurisprudence, Pleadings, and Practice, in Other States.---}
The jurisprudence of Equity, and its pleadings and practice prevail in all the States of the Union; and in many of the States have completely supplanted the pleadings and practice of the common law. There is an opinion, somewhat prevalent, that there is no Equity jurisprudence in those States of the Union which have abolished Chancery Courts. This is a gross misconception. The doctrines, principles and remedies of the Chancery Court are in full force in every State; and while, in many of the States, there are no separate Chancery Courts, in all of them the jurisprudence of Equity is, nevertheless, recognized and administered as fully as though special courts of Equity were in existence.
In those States that have adopted the "code practice," or "reformed procedure," as it is variously termed, instead of the principles, pleadings, practice and remedies of the Chancery Court being abolished, in fact the common law practice pleadings and remedies have been abolished, or greatly conformed to those in Chancery. Under the so-called "code practice," the principal pleadings are: 1, The petition or complaint, which is identical with a bill in Chancery; 2, A special demurrer, and 3, An answer, which are the same in form and substance as the like pleadings in Chancery. In short, those States that have adopted the "code practice," have, in effect, by statute substituted the simple and pliable pleadings of Chancery for the stiff and cumbrous forms of the common law. And so, although in many of the States there are no separate Chancery Courts, yet in those very States the pleadings, practice and principles of Chancery are prevalent, and well nigh supreme, although to some extent under new names.\textsuperscript{34} And in the Federal Courts the principles, pleading and practice of Equity remain wholly unimpaired.

JURISDICTION OF THE CHANCERY COURT.

ARTICLE I. Jurisdiction of the Chancery Courts Generally Considered.
ARTICLE II. Equitable or Inherent Jurisdiction of the Chancery Court.
ARTICLE III. Statutory Jurisdiction of the Chancery Court.

ARTICLE I.

JURISDICTION OF THE CHANCERY COURTS GENERALLY CONSIDERED.

§ 16. Jurisdiction of the Chancery Courts of North Carolina.—The Article devoted to the History of the Chancery Courts of Tennessee plainly indicates the character and extent of their jurisdiction. The Act of 1782 vested the Courts of Equity in North Carolina with "all the powers and authorities within their respective districts that the Court of Chancery, formerly held under the Colonial government, used and exercised, and that were properly and rightfully incident to such a Court."12 This Act was continued in force in Tennessee by the Deed of Cession;3 by the Territorial Legislature;4 by the Constitution of 1796;5 by the Constitution of 1834;6 by the Act of 1835;7 by the Code of 1858;8 and by the Constitution of 1870.9

The question then arises: What were the "powers and authorities used and exercised by the Chancery Court of North Carolina" at the time of the American Revolution? This question can be answered only with approximate accuracy, no records, ordinances or statutes defining the jurisdiction of that Court being in existence, so far as known.10 The Court was established by the Lords Proprietors under the general power given them by the Great Charter of King Charles II.: it was held by the Governor and his Council, and there can be no doubt that its model was the Court of Chancery in England.11 The Supreme Court of North Carolina held, in the case of Griffin v. Graham,12 that the Equity system of England was a part of the common law of North Carolina in force and use within its territory at the time of the American Revolution, which common law was, in 1778, declared by the legislature of North Carolina to be in "full force within the State."13

Chancellor Kent, in Manning v. Manning,

4 Acts of 1794, Ch. 1, § 77; 1 Scott's Rev., 457.

6 12 1 Scott's Rev., 4279. held that the English system of Equity jurisprudence at the commencement of the Revolution "formed an important and very essential branch of the common law." 14

§ 17. Jurisdiction of the Chancery Courts of Tennessee.—The same conclusion was reached by Judges Turley and White, in the great case of Green v.
Allen, 15 Judge White holding that the powers of our Chancery Courts "are doubt as ample as those of the Chancery Court of England, with no other difference except that which grows out of the difference of our institutions." Judge Green in Oakley v. Long, 16 concedes to our Chancery Courts "the jurisdiction which was exercised by the Chancery Court of England as a Court of Equity;" and in Dickson v. Montgomery, 17 he states that "our Court of Chancery has jurisdiction in all cases where, in England, the Lord Chancellor in the exercise of his extraordinary jurisdiction, 18 could have afforded relief." And Judge Cooper, in Lake v. McDavitt, 19 says: "The Chancery Court is vested with 'all the powers, privileges and jurisdiction incident to a Court of Equity by existing laws,' that is, by the statutory and common law of the State. It is a Superior Court as contra-distinguished from a Court of peculiar, special and limited jurisdiction. It possesses, except where changed by statute, the jurisdiction which was exercised by the Lord Chancellor of England as an Equity Judge, denominated his extraordinary jurisdiction." In this case Judge Cooper recognizes the Equity jurisprudence as a part of the "common law of the State," thus concurring with the Judges heretofore cited on this point.

§ 18. Our Chancery Practice Founded on that of England.—Not only are the principles and doctrines of the English Chancery Court in force in the Chancery Courts of this State, but, before the passage of the Act of 1801, we were governed by the English rules in Chancery practice almost exclusively, and our Equity proceedings had the force and effect of proceedings in the English Court. 20 And as late as 1822, the Rules adopted by the Supreme Court for the regulation of the practice of the Chancery Court provided that "in all cases where the Rules prescribed by Act of Assembly, or those Rules heretofore adopted, do not apply, the practice of the Courts of Chancery shall be regulated by the practice of the High Court of Chancery in England." 21 The U. S. Circuit Courts in this State, in their Equity proceedings, are also governed by the practice of the English Chancery, as it existed in 1842. 22

In Tennessee, while the pleadings and practice, in the main, conform to the pleadings and practice of the English Court of Chancery prior to 1875, there are, nevertheless, many material modifications, all of which will appear in their appropriate places in this treatise. 23

§ 19. Powers and Jurisdiction of the Chancery Courts.—It will thus be seen that both the jurisprudence and Court and its jurisprudence. See note 10, infra.

18 This "extraordinary jurisdiction" was the Equity jurisdiction. Lake v. McDavitt, 13 Lea, 30; Pom. Eq. Jur., §§ 53-55. This extraordinary jurisdiction embraces the whole field of Equity treated of in Story's Equity Jurisprudence.

23 The practice in the Chancery Courts of Tennessee is a modified practice, partaking of the code features to a considerable extent. See Code §§ 4305-4404. And in Tennessee, as in other States, there has been a struggle between the two systems of pleading—between the statutory system and the preceding system; and our Supreme Court rulings on the subject have oscillated between the two, sometimes conforming to the requirements and spirit of the statute; and, at other times, ignoring the statutes and reasserting the supremacy of the ancient rules, according as the judges have been inspired with admiration for the new or veneration for the old.

As a result of our statutory enactments on the subjects of pleading and practice, the text books that treat of Chancery Practice and Pleading, while in the main valuable guides, are, nevertheless, liable at times to mislead in matters wherein, by direct enactment or by necessary implication, the former practice has been repealed or modified. And one of the main purposes of this book is to give so much of the old practice as is in force, and to substitute the new practice for so much of the old as is no longer in force, thus presenting to the practitioner the whole of the practice, old and new, now prevailing in our Chancery Courts, and omitting so much of the old practice as has become obsolete, or has been repealed or modified by statute.
Court are in force in our State, except in so far as changed by our Statutes and Rules. So that, in summarizing the "powers, privileges and jurisdiction" conferred on our Chancery Courts by the Code, it may be safely stated that the powers and jurisdiction of the Chancery Courts of Tennessee, in and for their respective districts, are, except as changed by statute, identical in kind, and commensurate in extent, with the Equity powers and jurisdiction of the High Court of Chancery in England at the time of the American Revolution. And it may be added, the statutory changes in the powers and jurisdiction of our Chancery Courts have greatly enlarged those powers and jurisdiction, and proportionately increased their efficiency and beneficence.

§ 20. Statutory Changes in the Powers and Jurisdiction of the Court.—As has been already stated, the statutory changes in the powers and jurisdiction of the Chancery Courts have mainly been additions, and not limitations. "Jurisdiction" means the authority possessed by a Court to determine a controversy; and the "powers" of a Court are its right and ability to enforce its determinations.

1. The Principal Additions to the Powers of the Court are the following, given in order of time:
   1. Power to order a bill to be taken for confessed.
   2. Power to issue an execution to enforce a money decree.
   3. Power to bring defendants before the Court by publication.
   4. Power to divest and vest title to property by decree.
   5. Power to issue attachments to impound property.
   6. Power to appoint a commissioner to execute a conveyance, release or acquittance, in the name of either the parties or of himself.
   7. Power to appoint administrators ad litem when necessary in the progress of a cause.

2. The Principal Additions to the Jurisdiction of the Court are the following, given in chronological order:
   1. Jurisdiction to empanel a jury to try an issue of fact.
   2. Jurisdiction to proceed against non-resident and absconding defendants, by publication.
   3. Jurisdiction to decree a divorce and alimony.
   4. Jurisdiction to proceed in rem against the estates of non-residents by attachment and publication.
   5. Jurisdiction to proceed against the real and personal property of non-resident defendants.
   6. Jurisdiction to proceed by attachment and publication against the estates and persons of non-resident absconding debtors.
   7. Jurisdiction to appoint an administrator, and wind up his intestate's estate.
   8. Jurisdiction to keep corporations in the line of their duties, and to decree a forfeiture of their charters.
   9. Jurisdiction over the persons and estates of idiots, lunatics and persons of unsound mind.
   10. Jurisdiction to consent to, and decree, a sale of the property of infants

11. Jurisdiction to prevent the usurpation of office, and to declare an office forfeited.44

12. Jurisdiction of all civil causes of action triable in the Circuit Court, except for injuries to person, property or character, involving unliquidated damages.45

§ 21. Effect of the Act of 1877 generally Considered.—In 1801, it was enacted that "after answer filed and no plea in abatement to the local jurisdiction of the Court, no exception for want of jurisdiction shall ever afterwards be made."46 It has been uniformly held ever since the passage of this Act, that on failure of the defendant to object to the jurisdiction of the Court before answering, the Court had the right, and it was its duty, to determine the controversy, unless the matter was unfit for a Court of Equity. Under the operation of this holding, the Chancery Court had, for seventy-five years, been in the habit of entertaining demands, and causes of action, purely legal in their nature. The Act of 1877 is only one step further than the law was before, as Judge Freeman, in Jackson v. Nimmo,47 very conclusively shows. The Chancery Court has long had jurisdiction, in attachment cases, of "debt or demands of a purely legal nature, except causes of actions founded on torts."48 Thus, it will be seen, the Act of 1877 is by no means as revolutionary as was at first supposed. Every enlargement of the Chancery jurisdiction for five hundred years, in England and America, has been the signal for an alarm; but the enlargements have continued, until, both in England and a majority of the American States, the Chancery methods of pleading and the principles of the Chancery jurisdiction have, in a large measure, superseded the unbending formalities and the harsh doctrines of the common law.49

The Act of 1877 goes far to settle the ancient controversy, between the Chancery and the Common Law Courts, with respect to the boundary line between their respective jurisdictions; and it includes not only the disputed territory, but also all the territory adjacent thereto, within the concurrent jurisdiction of the Chancery Court.50

In the English Judicature Act, passed in 1873, it is provided that "generally, in all matters in which there is any conflict or variance, between the rules of Equity and the rules of the common law with reference to the same matter, and sometimes to defeat, the jurisdiction! what clamors were raised against interfering with the jurisdiction of the Common Law Courts, and the sacred right of trial by jury! what invocations of Magna Charta, and the inviolable Bill of Rights! what appeals to the Chancellor to stretch forth the strong right arm of his beneficent power, and take jurisdiction, that Equity might be administered, and iniquity overcome! what references to the Master, reports, exceptions, recommittals, and decrees in the lower Court; and what appeals, writs of error, reversals and reversals, by and to the Supreme Court! And then, perhaps, the complaintant, thus finally denied justice in a Court of Equity, went to the Circuit Court for redress, and there, after multitudinous motions, demurrers, pleas, continuances, trials, new trials, bills of exceptions, appeals, reversals and more trials, and perhaps more appeals and reversals, he was at last informed by a new set of Judges, that the suit was one that should have been brought in the Chancery Court! All such unseemly and costly diversions over questions of disputed jurisdiction, and the consequent scandal on the Courts of Justice, are happily and forever ended by the beneficent Act of 1877. And no more will Justice weep in her own temple to see her suitors torn to pieces by her own administrators, contending for the jurisdiction over them. See Hay v. Marshall, 3 Hum., 223; Hale v. Hale, 4 Hum., 183; and Taylor v. Tompkins, 2 Helsk., 89.

the rules of Equity shall prevail." The effect of this provision is to make the rules of Equity supreme, in all litigation, in all the Courts of England. It is believed the Tennessee Act of 1877 has the same effect in all common law rights of action sought to be enforced in Chancery. When the jurisdiction of a Court is enlarged, the new subjects of jurisdiction should not be treated as aliens, and discriminated against; nor should the parties to such suits be held in disfavor, or denied any equitable right, benefit or privilege, accorded by the Court in the ordinary exercise of its jurisdiction. The Act of 1877 was manifestly intended to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court as a Court of Equity, and not to make it, as to this enlargement, a mere Common Law Court: 51 and hence, in all suits brought under the Act of 1877, the pleadings, practice and principles, of Equity jurisprudence will control. 52

§ 22. Classification of Matters of Equitable Jurisdiction.—The importance formerly attached to a proper classification of the subjects of Equity jurisdiction no longer exists in this State, and it is now immaterial whether the matter in controversy is within the equitable or the statutory jurisdiction of the Court; and if within the equitable, it is unimportant whether the jurisdiction be exclusive or concurrent. As a result, all the abstruse learning in the books on the lines of demarcation between the different grounds of jurisdiction has ceased to be of much practical value. The legal niceties, the complex technicalities and the dialectical discriminations on the subject of jurisdiction, with which the great jurists of England and America wrestled in the last five centuries, no longer perplex either the student or the practitioner in this State.

For convenience of consideration, the jurisdiction of our Chancery Courts, as now constituted, may be divided into: 1, The Equitable, or Inherent, and 2, The Statutory:

1. The Equitable, or Inherent, to include all of those matters, whether purely equitable in their nature or having characteristics both equitable and legal, jurisdiction over which is derived exclusively or chiefly from their inherent powers as Courts of Equity; and

2. The Statutory, to include all of those matters, whether equitable in their characteristics or purely legal in their nature, jurisdiction over which is derived exclusively or chiefly from our statutes.

51 Lenoir v. Mining Co., 4 Pick. 188. In this case it was decided that when a suit based on claims purely legal is tried in the Chancery Court the maxims and principles of Equity will be applied.
52 The Chancery Court in Tennessee is now equipped with full power to do complete and speedy justice in all suits within its jurisdiction, however numerous the parties, or complicated their rights and duties. It is vested with authority to so shape and mould its decrees as to meet every exigency required either by Law or Equity, and to adjust all matters in controversy, legal as well as equitable, so as to give each party his exact rights, and to require of each party his exact duties, whether such party be complainant or defendant, and whether the obligations be between complainants and defendants, or between co-complainants or between co-defendants. And it has been clothed with unlimited power to use any kind of process, legal or equitable, to enforce its orders and decrees; and if an emergency should arise necessitating a process not hitherto used, the Court would, when absolutely necessary to prevent a failure of substantial justice, so modify one of the customary legal or equitable processes as to adapt it to the exigencies of the emergency. The Act of 1877 is liberally construed, Simmons v. Leonard, 5 Pick., 622.
ARTICLE II.

THE EQUITABLE, OR INHERENT, JURISDICTION OF THE CHANCERY COURT.

§ 23. The Equitable, or Inherent Jurisdiction of the Chancery Court Generally Considered.

§ 24. The Equitable, or Inherent Jurisdiction Generally Stated.

§ 25. The Equitable, or Inherent Jurisdiction Specially Stated.

§ 23. The Equitable, or Inherent, Jurisdiction of the Chancery Court generally Considered.—The jurisprudence and procedure of the Chancery Court constituted a part of the law our ancestors brought with them from England, when they founded the Colony of North Carolina. When that Colony became a State, this jurisprudence was recognized, and its administration provided for, in its Constitution; and in 1782, its Legislature conferred this jurisdiction upon the Courts. Tennessee being then a part of North Carolina, that jurisprudence became a part of our law; and, when we became a State, both the Deed of Cession and the Act of Admission by Congress, made the laws of North Carolina our laws, until we saw fit to change them. In our first, and in all subsequent, Constitutions, the jurisprudence and procedure of the Chancery Court were fully recognized, and their administration abundantly provided for. While the procedure has been modernized, simplified and improved, in many particulars, as already fully shown, the jurisprudence has in no particular been changed, except in so far as it has been extended and enlarged on the lines of its legitimate development. 1

This original jurisdiction, thus derived, through the Colony and State of North Carolina, from the Equity Jurisprudence of England, is called the inherent jurisdiction of the Court, to contradistinguish it from the statutory jurisdiction; and it is to this original and inherentjurisdiction that our statute refers when it says: "The Chancery Courts shall continue to have all the powers, privileges and jurisdiction, properly and rightfully incident to a Court of Equity, by existing laws." 2

The inherent powers, privileges and jurisdiction of our Chancery Courts, within their respective local and personal jurisdictions, are identical in kind and commensurate in extent, with the Equity powers, privileges and jurisdiction of the High Court of Chancery in England, at the time of the American Revolution. 3

The Chancery Court is a Superior Court 4 of general original jurisdiction of 1 See Article on the History of the Chancery Courts of Tennessee, ante, §§ 10-14. The Chancery Court, under its inherent jurisdiction, deals only with property and the rights and duties of parties incident thereto; and every affirmative decree either affects the property of some party, or some right or duty of some party in reference to property. Its jurisdiction over infants, non composites, and married women arises out of their property and property rights. Its jurisdiction in suits for divorce, mandamus, habeas corpus and other suits formerly triable exclusively in Courts of Law, is purely statutory. As to what property is and what are rights of property, see post, § 50.

2 Code, § 4270. In some cases the statute has given the Court jurisdiction of matters over which it had inherent jurisdiction already, as (1) in case of partition, Hopper v. Fisher, 2 Head. 254; (2) in proceedings to sell the lands of infants, Gray v. Barnard, 1 Tenn. Ch., 298; (3) to appoint and remove trustees, Code, §§ 3048-3094; Watkins v. Specht, 7 Cold., 504; 1 Perry on Trusts, §§ 280-282; and (4) to aid a judgment creditor after a return of nulla bona. Code, §§ 4282-4285.

4 Hopper v. Fisher, 2 Head, 224; Lake v. McDavitt, 13 Lea, 30. The rule of jurisdiction is, that nothing shall be intended to be out of the jurisdiction of a Superior Court but that which specially appears to be so; and, on the contrary, nothing shall be intended to be within the jurisdiction of an Inferior Court but that which is so expressly alleged. Kilcrease v. Blythe, 6 Hum., 378. The Chancery Court is a Superior Court within the sense and meaning of the term as contradistinguished from an Inferior Court. Hopper v. all cases of an equitable nature, where the debt or demand exceeds fifty dollars; and every matter of equitable cognizance above said amount is presumed to be within its inherent jurisdiction as a Court of Equity. 5

§ 24. The Equitable, or Inherent, Jurisdiction generally Stated.—The whole inherent jurisdiction of the Chancery Court, aside from its injunctive powers, may be briefly summed up in these four propositions.

1. If a lawful and equitable contract be the subject matter of the suit, all the Court can do is (1) to equitably enforce the contract, or (2) to award compensation for its breach, or (3) to require the parties in default to do such act relative thereto as he, in good reason and good conscience, ought to have done without suit. 6

2. If there be no contract, or the contract be inequitable, and the parties disagree as to their rights and duties, all the Court can do is (1) to require the party in default to do, or refrain from doing, what good reason and good conscience require, or (2) where injury has been done, to make the defendant atone therefor.

3. If any of the parties are under disability, and (1) their interests will be promoted by a sale of their property, or by a conversion of their money into other property, or by using a portion or all of the corpus of their estate for their maintenance, education or support; or (2) if their rights need protection or enforcement; on the application of a guardian, or next friend, the Court will (1) by decree do for them what they in reason and conscience would themselves have done if under no disability, or (2) will require the parties who are sui juris to do to or for those under disability, what in good reason and good conscience, they should have done without suit.

4. If the parties are sui juris, whatever they consent to during the progress of the suit will, if violative of no law, be binding on the Court; and if it is to the interest of an infant or lunatic party to join in any lawful consent, and the state of the pleadings permit, the Court can consent for such infant or lunatic. And, generally, where there is consent, the parties bind the Court; 7 and where there is no consent, the Court binds the parties.

§ 25. The Equitable, or Inherent, Jurisdiction, Specially Stated.—The equitable or inherent jurisdiction of the Chancery Court includes all cases of an equitable nature, where the debt or demand exceeds fifty dollars. 8 These cases include the following:

1. All suits resulting from accidents and mistakes.
2. All suits resulting from frauds, actual, and constructive.
3. All suits resulting from trusts, express, constructive, and resulting.
4. All suits for the specific performance of contracts.
5. All suits for the reformation, re-execution, rescission, and surrender of written instruments.
6. All suits for an accounting, and for surcharging and falsifying accounts.
7. All suits between partners, and to wind up an insolvent partnership.
8. All suits for the administration and marshaling of assets.
9. All suits for subrogation and substitution.
10. All suits for the enforcement of liens created by mortgages, deeds of trust, sales of land on credit, or other equitable considerations.
11. All suits by married women against their husbands, except for divorce. 9
12. All suits against married women and minors in reference to their estates, not cognizable at law.
13. All suits by wards against guardians, executors, administrators and others, where an accounting, or surcharging or falsifying an account, is necessary.

14. All suits for an apportionment and contribution.
15. All suits for the marshaling of securities.
16. All suits for relief against forfeitures and penalties.
17. All suits for the redemption of land or other property.
18. All suits to have absolute deeds or bills of sale declared to be mortgages.
19. All suits for the construction and enforcement of wills and trusts.
20. All suits to obtain a set-off against a judgment in favor of a non-resident or insolvent.
21. All suits for the discovery and perpetuation of testimony.
22. All suits to compel claimants to interplead.
23. All suits for equitable attachments and receivers.
24. All suits where a ne exeat republica is sought.
25. All suits where an injunction is a substantial part of the relief sought.
26. All suits to remove clouds and quiet titles.
27. All suits for the establishment and execution of charities.
28. All suits for a new trial after a judgment at law.
29. All suits to have void judgments so declared, and to avoid voidable judgments.
30. All suits to execute decrees, and to impeach decrees and judgments.
31. All suits to prevent the doing of an illegal or inequitable act to the injury of complainant's property rights, or interests, quia timet.
32. All suits for the exoneration or protection of sureties.
33. All other suits where the defendant has done, or is doing, or is threatening to do, some inequitable act to the injury of the complainant, and there is no adequate remedy therefor in any other court.
§ 26. Statutory Jurisdiction of the Court generally Considered.—With perhaps the single exception of the Act prohibiting interlocutory injunctions against the collection of State taxes, all of the statutes now in existence relative to the powers, privileges and jurisdiction, of the Chancery Court are either declaratory or augmentative, as has been shown in a preceding Article. The Statute declares that the Court has all the powers, privileges and jurisdiction properly and rightfully incident to a Court of Equity, by existing laws. The effect of this statute is to make the inherent jurisdiction of the Court, in a sense, also statutory. The statute further declares that the Court has exclusive original jurisdiction of all cases of an equitable nature, where the debt or demand exceeds fifty dollars, unless otherwise provided by the statute. The Court has no jurisdiction of any debt or demand of less value than fifty dollars, except upon an ejectment bill to recover land, or on a replevin or detinue bill, or on a bill to aid a judgment creditor, or on a bill to enforce the statutory rights of a purchaser of realty at a tax sale. The Court cannot enforce a vendor's lien when the amount of the demand is less than fifty dollars.

The statutory jurisdiction, while including matters also belonging to the inherent jurisdiction, may for convenience be divided into: 1, Jurisdiction concurrent with the County Court; 2, Jurisdiction concurrent with the Circuit Court; and 3, Jurisdiction exclusive of all other Courts.

§ 27. Jurisdiction Concurrent with the County Courts.—The Chancery Court has jurisdiction concurrent with the County Court:

1. Of the persons and estates of idiots, lunatics, and other persons of unsound mind.

1 Acts of 1873, ch. 44.
2 Code, § 4279. See preceding Article, §§ 16-22.
3 Code, § 4280. What is meant by “cases of an equitable nature” is the whole body of Equity Jurisprudence as a remedial system. Pomeroy and Story are authors of works on Equity Jurisprudence recognized by our Supreme Court; and their treatises have been largely used in the compilation of this book.
4 Code, §§ 4280-4281.
5 The Court has jurisdiction in a mandamus suit where the amount in controversy is under fifty dollars; State, ex rel., v. Alexander, 7 Cates, 158; and in suits to recover land which is of less value than fifty dollars. Frazier v. Browning, 11 Lea, 259. The Chancery Courts have jurisdiction, also to aid a judgment creditor after a return of nulla bona, when the amount of his judgment is less than fifty dollars; Putnam v. Bentley, 8 Bax., 84; State v. Covington, 4 Lea, 58; but they have no jurisdiction to enforce a vendor's lien when the amount is less than fifty dollars. Malone v. Dean, 9 Lea, 336. If the debt or demand as set forth in the bill exceeds fifty dollars, the Court prima facie has jurisdiction; and if the defendant, without pleading in abatement, answers the bill, he cannot, at the hearing, resist a decree on the mere ground that the amount of the debt, as ascertained by the proof, is less than fifty dollars. Spurlock v. Folk, 1 Swan, 289; Birmingham v. Tapscott, 4 Heisk., 382; Waggstaff v. Braden, 1 Bax., 394; Smets v. Williams, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 364.
6 Acts of 1865, ch. 238, § 78.
7 Malone v. Dean, 9 Lea, 336. After this decision, the Legislature clothed the County Courts with jurisdiction to enforce vendors' liens when the amount is under fifty dollars. Acts of 1887, ch. 141. Why the jurisdiction was not conferred on the Chancery Courts, it is hard to understand, inasmuch as the rules of practice and pleading in the Chancery Court are required to be followed in the County Court in such cases, and the costs in the two Courts in such cases are precisely the same! The proceedings in the County Courts in suits to sell lands are often so artificial as to be unintelligible, and often so defective as to convey no title to the purchaser.
8 Code, § 4286.
2. Of the persons and estates of infants, and of the appointment and removal of guardians.
3. Of suits for the partition, or sale, of estates, by heirs or tenants in common.
4. Of suits for the sale of a decedent's land at the instance of his personal representatives or creditors, if the personal property is insufficient to satisfy the debts of the estate.
5. Of suits for the allotment of dower.
6. Of suits for the appointment of an administrator of a decedent's estate, when six months have elapsed since his death, and no person will apply to the County Court, or can be procured, to administer in the usual way, and
7. Of suits to enforce the payment of legacies and distributive shares.

§ 28. Jurisdiction Concurrent with the Circuit Courts. — The Chancery Court has jurisdiction concurrent with the Circuit Court in the following cases:
1. Of suits for divorce and alimony.
2. Of suits for the partition, or sale, of estates by heirs or tenants in common.
3. Of suits for the sale of a decedent's land at the instance of his personal representatives or creditors, if the personal property is insufficient to satisfy the debts of the estate.
4. Of suits for the allotment of dower.
5. Of arbitration and agreed cases.
6. Of suits for the abatement and recovery of usury.
7. Of suits to enforce the payment of legacies and distributive shares.
And, under the Act of 1877, the Chancery Court has jurisdiction, concurrent with the Circuit Court, in the following cases:
8. Of all suits to recover money due for work or labor done, or services rendered, or for the hire, rent, use, price or value of property, real or personal.
9. Of all suits to recover money expended for the defendant's use and benefit, or at his instance and request.
10. Of all suits to recover money the defendant has received from or for the complainant, without the right to retain it against him.
11. Of all suits to recover money agreed, or adjudged, to be paid.
12. Of all suits to recover money due on any contract, express or implied; or due on any judgment or award; or lost at gaming.
13. Of all suits to recover penalties, or liquidated damages, or damages liquidated or unliquidated, for breaches of contracts, expressed or implied; or for breaches of any obligation or legal duty.
14. Of all suits to recover damages in all other cases, except damages for injuries to person, property or character, involving unliquidated damages.
15. Of all suits to recover land, or any interest therein, or any rent or profit thereof.
16. Of all suits to recover specific personal property.
17. Of all such “special actions and proceedings”32 as ejectment,33 forcible entry and detainer, replevin,31 detinue, mandamus,32 habeas corpus,32 summary proceedings by motion, and proceedings to change names, and to legitimate and adopt children; and
18. Of all other civil causes of action triable in the Circuit Court, except for injuries to person, property or character, involving unliquidated damages.34

The Chancery and Circuit Courts have also concurrent jurisdiction:
19. Of all suits in the name of the State against corporations, and to prevent the usurpation of office,35 and
20. Of all suits commenced by attachment against the property of the defendant.36

21. Of all suits to enforce mechanics’ liens,37 landlords’ and furnishers’ liens,38 liens on boats,39 liens of cotton sellers,40 liens for wharfage,41 liens of employees of corporations and partnerships,42 liens of farm laborers,43 liens of contractors and laborers on railroads,44 and liens on personal property.45
22. Of all suits brought in the name of the State or County to enforce liens for taxes,46 and
23. Of all appeals from the judgment of the County Court on an account stated by the County Court Clerk with an administrator, or executor.47

§ 29. Act of 1877, Specially Considered.—The Act of 1877, ch. 97, was at first regarded with disfavor by the Courts and the Bar, and even its constitutionality questioned. When recognized at all, it was done grudgingly, and attempts were made by both Judges and Solicitors to limit its application, and construe it as though it made a law Court out of the Chancery Court. But the Act gained steadily in favor; its constitutionality was recognized, and its wis-

36 The Chancery Court is given jurisdiction of habeas corpus suits by the Act of 1877, ch. 97; but it would seem that this Act does not give the Chancellor the powers of the Circuit Judge in habeas corpus cases at chambers. The habeas corpus “cases of equitable cognizance,” referred to in the Code, § 3723, include only cases where a party has been committed by the Chancery Court, or Chancellor, for some contempt. See Code, §§ 4108-4109; 4482-4483, and the Article on Contempt, post, §§ 200, 202.
37 Acts of 1877, ch. 97. The scope of this Act is broader than has sometimes been thought. By it the Chancery Court is given jurisdiction “of all civil causes of action triable in the Circuit Court, except for injuries to the person, property or character, involving unliquidated damages.” The exception is confined to “injuries to person, property or character, involving unliquidated damages.” Hence, these three elements must co-exist in the suit to bring it within the exception, 1st, the suit must be for an injury; 2nd, the injury must be to person, property or character; and 3d, the injury must involve unliquidated damages. If a civil cause of action does not cover all three of these elements, then the suit may be brought in the Chancellor’s Court. So all of the excepted cases are included in the following three classes:
1. “Injuries to person involving unliquidated damages” include, (1) assault, (2) battery, (3) false arrest, (4) false imprisonment, (5) injury to the person from negligence, nuisances, seduction, and (6) malicious prosecution involving an arrest.
2. “Injuries to property, involving unliquidated damages” include injuries to property, real or personal, arising from trespasses, vi et armis, nuisances, negligence, and torts.
3. “Injuries to character involving unliquidated damages” are (1) slander, (2) libel, (3) malicious prosecution: the last is often for injuries to both person and character.

dom and usefulness appreciated. It is being more and more liberally construed, its far-reaching and beneficent effects are more and more fully understood, and its extensions of remedial powers and processes more and more generally appreciated and applied.

This Act places at the disposal of the Chancery Court all the powers and jurisdiction of the Circuit Court, in civil causes of action, except a few involving unliquidated damages; so that when a suit is being tried in Chancery, the Chancellor has at his disposal all the weapons and machinery of justice contained in the armories of the common law as well as those in the armories of Equity, thus enabling him to do full, complete and adequate justice in the suit before him, unhampered by the formalities and technicalities of the common law, and unhindered by the former statutes conferring exclusive jurisdiction of common law matters upon the Circuit Courts. The Act of 1877 did not carry the Chancellor into a Law Court to try the lawsuit, but carried the lawsuit into the Chancery Court to be heard by the Chancellor, and clothed him with all of the powers of the Circuit Court in addition to those of the Chancery Court, so as to enable him not only to administer the law applicable to the case, but at the same time, to apply any powers or principles of Equity necessary to determine all the questions involved in the controversy, and render any further litigation not only unnecessary but improper.

While the maxim, When Chancery has jurisdiction for one purpose it will take jurisdiction for all purposes, has always been a favorite one, nevertheless the Court was formerly so hampered by not having a jury of its own to determine a controlling question of fact when the evidence was conflicting and the credit of witnesses to be weighed, or to assess unliquidated damages, that it often, perhaps too often, after deciding the equitable matters in controversy, refused to go further and remitted the complainant to the Courts of law in order to obtain the remainder of the redress he was entitled to. But now, clothed with law powers by the Act of 1877, and having full power to empanel a jury of its own, our Chancery Court can give full effect to the said maxim, and in one and the same suit determine every question of Equity, law or fact involved, including unliquidated damages where such damages are incidental to the main object of the suit.49

§ 30. Exclusive Statutory Jurisdiction of the Chancery Court.—The Chancery Court has exclusive statutory jurisdiction of the following suits, some of which, however, belong, also, to its inherent jurisdiction:

1. Of all suits to aid judgment creditors, when the property of the defendant cannot be reached by execution.50

2. Of all suits to set aside fraudulent conveyances, and subject the property so conveyed to the satisfaction of complainant’s debt.51

3. Of all suits to subject the property of corporations to the payment of their debts, when the corporate franchises are not used, or have been granted to others, in whole or in part.52

4. Of all suits relating to controversies between the State and incorporated companies, their stockholders and creditors, growing out of the internal improvement laws of the State.53

5. Of all suits to enforce foreign judgments against the property of the non-resident defendant when the creditor has exhausted his legal remedy.54

6. Of all suits to sell the property of infants and married women, for their support, education and maintenance, and when manifestly for their interest.55

7. Of all suits to partition, sell and re-invest the property of lunatics, when for the manifest interest of the lunatic or his family.56

MAXIMS AND PRINCIPLES OF EQUITY.

ARTICLE I.

MAXIMS AND PRINCIPLES OF JURISDICTION.

§ 31. Maxims generally Considered.—There are certain great underlying principles, often called Maxims, which are the fruitful sources of a vast number of particular rules concerning both rights and remedies. These principles are a component part of Equity jurisprudence. They lie at the foundation of universal justice; are the sources of municipal law; and have been worthily and aptly called legum leges—the laws of the laws. These maxims are, in the strictest sense, the principia, the beginnings, out of which has been developed the entire system of Equity jurisprudence, by a process of natural evolution. The student who has made these principles a part of his mental habit, who has, as it were, incorporated them into his very intellectual being, has already mastered the essence of Equity; and has made the acquisition of its particular rules an easy task.

1 Maxim ita dicta quia maxima est ejus dignitas et certissima auclaris atque quad maxime omnibus probetur. Co. Lit., 111. (A maxim is so called because its dignity is maximum and its authority the most certain, and because approved at the maximum by all.)

2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 120.

3 Kent's Com., 533. So fundamental are these maxims that he who disputes their authority is regarded as beyond the reach of reason. Contra negantem principium non est disputandum. Coke says, "Maxims of law are helden for law." Coke, Litt., 11, 67; and Bacon says, "They are the fountains of justice from which flow all civil laws." In Box v. I-anier, 4 Cates, 409, Beard, Ch. J., says, "Maxims have their foundation in universal law; they are embodied in the common law, and are an essential part of its warp and woof."

4 Principia probant, non probantur. (Maxims are proof, and need no proving.)

§ 32. Equity Acts upon the Person. — When the Chancellors first began to exercise judicial functions, they refrained from using common law, or statutory processes, probably to avoid conflicts with the common law Courts, which were jealous of the extraordinary powers exercised by the Chancery Court. 1 Instead of commanding the Sheriff to make the money, decreed the complainant, out of the defendant’s property, the Chancellor commanded the defendant to pay the money; 2 Instead of empowering the Master to divest the title to land out of the defendant, and vest it in the complainant, or the purchaser, the Chancellor required the defendant to execute a deed to the complainant, or to the purchaser; 3 Instead of forbidding a Court of law to proceed in a suit, or to enforce its judgment in a given case, the Chancellor forbade the plaintiff from proceeding in the suit, or doing any act towards obtaining an execution; and, 4, In general, the decrees of the Chancery Court were enforced through the personal act of the party himself. 7 If the party failed or refused, to do what the Chancellor by his decree required him to do, compulsory process was issued. But no compulsory process issued until the party had been served with a mandate, commanding him to do what the Court required of him. 8 If he then disobeyed, he was adjudged in contempt, and was committed to prison until he complied with the orders of the Court. If he still refused, his property, real and personal, was sequestered and applied to the satisfaction of the decree.

This was formerly the practice in North Carolina and Tennessee; but in 1787, in consequence of the then mode of “carrying into effect the decrees of the Court of Equity by attachments, habeas corpus, attachments by proclamation and commissions of rebellion being in many cases dilatory, oppressive and inadequate,” the Legislature of North Carolina authorized executions to issue on Chancery decrees, as at law; and in 1801, the Legislature of Tennessee enacted that “instead of decreeing parties to convey lands, as heretofore practiced in equity,” the Court was given power by decree to divest the title out of the person against whom the decree was pronounced. 9 Since the passage of these two acts, our Courts of Chancery have not acted, ordinarily, in personam. The vast majority of Chancery decrees are now enforced by executions, attachments of property, writs of possession, divestiture of title, and orders of sale; so that it may now be said that our Courts of Chancery do not act, ordinarily, in personam.

Nevertheless, the maxim that Courts of Equity operate on the person, is true; and most important results follow from the maxim; and although in practice, our Chancery Court acts ordinarily on the property of the party, yet it has all of its original authority to act on the person of the party, as will be seen by inspecting the Code, §§ 4478-4488; and as will be more fully shown hereafter. 10

The principal cases in which Equity now operates on the person in Tennessee are the following:

1. Where the Parties Reside within the Jurisdiction of the Court, but the land, or other subject matter in controversy, is not. In such case, if Equity so require, the Court may, by attachment, compel one party to convey the land to the other. 11 Hence, a specific performance will be decreed as to lands in a foreign country; so, a trust will be declared and enforced, or a mortgage foreclosed or redeemed, or a fraudulent judgment overhauled, and even the sales under such a judgment, when the lands, or the judgment, are in a foreign country. 12 But has not thoroughly comprehended that subtle alchemy in its maxims whereby the most difficult problems are readily solved; and, so believing, no little space has been devoted to them. These principles and maxims constitute a system of jurisprudence based on good reason and good conscience; and are designed to enable the Courts of Equity to do complete justice between all the parties in any litigation, however novel, abstruse, complicated or numerous, the questions involved may be.

6 Equitas opit in personam. Code, § 495.
8 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1043.
9 1 Scott’s Rev., 389; 609.
10 See Chapter on the Enforcement of Decrees.
11 Miller v. Birdsong, 7 Bax., 537. It is not enough that a subpoena to answer was served on the defendant; he must be an actual resident within the territorial jurisdiction of the Court. Wicks v. Caruthers, 13 Lea., 328.
12 Sto. Eq. Jur., §§ 1291-1294. In general the fact that the property is not within the jurisdiction constitutes no bar to a proceeding in a Court of Equity, if the person is within where, in order to give the relief sought, it is necessary to deal directly with the land itself, without the agency of the parties, then the fact that the land is outside of the jurisdiction of the Court would debar the Court from granting the relief, because the Court will not make a decree that it cannot enforce by its own authority. Thus, a bill cannot be brought for a partition of land outside of the jurisdiction, for the Court cannot send commissioners there; but a bill may be maintained for rents and profits of land outside of the jurisdiction.

2. Where a Discovery of Facts, or of Property, the delivery of documents, or the surrender of personal property, or trust funds, is commanded. Equity will not Suffer a Wrong Without a Remedy. — This maxim, and the maxim that "Equity operates upon the Person," are two of the principles most active in originating and moulding the Chancery jurisprudence. The King, as the "fountain of justice," with an oath resting upon his conscience to see that right was done to all his subjects, and believing that he had the prerogative power, as the Supreme Judge of England, to do whatsoever he deemed was right and just as between man and man, without reference to laws, customs, statutes, precedents or Courts; and prompted, no doubt, by his ecclesiastical Chancellors, was not willing to see a wrong done to a subject, and to be told that there was no power in his kingdom to right that wrong, that the common law furnished no remedy therefor; and that, as a consequence, the wrong-doer, in that particular, was superior to law, and mightier than the King.

Hence was it, that the King, deeming such a state of facts derogatory to himself, disparaging to his prerogative, disgraceful to his kingdom and a dereliction of duty under his oath, took personal cognizance of such matters when petitioned to so do; and when petitions became too numerous for his personal attention, he referred them to his Chancellors, who were the "keepers of his conscience," with authority to do whatever good conscience and good reason required in the premises.

The common law had a maxim, Ubi jus. ibi remedium, (Wherever there is a right there is a remedy for the violation of that right;) but the maxim was too general to be true. Had it been true, there would have been no need for a Chancery Court. To support this maxim it was held that if there was no remedy then there was no right, which was the same as saying that the right depended on the remedy; and, unfortunately for the common law, this was true. For, under the common law, every cause of action had to be adapted to some one of its technical and arbitrary forms of suit, and if this could not be done, then the suit could not be brought; so that, at common law, the right had to be adapted to the remedy, thus violating at the same time, both reason and justice. In the Chancery Court, the opposite rule was adopted and enforced, and the remedy was adapted to the right, and thus made to assume any form the right required.

This maxim, or, as it is sometimes expressed, Equity will not suffer a right to be without a remedy, is the original source of the entire equitable jurisdiction

For every injury, the Constitution declares there shall be a remedy; and the Chancery Court has had, from its foundation, the inherent right to provide, or adopt, a remedy for any case or injury wherefor no remedy clearly appears. 1 Pom. of the Chancery Court, exclusive, concurrent and auxiliary; and a full explanation of the scope and meaning of this maxim would require a discussion of the whole system of Equity.\(^\text{18}\) And now that the jurisdiction of the Chancery Courts has been so greatly enlarged by statutes in Tennessee, the force of the maxim and its beneficence have been proportionately enlarged.

The wrong that Equity will not suffer to be without a remedy, must be a civil injury to the complainant’s rights or interests, legal or equitable. There are some duties Equity does not attempt judicially to enforce, such as charity, gratitude and kindness; and some wrongs with which Equity does not interfere, such as violations of honor, or of truth, or of morals, involving no question of property, and no question of pecuniary liability; but any wrong done to a legal or equitable right will be redressed in Equity, unless some other Court has exclusive jurisdiction.

This maxim was originally intended to mean that, in all civil cases within the scope of judicial action, where a wrong had been done, or was threatened to be done, and a full, complete, adequate and certain remedy could not be had in the common law Courts, a remedy would be provided, and enforced, in the Chancery Court; and all jurisdiction assumed necessary for that purpose. And, in order to enable the Court to adequately exercise this jurisdiction, and to make its remedies effective, without coming into conflict with the powers or processes of the common law Courts, the plan was devised of compelling the defendant himself to execute the decree of the Court of Chancery by imprisoning him, if necessary, until he did so. Hence, the maxim, Equity acts upon the person; and it might be said that on these two maxims hang all Equity.

In pursuance of these two maxims, the Court of Chancery has devised, or adopted, from the Roman, or civil law, the following remedies, none of which existed at common law: (1) Specific performance of contracts; (2) Injunctions to restrain the violation of rights, to stay unjust proceedings at law, to quiet title, and prevent wrongs; (3) The re-execution of instruments lost or destroyed; (4) the re-formation of deeds, or contracts, erroneously drawn by accident, or mistake; (5) The rescission and cancellation of agreements and conveyances obtained under circumstances of surprise, fraud or mistake; (6) the re-opening of settlements, and adjudication of complicated accounts; (7) The method of winding up all the affairs of a partnership; (8) The marshaling of securities; (9) The redemption and foreclosure of mortgages; (10) The partition of land between tenants in common; (11) The enforcement of trusts and fiduciary obligations; (12) The exoneration, contribution and subrogation of securities; (13) The administration of estates; (14) The winding up of the estates of insolvent debtors, and insolvent corporations; (15) The enforcement of liens; (16) The protection of the persons and estates of infants; (17) The establishment of a wife’s equity; (18) The remedy by interpleader; (19) The perpetuation of testimony; and (20) A discovery in aid of legal proceedings.

Thus, upon these two maxims, Equity will not suffer a wrong without a remedy, and Equity operates upon the person, was builded that grand structure of jurisprudence called Equity; and although by means of the improvements in the processes of the Courts, aided largely by wise legislation, remedies for every civil wrong known to the Courts, have been devised, and enforced, yet if, in the progress of civilization, if, in the complicated net-work of mercantile business, if, through the ingenuity and subtlety of the human mind bent on schemes of personal or pecuniary advantages, or intent on devices for aggrandizement, new remedies should be required to circumvent circumvention and to overcome the insidiousness of any sort of machiavelism, the Court of Chancery, operating in obedience to this maxim, will devise a remedy adequate to the emergency, and vindicate the beneficence and capacity of its inherent powers to do justice in any case, and to right every wrong, however intricate the case, however great the wrong, or however powerful the wrong-doer.\textsuperscript{19} The powers that lie dormant in this potent maxim will awaken, as the necessities for their action arise; and they will be found commensurate with every necessity.

It must not be forgotten, however, that this remedy may be forfeited or lost by the party wronged: \textit{forfeited}, (1) by some fraudulent, illegal, or unconscientious conduct in connection with the wrong he complains of, whereby his hands have become stained with iniquity; or (2) by having, through his fault or negligence, occasioned, or contributed to, the loss complained of; for, when one of two persons must suffer, the loss must be borne by him whose act caused it.\textsuperscript{20} Or the remedy may be \textit{lost}, (1) by the fact that the adverse party has an equal, or a superior, equity; or (2) by \textit{laches}, or acquiescence; or (3) by subsequent contract, or estoppel.

\section*{\textsection 34. Equity Acts Specifically, and Not by Way of Compensation.\textsuperscript{20a}}—This principle runs through the whole system of Chancery jurisprudence. Equity aims at putting the parties exactly in the position they ought to occupy, giving them \textit{in specie} what they are entitled to enjoy; and putting a stop to injuries which are being inflicted. Thus, Equity decrees the specific performance of a contract, instead of giving damages for its breach. So, Equity restrains the commission of a trespass, instead of compensating the aggrieved party by damages. In some cases, also, a party will be compelled to specifically make good his representations by which another has been misled.\textsuperscript{21} So, Equity will declare a person who has knowingly acquired trust property, a trustee; and will make property purchased in his own name by a fiduciary with trust funds, trust property; will construe and enforce wills and other express trusts; and will set up lost or destroyed instruments and records; and will cancel fraudulent deeds, and remove clouds on title, and will, by injunction, protect a party in his rights, or restrain a party in his wrongs. In all the foregoing cases, the common law either gave no remedy, or else merely allowed damages for the wrong, the latter remedy when allowed being often wholly inadequate, and sometimes, from the poverty of the defendant, wholly worthless.

\section*{\textsection 35. When Parties are Disabled to Act the Chancery Court will Act for Them.\textsuperscript{21a}}—Persons of unsound mind are disabled to act for themselves by nature; infants are disabled both by nature and by law, and married women are disabled by law alone. As a rule, none of these three classes can of themselves enter into any important contract, especially contracts relative to lands. But it is often of great importance to their welfare, to convert their property into another form, or to expend it for their urgent necessities; and the law would be greatly defective in this important matter if it furnished no remedy for such emergencies. The Chancery Court gives this remedy, and has full jurisdiction to do everything necessary for the welfare of persons under disability: it may sell, lease or exchange, their lands; convert personality into realty, or realty into personality; order the expenditure of any part of the principal of their estates for their education, or maintenance; and, in general, do any act indispensable to their welfare, the Court at all times having in view the best interests of the parties; and acting as would a prudent and considerate parent.\textsuperscript{22}

But while accorded full protection they are not entitled to have technicalities strained in their behalf, especially against a stranger guilty of no unconscientious conduct.
§ 36. When Chancery has Jurisdiction for One Purpose, it will Take Jurisdiction for All Purposes.—This maxim is not always so broadly stated in the reports and text books, but in the light of the Act of 1877, extending the common law jurisdiction of the Chancery Courts, there can be no doubt about the correctness of the rule as given. Pomeroj states the rule thus: "Where a Court of Equity has obtained jurisdiction over some portion or feature of a controversy, it may, and will in general, proceed to decide the whole issues, and to award complete relief, although the rights of the parties are strictly legal, and the final remedy granted is of the kind which might be conferred by a Court of law." The reason of the rule is, the duty of Courts to prevent a multiplicity of suits; and Courts of Equity delight to do complete justice, and not by halves. Our Chancery Court acted in accordance with this rule prior to the Act of 1877; and it may now be considered as an invaluable rule, and one attended with very beneficent results.

Where suits are brought to enjoin the further prosecution of a pending action at law, or the enforcement of a judgment recovered at law, either on the ground of some equitable defense not cognizable by the law Courts, or on the ground of some fraud, mistake, accident, or other incident of the trial at law, which rendered the legal judgment inequitable, in such cases a Court of Equity, having obtained jurisdiction for the purpose of an injunction, will decide the whole controversy, and render a final decree, even though the issues are legal in their nature, and capable of being tried by a court of law; and the legal remedies, therefore, are adequate. This rule is general in its operation, and extends to all suits brought to obtain the special relief of injunction, and is not confined to suits for the purpose of enjoining actions, or judgments, at law. It may be stated as a general proposition, that wherever the Chancery Court has jurisdiction to grant the remedy of injunction for some special purpose, even though the injunction covers only a portion of the controversy, it may go on and decide all the issues, and make a final decree, granting full relief in the same manner as could a Court of law, decreeing damages for the wrongs enjoined when proper.

Particular instances of the operation of this general rule concerning the remedy of injunction may be seen in cases of waste, of private nuisance, and of continuous or irreparable trespasses, where, the Chancery Court having obtained jurisdiction by injunction, will complete the relief the complainant is entitled to, by decreeing him damages for the injuries done.

If the Chancery Court obtains jurisdiction of a suit for the purpose of granting some distinctively equitable relief, such, for example, as a discovery, or the specific performance of a contract, or the rescission, or cancellation, of some instrument, and it appears from facts disclosed on the hearing, but not known to the complainant when he brought his suit, that the special relief prayed for has become impracticable, and the complainant is entitled to the only alternate relief possible, that of damages, the Court then will, instead of compelling the complainant to incur the double expense and trouble of an action at law, retain the cause, decide all the issues involved, and decree the payment of compensatory damages.

It is a fundamental rule of Equity jurisprudence, that the Court of Chancery, in any cause coming before it for decision, if the circumstances of the case permit, and all the parties in interest are or can be brought before it, will determine the entire controversy, and award full and final relief; and thus do complete justice to all the litigants, whatever may be the amount or nature of their interest or liability, and thus to bring all possible litigation over the subject-matter within the compass of one judicial determination. By virtue of this rule, and in order to promote justice, the Court, having obtained jurisdiction of a controversy for one purpose, will extend its judicial cognizance over rights, interests, and causes of action which are purely legal in their nature, and will award remedies which could have been adequately bestowed by a Court of law. 29 All this could have been done before the Act of 1877; and since that act the rule herein stated has become one of the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court.

§ 37. The Chancery Court never Loses its Jurisdiction by Implication.—Exactly what effect our Constitution has, on the stability and jurisdiction of the Chancery Court, has not been determined. That this jurisdiction can be increased is certain; 30 but it is doubtful whether its equitable jurisdiction can be taken away, or even seriously impaired. The system of Equity jurisprudence is tacitly recognized by the Constitution as a part of the fundamental law of the land. Hence, all the stronger in Tennessee is the rule that a Court of Equity never loses its jurisdiction by implication. In all cases where the Court had, originally, jurisdiction because of some want of adequate remedy at law, that jurisdiction is not lost by the fact that the Courts of law now give a remedy. The jurisdiction of the Chancery Courts cannot be made thus to ebb and flow. Their jurisdiction must be permanent, and must remain fixed until changed by a new Constitution, or by the Legislature acting within the present Constitution. 31 The common law Judges cannot diminish the inherent jurisdiction of a Court of Equity by enlarging their own jurisdiction; and when the Legislature enlarges the jurisdiction of the common law Courts, the rule is well settled that, unless the statute shows a clear legislative intent to restrict, or abolish, the jurisdiction of the Chancery Courts, such jurisdiction will continue unabridged. 32 For, without some positive act, the just inference is that the Legislature desires the jurisdiction in Equity to remain upon its old foundations. 33

§ 38. Equity Delights to do Complete Justice, and Not by Halves.—This maxim has grown out of the desire of the Chancery Court to so completely decide every matter involved in the litigation that there will be no roots of controversy left out of which other suits may spring. 34 Hence, the Court requires that all persons interested, either legally or beneficially, in the subject-matter of the suit shall be made parties to it, either as complainants or as defendants, so that there may be a decree that will bind them all. By this means, the Court is enabled to make a complete decree between all the parties interested in the controversy, and thus not only to prevent future litigation by taking away the necessity of a multiplicity of suits, but to make it perfectly certain that no injustice has been done to any party interested in the subject-matter of the suit. 35 This, too, is one of the purposes of the Court in enforcing the maxim, He who seeks equity must do equity; for, by giving the defendant his rights in a cause, the Court not only does justice in full and not by halves, but the defendant is relieved from the necessity of instituting a suit in his own behalf. It is the constant and zealous aim of the Chancery Court to so frame its decrees as to adjust and compose all disputes as to all matters, legal and equitable, involved in the controversy. A Court of Equity will always do directly what can be done indirectly or circuitously, and will strive to prevent a multiplicity of suits.\textsuperscript{36}

Formerly the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court ended where that of the Circuit Court began, and, as a consequence, it was often unable to do complete justice; but after doing half justice, was obliged to remit the complainant to the Circuit Court for the other half. This was especially true:

1. On bills to remove a cloud, or recover land, the complainants after recovering the land in the Chancery Court, were obliged to go to the Circuit Court to collect the rents and profits.

2. On bills to enjoin a nuisance, the complainants, after having the nuisance enjoined, were remitted to the Circuit Court to recover their damages.

3. On bills for a new trial, the parties complaining, after proving their case in Chancery, were remitted to the Circuit Court, if plaintiffs there, in order to obtain a recovery.

4. On bills to set up lost deeds, notes of hand, or other contracts, the complainants, after having their lost instruments set up in Chancery were obliged to resort to the Circuit Court to have them enforced.

5. On bills to enjoin waste, after a perpetual injunction was had in Chancery, the complainants were remitted to the Circuit Court to get compensation for the waste committed.

6. On bills to reform instruments, after getting them reformed in Chancery, the complainants were obliged to go to the Circuit Court, to obtain damages for their breach, or recover what was due on them.

7. On bills to enjoin a defendant in the Circuit Court from making an inequitable defence, or to enjoin a plaintiff from asserting an inequitable claim, after obtaining such relief the suits in the Circuit Court were often left pending.

8. On bills to declare the defendant a usurper, the complainant was given the office, but remitted to further litigation to recover his fees.

In most of the above instances the Chancery Court now administers full justice, its hand being no longer stayed by the fear of trespassing on the domains of the law Courts;\textsuperscript{37} and the disposition of the Chancellors now is to disregard decisions and precedents absolute since the Act of 1877, and administer justice to the full extent of their jurisdiction, and no longer remit a party to the Circuit Court, or force him to institute a second suit, when all the questions involved in the litigation, or incidental to it, can be effectually determined in the suit pending in the Chancery Court;\textsuperscript{38} so that partial or half justice is now very seldom administered.\textsuperscript{39}

\section*{§ 39. He Who Seeks Equity Must Do Equity.}—Under the operation of this maxim, Courts of Chancery are enabled to adjust the equities of the complainant to the equities of the defendant, and thus do complete justice between the parties. Formerly, it was the practice of the Court to refuse relief to the complainant, unless the complainant would acknowledge, or concede, or provide for, the rights, claims and demands justly belonging to the defendant, and growing out of, or necessarily connected with, the subject-matter of the controversy. The ecclesiastical Chancellors sought to enforce in their Courts the divine injunction of doing unto others as we would have others do unto us, which is only another form of the maxim. But now, the Court of Chancery does not wait for the complainant to offer to do equity, but acts on the supposition that, knowing the rule of the Court, he is willing to do whatever equity towards the defendant the Court may require of him. (1). If a borrower of money upon usury seeks the aid of the Chancery Court to have cancelled the isurious contract, the Court will require him to do equity by paying the lender what is legally due him; (2), If a taxpayer seeks relief from an over-assessment, he must pay what is justly due; (3), If a party seeks to have a tax-deed declared a cloud, he must pay all the taxes paid by the holder of the deed; (4), If a person asks for partition, he must pay his proportion of any incumbrance removed by the defendant; 40 (5), If a husband seeks the aid of a Chancery Court to reduce his wife’s personal estate to possession, he will be required to do equity to the wife by allowing the Court to settle upon her, for the sole and separate use of herself and children, a reasonable portion of the proceeds of said estate; (6), If the owner of land allows another to make improvements thereon under the belief that he has the right, a Court of Chancery will compel such owner, seeking to assert his title, to pay for such improvements; 41 (7), Where a complainant seeks to have a certain fund decreed to him, he will be required, if insolvent, to pay the defendant what he owes him; 42 (8) Where a complainant has his deed declared a mortgage he must pay the consideration he received; (9), Where the complainant obtains the rescission of a contract, or the cancellation of an instrument he must make the defendant whole; (10), Where a married woman avoids a sale she must restore the consideration she received; (11), A mortgagor will not be allowed to redeem, without paying an incumbrance discharged by the mortgage; 43 (12), A judgment will not be enjoined, unless complainant pays what he owes the judgment creditor, 44 and, (13), In general, whenever a complainant seeks to recover property from which the defendant has removed an incumbrance, or to the value of which the defendant has added in good faith, relief will be granted the complainant only on condition that the defendant be reimbursed to the extent the complainant has been by him benefited.

It will thus be seen that, in giving the complainant relief, a Court of Chancery will require of him whatever the defendant may, in good reason and good conscience, be entitled to in reference to the subject-matter of the suit, although this requirement may be one the Court would not otherwise enforce. 45 The condition thus imposed on the complainant is, as it were, the price of the decree the Court gives him. Under this maxim, an equitable right may be secured to the defendant which could not be obtained by him in any other manner—which he could not have secured by a suit brought for that purpose. The equity the complainant is required to do must, however, be connected with the subject-matter of the suit, or grow out of the very controversy before the Court; and conditions must not be arbitrarily imposed. 46

The principle contained in this maxim enlarges the powers and jurisdiction of the Court when equities arise, in favor of the defendant, out of the subject-matter of the controversy; and hence, this might be termed a jurisdictional maxim. It, also, enables the Chancellor to determine the whole controversy in all branches, and, if necessary, to make a sort of equitable compromise decree, giving to each party what, in good reason and good conscience, he ought to have; and requiring of each what, in good reason and good conscience, he ought to do;—thus fulfilling that other maxim, Boni judicis est lites divimere, ne lis ex lите oriatur. (It is the duty of a good judge to so thoroughly decide a suit that another suit will not arise out of it.)

§ 40. Courts of Equity will not Tolerate any Interference with their Officers, Process or Decrees, by the Courts of Law.—This is an old and well-settled rule, and was adopted in the infancy of the Court of Chancery as a sort of law of self-preservation. For, if the Courts of common law could have had their way, they would have throttled the Chancery Court in its cradle. In those semi-barbarous times the beauties of Equity and Christian ethics were not appreciated; and the rude, stern, arbitrary code of the common law was deemed the perfection of reason, and no higher or better law was deemed possible, or desirable. It is manifest, that, from the necessity of the case, one Court cannot allow another Court to question its proceedings, to interfere with its process, to disturb its officers, or to thwart its decrees. All the authorities concur in considering it as settled law that a Court of Chancery will protect its own officers against any suit brought against them for acts done under its process.47 This rule applies to Receivers, Sequestrators, and all other officers acting under the orders of the Court; and any interference with them will be deemed a contempt of Court, and punished as such.48 Even a stranger to the suit, who has been dispossessed, must apply to the Court for redress, and cannot bring a forcible entry and detainer suit in another Court.49 A party wrongfully dispossessed should file a petition for a writ of restitution.50

Every Court must have an inherent power of enforcing its judgments and decrees; and surely to no tribunal can this power more properly belong than to the Chancery Court.51 And, in general, if any person suffers any injury, in consequence of any order, or proceeding, of the Chancery Court, or by reason of anything which has occurred in the execution of its process, he must apply to that Court for redress, and not to a Court of Law. If the matter complained of involves a question of jurisdiction, or of the validity or effect of its order or process, the Chancery Court will never allow such a question to be carried for decision to a Court of Law; but will, at its discretion, either itself give redress to the party aggrieved, or permit him to proceed at Law, as justice and convenience may require.52

43. Equity looks to the intent rather than to the form.

44. Equity imputes an intention to fulfill an obligation.

46. No person bound to act for another can act for himself.

47. Equity delights in equality.

48. Equity will undo what fraud has done.

49. Equity aids the vigilant, not those who sleep upon their rights.

50. So use your own as not to injure another.

§ 41. Maxims of Adjudication Generally Considered.—In the adjudication of the questions that arise in Equity it is seldom that any statute is determinative, and not always that any decision of our Supreme Court is applicable; and hence the Chancellor is forced to rely on the rules of practice and pleading, and on the maxims and principles of law and Equity, as his guides. These rules, maxims, and principles are generally so thoroughly incorporated into his judgment that he uses them unconsciously in making a decision. But, if his opinion is written and analyzed, it will often be discovered that these rules, maxims, and principles controlled the decision.

The principal maxims on which the Chancellor acts in adjudicating an equitable matter are the following, which might be designated as

1. Equity acts upon the person, (forcing him to do what conscience requires.)

2. Equity will not suffer a wrong without a remedy.

3. Equity imputes an intention to fulfill an obligation.

4. Equity acts specifically, and not by way of compensation.

5. Equity regards that as done which ought to be done.

6. Equity requires him who seeks equity to do equity.

7. Equity regards the beneficiary as the real owner.

8. Equity delights to do complete justice, and not by halves.

9. Equity acts for those disabled to act for themselves.

10. Equity looks to the intent rather than to the form.

11. Equity delights in equality.

12. Equity requires diligence, clean hands and good faith.

Some of these maxims have been considered in the preceding Article, being also, maxims of jurisdiction.

1 In analogy to the Twelve Tables of the Roman Law.
§ 42. He who Comes into Equity must Come with Clean Hands.—This maxim declares that a complainant, who has been guilty of unconscientious conduct or bad faith, or has committed any wrong, in reference to a particular transaction, cannot have the aid of a Court of Equity in enforcing any alleged rights growing out of such transaction. The Court of Chancery was regarded by the ecclesiastical Chancellors as a Temple into which none could come except those who had "clean hands and pure hearts." In the origin of the jurisprudence, the theory was adopted that a Court of Equity interposed only to enforce the requirements of good conscience and good reason, as to matters not equitably determinable in the Law Courts; and this interposition being deemed a matter of Grace, it would not be exercised in favor of a person, whose conduct, in the matter he had complained of, had been unconscientious, or in bad faith; or who had violated any of those principles of Equity and righteous dealing, which the Court had been constituted to enforce. But the operation of the maxim is confined to misconduct connected with the particular matter in litigation; and does not extend to any misconduct, however gross, which is unconnected therewith, and with which the defendant is not concerned.\(^2\) Under the operation of this maxim, the complainant must show that the transaction from which his claim arises is fair and just, that there is nothing unconscientious in his conduct relative thereto, and that the relief he seeks is equitable, and not harsh or oppressive upon the defendant. Hence, a specific performance will be refused when the complainant has obtained the agreement by sharp and unscrupulous practices, by over-reaching, by concealment of important facts, by taking undue advantage of his position, or by any unconscientious means; or, when the contract itself is unfair, one-sided, unconscionable, or affected by any other such inequitable circumstance; or, when the specific enforcement of the agreement would be oppressive upon the defendant, or would, in any other manner, work injustice.\(^3\) So, if a contract is affected with fraud, or has a fraudulent purpose, none of the parties to such fraud can have the assistance of the Court either to compel the execution of such contract, or to have it cancelled, or to have the property or interests, transferred thereunder, restored. Equity will leave such parties where they have placed themselves, and will refuse all affirmative aid to either of the fraudulent participants. It is on this principle that the door of a Court of Equity is always shut against a debtor when he seeks to recover back property he has conveyed to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors. Ex dolo malo non oritur actio. (No right of action arises out of a fraud.) Agreements and transfers, the consideration of which is based on a violation of chastity, or on compounding a felony, or on gambling, or on the commission of any crime, or on any breach of good morals, are all deemed illegal, and no participant therein can get any relief, in the Chancery Court, whether the relief sought is an enforcement of the agreement, or a rescission of it.\(^5\) In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis. (Where parties are equally in the wrong the condition of the defendant is the stronger.) But where the parties are not in pari delicto, and where public policy is promoted thereby, the more excusable of the two may be granted relief by the Court setting aside the agreement and restoring him to his original position. A Court of Chancery will not enforce an usurious contract even when the defence of usury is not made; but will relieve against usurious contracts; and will also restore money or property lost upon any game or wager.\(^6\)

\(^2\) There are several maxims akin to this: He who hath committed iniquity shall not have equity; Ex turpi causa non oritur actio. (No right of action arises out of an immoral transaction.) In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis. (Where both parties are equally in fault, the situation of defendant is the stronger.)

connected with the one that says, Equity regards that as done which in good conscience ought to have been done; for it is only by looking at the intent, rather than at the form, of a transaction that Equity can treat as done what ought to have been done. The two maxims act together and aid each other; and with the further help of the maxim, that Equity imputes an intention to fulfill an obligation, a Court of Chancery will not only hold a resulting trustee, or a constructive trustee, liable as such, but will impute to him an intention to act as such, regardless of the form of the transfer, or conveyance.

Equity heeds not forms, but strives to reach the substance of things; and to ascertain, uphold and enforce rights and duties which spring from the real relations and the actual transactions of the parties. Looking to the intent rather than to the form, whenever a penalty is designed merely to secure the payment of a given sum of money, or the performance of some act, Equity will relieve the obligor from the penalty, upon his paying the debt, or the actual damages, resulting from his default. So, if a lease has been forfeited for non-payment of rent, or for breach of some, but not all of the covenants contained in the lease, if the lessor can be adequately compensated for the breach of the contract, Equity will regard the forfeiture clause as merely a means of securing the observance of the contract, and a Court of Chancery will relieve from the forfeiture. So, looking at the intent rather than at the form of the contract, Equity will consider the forfeiture clauses in mortgages and trust deeds as merely means of enforcing the payment of the money contracted to be paid, and will relieve from forfeitures incurred, upon the payment of the debt. Equity will, also, upon parol evidence, convert an absolute deed into a mortgage; and will, in general, unless prohibited by some statute, set up and enforce the real contract of the parties, regardless of the form, or of the want of form; for Equity looks not at the outward form, but to the inward substance of every transaction, reurring to principles and disregarding ceremonies, looking upon forms as made for justice, and not justice made for forms. Where there is substance for the Court to act on, the want of form will be disregarded, for Equity regards substance and not ceremonies. This is true not only in adjudicating the equities of the parties, but is true in matters of pleading, also. Thus if the bill makes out a case for relief, any want of formality, or any misunderstanding of the bill, or any eccentricity of phraseology, will not defeat the complainant’s right to relief on the facts alleged and proved. So, if the necessary parties are before the Court, and a case for relief is alleged and proved, the fact that parties are made complainants who should have been made defendants, or vice versa, will not prevent the Court from decreeing according to the equities of the parties; and this is so even when persons under disability are to be affected by the decrees. The fact that the proper facts are alleged, and the proper parties are before the Court, is substance; the manner of alleging the facts and the position of the parties in the suit is ceremony.

No one is presumed to give something for nothing, and no one can in reason and conscience expect to receive something for nothing. Whenever a person parts with a consideration he is presumed to intend to acquire whatever that consideration pays for; and he who acquires the legal title to property for which another’s money has paid, is bound in reason and conscience to hold it subject to the orders of the person whose money went into it. Reduced to the last analysis, the property acquired by another’s money is only that money in an-

10 Bond v. Jackson, 3 Hay., 101. Equity looks beneath the veil of form, and discerns the real features of the transaction, acting on the maxim, Non quod dictum est, sed quod factum est, spectatur. Snell’s Pr. Eq., 41. Equity considers the real and the substantial, and allows no rule of evidence at law, no fiction of Courts of law, and no acts or subterfuges of parties, to tie its hands, or shackle its feet, or dim its sight, in searching for the real truth of the transaction under investigation. Courts of Equity act upon the circumstances and justice of the particular case, whereas Courts of law rather regard precedents, forms, rules of procedure and the strict letter of the law.
other form; and property conveyed without receiving another's money therefor, continues, in Equity, the property of the conveyor. Hence, it is the passing of a consideration and not the form of the contract that in Equity passes title, and whatever the form of the transaction, if no consideration passes, in Equity no title passes.

§ 44. Equity Imputes an Intention to Fulfil an Obligation.—A Court of Conscience will not hastily conclude that an unconscientious act has been done, if the conduct of the actor is susceptible of a more charitable construction. The Court will presume an innocent intention, if such presumption will not hazard the equitable rights of the complainant. This maxim, therefore, is a mere statement of the general presumption upon which a Court of Equity acts; and it means that, whenever a duty rests upon an individual, in the absence of all evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that he intended to do right rather than wrong; to act conscientiously rather than in bad faith; to perform his duty rather than to violate it. Thus, when a person covenants to do an act, and he afterwards does something which is capable of being considered either a total or a partial performance of that act, he will be presumed to have done it with the intention of performing his covenant, although no such intention was expressed. So, whenever a trustee, or other person in a fiduciary position, acting apparently within the scope of his powers (that is, having authority to do what he does do), purchases lands, or personal property, with trust funds, and takes the title to such property in his own name, without any declaration of a trust, a trust with respect to such property at once results in favor of the beneficiary of said funds, and the purchaser becomes with respect to such property, a trustee. A Court of Equity assumes that the purchaser intended to do his fiduciary duty, and not to violate it; and he will not be heard to dispute this assumption. All the evidence the Court needs to create the trust is the proof that the trust funds were actually used in the purchase.

This maxim is applied to trustees proper, to executors and administrators, to directors and managers of corporations, to guardians of infants or of persons of unsound mind, to agents using the money of their principals, to partners using partnership funds, to husbands purchasing property with the separate estate of their wives, and generally, to all persons who stand in fiduciary relations to others. And when it is shown that such persons have used money, by them so held in trust, in the purchase of any property, real or personal, taking the title in their own name, a Court of Chancery will impute to them an intention to fulfil their obligation, namely, to make the purchase for the benefit of the person entitled to the use of the consideration money; and they will be decreed to hold such property as trustees for the benefit of the parties whose funds were used in the purchase.

§ 45. Equity Regards that as Done which Ought to be Done.—In a Court of Chancery ought to be becomes is; and whatever a party ought to do, or ought to have done, in reference to the property of another, will, ordinarily, be regarded as done; and the rights of the parties will be adjudicated as though, in fact, it had been done. This maxim is far-reaching in its operation, and full of beneficent consequences; the doctrines and rules creating and defining equitable estates or interests being, in a great measure, derived from it.

As between the party by whom, and the party for whom, an act ought, in good conscience, to be done, or to have been done, Equity will consider it as done. For the purpose of reaching exact justice, Equity will frequently consider that property has assumed certain forms with which it ought, in justice, to be stamped,17 or that parties have performed certain duties which they, in justice, ought to fulfill; and will regulate the ownership of estates and interests accordingly.18 In such matters another maxim is sometimes invoked: Equity regards the substance, not the forms of things. Thus, (1) the vendor of land is regarded in Equity as the owner of the purchase-money, and the vendee is looked upon as the owner of the land; (2) the purchaser of a possible interest in land becomes the equitable owner of the interest; (3) the sale of a chattel not yet in existence, or not yet the property of the seller, becomes effective in Equity as soon as the thing comes into existence, or becomes the property of the seller; (4) the assignment of a thing in action gives the assignee all the rights of the assignor; and (5) in general, whenever a party, for a valuable consideration transfers, or contracts to transfer, any interest in any property, or in any rights of property, a Court of Chancery places the assignee, or vendee, in the shoes of the vendor as to all the interests and rights transferred, or agreed to be transferred.19 So, (1) when an agent invests his principal’s money in land, and takes title in his own name; or (2) a partner uses partnership funds to buy land in his own name; or (3) when a guardian uses his ward’s funds in the purchase of property in his own name; or (4) an executor, administrator, or any other trustee, uses trust money to buy property in his own name, in all such cases Equity will regard that as done which the purchaser ought to have done, that is, will regard the purchaser as holding the legal title for the benefit of the party who was entitled to the purchase money, and will decree accordingly. So, when a party acquires the legal title to property by fraud, he will be decreed to hold it as trustee for his vendor. And where an act is prevented from being done, by fraud, Equity will consider the act as done, in order to avoid the effects of the fraud.20 Thus, a widow prevented by fraud from dissenting to a will, in Equity will be given all the rights she would have acquired by a dissent in due time.21 And if a son pretend to destroy deeds to enable his father to devise the lands, but destroys only copies, Equity will treat the deeds as destroyed.22 Equity, treating that as done which ought to have been done, will consider land as redeemed when the redeemer has done all that was required of him, and the purchaser refuses to re-convey, or to take the redemption money. This maxim is nearly allied to another maxim, No one can take advantage of his own wrong. To prevent a party deriving advantage from his own wrong, Equity regards that as done which, in good reason and good conscience ought to have been done. Hence, agreements based on a valuable consideration are, in Equity, considered, in the interests of the person entitled to their performance, as performed, and performed at the time when, and in the manner in which, they ought to have been performed.23 And the same consequences attach to the agreement as though it had actually been performed, so that the party in default shall not benefit by his wrong, nor the other party suffer thereby.24

So where land is ordered to be sold by a will, it is considered as personalty; and where land devised by a will is afterwards contracted to be sold, it is deemed converted,25 and the devisee gets nothing but the naked legal title without any beneficial interest in the property.26 Money directed by a will to be invested in land is considered as land, and descends to the heirs of the original beneficiary, and not to his personal representatives; and, on the other hand, land directed by a will to be converted into money goes to the personal representatives of the original beneficiary, or is included in the general term ‘personal property.’27

But an administrator has no power to make a conversion; and if he does, the money put into land will be deemed personality, at the election of those entitled to the money. 28

In reference to agreements the maxim is sometimes stated thus: "What is agreed to be done is considered as done," 29 and sometimes thus, "Equity treats that as done which is agreed to be done upon sufficient considerations." 30 But it must be borne in mind that this maxim seeks no more than to enforce an equitable obligation. There must be a right on one side and a corresponding duty on the other side. Equity does not regard as done what might have been done, or what could have been done, but what ought, in good reason and good conscience, to have been done. Nor does this rule operate in favor of any one except him who has the equitable right to have the act performed, and those standing in his shoes; nor does it operate against any one except him upon whom the duty has devolved, and upon those who stand in his place. 31

§ 46. No Person Bound to Act for Another in any Matter can, as to that Matter, Act for Himself.—This, while not a maxim, is a fundamental doctrine of Equity, and one fruitful of many most beneficent consequences. 32 In the first place, whoever undertakes to act for another's benefit, impliedly contracts that in every matter affecting the other, he will do for him all that good reason and good conscience require. In order to avoid any possible contention, and to leave absolutely no room for casuistry, Courts of Equity lay it down as a rule, without exception, that no trustee shall in any case, or under any circumstances, directly or indirectly, acquire any personal interest or title in or to the trust property, or its proceeds, or make any personal profits out of the trust, or by means of his trust character, without the full consent of the beneficiary, given under circumstances that leave no room whatever to question the perfect fairness and good faith of the whole transaction. Even then, a Court of Equity acts hesitatingly in confirming such transactions; and when they are questioned, requires conclusive evidence of the fullest good faith on the part of the trustee, and the most thorough understanding of the facts, and the most absolute freedom of action, on the part of the beneficiary. When a relation of confidence is once shown, a Court of Chancery will presume that the dominion or influence arising therefrom was exercised. 33 Of course, if the beneficiary is a minor, or person of unsound mind, he is utterly incapable of giving any such consent.

This rule is potent of consequences in matters of implied trusts, and constructive frauds; and, under its operation, all trustees and quasi-trustees are kept in the strict line of their true and full duty; and when such duty is violated, Equity will, as far as possible, deal with them and their doings as though they were really intending to do their duty, and act for the beneficiary’s benefit; and will accordingly give the beneficiary all the benefits accruing to the trustee, or the quasi-trustee, by means of the transaction in question; will give the beneficiary the property or profits acquired, and will require the trustee, or quasi-trustee, to make good any loss caused by his conduct in the matter.

The reason of the rule, that a trustee can never act for himself in any trust matter, is the necessity of absolutely removing from him any temptation to violate his full duty, and the imminent peril of allowing him to occupy a situation wherein he may have occasion to doubt when he might, or might not, act for himself, and when he must, or may, act for the beneficiary or person confiding in him.\(^{34}\)

In the meaning of this section, and also, wherever used in this book, the general term "trustee" denotes and includes executors, administrators, Clerks of Courts, Receivers, Special Commissioners, Sheriffs, constables, and all guardians, officers and persons who give bonds for the faithful discharge of their duties, and all other persons on whom fiduciary or trust duties are conferred by any instrument of writing, or by any statute, ordinance or by-law, public, corporate or private; and the term "quasi-trustee" denotes and includes husband, wife, parent, person in a parental situation, attorney, guardian ad litem, next friend, partner, agent, business manager, clerk, steward, secretary, treasurer, book-keeper, auctioneer, consignee, bailee, physician, spiritual adviser, the promoters, president, directors and other officers or managers of a corporation or association, vendor, creditor, principal debtor in cases of suretyship, and, in general, all other persons who undertake, or assume, the character of confidential advisers, or managers of another's affairs, or who occupy a position or relation that enables them to greatly influence the action of those relying upon them, or who in any way acquire influence and abuse it, or possess another's confidence and betray it. The term trustee includes both trustees and quasi-trustees, and the term beneficiary denotes and includes every one who expressly or impliedly confides or trusts his property, business or affairs, to another, and every one for whose benefit an express or implied trust arises, or a constructive fraud can be declared.\(^{35}\)

\(\text{§ 47. Equity Delights in Equality.--This maxim is sometimes more strongly expressed thus: Equality is Equity.}\)\(^{36}\) The common law delighted in preferences; it was the law of a people fond of distinctions, distinctions in personal rank, in social positions, in forms of procedure, in evidences of debt, and in forms of actions. But the Chancery Court, early in its history, endeavored to break down these distinctions in so far as property was concerned. Joint obligations were made several; liens were apportioned; contribution was enforced among co-contractors, co-sureties and co-legatees; and the estates of debtors were divided ratably among their creditors. These changes in the common law, thus enforced originally in Equity, have long since, by statute or otherwise, become a part of the general law of the land.

In accordance with this equitable maxim, a Court of Chancery will divide a common fund equally between those entitled; and if the fund is not sufficient to pay all in full, a pro rata distribution will be ordered. So, when a common 34 A man cannot serve two masters at the same time, especially in case of conflicting trusts. Denning v. Todd, 7 Pick., 427. Quotid obsequiis servit dominus. (Whatever is acquired by the servant is acquired by the master.) Whatever profit a trustee makes out of trust property is the profit of the beneficiary. The parsimony of the talents well illustrates this rule of Equity. Matt., ch. 27, v. 20.

35 Our legal nomenclature is deficient in satisfactory terms to express the relations of a general trustee and a general correlative to such trustee. The term trustee, while a good one, has been largely appropriated to denote an express trustee, and the terms, beneficiary and cestui que trust, inadequately express the entire class of persons, for whose benefit implied trusts are created, and implied frauds constructed. Inasmuch, as in almost every variety of trust there is an express or implied relation of confidence, it is with reluctance and misgivings suggested that the word confidore appropriately and not inadequately denotes and includes every one who expressly or impliedly confides or trusts; and the word confidant equally as well denotes and includes every one in whom confidence or trust is express or impliedly reposed.

liability rests upon several persons in favor of a single claimant, as where several persons owe the same debt, a Court of Chancery will require each person, so liable, to discharge an equal proportion of the liability; or, if any one of them should pay more than his share, Equity will require the others to contribute enough to make good the excess.

Where an insolvent partnership, an insolvent corporation, or an insolvent estate, is wound up in Chancery, the Court always proceeds upon the principle that equality is equity, and apportions the assets pro rata among all the creditors, preferring none unless they have prior liens. The same rule prevails, when, in any case, any creditor files a bill, on behalf of all other creditors, to wind up the business of a debtor under a general assignment. So, where there is not enough money to pay all the legacies in full, Equity will make a pro rata deduction from each. And so it may be stated, in general terms, that whenever there is a common burden, it must be borne equally by all; and when there is a common benefit, it must be shared equally by all. Of course, this maxim will not prevent parties, by contract among themselves, changing the operation of this general rule.

§ 48. Equity will Undo What Fraud has Done.—Fraud, in the sight of a Court of Equity, vitiates every contract or transaction into which it enters, at the election of the injured party; and the Court will not only undo what fraud has done, but will treat acts as done which fraud prevented from being done.

All Courts require good faith in dealings between men, and reprobate bad faith. But as the Courts of common law respected forms and ceremonies, and would not look beneath a seal, nor behind a writing, nor beyond the verdict of a jury, nor allow a judgment to be questioned, fraud took advantage of these rules, and made forms, writings, seals, verdicts, and judgments its instrument-

§ 48. Equity will Undo What Fraud has Done.—Fraud, in the sight of a Court of Equity, vitiates every contract or transaction into which it enters, at the election of the injured party; and the Court will not only undo what fraud has done, but will treat acts as done which fraud prevented from being done.

All Courts require good faith in dealings between men, and reprobate bad faith. But as the Courts of common law respected forms and ceremonies, and would not look beneath a seal, nor behind a writing, nor beyond the verdict of a jury, nor allow a judgment to be questioned, fraud took advantage of these rules, and made forms, writings, seals, verdicts, and judgments its instrumentalities and agencies in effecting its nefarious schemes for the undoing of the weak, the inexperienced, the trusting and the needy. When, however, Equity established her Courts, she disregarded forms, discredited ceremonies, peered beneath the seal, looked behind writings, questioned the verdicts of juries, and did not hesitate to set aside the solemn judgments of Courts, when found to be unjust and procured by fraud. Courts of Equity set aside deeds or converted them into mortgages, set aside the verdicts of juries in Courts of law and awarded new trials, and forbade the enforcement of judgments, when good reason and good conscience required. Whatever fraud touched was declared to be vitiating, wherever fraud trod was declared unholy ground, and whatever fraud did was pronounced null and void. All the haunts of fraud were laid bare, all of its paths, however crooked, were sign-boarded, all of its subterfuges pointed out, all of its false coins branded, and all of its allies detected and marked with badges. Fraud has been so crippled and hedged about by the Chancery Court that its power to deceive and do evil has been much weakened, and the remedies for its rascalities much increased, but it has not yet gone out of business.

37 1 Pom. Eq. Jur., §§ 405-411. In Equity, no one gets the lion's share, unless he has superior rights, or prior liens.

38 Præca (fraud) was one of the names of Mercury, the god of speech, traffic and theft: and it is curious, if not instructive, to note how his history and offices, in ancient mythology, illustrate the appropriateness of this aëran. Mercury's first act was to cheat Apollo out of a herd of cattle by means of a lyre; he lull'd the hundred-eyed Argus to sleep, and then murdered him; he overcame Prometheus, the wise, and bound him to Mt. Caucasus; he invented astrology, was the go-between of gods and women; the gull was his favorite bird, and he was worshiped, and prayed to for luck, by thieves and schemers. His wand was gilt at the point, blue in the middle, and black at the handle, and so his victims first felt rich, then blue, then in black despair. He always wore a smile on his face, and curls in his hair; carried a purse in his hand, and was generally in a hurry. The metal, mercury, named for him, is very bright, but very elusive, hard to find, difficult to seize, impossible to hold; and is used by miners to gather gold, and by quacks to salivate their patients.

In the grand temple to Jupiter on the Capitoline Hill in ancient Rome, the statue of Fides stood on one side of Jupiter's and the statue of Victoria on the other, thus proclaiming that As physicians diagnose internal disease by certain external signs, so Courts of Chancery diagnose the existence of fraud by certain signs termed "badges of fraud," which are treated of elsewhere.\(^{40}\) In Courts of law it is a maxim that "Fraud is odious and not to be presumed,"\(^{41}\) by which is meant that before so detestable a crime can be imputed to anyone it must be proved. But Courts of Chancery, while considering fraud more odious than do Courts of law, they nevertheless in certain cases presume fraud; that is, certain states of fact are considered in Chancery incompatible with an honest purpose, and when proved or admitted, fraud is presumed.\(^{42}\) Courts of Chancery will, ordinarily impute fraud to a party on less evidence than is required in Courts of law;\(^{43}\) and they allow a much greater latitude of proof in the search for fraud, and a more minute examination of witnesses.\(^{44}\) And whatever the shapes and disguises fraud has invented in the refinements and diversities of commerce and the progress of civilization, the Courts of Equity have, always, been able to detect and expose it, to redress the wrong done by it, and to keep it odious, regardless of the rank or wealth of the perpetrator.\(^{45}\)

This maxim is designed to promote diligence on the part of suitors. Equity requires a party to assert his rights in a reasonable time after he discovers that he has been wronged. A person who delays suit, not only by his negligence makes the proof of his wrongs more difficult, but induces the other party to believe that he acquiesces in the situation. Besides, if Courts allow suits to be delayed, a party may wait until an adverse witness dies, or moves away, before he brings suit. A party in the wrong may be so misled by the non-action of the party wronged as do such acts, and otherwise so change his situation, that it would embarrass the Court in granting relief. He who seeks equity must keep himself in a condition to do equity; and if, by his own delay, he is disabled from doing equity he will be debarred from receiving equity. It is bad faith for a party wronged to delay suit until the wrong cannot be righted without doing another wrong. Good conscience requires a party to do no act that will mislead another to his detriment, even though that other may have done him wrong. Hence, it has been said that "nothing can call a Court of Chancery into activity but conscience, good faith and reasonable diligence."\(^{47}\)

In many cases, equitable relief depends upon the discretion of the Chancellor, and the laches of the complainant is often one of the most important of the elements taken into consideration when that discretion is exercised.\(^{48}\) This maxim is \(^{45}\) Frauds are viewed with great horror and indignation by Courts of Equity, as destructive of the harmony of human intercourse, and as constituting a sort of treason against society itself. The subtle character of these violations, the great difficulty in making the proof, the absolute necessity, oftentimes, for probing the conscience of the offender by searching interrogatories, the discerning intelligence required to ferret out the wrong and to detect fraud in its manifold and cunning disguises, the strong sense of equity necessary for the correction of secret acts of bad faith, and the inadequacy of the common law remedies to meet the manifest demands of justice, made it necessary for parties who had been defrauded to apply to a Court of Conscience in order to obtain complete redress; and to this fact the Chancery Court largely owes its existence and its jurisdiction; and the altars of this Court have always been the favorite refuge of parties seeking relief against those who have defrauded them. where there are no warranties of quality or title; and to those whose duty it is to take necessary steps to perfect their rights by giving notice of an assignment to them of a non-negotiable chose in action; or by having their instruments duly registered. Equity delights in diligence, and is slow to aid the slow.

It not only requires clean hands and a pure heart, but also swift feet. But if the defendant has caused the complainant to sleep he can not complain of it, for that would be to take advantage of his own wrong.

§ 50. So Use Your Own as Not to Injure Another.—While this is a law maxim it is often applied in Equity. The Chancery Court frequently enforces this maxim by enjoining the erection, or commission, of nuisances to the complainant on the land of the defendant; because, although a man may own the land, he has no right to so use it as to prevent his neighbors from enjoying their land. A man may be driven from his home by bad smells, noxious vapors, unbearable noises, shocking spectacles, and other intolerable nuisances upon his neighbor’s land, quite as effectually as though driven away by physical force. A man cannot so divert a stream on his own land as to turn water injurious upon a neighbor’s land; and he cannot dig so near the land of his neighbor as to cause the latter’s land to cave in, or so near as to endanger his neighbor’s wall; he cannot pollute a stream that flows through his neighbor’s land; nor can he so stop, or change, the current of a stream as to prevent its ordinary flow through the land of another.49

A creditor, having his choice of two funds, ought to exercise his right of election in such a manner as not to injure other creditors, who can resort to only one of these funds.50 And it may be laid down as a general rule, that no eone can so exercise a right as to impair the right of another, especially if the latter right is, of equal dignity in the sight of the law. The rights of life, liberty, property and the pursuit of happiness, must all be so used and exercised as not to impair or injure the equal enjoyment of these rights by another.

The Chancery Court will, on due application, enjoin the defendant from so using his property, or so exercising a right, as to injure the property or rights of the complainant.

§ 51. No one Can Take Advantage of His Own Wrong.51—In vain should he seek the aid of Equity who has violated equity.52 Such a person, in the sight of a Court of Chancery, has unclean hands. If a person could take advantage of his own wrong it would be a direct bribe to commit the wrong. This maxim applies where a trustee buys property in his own name with trust funds; where a trustee makes a profit by means of his trust; where any fiduciary obtains a good bargain by means of his position of confidence or influence; where a tenant or trespasser cuts down timber; where a party stands by and does not object to his own goods being sold as another’s; where the true owner allows a bona fide purchaser to make improvements; and where a defendant fraudulently conceals the cause of action from the complainant and then pleads the statute of limitation. Where a party, by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe in the existence of a certain state of facts, and induces him to act on that belief, the former is concluded by his words or conduct; as also is one who negligently allows another to contract on the faith and understanding of a fact which he can contradict. In brief, this maxim operates to estop all persons, whose words, acts or silence, have misled another to his injury.\textsuperscript{53}

\section*{§ 52. Where One of Two Persons must suffer Loss He should Suffer whose Act or Neglect Occasioned the Loss.}—The reason of this maxim consists in the fact that the equity of the one, whose act caused the loss, is less than the equity of the other party; for the latter is entirely without fault and wholly innocent.\textsuperscript{54} This maxim applies where a loss happens to a trust fund by the failure of a bank, or the misconduct of the trustee's agent or attorney, or the insolvency of the borrower. In such cases, the loss must be borne by the trustee, for he deposited the money in the bank, he chose the agent or attorney, and he loaned the money. The maxim applies, also, to cases where an agent has been given apparent authority to sell goods, or do any act, and, taking advantage of this apparent authority, sells the goods, or does the act, in fraud of the principal's rights, and misapplies the proceeds.\textsuperscript{55} In such cases the loss falls not on the party who deals with the agent, but on the principal.\textsuperscript{56} So, if a fraudulent vendee sell to an innocent purchaser before the vendor take steps to disaffirm the sale, such a sale will be good, because the act of the vendor enabled the vendee to make the sale.\textsuperscript{57} Where a party signs a forged note as surety, believing the principal's signature thereto genuine, and the payee parts with value for such note, the party so signing as surety must bear the loss.\textsuperscript{58} The intrinsic equity of this maxim is similar to that of the maxim, \textit{No one can take advantage of his own wrong}; and it applies to a party who stands by and allows his property to be sold as another's; to any person who, even innocently, misleads, or who innocently enables another to mislead, a third party to his detriment; and, in general to all cases of estoppel, and to all other cases where one has innocently acted on the faith of another's acts or words.

The maxim is often expressed thus: Where one of two persons must suffer loss by the acts or fraud of a third party, he who enabled that third party to occasion the loss, or to commit the fraud, ought to be the sufferer.\textsuperscript{59}

\section*{§ 53. Equity Follows the Law.}—Equity follows the law in the following particulars:\textsuperscript{60} (1) In adjudicating questions affecting legal estates, rights, interests or duties, Equity applies those rules of law the Circuit Courts would apply in like cases; (2) In adjudicating questions affecting equitable estates, rights, interests, or duties, Equity will follow the analogies of the law where any analogy clearly exists, especially the law in reference to the descent and distribution of estates, and the husband's right to his wife's chattels, but subject to her equity; (3) Where the Legislature has passed an act not expressly applicable to proceedings in Equity, nevertheless the Courts of Chancery will follow such statute, unless it contravenes some fundamentable equitable right or some equitable remedy; (4) Where the Courts of law and of Equity have concurrent jurisdiction, the statutes of limitations will be enforced in Chancery.\textsuperscript{61} Indeed, it may be generally said that a Court of Chancery in enforcing a legal right, or in applying a legal remedy, will follow the law when no fundamental rule of Equity is thereby violated. Were it otherwise, a man's legal rights, or legal duties or liabilities, might, to some extent, depend on the Court in which the suit was pending. This remark, however, must not be so construed as to intimate that, when a legal cause of action is pending in Chancery, the Court has not the power to apply the maxims and principles of Equity, and to enforce any equities that may exist in the case; and especially the power to compel the complainant to do equity.62

But this maxim must not be too broadly interpreted; for, as a rule, instead of Equity following the law, it widely departs from the law. Courts of Chancery follow the law as to the competency of witnesses, and the methods of obtaining testimony,63 but contravenes the rules of law as to the admissibility and force of evidence, especially in cases of fraud, and in cases where parole evidence is heard to explain, vary, contradict or nullify a written instrument, or to assail a judgment or decree.64

§ 54. Where there is Equal Equity the Law must Prevail.—If two persons have equal equitable claims as to the same subject-matter, and, as to their equitable interests therein, are equally entitled to the aid of the Court, but one of them has the legal estate to said subject-matter, then he will prevail.65 In equali jure melior est conditio possidentis et defendentis. (Where the right is equal the condition of the possessor and of the defendant is the better.)66 The equity is equal between persons who are equally innocent and have been equally diligent. It is upon this account that the Chancery Court constantly refuses to interfere, either for relief or discovery, against a bona fide purchaser of the legal estate for a valuable consideration without notice of the adverse title, if he avails himself of this defence at the proper time and in the proper mode. In such a case, the equities being equal, the legal title prevails.67

§ 55. Where there are Equal Equities, the First in Order of Time shall Prevail.—This maxim is generally given in its Latin form, Qui prior est tempore potior est jure. (He who is prior in time is superior in right.) The maxim is sometimes misunderstood and misapplied. Its true meaning is this: As between persons having equitable interests only, if their interests are in all other respects equal, priority in time gives superiority in right. And, in a contest between persons having only equitable interests, priority of time will give superiority of right, provided there is not other sufficient ground of preference between them.68 For, if the equities are equal, and one of the parties has, in addition, the legal title, then another maxim would apply: Where there is equal equity the law must prevail.69 In a Court of Chancery, in a conflict of equities, the party having the superior equity will prevail; and if the equities are equal, and neither party has the legal title, then priority prevails; and if no priority the defendant prevails.

Under the operation of this maxim, grantees and incumbrancers take and are ranked according to the dates of their securities. Parties claiming liens or having judgments, or attachments, or execution liens, or assignments, all hold in order of time, provided there is no other ground of preference.70 In a race of diligence between creditors having equal rights in law, or equal rights in Equity, he who is first in time becomes first in right,71 for Equity rewards according to diligence.

§ 56. To Protect and Enforce Rights to Property the Object of Suits in Chancery.—The term “property,” as used in this section, includes everything that is the subject of exclusive individual ownership; or, to be more specific, includes not only lands, houses, goods and chattels, rights and credits, but, also, a man’s person, and his wife and minor children, and his right to work, and to sell and acquire property, and engage in any lawful business, and his and their 62 Courts of Equity will not, in a case of purely legal cognizance, grant relief contrary to the settled maxims and principles of Equity jurisprudence; but will apply and enforce those maxims and principles even in cases where the rules of the Circuit Court are otherwise. reputation, health and capacity to labor, and his and their right to enjoy the senses of sight, smell, hearing and taste, and his and their right of speech and locomotion, and his and their right to enjoy their sense of moral propriety when normal.

As men live by their labor and property, no man is presumed to part with either without receiving or expecting an equivalent in value. Hence, whenever one person has obtained either the labor or property of another he should pay or account therefor, unless he can prove it was a gift; and so, whatever injury one person does to another’s property or capacity to labor should be made good.

To declare and define the rights of property, and regulate its tenure, possession, enjoyment and transfer, is the business of the Legislature; and to protect and enforce those rights, compel atonement for their violation, and conform the tenure, possession, enjoyment and transfer of property to the requirements of law and Equity, so that each person may have his own, and no person have what is another’s is the business of the Courts.

Questions involving partisan politics, denominational religion, ecclesiastical controversies, scientific theories, mere breaches of moral rectitude and violations of criminal law, are not within the domain of Equity Jurisprudence, and the Chancery Court has no jurisdiction of them, unless they involve rights of property, and then only as to such rights.

§ 57. Equity Regards the Beneficiary as the Real Owner.—In a Court of law in case of an express trust, the beneficiary is not recognized, and has no rights the trustee is bound to respect. On the face of the deed the legal title is in the trustee, and the Courts of law will look no further, and will hear no proof in behalf of the beneficiary. Indeed, if the beneficiary is in possession the trustee can eject him by suit in a Court of law. In short, in the eye of the law the beneficiary is not known.72

But in Equity, where the intent of the grantor and not the form of the grant prevails, the beneficiary is regarded as the real owner; and the trustee is considered as a mere manager of the trust property for the benefit of the beneficiary,73 and liable to the beneficiary for any and every breach of the trust. If the trustee fail to do his duty, the Chancery Court will remove him, on proper application.

And all this is true not only of trusts created by wills, deeds or other instruments in writing, but is also true of trusts created by law. Thus every administrator, executor, and guardian, and, to a less extent, every Court Clerk, Receiver, Sheriff, County Trustee or other public officer entrusted with the money of others, by the law, and especially where he has given bond to secure those entitled, is liable to be called by the beneficiaries to account in Chancery; and, in all such cases, the Court regards the beneficiary as the real owner of the property, although the legal title is in the officer having it in possession.

But while the Chancery Court regards the beneficiary as the real owner in order more fully to guard his interests and assert his rights, it, also, regards him the real owner as to his liabilities, and, except in cases where the trust is declared by a will or deed duly registered,74 will subject his interest in the trust property to the satisfaction of his debts, on a proper bill filed for that purpose, as hereafter shown. In dealing with the beneficiary’s interest in the trust property Equity follows the law, and treats such property as descen-dible, devisable and alienable.75

In all cases of trusts, including trust deeds, assignments for the benefit of creditors, and even constructive and resulting trusts, the Chancery Courts are ever ready to lend a helping hand to the beneficiary as against him who holds the legal title.

§ 58. Equity Enforces What Good Reason and Good Conscience Require.— Whatever good reason and good conscience require a party to do or refrain from, in a matter affecting another's property or rights, that a Court of Chancery requires of him, unless the other party has forfeited his right to relief by his negligence or participation in the wrong done. Conscience itself might make too refined or too unstable a standard for the determination of human conduct in the Courts; and reason of itself might give too wide a range for sharp practices in matters of trade, or other dealings. Indeed, conscience without reason might degenerate into fanaticism, or gross eccentricity; and, on the other hand, reason without conscience might become trickery, or even downright knavery.76 Hence, in the administration of justice, conscience must be conformed to reason and thus become good conscience, and reason must be conformed to conscience and thus become good reason; and whatever good conscience and good reason unite in approving is the nearest approach to perfect justice man is able to attain.77 This union of good reason and good conscience is what in a general way is meant by the term Equity in the administration of justice.

Whenever anyone is about to do, or has done, any act which in good reason and good conscience he ought not to do or have done, or is about to fail or has failed to do any act which in good reason and good conscience he ought to do, or have done, whereby another person is about to be or has been injured in his estate or rights, such person has the right to invoke the aid of the Courts to prevent the injury threatened, or obtain compensation for the wrong done; and if the Courts of law are inadequate to afford a sufficient remedy the Courts of Equity have inherent power to take full jurisdiction and administer complete relief.

All obligations enforceable in Chancery, arise from contracts express or implied, or are imposed by statute. Implied contracts are both general and special. 1. The general implied contract is the agreement every member of the community impliedly makes with every other member of the community that in every relation he may occupy as citizen, husband, father, confidant or bargainer, he will, in every transaction connected with such relation, do whatever good reason and good conscience require. 2. The special implied contract is that each person who has business relations with another will, in all matters of business, do all that good reason and good conscience require; and that every person having relations of trust or confidence with another, will, in reference to all matters connected therewith, do whatever good reason and good conscience require, and will refrain from doing whatever good reason and good conscience forbid. Each party to any matter of business has both the moral and legal right to expect and require the observance of this implied contract by the other party. This just expectation constitutes the foundation of all human intercourse, on it is built the superstructure of all business dealings, and Courts of Chancery will not allow it to be disappointed.

The implied contract surrounds every express contract, and fills all the interstices thereof. As the atmosphere pervades all spaces not occupied by other substances, so the implied contract pervades the whole world of legal rights and duties not occupied by express contracts; and under this all comprehensive implied contract, conclusively presumed by law, every person is held to act, in word and deed, and to it every person is bound to conform. This implied contract is, in substance, what in the Roman or civil law is called "bona fides," and it is the foundation of a large proportion of the adjudications in the Chancery Court.\footnote{78}

§ 59. \textit{Stare Decisis et Non Quieta Movere.}—(Adhere to the decisions, and do not unsettle questions put at rest.) It is more important to a people to have their laws known and fixed than to have them precisely just; for our conceptions of justice differ, but what is fixed is certain, and can be conformed to.\footnote{79} The decisions of our Courts are like sign-boards whereby we shape our course and keep on the road of safety. The law must run on straight lines, and cannot be crooked to suit supposed exceptions.\footnote{80} Fluctuations of judicial decisions have an effect similar to the shifting of the magnetic needle; no one is sure that he is travelling in the right direction, and no one can give safe counsel. Hence it is that Courts deem a decision which has become a rule of property as binding on them as a legislative enactment,\footnote{81} and this is so whether the decision was originally correct or not,\footnote{82} or whether it affects property, or a point of practice.\footnote{83} Laws are made for the greatest good of the greatest number, and must necessarily be general. It is better that the individual conform to the law than that the law conform to the individual; and it is better that a particular case of hardship be unredressed than that the law be violated, when the violation would occasion much mischief,\footnote{84} and especially would unsettle the foundations of property rights, and disturb the landmarks of the law.\footnote{85}

But the rule of \textit{stare decisis} is not so inflexible when the decision is recent, and has not given satisfaction.\footnote{86}

And what is true as to precedents about property is equally true as to precedents about pleadings, practice, proof, and procedure.\footnote{87} Courts abhor innovations in pleadings or procedure,\footnote{88} and "delight with measured step to tread the beaten path of precedent."\footnote{89} A Solicitor who departs from established precedents in pleadings, proofs and procedure violates his duty both to his clients and to the Court: he needlessly endangers the success of the former, and perplexes the mind of the latter. Such innovations are mischievous and should not be tolerated.

\footnote{78}{The propositions laid down in the text in regard to implied contracts are fully sustained by the best law writers. Blackstone says, "The modern practice of law is such an art as has been created by the practice and usage, and which therefore the law presumes every man undertakes to perform, and upon this presumption, much, if not all, which relates to such persons as suffer by his non-performance." Vol. 3, 158. See 1 Spence Eq. Jur., 411. Parsons, in his great work on Contracts, says, "The law of contracts in its widest extent, may be regarded as including nearly all the law which regulates the relations of the human life: * * * for out of contracts, express or implied, declared or understood, grow all rights, all duties, all obligations, all law." 1 Persons Cont. 3. § 60. No One Should be Condemned without a Chance to be Heard. — This is a fundamental maxim of Equity jurisdiction, and has always been sacredly observed. Indeed, it is a principle founded in natural justice, and of universal application, that no man can be proceeded against in Court without notice. The inherent love of fair play contained in the maxim, Audi alteram partem; has always and everywhere been recognized by all Judges and Courts; and the practice of all tribunals is to render judgment against no one without giving him a chance to be heard in his own behalf. The law delights in giving to every man a day in Court to make his defence. Were the law otherwise no right would be certain, no property safe, no possession secure; fraud would revel in triumph, and trickery be supreme over good faith. No principle of the common law is more sacred than that no man shall be deprived of his property by the judgment of a Court without personal notice that he has been impleaded therein.

Where the defendant cannot be personally notified of the suit against him, but has property within the jurisdiction of the Court, the law deems it not just that he should enjoy his property, or its proceeds, free from the just claims of his creditors, and so the Court will substitute a seizure of his property, and a notice to him printed in a local newspaper that he has been sued, in place of direct personal notice of the suit. But even in such a case, so anxious are the Courts to do everything in their power to give the defendant actual notice of the suit against him that they require his property to be actually attached, and due publication thereof to be made, before they will dispense with the service of a subpoena upon him. In such a case the attachment of his property and the published notice are substituted for an attachment of his person in the cause, or at least substituted for actual notice by service of a subpoena.

The notification to the defendant that he has been sued, made by service of subpoena, or by attachment of his property, and publication, or, in some specific cases, by publication without attachment, is essential to the jurisdiction of the Court over his person, and if the Court has no jurisdiction over his person, actual or constructive, it has no power to render any decree against him in personam, nor against his property, even when the property is within its jurisdiction; but any such decree will be absolutely void.

90 Nemo inauditus nec summonitus condemnare debet si non sit contumax. (No one ought to be condemned unheard and unsummoned, if he be not contumacious.) If the defendant evade or attempt to evade the service of the subpoena, the officer shall leave a copy at the usual residence of the defendant, which shall be a sufficient service. Code, § 4546. The defendant will not be allowed to take advantage of his own contumacy.

93 Gasquet & Co. v. Scott, 9 Yerg., 244. This great principle, which has always been considered so important to the safety of the citizen, has been violated in but few instances, and in those only where the evils resulting from requiring the notice would more than counterbalance those arising from proceeding without it, as in cases of attachments of property, motions against public officers of the State, and of sureties against their principals; and such violations are watched with great jealousy, and the statutes authorizing them are strictly construed. Ibid.
94 A man's property is, in a sense, a part of himself, and when his property is seized by another he is presumed to know it, the property being in the possession of himself or agent, and the knowledge of the agent being considered the knowledge of the principal. See post, § 65, sub-sec. 2.

ARTICLE III.

MAXIMS APPLICABLE TO THE COURT, AND TO ITS PRACTICE AND PLEADINGS.

§ 61. Maxims Applicable to the Court, and its Orders.

§ 62. Maxims Applicable to the Practice of the Court.

§ 61. Maxims Applicable to the Court, and its Orders.—The following are some of the maxims applicable to the Court, and its orders:

1. Actus Curiae neminem gravabit. (An act of the Court injures no one.) Whenever the Court makes some order, or does some act, on its own motion, during the progress of a cause, such order or act will not be allowed to work an injury to any of the parties. Where a decree has been delayed by the act of the Court, it will, if necessary to justice, be entered nunc pro tunc.

2. Actus judicis coram non judice irritus habetur. (A judicial act outside of the Judge’s authority is null and void.)

3. Consensus facit legem. (Consent makes law.) Whatever the parties agree to, during the progress of a suit, is binding upon the Court, if (1) the parties consenting are under no disability, and if (2) the consent is in violation of no law. Every person sui juris can do what he pleases with his own, so long as he violates no law and injures no one else. The agreements of parties during the progress of a suit are favored, and the Court cannot go behind them, or revise them, or disregard them, or set them aside, except for fraud, accident or mistake. Where parties consent, they bind the Court; where they do not, or cannot consent, the Court binds them. Conventio vinetur legem.1

4. Cursus Curiae est lex Curiae. (The practice of the Court is the law of the Court.) Rules of procedure are indispensable to the orderly administration of justice, and all Courts have such rules, and require strict obedience to them. They are a part of the means whereby the law is enforced. Law would be of no value if there were no means of enforcing it. Another maxim is, Quando aliquid mandatur, mandatur et omne per quod pervenit ad illud.2 (When anything is commanded, every means of accomplishing it is also commanded.) So when Courts were created, by necessary implication, power was given them to make such rules of practice as are necessary to enable them to apply and administer the law. These rules when established have all the force and effect of law, as well upon the Courts themselves, as upon their officers and litigants, until duly changed on due notice.

5. Fieri non debet, factum valet. (What ought not to have been done is valid when done.) Thus, a decree that is erroneous is, unless duly reversed by the Supreme Court, as binding on the parties as though in strict accordance with the law and the facts. So, an injunction that should not have been granted must be obeyed as implicitly as though fully warranted by the facts. All irregular procedures are valid, unless the irregularities are duly questioned and corrected. In brief, every judicial act is binding so long as it is not appealed

1 The agreement of the parties is stronger than the law; that is, the law cannot violate or loosen the agreement, if it be a lawful one. Courts are established to enforce contracts, not to make them. It is not even in the power of the Legislature to violate, or set aside, a contract. The involvability of contracts is required by the Constitution of the United States. Art. I, sec. 10; and the Constitution of the State.

2 Or, as it is otherwise expressed, Quo jurisdictio data est, en quaque concessa esse videntur sine quibus jurisdictio expiratur nos potest. (When jurisdiction is given, those things, also, are deemed to be given which are necessary to the exercise of that jurisdiction).
from, or reversed by writ of error, however irregular or full of errors the act may be. But a judgment or decree that is void binds no one, benefits no one, and protects no one: void things are no things.

6. Omnia prasumuntur rite et solenniter esse acta. (All things are presumed to be rightly and regularly done.) The Courts presume that whatever is done by a Court, or by an officer of the law, is properly done. Whatever is done by the Legislature is presumed to have been correctly done. The Courts presume that when a Court of general jurisdiction pronounces a decree that every necessary step preliminary thereto was duly taken. All presumptions are in favor of the regularity of the proceedings of all sworn officials.

7. Qui jus su judicis aliquod fecerit non videtur dolo malo fecisse, quia parere necesse est. (He who does anything by command of the Judge will not be deemed to have acted from an improper motive, because it was necessary for him to obey.) This rule protects a Clerk who pays out money, or does any other act, by order of the Court; it protects the Sheriff in the proper execution of the orders, decrees and process of the Court; and protects Receivers, SpecialCommissioners and others, who do any act in pursuance of an order or decree of a Court. The party dissatisfied with any such order or decree must take the proper steps to have it suspended, corrected or reversed.

1. De non apparentibus et non existentibus cadae est ratio. (What does not appear in the record, and what does not exist in fact, are one and the same in law.) Courts can act upon nothing that does not duly appear in the record. Courts of law may hear and determine, but Courts of Chancery must see and determine: they cannot take cognizance of oral statements unless and until reduced to writing in due form and made part of the record. The Chancellor cannot regard his personal knowledge of men, character or facts, for these are not in the record: non referat quid notum sit judicii, si notum non sit in forma judicii. This maxim is sometimes more tersely expressed thus: Quod non apparat non est. (What does not appear [in the record] does not exist [so far as the suit is concerned].)

2. In judicio non creditur nisi juratis. (In a judicial proceeding, nothing is believed unless proved upon oath.) This is one reason why the Chancellor, the Clerk and Master, the Solicitors and the Sheriff are all sworn. No witness can be heard unless sworn, or unless his oath is expressly waived. Statements of fact made in Court by parties, or on behalf of parties, will not be heeded unless sworn to, or agreed to by the opposite side. The Court cannot credit anything not verified by the oath of the proponent, and this is the reason why affidavits are required in support of motions.

3. Melior est conditio defendentis. (The situation of defendant is preferable to that of complainant.) The reason of this rule is that the burden of proof usually rests upon the complainant; and, ordinarily, the defendant need make no proof until the complainant has made out a prima facie case. The complainant must satisfy the Court that he has a right to the thing in dispute; and, until he does so, the defendant can keep his arms folded, and his mouth closed. So, where each party is equally at fault, the Court will not aid either, as a rule, for in pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis. Both the defendant and the possessor may stand still until the complainant has proved a right. Melior est conditio possidentis, et rei quam actoris.

4. Omnis innovatio plus nocit perturbat quam utilitate protest. (Every to see, and no ears to hear, and no mind to consider, anything not in the record of the case. Judicis est judicare secundum allegata et probata.

3 See post, §§ 451, 1141, sub-sec. 10. It matters not what is known to the Judge, if it be not known to him judicially. The Judge, as a _non_, may know facts pertinent to the case which do not appear of record, but he can no more consider such facts than can a juror under like circumstances. The Judge has no eyes innovation disturbs more by its novelty than benefits by its utility.) This is especially true in matters of pleading and practice. Solicitors, from inexperience or carelessness, are constantly departing from the proper form of pleadings, orders and decrees; and are constantly making innovations on the regular practice of the Courts. Starc decisis et non movere quieta. This maxim applies as well to questions of pleading and practice as to property rights.

5. Qui facit per alien facit per se. (He who does any thing by another, does it himself.) The act of the agent is the act of the principal; and among partners each one is the agent of all the others. If the principal, or master, ratifies an act of his agent or servant, the effect is the same as though such act was expressly authorized before it was done; for omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur, et mandato equiparatur. Delegated power, however, cannot be delegated. Representation in Courts is indispensable, and litigants will be as fully bound by the acts of their Solicitors as though such acts had been done by themselves in person. When the Court is once satisfied that a Solicitor is authorized to appear, it will not question his authority to bind his client in any way, or by any act, or agreement, in the progress of the cause. And as Solicitors are sworn well and truly to demean themselves in Court, the Court will presume they have authority to appear when the opposite side, or the client himself, does not dispute that authority.

6. Quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto. (Any one can waive a law made for his benefit.) No one is obliged to act on, or make use of, all the rights he is entitled to: he may waive any of them. And the failure to exercise a right in due season will generally be deemed a waiver; and if, in consequence of a seeming waiver, the opposite party has taken a legitimate step, the party making the waiver will be concluded and estopped from recalling his waiver. This rule is strictly enforced in practice.

7. Qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus. (He who enjoys the benefit ought also to bear the burden.) This rule is enforced by requiring the party who obtains a benefit in a judicial proceeding, to pay a part, or all, of the costs, when they cannot be otherwise made.

8. Ubi lex aliquem cogit ostendere causam, necesse est quod causa sit justa et legitima. (Where the law requires any one to show cause the cause must be just and legal.) In Court a party is frequently required to show cause: (1) Why he did so and so; or, (2) why he did not do so and so; or, (3) why he should be allowed to do so and so; or (4) why the other party should not be allowed to do so and so. It may be stated generally that what is meant by "showing cause" is showing good cause, that is, showing a good, legal, substantial and meritorious reason or reasons, justifications, or excuses, for the action in question. The law despises trifles and quibbles, and when the law or the Court requires a party to "show cause," such party must, in good faith, make such a showing as to demonstrate that justice is clearly on his side. If he is showing cause to be relieved, or to shield himself, he must make it clearly appear that he has been guilty of no inexcusable laches or negligence, and of no acts of bad faith or disregard of duty, and that he has a meritorious claim or defense. In a word he must show good cause. If he is showing cause to obtain the right to do an affirmative act which should have been done or applied for in due season, he must likewise show good reason or excuse for his delay, and show that he acted... as soon as he had knowledge and an opportunity. Good faith, diligence and merits must be shown by every party who comes into the Chancery Court for relief. A party applying for leave to do something in Court which should have been done before, must show not only a good excuse for his failure to act in season, but must set forth such merits as will show that he has the right on his side, and these merits must be shown not by general allegations but by specific facts.

A party required to show cause is ordinarily a supplicant for the mercy of the Court, and he should realize his extremity and conform to every requirement of the law, the practice and good reason; and this “cause,” or “good cause,” should be shown (1), in due season, which means at the first opportunity after its necessity became known; (2) in due form, that is in the manner required by the practice of the Court; and (3) by due particularity, that is by a full disclosure of all the facts and circumstances bearing on the matter in question. And the writing setting forth this good cause thus shown should be verified by the oath of the party, or of his Solicitor when the facts are in the latter’s personal knowledge, but not otherwise.

The most usual cases where a party is required to show good cause are: (1) for not answering in season; (2) for leave to withdraw an answer and demur or plead; (3) for not amending his bill in season, or not sooner applying so to do; (4) for setting aside a pro confessa; (5) for amendment to answer; (6) for leave to re-examine a witness; (7) for a continuance; (8) for recommitment of a Master’s report; (9) for setting aside a sale; (10) for leave to file an amended or supplemental or cross bill; (11) for extension of time to take proof; and (12) for doing or having done any act in Court out of course, or for undoing any act in Court that was done in course.

§ 63. Maxims Applicable to Pleadings.—The following maxims apply to pleadings, and their interpretation:

1. Allegans contraria non est audiendus. (He who makes assertions that are contrary to each other will not be heard.) This maxim applies both to pleadings and proof. A bill or answer containing contradictory statements becomes a nullity as to such statements; nor will the Court allow a pleading to be amended, when the amendment is contradictory or repugnant to the pleading. So, testimony that is contradictory destroys itself, and a witness who contradicts himself is not to be heard.

2. Allegari non debuit quod probatum non relevat. (That ought not to be alleged which, if proved, would not be relevant.) No useless allegations should be made, and no surplusage inserted, in pleadings. Poetry, rhetoric, sarcasm, pathos—all are alike irrelevant and impertinent, and will be stricken out on motion.

3. Benigne facienda sunt interpretationes chartarum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat. (Written instruments should be liberally construed so that they may stand rather than fall.) This is our rule in dealing with bills, the Court making every reasonable presumption in their favor, when assailed by a demurrer, or a motion to dismiss. The English rule is the reverse, following the maxim, ambiguum placitum interpretari debet contra proferentem. In Tennessee, a liberal interpretation is given to all writings, the purpose of the Court being to ascertain, and give effect to, the intention of the makers of the instrument. The intention is the substance, the words are but the shadow;

14 See post, §§ 235; 511; 960-961. General allegations in such cases are mere vox et proferent nihil. Montgomery v. Owell 1 Tenn. Ch., 172.
15 Cheatham v. Pearce & Rynn, 5 Pick., 698.
16 If you have merits, and the inclination of the Chancellor is against you, make your presentation so clear, strong and equitable that he will be obliged to yield; if his inclination is favorable, give him good grounds to grant your application.
18 An ambiguous pleading ought to be interpreted against the party pleading it. This maxim is properly applied in England, where all solicitors are thoroughly trained and skilled; but in Tennessee, where solicitors are admitted to practice without thorough preparation, a liberal interpretation of pleadings, and other legal instruments, is necessary and equitable. See Quinn v. Leake, 1 Tenn. Ch. 71.
and so the intention is the only infallible touchstone for the interpretation of contracts.\footnote{Officer v. Sims, 2 Heisk., 506.} In construing wills, the intention of the testator is the solar star by which the Court should be guided. \textit{Animus hominis est anima scripti},\footnote{The following are some of the principal Maxims of Interpretation: (Accorded in the exposition which destroys the text.)}

1. \textit{Maior sita expostit qua corripit testamen.}
2. \textit{Ex antecedentibus et consequentibus fit optima interpretation.}
3. \textit{Qui habet in utero habet in orce.} (He who sticks to the letter sticks to the bark).
4. \textit{Nimia subtletas in utere proibatur.} (Too much subtlety is reproved in law).

6. \textit{Nihil facit erro nomina cum de corpore vel persona constat.} An error in the name amounts to nothing when there is certainty as to the thing or person.)

5. \textit{Verba inae sunt intelligenda ut res magis easque quam perent.} (Words should be so interpreted that the subject-matter may be preserved rather than destroyed).
6. \textit{Verba relata sine vidente.} (Words referred to are considered as inserted).
7. A meaning should be drawn out of the words and not forced into the words.
8. The intention of the party is the life of the instrument.
9. That interpretation, which is born of the bowels of the case, is, in law, the fittest and most powerful.
10. It is a guess, not an interpretation, which disregards the words of an instrument.

local in their nature.) Suits to recover debts, and suits based on contracts, are called transitory actions, and may be brought wherever the debtor is found.

8. De fide et officio judicis non recipitur quasstio: sed de scientia, sive error sit juris aut facti. (The good faith and office of a Judge cannot be called in question, but his knowledge of the law, or facts of the case, may be.)

9. De minimis non curat lex. (The law pays no attention to trifles.) Very small errors are always ignored.

10. Dies dominicus non dies juridicus. (The Lord’s day is not the Court’s day).

11. Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. (No suit can be brought upon a contract without a supporting consideration.)

12. Ex dolo malo non oritur actio. (No suit can be brought to enforce a fraud.) A complainant must have clean hands.

13. Ex pacto illicito non oritur actio. (No suit can be brought to enforce a contract in violation of law.)

14. Ex facto jus oritur. (The law arises out of the transaction.) The law is the shadow which the facts cast.

15. Expressio unius personae vel rei est exclusio alterius. (The express mention of one person or thing in a written instrument is equivalent to the express exclusion of all other persons or things.) Thus, a deed to A is a deed to him alone, and to no other person; and a devise to B in effect excludes all others.

16. Frusta probatur quod probatum non relevat. (It is useless to prove anything which, when proved, would be immaterial.)

17. Hares est eadem persona cum antecessore. (The heir and his ancestor are one and the same person.) That is, one in right, the heir succeeding to the rights of his ancestor; just as the king never dies.

18. Ignorantia facti excusat; ignorantia juris non excusat. (Ignorance of the fact excuses, but ignorance of the law does not excuse.) Ignorance of the law does not excuse in criminal cases, but may excuse in civil cases.

19. In consimili casu, consimile debet esse remedium. (In similar cases the remedy should be similar.)

20. In equali jure melior est conditio possidentis. (Where the rights of the parties are equal, the claim of the party in possession is preferred.) If neither party has any title to the property, real or personal, in dispute, the Court will refuse to disturb the possession of the defendant. Possession is a sufficient defence against every one except him who has the legal right to the possession. Possession is a sort of inchoate title, and may ripen into a perfect title, if continued.

21. In jure, non remota causa, sed proxima spectatur. (In law, the proximate and not the remote cause is to be considered.)

22. Judicis est judicare secundum allegata et probata. (It is the duty of a Judge to decide according to the allegations of the pleadings and the pertinent proof.) A decree that is not supported by the pleadings is void; a decree not supported by the evidence is voidable, on appeal or writ of error.

23. Lex non cogit ad impossibilia. (The law does not require any one to do what cannot be done.)

24. Melior est conditio possidentis ubi neuter jus habet. (The situation of the person in possession is better than that of the claimant, where neither has any title to the property.)

25. Necessitas, quod cogit, defendit. (The necessity is a defence to what necessity compels one to do.) As when houses are blown up to stay a conflagration.

26. Nemo cogit tur rem suam vendere, etiam justa pretio. (No one can be forced to sell his own property even for a fair price.) But it may be taken for a public purpose on just compensation being paid therefor.

25 A judgment rendered on Sunday is void. Styles v. Harrison, 15 Pick., 128.
27. Noctitur a sociis. (It is known by its associates.) Writing may be deciphered by using known letters or words in the same writing as guides. So, the meaning of doubtful words may be made plain by the context. Ex antecedentibus et consequentibus fit optima interpretatio. (The best interpretation is obtained by considering what goes before and what follows.)

28. Nulla impossibilita aut inhonesta sunt prassumenda; vera autem et honesta et possibilia. (What is improbable or dishonest is never to be presumed: on the contrary, the law presumes in favor of truth, honesty and probability.)

29. Omne majus continet in se minus. (The greater always includes the less.) An authority to do a greater thing will authorize the doing of a less thing.

30. Principia probant non probantur. (Maxims have an inherent probative force, and need not to be proved.)

31. Ratio legis est anima legis. (The reason for the law is the soul of the law.) The reason for the law being known, its interpretation is known.

32. Res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet. (No one ought to suffer because of what others have said or done.)

33. Res per pecuniam estimatur. (The value of anything is estimated according to its worth in money.)

34. Res perit suo domino. (When property perishes the loss falls upon its owner.) When property dies, is burned, or otherwise destroyed or impaired, during litigation, without any one being to blame therefor, the owner of the property must bear the loss.26

35. Sallus populi est suprema lex. (The welfare of the people is the supreme law.) The rights of the individual must be subordinated to the public good.

36. Sublato fundamento cadit opus. (When the foundation is removed the superstructure falls.)

37. Sublato principali, tollitur adjunctum. (When the principal is removed its adjuncts are, also, removed.) The accessory follows the principal; and what is incident to a thing goes with it.

38. Superflua non nocent. (What is superfluous works no injury.) Surplusage does not vitiate.

39. Supressio veri suggestio falsi. (The suppression of a truth is equivalent to the suggestion of a falsehood.)

40. Tantum bonum valent quantum possunt. (Property is worth only what it can be sold for.)

41. Ubi cadem ratio ibi idem lex; et de similibus idem est judicium. (Where the reason is the same, the law is the same; and where the facts are alike, the decree of the Court will be the same.)

42. Volenti non fit injuria. (He who consents to what is done cannot complain of it.) No right of action accrues to a person who agreed to what was done, even though it injured him.

43. Verba relata inesse videntur. (Words referred to are considered as inserted.) When a deed, pleading, or any written instrument refers to another writing, the latter is deemed incorporated in the former.27

26 Top. v. White, 12 Heisk., 191; Lewis v. Woodfolk, 2 Bax. 46; Planters’ Bank v. Van- dyck, 4 Heisk., 617.

27 The maxims contained in this book are the most valuable, and those oftener quoted. No man can ever become an accomplished lawyer unless he fully masters the leading maxims of his profession. It is well to have them systematically arranged, so that he can readily turn to them in time of need and use them to advantage in their different applications. These maxims are intended to give the lawyer who uses them the power of thinking for himself, and of independent judgment; they are intended to give him a basis for his inquiries; they are intended to make his practice the more useful and the more respectable; they are intended to help him to form plans and to conduct cases with less expenditure of time and thought; and they are intended to prevent his being carried away by the first appearance of an argument, or by the first impression of a case. NOTICE, LIS PENDENS, ESTOPPEL, ACQUIESCENCE, NEGLIGENCE AND LACHES.

§ 65. Notice, and its Effects.

§ 67. Estoppels, and Their Effects.

§ 65. Notice, and Its Effects.—No one can transfer to another a greater right to a thing than he himself possesses; and no one can, in reason and conscience, expect to acquire a greater right than the vendor could rightfully sell. He who buys with notice of another’s rights is bound in good conscience to hold what he buys, subject to those rights, for otherwise he would be taking advantage of his own wrong, and would be enriching himself at another’s expense, neither of which acts is permitted by a Court of Conscience. But the Court, imputing to the purchaser an intention to do the honest thing, will presume that he made the purchase with the intention of holding the property in subordination to those rights of which he had notice at the time of his purchase. To presume otherwise would be to presume the purchaser was acting in bad faith, and was intending to perpetrate a fraud on the person of whose rights he had notice.

Besides, a purchaser with notice has no right to complain when the third person, of whose claims he had notice, demands his own; for the purchaser was

1 The following are some of the principal Maxims Relative to Transfers of Property:

1. Alienatio est omnis actus per quem dominium transfertur. (Alienation includes every act by which the right to property is transferred.)
2. Assignotus utitur jure auctoris. (The assignee is entitled to the rights of the assignor.)
3. Cavet emaptor: qui ignoraret non debuit quod jus eilium emit. (Let the purchaser beware: who buys what is another’s is bound to know what he is buying.) This maxim applies to Court sales. See post, §§ 640–641, notes.
4. Cuiunque aliquis quisque concedere velit et il sine quo res ipsa esse non potuit. (Whoever transfers anything to another is deemed to transfer that without which the transfer would be void.)
5. Dominium non potest esse pendens. (The title to property cannot be in pendency.) The title may be in dispute, but it nevertheless rests in him who is adjudged to be the owner.
6. Duo non possunt in solido esse norm possidere. (Two persons cannot exclusively own the same thing.)
7. Nemo potest plus juribus et aliquam transferre quam ipsa habeat. (No one can transfer to another a greater right than he himself has.)
8. Pendente lite nihil immovetur. (While a suit is pending no change can be made in the ownership of the property in litigation so as to affect the rights of the parties to the suit.)
9. Quis sentit commodum securit debet et omnis. (He who takes the benefit must take it with its burden.) A partner who shares in the profits must share in the losses; and he who takes title to property must take it with its encumbrances.
10. Quis in jus dominiumque alterius sucedat jure ejus uti debet. (He who takes the place of another as to any right or property holds it subject to all the rights of the assignor.)
11. Quod meum est, sine facto meo vel defectu meo, omittire vel in alium transferre non potest. (What is mine cannot be lost to me or transferred to another, without my deed or default.)
12. Res accessoria sequitur rei principali. (Whatever belongs to a thing goes with it.) Or, as our lawyers sometimes translate it, the tail goes with the hide.
13. Transit terra eum onere. (He who buys land takes it subject to all liens and encumbrances resting upon it.)
14. Ubi aliquis concedit, concederet et il sine quo res ipsa non potest. (When anything is granted that also is granted without which the grant itself cannot be made effectual.)
15. Notice of the prior right cuts up by the roots any claim of the subsequent purchaser.

2 See Maxim, Equity imputes an intention to fulfill an obligation; § 44, ante.
under no compulsion to buy, and if he paid more than the vendor’s interest in the property was worth, or if the third person’s claims prove greater than he supposed when he bought, he deliberately assumed these risks, and cannot, in reason and conscience, be heard to complain. Any loss resulting from the prior and superior equities of the third party, the purchaser with notice must charge to his own negligence or wilfulness; for, when one of two persons must suffer a loss, he shall suffer whose own act or negligence occasioned such loss. It would be manifestly contrary to reason and conscience to require the innocent third person to bear this loss.

In conformity with these general doctrines, the rule is clearly established that a purchaser with notice of another’s rights, in or to the thing purchased, is, in Equity, liable to the owner of those rights, to the same extent and in the same manner as the person from whom he made the purchase. On the other hand, a person, who acquires title to property in which another has an equity, and pays a valuable consideration for it, without any notice of such equity, may hold the property freed from the equity.

1. Notice Defined. Notice is such information concerning a fact, actually communicated to a party by an authorized person, or actually derived by a party from a proper source, or presumed by law to have been actually acquired by him, as is equivalent in its legal effects to full knowledge of such fact. Notice, therefore, is of two kinds: 1st, that actually communicated or derived; and 2d, that presumed by law to have been acquired. The former is called actual notice, the latter is called constructive notice. Actual notice includes all those instances in which positive personal information of a matter is directly communicated to the party, and this communication proved as a fact. Constructive notice includes all other kinds of notice, being those in which the information is conclusively presumed from certain facts, or is implied as a presumption of law in the absence of contrary proof. There is no difference in their consequences between actual and constructive notice.

2. Notice to an Agent when Notice to his Principal. Notice to an agent in the business or employment which he is carrying on for his principal, is a constructive notice to the principal himself, so far as the latter’s rights and liabilities are involved in, or affected by, the transaction. This rule alike includes and applies to the positive information or knowledge obtained or possessed by the agent in the transaction, and to actual or constructive notice communicated to him therein.

The general rule, that notice to the agent is notice to the principal, will operate with equal force and effect, whether the notice to the agent be actual, or constructive. Actual knowledge may be brought home to the agent by the most direct evidence, or he may be chargeable with constructive notice by a lis pendens, by a registration, by recitals in title deeds, by possession of the property by a stranger, or by circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry; in all such cases the effect upon the principal is the same as though the information or notice to the agent had been to him in person.

So, notice to one partner is notice to the other as to partnership matters; but not as to individual matters. And notice to one or more directors is notice to the corporation.

3. Effect of Being Put on Inquiry. Whenever a party has information or knowledge of certain extraneous facts, which of themselves do not amount to, nor tend to show, an actual notice, but which are sufficient to put a reasonably prudent man upon inquiry respecting a conflicting interest, claim or right; and the circumstances are such that the inquiry, if made and followed up with reasonable care and diligence, would lead to a discovery of the truth, to a knowledge of the interest, claim, or right which really exists; then the party is absolutely charged with a constructive notice of such interest, claim, or right. The presumption of knowledge is then conclusive.9

4. Circumstances from which Notice may be Inferred. Among the facts and circumstances from which actual notice may be inferred are the following:

1. Close relationship, personal intimacy, or business connections, existing between the purchaser and the party with whom he is dealing, or between him and the holder of the adverse claim.

2. Great inadequacy of price, which may arouse the purchaser’s suspicion, and put him upon inquiry as to the reasons for selling the property at less than its apparent value; and

3. The sight, or knowledge, of visible material objects upon or connected with the subject-matter, which may reasonably suggest the existence of some easement, or other right, belonging to a third person.

§ 66. Rule of Lis Pendens.—During the pendency of a suit in Equity, neither party to the litigation can so alienate or encumber the property in dispute as to affect the rights of his opponent. This rule of lis pendens is based both on necessity and on notice. 1. It is based on necessity,10 because, did it not exist, any litigation might be indefinitely prolonged in consequence of successive alienations of the property in dispute, making it necessary to be constantly bringing the successive lienees before the Court. 2. It is, also, based on notice; because the records of the Court are notice to the world; and it is mainly from this standpoint that the subject will be considered.11

The lis pendens and the consequent notice begin from the service of a subpoena or other process after the filing of the bill,12 (for the Court must have acquired jurisdiction of the defendant before he can be bound,) and continue through the entire pendency of the suit, and end only when the suit is really ended by a final decree. In order, however, that a purchaser pendente lite may be thus affected, the suit must be prosecuted in good faith, with all reasonable diligence, and without unnecessary delay.13

Lis pendens is notice of everything averred in the pleadings pertinent to the issue or to the relief sought, and of the contents of exhibits filed and proved. In order that the notice may thus operate, the specific property to which the suit relates must be pointed out in the pleadings, in such a manner as to call the attention of all persons to the very thing, and thus warn them not to intermeddle.14 It is not necessary that the land should be described by metes and bounds; certainty to a common intent, reasonable certainty, is sufficient.

§ 67. Estoppels, and Their Effect.—Whenever A, by acts, words, or silence, intentionally causes or permits B to do a thing he would not otherwise have done, it would be manifestly inequitable for A, by repudiating the very conduct by which he induced B to act, and by setting up rights of his own, inconsistent with his said conduct, to compel B to incur a loss by undoing the very thing A’s conduct caused him to do. Courts of Equity will not permit such inequitable action on A’s part, and will not allow him to set up any claims inconsistent with those acts, words, or silence, of his, which induced B to do what he did. This doctrine of Equity is termed Estoppel; and when fully considered will be found to rest upon three maxims: (1) When one of two persons must suffer a loss, it must be borne by him whose conduct occasioned it; (2) No one can take advantage of his own wrong; and (3) He is not to be heard who alleges

In this case, the rule upon the question of notice is thus laid down: Whatever is sufficient to put a person upon inquiry is notice of all the facts to which that inquiry will lead, when prosecuted with reasonable diligence and in good faith.

what is contrary to his former statements. It is also a principle of Equity that every person is bound to make good those intentional representations whereby he induces another to act.

It is sometimes said that equitable estoppels result from fraudulent conduct on the part of the person estopped. While this statement is rather broad, it is nevertheless true that, when B has acquired rights, or incurred liabilities, or parted with a consideration, on the faith of A's conduct, it would be fraudulent in A to repudiate such former conduct, or to set up claims inconsistent with his former conduct, to B's injury.

The word "conduit when used in reference to the person estopped means conduct in its broadest sense, and includes words and silence, positive acts and negative omissions.

The general rule of estoppel in cases of land is, that if a person interested in an estate knowingly misleads another into dealing with the estate as if he were not interested, he will be postponed to the party misled, and compelled to make his representation specifically good. It applies (1) to one who denies his own title, or encumbrance, when inquired of by another who is about to purchase the land, or to loan money upon its security; (2) to one who knowingly suffers another to deal with the land as though it were his own; (3) to one who knowingly suffers another to expend money in improvements without giving notice of his own claim, and the like; but in all such cases, there must be intentional deceit, or gross negligence equivalent to fraud.

The tendency of the law is to give married women enlarged rights, and disenfranchise many of the disabilities under which they formerly labored. With an extension of rights is coupled an extension of duties and liabilities. A married woman is not privileged to perpetrate frauds, or to mislead people to their hurt; and she may be estopped by her words, silence or conduct in the same manner, and nearly to the same extent, as though she was under no disability, especially when her conduct has been both fraudulent and very injurious to the other party.

An infant may, also, be bound by an estoppel when it would operate as a fraud upon the other party to allow the infant to repudiate his conduct, fraud not being one of the privileges of infancy.

The measure of the operation of an estoppel is the extent of the representation made by one party and acted on by the other. The estoppel is commensurate with the thing represented, and operates to put the party entitled to its benefit in the same position as if the thing represented were true. With respect to the persons who are bound by, or who may claim the benefit of, the estoppel, it operates between the immediate parties and their privies, whether by blood, by estate, or by contract.

15 Allegata contraria non est audientia. So, if a person is silent when in conscience he ought to speak, Equity will not hear him speak when in conscience he ought to be silent. Brashears Exrs. v. Van Cortlandt, 2 Johns. Ch., 249.
17 A party having two rights or remedies is bound by his election of one of them, and estopped to repudiate his action. O'Bryan Bros. v. Glenn Bros., 7 Pick., 196. Non passim matters decided in similar instances. (No one can change his mind to another's injury.) Bigelow on Estoppel, 450, thus sums up the requisite of an estoppel by conduct: "First—There must have been a representation or concealment of material facts. Second—The representation must have been made with knowledge. Third—The party to whom it was made must have been ignorant of the truth of the matter. Fourth—It must have been made with the intention that the other party shall act upon it."

An infant who obtains money from his trustee, or guardian, by fraudulently representing himself to be of age, is estopped to recover this money when he attains his majority. Snell's Pr. Eq., 39.
§ 68. Acquiescence, and Its Effects.—A party who has a right of action may lose that right either (1) by a confirmation of the voidable transaction, or (2) by acquiescing in the transaction, or (3) by mere delay, or laches, in bringing suit. If a party, with full knowledge of the facts and of his rights, freely and deliberately ratify a voidable transaction, such an act forever terminates any right he may ever have had to question the transaction thus ratified and confirmed. So, if a party, with like knowledge of the facts and of his rights, freely and deliberately acquiesce in a voidable transaction, and take or claim benefits under it, he will be estopped to question the validity of such transaction.

Mere delay, mere suffering time to elapse without doing anything, is not acquiescence: although it may be, and often is, strong evidence of an acquiescence; and it may be, and often is, a ground for refusing equitable relief. In order to constitute acquiescence there must be (1) some act which, though not deliberately intended as a ratification or confirmation of the voidable transaction, nevertheless recognizes it as existing, and claims or obtains some benefit resulting from it; and (2) this act must be done with knowledge of the material facts, and of the actor's rights under those facts; and (3) without any undue influence or restraint. Rights, once valid, are often lost by delay, and the implied acquiescence resulting from such delay.

Acquiescence consisting of mere silence may also operate as a true estoppel in Equity, to preclude a party from asserting legal title and rights of property, real or personal, or rights of contract. The requisites of such estoppel have been described. A fraudulent intention to deceive or mislead is not essential. All instances of this class, in Equity, rest upon the principle: "If one maintain silence when in conscience he ought to speak, Equity will debar him from speaking when in conscience he ought to remain silent." This principle includes all cases where an owner of property stands by, and knowingly, and without interposing any objections, permits another person to deal with the property as though it were his own, or as though he were rightfully dealing with it, as by expending money upon it, making improvements, erecting buildings, and the like. Of course, it is essential that the person in possession should be acting in ignorance of the real condition of the title, and in the supposition that he was rightful in his dealings with the property.

Parties who have long acquiesced in settlements of accounts, or of other mutual dealings, will not be permitted to reopen them; and this is true even though the parties stood in confidential relations toward each other, as trustee and cestui que trust, principal and agent, and the like, and the settlement embraced matters growing out of such relations. So, corporations may be estopped by acquiescence, like natural persons, either in their dealings with third persons or with their own stockholders; and, conversely, stockholders may, by acquiescence, be estopped from objecting to the acts of the corporation. If a mortgagee, obligor, or other debtor, by keeping silence under circumstances when he ought to speak, leads the intended assignee to believe that there is no defense, he will be estopped from afterwards setting up any defense, which might otherwise be available, as against the assignee who has thus been induced to purchase the demand.

In all these cases, the Courts enforce the maxim, "Equity aids the vigilant, not those who sleep upon their rights." The neglect to do a thing in proper season is called laches, and is one of the unpardonable sins in the sight of a Court of Equity.
§ 69. Negligence and Its Effects.—It has often been said that, in general, nothing can force a Court of Equity into activity but conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence.

Equity aids the vigilant, not those who slumber on their rights. _Laches_, delay, indifference and passive acquiescence, when not in any way caused by the other party, are hurtful, if not fatal, to complainant’s rights in a Court of Equity. The doctrine that Equity requires good works as well as good faith, is especially enforced against trustees, and all other persons, who act in a capacity of trust for others especially in a fiduciary capacity, such as executors, administrators, guardians, agents, receivers, clerks of courts and of individuals, secretaries, treasurers, and other officers of firms, societies and corporations, book-keepers, guardians _ad litem_, next friends, attorneys and confidential advisors. Any of these persons, when acting for others in reference to matters of property or business intrusted to their care and management, is to that extent a trustee, and subject to all the obligations imposed by Courts of Equity on trustees, and held chargeable for all losses resulting from their want of due diligence, equally with losses resulting from downright bad faith. The compensation ordinarily allowed trustees will be reduced, or entirely disallowed, in case of loss resulting from their negligence. Of persons acting as trustees, Equity requires good works as well as good faith.

Equity never interferes in behalf of a party whose negligence, or delay, has caused, occasioned, or contributed to, the injury of which he complains. No one can take advantage of his own wrong; and when one of two persons must suffer a loss, that one shall suffer it whose act, or neglect, occasioned it. Clean hands, a pure heart and swift feet are required of him who seeks the aid of a Court of Conscience; and if, in any case, it appears that the injury complained of might not have happened, had the complainant, or his agents, or attorneys, been duly diligent, the Court will stay its hand and decline to interfere.

This doctrine runs all through both the practice and the jurisprudence of the Court. The Court will not relieve against negligence in pleading, or in taking any step in Court, or in taking proof, unless upon the payment of compensatory costs. So, the Court will not relieve against a forfeiture, or an accident, or a mistake, that is the result of negligence. Equity will not relieve against a judgment at law, nor rehear nor review one of its own decrees, when the wrong complained of could have been prevented, or the new evidence brought forward could have been obtained, by reasonable diligence at, or before, the former trial. Nor can he who is put upon inquiry escape the consequences thereof, by declining to make the proper investigations. In Equity, every man is chargeable with all that due diligence, in the particular matter, would have resulted in. Equity requires a party to do all that, in good reason and good conscience, he should have done; and a failure to do what it was a party’s duty to have done, will not relieve him from the penalties of his neglect.

Besides, negligence in acting when one’s rights have been invaded, may be deemed evidence of an acquiescence, or may become _laches_, and thus bar a party from asserting what would, on due diligence, have been a clear right of action.

§ 70. Laches, and Its Effects.—The neglect of a person to make complaint, or bring suit in due season, he being _sui juris_ and knowing the facts, or having the means of knowledge, is called _laches_; and where there has been gross laches in prosecuting rights, or long and unreasonable acquiescence in adverse rights, Courts of Equity refuse to interfere, they acting either by analogy to the statutes of limitations, or upon their own inherent doctrine of discouraging antiquated demands.32 The Court realizes the difficulty of doing entire justice, when the original transaction has become obscured by time and the evidence lost, and deems it good public policy to allow claims and titles long acquiesced in to remain in repose. Nevertheless, when there are circumstances excusing or justifying the delay, Courts of Equity will not refuse their aid.33

It has been said that "nothing can call a Court of Equity into activity but conscience, good faith and reasonable diligence."34 The Court never lends its aid to one who, with knowledge of his rights and with opportunity to assert them, delays unreasonably so to do. Equity aids those who are vigilant, not those who sleep upon their rights, and always discourages stale demands. Time, in Equity, is a witness that, what has long been acquiesced in, must originally have been founded on some right.35 In this respect, it is wholly independent of the statute of limitations.36 The Court frowns upon attempts to unsettle what has long been at rest, first, because of the difficulty, if not impossibility, of making proof; second, because, in uprooting an ancient matter, innocent persons are liable to be injured; third, because the defendant, even if originally in the wrong, may, as a result of the complainant’s laches, have acquired such affirmative rights that he cannot be placed in statu quo; and fourth, because the delay raises a presumption that originally there was, if not a good defense, at least a better one than can now be made. If a party have knowledge of his rights, his delay will not be excused because of poverty, or want of evidence.37

Laches will bar suits (1) to open accounts and settlements long acquiesced in;38 (2) to change a boundary line long recognized;39 (3) to correct an alleged fraud, accident or mistake long submitted to;40 (4) to have a nuisance abated that has long existed;41 (5) to have a contract either rescinded or specifically enforced, when by delay the parties cannot be placed in statu quo,42 (6) or to have any transaction uprooted, or any business unravelled, when, in consequence of long acquiescence, the chances are that material evidence has been lost, that the memory of the facts has become dimmed, that parties or witnesses have died or removed, and that new rights have sprung up that should not be unsettled.43

But no delay will prejudice a defrauded party as long as he was ignorant of the fraud;44 and, especially, if the defendant concealed the facts which it was his duty to disclose, or deceived the complainant by misstatements, or otherwise lulled his suspicions. The sleep of the complainant cannot be used as a defence by him who caused that sleep, for that would be to take advantage of his own wrong.45

ARTICLE II.

WAIVER AND CONSENT.

§ 71. Waiver, and Its Effects.

—A litigation is a legal combat in which each party has the right to take every lawful advantage of his adversary, and when a party fails or declines to exercise this right, in any given case, he is deemed to have waived it, for reasons satisfactory to himself. The various steps taken, and various pleadings filed, in the progress of a litigation, are not always taken or filed in strict accordance with the practice or pleadings of the Court, and so, many errors of omission and commission, important and unimportant, often happen between the filing of a bill and the execution of the final decree. The practice of the Court allows the parties to object to any error committed by their adversaries; but inasmuch as objection made long after the error is committed causes confusion and delay in the orderly progress of a litigation, and often imposes undue hardship on the party in error, the Court requires the adverse party to interpose his objection in due season; and if he fail so to do, he will be deemed to have waived his right to object; and he will not be allowed subsequently to withdraw his waiver and claim the right waived, on the plea that he overlooked it, for that would be to let him take advantage of his own wrong; besides Equity aids the vigilant, and not those who sleep on their rights. A party who remains silent when he should object will not be allowed to object when he should remain silent; for silence, under such circumstances is consent, and waiver is a quasi consent.

The party who is deemed to have waived his right to object has no just cause to complain of this rule of the Court; for he is conclusively presumed to know the rule, and to have intentionally ignored the error in question. What a man consents to he cannot complain of, and this consent may be inferred from silence, or from conduct.

The doctrine of waiver is a wholesome one, and greatly facilitates the dispatch of business in the Courts, and promotes the prompt and orderly progress of a suit to final decree. If parties were allowed to go back and take advantage of a right or opportunity overlooked, neglected, or deliberately disregarded, no party could take a forward step in a litigation without danger of being compelled to retrace it in order to enable his adversary to make an attack or a defence on a ground long since passed, or to make some motion, or exercise some right or privilege he neglected to make or exercise when the opportunity was duly presented.

The doctrine of waiver promotes diligence, prevents trickery and bad faith, and preserves rights acquired in consequence of the waiver.

The doctrine of waiver is not only applied to one party in reference to the action of the other, but it is applied to one or both parties in reference to the officers of the Court; and if a party fail to object to the Chancellor, or the Clerk and Master, or the Sheriff, acting in a matter because of the incompetency of such officer from kinship or interest, such party knowing of such incompetency, he will be deemed to have waived the incompetency, and is bound by such waiver. Indeed, any party, who with knowledge of the grounds of objection to any act or proceeding in Court by any other party, or by an officer or witness, fails in due season, to avail himself of such grounds of objection, is deemed to have waived his objection to such act or proceeding, and to have acquiesced therein, and is estopped by his conduct. One of the reasons of this ruling is, that if the objection is made in season the party in default may, by amendment or otherwise, correct the defect or irregularity, whereas if not then made, and especially if made at the hearing, he is absolutely deprived of such opportunity. So the Courts rule that a party who will not object when he should, shall not object when he would.

(He who is silent [when he ought to object] is considered as consenting [to what is done].) 5 Volenti non fit injuria. (No legal injury is done to him who consents). Non referat an quis esset aetn prosequi praefert verbis, an rebus ipsa et factis. (It matters not whether a party gives his assent by his words, or by his acts and deeds.) See post, § 72. 6 Brasher's Executors v. Van Cortlandt, 2 Johns., Ch., 248. Seifred v. Peoples' Bank, 2 Tenn. Ch., 17.

If one party was allowed to ignore a slip, defect, or other error or omission of his adversary, in pleading, proof or procedure, until after the time or opportunity for supplying the deficiency or curing of the error had elapsed, it would not only often defeat the real justice of the case on its merits, or delay the trial by requiring the Court to continue the hearing in order to give due opportunity to supply the deficiency or cure the error, but it would also enable crafty parties to lie in ambush, as it were, and strike their opponents unawares, and in their back, after they had passed the point when attention should have been called to the error; and this, too, in a Court consecrated to good faith and fair play.

Hence it is, that if a party fail to object to some slip, omission, defect or other error, in pleading, proof or procedure, at the proper time and in the proper manner, he will be deemed to have waived his right to make such objection; and this is especially true if after such right of objection accrued, he, himself, instead of objecting, take some step that implies his assent to or acquiescence in what his adversary has done.

There are many small things done in Court, or left undone, which ought not to have been done or left undone, but which become valid when done, if not duly objected to, or which if left undone do not affect the merits of the controversy. After such things have been done, or left undone, and objection waived, the Court acts on the maxim, Stare decisis, and refuses to reopen them. Indeed, the Court regards with little favor the sparring of adverse parties by the wayside, and is anxious only to do what it rightfully can to facilitate a speedy determination of the controversy on its real merits, and the doctrine of waiver greatly aids the Court in so doing, and thus promotes the administration of justice.

7 Wroe v. Green, 2 Swan, 172; Crozier v. Goodwin, 1 Lea, 125; Holmes v. Eason, 8 Lea, 754.

8 Due season, in such a case, is ordinarily at the time of the act or proceeding, or as soon as it comes to the knowledge of the party having the right to object, and before any other act done or proceeding had, which could not have been done or had if such objection had been duly made.

9 Iu reofficinis quis assensum sumum prefert verbis et rebus ipsi et factis. (It matters not whether a man gives his assent by his words, or by his acts and deeds.)

10 The doctrine of waiver operates somewhat as does the doctrine of laches, or the statute of limitations, or an estoppel. It prevents wrangles, hedges, or however; the Solicitors, that which even the Chancellor and the officers of the Court may become involved; and thus it prevents much unseemliness. If it were not for this doctrine, all the labor and money and time expended in preparing a suit for final hearing would often be totally wasted, on the demands of novelty he not allowed to go back to the beginning of the suit, and make a motion, or file or amend a pleading, or introduce some proof on a preliminary issue, which he neglected or deliberately pre-
1. Waivers when Operative on the Complainant. A complainant is expected to be especially vigilant in his efforts to win his suit, and when he fails to take advantage of an opportunity to crumble his adversary he is deemed to have satisfactory reasons for waiving the opportunity, and so the Court holds him to his choice in the matter, and will not allow him afterward to claim what he had waived.

Thus, the failure of a complainant to object in due season (1) to a plea because not duly sworn to, or because deficient in substance or form, or (2) to an answer because not signed, nor duly sworn to, nor in proper form, nor sufficiently full, or (3) to an answer filed as a cross bill without a prosecution bond, or (4) to require money tendered to be paid into Court when the plea of tender is filed, he is deemed to have waived such deficiencies, and if he lets a plea go to issue by filing a replication, or a plea or an answer go to issue by the lapse of twenty days, and more especially if he takes proof or cross-examines a witness as to either the plea or the answer, he is conclusively deemed to have waived all deficiencies in their form or substance, and to have admitted their sufficiency. When an insufficient defence is thus waived, the defective pleading has, at the hearing, all the force and effect of a sufficient pleading.

So if the complainant allows an execution to be awarded to enforce a decree in an attachment suit he is deemed to have waived his right to have the attached property sold to satisfy his recovery.

So, in case of appeals to the Supreme Court, a failure to point out errors in the record will be deemed a waiver of such errors; and going to trial is a waiver of any deficiency in the record.

A positive step in pleading or proof by the complainant, based on the assumption that the previous pleading is regular, waives any irregularity in such previous pleading. Thus:

1. Allowing a cause to go to issue waives the signature to the answer, or any other insufficiency in it.

2. Taking proof on an unsworn answer waives the oath, or any other deficiency in it.

3. Filing a replication to a plea, or allowing it to go to issue without a replication, or taking proof on a plea, waives any insufficiency in the plea.

2. Waivers when Operative on the Defendant. The parties to a litigation are adversaries, and when either of them, and especially the defendant, fails to take advantage of an opportunity to weaken his adversary, or strengthen himself, the Court, acting as umpire, concludes that, for reasons satisfactory to himself, he waives such opportunities. Therefore, the failure of the defendant to have the bill dismissed because not signed, or not properly sworn to, or because of the want of a prosecution bond, or some fatal defect therein, or in the pauper oath, or for want of jurisdiction of the person, or local jurisdiction of a plea of nul debet, and payment to a sworn account, is a waiver of the right to have the account denied under oath.

the subject-matter, or because the bill is multifarious, or there is a misjoinder of parties complainant, or because of failure of complainant to comply in due season with some statutory requirement, or order or rule of the Court, or to take some step at the right time, or to do some other thing in the orderly prosecution of his suit, will be regarded as a waiver of his (the defendant's) right to do so, he not having taken advantage thereof at the proper time and in the proper manner.30

The defendant's failure to file in due season a plea in abatement, or a demurrer, or a plea in bar, or an answer,31 or a cross bill, or to have a demurrer, filed with his answer, acted on at the right time, or his failure to plead payment, or an accord and satisfaction, a tender, or a set-off, or a former adjudication, or non est factum, or the statute of limitations,32 or the statute of frauds, or that he was an innocent purchaser,33 or that the suit was prematurely brought, or any other defence that must be specifically pleaded, will be deemed a waiver of his right to take any such step, or file any such pleading.34

So, a defendant may waive one right or privilege of his own, by asserting or using another right inconsistent therewith. Thus, (1) the filing of a demurrer is an abandonment or waiver of a plea in abatement to the jurisdiction;35 (2) the filing of an answer is an abandonment, or waiver, of a demurrer;36 (3) where a demurrer has been filed with an answer, going into a final hearing of the cause on the merits, without having previously invoked the action of the Court on the demurrer is a waiver of the demurrer;37 (4) the adoption of any one of the defences set out in the Code, § 4386, is a waiver of those preceding;38 (5) neglecting to rely on an injunction enjoining the suit, until the hearing, is a waiver of the injunction.39

Taking a forward step in pleading or procedure is a waiver of the right to insist on the action of the Court on the step last taken. Thus:

1. Filing a demurrer to the bill while a motion to dismiss for want of a cost bond is pending, is a waiver of the motion.40
2. Obtaining time to answer after plea to local jurisdiction is overruled, waives action on the plea in the Supreme Court.41
3. Going to trial on the merits is a waiver of the demurrer filed with the answer and not acted on.42
4. Failure to invoke the action of the Court on a demurrer incorporated in an answer, at the first term after it is filed, is a waiver of the demurrer.43
5. Filing an answer, or plea in bar, is a waiver of action on a demurrer undisposed of.44
6. Filing an answer which sets up a defence, or a denial of complainant's claim, waives action on a plea in bar previously filed, making the same defense.45

in bar of redemption; and he may waive his right to plead over or answer, after his plea in abatement has been found against him on the facts, by failing to plead or answer, or to apply for leave so to do. 46

3. Waivers when Operative on Either Party. Either party will be deemed to have waived his right if, in due season, he fail to except to deposition, or to have the Clerk and Master act on his exceptions, or to appeal from his action thereon when adverse, or to have the Chancellor act on such appeal; or if either party fail to object to a question propounded to a witness, or fail to object to any answer to a question, or to any paper, deed, or other writing or other evidence offered as proof, or fail to notify the opposite party to produce a paper at the hearing, or fail to except to the Master's report, or to have an account opened to enable him to file additional evidence; or to have the action of the Chancellor on exceptions to the Master's report, or fail to require the opposite party to file some particular paper, or do some particular act required by the practice or order of the Court; 49 or fail to move that some pleading, deposition, or other paper be stricken from the file because not filed in season, or not entitled to be stricken for any other reason, or because not marked filed by the Clerk and Master; 50 or fail to demand a trial by jury, 51 or fail to take any action in any other matter proper in preparing for trial on his part, or proper to prevent his adversary obtaining any undue advantage, or fail at the hearing to renew exceptions to evidence, or to call the attention of the Chancellor to a particular piece of proof, or to a particular averment or admission in the pleadings or in the argument of the opposite party, or to a particular decision or point of law; or to fail, after the hearing, to see that the decree gives him all he is entitled to, or is no harder on him than the Chancellor's holding requires, or fail to file a bill of exceptions, or to pray an appeal, or give an appeal bond, or do any other act necessary to enable him to go to the Supreme Court under as favorable circumstances as possible. In each and all of these instances, if the party having the right to do the particular act, or to object to the particular act, fail to so do, or so object, in due season and proper manner, he will be deemed to have waived his right so to do, or so to object.

Indeed, it may be safely laid down as a general rule, that all pleadings, proofs, motions, exceptions, attacks, defences, and objections must be filed or made in due season and manner; and all exceptions to pleadings, proof, attacks and defences must be made in due manner and season; and all steps necessary in the litigation either to attack, defend or assert rights must be taken at the proper time and in due form; and, above all, that every objection based on technical grounds and not going to the substance of the issue involved, must be made in the right way and at the right time; and that if any of these acts are not done in due form and season they will be deemed to be waived, and the right to do them will be denied by the Court. Where a rule of Court requires a motion for a new trial to specify the grounds therefor, all grounds not so specified are deemed to be waived, and cannot be assigned in the Supreme Court. 52

So, either party may waive a right or benefit (1) by taking an inconsistent right or benefit, or (2) by doing an act or taking a step inconsistent therewith, or (3) by ignoring such right or benefit until the adverse party has taken a step inconsistent therewith, as above more fully shown. Thus, cross-examining a witness is a waiver of notice, or of any defect in the notice, to take his deposition, and obtaining a reference to the Master is a waiver of a trial by jury previously demanded. 52

4. Waivers when Not Operative. But while a party may have failed to do an act in due season, he will not be deemed to have waived the right to do it, if his failure was caused by the wrongful act of the adverse party. A party will not be allowed to insist that a right to do a particular act is waived by non-action when his own conduct misled the other party, or put him to sleep,\textsuperscript{53} or when he expressly agrees that the right may continue.\textsuperscript{54}

It must, also, be understood that, while a waiver, or even an express consent, may be binding on a party to a suit, it may at the same time not be binding on the Court, for the Court will not allow a party, either by action or non-action, to violate a rule of the Court, or do an act contrary to law or public policy. Thus, while the failure of the defendant to object or demur, when the Court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit,\textsuperscript{55} or when the bill on its face claims usury, or seeks to enforce an illegal or immoral contract, or to obtain a \textit{pro forma} or collusive decree, or one against public policy,\textsuperscript{56} or to sell a homestead, or to sell exempt personal property,\textsuperscript{57} will bind such defendant, the Chancellor may refuse to entertain the suit, and, on his own motion, dismiss the bill.

Waivers are not operative on persons of unsound mind; and are not ordinarily operative upon minors\textsuperscript{58} and married women; nor are they operative upon a party who was ignorant of the right in question, especially if such ignorance was the result of the conduct of the other party, or of an officer of the Court. But if this ignorance was the result of his own negligence or mistake he will be bound, for he cannot take advantage of his own wrong.

\textbf{§ 72. Consent, and Its Effects.}—Consent\textsuperscript{59} is the concurrence or agreement of two or more persons as to any matter of fact or opinion. Courts are established to provide for cases of dissent, cases where there is disagreement instead of agreement. Where there is agreement between parties there is no need of a Court, indeed when there is agreement there is no need of law,\textsuperscript{60} provided always the agreement is between parties capable of contracting, in no way injures any other person, and violates no rule of law or public policy.\textsuperscript{61} Laws are made to provide for cases of disagreement, and it is the business of Courts to apply these laws to the facts attending such disagreements, and thereby ascertain which of the disagreeing parties is in the wrong, and in what way, and to what extent, he shall atone therefor.

To show the force of the maxim that consent makes law, it is only necessary to recall that consent controls nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand transactions between man and man, in the business world and in social life.

A formal agreement binds not only the parties thereto, but every one else, provided, of course, it interferes with no third person’s rights or property, and violates no law or public policy; and it continues to bind the parties thereto until it has accomplished its purpose, or been set aside or changed by another agreement between the same parties; or their privies in estate. If, however, one or more of the parties to an agreement should violate the agreement, the other party could apply to the Courts, either to prevent any further violation, or for the damages resulting to him by reason of the violation, or for a specific performance of the agreement.

While a litigation is a sort of legal war in which the parties are the adversaries, nevertheless through the agency of counsel representing the parties, agreements are often made in the progress of a suit; and these agreements are greatly favored by the Courts, 1st, because they lessen the labors of the Judges;

\textsuperscript{60} \textit{Consensus fact legem.} (Consent makes law:) that is, the law for the particular matter covered by the agreement.

\textsuperscript{61} \textit{Conventio privatorum non potest publico juri derogare.} (The agreement of private persons cannot annul a public law.)
2d, because they lessen the asperities of the litigation; and 3d, because they facilitate the dispatch of business; and they are firmly enforced, except in cases of fraud, accident, or mistake, which cases very seldom happen. It is, indeed, a maxim that where parties consent they bind the Court, and where they do not consent the Court binds them. The agreement of the parties makes the law for the contract.

What a party agrees to in the course of a litigation is so binding upon him that he cannot appeal from it, or if an appeal should be granted, the Supreme Court will not hear him, even if his agreement is contrary to what the Court would have decided on a contest. What a party consents to in Court he cannot complain of. For this reason an erroneous order or decree, when consented to, will bind the parties consenting both in the Court where the consent was made, and in the Supreme Court. Indeed, the Supreme Court will not look behind a consent to see whether it was reasonable or not, if it violate no law or public policy.

Agreements in regard to pleadings, proofs, references, reports, orders, decrees, and other proceedings in litigation, are binding and will be enforced.
Consent may not only be shown by the words or writings of the parties, but may be inferred from their silence or conduct under circumstances, for he who is silent when he ought to object, will not be allowed to object when he ought to be silent. But, as elsewhere shown, no consent is binding on a party not sui juris.

There are many implied consents enforced in Court during the progress of a litigation, most of them based on the failure of the party to object to some pleading, proof or proceeding in due season, but these have already been considered in the section devoted to waivers, and will not be repeated.

62 Modus et conventio sive sunt legem. (Agreements control the law.) Neither the Courts nor the legislature can set aside a valid agreement. They are protected by the Constitution of both the State and the United States.

64 Consensus tollit errores. (Consent does away with any error in the agreement.)

65 Volenti non fit injuria. (What a man consents to he cannot complain of.)

66 A consent decree can only be changed or annulled on a bill filed for that express purpose, and on the ground of fraud, accident or mistake.

bis an rebus ipsis et factis. (It makes no difference whether a man gives his assent by his words, or by

(He who can and ought to object, commands the thing to be done if he fails to object.) And there is another maxim applicable. Qui tacet consentit videtur. (He who is silent is considered as consenting.) There are similar maxims among all civilized nations, showing the consensus of mankind that silence gives consent when a party deliberately fails to object.
CHAPTER V.

PRIORITIES, AND BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

§ 73. Priorities, and Equities Relating Thereunto.

§ 74. Assignments, How Affected by Priorities.

§ 75. Bona Fide Purchasers, and Their Equities.

§ 73. Priorities, and Equities Relating Thereunto.—When the owner of a legal estate conveys in good faith all of his interest in it to another, it is manifest that he cannot, by a second conveyance of the same estate to a third person, vest any title thereunto in such third person. No one can transfer to another a greater right than he himself possesses; and, at the time of his second conveyance, the conveyor had no right or interest to convey. Hence, as between two vendees of the same property, the first in order of time prevails, except in so far as the effect of this rule is changed by the registration laws and the doctrine of notice.

A similar rule of priorities prevails in reference to the acquisition of equitable interests, the rule being expressed in the maxim, "Where there are equal equities the first in order of time shall prevail." This doctrine of priorities in Equity is based on good reason and good conscience. It is manifestly both reasonable and right that he, who first acquires an interest in any property, should be protected in his acquisition; otherwise the law of force must prevail, and instead of priority of time giving superiority of right, the maxim would read "Superiority of Might gives Superiority of Right;" and he would hold the property who could bring to bear the greatest force, or the shrewdest strategy.

The equitable doctrine of priority in time giving superiority in right applies only as between persons having equitable interests, and only then when those equitable interests are in all other respects equal; for priority in time does not give a superiority in right if the prior equity is, in other respects than in point of time, a superior equity.¹

1. The Fundamental Rules of Priority. The equitable doctrine concerning priorities is embodied in the three following general rules: 1st. Among successive equitable estates, or interests, where there exists no special claim, advantage, or superiority, in any one over the others, the order of time controls. Under these circumstances, the maxim, "Among equal equities, the first in order of time prevails," furnishes the rule of decision.²

2. Between a legal and an equitable title to the same subject-matter, the legal title in general prevails, in pursuance of the maxim, "Where there is equal equity the law must prevail." 3d. The legal title being outstanding and not involved in the controversy, where there are successive unequal equities in the same subject-matter, as where there is a complete or perfect equitable estate in the one party and an incomplete or imperfect equitable estate or a mere equity in the other party; or, where among equitable interests of a like intrinsic nature, one is affected by some incident or quality which renders it inferior to another, then the prece-

dence resulting from order of time is defeated, and the superior equitable estate or interest prevails over the others; as is manifestly implied in the maxim, "Where there are equal equities, the first in order of time must prevail."

2. Priorities of Attachments, Judgments, and Executions. Priority, in order of time, prevails to the same extent when liens are acquired by the filing of attachment bills, or the levy of attachment writs. In all such cases, where the right of the complainant attached either directly by the filing of an attachment bill, or indirectly by the levy of the attachment writ for his benefit, that right operates as a lis pendens, and, if perfected by a sale, the title of the purchaser will relate back to the filing of the bill, or to the levy of the writ, as the case may be; and, if there be several bills or several levies, their priorities will be in the order of time, beginning with the oldest lien, if the equities of the parties are otherwise equal. If two or more levies by attachment are made at the same time, they will be treated as one levy, and a pro rata distribution of the proceeds will be made.

The priorities of judgments and decrees, and of the liens thereby created, are determined by their respective dates, or registration; the priorities of different levies by execution on the same tract of land are regulated by the order of time in which the levies are made; and the priorities of different levies by execution on the same personality are determined by the priorities of the dates of their respective testes.

And in conflicts between attachment liens, judgment liens, and execution liens, the first in order of time will prevail.

3. Equities and Liabilities of Purchasers. In applying these rules, it becomes important to know when one equity is superior to another. Courts of Equity recognize no inequality based on form, or mode of creation, provided the equitable interest is perfected and is based upon a valuable consideration. The following rules will aid in determining this question:

1. The equitable interest created by a trust, or by a contract in rem, made upon a valuable consideration, is superior to the equity arising from a mere voluntary transfer, or from the satisfaction of a pre-existing debt.

2. The equity acquired by a party who has been misled, is superior to the interest in the same subject-matter of the one who wilfully procured or suffered him to be misled. An equity, otherwise equal or even superior, may, through the gross laches, or the intentional deceit of the holder, be postponed to the equity of another acquired as a result of such laches or deceit. Any conduct which Equity regards as constituting fraud, either an actual intention to mislead, or that gross negligence which produces all the effects, and merits all the blame, of intentional deception, will operate to postpone the equity of the person guilty thereof as against the equity of the person thereby misled.

3. A party taking an estate or interest with notice of another's equity therein, takes subject to that equity; that is, the purchaser of an estate or interest, legal or equitable, even for a valuable consideration, with notice of any existing equitable estate, interest, claim or right, in or to the same subject-matter, held by a third person, is liable in Equity to the same extent, and in the same manner, as the person from whom he made the purchase.

A purchaser with notice of a trust, either express or implied, becomes himself a trustee for the beneficiary as to the property purchased, and is bound in the same manner as the original trustee from whom he purchased. A purchaser or mortgagee with notice of the express equitable lien of a vendor for unpaid purchase price, takes the land subject to that lien. A purchaser or mortgagee of the legal estate, with notice of an equitable lien by a prior defective mortgage, or by any other means from which an express equitable lien can arise, is bound by the lien. A purchaser with notice of a prior contract to sell or to lease, takes subject to such contract, and is bound in the same manner as his vendor to carry it into execution.\textsuperscript{11}

4. Exceptions to the Rules of Priority. While, as between successive purchasers or assignees of an assignable interest, the general rule is that he is ent-titled to the preference who first gives notice of the assignment to the debtor;\textsuperscript{12} the following are the exceptions to the rule:

1. \textit{All negotiable instruments}, whether negotiable by the law merchant or by statute, may be transferred either by written endorsement, by delivery, or otherwise, without any notice to the maker.\textsuperscript{13}

2. \textit{Certificates of stock} in a corporation may be assigned without notice to the corporation.\textsuperscript{14}

3. \textit{Life insurance policies} may be assigned without notice to the company, in the absence of any contract to the contrary.\textsuperscript{15}

§ 74. Assignments, How Affected by Priorities.—What has been said in reference to the manifest equities arising out of several conveyances of the same property by the same vendor to several vendees,\textsuperscript{1} applies with equal force to successive assignments of an unnego\textit{tiable chos\textit{c in action} by the same assignor to different assignees; but, as there are facts in the latter case different from those in the former case, some important modifications of the rules of priority in sales of realty become necessary.

Where there are successive equitable assignments of a fund to different parties, it would seem, on first thought, that, as the legal estate is outstanding, and as the interests of all the successive assignees are similar in their essential nature, the first in order of time should prevail, under the maxim \textit{Qui prior est tempore potior est iure.} On fuller deliberation, however, important considerations will appear sufficient to make such assignments out of the operation of the general rule. Where an equitable interest in land is created, the holder thereof can protect himself by having it registered. Where an equitable interest in chattels is obtained, it can be secured by a transfer of the possession, or by reducing the agreement to writing and having it registered. But no such safeguards exist in case of assignments of a \textit{chos\textit{c in action}. The legal title, which is analogous to the possession, remains vested in the debtor, trustee or holder of the fund; while the creditor or beneficiary, even after one or more assignments of all his interest, continues clothed with full apparent right to make further assignments.

1. \textbf{Notice to Debtor when Necessary to Perfect an Assignment.} It is, therefore, settled law that, while, as against the assignor himself, no notice of the assignment of a non-negotiable \textit{chos\textit{c in action}, or fund, need be given to the debtor, trustee or other holder of the fund, nevertheless, that, as against subsequent assignees for a valuable consideration, notice to the debtor, trustee, or holder of the fund is necessary in order to perfect the assignment and render it valid and effectual; and that, among \textit{successive assignees} of the same thing in action who have paid a valuable consideration, the assignee in good faith and for value who \textit{first gives notice}, obtains a precedence over the others, even though they may be earlier in time. The equities of the successive assignments being otherwise equal, the priority among them is determined by the order of the dates of the notices, rather than by the order of the dates of the assignments.

\textit{Cox}, 1 Sneed, 330, has been uniformly followed in Tennessee.

\textsuperscript{14} Cornick \textit{v.}
Richards, 3 Lea, 1.
\textsuperscript{15} Mutual P. Ins. Co. \textit{v.}
Hamilton, 5 Sneed, 269.
\textsuperscript{1}
\textsuperscript{15} Ante, § 65.
Giving notice is regarded as equivalent, or as at least analogous to, the act of taking possession; and until notice is received by the debtor, payment by him to the assignor would be valid, and bind the assignee.\(^2\)

It should be carefully observed, however, that to enable a subsequent assignee to obtain a priority in this manner, by giving the first notice to the debtor or legal holder, he must be an assignee in good faith, and for a valuable consideration. If he has parted with no consideration he is a mere volunteer, and stands in the same position as his assignor. If he had notice of the earlier assignment, then he took subject thereto.\(^3\)

2. Cases Where Notice is Not Required. The foregoing rules in reference to the need of notice in case of assignments of choses in action, do not apply in the following cases:

1. All negotiable instruments, whether negotiable by the law merchant, or made so by statute,\(^4\) may be transferred without any notice to the makers.

2. Certificates of stock in a corporation may be assigned without notice to the corporation.\(^5\)

3. Life insurance policies may be assigned without notice to the company, in the absence of any contract to the contrary.\(^6\)

3. To Whom Notice Must be Given. Notice may be given to the debtor, trustee, or holder of the fund, either in writing, or verbally, if the latter form is explicit, definite and certain.\(^7\) Notice to one of two or more co-trustees, or joint debtors is, in general, notice to all; but it ceases to be operative when such trustee, or debtor, dies, or such trustee gives up his position. No notice to the assignor is necessary to make him liable when the debtor refuses to pay the debt assigned, except in case of negotiable paper, to which the rules concerning notice do not apply. These rules, requiring notice to the debtor or holder of the fund, are confined to transfers of personal property, debts, money claims arising from contracts, accounts and the like; but not to equitable interests in land, or to negotiable paper.

The assignee must not only notify the debtor, but he must do so promptly, and obtain possession of the chace in action if in writing, and if not take such steps as are equivalent to actual possession. A prior assignee may lose his priority by any laches which injures a subsequent bona fide assignee.\(^8\)

4. Equities of the Debtor against the Assignee. The assignee of a thing in action not negotiable, takes the interest assigned subject to all the defenses, legal and equitable, of the debtor who issued the obligation, or of the trustee or other party upon whom the obligation originally rested.\(^9\) That is, when the original debtor, or trustee, in whatever form his promise or obligation is made, if it is not negotiable, is sued by the assignee, the defenses, legal and equitable, which he had at the time of the assignment, or at the time when notice of it was given, against the original creditor, avail to him against the substituted creditor. This rule applies to all forms of contract not negotiable,\(^10\) and to all defenses which would have been valid between the debtor party and the original creditor. These defenses may (1) arise out of, or be inherent in, the very terms or nature of the obligation itself, as that it was conditional, and the condition has not been performed by the assignor, or the failure or illegality of the consideration, and the like; or, (2) they may exist outside of the contract, as set-off, payment, release, the condition of accounts between the original parties, and the like.\(^11\) It is essential, however, that the equity in favor of the debtor should exist at the time of the assignment, or before notice thereof; for, after receiving notice, he can not, by a payment, release, obtaining a set-off, or any other act, defeat or prejudice the right of the assignee. The debtor, who would have been entitled to equities under this rule, may, by actual misrepresentations, or by conduct, or even by silence, towards the assignee, estop himself from setting them up; and he may release them.12

§ 75. Bona Fide Purchasers, and their Equities.—Where a person owns a valid subsisting interest in property, his right thereto should be superior to another’s who subsequently acquires possession of the same property, (1) without acquiring the legal title thereto, or (2) without paying any valuable consideration therefor, or (3) with notice of the prior adverse interest, or (4) without good faith. On the other hand, where a person’s interests, though valid, are not so evidenced as to give notice thereof, his right thereto should be inferior to another’s who acquires possession of the same property (1) with a conveyance of the legal title, (2) paying therefor a valuable consideration, (3) without any notice of the prior adverse interest, and (4) in good faith.

This defence of innocent purchaser1 is founded on the maxim, “Where the equities are equal, the law will prevail;” and the defendant having both the possession and the legal title, while the complainant has only an equitable title, it is manifestly just to prefer the defendant, his equities being fully equal to complainant’s, and he having in addition both the possession and the legal title. Where the equities are equal, superior is the condition of the defendant.2

Besides, the complainant was guilty of negligence in not having his interests so evidenced as to give purchasers notice of his rights; and his case consequently falls under the ban of the maxim, “When a loss must fall on one of two persons, it should be borne by him whose act or negligence caused it.” Were the law otherwise, no man would ever be safe in making a purchase.

In order, then, that the defence of bona fide purchaser may be effectual, all of the following essentials must appear: 1, There must have been a purchase; 2, There must have been a valuable consideration paid; 3, The conveyance must have been taken and the consideration paid before notice of the prior adverse equity; and 4, the whole transaction must have been characterized by good faith.3 These essentials will be considered separately.

1. There Must Have Been a Purchase. The very corner-stone of this defence is the fact of a purchase. The purchase must have been fully consummated before notice, so fully consummated that nothing was left to be done in order to effectuate it. If the purchase had not been completed before notice, the defendant had the right to abandon the proposed purchase, or to obtain indemnity against the alleged equity; and if he did neither, it was his own negligence or willfulness, and he has no right to complain of any loss caused by the alleged equity, of which he had notice.4 The fact that the consideration was valuable, and

1 See Plea of Innocent Purchaser, post, § 332. The rationale of this defence is, that the equities of the parties are equal: where the law does not interpose to aid the complainant, there being no reason in conscience for preferring him to the defendant. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 738. In such a case the court will withhold its hand, and remit the parties to the courts of law, where legal rights are administered without the restraints imposed by conscience. Where, however, a Court of Chancery has, also, common law jurisdiction, and can enforce legal rights, the question arises whether it will apply the maxim, and refuse to hear the case. A case in Chancery Court, as such, has, however, common law jurisdiction. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., §§ 739-743. But, see Lenoir v. Mining Co., 4 Pick., 168. Snell concurs with Pomery, Snell’s Pr. Eq., 26-28.
2 In equis qui jure nonitor est condita possessandis.
3 And the plea must aver that the vendor was seized in fact, or pretended to be so seized. The vendee who prevails, must believe that he was acquiring the fee. Craig v. Leiper, 2 Yerg., 196; Rhea v. Allison, 3 Head, 177; Jarman v. Parley, 7 Lea, 141.
4 Pomery thus qualifies the rule laid down in the text; "Where the estate subsequently purchased is the legal estate, a notice, in order to be binding, must be received before the purchaser pays the price, or parts with other valuable consideration. In other words, if he has actually paid the valuable consideration without any notice, a notice afterwards given does not preclude him from completing the transaction by obtaining a conveyance of the legal title, and thereby securing the precedence due to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration and without notice. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., §§ 691; 755. See also, 1 Sto., Eq. Jur., § 64 c.; Womack v. Smith, 11 Hum., 483; Livingston v. Noc, 1 Lea, 66.
that it was actually paid, will not avail if the purchaser had notice before the deed was delivered, or the purchase otherwise absolutely consummated.

2. There Must Have Been a Valuable Consideration Paid. A valuable consideration means, and necessarily requires, under every form and kind of purchase, something of actual value, capable, in the estimation of the law, of pecuniary measurement, such as parting with money or money's worth, or an actual change of the purchaser's legal position for the worse. The amount of the purchase price, if otherwise there is good faith, is not generally material. As examples of what clearly amount to a valuable consideration are the following: (1) A contemporaneous advance or loan of money, (2) or a sale, transfer, or exchange of property, made at the time of the purchase, or execution of the instrument; (3) or the surrender or relinquishment of an existing legal right, or the assumption of a new legal obligation which is in its nature irrevocable. An antecedent debt is not deemed a valuable consideration, because the purchaser parts with nothing, and will lose nothing if the sale to him is set aside: he can be put in statu quo.

Not only must there be a valuable consideration in fact, but it must be paid before notice of the prior claim. Notice after the agreement for the purchase is made, but before any payment, will destroy the character of bona fide purchaser.

Where a part only of the price or consideration has been paid before notice, either the defendant should be entitled to the position and protection of a bona fide purchaser pro tanto; or the complainant should be permitted to enforce his claim to the whole land only upon condition of his doing equity, by refunding to the defendant the amount already paid before receiving the notice.

The payment must have been actually made, or what, in law, is tantamount to actual payment, must have been done, before any notice. Payment may consist of (1) a transfer of money, property, or things in action, or (2) an absolute change of the purchaser's legal position for the worse, or (3) the assumption by him of some new irrevocable legal obligation. It follows, therefore, that his own promise, contract, bond, covenant, bond and mortgage, or other non-negotiable security for the price, will not render the party a bona fide purchaser, nor entitle him to protection; for upon failure of the consideration he can be relieved from such obligations in Equity, even if not at law. Payment of actual cash is not indispensable. The absolute transfer of notes, bonds, or other securities made by a third person, will, however, constitute a good consideration.

3. There Must Have Been no Notice of Prior Equities. The purchaser must have completed his purchase and paid the consideration without any kind of notice, actual or constructive, of prior adverse rights in or to the subject-matter of his purchase. The rules of notice, and their underlying principles, have already been fully considered elsewhere, and need not be repeated; and only the time and effect of notice will be stated in this section. The rule is universal that if a purchaser receive notice of prior adverse rights in and to the subject matter of his purchase, before he has completely perfected his purchase, or paid the purchase price, he is not a bona fide purchaser.

If, however, a second purchaser for value and without notice purchases from a first purchaser who is charged with notice, he thereby becomes a bona fide purchaser.
purchaser, and is entitled to protection as such. Or, if a second purchaser with notice acquires title from a first purchaser who was without notice, and _bona fide_, he succeeds to all the rights of his immediate grantor. But if a person holding a title affected with notice, conveys to a _bona fide_ purchaser and afterwards takes a reconveyance to himself, he will hold the land subject to all the equities against it at the time he conveyed it.\(^{12}\)

4. There Must Have Been Good Faith in the Whole Transaction. As this defense is based largely on the alleged good faith of the purchaser, and as he specially avers this good faith in his plea, it necessarily results that if any act of bad faith appear, the defense of innocent purchaser will not avail. This bad faith may consist in: (1) a completion of the purchase after notice; (2) fraudulent conduct towards the vendor in the transaction; (3) participation in an intended fraud on the creditors of the vendor; (4) or any other matter showing that in the purchase the purchaser has not kept his hands absolutely clean.\(^ {13}\)

The law of notice and its effects has been heretofore considered somewhat generally, but a further consideration with special reference to the effect of notice upon purchasers is appropriate here.

Notice is either actual or constructive: 1. Actual notice is positive personal information of a fact directly communicated to the party, or directly acquired by him; 2. Constructive notice is the sort the law presumes the party to have acquired.

1. What Constructive Notice Includes. Constructive notice includes all kinds of notice not shown to have been actually given: it assumes that no information concerning the prior fact, claim, or right, has been directly and personally communicated to the party; or at least, that the communication of such information is not shown by evidence, but is only inferred by operation of legal presumption. It embraces all those instances, widely differing in their external features, in which either from certain extraneous facts, or from certain acts or omissions of the party himself, disclosed by the evidence, the information is conclusively presumed to have been given to or received by him, or is inferred by a prima facie presumption of the law in the absence of contrary proof.\(^{2}\)

2. What is Meant by Being Put Upon Inquiry. A purchaser, or person obtaining any right in specific property, is not affected by vague rumors, hearsay statements, and the like, concerning prior and conflicting claims upon the same property, because he thereby acquires no positive information, and obtains no tangible clue, by means whereof he may commence and successfully prosecute an inquiry into the truth. On the other hand, if the party obtained knowledge or information of facts which tend to show the existence of a prior right in conflict with the interest which he is seeking to obtain, and which are sufficient to put a reasonably prudent man upon inquiry, then it may be a legitimate, and perhaps even necessary, inference that he acquired the further information which constitutes actual notice. This inference may be defeated by proper evidence. If the party shows that he made the inquiry, and prosecuted it with reasonable diligence, but still failed to discover the conflicting claim, he thereby overcomes and destroys the inference. If, however, it appears that the party obtained knowledge or information of facts, which were sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry, and which were of such a nature that the inquiry, if prosecuted with reasonable diligence, would certainly have led to a discovery of the conflicting claim, then the inference that he acquired the information constituting actual notice is necessary and absolute; for this is only another mode of stating that the party was put upon inquiry, that he made the inquiry

\(^{13}\) 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 762. Where the proof shows that the purchaser designately abstained from making inquiry for the very purpose of avoiding notice, he will be held to be not an innocent purchaser. Snell's Pr. Eq., 34.

and arrived at the truth. Finally, if it appears that the party has knowledge or information of facts sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry, and that he wholly neglects to make any inquiry, or having begun it, fails to prosecute it in a reasonable manner, then, also, the inference of actual notice is necessary and absolute. 2a

3. What Facts will Put One on Inquiry. A purchaser may be put on inquiry by visible objects, structures, or easements upon, or connected with, the land with which he is dealing. So, a purchaser or encumbrancer of an estate, who knows, or is properly informed, that it is in the possession of a person other than the vendor or mortgagor with whom he is dealing, is thereby charged with a constructive notice of all the interest, rights and equities which such possessor may have in the land. But, in order that possession may put a purchaser on inquiry and operate as notice, it must exist at the time of the transaction by which his rights and interests are created.

Possession by a lessee is constructive notice to a purchaser, not only of the tenant's rights and interests directly growing out of, or connected with, the lease itself, but also of all rights and interests which he may have acquired by other and collateral agreements, as, for example, a contract to convey the land, or to renew the lease, and the like. 3

4. Notice by Recitals in Deeds. Whenever a purchaser holds under a conveyance, and is obliged to make out his title through that deed, or through a series of prior deeds, the general rule is firmly established that he has constructive notice of every matter connected with or affecting the estate, which appears, either by description of parties, by recital, by reference, or otherwise, on the face of any deed which forms an essential link in the chain of instruments through which he must derive his title. 4

Any description of the parties, as married women, trustees, executors, administrators or the like, any recital of fact, or reference to other documents, puts the purchaser upon inquiry; and he is bound to follow up this inquiry step by step, from one discovery to another, from one instrument to another, until the whole series of title-deeds is exhausted, and a complete knowledge of all the matters referred to in their provisions and affecting the estate, is obtained. 5

5. Effect of Notice of a Deed, or Other Instrument. If a purchaser or encumbrancer, dealing concerning property of which the record title appears to be complete and perfect, has information of extraneous facts or matters in pais, sufficient to put him on inquiry respecting some unrecorded conveyance, mortgage, or encumbrance, or respecting some outstanding interest, claim, or right which is not the subject of record, and he omits to make a proper inquiry, he will be charged with constructive notice of all the facts which he might have learned by means of a due and reasonable inquiry. 6

Where a purchaser has notice of a title-deed, he is presumed to know all its contents and is bound thereby; and if any conveyance, of which he has notice, should contain a recital of, or reference to, another deed otherwise collateral and not a part of the direct series, he would by means of such recital or reference, have notice of this collateral instrument, of all its contents and of all the facts indicated by it which might be ascertained through an inquiry prosecuted with reasonable diligence. This rule applies to both registered and unregistered instruments. 7

6. Notice by Registration. Our statutes authorize the registration of certain instruments, relating to the sale, incumbrance, lease and devise of real and personal property; and they make such instruments when duly probated and noted for registration, notice to all the world of their existence and contents.

7 Ibid. § 628.
The statutes give priority to these instruments in the order of their notation\(^8\) for registration; and they declare that any registrable instrument not properly probated or registered or noted for registration, shall be null and void as to existing or subsequent creditors of, or bona fide purchasers from, the makers without notice.\(^9\)

The objects of our registration laws are: (1) to preserve the muniments of title; (2) to perpetuate the evidence of their valid execution; (3) to give the community notice of the changes in the ownership of property; and (4) to prevent frauds both upon the bargainor and upon his creditors.\(^10\)

In order, therefore, that a registered instrument may be notice to the world it must be: (1) an instrument authorized to be registered; (2) it must be properly proven, or acknowledged and certified; (3) it must be registered, or noted, for registration; and (4) this registration must be in the proper county.

The record operates as a constructive notice only when the instrument itself is one which the statute authorized to be registered. The voluntary recording, therefore, of an instrument, when not authorized by the statute, would be a mere nullity, and would not charge subsequent purchasers with any notice of its contents, or of any rights arising under it.

For the same reason, the operation of a record as constructive notice is limited territorially. A record is not a notice with respect to any tract of land situated in a different county from that in which the registration is made. The statute requires the instrument to be registered in the same county in which the land, or a part of the land, is situated; a record in a different county is, therefore, inoperative as a constructive notice.

A record is a constructive notice only when, and so far as, it is a true copy, substantially, of the instrument which purports to be registered, and of all its provisions. Any material omission or alteration will certainly prevent the record from being a constructive notice of the part omitted or altered, although the instrument may appear, on the registry books, to be perfect and operative in all its parts. Nor will the record be a notice unless it, and the original instrument of which it is a copy, correctly and sufficiently describe the premises which are to be affected.

When all the foregoing requisites to a valid registration have been complied with; when an instrument is (1) one entitled to be registered and (2) has been duly executed and acknowledged or proved and certified, and (3) has been registered or noted for registration in the proper manner, and (4) in the proper county, then such record becomes a constructive notice, not only of the fact that the instrument exists, but of its contents, and of all the estates, rights, titles and interests, legal and equitable, created or conferred by it, or arising from its provisions.\(^11\)

PART II.

PROCEEDINGS IN A SUIT IN CHANCERY, FROM ITS PRELIMINARIES TO THE APPEARANCE OF THE DEFENDANT.

CHAPTER VI.

PROCEEDINGS PRELIMINARY TO A SUIT.

§ 77. The First Preliminary to a Suit in Chancery.

§ 78. In What Court to Bring Suit.

§ 77. The First Preliminary to a Suit in Chancery.—The first step taken by a Solicitor, preliminary to filing a bill in the Chancery Court, is to obtain the probable facts of the case from his client. This is sometimes no easy matter. Clients, when they seek to bring a suit, are often so strongly prejudiced, and so indignant, as to be downright incapable of giving a trustworthy history of their case. A vigorous cross-examination is often necessary to uncover important facts in the controversy. You should know not only your client's side of the proposed suit, but, also, the defences that the other side will, in all probability, interpose.1

It is never safe to institute a suit, without knowing the facts your client will be able to prove, according to the laws of evidence. As a rule, however, complainants are in the right. A person does not ordinarily seek a Solicitor to have a suit brought, unless he feels that a great wrong has been done him; and that an appeal to the Courts is his only method of obtaining what is justly his due. For this reason, when time presses, and the suit must be brought at once, or great risk be run, a Solicitor will, as a rule, be safe in bringing the suit on a prima facie case being made out by his client. Injunction and attachment bills must often be drawn with the greatest possible dispatch, the success of your client, in the race of diligence, often depending on a question of a few minutes. In such case, consume no time in sifting the facts, but begin to draw the bill as soon as you discover that an attachment, or injunction, is essential to your client's success. In such a case, however, investigate the facts fully at your earliest opportunity after the bill is filed, so that, if you discover that you have omitted any matter of importance, you may make an amendment before the defendant answers, which amendment you may then make without leave of the Court, or Chancellor, and without paying any costs, except for the copy of the amendment, and for serving the same on the defendants.2

§ 78. In What Court to Bring the Suit.—Having obtained possession of all the facts of the case from your client, the next question for you to determine is: In what Court to bring the suit. The Chancery Court has exclusive jurisdiction of all cases of an equitable nature, and if the suit be of such a nature, the only question will be: In what particular Chancery Court to bring this suit. In solving this problem you must consider the law in reference to the local

1 One of the best ways to ascertain what defence will be made to a suit, is to ask your client what plea or pretext the defendant sets up, in excuse of his conduct. Clients are so anxious to appear right in the eyes of their Solicitor that they will conceal important facts favorable to the other side, and searching questions will sometimes fail to discover the matters so concealed. But if you ask him what plea, pretext, or excuse, the defendant sets up, he will almost invariably at once disclose the whole of the probable defence; and you will then be able to test its validity.

jurisdiction of the Chancery Court, both as it respects the county where the defendant may be found, and as it respects the locality of the property, where property is sought to be attached, or where realty is sought to be reached, or affected.\(^3\)

If the suit is legal in its nature, you will then be called on to determine whether it is better to bring it in Chancery, or in the Circuit Court. If the suit be for an injury to person, property, or character, involving unliquidated damages, you are bound to bring the suit in the Circuit Court; but, if the suit be for any other legal matter, you may sue in either Court. In deciding which Court to institute proceedings in, the following considerations are important:

1. If your case is plain, and your client is content with exact justice, unmixed and uncorrupted with local prejudice, sue in Chancery. If, on the other hand, your cause is doubtful, and you need the aid of the artifices and devices incident to a jury trial, if you sue at all, go into the Circuit Court.

2. If your case is just, but your success depends on your crushing or paralyzing a dishonest and hostile witness, whom you wish to cross-examine in presence of a jury, and whose reputation you wish to attack, it may be better to sue in the Circuit Court, although a jury trial may be had in Chancery, also.

3. If your suit involves an account, or depends upon the construction or effect of writings, the Chancery Court is the better forum.

4. If your title to land depends upon the force and effect of your title papers, sue in Chancery; but if the suit is about the location of a line, or involves the question of adverse possession, then sue in the Circuit Court, unless you wish, also, to recover rents and the value of waste committed.

5. Where the witnesses are numerous, and the question is purely one of fact, and the proof is conflicting, the Circuit Court is preferable.

6. Where the whole matter, including its incidents, cannot be ended in the Circuit Court by one suit, as when your client is entitled (1) to land and its rents and profits, and value of timber cut; or (2) to personal property and its hire; or (3) to a debt that is a lien on property which you can have sold in satisfaction thereof; or (4) to a partition and adjustment of equities between the tenants in common; in such cases it is better to file a bill in Chancery and have all the various matters connected with the controversy adjudicated in one suit.

As a rule, if your cause is just, you are more certain of success in Chancery than in the Circuit Court. You run much less risk of witnesses failing to attend or being tampered with, or suddenly forgetting the essential facts, or being inextricably confused by cross examination; and you run no risks of unaccountable verdicts, or of unexpected or controvertible evidence being sprung on you. All in all, the Chancery Court is the safer Court, much the cheaper and equally as speedy, in the disposition of suits of a legal nature, where the jurisdiction is concurrent. Besides, if you win in Chancery there is far less danger of reversal by the Supreme Court, many Circuit Court suits being reversed because of errors committed by the Judge in charging the jury, or in admitting or rejecting evidence on the trial, in cases where the verdict would have been the same if no such error had been committed.

§ 79. Matters to be Considered in Reference to the Bill.—The first question to be considered in obtaining facts for framing the bill is: Who are necessary, and who proper, parties to the suit. This is often a matter of no little perplexity, and in the next chapter is treated of at length. Where there is doubt, whether a particular person can be properly made a complainant, make him a defendant, and pray that his rights may be declared and enforced along with those of the complainants, if he is deemed thereunto entitled. If it is doubtful whether a person should be made a defendant, it is better to include him in the bill, and let the Court determine the doubt: the additional cost is insignificant.

Having ascertained who are the proper parties, the next question to be ascertained is, whether the parties to the suit have any relations, such as husband and wife; parent and child; guardian and ward; personal representative and creditor, distributee or legatee; principal and agent; landlord and tenant; bargainor and bargainee; creditor and debtor; trustee and beneficiary, and the like; and if so, the rights and duties of the parties incident to that relation, and wherein those rights have been violated, and those duties not discharged. The ascertainment of these matters will enable you to frame your bill in a logical and orderly way, by stating: (1) the relation of the parties, and the dates, and facts; (2) the obligations the defendants incurred to complainant by reason of those relations; (3) wherein, when and how, those obligations have been violated, including any circumstances of atrocity, or special iniquity; and (4) by prayers for process and appropriate relief. The subject of bills is fully treated in a subsequent chapter.

If you ascertain that there are no relations between the parties, your bill will ordinarily begin by stating fully the right and title of the complainant, and when, and wherein, and under what circumstances, that right has been violated, and that title invaded or endangered.

By keeping the doctrine of relations in mind while obtaining the facts of his case from your client, you will find it much easier to elicit the essential matters; and you can begin the drawing of the bill at once, giving its parts in the order above stated.

When the bill has been drawn, if a verification is necessary, have your client make the oath. This is well for two reasons: first, it is his duty, and not yours, to verify his bill; and second, it is evidence of your retainer. Have your client sign the prosecution bond, for like reasons. It is no part of a Solicitor's duties to swear to his client's bill, or to secure the costs of his client's suit; and, as a rule, Solicitors should do these things only in exceptional cases.

And it will be well for the complainant's Solicitor to keep in mind these general rules:

1. The case must be within the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court;
2. It must be adequately set forth in a proper bill;
3. It must be substantiated by pertinent legal evidence;
4. It must be established by an appropriate decree; and,
5. It must be enforced by adequate final process.

4 The doctrine of relations is fully explained in the Chapter on Bills, post, §§ 165-169; 408.

§ 82. How Minors and Persons of Unsound Mind must Sue.

§ 83. How Married Women must Sue.

§ 85. Suits by Persons under a Quasi Disability.

§ 80. General Rule as to Parties Complainant.—Any person, natural or artificial, may bring a suit in the Chancery Court, except alien enemies, foreign executors and foreign administrators. Persons of unsound mind and infants must sue, however, by their regular guardian, or by a next friend; and married women must sue by next friend, except when they sue jointly with their husbands, or sue after being deserted by their husbands, or sue for a divorce. The term artificial persons, includes the United States, the State of Tennessee, the various counties and municipal corporations of the State, and all private corporations, and all partnerships, foreign and domestic.

Corporations, public and private, foreign and domestic, sue in their corporate name, the name given them in the statute or charter of incorporation. Counties sue in their county name. The State of Tennessee sues in her own name, by her Attorney General, or by her District Attorney; and, where the suit concerns some individual or individuals more than the State, she sues in her own name by her Attorney General, or her District Attorney, on the relation of the individual or individuals interested: these individuals are named relators; they are the real complainants, and are, therefore responsible for the costs of the suit.

1 The term “person” includes corporations; the term “administrators” includes executors; the term “heirs” includes devisees and also executors when there is any interest in reality devised to the latter. See Code, §§ 50; 57.

2 If an infant, or a married woman, or an idiot, or a lunatic, exhibiting a bill, appear upon the face of it to be thus incapable of instituting a suit alone, and no next friend or committee is named in the bill, the defendant may demur. But if the incapacity does not appear upon the face of the bill, the defendant must take advantage of it by plea. This objection extends to the whole bill, and advantage may be taken of it, as well in the case of a bill for discovery merely, as in the case of a bill for relief. Sto. Eq. Pl., § 494.

3 Sto. Eq. Pl., §§ 49-66; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 5. It is one of the boasts of the Chancery Courts that their doors are open to every person who has suffered a wrong cognizable in Equity.

§ 81. Suits by Alien Enemies, and Foreign Administrators and Executors. —Alien enemies are the citizens of a nation with whom the United States are at war. Such enemies, while residing out of the United States, can neither sue nor be sued in any Court within the United States; but if they reside here, and are not forbidden by the General or State governments to remain, they are under no disability to sue or be sued, and have the same rights in Court as alien friends. An executor or administrator appointed in another State can neither sue nor be sued in this State, as such; but if he brings assets into this State he may be held liable therefor as a constructive trustee.

§ 82. How Minors and Persons of Unsound Mind Must Sue. —Minors and persons of unsound mind, in consequence of their mental incapacity to attend to their business affairs, as well as their inability to bind themselves for the costs of the suit, or to make any contract relative thereto, are not allowed to institute a suit directly in their own names, and on their own motion. But as these persons frequently need the active interposition of the Court to protect their interests, the Court allows their guardians to institute suits in their behalf, to assert their rights, or to vindicate their wrongs. And if they have no guardian, or if the guardian himself neglects his duties, or is the person to be sued, the Court will permit any person who is sui juris to bring suit in their behalf: this person is styled the next friend, or prochein ami, of the infant or person of unsound mind in whose behalf he sues. A person of unsound mind may sue by next friend, either before or after an inquisition of lunacy, but if he has a guardian he must sue by the guardian, unless the latter has violated his trust, in which case the non compos may sue by next friend, making his guardian a defendant.

A bill may even be filed on behalf of an infant unborn, (in ventre sa mere,) by its next friend, when its interests demand; and in such a case, an injunction will be granted to stay waste on lands that will belong to the infant at its birth. A guardian appointed for a minor, or non compos, in another State, cannot in strict practice sue here as such. Should he sue as such, however, the Court will not repel him, but will recognize him as the next friend, and allow the suit to proceed to final decree; and then take the proper steps to secure to the infant the recovery, if any be decreed it.

A person of unsound mind may file a bill and prosecute a suit in his own name, if the defendant fail to object thereto at the right time, and in the right manner. The Court will not dismiss a suit brought by a person of unsound mind, at any stage, if a competent person will assume the office of next friend for him.

§ 83. How Married Women Must Sue. —On her marriage, many of a married woman’s rights become vested in her husband, and as to many of her interests he becomes as sort of guardian, or next friend. Hence, in all ordinary cases, where it becomes necessary to bring suit for the protection of the wife’s rights, she sues along with her husband. Besides, being unable to bind herself for the costs of the suit, it is necessary to have some one joined with her as complainant, who can be held responsible for the costs. Whenever there is no conflict between the interests of the wife and those of the husband, she must, ordinarily, sue jointly with her husband; but whenever there is a conflict, whenever the husband is asserting, or has asserted, claims inconsistent with his wife’s rights, or has, by his own act, or neglect, debarred himself from protecting her rights; in all such cases he stands in the position of a guardian who has violated his trust duties; and his wife may file a bill by a next friend, making her husband, and all others who have wronged her, parties defendant. So, whenever the wife sues in reference to her separate property, she should sue by next friend, and her husband should be made a defendant.\textsuperscript{15} When the joint right of action of husband and wife to recover land belonging to the wife is barred, she may sue by next friend, and recover, making her husband a defendant.\textsuperscript{16}

But no person can act as next friend for a married woman without her consent,\textsuperscript{17} unless she be a minor, also.\textsuperscript{18}

\section*{§ 84. When a Married Woman May Sue, or Be Sued, Alone.—}The law of Tennessee is liberal to married women, and has emancipated them from some burdensome bonds of servitude. By the common law, on her marriage, all her legal rights became vested in her husband, and she could do nothing without his consent and guidance.\textsuperscript{19} The Court of Chancery first extended a helping hand to married women, by allowing them to sue by next friend; and now, by the aid of the statute, where a husband has deserted his family, his wife may prosecute, or defend in his name, any action, which he might have prosecuted or defended; and she may also sue, or be sued, in her own name, for any cause of action accruing subsequent to such desertion.\textsuperscript{20} She may, also, sue and be sued alone, when her husband has been declared insane by the verdict of a jury;\textsuperscript{21} and when it becomes necessary for her to file a bill of divorce, she may do so in her own proper person, and without any next friend.\textsuperscript{22} She may, also, sue or be sued alone, if her husband has permanently left the State; or, is confined in the penitentiary, or is otherwise civilly dead.\textsuperscript{23} If a married woman is engaged in the mercantile or manufacturing business in her own name, or by agent, or as partner, she may be sued as a \textit{feme sole} for debts incurred in such business, and cannot plead her coverture in such cases.\textsuperscript{24}

It would seem from a general survey of our decisions and statutes, that it may be laid down as a general rule in Tennessee, that, whenever the wife is living separate from her husband without her fault, she may sue and be sued as a single woman.\textsuperscript{25} But if a married woman, who could otherwise sue or be sued alone, is a minor, or of unsound mind, she must sue by guardian or next friend, and must defend by guardian, or guardian \textit{ad litem}, like any other minor, or \textit{non compos}.

\section*{§ 85. Suits by Persons under a Quasi Disability.—}Deaf and dumb persons, if also very ignorant and incapable of being fully communicated with as to their property rights, may be allowed to sue by next friend. So may persons in their dotage, or imbecile adults, or any person not strictly a \textit{non compos} and yet not able to manage his business affairs.\textsuperscript{26} If a person has religious scruples against being a party to a suit, he may sue by next friend.\textsuperscript{27}

But in this respect she is differently placed from an infant; for no person can exhibit a bill as her next friend, without her consent; whereas, an infant's consent to a bill filed in his name is not necessary. Where a suit is brought by the husband in his own name and in that of his wife, it is considered as his suit only, and, accordingly, it will not be absolutely binding on her. In like manner, the husband may sue the wife, for Equity, for the purpose of enforcing its own marital rights against her, or the property, whether such rights result from her ante-nuptial agreement, or from the general principles of Law or Equity; or whenever he seeks relief upon some claim adverse to or in opposition to his wife; for (it has been well said) it is constant experience, that the husband may sue the wife, or the wife the husband, in Equity, notwithstanding, at law, neither of them can sue the other. ARTICLE II.
WHO MAY BE SUED IN CHANCERY.

§ 86. General Rule as to Parties Defendant. — In general, it may be stated that every person, who may sue in the Chancery Court, may also be sued; and, in addition, all persons who may or must sue, by guardian or next friend, may be sued, for they cannot plead their disability in their defense. The only persons, natural or artificial, who cannot be sued, are (1) the State of Tennessee, (2) alien enemies residing out of the State in time of war, (3) foreign executors and foreign administrators, and (4) public corporations created by and in another State for governmental purposes.

It is sometimes said that bankrupts cannot sue, or be sued. The reason of this is, their estate, by operation of law, has become vested in their assignees, and they, therefore, cannot legally sue, or be sued, because they have no interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and no decree can, consequently, be pronounced against them. What is meant by bankrupts not being able to sue, and not being subject to be sued is, that if they sue no decree can be rendered in their favor; and if they are sued, no decree can be rendered against them, if the fact of their assignment or discharge in bankruptcy, the suit will proceed as though no bankruptcy existed.

§ 87. Suits against Infants and Lunatics. — Minors, married women, and persons of unsound mind, may be sued; but, as they are incapable of defending a suit by themselves, they must make their defense through others not under any disability. Minors and persons of unsound mind defend a suit by their regular guardians, if they have such; but if they have no guardian, or if the guardian is a complainant, or is adversely interested, they defend by a guardian ad litem, appointed by the Chancellor, or the Master, for that purpose. Where a minor is, also, a married woman, it is nevertheless necessary that she should defend by a guardian ad litem, the practice being to appoint her husband to be her guardian ad litem, when he is a co-defendant, and there is no conflict of interest.

Perhaps, however, a failure to have a guardian ad litem appointed for a married woman, who was a minor, but who joined with her husband in answering the bill, would not make the proceedings void as to her, if it appeared that she had full defense made for her, and was, in no way, prejudiced by not having a guardian ad litem. In such a case her husband would, no doubt, be deemed a de facto guardian ad litem.

and their answer must also be joint. There are exceptions, however, to the rule, in both of its requirements. A married woman may be made a defendant, and answer as a single woman; as, for example, whenever her husband is complainant in the suit, and sues her as defendant; for, in such a case, he elects to treat her as a single woman for the purposes of the suit. But, generally, a married woman cannot answer separately, when her husband is joined, or ought to be joined, as a defendant in the suit, without an order of Court for that purpose, founded upon special circumstances. Thus, where a married woman is sued in respect to her separate estate, or where she claims as a defendant, in opposition to her husband, or lives separate from him, or disapproves of the defense which he wishes her to make, she may obtain an order of the Court for liberty to answer and defend the suit separately; and in such a case her answer may be read against her. If a married woman obstinately refuses to join in a defense with her husband, the latter may obtain an order to compel her to make a separate defense. If the husband has, upon leave, answered separately, the wife may, upon order, afterwards file her separate answer. If the husband be abroad, and not answerable to the jurisdiction, the complainant in the suit may obtain an order, that she shall answer separately. Except under circumstances of this and a similar nature, a married woman can defend a suit only jointly with her husband, unless she is living separate from him in some of the cases stated in a preceding section. But if she is engaged in the mercantile or manufacturing business in her own name, or by an agent, or as partner, she may be sued as a feme sole for the debts incurred in the conduct of such business, and no plea of coverture will avail in such cases.

Where the married woman is, also, a minor, she must defend by guardian ad litem, as before stated.

But if a married woman is sued as a single woman, and fails to plead her coverture, a judgment or decree against her will be valid, and may be enforced against her general property, but not against her separate estate.

§ 89. Suits against Counties, Cities and other Corporations.—Names stand for the things named, and we know things by their names. The law recognizes this, and allows all persons, natural and artificial, to be sued by those names whereby they are known. Counties are sued by their statutory names, as “Shelby county,” “Davidson county,” “Knox county,” and the like. Cities and incorporated towns are generally sued by their corporate names, being the name given them in the Act or charter of incorporation; but, as the complainant may not know the exact corporate name of a city or town, he may sue it by the name it is generally known by. Thus, if its proper name is “The Mayor and City Council of Nashville,” the city may nevertheless be sued as “The City of Nashville.” Private corporations may be sued by their corporate names, or by the names by which they are generally known in the community where they do business. The officers of a corporation may be made defendants along with their corporation, and required to answer under oath, when a discovery is sought.

15 When a name is mentioned, if we know the person, or thing, his or its image, characteristics and person, it rises up before our mental vision. Thus, names are the symbols of things. Nomina sunt symbola rerum; and, as is said in Coke, Nomina si nata propter cognitio rerum—(If you know not the names of things, the knowledge of them is lost.) The law deals with things and persons by the names they are known by.
16 Corporations, like other persons, are supposed to know their baptismal names, but third persons are not; and so, third persons may sue a corporation, as well as a natural person, by the name by which it, or he, is generally known in the community. GENERAL RULES AS TO PARTIES.

§ 90. Principles Applied in Determining the Proper Parties.

§ 91. General Rules as to Who Should be Parties.

§ 92. Exceptions to the General Rules as to Parties.

§ 93. Who are Proper, and who Necessary Parties.

§ 94. Who are Not Proper Parties.

§ 95. Summary of the Rules as to Parties.

§ 90. Principles Applied in Determining the Proper Parties.—Courts of Equity adopt two leading principles for determining the proper parties to a suit.

1. One of them is that the rights of no man shall be finally decided unless he himself is present, or at least has had a full opportunity to appear and vindicate his rights.

2. The other is, that, if the decision of any part of the subject-matter of the suit will affect the present or contingent rights or interests of any person or persons, or, if a complete decree cannot be made upon all the matters involved, without having certain persons, or the interests of certain persons, before the Court, then all such persons must be made parties, or their interests otherwise duly represented.

It is the constant aim of Courts of Equity to do complete justice, by deciding upon and settling the rights of all persons interested in the subject-matter of the suit, so that the performance of the decree of the Court may be perfectly safe to those who are compelled to obey it; and also, that future litigation may be prevented. Hence the maxim, that Courts of Equity delight to do complete justice, and not by halves. And hence, also, it is a general rule in Equity, (subject to certain exceptions, which will hereafter be noticed,) that all persons materially interested, either legally or beneficially, in the subject-matter of a suit, must be made parties to it, either as complainants or as defendants, however numerous they may be. By this means the Court is enabled to make a complete decree between the parties, and to prevent future litigation by taking away the necessity of a multiplicity of suits. When all the parties are before the Court, the whole case may be seen; and full and complete justice done to all and in every particular, however various and conflicting their interests may be.1

§ 91. General Rules as to Who should be Parties.—It may, therefore, be stated as a general rule, that all persons who have any interest in the subject-matter of the suit, or who are liable to be affected by the decree prayed for, are proper parties to the suit. It matters not how small the interest, or whether that interest be legal or equitable, direct or remote,2 so that it is an actual existing interest; a mere possibility or probability of a future interest will not be sufficient.3 It must be borne in mind, however, that parties are necessarily made according to the charges in the bill, and not according to the result of the decree.4 If the bill show the parties to be proper, that is sufficient.

All persons are proper parties who have any interest, legal or equitable, in the recovery sought, or who are in any way liable to be called on to satisfy the demands of those who complain. Persons who have the legal title to propcery in litigation, even though they have no beneficial interest therein, must be made parties; and so must all persons without whom a complete decree, disposing of all the various parts of the controversy, could not be made. Equity delights to do justice in full and not by halves, and acting on this maxim, the Court requires the complainants to bring before it every person necessary to enable it to so completely determine the matters in dispute that no further litgation will be necessary. This requirement is the price of the relief to be granted.

Whenever a person, if living, would have been a proper party, his privies in estate must be made parties; if his personal estate is involved, his personal representatives must be made parties. So, if a person would have been a proper party had his interests continued in him, his privy in estate must be made a party in his place, whether such privy be an assignee, or a purchaser at an execution, or other, sale.

Whenever a trust estate is liable to be affected by the decree, both the beneficiaries and trustee should be made parties; and whenever the rights of a wife are involved in the litigation, she and her husband must both be made parties, unless the husband has wrongfully abandoned the wife, in which case she may sue or be sued alone.

Inasmuch as the wife has an interest in the homestead, which she may assert in Court, both against her husband and his bargainees and creditors, it is always prudent to make her a defendant, along with her husband, in all suits brought to recover possession of the homestead, or to divest the title thereof out of him, or to sell the same, or to enforce any lien, claim or right thereeto. If she is not made a party, no decree against her husband will bind her, and she may relitigate the question of homestead, or any other right in, or to the land, after final decree against her husband.

A bill to affect an equity in land or personality must make the holder of the legal title a party; and, on the other hand, a bill to affect the legal title must make the owner of the equitable title a party, if any there be.

§ 92. Exceptions to the General Rules as to Parties.—In the first place, it must be always remembered that Courts of Equity observe general rules, only in so far as they contribute to the attainment of justice; and they struggle against technical rules which impede its power to do justice. It is manifest that a general rule, established for a proper administration of justice, ought not to be adhered to in cases where it would defeat justice, for then it would destroy the very purpose for which it was established. Therefore, the general rule that all persons interested must be made parties, is not adhered to:

1. Where the Parties are Unknown, and cannot be ascertained upon diligent inquiry, in which case they must be made defendants by description, as hereafter shown.

2. Where the Parties are Numerous, but the general rights of those entitled to relief are the same, in which case one or more of them may sue on the behalf of all.

3. Where the Parties are Very Numerous, so that it would be impracticable to make them all parties, without thereby causing almost interminable delays, by reason of deaths, marriages and transfer of interests; but in such case provision is made to secure the rights of those not actually made parties.

v. Francis, 2 Verg., 534; McCabe v. Crichfield, 3 Heisk., 291. But in such cases the bill must allege that the suit is brought against the particular defendants, as representatives of the numerous class to which they belong. If the bill proceeds against the defendants sued, as individuals, and not as representatives of a class, then the proceedings in the case will not bind those not made parties. Brown 13 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 89; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 227-245; Code, § 4288; Nance v. Busby, 7 Pick., 315.
4. Where Parties not in Being are Liable to be Affected. It sometimes happens that persons not in being, (not in esse,) are interested in property which the interest of parties in being require to be brought before the Court. In such a case the bill may be filed by or against the interested persons in being, (in esse,) and the decree will be binding on those not in being. All the interested persons in being must be made parties, both life-tenants and remainder-men: if no remainder-man be in being then the life-tenant must be made a party, in which case the remainder-men will be bound by the decree, they being represented by the life-tenant. Thus a decree of partition among tenants for life, with remainder to unborn sons, will be binding on the sons when born. In all such cases, however, all the parties interested who are in being must be before the Court.

But in all these exceptional cases, so solicitous is the Court to attain the purposes of substantial justice, that it will generally require the bill to be filed, not only in behalf of the plaintiff, but also in behalf of all other persons interested, who are not directly made parties, so that they may come in under the decree, and take the benefit of it, or show it to be erroneous, or entitle themselves to a rehearing. The Court will go further, and in such cases: it will entertain a bill, or petition, which shall bring the rights and interests of the absent parties more distinctly before the Court, if there is any certainty, or even danger, of injury or injustice to them.

In all the foregoing cases, the bill should show a state of facts bringing the suit within one of the exceptions to the general rule.

It may here be remarked, that the general rule requiring all persons interested to be made parties, is not so much a right of the parties brought before the Court, as a rule prescribed by Courts of Equity, themselves, founded on their notions of public policy, on their anxiety to do justice to all persons interested in the subject-matter of the litigation, and on a desire to prevent future controversies.

§ 93. Who are Proper, and who Necessary Parties.—A distinction exists between proper parties, and necessary parties: proper parties are those whose interests in the matters involved in the litigation are such that a decree may be properly pronounced without their being before the Court; whereas, necessary parties are those without whom no complete decree can be made.

1. Necessary Parties are: 1. Those who are entitled to share in the benefits of the relief sought; 2. Those who are indebted to the complainants, or who are withholding from them their legal or equitable rights, or property; 3. Those who are doing, or attempting to do, complainants some injury; 4. Those who have legal or equitable titles or claims adverse to those set up by the complainants; 5. Those who hold titles or interests which, if not bound by the decree, might cloud the title of the complainants, or that of the purchaser at the Master's sale; and 6. Those having any interest in the subject-matter of the litigation, present or contingent.

2. Proper Parties are: 1. Those against whom some of the defendants, if held liable to complainants, would be entitled to judgment over; 2. Those whose rights in the subject-matter of the controversy have terminated, but no proper evidence thereof has been given, and the complainant's desire to conclude those rights by the decree; 3. Those who, while not liable to complainants or to their co-defendants, have claims, admitted to be inferior to those of complainants, which should be bound by the decree to clear up the title, or adjust all equities.

In determining whether a particular person is a necessary party or not, it must be considered: 1, Whether, if he should be omitted, the complainant could obtain all the relief he seeks; 2, Whether, if he should be omitted, he could re-litigate any of the matters the bill seeks to have adjudicated; and, 3, Whether, if he should be omitted, and the property in dispute is sold, he could, either at law, or in Equity, disturb the title of the purchaser.  If either of these questions be answered in the affirmative, such person is a necessary party; otherwise he is not.

Where there is doubt whether a certain person is a necessary party, the safer rule is to make him a defendant, and thus leave the question to him and the Court to determine.

§ 94. Who are Not Proper Parties.—As a rule, a person who has no interest whatever, legal or equitable, in the subject-matter of the controversy, and for or against whom no decree in reference thereto can be pronounced, is not a proper party. To constitute a person a proper party, he must be so connected with the matter in dispute as: (1) to be entitled to have something beneficial decreed him, some relief granted him; or, (2) to be under some obligation to the complainant capable of being enforced; or, (3) to have some estate in him, legal or equitable, real or apparent, liable to be divested out of him for the complainant’s benefit; or, (4) to be doing some act to complainant’s injury subject to injunction; or, (5) to have some right involved in the controversy necessary for him to protect or enforce, or necessary to be determined.

Persons against whom no relief is prayed are not proper parties; nor are mere servants, agents, auctioneers, attorneys, arbitrators, sheriffs, constables, or other officers issuing or executing process, proper parties, unless they have done, or are doing, acts entitling the complainant to affirmative relief against them. It sometimes, however, becomes necessary to make such persons parties in order to give them authoritative notice of an injunction restraining them. Tenants claiming under a party to the suit, and mortgagors who have conveyed all their legal and equitable interests in the estate, are not, ordinarily, proper parties.

But there is a class of persons who have an interest in the property before the Court, and yet who are neither necessary nor proper parties to the suit. This class includes persons who have an interest in the subject-matter of the suit, but whose title is paramount to that of the complainant, and against whom, or whose title, the complainant is entitled to no relief and seeks no decree; such as (1) prior mortgagees in a foreclosure suit; (2) owners of the fee in a suit for possession between tenants and sub-tenants; and (3) the remainder-man in a suit between the tenants for life relative to their rights. The persons having these paramount titles are neither necessary nor proper parties. Subsequent mortgagees are proper parties, but not necessary parties, nevertheless, it is well to make them parties in order to conclude their rights and extinguish their claims by the decree.

§ 95. Summary of the Rules as to Parties.—The following is a summary of the general rules as to parties in equitable suits:

1. All persons may sue and be sued; but persons under disability must sue and be sued through persons not under disability, with some exceptions in case of married women.

2. All persons having any interest or title, legal or equitable, in the subject-matter of the suit, or liable to be beneficially or injuriously affected by the relief sought, are proper parties, unless they are very numerous; in which case some may sue or be sued in behalf of all, when it can be done without injustice to any.

3. All persons beneficially interested in the relief sought may join as complainants; all other persons should be made defendants. Persons under disability should ordinarily be made defendants, unless they are specially complaining of violations of their rights.
ARTICLE IV.
WHO SHOULD BE COMPLAINANTS.
§ 96. General Rules as to Parties Complaint.
§ 97. Who should be Complainants when the Parties are Very Numerous.

§ 98. All Parties having Concurrent Interests should be Co-complainants.
§ 99. How Husband and Wife Sue and are Sued.

§ 96. General Rules as to Parties Complainant.—All persons who have a beneficial interest in the relief to be sought may join as complainants. It is not necessary that the interest of the complainants should in every instance be identical; a community of interest is, generally, all that is requisite. 1 There must, however, be no incongruity in their claims, for a joinder of complainants with distinct, inconsistent and hostile claims and grounds of relief, would lead to much inconvenience and confusion, and will not be allowed by the Court. 2 Neither can complainants join in a suit on the ground that if some of them are not entitled to recover, the others are entitled; 3 but the bill must show on its face that each and all of the complainants are interested in the relief sought, and have a right to the same, although their proportions of the recovery may be different. A mere spark of right in a party, without any beneficial interest whatever, will justify making him a co-complainant when the little right he has is consistent with the rights of the other complainants. 4

All persons having the same interest, or seeking the same relief, may join as complainants in the same bill; 5 indeed, they should join, if the consent of all can be obtained, unless their number is too great, and then, as elsewhere shown, 6 one or more may sue in behalf of all. Whenever a person who may, or should be, a complainant refuses to join in the suit, or is out of reach so that he cannot be consulted, he must be made a defendant. 7

The rule that persons claiming under different titles cannot be joined as complainants in the same suit does not apply to cases where their titles, though distinct, are not inconsistent with each other. Thus, all the creditors of a decedent may join as co-complainants to have his assets properly administered, although they claim under distinct titles. 8 So, two or more persons may unite to enjoin a nuisance injurious to all. 9

§ 97. Who Should be Complainants when the Parties are very Numerous.—As already shown, the Court does not require all of the persons interested in a suit to be made parties, when it is impracticable. 10 If the persons interested are too numerous to be all brought before the Court, the Court will not insist on their being made parties, 11 but will allow one or more to sue in behalf of their entire class. Cases of this character may be divided into three classes:

10 Ante, § 92.
11 Sto. Eq. Pl., §§ 94; 135 a. The question may arise: What number would be too numerous to make them all parties? No doubt the answer to this question would be governed somewhat by the magnitude of the individual interests. If the various interests be very small, it is suggested that ten or more would be too numerous, as ten is a multitude in law, Bouvier’s L. Dict., “Multitude.” In McCaleb v. Crichfield, 5 Heisk., 282, thirty-nine legates were held to be too numerous. In an English case, twenty creditors, interested in real estate, were held not to be too numerous, 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 237; see, also, Sto. Eq. Pl., § 131 a. Finney v. Garner, 2 Cates, 67. The complainant who undertakes to represent a class must have a good ground of suit, or the suit may be dismissed. Nance v. Busby, 7 Pick., 315; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 244.
1. Where the Question is one of Common or General Interest. In such a case one, or more, interested in the relief sought, may sue for the benefit of all. This class includes creditors of a decedent, 12 creditors of a fraudulent vendor. 13 creditors who are parties to a deed of trust, 14 legateses under a will, 15 distributees of the estate of a decedent, 16 and creditors of an insolvent partnership, or of an insolvent corporation, and indeed, all persons interested in the distribution of any fund, especially a trust fund.

2. Where the Persons Interested are Members of a Voluntary Association. This association may be for either public or private purposes. In cases of this sort, a few may sue for the benefit of themselves and all the others, care being taken to have a due representation of all substantial interests before the Court. 17 This class includes literary and social clubs, unincorporated insurance, labor, political, charitable, and religious associations; and all sorts of voluntary societies for pleasure or improvement, partaking somewhat of the character of a partnership. In cases under this sub-division, suits may be brought against a few of very many members of such societies, clubs and associations, care being taken to make defendants of those who fairly represent the interest of all. In such case it would be well to make defendants, (1) of the managers, executive committee, or other directory of the society, if any exist; or, (2) of the committee who incurred the liability sought to be enforced. The bill should charge that the members of the society are numerous, and many unknown, and should give the reason for suing the defendants in particular. 18

3. Where the Parties are Numerous, but have Common Rights or Interests. In this class there is usually a privity of interest between the parties; but such privity is not essential. There must, however, be a common interest, or a common right, which the bill seeks to establish, and enforce, or a general claim, or privilege, which it seeks to establish, or to narrow, or to take away. In such cases, a few may sue in behalf of themselves, and all others standing in the same predicament, the Court taking care that sufficient persons are before it to fairly and fully ascertain and determine the general right in contest. 19 § 98. All Parties Having Concurrent Interests Should Be Co-complainants. All persons who have a right to partake of a general recovery should join as complainants in prosecuting a suit to obtain such recovery. 20 There are several reasons for this rule: 1, It simplifies the examination and cross-examination of witnesses to have the parties all properly marshalled, those having the same interests all standing on one side; 2, It makes the argument and the hearing more orderly; 3, It enables a decree to be drawn more logically and with less verbiage; 4, It has the effect to better apportion the burdens of the litigation, and to lessen the costs; and, 5, It enables both sides to prepare their cases with more accuracy, speed, and general satisfaction.

In suits to recover personal property, all of the joint owners must join as complainants, 21 and in suits to enforce any joint right, joint obligation, or joint claim, all the joint owners must join as complainants or give some good reason for not so doing, in which latter case the joint owner not suing must be made a defendant. 22 All the joint owners of a fund should join in a suit for its recovery; all partners, joint trustees, joint executors, and joint administrators must join in a bill filed to assert their claims as such. 23

name, for all personal property or contract rights accruing to the wife, or to the husband and wife jointly, during marriage; but in Courts of Equity, in all cases in which the husband seeks to recover the property of his wife, he should join her with him as co-complainant, whether the right to the property accrued before or during marriage. The reason of this rule is the parental care Courts of Equity exercise over persons under disability, and the necessity of guarding the wife's equity to a settlement.\(^{25}\)

But when it is necessary for her to sue alone, as stated elsewhere,\(^{26}\) she must sue, ordinarily, by next friend, making her husband a defendant. Whenever there is any antagonism of interest between her and her husband, whenever her husband, by his acts or negligence, is estopped or barred of his right to sue along with his wife for the assertion of her rights, she may sue by next friend, making the husband a defendant.\(^{27}\) When the husband has deserted his wife, or has been adjudged a non compos, she may both sue and be sued as a single woman.\(^{28}\)

Whenever the wife is sued, her husband must ordinarily be made a defendant along with her,\(^{29}\) even if she is sued as an executrix,\(^{30}\) unless he has deserted her, or is adjudged a non compos, or she is sued on a debt incurred by her in a mercantile or manufacturing business,\(^{31}\) when she may be sued as a feme sole. And as a wife can sue her husband in the Chancery Court whenever her separate interests require, so a husband may sue his wife in the same Court when his separate interests so require.\(^{32}\)

ARTICLE V.
WHO SHOULD BE DEFENDANTS.

§ 100. General Rule as to Parties Defendant.—All persons against whom relief is sought, or who are interested in resisting the relief sought, must necessarily be made defendants; as must, also, all others whose interests in the subject-matter of the suit are adverse to, or inconsistent with, the interests of the complainants. All persons claiming any title, legal or equitable, to the property in controversy, must be made defendants, if such title is in conflict with the title set up by the complainants. All persons whose rights are concurrent with those of the complainants, but who have not consented to become complainants, must be made defendants.¹ And, in general, all persons interested in the subject-matter of the suit, or liable to be affected in any way by the decree sought, whether their interest or liability be legal or equitable, who do not join as complainants in filing the bill, should be made defendants.²

§ 101. When Parties under Disabilities should be made Defendants.—Although lunatics may appear by attorney when suing or being sued,³ nevertheless, when there is a choice of position in suits affecting their interests, they should be made defendants, and should defend by guardian ad litem when they have no regular guardian. The same rule applies to minors, with, perhaps, even greater force. The reason of this rule is, the Court can better guard the interests of minors when defendants than when complainants; and, besides, the attitude of a defendant in a suit in Equity is, in various respects, more advantageous and safe for infants than that of a complainant.⁴ Nevertheless, it is not reversible error to join a non compositus or a minor as complainant in a suit necessary to assert their rights, they, of course, suing by guardian, if they have one, otherwise by next friend. A lunatic may sue, or be sued, in person, and may appear or defend by a Solicitor of the Court, like a person sui juris;⁵ but the more prudent course is to have them sue by next friend when they are complainants, and defend by guardian ad litem when defendants.

§ 102. Suggestions as to Whom to make Defendants.—In determining who should be made complainants and who defendants to a suit in Chancery, the draftsman of the bill should ascertain: 1, Who are the persons to be benefited by the relief sought; 2, Who are the persons against whom the relief is sought, and 3, Who are the persons, if any, having rights, legal or equitable, without beneficial interests, liable to be affected by the decree.

1. The First Class includes all who have a right to be benefited by the decree prayed for; and if there be no conflicts in their respective interests, they may all be joined as complainants, and should be so joined, if their consent can be obtained. If such consent cannot be had, they must be made defendants.

2. The Second Class includes all persons against whom relief is sought; all persons liable to the complainants' demands, primarily or secondarily; all persons charged with doing complainants some wrong, or withholding some right. This entire class must be made defendants, unless there be some special reason for not suing them, such as their death, insolvency, or absence from the State, which reason should be stated in the bill. If there be any remaindermen not in being, or any other person not in being, having a contingent interest, the life-tenant must be made a defendant to represent them.

3. The Third Class includes all those having dry titles, legal or equitable, without any beneficial interest, to the property in litigation; such as holders of the naked legal title; dry or naked trustees, absolute assignors of a non-negotiable thing; mortgagors, who have informally assigned their entire equity of redemption; mortgagees under an absolute deed whose debt has been fully paid, or wholly transferred; and, in short, all persons who, while in no particular default, are nevertheless so connected with the subject-matter of the litigation that they should be bound by the decree, either to wholly determine all the various branches of the controversy, or to perfect the title to the property before the Court. All persons belonging to this third class may be made defendants; if, however, there be no conflict between the rights and interests of the first and third classes the persons in the latter may be joined as co-complainants; but, as a rule, the better course is to make all persons in the third class parties defendant.

If the persons seeking benefits under the decree sought have adverse or conflicting interests in the subject-matter of the suit, or in the relief sought, they cannot join as co-complainants; and one set or the other of those having conflicting interests must be made defendants; for, in a law-suit, as in a battle, assailants cannot engage in a conflict between themselves, and make a successful assault on their adversaries, at the same time. There must be a community, or, perhaps more correctly speaking, a congruity of interests among the complainants; and their cause of action, or right of recovery, must be substantially the same, although their proportions of the recovery, or their interests therein, may be unequal. And, as a rule, there must be a common source of title or interest, or at least some bond of union, between the various complainants, such as exists between joint heirs; between partners; between tenants in common; between joint trustees; between joint executors, or joint administrators; between the creditors of the same estate; between the wards of the same guardian; between the beneficiaries under the same trust; between the legatees or devisees under the same will; between the sureties on the same instrument; between the payors or payees of the same obligations; between the parties to the same contract, bond, or deed; between members of the same association, or corporation, and, generally, between the persons subject to the same general burden, or entitled to share in the same general benefit.

On the other hand, there need be no community or congruity of interests among the defendants; they may, and often are, adversely concerned among themselves, or liable in different amounts, in different degrees, and on different accounts; indeed, some of the defendants may have the same rights of recovery and general relief as some of the complainants, or may have other affirmative rights against some of their co-defendants, and may be entitled to a decree against some of them, either in the first place, as though they were suing as complainants or, in the second place, because they are only liable to complainants in case of default by their co-defendants. To illustrate this: One of several wards, who has had several guardians, may sue all of his guardians, and all of their sureties, in one suit, and may make the other wards defendants: in such a case, the Court may decree in favor of the defendant wards, as well as the complainant; and may, also, decree the primary liability of the obligees on some of the bonds, and decree against them in favor of the obligees only secondarily liable, the pleadings so permitting.
Sometimes, it cannot be ascertained at the institution of a suit whether a certain person is a necessary party or not, his rights, or liabilities depending for their existence upon the adjudication itself: in all such cases, the person should be made a defendant.\(^6\)

\(^6\) Thus, on a bill to enforce a vendor's lien, after the vendee's death, the widow may have an interest. because there may be a surplus after the debt and costs are paid. Edwards v. Edwards, 5 Heisk., 123.
§ 103. Next Friends, Generally Considered.

ARTICLE VI.

NEXT FRIENDS AND GUARDIANS AD LITEM.

§ 103. Next Friends, Generally Considered.—A next friend, or, as he is frequently termed, a prochein ami, is a sort of self-appointed guardian who assumes the duty and responsibility of bringing a suit in behalf of a person under some disability, legal or natural. The person thus under disability, is generally (1) a married woman, or (2) a minor, or (3) a person of unsound mind. These persons not being able to bind themselves by contract for costs of suit, and, in case of minors and persons of unsound mind, not being of sufficient mental capacity and business experience to comprehend their rights and how to protect them, it becomes necessary for some friend to intervene in their behalf, whenever their interests require the interposition of a Court. This friend is called the next friend, because formerly he was the nearest (or next) kinsman of the person under disability. But, now, any person may act as next friend, provided he is acting in good faith, and secures the costs.

The object of the rule requiring a next friend in the prosecution of suits for the benefit of persons under disability, is to have some one responsible for costs and liable to judgment therefor; and to have some one upon and against whom the Court may make and enforce its orders, and who will be subject to punishment for contempt in case of disobedience to, or violation of, the mandates of the Court; and for the more especial purpose of having some one before the Court capable of looking after and caring for the interests of those incapable of understanding and defending their own rights.

It is the duty of a next friend sedulously to watch and protect the interests of his ward involved in the litigation. He is, in the conduct of the suit, subject to the control of the Court; and if he fail to do his duty, or if any other sufficient ground be brought to the knowledge of the Court, as, if he have an interest in the litigation antagonistic to the interests of his ward, the Court not only has the power, but it is its duty, to remove him, and appoint another, who may be more faithful, or not subject to a similar temptation.

Were the rule otherwise, the ends of justice might be defeated, and iniquities perpetrated by a party, whose interests are antagonistic to those of his ward, assuming the office of next friend, and bringing his ward before the Court, in order, through the forms of law, to rob it of its just rights and at the same time accomplish his own avaricious purposes. The next friend is deemed an officer of the Court, and the minor a ward of the Court. If two suits are brought by different persons, acting as next friends, the Court will allow that one of them to be proceeded in which, on inquiry, appears most to the ward's benefit, and will stay proceedings in the other.\textsuperscript{10}

If the ward's disability should terminate during the pendency of the suit, he may elect whether he will continue it, or abandon it; but if he abandons it he will be taxed with the costs, unless the Court should be of opinion that the bill was improperly filed, in which case the costs will be adjudged against the next friend.\textsuperscript{11} The next friend of a minor cannot receive the money on a judgment he recovers for his ward, nor can he confess satisfaction thereof.\textsuperscript{12} A next friend cannot elect for a person under disability, and the Court will not, unless the record enables it to make an intelligent and effectual election;\textsuperscript{13} nor can a next friend compromise a suit, or receive or receipt for the amount due his ward, or collect or compound the debt recovered by suit,\textsuperscript{14} or submit a case, pending in Court, to arbitration.\textsuperscript{15}

The next friend generally signs and swears to the bill, unless his ward better knows the facts, and then the latter may sign and swear to it.\textsuperscript{16}

If a next friend dies or becomes incapacitated to act, pending a suit, a new next friend may, on motion, be substituted in his stead with the consent and approval of the Court.

§ 104: Next Friends of Married Women.—The general reasons already given for requiring a married woman to sue by next friend, and the reasons stated in the books, show that the principal, if not the sole, object is to secure the payment of the costs that may be adjudged against her.\textsuperscript{17} A next friend of an infant may sue without obtaining the latter's consent, but the next friend of an adult married woman cannot.\textsuperscript{18} The married woman may change her next friend, on giving bond to indemnify him against the costs he has incurred,\textsuperscript{19} provided she be of age and the Court consent.

In view of this state of the law, and of our statutes in behalf of married women, and considering the fact that the next friend of an adult married woman is generally appointed by the wife, and is often a mere nominal party except as to costs, it is suggested that an adult married woman, who gives security for costs, may prosecute a suit in her own name, when it is necessary to do so to protect her separate interests against her husband.\textsuperscript{20} Courts of Chancery regard substance, not form.

§ 105. Next Friends of Minors and Lunatics.—Although the practice of allowing infants and persons of unsound mind to sue by their guardian, describing him as such, prevails in this State, still he is in all respects a next friend; and is charged with all the duties and liabilities, is subject to the same restraints, and bears the same relation to the infant, or non compos, and to the suit, as though he had been described as his next friend.\textsuperscript{21} The distinction, however, is more formal than material: if it be to the interest of the ward to have the guardian considered as a next friend, he will be so deemed. The Chancery Court of this State has full and original jurisdiction of the persons and estates of minors and persons of unsound mind, and may appoint, or remove, guardians whenever the interests of the minor, or non compos, require such action.\textsuperscript{22}

\textsuperscript{10} Sto. Eq. Pl. § 60. If the next friend of an infant does not do its duty, or if any other sufficient ground be made out, the Court will remove him. Thus, when the next friend will not proceed with the cause, the Court will change him. And although a next friend may not have been actually guilty of any impropriety or misconduct, yet if he is connected with the defendants in the cause in such a manner as to render it probable that the interest of the complainant will not be properly supported, the Court will remove such next friend and appoint another in his place. 1 Dan. \textsuperscript{22} Code, §§ 4298; Lake v. McDavitt, 12 Lea, 26.
While it is certain that a minor must sue by guardian, or next friend, the rule that the same necessity exists in case of a person of unsound mind is not so inflexible. The reason seems to be, the difficulty that sometimes exists to determine whether a particular person is of sound or unsound mind. If no objection is interposed, a non compos may maintain a suit in his own name, and without guardian, or next friend; and if the objection should be made, and no one will assume the role of guardian, or next friend, the Court would hesitate long before dismissing a meritorious bill for want of a next friend, especially if the costs were secured, and a Solicitor of the Court was acting as counsel for the non compos complainant.

Where a bill has been filed in the name of an infant, his coming of age is no abatement of the suit; but he may elect whether he will proceed with it, or not. If he goes on with the cause, all future proceedings may be carried on in his own name, and the bill need not be amended or altered. He will also be liable to all the costs of the suit, in the same manner that he would have been had he been of age when the bill was originally filed. If he chooses to abandon it, he may move to dismiss it on payment of costs by himself; but he cannot compel the next friend to pay the costs, unless it be established that the bill was improperly filed. Thus, when an infant, on attaining the age of twenty-one years, moved to dismiss a bill filed on his behalf, with costs to be paid by the next friend, the Court refused to make the order, but directed the bill to be dismissed on the late infant plaintiff giving an undertaking to pay the costs of the next friend.

No doubt, the same rule would apply in case of a bill by a next friend of any other person under disability, in case such person’s disability should terminate while the suit was pending.

§ 106. Guardians ad Litem Generally Considered.—Defendants who are minors, or of unsound mind, are the wards of the Court, which must represent them in the procurement of counsel; and in discharging this duty the Court should select men learned in the law, and capable of taking care of the interests of their wards; and the person so chosen should, of course, have no interests antagonistic to those of his ward. If the minor, or non compos, has a regular guardian, he must appear and defend by such guardian.

No step can be taken against a minor, or non compos, until after the appointment of a guardian ad litem; the appointment must not only be made, but it must be accepted. The complainant is not a proper party to nominate a guardian ad litem; but he may move the Chancellor, or Master, to make an appointment. No appointment can be made until after the minor, or non compos, has been duly brought into Court by service of process, or by publication, and he is not in Court until the return day.

It is not necessary for the minor to actually appear in Court, in person, when sued, unless the bill is filed by his guardian to sell his property, and he is over fourteen years of age. If, at the appearance term, or at the appearance rule day, no friend of the minor moves to have a guardian ad litem appointed for him, such guardian may be appointed by the Chancellor, or Master, on application of the complainant, supported by an affidavit that the minor has no general guardian. Where a married woman is a minor she must defend by a guardian 32 Code, § 4420; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 162. If the bill alleges there is no general guardian, and it is sworn to, no further affidavit is necessary. The guardian ad litem ordinarily puts in a general answer, submitting the rights of the infant to the protection of the Court; but it is his duty to ascertain what these rights are, and if a special answer is necessary or advisable for the purpose of bringing such rights before the Court, he should put in such an answer. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 146; and may apply for leave so to do after having filed a formal answer.

ad litem, like any other minor, but in such case her husband may be appointed when he is an adult and a co-defendant.33

§ 107. Powers, Duties, and Liabilities of Guardians ad Litem.—The powers, and duties of a guardian ad litem are limited, and strictly confined to the defense of the particular suit in which he is appointed. He is to defend the suit in the Court from which he derives his authority, according to the rules and principles of law applicable to the case, as administered in that tribunal, and in conformity with the ordinary mode of trial and practice of the Court in similar cases. It is not within the scope of his authority, or duty, to consent to change the tribunal for the trial, or that the decision shall be upon principles other than those applicable to like cases, in the forum in which the suit is pending. He has no power to submit the case to an arbitration, but he may exercise a sound discretion in reference to mere matters preliminary to a trial, and which cannot, ordinarily, affect or prejudice the merits of the case, or the interest of the minors, such as waiving notice of copy of bill, and agreeing to a revivor.34 He cannot, however, waive service of process on his wards, nor make them parties to the suit,35 because there can really be no lawful appointment of a guardian ad litem until the return day after service of process on the minor, or non compos.36

A guardian ad litem is not expected to assume any affirmative responsibilities. His duty is to guard the interests and rights of his ward. The Court in appointing him gives him a shield, but no sword; and if in the progress of the suit he thinks a cross bill should be filed, or other affirmative step taken, he should by affidavit, petition, or, if the facts are already of record, by motion, take counsel of the Court in the matter, and get the Court’s leave before he acts further. On filing a cross bill the guardian ad litem, pro hac vice, becomes next friend of the infant.

He cannot bind his ward by admissions,37 but may consent to any hearing at Chambers, and may waive formalities.38 He may consent to take evidence without the usual notice, and may consent to other matters relating to the conduct of the cause. But he should be cautious about such consents, and should submit to the Court every question involving the rights of his ward. He must make as vigorous a defense as the law, and facts, and his ward’s interests will justify; and should not delay the cause by failing to put in his pleading, or his proof, or to take other proper steps. Courts expect of guardians ad litem a faithful and diligent compliance with their duties, and for any gross failure therein they may be held liable to their wards for all damages sustained, and may be taxed with costs.39

§ 108. Some Practical Suggestions to Guardians ad Litem.—The first thing a guardian ad litem should do, after his appointment, is to examine the subpoena or publication notice, to see whether his ward is properly in Court; because, if the ward is not properly before the Court, the appointment of the guardian ad litem is a nullity, and all the proceedings in the cause, so far as the ward is concerned, are absolutely void. The guardian ad litem owes this duty: (1) to the Court, whose trusted officer he is; (2) to his ward, whose interests he is bound to guard; and (3) to himself, as an evidence of proper diligence on his part, and as a precaution against the humiliation that would result to him from proceeding in the cause when his ward is not before the Court.

The second duty of the guardian ad litem is to thoroughly possess himself of the facts of the case, so that he may know what are the rights, what the duties, and what the interests of his ward. This duty is not performed by merely reading the bill, and making some general inquiries of the complainant's

Solicitor; he should consult persons who are friendly to the ward, and who know the facts of the case. If the ward is old enough to understand the matters in litigation, and is accessible, and his interests, rights and duties are proper matters to be submitted to him considering his age and judgment, the guardian ad litem may consult him, especially if he is near his majority.

Having ascertained the facts, the guardian ad litem will then take such steps as will best promote his ward’s welfare. If the object of the bill is promotive of that welfare, he should not put any obstacles in the way of the relief sought; but should rather co-operate with the Solicitor of the complainant in expediting the cause and making the costs as light as possible, especially if the ward may be liable for any part of such costs. If, on the other hand, the relief sought is detrimental to the rights and interests of the ward, the guardian ad litem should vigorously resist that relief, and in every proper way assert the rights and protect the interests of his ward, using for that purpose every available defense, admissible in Equity; and should rally to his aid the relatives and friends of his ward, and should take every other step that is incumbent on a faithful, diligent, skilful and zealous Solicitor and guardian.
ARTICLE VII.
MIS-JOINDER AND NON-JOINDER OF PARTIES.

§ 109. Who are Parties to a Suit in Chancery. —The general rule is that no persons are considered parties to a suit except the complainants and the persons against whom the process is prayed. ¹ The mere naming a person as a defendant does not, however, make him a party: he must also be served with a process, ² unless he puts in a voluntary appearance. ³ In drawing bills, the names of the parties, and their position as complainants and defendants should be clearly stated. In some bills it is difficult to ascertain who are intended to be made parties. The Code form of giving the names should be adhered to: it is better than any yet devised by inexperienced draftsmen. ⁴

§ 110. General Rules as to Defect of Parties. —It is manifestly impossible for a Court to do full justice in a given case, unless the proper parties are before the Court in that particular case. The Court must both have jurisdiction and must hear, before it can determine; and how can it hear or determine when the person entitled to speak has never been brought before the Court? This deficiency of proper parties is termed non-joinder.

On the other hand, the complainants may be setting up a joint right of recovery against the defendants when not entitled to a joint recovery. Some of the complainants may have a right of recovery in the given case, but the others may have no right whatever to share in that recovery as joint owners thereof along with their co-complainants. Or, some of the complainants may have a right to recover on one account, and other complainants may have the right to recover on another and wholly different account, neither set of complainants having any interest in the other's cause of action, and no privity or community of interest existing between them. This failure of all the complainants to have a community or congruity of interest entitling them to share in the recovery, or the relief sought, is termed mis-joinder of parties complainant.

Again, persons may be joined as defendants for or against whom no relief can be granted, they being neither necessary nor proper parties, having no interest of any sort and being in no way chargeable. In such case there is a mis-joinder of parties defendant.

The rules, therefore, are:

1. That no person should be made a complainant, who has no community or congruity of interest with the other complainants in the general relief sought.
2. That no person should be omitted as a party, when no complete decree adjudicating all the matters in controversy can be made without him, either as complainant or defendant.
3. That parties representing interests wholly inconsistent cannot join as complainants; co-complainants must have some general community of interest in the subject-matter of the suit; and
4. That no person can be properly joined as a defendant, for or against whom no relief can be granted, nor decree rendered.

⁴ Code, § 4313.
Mis-joinder of parties is a matter closely allied to multifariousness, and will be further considered under that head.\(^5\)

§ 111. Effect of the Non-joinder of Parties.—If all the parties, who should be before the Court, are not made parties, upon the question being raised by demurrer, plea or answer, the Court will allow the bill to be amended; or may pronounce a decree saving the rights of the parties not before the Court;\(^6\) and it would be reversible error for the Court not to permit an amendment, so as to bring in the necessary parties, even after allowing a plea, or demurrer, for want of parties.\(^7\) When such plea, or demurrer, is sustained, the complainant has the right, as a matter of course, to so amend his bill as to cure the defect in it.

If, at the hearing, it appears that persons interested have not been made parties, the Court, as already shown, may allow the bill to be amended, or may render a decree, saving the rights of persons not made parties.\(^8\) The general rule, requiring all persons in interest to be made parties to the suit, is, in most cases, not a right of the parties brought before the Court, but rather a rule prescribed by Courts of Equity for their own government, a rule founded in their anxiety to do justice among all parties having an interest in the subject-matter, or in the object of the suit, and thereby to prevent future controversy and litigation.\(^9\) Courts of Chancery struggle against technical rules which impede the attainment of substantial justice; and will allow new parties to be made at almost any stage of the suit.\(^10\) Nevertheless, the Chancellor should be exceedingly slow to pronounce a decree, without having all the necessary parties before him, and should require the necessary amendments to be made to bring into Court all the parties omitted, to the end that a complete decree may be pronounced, settling all the various legal and equitable rights involved in the litigation.\(^11\)

§ 112. Effect of the Mis-joinder of Parties.—When a defendant is mis-joined as a party, the nature of the controversy being such that no relief can be granted for or against him, he can have the suit as to himself dismissed, on motion or on demurrer; but no other party can object.\(^12\)

If there is a mis-joinder of complainants, however, any or all of the defendants may demur; and the bill, under the old rule of practice, would, thereupon, have been dismissed.\(^13\) But this rule is now greatly modified, and under the liberalized practice and rules of pleading of the present day, it requires a very flagrant case of multifariousness or mis-joinder of parties to defeat, on demurrer, a clear equity;\(^14\) and the better practice in a doubtful case of mis-joinder of complainants now is, to retain the cause in Court until the hearing, and then dismiss it as to those complainants only not entitled to share in the recovery;\(^15\) or, the Court may, in a proper case, authorize amendments, or even direct separate bills to be filed, without new process as to the parties before the Court.\(^16\) It is now harshness, almost arbitrariness, for a Chancellor to dismiss a bill on a demurrer for mis-joinder of parties when a clear equity, or legal cause of action, appears on the face of the bill,\(^17\) in favor of some of the complainants.

EFFECT OF DEATH OR MARRIAGE OF PARTIES, OR ASSIGNMENT OF THEIR INTERESTS.

§ 113. Effect of the Death of a Party.

§ 113. Effect of the Death of a Party.—Inasmuch as some confusion sometimes arises in the mind of junior counsel, by reason of the death, or marriage of parties, or a transfer of their interests, either before or after the bringing of a suit, it may be well to consider the effect of such occurrences. On the death of a person, who, had he lived, would have been a proper party, those who succeed to what would have been his rights or duties, must be substituted for him. If his personal estate would have been benefited or injured by the litigation, the representative of his personal estate, (his executor or administrator,) must be made a party. If his real estate would have been lessened or increased by the litigation, the representatives of his real estate (his heirs) must be made parties; or if he left a will devising to any one the particular real estate involved in the litigation, such devise must be made a party instead of the heirs; if the real estate be devised for any purpose to the executor he must be made a party; if the real estate is devised in trust, both the trustee (executor, or other person,) specified in the will, and the beneficiaries must be made parties. In short, if the suit is to recover a debt, or personal property only, for or from the decedent, then his personal representative, (administrator or executor) must be substituted for him; if the suit is to recover, or clear up title to, land only, claimed by the decedent, then his real representative, (heir, devisee, or trustee and beneficiaries) must be made parties in his place. Of course, if the suit involves both the personal and the real estate, as it often does, then both the personal and the real representatives must be made parties. Thus, the heirs are necessary parties in a suit to recover the land, and the administrator is, also, a necessary party if the same suit seeks to recover rents accrued in the decedent's life. These same rules apply when a party dies pending the suit, in which case the suit must be revived against the same persons (successors in interest and estate) as would necessarily have been made defendants had the death occurred before the bringing of the suit.

When personal or real representatives are made defendants in place of a decedent, they must all be made the defendants, as less than all do not represent him. If a party dies, whose personal estate is involved, and no one will administer on his estate, his heirs may revive if he was complainant, or the suit may be revived against his heirs if he was a defendant: when a suit is so revived all the heirs must be made parties. But, as elsewhere shown, a foreign administrator or foreign executor can neither sue nor be sued, as such, in this State.

partners the title vests in the survivors, and does not go to the heirs, the law regarding the partnership as a person that lives as long as any member lives.

Hence, in a suit affecting partnership realty, the death of a partner does not affect the litigation, but it proceeds without the necessity of any revivor.

§ 114. Effect of the Marriage of a Female Party.—Upon the marriage of a female party, her husband, by operation of law, becomes the owner of her personality, and succeeds to all her rights thereto. Hence, he must be brought before the Court, in order to enable him to assert or defend those rights. If the marriage take place before the suit is brought, it is not necessary to make the wife a party, unless the property involved in dispute is of such a character that it will survive to the wife in case of the husband’s death.

But as to the wife’s real estate the law is quite different. Marriage alone gives the husband no legal or equitable interest in her realty, unless a live child is born of the marriage, and then the husband acquires a life estate in his wife’s realty, known as a tenancy by the courtesy. While at common law the husband was, in effect, the absolute owner of his wife’s realty during his life, the Courts of Chancery and the statutes have so stripped him of his common law rights, that, while his wife lives, he is but little more than her agent, or overseer. In all suits affecting her real estate, whether it be legal or equitable, the wife must be a party, and if her husband has not abandoned her, he, also, must be a party. If, however, as elsewhere shown, the husband has estopped himself by his own acts, or is debarred by lapse of time, from aiding his wife in recovering her realty, she may sue alone, by next friend, making her husband a defendant.

On the death of the husband, intestate, his widow becomes reinvested with all choses in action belonging to her at marriage, and not reduced to possession by the husband; and they belong to her absolutely, and do not go to his administrator: but if he die, testate, and specifically bequeaths them, they go to the legatee. Hence, in suits affecting choses in action not reduced to possession or bequeathed by the husband, the widow must be a party.

So, on the death of the husband, the widow becomes as completely the owner and controller of her realty as though she had never been married, and her rights and duties in reference thereto are those of a single woman.

§ 115. General Rule Applicable to Assignments of Property in Litigation.—Whoever succeeds to another’s rights or property, whether by contract or by operation of law, ordinarily holds such rights or property subject to all the liabilities and burdens attaching to such rights or property while belonging to the former owner. The assignee stands in the shoes of the assignor. When a woman marries, the law assigns her personality to her husband; when a man dies intestate the law assigns his personality to his administrator, and his realty to his heirs; when he dies testate, his will points out the persons to whom he has assigned his estate. If a person is declared a bankrupt, under a Bankruptcy Statute, the law assigns his estate to the assignee in bankruptcy, and such assignee is alone entitled to sue and be sued as to such estate, or to continue a suit begun by a bankrupt. So, if a person, prior to suit brought, transfer his interest in the property, or debt in dispute, he ceases to have any further interest in it, and his transferee must sue or be sued in his place. Hence, the general rule, before stated, which, when well considered, renders

8 While the law gives the husband all of his wife’s personality, nevertheless, when her personal estate gets into Chancery before it passes into the possession of her husband, the Court will, on application of a next friend, vest it in her as a separate estate. \textbf{§ 116. Effect of Voluntary Alienation of Property Pending a Litigation.}

The voluntary alienation of property, pending a suit, by any party to it, is not permitted to affect the rights of the other parties, if the suit proceeds without a disclosure of the facts, except so far as the alienation may disable the party from performing the decree of the Court. Thus, if pending a suit by a mortgagee to foreclose the equity of redemption, the mortgagor makes a second mortgage, or assigns the equity of redemption, an absolute decree of foreclosure against the mortgagor will bind the second mortgagee, or assignee of the equity of redemption, who can only have the benefit of a title so gained, by intervening or filing a bill for that purpose.

Generally, in cases of alienation, \textit{pendente lite}, the alienee is bound by the proceedings in the suit after the alienation, and before the alienee becomes a party to it; and depositions of witnesses, taken after the alienation, but before the alienee became a party to the suit, may be used by the other parties against the alienee, as they might have been used against the party, under whom he claims.\textsuperscript{13}

The same rule prevails where a vendee files a bill for a specific performance of a contract for the purchase of land against the vendor, and pending the suit he (the vendee) should sell to one or more sub-purchasers. In such a case, the sub-purchasers need not be made parties; and they would be bound by the decree in the suit.\textsuperscript{14}

Generally speaking, an assignee, \textit{pendente lite}, need not be made a party to a bill, or brought before the Court; for every person, purchasing \textit{pendente lite}, is treated as a purchaser with notice, and is subject to all the equities of the persons under whom he claims in privity.\textsuperscript{15} And it will make no difference whether the assignee, \textit{pendente lite}, be the claimant of a legal or of an equitable interest, or whether he be the assignee of the complainants or of the defendants.\textsuperscript{16} Still, however, it is often important to bring such assignees before the Court, as parties, by a supplemental bill, in order to take away a cloud hanging over the title, or to compel the assignee to do some act or to join in some conveyance, or to divest the title out of him, or to enjoin him from asserting such title. So that such assignee, although not a necessary party, may, at the same time, be a proper party at the election of the complainant. And an assignee after the bill was filed, but before the subpoena was served, has been held to be a necessary party.\textsuperscript{17}

So, if the interest of a defendant is not determined, and only becomes vested in another by an event subsequent to the institution of a suit, as in the case of alienation by deed or devise, or by bankruptcy, the defect in the suit may be supplied by a supplemental bill, or a bill in the nature of a supplemental bill, whether the suit has become defective merely, or is abated\textsuperscript{18} as well as become defective. For, in these cases, the new party comes before the Court exactly in the same plight and condition as the former party, is bound by his acts, and may be subject to all the costs of the proceedings, from the beginning of the suit. But in case of a voluntary alienation by a defendant, \textit{pendente lite}, the complainant has the right to ignore the transfer, and continue the prosecution of the suit as though no change in the defendant's interest had occurred.

If the transfer is made by a complainant, and takes place after the bill was filed, the transferee may either continue the suit in the name of the original complainant for his benefit, or he may prove the transfer and have the suit revived in his name. If the transfer is made by a defendant after the bill was filed, and after subpoena to answer was served on him, the complainant need pay no attention to it, the doctrine of lis pendens applying, as shown elsewhere.19

But while a person can, either before or after suit, transfer a right, and thus relieve himself from all obligation to protect or enforce it any longer, nevertheless he cannot assign a duty or liability, so as to escape responsibility therefore. He can transfer a right, because that belongs to him, and is his property; but he cannot transfer a duty or a liability, for they belong to another, to whom he must render them.20 He may be indemnified against such liability, but the indemnifier can not be made a party, on that account alone.

A person who acquires an entirely new right or interest in the subject-matter of the suit, by purchase during the litigation, may bring such right or interest before the Court by supplemental bill, or original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill;21 and unless he does so he will not be allowed to take any benefit from the suit without the consent of the parties thereto.22

When a sole complainant, suing in his own right, loses all his rights in the litigation by an event after suit brought, by alienation, or otherwise, his assignee may file an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill in order to assert and protect his rights.23

§ 117. Parties to Suits in Cases of Trust.—There are ordinarily four constituents in a trust: 1, a duty to be performed; 2, a person expressly or impliedly charged with that duty, called a trustee; 3, a person for whose benefit the duty is to be performed, called the beneficiary; and 4, some property, the legal title to which is vested in the trustee, to enable him to effectually discharge the duty imposed on him. And in all suits affecting the trust, or the trust property, or the trustee’s rights or duties, or the beneficiary’s interests, both the trustee and the beneficiary must be made parties. The trustee must be made a party, first, because the legal title to the property is in him; and second, because it is his duty both to defend his title and to protect the trust and the beneficiary: and the beneficiary must be made a party because, in the eye of a Court of Equity, he is the real owner of the property, and is the person most interested in defending both the property and the trust. In suits by or against executors and administrators, (who are express trustees,) relative to the personal property vested in them, and in which the legatees, distributees, and creditors are beneficially interested, it is not ordinarily necessary to make such legatees, distributees or creditors, as the case may be, parties, if the suit relates exclusively to the personal estate, because the personal representative is authorized to sue or be sued alone; but if the suit relates to real estate, in which the devisees or heirs have an interest, legal or equitable, then the heirs or devisees interested must be made parties.

In suits to set up and enforce an implied trust, if the implied trustee has acquired the absolute legal title his vendor need not be made a party, but if the vendor has retained either the legal title or a lien, to secure the purchase money, or for any other purpose, then the vendor must be made a defendant along with the implied trustee.

In suits by or against executors, administrators, or other express trustees, all should be joined, except such as may have declined to qualify, or have died, or left the State.

§ 118. When Administrators, Executors, and Guardians Should be Parties. —The general rules as to when administrators, executors, heirs, devisees, and legatees should be made parties, have been already given. Some special rules will now be given, applicable to administrators, executors, and guardians:

1. Administrators are the Proper Persons to Sue: (1) for all debts due their intestates, of every character whatever; (2) to recover all the personal property belonging to their intestates, at their death, and not exempt by law; (3) to enforce all mortgages, trust deeds, or other liens to secure debts to their intestates.

2. Administrators are the Proper Persons to be Sued: (1) when a creditor seeks to recover any debt due from the intestate; (2) when there is a dispute as to the ownership of any personal property claimed by the intestate; (3) when a creditor seeks to have the land of a decedent sold to pay debts; (4) when damages are claimed for some breach of contract by the decedent; (5) when it is claimed that they have wasted the assets of the decedent, or not accounted for all the assets, or have failed to pay the creditors and distributees the amount due them, or in other respects have failed to do their duty, in which cases the sureties, on their official bond, may, also, be joined as defendants, and charged as such.

3. Executors are the Proper Persons to Sue and be Sued: (1) in cases where, if there had been no will, the administrator of the same estate would have been a proper person to sue or be sued; and (2) in all cases affecting land devised to be sold where, if there had been no will, the heirs would have been the proper persons to sue or be sued. (3) If the executor fails to account for all the estate that came and should have come into his hands, fails to pay the legatees, distributees and creditors, having sufficient assets so to do, or in any other way violates his trust, he, and the sureties on his bond, are liable to the party or parties injured, and they may all be sued by such party or parties.

4. Guardians are Necessary Parties to All Suits affecting the real or personal estate of their wards, whether such wards be minors, or persons of unsound mind. The guardian is the proper person to bring and defend all suits to which his ward is a party. If the suit affects only money of the ward which the guardian has loaned, the guardian may sue for it without joining his ward as a co-complainant; and if the suit be against a guardian for debts by him contracted, or for necessaries furnished the ward, the guardian should be sued alone, describing him as guardian. If the suit be to recover any specific personal property, or any realty, belonging to the ward, the suit should be in the name of the ward by his guardian, who in such suits is a next friend. And if the suit be brought to recover personalty, or realty, claimed by the ward, he and his guardian should both be parties, whether the suit be by them, or against them. Sometimes one guardian is compelled to sue his predecessor: in such case he can sue alone, describing himself as guardian, and need not join his wards as co-complainants: in such suits he may sue his predecessor or predecessors, and the sureties on his or their bond, or bonds, in the same suit.

But frequently guardians violate their trust by failing to collect all of their ward’s estate, or by failing properly to care for it, or failing to properly account for it. In all such cases, if the ward is a minor, he must sue by next friend, or by a new guardian, making the defaulting guardian and his sureties defendants, as shown in the next section. If the guardian has given more than one bond, the sureties on all the bonds may be made co-defendants. If the ward has attained majority, he can, of course, sue his guardian and sureties in his own name.

§ 119. Parties to Suits on Official Bonds.—For any breach of an official bond of any officer, executor, administrator, guardian, trustee, or other person, required to be given by law for the security of the public generally, or of particular individuals, the party aggrieved may, by statute, without assignment bring suit thereon for his use, giving security for costs, and being liable therefor as if the suit had been brought in his own name. The effect of this statute is equivalent to an assignment of the bond to the person aggrieved to the extent of his damage, not exceeding, of course, the penalty of the bond.

By both statute and judicial interpretation, the person for whose use the suit is brought is the real complainant of record, and, in Chancery, is the real complainant in fact. While technically a suit on any of the above mentioned bonds should be in the name of the State for the use of the party aggrieved, nevertheless the practice of suing directly in the name of the real complainant, and not in the name of the State, has long prevailed, and been directly sanctioned by the Supreme Court of the State.

When, therefore, a ward, or a guardian or next friend for him, sues for the breach of his guardian’s bond, or a distributee, legatee, or creditor sues for a breach of an executor’s or administrator’s bond, or any party aggrieved sues for a breach of any official bond, the party so suing will name himself as complainant, and make the party in default and the sureties on his bond defendants. If any of the sureties are dead, removed from the State, or insolvent, they may be left out of the bill, the bill so explaining, and the personal representative of a deceased surety may be made a defendant in his decedent’s place.

Where a defaulting officer, executor, administrator, guardian, trustee, or other person required by law to give bond for the security of the public generally, or of particular individuals, gives more than one bond, he can in case of his default, be sued on all of his bonds, the bill describing the several bonds and dates thereof, and naming the several sureties on each, and making them defendants, so the Court may determine the relative liability, if any, of such sureties.

§ 120. Parties in Suits Concerning Mortgages, Trust Deeds, and other Liens on Land.—All persons having any interest, legal or equitable, in the land, or in the encumbrance thereon, are necessary parties, unless the object of the bill is a special foreclosure, in which case the complainants may omit both prior and subsequent encumbrancers. The holders of encumbrances are proper persons to sue: (1) whenever it is necessary to enforce their liens, in which case the mortgagor, vendor, or other giver of the lien, if living, and his heirs if he is dead, must be made defendants; and (2) whenever necessary to protect their liens against adverse claimants, in which case the same persons must be made defendants, and also the adverse claimants. Whenever a mortgagee of the absolute fee dies, his heir is a necessary party to a suit to enforce the mortgage debt, and his administrator is a proper party: if the mortgagee dies, his heirs are necessary parties defendant to a bill to foreclose, but his administrator is not. On a bill to foreclose a mortgage or enforce a trust deed, neither prior nor subsequent encumbrancers are necessary parties, but subsequent encumbrancers are proper parties; and if the prior encumbrance is overdue, its holders are proper parties. If the prior encumbrancers are not made parties, their rights will remain unaffected. As a rule, it is the better course to make parties of all encumbrancers, prior as well as subsequent, to the end that the mortgaged premises may be sold with a clear title, and the proceeds divided according to priority of interests. If prior encumbrancers object, (which they seldom do,) the bill can be dismissed as to them, on their motion or demurrer, if the Court so adjudge. It is often necessary to make Courts of Chancery have regard to the substance of a bill, and not to technical forms; and the use of the name of the State in such a bill is a mere empty formality, makes the averments of the bill awkward in expression, and savors of the technicality of the old common law pleading. For forms of bills, see post, §§ 927; 957; 971.

9 Aiken v. Suttle, 1 Lea, 127; Harris v. Vaughn, 2 Tenn. Ch., 484; Sto. Eq. Pl., §§ 196-200. It would seem, on general principles, that, inasmuch as the mortgage debt, on the death of the mortgagee, goes to the administrator, he would be the proper person to foreclose the mortgage, making the mortgagee, and the heirs of the mortgagee defendants, or making the heirs of the mortgagee co-complainants. In Atchison v. Surduine, 1 Yerg., 400, it was expressly decided that the heir of the mortgagee or his assignee, may alone, without joining the personal representative, bring a bill to foreclose a mortgage; and that if the heir of the mortgagee receive the money, he holds it as trustee for the personal representative, who may recover it by suit. The personal representative certainly has an interest in the suit, and besides, by joining him in the suit, a second suit is obviated. See 2 Jones on Mortgs., § 1388. prior encumbrancers parties, in order to test the bona fides of their lien, and to ascertain whether all, or any part of their debt, remain unpaid.

It must be borne in mind that while a suit to enforce a lien on real estate is a suit that deals with particular property, it is not a proceeding in rem, but in personam; and, therefore, no person is bound by the proceeding unless a party thereto, complainant or defendant.\(^{11}\)

In a suit to foreclose a chattel mortgage, after the death of any party to the transaction, his administrator will, of course, stand in his shoes, whether as debtor or creditor.

When a vendor's lien is in issue, both the party or parties claiming the lien, and the party or parties claiming the land, must be made parties, the former, or some of them, being made complainants when the object of the suit is to enforce the lien. If the vendor be dead, his heirs are necessary parties where the vendor retained the legal title; otherwise, they are neither necessary nor proper parties. If the vendee be dead, his heirs\(^{12}\) and widow\(^{13}\) are necessary parties in any event, but his administrator is not.\(^{14}\) The administrator is the proper person to enforce a lien on the death of the vendor, but if the legal title was in the latter at his death, his heirs must also be made parties;\(^{15}\) if otherwise, they are not proper parties.

A recurrence to general principles will settle all doubts as to who are proper parties in case of liens, but the following general rules will aid: (1) the persons entitled to the proceeds of the debt secured by the lien are necessary parties, and should ordinarily be complainants; (2) the persons entitled to the residue of the proceeds of the sale of the property after the lien debt has been satisfied therefrom, are necessary parties; and (3) any persons interested in disputing the right of any of the complainants to the debt, or the right of any of the parties to have the land sold, are necessary parties.

In suits to enforce mortgages, trust-deeds, and other liens, it may be stated generally: (1) all of the persons in any way interested, either in the particular lien sought to be enforced, or in the property charged with the lien, must be made parties; (2) those entitled to the benefit of the lien, if their interests are harmonious, should join as complainants, making all others interested defendants; (3) if any who should be complainants do not give their consent to the suit, they must be made defendants; (4) all persons having a legal or equitable title to the property or the proceeds of the property charged with the lien, should be made parties, so that when the property is sold the purchaser may get a perfect title, and the proceeds of the sale be properly distributed among those thereunto entitled, according to their respective rights.

But in all suits to enforce mortgages, trust deeds, vendors' or other liens against real estate, whenever it is necessary to make their heirs of the debtors parties, his widow, if living, must, also, be made a party, because she has an interest in the surplus for her dower,\(^ {16}\) and also for her homestead. If the lien is on a tract of land to which homestead rights may exist, the wife should always be made a co-defendant along with her husband, so that she may be bound by the decree, and thus be precluded from relitigating her homestead rights.\(^ {17}\)

§ 121. Parties in Case of Assignments.—There are two sorts of assignments to be considered in this section: 1, assignments of chooses in action; and 2, assignments for the benefit of creditors; and for convenience and clearness of statement they will be considered separately.

1. Parties in Case of Assignments of Chooses in Action.—The general rule prevails here, as in all other cases, that every party having an interest in the assigned debt when recovered, and every person liable to pay the debt, is a necessary, or proper party. If the debt be assignable by statute, or the law merchant, the assignee may sue in his own name, and his assignor is not a proper party, unless it is sought to set aside the assignment, or to hold him expressly liable for the debt, in which case he must be made a defendant. If, however, the debt is not so assignable, the assignor must be made a party, because the legal title is in him; and he may be joined as a complainant. If, however, the assignment is absolute, leaving no interest or title in the assignor, he need not be made a party.

Bills of exchange, promissory notes, bonds and bank checks, are all negotiable; and bonds with collateral conditions, bills or note for specific articles, or for the performance of any duty, are assignable by statute: the assignees of all these instruments may sue thereon in their own names.

2. Parties in Case of Assignments for the Benefit of Creditors.—Where an assignment is made by a debtor for the benefit of his creditors, if any creditor seeks to enforce the trusts, he cannot sue alone; but he must make all the other creditors, provided for in the assignment, parties, either by name, or by bringing the suit on behalf of himself and all the other creditors who may choose to come in and take the benefit of the decree. But the assignees themselves may file a bill relative to the trust estate, and to enforce its objects, without making the creditors parties; for the assignees, in such a case, are the proper representatives of them.

§ 122. Parties to Suits on Written Evidences of Debt.—In an ordinary action of debt, brought by a bill in Chancery, whether such debt be based on an express, or an implied, contract; and whether the contract be verbal, or written; and whether the debt be original, or obtained by assignment from another, the person or persons entitled to recover the money must sue as complainants, and the person or persons liable to pay the money, whether principals, endorsers, guarantors, or sureties, must be made defendants.

If the debt is evidenced by a negotiable instrument, such as a promissory note, due bill, bill of exchange, or by an instrument assignable by statute, such as a bond with collateral conditions, or a bill or note for specific articles, or for the performance of any duty, an assignee may sue thereon in his own name; but if a debt not so evidenced is assigned, the assignee must join the assignor as a co-complainant, if he consent; otherwise he must be made a defendant, for the legal title to the debt is in the assignor. If, however, there be several assignments of a non-negotiable debt, only the original assignor need be made a party, unless the suit is brought to hold an intermediate assignor liable on some independent guaranty or contract to pay, in which case such intermediate assignor must be made a defendant.

The payee of an order on another for money, may sue thereon, in his own name, either the person who drew the order, or the person on whom it is drawn. But he cannot sue the latter on the order unless he accepts it, and he cannot sue the drawer of the order, as such, without demand, protest and notice. He may, however, sue the drawer of the order on the original liability.
In suits on promissory notes, due bills, checks and bills of exchange, all or any of the makers, including both principals and sureties, and all or any of the endorsers, may be sued by the holder of the instrument. And in suits for breaches of contract, any or all of the parties in default may be sued in the same suit; but all the persons injured by such breach must be parties, those not consenting to join as complainants being made defendants.

When the obligation is to pay a sum of money to more persons than one, jointly, all of the payees must join in the suit as complainants, or if some refuse so to join, they must be made defendants; for, while the obligation is several as to the makers, it is joint as to the payees. However, in suits on obligations executed to one person for the benefit of others, such as suits on official bonds executed to the State, by officers, executors, administrators or guardians, and the like, any person belonging to the class intended to be secured by such an obligation, may sue thereon in the name of the payee, for his own use and benefit. In suits on bonds payable to the State, any person entitled to sue thereon may sue in his own name.

§ 123. Parties where Several are Liable for the Same Debt.—When several persons, either as principals or as sureties, or as both principals and sureties, are bound for the same debt, or duty, even though bound by different bonds or other instruments, they may all be sued, or any part of them may be sued, in the same suit; and all persons, or any of them, entitled to said debt or duty, or to any part thereof, may join as complainants in such suit; and if a part only of those entitled to sue, they may, (and if an account is necessary, or if any trust is involved, should) make the remainder of those entitled defendants. Hence, in suits against trustees, executors, administrators, guardians, public officers and others who have given bonds and security for the proper discharge of their duties or contracts, all or any part of the sureties, on all or any of the bonds, on a default by the principal, may be made joint defendants to the same bill; and any or all of the parties secured by such bonds may be joint complainants in the same bill; but if a part only of those entitled to sue by reason of the particular default join in the bill, the remainder of those entitled should be made defendants. If any of the obligors on said bonds are dead or insolvent, or their personal representatives need not be sued, but the fact of death or insolvency should be stated in the bill as a reason for not suing them, or their personal representatives.

§ 124. Parties to Suits to Collect Debts, where Other Creditors have Concurrent Rights.—In suits to collect a debt from a fund in which other creditors have concurrent rights, the parties who sue must file their bill in behalf of themselves and of all others entitled to share in the fund. This is one of the few exceptions to the general rule, requiring all persons having an interest in the subject-matter or object of the suit to be made parties. The reasons for this exception are: (1) the difficulty, and often the impossibility, of ascertaining all who are interested; (2) the increased costs that would result from allowing each creditor to institute a separate suit; and (3) inasmuch as the bill is filed in behalf of all the creditors, those not named as such can have themselves made parties on petition at any time before the fund is distributed, and, as a consequence, are not injured by the proceeding.

Accordingly, when bills are filed by a creditor or creditors (1) to sell the lands of decedent to pay debts, or (2) to distribute a trust fund, or (3) to wind up an insolvent estate, an insolvent partnership or an insolvent corporation, or (4) to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of property made by a decedent; or (5) to have an administrator appointed, in any and all such cases, the bill must be filed on behalf of all other creditors entitled to be paid out of the proceeds of the fund, or property, sought to be thus administered in the Chancery Court.

All persons having the legal title to the said fund or property must be made defendants. 1, If the suit is brought to sell the lands of a decedent to pay debts, his heirs and administrators should be made defendants; and if the bill, also, seeks to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the decedent, the fraudulent vendor must be made a defendant. 2, If the suit be brought to wind up an insolvent partnership or insolvent corporation, in case of a partnership all of the partners, and in the case of a corporation, all of the officers and directors, must be made defendants. 3, If the suit is brought to distribute a fund in the hands of a trustee, he should be made a defendant, and if his official sureties are sought to be charged, they, also, must be joined as defendants.

It must be remembered, however, that whenever one person sues on behalf of himself and others, care must be taken that this person has a clear right in himself; for, if he is not really entitled to sue, the suit cannot proceed, and must be dismissed. In suits of this nature, inasmuch as the complainant acts on his own motion, and at his own expense, he has the absolute control of the suit, and can dismiss it at his pleasure, at any time before a reference to the master, or before the rights of others in the suit have vested in consequence of some affirmative act on their part approving the suit, joining in it, or accepting its benefits.

A suit by one in behalf of himself and others in the same right, will be dismissed as to all if dismissed as to the one in whose name it is brought, unless some one in the same right, who has become a party by petition to take advantage of the bill, offers to continue the prosecution of the suit, and tenders a proper prosecution bond to cover all costs accrued and to accure.

§ 125. Parties to Suits to Recover Land, and to Remove Clouds.—The Chancery Court now having jurisdiction to determine the legal title to land, in a suit concerning the legal title only, the rule as to parties in similar suits at law will, no doubt apply in Chancery. Hence, in suits to recover land in the Chancery Court, on the strength of the complainant’s legal title alone, no party having an equitable interest is a necessary party. For this reason, a trustee, he having the legal title, may sue alone to recover the land conveyed to him in trust, and the beneficiaries are unnecessary parties. If, however, he should refuse to sue in a proper case, the equitable owners may sue, using his name as complainant. So a mortgagee may sue either the mortgagor or a stranger in order to recover the land mortgaged; but in the former case, he would probably be met by the mortgagor’s equities.

In suits to recover real estate, all who claim the property under the same title should join as complainants, and those in adverse possession and all others who claim adversely to the complainants, should be made defendants. Ordinarily, a mere claimant not in possession need not be sued when not exercising any acts of ownership, but if his claim constitutes a cloud on the title of the complainant, he may be sued, even though not in possession, and not actually exercising any visible acts of ownership. So, a remainder-man may maintain a bill to remove a cloud from his title. None but tenants in common, and their privies in estate, can join in bringing an ejectment bill. Persons claiming under conflicting titles cannot join in such a suit. In a Court of law, a complainant, in order to avoid the question of champerty, may join his grantor, or his grantor’s grantor, or both, or any other privy in estate, as co-plaintiff, with their consent,\(^{39}\) but this cannot be done in Chancery, as it would make the bill champertous on its face.\(^{40}\)

In an ejectment bill, the complainants will not all suffer defeat, if it appear at the hearing that some of them have no title, or are barred, or estopped.\(^{41}\) In such case, the bill will be dismissed only as to those who fail, and a decree will be rendered in favor of those who make out their case.\(^{42}\) This sort of suit is both joint and several, and all the owners, if more than one, may sue, or any one or more of them may sue; and where less than all sue, it is not necessary to make the other tenants in common defendants. But if the bill seeks both to recover the possession and clear up the title, and also to have the land sued for partitioned, then all the tenants in common must join in the suit as complainants, or, those not joining as complainants must be made defendants;\(^{43}\) the bill setting forth the rights of the latter, and praying the same relief for them as is prayed for the complainant.\(^{44}\) This is the better practice, as it removes all grounds for any future litigation, and determines all matters of controversy in one and the same suit.\(^{45}\)

In suits to recover land, the tenants of the defendant are not necessary parties, but they are proper parties;\(^{46}\) and, if they are in actual possession and the landlord is not, they are necessary parties. If there is any danger of a tenant resisting the enforcement of a decree against his landlord, or if there is any doubt about his being really a tenant, he should always be made a co-defendant with the landlord.

Inasmuch as the wife has an interest in the homestead that Courts will enforce, and especially Courts of Equity, it is often prudent to join the wife as co-defendant with her husband, in any suit brought to recover land that would be a homestead if the title, legal or equitable, were in the husband. So, in suits to enforce all liens, except vendors’ liens, it is the better practice to join the wife as defendant with her husband, if any homestead rights are involved.\(^{47}\)

§ 126. Parties to Suits to Partition or Sell Lands.—In suits for the partition of land, or for its sale because incapable of advantageous partition, all the tenants in common must be made parties.\(^{48}\) If any of them are married women, their husbands, also, must be made parties; and if any are minors or of unsound mind, their guardians, if they have any, must, also, be parties. In a bill for partition, or for sale for partition, persons who have liens, encumbrances, life estates, remainder interests, dower or homestead rights, or other claims on the property, must be made parties;\(^{49}\) they or any of them may join as complainants, but if they do not consent so to do, they must be made defendants. The object the law and the Court have in requiring all persons to be made parties who have legal or equitable interests in lands to be sold, is to give a good title to the purchaser, and thereby not only realize the largest possible price for the property, but also prevent any further litigation over the title. The holder of the legal title in a case of trust, and the contingent remainder-men, if any, must be made parties.\(^{50}\) Sales for partition, however, may be made without reference to the encumbrances and subject thereto, in which case the rights of the encumbrancers are not affected in any way by the sale.\(^{51}\)

Those desiring to have the land partitioned, or sold for partition, should all join as complainants, making all the other parties interested, defendants. Ordinarily, minors and persons of unsound mind should be made defendants. When a married woman is non compos, she must be made a defendant. Minors, however, may be complainants.

A bill to sell the real or personal estate of a minor or married woman for their education or maintenance, or for re-investment, and not for partition, must be filed by the husband of the married woman, and by the guardian of the minor, the wife and the ward being, respectively, made defendants. In such case the infant, if over fourteen years, and the married woman, must answer the bill in person: the married woman must be represented by next friend, and the minor by a guardian ad litem, both to be appointed by the Court. The Court will also appoint counsel for them, if they have none.

§ 127. Parties to Suits Affecting Equitable Property.—In equitable property the legal title is generally in one person called a trustee, and the equitable title, or beneficial interest, in another person called the beneficiary; and, in all suits in Chancery to reach such property, both the trustee, (or legal owner,) and the beneficiary (or equitable owner,) must be made parties. The trustee can sue alone, generally, when it is necessary to protect the legal title; but in any suit affecting the equitable title, or the beneficial interest, he must join the beneficiary with himself as a co-complainant, or must make him a defendant. So, on the other hand, the beneficiary always must make the trustee a party in any suit he may bring affecting such property.

A creditor who seeks to reach an equitable interest, or estate, or to enforce a lien or equitable interest of his own, must make the owner of the legal title a party, as well as the owner of the equitable interest.

§ 128. Parties in Suits by and against the State.—No court of the State has any jurisdiction of any suit against the State, or against any officer of the State, acting by authority of the State, with a view to reach the State, its treasury, funds or property; and if any such suit should be brought it shall be dismissed as to the State or such officers, on motion, plea or demurrer of the law officer of the State, or counsel employed for the State.\(^1\) Suits by the State are instituted in her name, by her Attorney General, or by her District Attorney, as occasion may require, without security for costs. If a suit is brought by the State in the interest of any person the bill so states, such person being named as relator.\(^2\) Where any person has been aggrieved by the breach of any bond executed to the State to secure the performance of official duty, he may sue thereon for his use in the name of the State, on giving security for the costs.\(^3\)

The State is not responsible for any of the wrongs or defaults of her officers or agents.\(^4\) But officers of the State may be sued when her property is not sought to be reached;\(^5\) and a county trustee may be enjoined from collecting a State tax under a void process.\(^6\)

§ 129. Parties in Suits by and against Counties.—Every county is a corporation, and the justices in the County Court assembled are the representatives of the county, and authorized to act for it.\(^7\) A county sues in its own name as does any other corporation, and does not sue in the name of its justices.\(^8\)

Suits may be maintained against a county for any just claim, as against other corporations,\(^9\) and process is served on the presiding officer of the County Court, who is authorized to employ counsel to defend such suits.\(^10\) But a county is not liable for the neglects of duty of its officers.\(^11\)

Suits for the use and benefit of a county against a delinquent officer, or his sureties, are brought in the name of the State for the use of the county.\(^12\)

If the suit against a county seeks to prevent a county warrant being issued or paid, the county trustee should be made a defendant along with the chairman or county judge.

§ 130. Parties in Suits by and against Municipal Corporations.—Corporations are of two kinds under our laws: 1, Municipal; and, 2, Private. Both kinds are creatures of the Legislature, directly or indirectly, and neither sort Municipal corporations include all the cities, towns and taxing districts chartered under the laws of the State. They sue, and are sued, in their corporate name;\textsuperscript{14} and their power to sue, and their liability to be sued, are fundamental.\textsuperscript{15} Their power to sue is coextensive with their rights, and their liability to be sued is coextensive with their duties. When sued, the subpoena is served on the Mayor, or other head of the corporation;\textsuperscript{16} and they cannot be sued out of the county in which they are situated.\textsuperscript{16a}

§ 131. Parties to Suits by and against Private Corporations.—A private corporation is a \textit{person} in law,\textsuperscript{17} and is sometimes called an \textit{artificial} person to distinguish it from a natural person. Its charter and the general laws circumscribe and define its rights, powers, duties and liabilities. A private corporation has a legal name, and sues and is sued by such name;\textsuperscript{18} but, like a natural person, it may have another name by which it is known, and if sued by such other name the proceeding is valid.\textsuperscript{19} A private corporation, like a natural person, may sue any one indebted to it, or having its property in possession, or interfering with its property, rights or duties; and may be sued by any one to whom it is liable \textit{ex contractu} or \textit{ex delicto}, in the same manner a natural person is sued, and the subpoena is served ordinarily upon its chief officer, if he is within the jurisdiction, and if not the statute makes other provision for service of process, as hereafter fully shown.\textsuperscript{20}

§ 132. Suits in Chancery Contrasted with Actions at Law.—A litigation in the Chancery Court is properly termed a "suit," while a contest in a Court of law is properly denominated an "action." The party who institutes a proceeding in a Court of law is ordinarily called "plaintiff," while he who begins a suit in a Court of Chancery is generally called "complainant." The person sued is called "defendant," in each Court, unless he responds to a discovery in Chancery, in which case he is sometimes denominated "respondent." In a Court of law an action is begun by filing a bond for costs and suing out a summons, but in a Court of Chancery a suit is commenced by filing a bill, the cost bond not being essential to the beginning of a suit, as it is in the Circuit Court. In a Court of law, the first pleading is a declaration filed at the return term, couched in formal and technical phraseology, full of bombastic verbosity, and teeming with blood-curdling descriptions of imaginary barbarities inflicted by the wicked defendant, upon the innocent and outraged plaintiff; while in Chancery, the bill is filed before the subpoena issues, and is ordinarily a plain statement, in ordinary language, of complainant's rights in the premises, and of their retention, or violation, or threatened violation, by the defendant. Indeed, a bill would be correctly phrased which described the grounds of suit in the manner and language which one unprofessional person would use in writing about them to another; and such was the character and frame of bills in the early history of the Court.

In an action at law, the evidence is mainly given by witnesses examined orally in open Court; whereas, in a Chancery suit, the evidence is mainly contained in depositions taken in vacation. In an action at law the issues of fact raised by the pleadings are ordinarily decided by a jury under instructions by the Judge, while in Chancery the issues of fact are ordinarily heard and determined by the Chancellor. A Court of law regards forms, rules, and prece-

2 In Tennessee, and many other States, the declaration is now required to be in plain language. See forms in Code, § 2939. These forms are as different from those in Chitty as laconism is from pleonasm.

The declaration in an action at common law deals in categorical statements and technical platitudes, the bill in a suit in Chancery details the circumstances of the case in narrative style. The declaration is a graven image, the bill is a living being.
dents, while a Court of Chancery regards the circumstances of the case, ignores forms, and prefers good reason and good conscience to rules and precedents. In an action at law, the decision is termed a "judgment," and it either awards a sum of money or the possession of property to the plaintiff, or taxes the plaintiff with the costs of the suit; while the decision in a Chancery suit is called a "decree," and it may not only award money or property to one or more of the complainants, but may at the same time award money or property to one or more of the defendants, or may require a party to do some particular act, or may prohibit him from doing some particular act, and may tax any of the parties with the costs, or may divide the costs among the parties. In an action at law, all property to satisfy a judgment is sold by the Sheriff under an execution, and he receives and pays over the money; but in a Chancery suit, the sales of property, and especially real property, are usually made by the Clerk and Master, and confirmed by the Chancellor, and the proceeds of the sale are paid out by the Clerk and Master. In an action at law, an equitable interest in property is not cognizable, and an equity cannot be levied on or sold: whereas, in Chancery, equitable interests are dealt with, and may be sold, or transferred, or converted into a legal estate.

And the relief the two Courts grant are very dissimilar. Courts of law have a distinct form of action to redress each wrong and assert each right; whereas, in Chancery several wrongs may be redressed and several rights asserted in one and the same suit. Thus, in the same suit the Chancery Court may: 1, stay waste; 2, impound the proceeds of the waste; 3, award damages for the waste committed; 4, adjudge the land to the complainant; 5, give him a decree for back rents, and 6, put him in possession of the property; whereas, a law Court would require four different actions, and an injunction in Chancery besides, to accomplish the same results. In an action at law the plaintiff must sue for either property or money; in a suit in Chancery the complainant may sue for both the property and its money value, in the alternative, and if he fail to get the property the Court will in a proper case, award a money equivalent. In an action at law you get what the law allows, in a suit in Chancery you get what is just and right, according to Equity and good conscience. The law may be right, Equity is right itself.

§ 133. How a Suit in Chancery is Commenced.—A suit in Chancery is commenced, 1, by bill or petition, addressed to the Chancellor of the Division in which it is to be filed, and specifying the particular Court in which it is to be filed; or 2, by motion in open court, where that mode of procedure is allowed by law.

1. By Bill, or Petition. A bill is a complaint, in writing, addressed to the Chancellor, containing the names of the parties complaining and complained of, and their respective places of residence, and setting forth a clear and orderly statement of the complainant's rights, and how and wherein those rights have been denied, interfered with or violated, by the party complained of, and concluding with a prayer for process to bring the latter party before the Court to answer the complaint made, and a prayer for appropriate relief.

A bill is sometimes called a petition, especially when filed to obtain; 1, a divorce; 2, dower; 3, a partition of land; 4, a sale of lands for partition; 5, a sale of lands to pay a decedent's debts; 6, the removal of a trustee; 7, a mandamus; 8, a habeas corpus; and 9, an inquisition of lunacy. A petition, however, is ordinarily, a written statement made to the Chancellor during the progress

2a The word "judgment," (the act of a Judge,) is a harsh word, and implies force, and has the significance of doom; whereas, the word "decree" simply means discernment, a separation of the true from the false, according to reason and conscience, and a decision in accordance therewith.

4a Bouvier's Law Dict., "Bill," Sto. Eq. Pl., § 7; Code, § 4314. This bill must be in the English language. Bills in Chancery have always been in the English language. This grew out of the fact that the Chancery Court began as the Court of the common people, whose language was English.
of a suit, in order to bring before the Court, or the Chancellor, some matter connected with the suit affecting the petitioner’s rights, and not otherwise sufficiently appearing, or to obtain some relief in the cause not otherwise obtainable. 6

When a suit is commenced by petition, the petition must contain the names and residences of the parties, and a sufficient statement of the facts to show that the petitioner is entitled to relief; and must pray for process, 6 and for relief.

2. By Motion. Suits commenced by motion in the Chancery Court are conducted in a summary way, without formal pleadings, the motion being entered on the minutes of the Court. This entry is in the nature of a pleading, and should contain sufficient facts to give the Court jurisdiction, and to authorize the judgment.

As, however, all ordinary original suits in Chancery are commenced by bill, the nature, substance and forms of bills, and the practice and pleadings consequent on the filing of a bill, will first be considered; and suits commenced by petition and by motion will be treated of hereafter.

The party who institutes the suit is generally termed the complainant, because he complains of some wrong done him; the party against whom the suit is instituted is called the defendant, because he defends against the complaint made. 7

§ 134. Necessity and Object of Pleadings.—In every system of jurisprudence, some forms of proceeding must be established to bring the matters in controversy between parties before the tribunal by which they are to be adjudicated. 8 These forms of proceeding are devised in order that the litigants may have a fair opportunity of presenting their respective sides of the controversy, and to enable the Court to determine the questions in issue with accuracy and dispatch. The written complaints made by the complainant, and the written defences made thereto by the defendant, are termed pleadings, 9 and to exhibit the present system of Equity Pleading in Tennessee is one of the main purposes of the present treatise. 10 Such portions of the old system of pleading as are obsolete will be wholly omitted, and much of that which is unnecessary or unimportant mainly disregarded.

§ 135. General Nature of a Bill.—A bill is a written statement of such matters as the complainants desires to bring to the attention of the Court. These matters must be such as are within the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court. That jurisdiction generally extends to the final decision of the subject-matter of the suit; but sometimes it is only ancillary to the decision of a suit pending in the same Court, or of a suit brought, or to be brought, in another Court: sometimes it is merely of a precautionary or preventive nature, to avert a meditated or threatened wrong; and, sometimes, it is merely to require that the parties really interested in a controversy should be compelled to litigate their rights, without peril or expense to a mere stakeholder having no interest therein. The bill may either complain of some injury, which the party, exhibiting it, suffers, and pray relief according to the injury; or, without praying relief, it may seek a discovery of matter necessary to support or defend another suit; or it may seek to preserve or perpetuate testimony; or it may complain of a threatened wrong or impending mischief, and, stating a probable ground of possible injury, it may pray the assistance of the Court to enable the party exhibiting the bill to protect or defend himself from such wrong or mischief whenever it shall be attempted or committed. Or it may relate to some defect in a pending suit in the same Court, or may seek to introduce some new or additional matter into a pending suit, or to obtain the benefit of, or change, or reverse the proceedings in, a pending suit.\(^\text{11}\)

\textbf{§ 136. Different Kinds of Bills.—}Bills in Chancery are of two general kinds: 1, Original bills; and 2, Bills not original. Original bills are those which relate to some matter not before litigated in the same Court, by the same persons, standing in the same interest and making the same allegations. Bills not original are those which relate to some matter already litigated in the same Court by the same parties, or their privies, but which seek to make some addition to, or to obtain some benefit from, the original bill, or to supply some defect in it. There is another class of bills, which is of a mixed nature, and partakes of the character of both of the others. Thus, for example, bills, brought for the purpose of cross litigation, or of controverting, or suspending, or reversing some decree or order of the Court, or of obtaining the benefit of a former decree, or of carrying it into execution, are not considered as strictly a continuance of the former bills, but in the nature of original bills. And, if these bills require new facts to be stated, or new parties to be brought before the Court, they are, so far, strictly of the nature of supplemental bills. For all the objects of the present work, this last class may be treated as included in that of bills not original.\(^\text{12}\)

Original bills, not praying relief, are also of two kinds: (1) Bills to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses, or to examine witnesses \textit{de bene esse}; and (2) Bills of discovery, technically so called; that is to say, bills for discovery of facts, resting within the knowledge of the party against whom they are exhibited, or for the discovery of deeds, writings, or other things, in his custody or power;\(^\text{14}\) and praying no relief on the merits.

\textbf{§ 138. Bills not Original.—}Bills not original are either an addition to, or a continuance of, an original bill; or they are for the purpose of cross litigation, or of controverting, or suspending, or reversing some decree or order of the Court, or of carrying it into execution. The former kind includes: 1, A supplemental bill, which is merely an addition to the original bill, to supply some defect in its frame or structure. 2, A bill of revivor, which is a continuance of the original bill, to bring some new party before the Court, when, by death, or otherwise, the original party has become incapable of prosecuting or defending the suit, and the suit is, as it is in Equity technically called, abated, that is, suspended in its progress. 3, A bill both of revivor and supplement, which continues a suit upon an abatement, and supplies defects which have arisen from some event subsequent to the institution of the suit.15

Bills, not original, for the purpose of cross-litigation, or of controverting, suspending or reversing some decree or order of the Court, or carrying it into execution, are: 1, A cross bill exhibited by the defendant in the original suit against the complainant in that suit, touching some matter in litigation in the first bill; 2, A bill of review which is brought to examine and reverse a decree made upon a former bill, at a former term of the Court, and, for that reason, not subject to a change on a rehearing; 3, A bill to impeach a decree upon the ground of fraud; 4, A bill to suspend the operation of a decree in special circumstances, or to avoid it on the ground of matter which has arisen subsequent to it; 5, A bill to carry a decree, made in a former suit, into execution; 6, And lastly, a bill, partaking of the qualities of some one or more of these bills, such as a bill in the nature of a bill of revivor, or in the nature of a supplemental bill, or in the nature of a bill of review, and others of a like character.16

ARTICLE II.

FRAME OF AN ORIGINAL BILL.

§ 139. An Original Bill generally Considered.—An original bill is a written statement addressed to the Chancellor of the Court in which it is to be filed, setting forth facts and circumstances, which, if true, show that the complainant is entitled to the assistance of the Court in obtaining the relief he seeks against the defendant, or defendants, and praying for such assistance and relief. The bill sets out the complainant’s rights, shows wherein those rights have been injured, denied or withheld, by the defendants, makes out a case within the jurisdiction of the Court, and invokes the Court to exercise that jurisdiction by requiring the persons complained of to do what in Equity and good conscience they ought to do towards the complainant. Every bill must show clearly, on its face, 1, that the complainant has a right to the particular relief he seeks, or to some other relief; 2, that he has this right as against the defendants; and 3, that the Court has jurisdiction to enforce this right. If the bill is defective in either of these three essentials, the defendants may have it dismissed.

Every bill should clearly set forth a state of facts showing, not only that the complainant has a right to the relief he seeks, but that every defendant has (1) a claim, interest, or title, in or to the subject-matter of the suit, or (2) is in some way illegally interfering with, or withholding, complainant’s rights or property, or (3) owes the complainant a debt or duty cognizable in a Court of Chancery.

§ 140. What Facts Must Be Alleged in a Bill.—Every bill must contain a statement of facts showing that complainant is entitled (1) to equitable or legal relief, (2) in the Court in which the bill is filed, and (3) against the defendant charged. In the language of the Code, “The bill should contain a clear and orderly statement of the facts on which the suit is founded, without prolixity or 19 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 325; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 262. Nothing is properly before the Court for its determination except what is submitted to it in the pleadings; and, to entitle a complainant to a decree, (1) his bill must present such a state of facts, as, if true, will give him a right to the relief sought; and (2) the material facts alleged must be proved, unless admitted. See, post, § 142.

A bill setting out the facts, and praying for the relief complainant is entitled to on such facts, is sufficient, although complainant’s theory of the case is faulty. Peterson v. Turney, 2 Ch. Apps, 519; Dodd v. Benthal, 4 Heisk., 601. And although he gives his bill the wrong name. See §§ 43; 269; 431, note; 681; 719; 63, sub-sec. 4. repetition, and conclude with a prayer for the required process and appropriate relief. 20 This statement of facts should contain everything necessary to entitle the complainant to the relief he seeks, and should omit everything that is immaterial or irrelevant. Nothing should be averred except what is necessary to be proved, and nothing should be omitted which is essential to sustain the case. The test of the sufficiency of the averments in a bill is: Would complainant be entitled to the special relief he prays, if all the averments should be established by proof? And a test of the materiality of a particular averment is: Can the bill be fully sustained as to the special relief sought if the averment is not proved?

Where, however, there is any doubt whether a particular averment is necessary, the pleader should insert it; 21 and it must always be remembered, in drawing a bill, that everything which is intended to be proved must be alleged, and that nothing can be proved which is not alleged. No facts are properly put in issue by the complainant unless charged in the bill; and, as a consequence, no proof can be offered by the complainant as to any fact, however material it may be to his case, unless such fact be stated in the bill, or unless the defendant sets it up in the answer. The Court cannot notice matter, however clearly proved, as to which there is no allegation or issue in the pleadings. A fact, neither alleged in the bill nor stated in the answer, is, therefore, not in issue, and cannot be considered by the Court, although essential to complainant's success and fully proved. 22 Courts can notice neither allegations of matters not proven, nor proof of matters not alleged. 23

It is a general rule, that whatever is essential to the rights of the complainant, and is necessarily within his knowledge, ought to be alleged positively and with precision. On the other hand, the claims of the defendant may be stated in general terms. And, if a matter, essential to the determination of the claims of the complainant, is charged to rest in the knowledge of the defendant, or must of necessity be within his knowledge, and is consequently the subject of a part of the discovery sought by the bill, a precise allegation thereof is not required. 24 If, however, sufficient facts appear on the face of the bill to entitle the complainant to some relief, relief will be granted appropriate to the facts, even though the bill be inartificial, the terms useduntechnical, and the relief prayed not specific. 25

§ 141. How Facts Must be Alleged in a Bill.—The bill should state the complainant's cause of action with accuracy and clearness, specifying the rights of the complainant, the injury, or grievance, of which he complains, and the relief which he asks of the Court. There must be such certainty in the averments of the facts upon which the bill is founded, that the defendant may be distinctly informed of the nature of the case which he is called upon to meet. The material facts ought to be plainly, yet concisely alleged, and with all the essential circumstances of time, place manner, and other incidents. If title deeds or other instruments are referred to, they should not be set out in full; but only the substance of such portions as are necessary to a right understanding of the real matters of the bill. It is not a sufficient allegation of a fact in a bill to say that one of the defendants alleges, and the complainant believes the statement to be true; for the defendant may allege that which is quite false, and the complainant may believe it to be true; but the fact should be positively alleged. 26

It is sometimes said that a bill in Chancery should be as certain and precise as a declaration at law, but the proposition is not strictly correct, the same de-cise and categorical certainty not being required in a bill. Nevertheless, a bill should set forth a distinct and clear cause of action entitling the complainant to the relief he prays. All allegations should be positive, and those made on information and belief should be so stated. An allegation that "complainant is informed" so and so, or that "complainant believes" so and so, or that "complainant is informed and believes" so and so, is not sufficient; complainant must go further and allege the facts, directly, saying "that complainant is informed and believes, and so charges, that" the fact is so and so.

But although a general charge is insufficient, yet it does not follow that the complainant in his bill is bound to set forth all the minute facts. On the contrary, the general statement of a precise fact is often sufficient; and the circumstances which go to confirm or establish it, need not be minutely charged; for they more properly constitute matters of evidence than matters of allegation. Where a bill, however, charges fraud, accident or mistake, or attacks a stated or settled account, or seeks the reformation, rescission, or re-execution of a contract, or attacks a judgment or decree, or prays an injunction or a receiver, it should set forth the circumstances and particular facts on which the relief is sought, and general charges of error or wrong-doing, or the use of general averment, is not sufficient, as will more fully appear in the next section.

§ 142. Necessity for Fulness and Particularity in Alleging the Facts.—Every fact essential to the complainant's title to maintain the bill, and obtain the relief, must be stated in the bill, otherwise the defect will be fatal. For no facts are properly in issue unless charged in the bill; and of course no proofs can generally be offered of facts not in the bill; nor can relief be granted for matters not charged, although they may be apparent from evidence; for the Court pronounces its decrees secundum allegata et probata. The reason of this is, that the defendant may be apprised by the bill what the charges and allegations are against which he is to prepare his defense. If the rule were otherwise, the defendant would not only not know what charges he would be required to meet, but the complainant, by thus failing to inform the defendant, would be taking advantage of his own wrong. Besides, the Court has no jurisdiction of any matter not contained in the pleadings; and if the Chancellor should assume to make an adjudication not justified by the pleadings, his decree would be coram non judice, and void on the face of the proceedings; and this would be so, even though the facts proved would have abundantly supported the decree had there been pleadings justifying the proof.

In drawing bills, it must be kept in mind that there is a difference in the degrees of particularity required, between (1) bills praying ordinary relief obtainable under the concurrent jurisdiction of the Court, and praying for ordinary process, and (2) bills praying for extraordinary process, or charging fraud, or assailing presumptions.

1. Where Relief Obtainable at Law is Prayed. In cases of concurrent jurisdiction the allegations of the bill will resemble those in a declaration in the Circuit Court; and all that is required is a direct averment of the main facts constituting the cause of action, without any detail of circumstances or allegations of particulars. Such bills need no verification.

2. Where an Injunction or a Receiver is Prayed For. An injunction and receiver are extraordinary processes that issue before the suit is tried on its merits, and often before the defendant is heard; and, therefore, the Court requires extraordinary particularity and fulness in the averments of the bill. General allegations of wrong-doing, and formal charges of inequitable conduct, are wholly insufficient. The particulars and circumstances must be set out, so the Chancellor may see for himself that the doings complained of are wrong, and the conduct charged is inequitable, for what may appear wrong or inequitable to the complainant, may not so appear to the Chancellor; besides the Chancellor prefers the facts and circumstances of the case to the opinion or conclusions of the complainant. Counsel in drawing such bills should keep in mind that such a bill is not only a pleading, but a special affidavit; as a pleading, formal averments would be sufficient, no verification would be necessary, only a cost bond required and only a subpoena to answer would issue. It is on the special affidavit incorporated in the bill that the extraordinary process issues, if issued at all. So the bill, in its two-fold nature should be full, precise, definite, direct and circumstantial in its averments, and give a detailed statement of the main facts on which the injunction or receiver is prayed; and its allegations should be on the actual knowledge of the complainant, or if on information and belief, should be verifiable by the informant. The bill must aver that it is the first application for the particular extraordinary process prayed for.

3. Where Fraud is Charged. What is said in the preceding paragraph about particularity in averment applies fully to bills charging fraud. Fraud is generally established by proof of circumstances, and these circumstances are generally known to the complainant; so the Court requires the complainant to set out these circumstances in his bill not only that the Court may know on what grounds the charge of fraud is based, but, also, that the defendant may know the precise facts he will have to meet in framing his answer, and making his proof. A general charge of fraud is nugatory, for fraud is not so much a fact as a conclusion deduced from facts; and a bill charging fraud in general terms as the ground of relief and setting forth no particulars showing the fraud, will be dismissed on demurrer.

4. Where a Presumption is Assailed. When a presumption is attacked, the proof to overcome the presumption must be exceptionally strong. So, a bill assailing a presumption must be exceptionally strong in its averments, and precise in its particulars. A general charge of error in a deed, mortgage, note, or other written instrument, or in a stated or settled account, or in a judgment or decree, is wholly nugatory, and a bill based on such a general charge, as a ground of equitable relief, is demurrable. The bill should follow up the general charge by setting out in detail the facts and circumstances constituting the error, and if any fraudulent or inequitable conduct in connection therewith is charged upon the defendant, the circumstances thereof must be fully specified, as shown in the preceding paragraph. And, in general, a bill seeking to undo what has been done, because of error or fraud, must specify the particulars of the error or fraud complained of.

Extraordinary process includes preliminary injunctions, sec ex parte, attachments, receivers, publication notices, and appointments of guardians ad litem for persons alleged to be under disability. In these cases the bill is both a pleading and an affidavit; it is a pleading as to the ordinary process and ordinary relief prayed for; it is an affidavit as to the extraordinary process prayed; and, inasmuch as this process is sought ex parte, and before any sort of hearing, so much of the bill as purports to give the grounds for this extraordinary action would be defective. See, Foster v. T. & P. R. R. Co., 300 S. E. 372; Ruht v. Mining Co., 5 Lea, 18; Wood v. Co. v. Thomas, 13 Pick., 478, 483. See, Foster v. T. & P. R. R. Co., 300 S. E. 372; Ruht v. Mining Co., 5 Lea, 18; Wood v. Co. v. Thomas, 13 Pick., 478, 483. should be full, precise, definite, direct, and particular, in its statements of the facts, and should be based on actual knowledge, or on reliable information; and should, also, explicitly conform to all statutory requirements. All such bills must be sworn to.

§ 143. Complainants Must Show an Interest in the Subject-matter of the Suit.—The complainants must show that they have an interest in the matters sought to be litigated; and this interest must be a present, subsisting interest. It is immaterial how small the interest of any of them may be in the subject-matter of the suit, if the interest be such that its adjudication will enable the Court more completely to settle all the matters in controversy, so as to leave no roots out of which future litigation might spring. The object of a suit in Chancery is not merely to show that the defendant has been guilty of illegal or inequitable conduct, but to show, also, that the complainant has been injured thereby. The complainant must, therefore, in his bill, show that he has such an interest in the subject-matter of the suit as to entitle him to the aid of the Court in the protection or enforcement of that interest. And if there are more than one complainant, they must all show themselves in some way interested in the subject-matter of the suit. It is perfectly immaterial, however, how minute this interest may be, or how distant the possibility of the possession of that minute interest, if it is a present interest. A mere possibility, or even probability, of a future title or interest will not be sufficient to sustain a bill: the title or interest must be present, actual and existing.

§ 144. Bill Must Show a Ground of Suit.—Courts are devised for the relief of persons (1) whose legal rights have been withheld or interfered with, or (2) who have suffered actionable wrongs, or (3) who are seriously threatened with irreparable injury. They were not instituted (1) to enable litigious people to harass their neighbors with trivial suits; nor (2) are they proper places for the airing of supposed grievances, nor (3) the ventilation of supposed wrongs, nor (4) even real misdoing when the complainant has not himself suffered, or is not menaced with suffering, by reason of such wrongs or misdoing, or is himself in the wrong. According to our Constitution, Courts are opened to remedy injuries done to one’s lands, goods, person or reputation, and Courts of Equity sit to administer justice in matters of grave interest to the parties, and not to gratify their passions or their curiosity, or their spirit of vexatious litigation.

No man has a right to set in motion the machinery of the Courts of Justice unless he has a good cause of action; and this cause he must so set forth in his bill, that the Court may see it. It is in vain that a complainant has a good ground for relief, unless he properly sets it forth in his bill, and substantiates it by proper proof.

It matters not how gross a fraud has been perpetrated, or what relations of trust and confidence have been violated, or what the disability of wards,legatees, distributees, or other persons, or what iniquitous wrongs have been done by the defendant, or what violations of right and justice have been committed, the Court will not sustain a bill setting them forth unless it appear therefrom that the complainant is entitled to some relief against the wrong-doer who is made a defendant; for the Court will not go through the form of a suit merely to enable the complainant to show forth the wrongs done by the defendant, and the disabilities and injuries of the complainant, unless it appears, from the facts stated in the bill, that the complainant will be entitled to some relief against the defendant by reason of those facts being proved to be true.

The complainant must not only show that he has some interest in the subject-matter of the litigation, but that he has such a title to it as against the defendant as gives him the right to sue the latter. Thus, a distributee has an interest in the personality left by his intestate, yet he cannot sue for its recovery, nor compel a debtor of his intestate to pay the debt to him, because there is no such privity between the distributee and the intestate as will authorize the former to sue a debtor of the latter. The personal representative is the only person who can bring such suits, he only being the privy of the intestate, and entitled to sue for his personality, or for the debts due him. So, a person named as executor has an interest in all the personal property of his testator; but until he has probated the will, he has no right to sue for such property, for, until he properly qualifies as executor, there is no privity between him and his testator.

§ 145. Bill Must Show a Case Within the Jurisdiction of the Court.—Not only must the complainant be interested in the subject-matter of the litigation, and be clothed with such a character as entitles him to bring the suit, and the defendant be liable to the relief sought against him, or be in some way interested in the suit, but it must also appear that the case stated in the bill is within the jurisdiction of the Court. Prior to the Act of 1877, increasing the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court, it was often a question of much nicety and perplexity whether the case presented by the bill was one of equitable or legal cognizance; but now it is generally not difficult to determine whether the Chancery Court has jurisdiction of a given case. If the debt is of less value than fifty dollars, or is for an injury to person, property, or character, involving unliquidated damages, the Court has no jurisdiction; but of all other suits it has jurisdiction, provided they are brought in the proper county. The local jurisdiction of the Court will be hereafter fully considered.

§ 146. Bill Must be Brought for the Whole Matter.—A bill must not only be for a subject within the jurisdiction of the Court, but it must also be brought for the whole subject. The Court will not permit a bill to be brought for part of a matter only, so as to expose a defendant to be harassed by repeated litigations concerning the same thing. It, therefore, requires that every bill shall be so framed as to afford ground for such a decision upon the whole matter, at one and the same time, as may, as far as possible, prevent any future litigation concerning it. It is upon this principle that the Court acts, in requiring in every case the presence, either as complainants or defendants, of all parties interested in the object of the suit. And upon the same principle it will not allow a complainant who has two claims upon the same defendant growing out of the same transaction, to bring separate bills for each particular claim. Courts of Equity discourage the promotion of unreasonable litigation; and, for the purpose of preventing a multiplicity of suits, they will not permit a bill to be brought for a part of a matter only, where the whole is the proper subject of one suit. Thus, for example, they will not permit a party to bring a bill for a part of one entire account; but will compel him to unite the whole in one suit; for, otherwise, he might split it up into various suits, and promote the most oppressive litigation.

When, however, it is laid down as a rule that the Court will not entertain a suit for a part of a matter, it must be understood as subject to this limitation, that the whole matter is capable of being immediately disposed of; for, if the situation of the matter in dispute is such that no immediate decision upon the whole matter can be come to, the Court will frequently lend its assistance to the extent which the actual state of the case, as it exists at the time of the filing of the bill, will warrant. It is upon this same principle that the Court proceeds, in all that class of cases in which it acts as ancillary to the jurisdiction of other Courts, by permitting suits for the preservation of property pending a litigation in the common law Courts, or by removing the impediments to a fair litigation before tribunals of ordinary jurisdiction. In all these cases, it is no ground of objection to a bill that it embraces only part of the matter, and that the residue is, or may be, the subject of litigation elsewhere. The preservation of the property, or the removal of the impediments, is all that a Court of Equity can effect. The bill, therefore, in seeking that description of relief, seeks the whole relief which, in such cases, a Court of Equity can give; but if a bill, praying only this description of relief, should disclose a case in which a Court of Equity is capable of taking upon itself the whole decision of the question, in such a case the bill would be defective in not seeking the relief to which the complainant is entitled.\footnote{50}

\textbf{§ 147. Bill Must Set up Matters in Avoidance When.}—Under our former method of pleading in Chancery, if the defendant pleaded the statute of limitations, the statute of frauds, payment, accord and satisfaction, an award, a former judgment or decree, an account stated, a release, a novation or any other matter in bar, the complainant could, in his replication, set up matters in avoidance of such defense. If the facts in avoidance of such defence are not set forth, the Code having abolished replications to answers,\footnote{51} the complainant has now no way of avoiding such defense except by his bill. He, therefore, must disclose in his bill these matters of defense, and then set forth his facts in avoidance of such defense. If the facts in avoidance of such defense are not set forth by complainant in his bill, he will not be allowed to prove them, or, if proved, the Court cannot consider them, because they are not alleged in the bill.\footnote{52} Thus, for instance, if a complainant would avoid a plea of the statute of limitations, he must in his bill give the dates and facts which disclose the bar, and then allege the fact which avoids the bar, such as disability of the complainant, non-residence of the defendant, fraudulent concealment of the cause of action, or a new promise within the statute, or such fact in avoidance, though proved, will not be considered by the Court for the reason already given, and the bill will be dismissed.\footnote{53} Matters thus set up by the complainant in avoidance of some bar must be proved by him as alleged.\footnote{54}

\textbf{§ 148. Bill in Case of a Tender by the Complainant.}—When, on a bill to redeem, or on a bill in any other case where a tender is necessary, it is alleged that a tender was made, the allegations should specify the date and amount of the tender, and to whom and on what account made, and should aver a willingness and readiness on complainant's part to have paid what was tendered at any time after such tender, down to the filing of the bill; and he should continue and repeat such tender in his bill; and the money, or thing, so tendered, should be filed in Court along with the bill, or a sufficient excuse given for not so doing. But if the defendant fail to demur to the bill, or to otherwise take proper exception, because the money, or thing, so tendered, has not been duly filed, he would be deemed to have waived such filing.\footnote{55} On a bill to redeem, a tender is not necessary when the right of complainant to redeem is absolutely denied by the defendant.\footnote{56}

\textbf{§ 149. Bill Must Not be Multifarious, or Repugnant.}—In endeavoring to avoid the error of making a bill not sufficiently particular to answer the purpose of complete justice, care must be taken not to run into the opposite defect of attempting to embrace in it too many objects. The offence against this rule is termed multifariousness.

1. Multifariousness is the improperly joining in one bill several matters of a distinct and independent nature against several defendants.\(^57\) Such a proceeding would be oppressive, because it would tend to load each defendant with an unnecessary burden of costs, by swelling the case with the statement and proof of the several claims of the other defendants with which he has no connection. Besides, the proofs applicable to each would be apt to be confounded with each other, and great delays would be occasioned by waiting for the proofs of one of the parties, when the others might be fully ready for hearing.\(^58\)

A bill is not to be treated as multifarious, however, because it joins two good causes of complaint, growing out of the same transaction, where all the defendants are interested in the same claim of right, and where the relief asked for in relation to each is of the same general character. Neither will a bill be deemed multifarious where it states a right to an account from A, and B, against whom it has one remedy which it seeks to enforce, and also claims a lien against A, for what is due, and seeks that separate remedy against him, for the plaintiff may well in such a bill entitle himself to each. Indeed the objection of multifariousness, and the circumstances under which it will be allowed to prevail, or not, is, in many cases, a matter of discretion, and no general rule can be laid down on the subject.\(^59\)

It is not the number of the parties, nor the intricacy of the claims on the one side or the other, that renders a bill multifarious; it is their disconnection or inconsistency, or the practical inconvenience of considering them together in one suit. Whenever a series of transactions have a common root or origin, and are so connected that it is impossible to tell, in advance of the hearing, what bearing one of these transactions may have upon another, or how the respective parties may be charged in reference to each other, embracing them all in one bill would not make it multifarious.\(^60\) If the interest and liability of the defendants, though separate, flow from the same fountain, or radiate from the same center, or have a common connecting link, the joinder of such defendants and matters in the same suit is admissible.\(^61\) The uniting in one bill of several matters of equity distinct and unconnected, against a sole defendant, is not multifariousness.\(^62\) Bills are not objected to on the ground of multifariousness as much as formerly, because, if a demurrer for multifariousness is sustained, the Court may authorize amendments by directing separate bills to be filed, without new process as to the parties before the Court.\(^63\)

2. Repugnancy consists in setting out in the bill two or more causes of action, or two or more grounds for maintaining the same suit, which are inconsistent or contradictory, and tend to nullify each other.\(^64\) Alternative grounds of relief may be set up, and alternative relief prayed, but such grounds or relief must not be antagonistic or contradictory.

and his counsel will be liable to pay costs. Impertinence is the introduction of any matters into a bill, answer, or other pleading or proceeding in a suit, which are not properly before the Court for decision at any particular stage of the suit. One of the Ordinances of the Court of Chancery, constituting a fundamental rule of the Court, is aimed against this transgression of the good sense, as well as the good taste, of Equity pleadings. It declares, "That counsel are to take care that bills, answers, and other pleadings, be not stuffed with repetitions of deeds, writings, or records, in hae verba; but that the effect and substance of so much of them only as is pertinent and material, be set down, and that in brief terms, without long and needless traverses of points, not traversable, tautologies, multiplication of words, or other impertinences, occasioning needless proximity; to the end that the ancient brevity and succinctness in bills and other pleadings may be restored and observed. Much less may any counsel insert therein matter merely criminous or scandalous, under the penalty of good costs to be laid on such counsel."

Scandal consists in the allegation of anything, either in a bill, answer, or any other pleading, which is unbecoming the dignity of the Court to hear, or is contrary to good manners, or which charges some person with a crime not necessary to be shown in the cause; to which may be added that any unnecessary allegation bearing cruelly upon the moral character of an individual is also scandalous. There are many cases, however, in which, though the words in the record are very scandalous, and highly reflect upon the party, yet if they are material to the matter in dispute, they will not be considered as scandalous; for a man may be stated on the record to be guilty of a very notorious fraud, or a very scandalous action, and yet, perhaps, without having an answer to this very matter, the party may lose his right. The Court, therefore, always judges whether, though matter be prima facie scandalous, it is or is not of absolute necessity to state it; and, if it materially tends to the point in question, and is a necessary part of the cause, and material to the case of either party, the Court never looks upon this to be scandalous. Were it otherwise, it would be laying down a rule that all charges of fraud are scandalous.

However, in cases of mere impertinence, the Court will not, because there are here and there a few unnecessary words, treat them as impertinent; for the rule is designed to prevent oppression, and is not to be so construed as to become itself oppressive. Nor will the Court in cases of alleged impertinence, order the matter alleged to be impertinent to be struck out, unless in cases where the impertinence is very fully and clearly made out; for, if it is erroneously struck out, the error is irremediable; but if it is not struck out, the Court may set the matter right in point of costs.

It was to prevent these glaring faults of scandal and impertinence, alike mischievous and oppressive, (which might make the records of the Courts the vehicles of slander,) that the Courts of Equity, at a very early period, required all bills to have the signature of counsel affixed to them; and if no such signature appears, or the signature is not genuine, the bill will be dismissed, or ordered to be taken off the files of the Court. If either scandal or impertinence exist in a bill, it may be objected to by the defendant in the first stages of the cause, upon a motion to refer it to the Master, to inquire into the foundation of the objection. But nothing which is positively relevant to the merits of the cause, however harsh or gross the charge may be, can be correctly treated as scandalous. Thus, for example, in bills to set aside deeds, or other instruments, for fraud, 67 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 347-348. Nothing that is pertinent to the cause can be scandalous, and the majus or minus of the relevancy is not material; Gleaves v. Morrow, 2 Tenn. Ch., 595.

68 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 267; Gleaves v. Morrow, 2 Tenn. Ch., 595. The best test of impertinence is, whether the matter alleged to be impertinent would be proper to be proved as evidence; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 340, note; Mrzena v. Brucker, 3 Tenn., Ch., 161.
there are often to be found gross charges in relation to the matter of the asserted fraud. But these charges are not, by any rule of the Court, to be deemed scandalous. And indeed, such a proceeding might be dangerous to the cause itself, and prevent a due investigation of its merits. Hence it is, that nothing pertinent to the cause is ever deemed scandalous, and the degree of the relevancy is not deemed material. 69

It is obvious that a bill may contain matter which is impertinent, without the matter being scandalous; but if, in a technical sense, it is scandalous, it must be impertinent. According to the ordinary practice of the Court, a bill cannot be referred for impertinence after the defendant has answered, or has submitted to answer. But it may be referred for scandal at any time; and, even, by leave of the Court, upon the application of a stranger to the suit. The reason of the difference seems to be, that mere impertinence is not in itself prejudicial to any one; it is but a naked superfluity. But scandal is calculated to do great and permanent injury to all persons whom it affects, by making the records of the Court the means of perpetuating libellous and malignant slanders; and the Court, in aid of the public morals, is bound to interfere to suppress such indecencies, which may stain the reputation and wound the feelings of the parties, their friends and relatives. 70 A Court of Chancery is not a register for detraction. 71

§ 151. Prayers for a Discovery, and for Process.—Formerly, the interrogatory part of a bill was one of its main and most distinguishing features, 72 but now that all parties are competent witnesses, and the Code allows the complainant to waive the defendant's answer under oath, a discovery is very seldom sought.

1. Prayer for Discovery. In the part of the bill, usually called the interrogatory part, the complainant calls on the defendant to make full, true, direct and perfect answer, upon his corporal oath, to the best of his knowledge, remembrance, information, and belief, to all and singular the matters and charges set forth in the bill, as fully as though particularly interrogated in reference thereunto. The bill, also, when seeking a discovery, specially calls on the defendant to answer certain specific matters, and, sometimes, appends to, or incorporates in, the bill searching interrogatories to probe the knowledge, exhaust the memory, and sift the conscience of the defendant, to the uttermost. In this part of the bill the defendant is also called on to file accounts, statements, deeds, books, writings, and other documents, to be used as evidence by the complainant.

A defendant, however, cannot be compelled to discover when his oath to his answer is waived; nor can he be compelled to answer an interrogatory which is not based on some antecedent matter stated or charged in the bill; nor is he bound to crinimate himself, or violate professional confidence, in his answer. 73

Defendants now, however, being competent witnesses in Court, and their oath to their answers being now generally waived, discoveries are seldom called for in bills, it being more satisfactory to take the deposition of the defendants, or to obtain their evidence by cross-examination.

69 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 269.
71 Campbell v. Taull, 3 Yerg., 564. In this case, Chief Justice Catron, in delivering the opinion of the Court, said: "If the Courts of Chancery so far forget their duty, or shrink from it, as to permit every irrelevant slander, or truth, if you please, to be proved, and harrow up every misdeed of a man's life who comes, or is brought into, the Courts, not permitting the dead to escape, or the wife, the passions of parties seeking gratification will soon make them the sinks of registered infamy, and their records a black-book and a nuisance. From such tribunals, every man, and especially every woman, who has erred, and few have not, will shrink with horror, and most justly. Justice herself will be driven out of them, and none apply for relief but such as are above and beneath detraction. It must not be. The pruning hand of the Master must be set to work in this Court, or in the Court below. Below it should be done, and the authority of the Court exercised to suppress such libellous matter, so that it might not go down to future ages, wantonly to disgrace the party and his descendants. Furthermore, our records present piles of impertinent matter, taking up much of the time of the Court in the mere reading, and when read, so confused and overwhelming, that generally not the least difficulty is to find what is pertinent, and greatly obliterating it when found." Scandal in oral evidence in a Court of law, like a circle in the water, spreads into ultimate nothingness; but scandal in pleadings and depositions are perpetual memorials. Vox emissa volat, litera scripta manet. See, also, Johnson v. Tucker, 2 Tenn. Ch., 247.
73 See Chapter on Bills of Discovery, post, § 1116.
The other prayers of a bill are for process and relief. In the old form, the prayer for process came last, but in Tennessee it precedes the prayer for relief.74

2. Prayer for Process. The Code says the bill should "conclude with a prayer for the required process, and appropriate relief." It is probable that where the defendants are named as such in the commencement of the bill, the character of the process is manifest from the averments of the bill, "a prayer for the required process" would not be indispensable, especially if there be a prayer for relief and that they "be made parties by proper process," or even a prayer that they "be made parties," or "be required to answer."75 Nevertheless, no risks of this sort should ever be incurred, and the bill should always pray for subpoena as to the resident defendants, and publication as to non-resident defendants.76

If any extraordinary process is sought, such as an injunction, or an attachment, it must be specially prayed for, otherwise it cannot be had;77 and in such case the bill must state that it is the first application for such process. If a receiver is desired before answer, there should be a specific prayer to that effect in the bill; however, such a prayer is not indispensable, as a receiver may be appointed, on motion, at any time during the progress of a cause, on a proper case made out.78

§ 152. Prayer for Relief.—The prayer for relief is generally two-fold, first for particular relief, and second for general relief. The complainant should first pray specially for that particular relief appropriate to his case, and then should pray for general relief. But a prayer for some sort of relief, special or general, seems essential, except in attachment bills,79 and in bills to obtain evidence.80 The Code seems to contemplate that "appropriate relief" should be prayed,81 from which it might be inferred that a prayer for general relief was not sufficient: the Code provision, however, is rather commendatory than mandatory.

Complainant should pray for the precise relief he desires consistent with the facts alleged in his bill; and, as he cannot foresee the result of his suit, he may pray specifically in the alternative, always, however, conforming his prayers to the case made out by him in the bill.82 But when his prayer is in the alternative, its parts must not be antagonistic.83 Oftentimes a bill has a double aspect; in such cases an alternative prayer adapted to each aspect becomes necessary.84 A bill may pray alternately for damages if its primary prayer for equitable relief be not granted, in cases where damages are allowable, as in suits for rescission, specific performance and injunction.85 No part of a bill is so difficult to draw as the prayer for relief. Ordinarily, the prayer is the necessary legal deduction from the facts alleged, and it requires a comprehensive intellectual grasp of the whole case to properly formulate the specific reliefs to which the complainant may be entitled. It should, however, be kept in mind, that under the prayer for general relief, a complainant cannot obtain a specific relief inconsistent with that particularly prayed for.86 But, while praying for specific relief, the details of the particular relief sought need not be enumerated.

The prayer for general relief should never be omitted,87 as under it a com-

ARTICLE III.
FORM OF AN ORIGINAL BILL.

§ 153. Old Form of an Original Bill.

Bills in Chancery were formerly longer and more technical than at present; and contained nine formal parts: 1, The direction or address, indicating the Court in which it was to be filed; 2, The introduction, containing the names, description and residence of the complainants, and the character in which they sued; 3, The premises or stating part, which detailed the facts and circumstances of the complainant's case, stating the wrongs complained of, and by whom done; 4, The confederating part, which alleged a combination between the defendants and others unknown, against the complainants in order to injure and oppress them; 5, The charging part, which set up the defendants' excuses and the complainants' answer to them; 6, The jurisdiction clause, being a general averment that the acts of the defendants were contrary to Equity, and that complainants have no adequate remedy at law; 7, The interrogatory part, which called on the defendants to answer not only the allegations of the bill, but various interrogatories, also, according to the best of their knowledge, remembrance, information and belief; 8, The prayer for relief, ordinarily both special and general; and 9, The prayer for process to compel the defendants to appear, and answer the bill, and abide the Court's decree.

An examination of one of these old bills will show a vast amount of matter wholly unnecessary, and a needless prolixity in the statement of what was necessary. Originally, however, bills in Chancery were plain, untechnical statements of the matters complained of, such as an ordinary man of business would now write to his lawyer. The modern tendency is toward a plain, clear, and orderly, statement of the facts, omitting everything not material, and avoiding prolixity, and useless formalities. The following is an qualified as his administrators, and at once entered upon the discharge of their duties as such. The said Richard Roe resides in Hancock county, and the said Robert Roe in Hawkins county. [The bill sets out that the estate of Henry Roe, deceased, was more than sufficient to pay all of his liabilities, that the orator and oratrix are the only distributees, and that three years have elapsed since the grant of administration, but the respondents have made no settlement with the Clerk of the County Court.]

And your orator and oratrix further show unto your Honor that they have called upon the said Richard Roe and Robert Roe to make settlement and pay over to them their respective shares of their said father's personal estate, but so it is, may it please your Honor, the said Richard Roe and Robert Roe have failed to make any settlement, or to render to your orator and oratrix any statement or account of their actions and doings as administrators aforesaid, to the very great damage, injury and loss of your orator and oratrix.

And your orator and oratrix further show and charge that said Richard Roe and Robert Roe, have, or should have, in their hands as administrators aforesaid, the sum of, at least, three thousand dollars for distribution to your orator and oratrix as distributees of their said father's estate; and your orator and oratrix well hoped that the said Richard Roe and Robert Roe would have paid the same over to them as in conscience and equity they ought to have done.

[4. The Confederating Part.]

But now so it is, may it please your Honor, that the said Richard Roe and Robert Roe, administrators as aforesaid, combining and confederating together to and with divers other persons at present unto your orator and oratrix unknown, whose names when discovered your orator and oratrix pray may be herein inserted, and they made parties respondent hereto, with proper and apt words to charge them, and contriving how to injure and oppress your orator and oratrix in the premises, the said confederates sometimes pretend that said Richard Roe and Robert Roe never were administrators of the father of your orator and oratrix, at other times they pretend that the father of your orator and oratrix did not die intestate, but left a will, and at still other times pretend and claim that his personal estate was very small, and that all of it has long ago been applied and consumed in paying lawful claims against said estate; and at the same time said confederates do respectively refuse to set forth and discover what said personal estate consisted of, or the items and particulars and value thereof, and how much thereof they have so applied, and to whom and for what paid, and what has become thereof particularly.

[5. The Charging Part.]

Whereas, your orator and oratrix expressly charge the truth to be that said Henry Roe died possessed of personal estate of value sufficient to pay all his just debis and funeral expenses, and leave at least three thousand dollars for distribution to your orator and oratrix as aforesaid, and that said Richard Roe and Robert Roe were duly appointed and qualified as his administrators and took charge of his personal estate as aforesaid, and that he left no will, all of which the said confederates at other times confess and admit.

All of which actions and doings, neglects and pretences, and other conduct on the part of said Richard Roe and Robert Roe and their said confederates, are contrary to equity and good conscience, and tend to the manifest wrong, injury and oppression of your orator and oratrix in the premises.

[6. The Jurisdiction Clause.]

In tender consideration whereof, and forasmuch as your orator and oratrix are remediless in the premises at and by the direct and strict rules of the common law, and cannot have adequate relief save only in a Court of Equity where matters of this and a similar nature are properly cognizable and relievable.

[7. The Interrogating Part.]

To the end, therefore, that the said Richard Roe and Robert Roe, and their said confederates when discovered, may upon their several and respective corporal oaths, full, true, direct and perfect answers make to the best of their respective knowledge, information and belief, and to all and singular the matters and things hereinbefore stated, and charge, and fully and particularly in every respect as if the same were here again repeated, and they thereunto particularly and distinctly interrogated; and that not only to the best of their respective knowledge and remembrance, but also to the best of their several and respective information, hearsay and belief, answer and set forth a full, true, fair and accurate account of each and every item of property, including goods and chattels, money, accounts, notes of hand, bills single, bills of exchange, mortgages, or other evidences of debt, by them, or either of them received as administrators as aforesaid; and further that they set forth and discover on their several and respective oaths as aforesaid, and to the best of their respective knowledge, information, remembrance, hearsay and belief, an account, item by item, and date by date, of each and every payment and disbursement made by them or either of them, and to whom, and for what, on account of said administratorship.

And your orator and oratrix further show, set forth and charge, that said Richard Roe and Robert Roe have pending a bill in your Honor's Court against one John Dew to foreclose a mortgage by said John Dew, executed to the father of your orator and oratrix, for § 154. Present Form of an Original Bill.—But now, by the Code, the confederating part, the charging part, the jurisdiction clause, and other mere formal matter, are required to be omitted, and it is made the duty of the Court to discountenance prolixity, and unnecessary and false allegations, in all Chancery pleadings. The result of the statute is, that in our practice, bills are becoming less and less prolix, and contain less and less unnecessary matter. Nevertheless there yet remains in them too much of the old leaven of surplusage and tautology. The following is the proper form of an original bill, under our present practice:

FORM OF AN ORIGINAL BILL.7

[1. The Address.8]

To the Honorable John P. Smith, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Dandrige:

[2. The Commencement, or Caption, or Style.9]

John Doe, a resident of Jefferson county, complainant,

Richard Roe, a resident of Knox county,

Henry Johnson, a resident of Jefferson county, and John Jones, a non-resident of the State, defendants.

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

5 Code, § 4314.
6 Code, § 4316.
7 This bill is a mere pleading, and would not need to be sworn to had it not alleged the non-residence and infancy of Jones, and these facts might have been sworn to in a separate affidavit:
8 Sometimes, also, called the Direction; but in the Code called the Address. Code, § 4313.
9 Ordinarily, called the Introduction; but in the margin of the Code, termed the Commencement. Code, § 4313, margin. In our Reports, it is frequently referred to as the Caption; Grubbs v. Colter, 7 Bax., 472, see syllabus; Robertson v. Winchester, 1 Pick., 178; Swan v. Newman, 3 Head, 250; Majors v. McNellis, 7 Heisk., 297; Walker v. Cottrell, 6 Bax., 270; Brown v. Brown, 2 Pick., 314.
FORM OF AN ORIGINAL BILL.

[3. The Premises, or Statement of the Facts.]

I.

That he and the defendants are the owners in fee of a lot in the town of Dandridge, in Jefferson county, situated on Main Street, adjoining the lot of George Williams on the north, and the lot of Samuel Brown on the south, fronting one hundred feet on Main Street, and running back between parallel lines two hundred feet to an alley, being lot No. eight in the registered plan of said town.

II.

Said lot has no encumbrances on it, and no one has any interest therein, except complainant and defendants, who each own a one-fourth undivided part thereof. The deed to complainant and defendants, for said lot, made by John Brown, has never been registered: it is in possession of defendant Johnson, who refuses to have it registered.

III.

The said lot has a large and valuable mansion-house upon it, and all necessary outbuildings, making it very desirable property as one lot. It would be manifestly to the advantage of the parties to have it sold for division, as a partition cannot be made without great injury to all concerned.

[4. The Prayer for Process.]

IV.

Complainant, therefore prays:

1st, That subpoena to answer issue against the said resident defendants, and publication be made as to John Jones, who is an infant and a non-resident of this State, and that they be required to answer this bill fully [but not on oath.]

[5. The Prayer for Relief.]

2d, That the defendant, Johnson, be required to file said unregistered deed with his answer, that it may be used as evidence, and then be registered.

3d, That a guardian ad litem be appointed for the defendant, John Jones, who has no general guardian in this State, to defend for him.

4th, That said lot be sold, and that the proceeds be divided between the parties to this suit, share and share alike, and that complainant may have such further and other relief as the nature of his case may require.

EUGENE HOLTSSINGER, Counsel.

[6. The Verification.]

State of Tennessee, County of Jefferson.

John Doe makes oath that the statements in his foregoing bill are true, to the best of his knowledge, information and belief.

[7. The Jurat.]

Sworn to and subscribed before me, this Dec. 26, 1895.

G. W. HOLTSSINGER, C. & M.

It will thus be seen that an ordinary original bill consists, usually, of five parts: 1, The address to the Chancellor; 2, The commencement, containing the names, character, and county residence, of the complainant and the defendants; 3, The statement of the facts on which the suit is founded; 4, The prayer for process; and, 5, The prayer for relief. If the bill seeks a discovery, which is not usual, it might be termed a 6th part of the bill; but a discovery is generally included in the prayer for relief. Each of these parts will be more fully considered.

§ 155. Form of the Address of a Bill.—Every bill and petition must be addressed to the Chancellor of the division in which the bill or petition is to be filed, and should designate him by his name, and give his official character, and specify the particular Court in which the bill or petition is filed, or to be filed. It would, however, be not improper to omit his name, and address the bill to him as an officer, giving his official designation, (Chancellor, not Judge,) and the style of his Court. The following is the statutory form of address: 14

10 This part is, generally, styled the premises, or stating part; the Code, however, terms it the statement of the facts. Code § 4314.
11 According to the English practice, the prayer for Process came last; but, under our practice, the prayer for Relief comes last; Code, § 4314. The relative order of these prayers, however, is wholly a matter of form, and, hence, absolutely immaterial.
12 A bill must always be signed either by the party himself, or by a Solicitor of the Court. Code, § 3979; St. Eq. Pl., § 47.
13 See post, § 159.
14 Code, §§ 4312-4313. If the address fail to show the particular Court in which the bill is to be filed, the Chancellor would not know, when an injunction or attachment bill was sent to him by mail for a flat.
THE ADDRESS OF A BILL.

To the Hon. John P. Smith, Chancellor of the 1st Chancery Division, holding the Chancery Court at Dandridge.

But an address in the following form would not be improper, especially as it may sometimes happen that the exact name of a Chancellor in a distant part of the State, or the number of his division, may not be known, or there may be a vacancy in the office.

To the Honorable Chancellor holding the Chancery Court at Tiptonville.

The name of a public officer is, in such a case, immaterial. The bill is not addressed to the man, but to the officer. The two foregoing forms are simple, and should be substantially adhered to in drawing both bills and petitions.

§ 156. Form of the Commencement of a Bill.—After the address, it would seem proper that the names of the parties making the address should first be given, so that the Chancellor might know who the parties addressing him are, and what character they sue. He should, also, know who the parties are against whom complaint is made, and whether they are sued in their own right, or otherwise. It is the practice, therefore, to set out the names, character, and county residence of all the complainants, and of all the defendants, next after the address to the Chancellor. This is not only an old practice, but it is, also, the statutory practice; and no departure should either be made from it by a pleader, or be allowed by the Court; for it is not only the statutory practice, but it is the best possible practice, and every departure from it is a confusing innovation, alike annoying to the Court, to the defendants, and especially to the Clerk. Oftentimes, when the names and residences of the parties are not given next after the address, it is really difficult to fish them out of the body of the bill; and the Clerk is sometimes greatly perplexed to know who the parties are, and in what counties they reside. The names, character, and county residence of the parties should be given thus:

COMMENCEMENT, OR CAPTION, OF A BILL.

John Smith, guardian of Henry Jones, a minor, both residents of Knox county; Sarah Brown, a minor, who sues by her husband, George Brown, both residents of Anderson county; Eliza Jones, a minor, who sues by her next friend, William Williams, both residents of Knox county; and Charles Jones and James Jones, residents of Kentucky complainants.

vs.

Jonathan Watson, administrator of Samuel Jones, deceased, and Isaac Jones and Thomas Jones, residents of Knox county, and Richard Jones, a non-resident of the State, defendants.

The complainants respectfully show to the Court:

Care should always be taken to show in the commencement of the bill in what character the parties sue, or are sued; and, although this is not absolutely required to be done in this part of the bill, it is, nevertheless, a very convenient practice. But the name and county of each party should, invariably, be fully set out in this part of the bill, for the reasons above given.

The following are additional forms of the in which one of his various Courts the bill was intended to be filed; and, as a consequence, would not know to what particular Clerk and Master to address his bill. A bill addressed: "To Hon. John P. Smith, Chancellor," is defectively addressed, because it fails to specify the particular Court in which it is to be filed. Code, § 451.

15 Code, § 4313; Grubbs v. Colter, 7 Bax., 432.

16 Occasionally, a bill is so drawn that it would seem the draftman himself did not really know who should be made parties, and had purposely left it to the Clerk and Master to use his best judgment in the matter. Any extra costs occasioned by the pleader's negligence in this matter should be invariably taxed against the complainant.

17 The Code form (§ 4313) uses the term, "citizen," but the section containing the caption. (§ 4313) says: "The address should be followed by the names and residences of the parties," and such is the uniform practice.

18 The commencement, "Humbly complaining, show unto your Honor, your erators and atritizes, and all similar ones, are foreign to our republican institutions, and savor of the servility of royal courts, where "the candied tongue licks absurd pomp, and crook the pregnant hinges of the knee, where thrift may follow fawning." How much simpler, and more suitable to our times and institutions, is the form given in our Code: "The complainant respectfully shows to the Court." In the old English practice, the word "Humbly" was omitted when a peer was the complainant. 2 Smith's Ch. Pr., 533; Lube's Eq. Pl., 285. In Tennessee, all men are peers; hence even by the strict English practice, "humbly" should not be used in our State.
FORM OF AN ORIGINAL BILL.

COMMENCEMENTS OF BILLS.

1. Bill by an Infant, Lunatic, or Married Woman, Suing by Next Friend.
   Sarah Brown, an infant [or lunatic or married woman,] who sues by John Brown, her next friend, both residents of Scott county, complainant, Charles Brown, the guardian [or husband] of said Sarah Brown, a resident of Overton county, defendant; and the heirs, distributees, and assignees of William Brown, deceased, whose names and residences are unknown, and cannot be ascertained on diligent inquiry.

   The complainant, Sarah Brown, an infant [or lunatic, or married woman,] who sues by John Brown, her next friend, respectfully shows to the Court:

2. Bill by a Husband and Wife.
   Charles Brown and Sarah Brown, his wife, both residents of Overton county, complainants, John Brown, general guardian of said Sarah Brown, and Henry Jones and Columbus Jones, his sureties as such guardian, all residents of Scott county, defendants.

3. Bill by a Guardian, Administrator, or Executor.
   Charles Brown, general guardian [or administrator or executor] of Sarah Brown [or of Sarah Brown, deceased.] residents of Overton county, complainant, John Brown and Henry Brown, both residents of Clay county, defendants.

4. Bill by a Creditor on Behalf of Himself and all Other Creditors.
   John Doe, a resident of Knox county, complainant, who sues on behalf of himself and of all the other creditors of John Smith, deceased.

   Samuel Smith, administrator of said John Smith, [and all the heirs of said John Smith, naming them,] defendants.

   The complainant, John Doe, who sues in behalf of himself and of all other creditors of John Smith, deceased, respectfully shows to the Court:

5. Bill by a County, City, or Corporation.¹⁹
   The County of Roane, complainant,

   The County of Loudon and J. J. Duff, Trustee and resident of Loudon county, defendants.

   The Mayor and City Council of Nashville.

   The Mayor and Aldermen of Edgefield.

   The East Tennessee Coal Company, a corporation under the laws of Tennessee [or, a corporation organized under the laws of Missouri, and registered in Anderson county under the laws of Tennessee,] and whose principal office is kept at Coal Creek, in Anderson county, complainant,

   The Knoxville and Ohio Railroad Company, a corporation whose principal office is kept in Knox county, defendant.

6. Bill by the State of Tennessee, on relation.²⁰
   The State of Tennessee, which sues by George W. Pickle, her Attorney General [or, by Thomas A. R. Nelson, her District Attorney, on the relation of John Doe, a resident of Knox county,] complainant,

   The Mudville Turnpike Company, an alleged corporation whose chief office is kept in Clay county, and John Doe, a resident of Clay County, defendants.

   The State of Tennessee, which sues by George W. Pickle, her Attorney General on the relation of John Doe, respectfully represents:

7. Bill by Partners.
   John Smith, James Brown, and Henry Jones, partners in trade under the name of John Smith & Co., residents of Shelby county, complainant, John Doe and David Doe, residents of Lake county, doing business under the name of Doe & Bro., defendants.

²⁰ The State may sue alone, in her own name; or may sue jointly with others; or may sue on the relation of some one or more persons. The suit is brought on the relation of a person, when such person is the real complainant, the suit being for his benefit, as in suits to forfeit a charter, or oust a usurper, under Code, §§ 3409-3426. The reason a relator is required in such cases is that there may be some one before the Court against whom costs may be adjudged. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 11; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 49.
8. Bill by a Taxpayer on Behalf of Himself and other Taxpayers.
John Doe, a resident of Knox county, complainant, who sues in behalf of himself and all other taxpayers of said county,

vs.

The County of Knox, and Richard Roe, the county trustee, and a resident of said county, defendants.

The complainant, who sues in behalf of himself and all other taxpayers of Knox county, respectfully shows to the Court:

9. Bill by a Legatee on Behalf of Himself and all Other Legates.
John Doe, a resident of Union county, complainant, who sues in behalf of himself and of all the other legates of James Doe, deceased,

vs.

Richard Roe, the executor, Mary Doe, the widow, and Roland Roe, the heir and distributee, of Roland Roe, senior, deceased, all residents of Union county, defendants.

10. Bill by the State for the Use of a Citizen.
The State of Tennessee, which sues for the use of John Doe, a resident of Lake county, complainant,

vs.

Richard Roe, guardian of said John Doe, and Roland Roe and Robert Roe, sureties of said Richard Roe, on his bond as such guardian, all residents of Lake county, defendants.

The complainant, the State of Tennessee, which sues for the use of John Doe, respectfully represents:

Some Solicitors prefer the following form for the caption, or commencement, and address of a bill, and, as it is substantially the form prescribed by the Code, there can be no legal objection to it:

ANOTHER FORM OF CAPTION AND ADDRESS.
The Bill of Complaint of Henry Wilson and John Smith, both residents of Hamilton county, and Charles Johnson, a resident of the State of Georgia, filed in the Chancery Court of Bradley county, against

George Jones and Sarah Jones, his wife, residents of Bradley county, and William Smith, a resident of McMinn county.
To the Hon. S. A. Key, Chancellor, holding the Chancery Court at Cleveland: Complainants respectfully show to the Court:

§ 157. Form of the Premises, or Statement of the Facts.—This part constituting, in truth, the real substance of the bill upon which the Court is called to act, requires great skill and judgment to frame it aright; and if it has not the proper legal certainty, the defect, unless removed, may be fatal. The rules, as to the proper mode of stating the facts in this part of the bill, have already been fully considered. It must be remembered, however, that every material fact, as to which the complainant means to offer evidence, ought to be distinctly stated; for otherwise he will not be permitted to offer, or require, any evidence of such fact. A general charge, or statement, however, of the matter of fact is ordinarily sufficient; and it is not necessary to charge minutely all the circumstances which may conduce to prove the general charge; for these circumstances are properly matters of evidence, which need not be charged in order to let them in as proofs. Nothing, however, can be proved that has not been alleged, and nothing can be decreed that has not been alleged. Neither proof nor prayers are of any avail in the absence of allegations. Nothing can be prayed, proved, or decreed, that does not rest on allegations. Allegations are, at once, (1) the foundation of the Court’s jurisdiction of the case, (2) the notification to the defendant of what is to be litigated, (3) the test of the materiality and pertinency of the evidence, (4) the limitation of the bounds of the controversy, and (5) the justification of the relief granted.

21 Hunter v. Justices, 7 Cold. 49.
22 The party aggrieved by the breach of an official bond can sue the obligors directly, and in his own name. See, ante, § 119.
23 These are the “premises” referred to at the beginning of the prayer, “The premises considered, complainant prays.”
24 Thus, for instance, it is generally sufficient to say that complainant owns in fee a certain tract of land, without specifying the facts on which his title is based.
The Code requires that the bill should contain a clear and orderly statement of the facts on which the suit is founded, without proximity or repetition, without averring any formal combination or confederacy by the defendants, or others, the insufficiency of the remedy at law, or other mere formal matter.\textsuperscript{26}

The body of the bill should be divided into paragraphs consecutively numbered, each paragraph containing a separate fact and its special circumstances. Such a division not only generally makes a bill more logical, but greatly facilitates reference to its parts, and better enables the defendant to frame his answer.

\textsection{158. Forms of Prayers for Process.---As there is no set form of the premises of a bill so there can be no set form of the prayer, for the prayer varies with the premises, but the following forms will indicate the general character of the phraseology used in prayers for process:

PRAYERS FOR PROCESS.

1. Prayer for Subpoena and Publication. Complainant prays that subpoena to answer issue as to the resident defendants, and that publication be made as to the non-resident defendants, requiring them to appear, and answer the bill, [but their answer on oath is waived.]

2. Prayer for an Attachment. That an attachment issue [by order of your Honor] and be levied on all the above described property of the defendant, and all the other property of the defendant, or on enough thereof to satisfy complainant's said debt, and costs of this suit.

3. Prayer for an Injunction. That an injunction be ordered by your Honor to issue, to inhibit and restrain the defendant, his agents and servants, from committing any further waste, or destroying any timber, or in any way trespassing upon the tract of land hereinabove described; [or, from transferring, assigning, encumbering, or removing said property; or, from doing the particular act or acts complained of, or threatened, specifying such acts briefly.]

4. Prayer for an Injunction Against a Suit at Law. That the defendant, Richard Roe, his counsellors, attorneys and agents, be restrained by injunction from proceeding further in said suit, [or execution;] and also from instituting any new or other suit for a like purpose in said Court, or in any other Court [or from suing out any other execution or process on said judgment,] without leave of your Honor.

5. Prayer for a Receiver. That a receiver be appointed to take possession of the said goods, chattels, choses in action [or houses, lands, or other property in litigation, or bounded and attached, specifying such property,] and that he be authorized and directed to sell the said personal property, [or rent and collect the rents of the said houses and lands] and collect the said choses in action, and that a writ of possession issue to put him in possession thereof, if necessary.

\textsection{159. Forms of Prayers for Relief.---The forms of the prayers for relief are as various as the forms of bills, and depend entirely on the material allegations of the bills, but a careful consideration of what has been already said about prayers for relief, and of the following forms will greatly aid the pleader in formulating his prayers:

PRAYERS FOR RELIEF.

1. Prayer for General Relief. That complainant may have such further and other relief as he may be entitled to.

2. Prayer for a Guardian ad Litem. That a guardian ad litem be appointed to defend this suit, for the said Robert Roe, who is an infant without regular guardian.

3. Prayer for an Administrator. That an administrator be appointed to administer the estate of said Richmond Roe, deceased, in this Court; and that all necessary orders be made, and accounts taken, for that purpose.

4. Prayer for Discovery.\textsuperscript{27} That all the defendants, [or, the defendant, Henry Jones,] he required on their several and respective oaths to make full, true, direct and perfect answer to all and singular the matters aforesaid, according to the best of their knowledge, remembrance, information and belief; and that they specially answer, and set forth, whether —[Here insert the particular interrogatories to be answered. These interrogatories may be in the form usually filed in order to take the deposition of an absent witness, omitting, of course, any caption.]

5. Prayer for the Production of Deeds and Papers. That the defendant, Richard Roe, be required to file with the Clerk and Master of this Court, the said deed [or other writing or book] hereinabove referred to, to the end that complainant, and your Honor, may have due opportunity to inspect the same.

6. Prayer for an Account. That the defendant, Richard Roe, set forth in his answer, a full, true and particular account of all moneys by him, or his agents, or servants, received, collected, or in any way obtained from the business and transactions referred to, [or, received by him as guardian, administrator, partner, agent or trustee] and all the rents and profits received, or that might, by due diligence, have been received, by him from the tract of land, [or house and lot, or business] hereinabove described; and all the timber, trees; [notes, accounts, goods, wares and merchandise] or other property, he may have sold, removed, given away, or allowed to be removed, from said premises; and that the Master be ordered to take and state an account of all the dealings between complainant and the defendant, so as to show the full and true amount due complainant, by reason of the premises.

7. Prayers for a Money Recovery. That the complainant may have and recover of the defendant the said sum of [six hundred] dollars, and interest thereon since the day said debt matured; [or, recover of the defendant the value of the said work and labor done, and of the said services rendered by complainant as aforesaid; or recover of the defendant the amount due on said note, principal and interest; and also the amount due on said account, and interest thereon] and all the costs of this cause.

8. Prayers for Damages. That the complainant recover of the defendant the damages he has suffered by reason of the failure of the defendant to comply with his said contract; [or, to make good his said covenants and warranty; or, to perform his said agreement; or, that complainant recover the damages he has sustained by reason of the said breaches of contract of the defendant; or, by reason of the quality and quantity of said goods not being as represented; or, by reason of said deficiencies in quantity, quality, and value] and, also, all the costs of the cause.

9. Prayer for Sale of Land.28 That said tract of land be sold to satisfy the demand [or debt] of complainant [or such decree as your Honor may pronounce in complainant's favor by reason of the premises] and that said sale be made by the Clerk and Master to the highest and best bidder on a credit of not less than six nor more than twenty-four months, and in bar of all right of redemption, [or, that said sale be made for cash.]

10. Prayer for an Account of Money or Property Had and Received. And that said defendant [or defendants] set forth in his [or their] answer [or answers] an account of each and every sum of money or piece of property received by him, [or them, or either of them] or by any other person or persons, by his [or their] order [or the order of either of them,] or for his [or their] use, [or for the use of either of them] for, or on account of, or by reason of, or in relation to, said agency [partnership or other business or matter] and when and from whom received; and for what, or on what account, each and every of said sums of money or pieces of property, were respectively received, and how all and every of said sums of money, or pieces of property, have been respectively applied or disposed of.

11. Prayer for an Account of Rents and Profits. And that the said defendants set forth in their answer or answers, a full, true, just and particular account of each and every sum of money received by them, or either of them, or by any other person or persons, by their order, or the order of either of them, as rents, profits or issues of said land [or house and lot, or partnership business, or other business] or any part thereof.

12. Prayer for an Account of Personal Estate. And that the said defendant [or defendants] discover and set forth in their answer [or answers] a full, true, just and particular account of all and singular the personal estate and effects of said testator, [or intestate,] and of every item and part thereof which has come into his [or their] hands, possession or control, or into the hands, possession or control of any other person or persons, by his [or their] order or permission, or for his or their use; and that he [or they] give the nature, quantities and highest values of each of the items set forth or mentioned, and how the same have been applied and disposed of, and whether any, and what items have not been applied and disposed of, and why not; and that the defendant [or defendants] set forth an account of the debts of said testator [or intestate] and of his funeral expenses, and whether any and which of such debts and expenses have not been paid, and why.

13. Prayer for the Production of Deeds and Papers. And that the said defendant [or defendants] set forth in his [or their] answer [or answers] a list or schedule or description of each and every deed, contract, book, account, letter, paper, or other writing relating, in whole or in part, to the matters aforesaid, or to any of them, in his, [or their] possession or control, and that he [or they] deposit the same in the office of the Clerk and Master of your Honor's Court for inspection and copy; and that he [or they] account for such of the deeds [etc., stating them] referred to in paragraph III [state which paragraph or paragraphs] of the bill, as are not in his [or their] possession.

§ 160. The Signing of a Bill.—Every bill, or petition, filed in the Chancery Court must be signed by the complainant, or petitioner, in person, or by his Solicitor. A signing on the back of the bill by the Solicitor has been held sufficient.

The great object of this rule is to secure regularity, relevancy, and decency in the allegations of the bill, and the responsibility and guaranty of counsel that, upon the instructions given to them, and the case laid before them by their client, there is good ground for the suit in the manner in which it is framed. Hence it is that counsel are held responsible for the contents of the bill; and if it contains matter which is irrelevant, impertinent, or scandalous, such matter may be expunged; and the counsel may be ordered to pay costs to the party aggrieved, and this duty has often been enforced by the Courts of Chancery. So, where a bill has been filed without authority of the complainant, or of a co-complainant, the Solicitor will, on due proceedings for that purpose, be adjudged to pay accrued costs in consequence of his unauthorized action.29

It is not essential to the validity of a bill, or petition, that the complainants should sign it; it is sufficient if their names appear in the caption.30 Nevertheless, it is much the better practice to require a petition to be signed and sworn to by the parties themselves, and not by their agents, or Solicitors.31

§ 161. Verification of a Bill.—No bill need be sworn to, unless: 1, It prays for process of injunction,32 or attachment, or ne exeat; or 2, Unless it seeks the immediate appointment of a receiver, an administrator or a guardian ad litem; or 3, Unless it is a bill to sell the property of a person under disability;33 or 4, To administer an insolvent estate;34 or 5, To set up lost instruments;35 or 6, To have an inquisition of lunacy;36 or 7, To obtain a divorce;37 or 8, For a mandamus,38 or habeas corpus;39 or 9, A bill in the name of the State against corporations and usurpers of office;40 or 10, A bill of interpleader,41 or 11, A bill of review for newly discovered evidence;42 or 12, A bill to perpetuate testimony, or to take testimony de bene esse;43 or 13, A bill or Replevin.44

It may be stated as a general rule, that, whenever a bill or petition seeks some immediate order or interposition of the Court, such as an injunction, or an attachment, or a ne exeat, the appointment of a receiver, administrator, guardian ad litem, or publication as to non-resident or unknown defendants, it must be sworn to. But the facts necessary for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, or for process by publication, may be sufficiently made to appear by a separate affidavit, in which case the bill need not be sworn to, unless its verification is otherwise required.

Where there is any reasonable doubt whether a bill should be sworn to or not, it is safer to verify it. But a bill that seeks no process except subpoena, seeks no order or relief until final decree, seeks no interference with parties or proceedings in any other forum, and seeks in no way to interfere with the acts, possession, or property of the defendant pending the suit, need not be sworn to, as a rule.

Petitions should always be sworn to, when they are filed pending a litigation commenced by bill. Petitions which are filed in lieu of a bill, such as petitions for divorce, inquisition of lunacy, mandamus, and habeas corpus, must also be sworn to; but a petition for partition, or for homestead, or for dower, need not be sworn to.

§ 162. Manner of Verifying Bills.—There is sometimes a great looseness, and sense of irresponsibility, connected with the verification of pleadings. Verification is not a matter of form, but of substance. It breathes into bills, otherwise inert, the breath of life and the soul of truth, and gives them immediate and sometimes far-reaching efficacy. The verification of the bill removes it from the category of apocryphal documents, and for preliminary purposes impresses it with the seal of verity.

We have no statute, or authorized rule of practice, specifying the manner and form of verifying pleadings, but the following form is so generally recognized that it may be deemed adequate, in ordinary cases: 45

AFFIDAVITS TO BILLS.

State of Tennessee, |
County of Morgan. |

John Smith makes oath that the statements by him in the foregoing bill are true to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief.

Sworn to and subscribed before me June 1, 1890.

W. D. Wright, C. & M.

A fuller and better form of affidavit is as follows: 46

State of Tennessee, |
County of Morgan. |

John Smith makes oath that the statements in his foregoing bill, made as of his own knowledge, are true, and those made as on information and belief, he believes to be true.

Sworn to and subscribed before me June 1, 1890.

W. D. Wright, C. & M.

When a bill is sworn to according to the latter form, and especially when it shows on its face clearly what statements are made on the complainant’s own knowledge, and what on the information of others, it will have more weight on the hearing of a preliminary matter, such as a motion to dissolve an injunction, 47 or to appoint a receiver, than a bill less correctly drawn, and sworn to on knowledge, information and belief in an indefinite manner.

Sometimes a bill is verified by a Solicitor, or agent. This should never be done but in case of extreme necessity, especially by a Solicitor. When so verified, the Solicitor or agent should make oath to his agency and personal knowledge of the matters stated in the bill, except those stated to be on the information and belief of the complainant, and as to those matters he should make oath that he believes them to be true. 48 This form is suggested:

ARTICLE IV.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS AS TO THE DRAWING OF BILLS.

§ 165. Relations of the Parties to a Suit.

§ 166. The General Rule of Law Applicable to the Case.

§ 165.—The Relations of the Parties to a Suit.—Whenever two or more persons have relations to, or with, each other, various legal and equitable rights and duties arise from the relation; and for the protection of these rights, and the enforcement of these duties, Courts are established. These relations are those of family, neighborhood, society, business, commerce and government; and may be divided into: 1, Primary or original relations, being those that exist between the original parties to the transaction; 2, Secondary or derivative relations, being those that exist between an original party and the privy of the other original party, and 3, Collateral relations, being those that exist between the privies of the original parties. The principal primary, or original, relations are those of parent and child, husband and wife, guardian and ward, master and servant, attorney and client, adviser and advised, vendor and vendee, mortgage and mortgagee, landlord and tenant, trustee and beneficiary, personal representative and distributee or legatee, principal and agent, bailor and bailee, partner and partner, tenants in common, principal and surety, debtor and creditor, assignor and assignee, creditor and surety, bargainer and bargainee, and citizen and State. The principal secondary or derivative relations are those existing between one of the original parties to the transaction and the vendee, assignee, executor, administrator, heir, devisee, widow, or other privy, of the other original party.

The legal and equitable rights and duties, arising from the relations of the parties, ordinarily become more complicated in proportion to the distance the parties are removed from the original parties; but, as a rule, a privy's rights and duties are the same as those of the person in whose shoes he stands, or to whose rights he succeeds, the principal exception to the rule being in favor of innocent purchasers for value, without notice.

§ 166.—The General Rule of Law Applicable to the Case.—No one can draw a logical and concise bill, without first considering the relations of the parties to the controversy and the general rule of law\textsuperscript{2} applicable to the case, and then alleging the facts necessary to bring the complainant’s case within this rule. This general rule of law is often termed, in our Reports, “the theory of the bill.”\textsuperscript{7} The clearer this general rule, or theory, appears to the mind of the pleader, the more logical and concise will be the allegations of his bill.\textsuperscript{8} Indeed, the obscurity and confusion and indefiniteness of a bill, almost invariably, result from the obscurity and indefiniteness of the pleader’s conception of the general rule of law, applicable to the facts of his case. The law of relations enables a pleader readily to grasp these general rules of law, and thereby make his bills logical and concise, the two principal characteristics of good pleading.

58 See, ante, §§ 161-163; and, post, §§ 788-789.
1 Hart v. Czapski, 11 Lea, 154. The application of the doctrine of relations to the framing of bills seems to have been first made in Lube's Equity Pleadings.

To every general rule of law there are various exceptions; but these exceptions are ordinarily matters to be brought forward by the defendant. In drawing a bill, all matters which are within exceptions to the general rule, and all matters in avoidance, should generally be left for the defendant to allege and prove.

The general rule of law arises: (1) out of the relations of the parties, (2) out of the rights and duties resulting from those relations, and (3) out of the acts of the defendant in violation of those rights and duties; and (4) it defines the manner and measure of redress to which the complainant is entitled. Hence, a pleader, before beginning to draw a bill, should consider the general rule of law applicable to his client’s case, and so frame his bill as to make out a case within the rule, and at the same time not within any of the exceptions to the rule. The most easy and logical way to do this, is by keeping in mind the relations of the parties, and the acts of the defendant in violation of the duties arising from those relations.

§ 167. Application of the Law of Relations in Drawing a Bill.—Out of the relation of the parties, certain legal or equitable duties arise on one side, and certain legal or equitable rights on the other.\textsuperscript{5} These rights and duties are correlated, the duties owing by one party being the rights owned by the other.\textsuperscript{6} A violation of the duties violates the correlated right, and a cause of action arises in favor of the owner of the violated right, and against the owner of the violated duty. These correlated rights and duties are, or may be, formulated into general rules of law, the knowledge of which is essential to an adequate comprehension of the case. When, therefore, a Solicitor is called on to state the law applicable to a given case, he should consider, (1) the relations of the parties, (2) the duties arising from those relations, (3) which of those duties have been violated by the defendant, (4) what remedy the general rule of law, applicable to the case, provides for such violation, and (5) in what Court that remedy can best be enforced.

The general theory of every properly drawn bill, is (1) that the defendant has done, is doing, or is attempting, or threatening to do, some wrong to, or to withhold some right from, the complainant; and (2) that the Court in which the bill case in advance of every step taken, and that theory consistent with the facts and the law. He should form this theory before he draws the bill; and conform his pleadings to that theory. The proof must correspond to the theory of his bill; his argument at the hearing must be in accordance of this theory as shown by both pleadings and proof; and the relief he seeks by decree must be such as the theory requires and allows.

\textsuperscript{2} This general rule of law is the major premise of the legal syllogism; the facts of the case are the minor premise, and the special relief prayed for is the conclusion of the syllogism. No Solicitor can become a first, pleader, without knowing the general principles set forth in this and subsequent sections; and, while these principles may, at first, appear metaphysical and abstruse, and their study unintelligible, on closer attention their importance will become manifest, and their acquisition will be found a task by no means difficult, or disagreeable. Pleading is the pursuit of logic and lucid disposition.

is filed has jurisdiction to remedy or prevent that wrong, or to enforce that right. The wrong complained of may (1) grow out of some act or omission of the defendant, in violation of his duties to complainant, arising from some relation between the parties, or (2) may grow out of some act or omission of the defendant, in violation of some right of complainant, existing independently of any relations.

§ 168. General Form of Bill Where Relations Exist.—Therefore, in drawing a bill based on relations, the first matter to be considered is, whether the alleged wrong arises from any relation, or not; and the second matter to be considered is, what is the general rule of law or Equity applicable to the facts of the case. Having settled the general rule, and ascertained that the case does not come within any of the exceptions thereto, you will, in drafting the bill, (1) begin by showing the relations of the parties, and how they arose or were created, whether by contract expressed or implied, or by operation of law; (2) then show how and wherein the duties arising from those relations have been violated by the defendants, and the extent of the injury resulting to the complainant from such violation; (3) if there are other parties, secondarily liable to complainant by reason of the other defendant’s primary liability, show how and wherein; (4) if any specific property is sought to be attached, impounded, recovered, or secured from removal or alienation, so state, specifying the property so as fully to identify it, and giving, with particularity and precision, the grounds for this procedure; (5) if the defendant is doing, or threatening, any act likely to result in irreparable injury to complainant, or any act contrary to equity and good conscience, detail such acts, and show how or wherein they will work irreparable injury, or gross iniquity; (6) if there is any matter connected with, or growing out of, the foregoing matters, necessary to be brought before the Court to enable it to make a complete decree and determine the whole controversy, here bring forward such subordinate matters, and show their connection with the principal matters in dispute; (7) if any preliminary relief is needed, any injunction, attachment, or receiver, so specially pray; (8) then pray for specific and general relief; (9) aver that this is the first application for the extraordinary process prayed; and then (10) sign the bill, and have your client make proper affidavit to it, if necessary. All of this will, perhaps, be better understood by reference to the following

[For address and caption, see ante, §§ 155; 164.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I. That, [at a time stated, certain specified facts existed, whereby arose between the complainant and the defendant certain relations, stating the relations.]

II. That, [as a result of the aforesaid relations, certain specified duties or debts were imposed on, or incurred or assumed by, the defendant; and certain specified rights accrued to the complainant, setting forth these duties, or debts, and the rights claimed, with definiteness.]

III. That, [the defendant has violated his aforesaid duties to complainant, and has withheld from the complainant his just dues or rights in the premises, showing wherein, with clearness and particularity.]

IV. That, [as a consequence of the preceding facts, the complainant is entitled to relief, and he therefore prays (1) for proper process to bring the defendant before the Court, (2) for the particular relief he deems himself entitled to, and (3) for general relief.]

§ 169. General Form of a Bill Where No Relations Exist.—Bills of this kind are generally filed to assert rights to, or to secure protection for, specific property, real or personal, as in a bill (1) to assert title to, or interest in, land or personalty, (2) to protect or preserve land or personalty, (3) to remove clouds on title, (4) to stay waste, prevent trespasses, and inhibit irreparable injury, (5) to enjoin or abate nuisances, and the like. These bills also lie in many other cases where injunctions are needed, as in (1) bills quia timet, (2) bills of peace, (3) bills to prevent a multiplicity of suits, and indeed in all other cases where the suit does not spring out of some contract, express or implied, or of some relation between the parties, but is based on some right of property in the complainant, and some actual or threatened violation of that right by the defendant.

The following general form will aid the draftsman of such bills:

GENERAL FORM OF BILL WHERE NO RELATIONS.

[For address and caption, see ante, §§ 155; 164.]

The complainant respectfully shows to the Court:

I.

[Here allege complainant’s title to the property, or other particular right, which he seeks to assert or protect; describing the property, or right, so as fully to identify it, and if it be land, give the boundaries and location of the tract.]

II.

[If said title, or rights, are evidenced by any writing or other muniment, so state, giving its date, and otherwise describing it, and making it an exhibit to the bill.]

III.

[Show when, wherein, and by which of the defendants, the complainant’s rights have been interfered with, or denied, or his said rights or property injured, or threatened, or his possession or use thereof interfered with, or denied, stating clearly the time, and main facts constituting the wrong complained of, and necessitating the application to the Court for relief.]

IV.

[If any of the defendants, especially defendants under disability, have rights or interests similar to those of complainant, and are entitled to similar relief, state, in a general way, these facts.]

V.

[If necessary to set up any special equity, or to relate any special atrocities, or gross misconduct, or other iniquitous conduct of the defendants, in order to emphasize the complainant’s wrongs, here set out such matters with reasonable certainty of time, place, and circumstance; and, if there be any grounds for an injunction, attachment, or receiver, here state them fully.]

VI.

[Here pray for the necessary process to bring the defendants into Court, and if any injunction, attachment, or receiver is necessary, or guardian ad litem, or administrator, pray therefor with particularity.]

VII.

[Here specify the particular relief desired, conforming your prayer to the facts alleged, praying in the alternative when necessary and proper; and praying, also, for general relief.]

VIII.

[Show that this is the first application for the particular extraordinary process prayed; and, if not the first, explain, and show why such process should now be granted.]

IX.

[The bill must be signed by counsel, or by the complainant in person; and if any extraordinary process, or any interlocutory order, not of course, is applied for, the bill must be sworn to, and a proper jurat attached.]

§ 170. Character of the Allegations in a Bill.—In drawing bills, remember that the more extraordinary the relief sought, the more specific must be the allegations. In a bill to collect an ordinary debt, without extraordinary process, general allegations showing that the defendant is indebted to the complainant may suffice; and, in an ordinary ejectment bill, general allegations of ownership by the complainant, and of wrongful possession by the defendant, may sustain a suit; but general allegations will not be sufficient when the bill seeks (1) to attach property, or (2) to have a receiver appointed, or (3) to obtain an injunc-

10 Keep in mind that a bill for an injunction, attachment, or receiver, is both a pleading and an affidavit, and must possess all the characteristics of a special affidavit, as elsewhere fully shown. See, ante, § 142.

11 If publication for non-residents, or a guardian ad litem for minors, or lunatics, is prayed for, the bill must be sworn to, or a separate affidavit of the non-residence, or disability, of the defendants filed, before such prayers can be granted.
A party should not undertake to drag a defendant into a Court of Conscience, unless he (1) has a good cause of action in fact, and (2) has that cause clearly and sufficiently set forth in his bill. Neither "information" alone, nor mere "information and belief," will suffice to sustain a prayer for relief; the complainant must make positive and direct averments, allegations, and charges, that the facts are so and so, and that the defendant has done so and so, using his "information" merely as the ground of his charge or averment, and to show that the fact alleged is not based on the direct personal knowledge of the complainant.

§ 171. How Parties Should be Described.—Parties, both complainant and defendant, should be described by their proper names, if known, always giving their first name in full, and never using the initial of their first name, unless their first given name is unknown, and cannot be readily ascertained.13 If, however, a defendant is sued upon a written instrument, he may be sued in the name and description used in the instrument.14

If the name of the defendant is unknown and cannot be ascertained upon diligent inquiry, the bill should so allege,15 using the statutory form, and setting forth in the bill clearly the character in which he is sued, and his title or interest in the subject-matter of the litigation.16

If the name of any party is a common one in the neighborhood, so that the Sheriff may not know which one of two or more with the same name is intended, the bill should use some method of designating him, adopting the particular designation, if any, used by his neighbors.17 This may be of great importance, 13 The law knows but one Christian name, and the omission, or incorrect insertion of a middle name, or initial, is immaterial. The full Christian name of a party should always be given in a pleading, or some sufficient excuse alleged for not doing. The use of an initial is not sufficient, except in case of suit on written instruments in which initials or contractions of the Christian name are used. Hawes on Parties, § 3.

14 Code, § 2788. In such a case, however, if he signs by initials, or signs an unusual name, it would be well to describe him by his usual name, also; thus, "G. W. Smith, otherwise called George W. Smith [or anything else]."
15 Code, § 4352, sub-sec. 4.
16 Code, § 4358. The "character" in which an unknown defendant is generally sued is that of husband, child, grand-child, heir, devisee, legatee, vendee or other privy, or representative, of some particular person named and described in the bill, who, if living, has an interest in the subject-matter of the litigation, and who, if dead, has possibly a living spouse and children, or other privies in estate. The bill will describe such persons as follows: "The said Susan Jones, who, if living, is entitled to an undivided one-seventh of said tract of land, went to Arizona twenty years ago, and has not been heard from for seventeen years. Where she now resides, if living; and, if dead, whether she died testate or intestate, and whether she left any husband, children, heirs or devisees, and if so, where they reside, and what their ages and names are, are all unknown to complainants, and cannot be ascertained upon diligent inquiry."
and may prevent trouble not only in serving the subpoena, but, also, in enforcing the decree, and in divesting and vesting title.

§ 172. How Lands should be Described.—Every bill that seeks the sale, partition or recovery, of land, or to clear the title to land, or to redeem land, or to specifically enforce a contract in reference to land, or that, in any other way, seeks to effect the title or possession of land, or any interest therein or encumbrance thereon, should describe the land by location, corners, courses and distances, or other appropriate description sufficient fully to identify it. A reference in the bill to exhibits, while sufficient in law, is a loose and dangerous practice, especially if the exhibit has not been registered. Exhibits are liable to be lost or mislaid, and are sometimes withdrawn by leave of the Court, in which case the description may be lost. Unless the land is adequately described in the bill and in the decree, the purchaser may be greatly embarrassed in asserting his title to definite boundaries, and the reputation of the Solicitor, Clerk and Chancellor, for accuracy and business capacity, may be greatly impaired.

§ 173. Some Miscellaneous Suggestions.—In drawing a bill where the parties are numerous, always leave in the caption two or three blank lines, for the insertion of additional complainants and defendants; because, while drawing the bill, you will often find it necessary to make additional parties, or to make other changes in the parties, and these blank lines will prove serviceable, and obviate the necessity of inartificial, and oftentimes illegible, interlineations.

It must be kept in mind that, whenever a bill sets forth facts on the strength of which (1) process by publication, (2) an injunction, (3) an attachment, (4) a receiver, (5) the appointment of a guardian ad litem, or (6) any other extraordinary, preliminary, or ex parte process, or order, is prayed or sought, it is both a pleading and an affidavit, and must, therefore, be verified by the oath of the complainant, or of some one else acquainted with the facts.

If you have no need for the evidence of the defendant, or have not full confidence in his veracity, do not fail to waive his oath to his answer, in drawing your bill. If, however, there are material facts exclusively in the personal knowledge of the defendant, or if he have material papers in his possession, or under his control, necessary to your client’s success, you may require an answer on oath, and may incorporate in your bill searching interrogatories to be responded to by the defendant in his answer. But remember, that you cannot force a defendant to discover, if you waive his oath to his answer.

Avoid all scandal, all impertinence, all literary allusions, all poetic displays, all indelicate statements—in short, all unnecessary allegations.

After the bill has been drawn, add a half sheet, (2 pages), of blank paper as a back to the bill; it will be found convenient to write a flat on, or an order appointing a receiver, and will give the Clerk room enough to make his endorsements.

18 Thus: Said tract of land is situated in the 4th civil district of Campbell county, adjoining the lands of Jonathan S. Lindsay, William Allen, J. M. Bibeau and others, and begins on a no-pal tree in the Powells Valley road, north of Jacksonboro, a corner of said Lindsay’s home farm, running thence south sixty poles to a large persimmon tree, [and so on] to the beginning, containing sixty acres more or less.

19 The bill and exhibits may be lost, or mislaid, but the minute-book is a permanent record.

20 But where the bill alleges a fact necessitating a publication as to a defendant, or the appointment of a guardian ad litem, these facts may be shown by an affidavit filed with the bill.

21 See, post, §§ 1018; 1023; 1121.

22 Some Solicitors are very niggard with their paper. They write below the bottom lines so that the sheets can not be fastened together without covering the writing; and they do not leave enough blank paper for the Chancellor to write a flat on, or for the Clerk to put his endorsements on. Such apparent penuriousness should be avoided. Some Solicitors have strong jackets for their pleadings, and the practice is a very commendable one. Solicitors should make the mechanical execution of their pleadings a matter of pride and solicitude. For some minor defects in pleadings, see, post, § 410.

PROCEEDINGS PRELIMINARY TO PROCESS.

ARTICLE I. Proceedings Preliminary to Extraordinary Process.

ARTICLE II. Filing of the Bill.

ARTICLE III. Proceedings in Reference to Costs.

ARTICLE I.

PROCEEDINGS PRELIMINARY TO EXTRAORDINARY PROCESS.

§ 174. Proceedings When an Injunction is Sought.

§ 175. Proceedings When an Attachment of Property is Sought.

§ 174. Proceedings When an Injunction is Sought.—The bill of complaint praying an injunction, having been prepared and duly sworn to, as hereafter fully shown, the next step is to present it to some Chancellor, or to some Judge of a Circuit, Criminal or Special Court, and apply for a fiat for an injunction. The Chancellor, or Judge, after reading the bill, will endorse on it his fiat, or his refusal, and transmit it, in a sealed envelope, to the Clerk and Master of the Court in which the bill is to be filed. The fiat is ordinarily as follows:

FIAT FOR AN INJUNCTION.

To the Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court at [naming the town where the Court is held in which the bill is to be filed.]

Issue a writ of injunction as prayed in the foregoing bill, on complainant giving bond therefor in the penalty of [naming the sum.]

Dec. 4, 1890.

S. A. Key, Chancellor.

Complainant must give bond, or take the pauper oath if the fiat so authorize, before the Clerk and Master can issue the writ of injunction. The forms of fiat, bonds, and oath, will be found in the Chapter on Injunctions.

§ 175. Proceedings When an Attachment of Property is Sought.—If the bill seeks to have the defendant's property attached, it must contain the proper allegations and be duly sworn to. If the ground of attachment alleged in the bill is one of the grounds for which an attachment would lie in the Circuit Court, the Clerk and Master may issue the writ of attachment without a fiat; but if the ground for the attachment is of a different character, the complainant must apply to a Chancellor, or to a Circuit, Criminal or Special Judge, for a fiat. This application is made in the same way as when an injunction is sought, and the practice in granting or refusing a fiat, and in transmitting the bill to the Clerk and Master, is the same as in the case of injunction bills. Indeed, the same bill often prays for both an injunction and an attachment.

If the attachment be granted by the Clerk and Master, or by a Chancellor, or Judge, the bond required by the statute, or the pauper oath in lieu, must be filed with the Clerk before the writ can issue. The forms of fiat, bonds, and oaths, for an attachment will be found in the Chapter on Attachments.

1 For the practice in injunction suits, see Chapter on Injunctions, post, §§ 800-863.
2 If no sum is named, the statute fixes the penalty at five hundred dollars. Code, § 4440.
3 See Chapter on Attachment Suits, post, §§ 869-890.
§ 176. Proceedings When a Receiver is Sought before Answer.—It sometimes happens that the immediate appointment of a receiver is desired by the complainant. In such a case, his bill, or an accompanying affidavit, must fully and particularly set out the urgency of the necessity; the bill must be sworn to, and must be presented to some Chancellor, or to some Circuit, Criminal or Special Judge, who, if the case for an instanter appointment be made out, and good cause shown why notice of the application should not be given, will endorse on the bill, or on a paper attached thereto, an order appointing a suitable person receiver as prayed, and specifying the bond he must give, and the duties he must perform. In such a case, the Chancellor, or Judge, may require the complainant to give a bond conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of the receiver; in which case this bond must be given before the receiver can act. The Chancellor, or Judge, may award a writ of possession, to put the receiver in possession of the property specified in the order appointing the receiver.

On making these orders, the Chancellor, or Judge, will transmit the papers in a sealed envelope to the Clerk and Master of the Court where the bill is to be filed. The forms of such orders, and of the bond, will be found in the Chapter on Receivers.

ARTICLE II.
FILING OF THE BILL.

§ 177. When and Where the Bill may be Filed.—Suits are commenced in the Chancery Court by bill; and bills may be filed in the office of the Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court at any time, whether the Court be in session or not; they may be filed at any hour of the day or night, provided the Clerk and Master, or his deputy, can be found to receive them; and a prosecution bond, or pauper oath in lieu, is not a condition precedent.

The bill must, of course, be filed in the particular Chancery Court that has jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, or of the subject-matter of the suit; for, if the bill be filed in a Chancery Court that has no jurisdiction, the defendant can defeat the suit by plea in abatement, motion to dismiss, or demurrer. In determining the proper county in which to file the bill, the following rules must be considered:

1. Bills to Divest, or Clear the Title to, Land;
2. Bills to Enforce the Specific Execution of Contracts Relating to Realty;
3. Bills to Foreclose a Mortgage, or Deed of Trust, by a sale of personal property or realty, must be filed in the county in which the land to be affected by the suit, or a material part of it, lies; or, in case the trust deed or mortgage is so great on Sunday, often renders it important to have the right to file bills of injunction and attachment, and obtain fiats and process, on that day. See 2 High on Injunc., § 1594.  2 The Clerk and Master, or his Deputy, may receive a bill at his own house, or on the street, or anywhere else in his county. In contemplation of law the Courts are always open. Const., Art., 1, § 17.

for personality, the bill must be filed in the county in which such deed or mortgage\(^3\) is registered.\(^4\) So,

4. Bills to recover land, whether in the nature of ejectment or detainer suits,\(^5\) and

5. Bills to Sell the Lands of a Decedent to Pay Debts, must be filed in the county where the land or a portion of it lies.\(^6\)

6. Bills for the Partition of Land, or a sale of land for partition, must be filed in the county in which the land, or any part of it, lies, or in which the defendant resides; or, if all the claimants join in the petition, it may be filed in any county.\(^7\)

7. Bills for Dower or Homestead, must be filed in the county where the land, or a portion of it, lies; or in the county where the husband last resided before his death.\(^8\)

8. Bills for the Sale of the Property of Persons Under Disability, must be filed in the county where the property is, or where the person under disability resides.\(^9\)

9. Bills by One Non-resident Against Another Non-resident to subject the real or personal property of the defendant to the satisfaction of a foreign judgment must be filed in the county where the property is situated.\(^10\)

10. Bills to Recover Possession of Personal Property, in the nature of replevin or detinue suits, must be filed in the county in which the goods and chattels, or a material part of them, are, or in which either of the defendants may be found.\(^11\)

11. Bills to Enforce Liens of Mechanics,\(^11a\) Liens on Boats,\(^11b\) Liens of Employees of railroads, corporations, partnerships, and merchants,\(^11c\) liens of contractors on railroads,\(^11d\) or other liens on property, must be filed in the county where the property, or some material part of it, sought to be attached, is situated if realty, or is found if personality.\(^11e\)

12. Bills Against Cities and Counties, whether local or transitory in their nature, must be filed, (1) in case of a city, in the county wherein the city is situated; and (2) in case of a county, in the Court of the county sued.\(^11f\)

13. Bills for the Appointment of Administrators must be filed in the county in which the deceased resided at the time of his death, or in which his estate, goods and chattels, or effects, were at the time of his death.\(^12\)

14. Bills for the Transfer of the Administration of an Insolvent Estate, from the County Court to the Chancery Court, must be filed in the county wherein the will was proved, or letters of administration granted, or where the personal representatives reside, or are served with process.\(^13\)

15. Bills Against Joint Makers of Negotiable Paper must be filed in a county where a joint maker can be served with subpoena to answer.\(^14\)

16. If the Complainant and Defendant Both Reside in the Same County, the bill must be filed in that county,\(^15\) unless the statute requires the bill to be filed in some other county. This rule applies to transitory suits, and is subject to the preceding rules.

17. The Bill may beFiled in any County where the Defendant, or any Material Defendant, is Found, unless otherwise prescribed by law. The Chancery Court acts ordinarily in personam. Unless, therefore, there be some statute expressly requiring the bill to be filed elsewhere, it may be filed in any county in which a subpoena can be served on the defendants, or on any material defendant. This is the fundamental rule governing the personal jurisdiction of the Court, and the exceptions to it are hereinabove stated.

18. The Bill may beFiled in any County in which the Defendant, or a Material Defendant, Resides, unless otherwise prescribed by law; and, if, upon inquiry at his residence, he is not to be found by the officer having the subpoena, he may be proceeded against by publication or judicial attachment. The exceptions to this rule are the same as those to the preceding rule.

19. Bills Against Non-residents, or persons whose names or residence are unknown, may be filed in the county in which the cause of action arose, or the act on which the suit is predicated was to be performed, or in which the subject of the suit, or any material part thereof, is.

20. Bills to Attach Property may be filed in any county in which the property, or any material part thereof sought to be attached, is found at the commencement of the suit.

21. Bills by Distributions, or Legatees, to enforce the payment of their distributive shares, or legacies, may be filed in the county in which the estate was administered.

22. Bills to Enjoin Proceedings at Law may be filed in the county in which the suit is pending, or to which execution is issued.

23. Bills for Divorce may be filed in the county in which the defendant resides or is found, or in which the parties resided at the time of their separation; but if the defendant is a non-resident, or a convict, then the bill may be filed in the county where the complainant resides.

24. Bills by the State Against Corporations, Usurpers and Trustees, may be filed in county, the bill could not be filed in Shelby county merely because the defendant happened to be found there: in such a case, the bill must be filed in Davidson county, unless there be ground of imperative local jurisdiction in Shelby (as in case of a bill to recover a tract of land situated in Shelby); then the bill must be filed in Shelby county, notwithstanding both complainant and defendant reside in Davidson. If a local suit be brought in the wrong county the Court will have no jurisdiction, even by consent. Nashville v. Webb, 6 Cates, 422; Mills v. Hale, Nashville, 1906.

18 Code, §4305; Parkes v. Parkes, 3 Tenn., 647. If the defendant, or a material defendant, can be found, even temporarily in a county, the bill may be filed in such county, provided process can be there served on him, and provided, further, there is no statute expressly requiring the bill to be filed elsewhere. Roper v. Roper, 3 Tenn., 53.

19 A material defendant is one who has an interest in the matter in controversy, or a right which is to be affected by the decree, or is in possession of the property, claiming some interest in it. Simonton v. Porter, 1 Bax., 213. Jackson v. Nieman, 10 Yere, 172. A trustee is a material defendant. Helm v. Barnes, 1 Lea, 388.

21 Code, §4311, sub-sec. 1. The object of this provision was to coerce the Court jurisdiction of the defendant in the county of his residence, when he cannot, for any reason, be personally served with process. Parkes v. Parkes, 3 Tenn., 647. As to the judicial attachment, see Code, §3466.

22 Code, §4311, sub-sec. 4.

23 Code, §4311, sub-sec. 5. Morrow v. Fossick, 1 Lea, 149.

24 Code, § 2312; Parkes v. Parkes, 3 Tenn., 647.

25 Code, §4311, sub-sec. 3.

26 Code, §§2451-2451 a.
the county where the office is usurped or held, or the corporation holds its meetings, or has its principal place of business, or where the trustees reside or are found.\footnote{26}

25. Bills for a Mandamus must be filed in the county where the land lies, when land is the subject of controversy; in all other cases, in the county where the defendant resides, unless he is a public officer or corporation, and then in the county in which the office is kept, or the corporation does business.\footnote{27}

In determining the venue, the complainant should consider:
1. Whether the suit in any way affects the title or possession of realty, or any interest in or lien on realty; if so, the bill must be filed in the county where such realty, or a material part of it, lies\footnote{28} unless the statute expressly allows the bill to be filed in some other county.
2. If realty is in no way affected by the suit, and the action is transitory,\footnote{29} then the bill may be filed in any county where the defendant, or a material de-defendant resides, or may be served with subpoena, unless the statute expressly requires the bill to be filed in some other county.
3. If there be more than one county in which his bill may be filed, he may file it in either as may suit his convenience.\footnote{30}

\S 178. Filing of the Bill.—After the bill has been duly signed, and, if necessary, verified, it must then be presented to the Clerk of the Court specified in the address, and asked to be filed. If the bill has not already been endorsed, the Clerk should, thereupon, endorse it as follows:

Sol\-\textit{icitor for Complainant.}

If the bill has already been properly endorsed, the Clerk will merely add to the endorsement the date, and in attachment bills, the hour and minute of the filing. Bills in Chancery may be filed at any time, in term or in vacation.\footnote{33}

On the bill being received by the Clerk, the suit is commenced.\footnote{34}
§ 179. When a Pleading is Considered Filed.—A pleading is deemed to be filed when it is delivered to the proper officer, and by him received to be kept on file.30 The Clerk is required to note upon the pleadings the date of the filing.30a but this is not an absolute prerequisite.31 nor is the date conclusive upon the parties: it may be shown by parol proof that the pleading was filed at some other time.35 When the date of filing does not appear on the bill, it may be inferred from the date of the bond and of the issuance of the writ.39 If the opposite party does not, in due time, take advantage of the fact that a pleading is not marked filed, he will be deemed to have waived such irregularity, and will not be allowed to take advantage of it, after having taken some step which recognizes the pleading as duly filed.40

In general, a pleading is deemed filed when handed to the Clerk, or to a person in the Clerk’s office authorized to receive it,41 and the failure of the Clerk, or deputy, to properly mark it filed should in no way prejudice the party filing it.42

PROCEEDINGS IN REFERENCE TO COSTS.

§ 180. Securing the Costs of the Suit.—After the bill has been duly signed, and if necessary, verified, it must be presented to the Clerk of the Court specified in the address, with a request that it be filed. This request should be accompanied with security1 for the costs of the suit, or a pauper oath; but the bond or oath may be filed after the bill has been filed.2

The security must undertake to pay all costs that may, at any time, be adjudged against his principal, in the event it is not paid by said principal; and no omission, or neglect, to insert this undertaking in the bond will prevent the security being held liable as stated.3

All persons who file bills or petitions, requiring a subpoena to answer, must give this security for costs, or take the pauper’s oath, except the State:4 countries and municipal corporations are not excepted.5

§ 4312; or by handing it to the Clerk or anyone in his office authorized to receive it. Montgomery v. Buck, 6 Hum., 416; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 399; Collins v. N. B. & M. Insurance Co., 7 Pick., 432; and the cause is pending from such filing, even though process is not issued promptly, 179 and no cost bond given until long afterwards. Cowan, McClung & Co., v. Donaldson, 11 Pick., 322. See Cooper & Stockell v. Stockard, 16 Lea, 143. See ante, § 132, where suits at law and suits in Chancery are contrasted.

30a Chan. Rule, I, § 3; Code, § 4339.

35 Fanning v. Fly, 2 Cold., 486.

38 Montgomery v. Buck, 6 Hum., 416. In this case, the Clerk being absent, the bill was delivered, in June, to a person occupying the same office as the Clerk, and authorized, by the Clerk, to act for him, during his absence. The Clerk, on his return, marked the bill filed in September. The defendants, relying on the statute of limitations, which barred the suit if the bill was filed in September, the Supreme Court, on these facts, held that the bill was filed in June, and that this could be shown by parol evidence. The defendant’s plea, of the statute of limitations, was accordingly overruled. See also, Rush v. Rush, 13 Pick., 279.

42 Montgomery v. Buck, 6 Hum., 416.

4 Code, §§ 4339; 3187.

2 The bond may be taken on the street. Hansard v. Bank, 5 Hum., 53; and may be given after the bill has been filed. Cowan, McClung & Co. v. Donaldson, 11 Pick., 322. See ante, § 179.

3 Code, §§ 3196a-3196c; 4493; Ogg v. Leinart, 1 Heisk., 43; Burson v. Mahoney, 6 Bax., 304; Denton v. Woods, 11 Lea, 508.

4 Code, § 2806.

5 Memphis v. Fisher, 9 Bax., 239. The sureties on all bonds taken in the Chancery Court should be residents, and have property enough within the State subject to execution to satisfy the bond. Both the persons and the property of all sureties should be within the jurisdiction of the Court, to the end that the Court may enforce any orders, in reference to either, necessary in the progress of the cause.
§ 181. Form of the Bond for Costs.—The old form of prosecution bonds is not in conformity with the present statutes; but inasmuch as the statute, by its own operation, writes the proper conditions in all prosecution bonds, any omission, or neglect, to insert these conditions does not impair their validity. The form of the bond is, therefore, immaterial, if there is enough of it to show that it was intended for a prosecution bond in the particular suit.

To adapt the old forms to the present law, the following would be the FORM OF A PROSECUTION BOND.

Whereas, John Jones has this day filed a bill, in the Chancery Court at Wartburg, against William Richardson (and others,) now we, the said John Jones, as principal, and Richard Roe, as surety, acknowledge ourselves indebted to the said William Richardson (and his co-defendants,) in the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars; but this obligation to be void if we pay all costs that may be at any time adjudged against said John Jones in said suit.

This June 1, 1890.

John Jones,
Richard Roe.

The following form of bond would more nearly comply with the statute, and is more brief:

ANOTHER FORM OF PROSECUTION BOND.

John Jones

vs.

William Richardson, et al.

In the Chancery Court at Wartburg.

We, John Jones and Richard Roe, undertake in the penal sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, to pay all costs that may at any time be adjudged against the complainant in said cause, in the event the same are not paid by him.

This June 1, 1890.

John Jones,
Richard Roe.

Or, the following obligation, written below the bill, will constitute a sufficient bond, and is often adopted, especially where the Solicitor himself secures the costs:

SHORT FORM OF A PROSECUTION BOND.

We hereby acknowledge ourselves security for all costs adjudged against the complainant, in the foregoing cause. June 1, 1890.

John Brown,
Richard Roe.

It is, however, best to have the complainant himself sign the cost bond, especially when he does not sign the bill in person. Such signing is proof of the retainer. Where a suit is by a firm the bond may be signed by a member in the firm name.

If the Clerk and Master has any doubts as to the sufficiency of the sureties tendered on any bond, he should require them to justify, on oath, in writing. This justification may be written on, or beneath the bond, as follows:

AFFIDAVIT OF JUSTIFICATION BY SURETIES.

State of Tennessee,

County of Knox.

John Brown and Richard Roe, the sureties on the foregoing bond, being severally sworn, John Brown says that he owns property subject to execution, worth one thousand dollars, over and above all exemptions and just debts; and Richard Roe says that he owns property subject to execution, worth three thousand dollars, over and above all exemptions and just debts.

[Jurat, as in the form below:]

§ 182. Taking the Pauper Oath.—Any person, with the exceptions stated below, may file a bill, without giving security for costs, by taking and subscribing the following oath:

6 Code, §§ 3196a-3196c. See preceding section.
7 Broyles v. Blair, 7 Yerg., 279. For form of an injunction bond, see Chapter on Injunctions, post: and for attachment bonds, see Chapter on Attachments, post.
8 Code, § 3196a.
9 Brooks & Bro. v. Hartman, 1 Heisk., 39.
10 State v. Wilson, 3 Pick., 693. Sureties should have property in the State subject to execution, worth the penalty above their debts.
11 Code, § 3192. The Act of 1879, ch. 94, excluding all persons from the benefit of the pauper oath except resident citizens of the State, does not apply to suits in the Chancery Court. Hillard v. Stark, 14 Lea, 9.
PAUPER OATH.

State of Tennessee,
County of Jefferson.

I, John Jones, do solemnly swear that I am a resident of said State, and that owing to my poverty, I am not able to bear the expenses of the suit I am about to commence, in the Chancery Court of Jefferson county, against William Richardson and Henry Johnson, and that I am justly entitled to the redress sought,13 to the best of my belief.

Sworn to and subscribed, before me, June 1, 1890.

D. H. Merk, C. & M.

Where there are more than one complainant they must all take the oath, except in case of husband and wife; and then the oath of the husband, alone, is sufficient for both himself and wife.14 The oath may be taken before the Clerk and Master, or before the Clerk of any Court in this State,15 or before a Justice of the Peace;16 but not before a notary public of another State.17 The Clerk and Master is bound to accept the pauper oath, if tendered in lieu of a bond; he has no discretion in the matter.18

1. The Pauper Oath Cannot be Taken by the Following Persons:
   1. Non-residents of the State.19 If a resident after commencing his suit on the pauper oath becomes a non-resident he may be required to secure the subsequent costs.20
   2. Persons suing for false imprisonment, malicious prosecution or slanderous words.21
   3. Persons suing for an absolute divorce from the bonds of matrimony.22
   4. Persons instituting in the Chancery Court suits cognizable in the Courts of Admiralty of the United States.23
   5. Informers bringing qui tam suits.24
   6. Persons filing a replevin bill.25 They may take the pauper oath as to the costs, but must, notwithstanding, give bond in double the value of the property.26

2. The Pauper Oath Can be Taken by the Following Persons, on Complying with the Statutory Requirements.

1. Next Friends of Married Women in this State, on the next friend taking and subscribing to an oath that the married woman in whose behalf the action is begun [sic] is not able, and has not sufficient property, to bear the expense of an action about to be commenced; and that such married woman is justly entitled to the relief sought to the best of his belief.27

2. Next Friends of Infants in this State, on the next friend taking and subscribing to an oath that the infant in whose behalf the action is begun [sic] is not able, and has not sufficient property to bear the expenses of the action about to be commenced; and that such infant is justly entitled to the relief sought, to the best of his [affiant's] belief.28

22 Acts of 1903, ch. 197. The proviso in this Act allowing a married woman suing for an absolute divorce to deposit six dollars in cash in lieu of a bond and security for costs is probably unconstitutional. See Const. Art. XI., sec. 8.
23 Acts of 1897, ch. 100; Acts of 1901, ch. 126. Admiralty suits include all causes of action originating on, or growing out of the building, repair, supply, equipment or navigation of, boats operated for commercial purposes on our rivers, and all contracts, express or implied, between the owners or operators of such boats, or their agents, on one side, and their employees, passengers, consignors, consignees, material men, and all other persons, on the other side, in reference to employment, wages, material, freight, fares, transportation, risks, duties, liabilities and all other matters relating to such boats, or their equipment, manning, freighting, navigation or operation. See Bouvier's Law Dict. "Admiralty." The Act of 1897, ch. 100, is constitutional. King v. Packet Co., 17 Pick., 99. Courts of Admiralty have jurisdiction over the waters of all navigable rivers. Guardians of Idiots, Lunatics and Persons of Unsound Mind, appointed by any Court of this State, on the guardian taking and subscribing an oath that he has no property of such idiot, lunatic or person of unsound mind out of which to bear the expenses of the suit he is about to commence, and that he verily believes that such idiot, lunatic or person of unsound mind is justly entitled to the redress sought. But he cannot bring a suit for false imprisonment, malicious prosecution or slanderous words, on the pauper oath.

4. Personal Representatives of Estates of Deceased Persons in this State, on the representative taking and subscribing an oath that he, as such personal representative, has no property belonging to the estate of the deceased, out of which to bear the expenses of the suit, and that he verily believes that the estate, for the benefit of which the action is brought, is justly entitled to the redress sought. The personal representative incurs no personal liability on account of such suit unless the Court trying the same should be of opinion and adjudge that the suit was frivolous or malicious.

5. A Non-Resident who Qualifies as Executor or Administrator, in this State, of a person dying in this State, and leaving assets here.

6. Persons Swine for Divorce from Bed and Board, on taking the ordinary pauper oath.

3. Requirements as to Taking the Pauper Oath. When the pauper oath is taken (1) by next friends of married women or of infants, or (2) by guardians of idiots, lunatics or persons of unsound mind, or (3) by personal representatives, care should be taken to comply with the respective statutory requirements, for a pauper oath that materially varies from the requirements in the particular case would be a nullity, unless amended by leave of the Court.

The pauper oath may be taken, not only in lieu of the ordinary prosecution bond, but it may be taken in lieu of an attachment bond, or an injunction bond. It cannot, however, be taken by the complainant in a replevin bill, but may be in a detinue bill. A defendant to an inquisition of lunacy may appeal on the pauper oath.

ORIGINAL PROCESS IN CHANCERY.

ARTICLE I.

ORIGINAL PROCESSES GENERALLY CONSIDERED.

§ 185. Original Processes generally Considered.
§ 186. When Original Process May be Issued, and Executed, on Sunday.

§ 184. Process Defined.—Process is the means whereby a Court compels a defendant to appear before it, or comply with its commands, and is of three kinds: 1, Original; 2, Mesne, or Intermediate; and 3, Final.1

1. Original Process includes: (1) the subpoena to answer the original bill; (2) an attachment of the person, or of the property, of the defendant to bring him into Court; (3) notice by publication to the defendant to answer the original bill; and (4) an alternative mandamus.

2. Mesne, or Intermediate, Process includes: (1) subpoenas to answer supplemental and amended bills, and bills of revivor; (2) subpoenas for witnesses, (3) injunctions, (4) attachments for violations of injunctions or for other contempts; (5) ancillary attachments of property; (6) writs of scire facias, and (7) other writs occasioned by interlocutory orders.

3. Final Process includes: (1) writs of fieri facias, or executions for money, (2) writs of possession in enforcement of a final decree, (3) attachments against the person, or property, of a party in enforcement of a final decree;2 (4) mandatory injunctions; (5) writs of distingas,3 (6) writs of sequestration;4 (7) writs of peremptory mandamus; and (8) writs of restitution.

1. Subpeona. This is the ordinary process whereby a defendant is brought before the Court to answer a bill. It is sometimes called a subpoena to answer5 in order to distinguish it from a subpoena to testify. This writ is served upon the person of the defendant by the Sheriff reading it to him.

2. Attachment of Property. Sometimes the defendant cannot well be personally served with process, and yet has property within the jurisdiction of the Court. In such cases, his property is seized by the Sheriff in obedience to a writ, and this fact, coupled with a notice to him to appear, is published in some newspaper, and this is called process by attachment of property and publication.6

3. Publication. When the person of the defendant cannot be reached for any reason, and he has no property that can be attached, he may be brought before the Court by a notification to appear, published in a newspaper. This sort of process is called process by publication. 7

4. Attachment of the Person. When a defendant violates some process, order, or rule, of Court, he is in contempt. In such cases, an order is issued to bring him before the Court under arrest. This is termed process of contempt, or attachment of the person. 8 When a defendant, upon whom a subpoena has been served, fails to answer, the complainant may have his person attached, and held in custody, until he answers. This writ is not strictly original, but rather ancillary to the original writ; but, inasmuch as it compels the defendant to answer the original bill, it is here considered.

No person can be bound or affected by any judical proceedings, unless actually, or constructively, notified thereof, previous to such proceeding. Actual notice consists of the service of process upon him in person. Constructive notice may consist of (1) indirect service of process, by leaving a copy at his usual residence, when he evades service; or (2) of seizing his property, and by publication of the fact and of the suit in a newspaper; or (3) by publication of the suit without seizure of his property. Where a statute authorizes judgment to be taken summarily, on motion without notice, the defendant, who entered into the obligation on which the judgment is taken, is presumed to have waived notice, and consented in advance to such judgment, when he signed the obligation, he being presumed to know that the law allowed judgment in such a case, without notice to him.

5. Alternative Mandamus. This writ will be considered hereafter in connection with suits for a peremptory mandamus, of which the Chancery Court now has jurisdiction. 10

§ 186. When Original Process may be Issued, and Executed, on Sunday.—Civil process, including subpoena to answer, may be issued on any day, and at any hour of the day; but it cannot be issued on Sunday, unless the party applying therefor, or his agent, or attorney, make oath, or affirmation, that the defendant is removing, or about to remove, himself or property beyond the jurisdiction of the Court in which the bill is filed. This affidavit should be endorsed on the back of the process; and the Clerk and Master should state under the affidavit, that the process was obtained on the affidavit. 11 This affidavit and statement may be as follows:

SUBPOENA TO ANSWER.

§ 187. Form of the Subpoena.

§ 188. Counterpart Subpoenas.

§ 191. Issuance of the Subpoenas.

§ 187. Form of the Subpoena.—A subpoena implies a penalty, and formerly there was a pecuniary penalty prescribed in the writ for failure to obey it; but the present form of the subpoena contains no penalty. Indeed, a subpoena is now merely a summons. The following is the

STATUTORY FORM OF A SUBPOENA TO ANSWER.

State of Tennessee, Blount County.

To the Sheriff of Blount County:

Summon Richard Roe and Peter Poe to appear, on or before the 19th day of April next, before the Chancery Court at Maryville, to answer the bill of John Doe; and have you then and there this writ.

This 2nd day of March, 1891.

W. C. CHUMLEA, C. & M.

This form is very similar to the form of the summons used in the Courts of law. The form indicates that the writ should bear the date of its issuance. The practice still exists, however, of testing the subpoena of the first day of the preceding regular term; and this usage is so general and ancient as to have the force of law. The better practice, nevertheless, is the one contemplated by the statute. Any defect in this particular, however, is cured by the statutory requirement, and consequent practice, of endorsing on the writ the date of its issuance.

§ 188. Counterpart Subpoenas.—When there are defendants in another or other counties from that in which the bill is filed, the complainant may cause counterpart subpoenas to be issued to any county or counties where any of the defendants are most likely to be found. But where the suit is brought on 14 Code, 2827; Acts of 1885, ch. 53.

15 Heisk. Dig. p. 562, note. In the Code, § 4306, it is called a summons.
16 The following forms are often used:
State of Tennessee, County of Blount.

To the Sheriff of Blount County:

Summon [or, you are hereby commanded to summon,] Richard Roe, Roland Roe, Robert Roe, and Peter Poe, to appear, on or before the third Monday of April next, before the Chancery Court at Maryville, [or, to appear at the next term of the Chancery Court, to be held for said county, at the Court House, in Maryville, on the third Monday in April next, then and there,] to answer the bill of complaint filed against them, and others, by John Doe; and have you then and there this writ.

As witness my hand, at office in Maryville, the third Monday in October, 1890.

W. C. CHUMLEA, C. & M.

Endorsed, "Issued, Mar. 2, 1891."

If there be a rule of Court, making the rule days return days, for original process, then the defendant may be commanded "to appear, on or before the first Monday in April next, at the office of the Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court, in Maryville, to answer the bill of John Doe, filed against him, in said Court; and have you then and there this writ."

17 Code, § 2411.
18 Communi error facit jus.
19 Code, § 2819. The Code, § 2828, requires that all process, issued from any of the Circuit Courts, and returnable thereto, shall be tested of the term next preceding the issuance, but there is no such requirement as to subpoenas in Chancery. This method of testing Circuit Court writs is that existing at common law, and our Chancery Clerks have borrowed their custom from the Circuit Clerks.
§ 189. Subpœna to Answer.—The requisites of a subpœna are as follows: 1. It must begin with the name of the State and the county. The Constitution says all writs and other process shall run in the name of the State. 2. It must be addressed to the Sheriff of the county wherein it is to be served, or, if he is incompetent, to the Coroner. 3. It must name the defendants to be summoned, or otherwise so describe them that the officer may know them. 4. It must specify when, and the particular Court, Chancellor, or Clerk, before whom the defendant must appear. 5. It must state the purpose for which he must appear, and give the name of the person filing the bill. 6. It must be dated, or at least must have the date of its issuance endorsed on it. 7. It must be signed by the Clerk and Master, or his deputy. If these requirements are substantially complied with, the subpœna will be sufficient, immaterial errors of form or substance being disregarded.

§ 190. Return Day of Subpœnas.—The subpœna must show on its face when and where the defendant must appear. If the subpœna be to answer an original bill, it may require the defendant to appear before the Court on or before the first day of the next regular term, or it may require him to appear at a rule day, fixed by a rule of the Court; but subpœnas to answer supplemental and amended bills, and bills of revivor, and all other mesne subpœnas, shall require the defendant to appear at a rule day. When the subpœna is returnable to a rule day, it may require the defendant to appear at the office of the Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court. The Court is held in the Court room, and it would be misleading to summon the defendant to appear before the Court on a rule day, when there is no Court on that day, except such as is held by the Master in his office. The defendant, however, is expected to know that the proper place for his appearance is the Master's office.

§ 191. Issuance of Subpœnas.—Upon the bill being filed and the required security given, the Clerk, after endorsing upon the bill the date of the filing, and entering the cause on his rule-docket, shall forthwith issue a subpœna to 21 Code, §§ 2823; 2902, sub-sec. 5. If this law is violated, a plea in abatement will lie to the bill. Sec Chapter on Pleas in Abatement.

22 Ibid., § 2821.
23 Both subpœnas may, however, be for the same defendants in part, so as to get service on them in either county. Indeed, the phraseology of the statute would seem to indicate that counterpart writs might issue simultaneously to as many counties as there are defendants likely to be found in them. Code, §§ 4306-4309. Of course, a mesne defendant must be served with the original, unless there be other grounds of jurisdiction in the county where the bill is filed. Compare Code, §§ 2821; 4306; 4343. Publication and attachment as to parties not subpoenaed are in the nature of counterpart process. Code, §§ 4307, 4352.
24 Constitution, Art. VI., § 12. As in England the King was the "fountain of justice," (ante, §§ 2; 3;) so in Tennessee, the people, as organized in the corporate form of a State, are the fountain of justice; and they have deputized, so to speak, the Courts to "administer right and justice" in the counties wherein they are held. Constitution, Art. I., § 17. Hence, all Court writs run in the name of the State. It is not the Court, nor the Clerk, that issues the writ, in contemplation of law, but the State; the Court and the Clerk being merely the agents of the State. No one but the State, and those whom she has authorized to act and speak in her name, have the authority to command a person to appear anywhere, or at any time, or has the rightful power to call upon any one to give an account of his conduct.

answer, and copy of the bill for the defendant, and all other process ordered, such as counterpart subpoenas, writs of attachment, injunction or replevin, issuing such writs to the proper counties as shown by the bill.

The Clerk issues only one subpoena to each county, embracing therein all the defendants in such county. The subpoena to the county in which the bill is filed, shall be accompanied by one copy of the bill, to be delivered to any one of the defendants named in the subpoena.

The counterpart subpoena to any other county, shall be accompanied by a copy of the bill, to be delivered to some one of the defendants when the subpoena is served, and it shall be the duty of the Sheriff to read said copy to each one of the defendants, at the time he serves the subpoena.

The Clerk shall issue, upon demand, to any one of the defendants, his agents or attorneys, to whom no copy of the bill appears by the Sheriff's return to have been delivered, a certified copy of the bill, to be charged in the bill of costs.

Attachments, injunctions, and all other process issued to one county, shall embrace the names of all the defendants required to be served therewith residing in such county.

Upon the proper affidavit being made, as shown in a preceding section, a subpoena to answer, injunction or attachment, may be issued and executed on Sunday.

§ 192. Service of the Subpoena.—The Sheriff shall, with all reasonable speed, obey the command of the subpoena, by serving it on the persons named, and returning it on or before the day named therefor; and in executing the subpoena he is bound to use a degree of diligence exceeding that which a prudent man employs in his own affairs.

Subpoenas to answer are served by reading them to each defendant specified therein; and if the defendant evade, or attempt to evade, the service of such process, the Sheriff shall leave a copy of the subpoena at the usual residence of the defendant, which will be a sufficient service.

The following are forms of returns showing how the Sheriff has executed the subpoena:

SHERIFF'S RETURNS ON SUBPOENAS.

42 In some of the Chancery Divisions, there is a Rule of Court requiring the Clerk and Master to issue a copy of the subpoena to be left with each adult defendant; it is a good rule.
43 The Sheriff should go to the defendant's place of residence, and make diligent search and inquiry for him. Sending him notice of the writ, or even writing to him is no service. The Sheriff is forbidden to return that the defendant "is not to be found in my county," unless he shall actually have been at his place of abode. Code, § 365. or corporations, male or female, infants or adults, married or single, sick or well, sane or insane. The Sheriff has absolutely no discretion in executing process, but must implicitly and fully obey its command.

§ 193. Service of Subpœna on Corporations, and Companies.—If the bill is filed in the county in which the corporation sued keeps its chief office, the subpœna must be served (1) on the president or other head of the corporation; or, in his absence, (2) on the cashier; or, in his absence, (3) on the treasurer; or, in his absence, (4) on the secretary; or, in his absence, (5) on any director of such corporation; but, if neither the president, cashier, treasurer, or secretary resides within the State, then (6) the subpœna may be served on the chief agent of the corporation residing in the county where the bill is filed. If a corporation, company, or individual, has an office, or agency, or resident director, in any county other than that in which the chief officer or principal resides, service of process may be made on any agent or clerk employed therein, in all suits brought in such county against said corporation, company, or individual, growing out of, or connected with, the business of the corporation, company, or principal.

If a county is sued, the subpœna may be served on the County Judge, or Chairman of the County Court. If an incorporated town is sued, the subpœna will be served on the Mayor or other head of the corporation.

1. Foreign Corporations Doing Business in this State are subject to suit here as to any action arising here, but not otherwise, and are served with process in the same manner as domestic corporations, provided they have an office, agency or resident director in the county where the suit is brought. But a foreign corporation having no office or agent in this State, can only be brought into Court by service of subpœna upon some agent or representative, and by notice mailed to it by the Clerk and Master, and by service of notice and copy of the process and return thereon by the complainant, or good excuse shown for not making such service.

It has been decided that service of process on the general guardian of an infant will bring the infant itself into Court, and authorize the Court to render process on the infant, but, however, to go to the utmost verge of the law, and it is the universal practice of Solicitors to have the subpœna served upon all minors, however young, by any adult that they have legal guardians, or not. The writ should be read to the day-old babe as well as to the stalwart adult, for the babe's rights are the same as the man's, and even more jealously guarded. The Sheriff has discretion as to how old an infant must be before it shall be servable with process, nor does the law allow the Sheriff to decide whether service on a babe will be of any value or not. The law says "summon the babe;" and the Sheriff is required to obey, and he is liable on his bond for all damages arising to any one by his failure to obey. See, as to the appointment of guardians ad litem, ante, §§ 106-108.

An idiot, lunatic, or deaf, or dumb person, must be served out of Court, as to such infirmities. Rodgers v. Ellison, Meigs, 90. When, however, service of subpœna to answer upon a lunatic would be dangerous to his health, upon this ground being made clearly to appear to the Court, an order will be made allowing substituted service upon the physician in charge of him. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 177. Speak v. Mallett, 12 Meigs, 512. Cowan v. Hum, 315; Cowan v. Anderson, 7 Cold., 284; Masson v. Swan, 6 Henk., 450; Scott v. Porter, 2 Lea, 224. These decisions, however, go to the utmost verge of the law, and it is the universal practice of Solicitors to have the subpœna served upon all minors, however young, by any adult that they have legal guardians, or not.

About any matter, or in any case. Toppins v. Railroad, 5 Lea, 600. Process, however, cannot be served on a mere traveling agent, or drummer. Railroad Co. v. Walker, 9 Lea, 475; Lumber Co. v. Acker, 22 Pick., 153. This is a salutary construction, for, otherwise, merchants might be sued in any county where their business might be operated, with process irrefrangible as the statute includes companies, and individuals as well as corporations. Service on officers holding and officer is sufficient. Parker v. Hotel Co., 12 Pick., 252.

2 Tenn. Ch., 516.
4 Tenn. Ch., 516.

Foreign corporations doing business in this State, but having no local office or agency here, are subject to suit here as to any transaction had, in whole, or in part, within this State, or as to any cause of action arising here, but not otherwise. To bring such a corporation before the Court process may be served upon any agent of such corporation found within the county, where the suit is brought; and, in the absence of such an agent, process may be served upon any person found within the county, where the suit is brought, who represented such corporation at the time the transaction, out of which the suit arises, took place; or, if the agency, through which the transaction was made, is not within the State, then the process may be served upon any agent of that corporation, upon whom process might be served, if it were the defendant. But, no judgment can be taken on such service, unless: (1) The Clerk and Master mails by registered letter, to the home office of the corporation, a copy of the process; and, unless (2) the complainant lodges at the home office of the company, with some person found there, a written notice, signed by him, or his attorney, stating that such suit has been brought, accompanied by a copy of the process, and the return of the officer
The Sheriff need not show in his return, that the person served is the president, or other head of the corporation, or the cashier, treasurer, secretary, director, agent or clerk; nor need he show the absence of the officers preceding the one actually served.51

2. Foreign Insurance Corporations and companies, including fire, life and accident, or casualty, and all foreign fraternal beneficiary associations, are brought into Court by service of subpoena upon the State Insurance Commissioner, who is their attorney for that purpose, service being made on the Commissioner by the Sheriff of the county where the Commissioner has his office.52 But foreign insurance companies doing business in this State through brokers are brought into Court by service of subpoena upon an attorney designated by the defendant corporation in the county where the complainant resides; but if the defendant corporation fail to designate such attorney within ten days after receipt of a registered letter notifying it of the loss, it may be brought into Court by publication.53

§ 194. Process against Other Defendants.—Service of process upon any non-resident who has qualified as executor or administrator in this State, in case the Sheriff cannot find him, may be made on the County Court Clerk of the county wherein he qualified. The statute makes it the duty of the Clerk to notify the defendant by mail.54

Service of process against the owner or owners of a steamboat may be made on any captain or clerk of the owner or owners, whether captain or clerk of the boat in question or not.55

§ 195. Alias Process.—If a subpoena to answer is returned not executed the complainant may have an alias or pluries subpoenas. If the subpoena is returned "Not to be found in my county," as to any defendant who is a resident of the county, the complainant may have either an alias or a pluries subpoena for such defendant; or may, at his election, have a judicial attachment against the estate of such defendant.56 Or, the complainant may have publication made to bring the defendant before the Court.57 Or, the complainant may amend his bill, if the facts warrant it, and allege any of the statutory grounds for dispensing with personal service of the subpoena, and have notice given the defendant by publication; or, instead of amending his bill he may file a separate affidavit stating the necessary facts.58

Alias subpoenas, taken out at any time after the return of the original, may be returnable to any Monday of the term, as shown elsewhere.59

thereon; these facts being proved by the affidavit of the person lodging the same, stating the facts, and with whom the notice was lodged. If, however, the complainant, or his attorney, make affidavit that he was prevented from serving the notice by circumstances which reasonably excuse such service, which circumstances shall be particularly stated in the affidavit, the Court may allow judgment to be taken without affidavit of service of notice, and of the copy of the process, if satisfied that the excuse for not making such service is sufficient. Acts of 1887, ch. 226. This Act does not repeal Code, §§ 2631-2634, which apply equally to domestic and foreign corporations having an office or agency in the county where the suit is brought. The act applies exclusively to foreign corporations, doing business here, but having no local office, or resident agent, in the State. Telephone Co. v. Turner, 4 Pick., 265. See, Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 15 Pick., 322. Service on an agent of a foreign corporation is sufficient. Ibid. State v. Insurance Co., 22 Pick., 288.

51 Town of Wartrace v. Wartrace Turnpike Co., 2 Cold., 515. A similar case, it was in his opinion, that if a subpoena commands the Sheriff to summon "the town of Wartrace," a return "Executed 29th November, 1856," would be good prima facie, the presumption of law being that the Sheriff had served the writ upon such officer or agent of the corporation as was necessary to the sufficient execution of the process. Nevertheless, it is better in such cases for the return to name the person on whom the subpoena was served. This return has been held sufficient, prima facie: "Came to hand same day issued, and executed by summoning James A. Whiteside, vice-president of the defendant, and acting president, the 30th day of December, 1858, and, also, summoned Robert M. Hook, agent of defendant, at Chattanooga, the 14th of February, 1859." The complainant, in case of a suit against a foreign fraternal beneficiary association, must pay the Insurance Commissioner, at the time process is served on him, three dollars, to be taxed as costs.

§ 196. When Process by Publication is Allowed.

§ 197. Proceedings Preliminary to Publication.

§ 196. When Process by Publication is Allowed.—As Courts of Equity ordinarily act in personam, they require process to be served on the person of the defendant, unless otherwise prescribed by law. 1 But, as personal service of process cannot always be had, the statute dispenses with personal service of process on the defendant in the Chancery Court, in the following cases:

1. When the defendant is a non-resident of the State. 2
2. When upon inquiry at his usual place of abode, he cannot be found so as to be served with process, and there is just ground to believe he has gone beyond the limits of the State.
3. When the Sheriff shall make return upon any leading process that he is not to be found. 3
4. When the name of the defendant is unknown, and cannot be ascertained upon diligent inquiry. 4
5. When the residence of the defendant is unknown, and cannot be ascertained upon diligent inquiry.
6. When judicial and other attachments will lie, under the provisions of the Code, against the property of the defendant. 5

§ 197. Proceedings Preliminary to Publication.—To dispense with personal service of process in any of the cases specified in the preceding section, the facts, on which such dispensation is based, must be stated under oath in the bill, or by separate affidavit, or appear by the return of the Sheriff upon the process. 6 And in original attachment suits, to authorize publication, there must be not only a ground of attachment alleged in the bill, but also a levy upon the property of the defendant. 7 If the bill alleging a statutory ground of publica-

2 Code, § 4352. A person may be a citizen of the State and, at the same time, a non-resident of the State within the meaning of the attachment law, as when, though his family lives in Tennessee, his business keeps him in another State most of his time. Can v. Jennings, 3 Tenn. Ch. 121. A citizen should be deemed a non-resident enough to warrant a publication, when he will probably be absent until after the next term of the Court after the filing of the bill.
3 The meaning of this sub-section is, that if the bill is filed in the proper county under the law governing the local jurisdiction of the Court, and a subpoena has properly issued to the county where the defendant in question resides, then, on the Sheriff of that county returning that "he is not to be found," publication may be made. The law contemplated that the subpoena shall issue to the county where the defendant resides, because, if his residence is unknown and cannot be ascertained upon diligent inquiry, a publication can be made in the first instance. The law does not mean that a subpoena may issue to any county, and on being returned "not to be found" that publication may then be made. If it did, gross frauds might be practiced under it, both on the Court and on the defendants, by issuing subpoenas to counties where the defendant does not reside, expressly to have a return of "not to be found," and then publication, and then a pro confesso and final decree. See Scovel v. Asten, 1 Tenn. Ch. 73.
4 Bledorn v. Pilot Mt. C. & M. Co., 5 Pick. 166. Code, § 4352. For process by attachment of property and publication, see Chapter on Suits by Attachment.
5 Originally the Court of Chancery acted only in personam; and it was necessary that process should be executed on the person. Grace v. Hunt, Coke 341. But the facilities for travel are so great, our people are so migratory, and so many non-residents have business dealings in our State, that justice to our citizens imperatively required the statutory method of bringing parties before our Courts by publication in a newspaper, in the cases where personal service of process cannot be had. Nevertheless, as natural justice requires that a person should be heard before he is condemned, the Courts strictly construe the statutes allowing publication in lieu of personal service. Grewar v. Henderson, 1 Tenn. Ch. 76. See, ante, maxim, § 60.

AFFIDAVIT FOR PUBLICATION.

John Doe,

vs.

No. 618.

John Doe, [or, Jacob S. Graves, Solicitor of John Doe,] makes oath that Charles Roe, one of the defendants in this cause, is a non-resident of the State [or, that the residence of Charles Roe, one of the defendants in this cause, is unknown, and cannot be ascertained upon diligent inquiry;] and that the names and residences of the parties sued as the heirs and other representatives of George Roe, deceased, are unknown, and cannot be ascertained upon diligent inquiry. He, therefore, prays that publication be made to bring said defendants before the Court.

The requirements of the Code, in reference to the procedure necessary to justify a publication, do not limit the power of the Court to order publication in any of the specified cases, when satisfied that the ground therefor exists: and, on review of such action in the Supreme Court, it will be presumed that the facts authorizing such order duly appeared, in the absence of rebutting proof.

If the defendant, when personal service of process is dispensed with, does not cause his appearance to be entered, the Clerk, as soon as the necessary affidavit or return is made, shall enter upon the rule docket an order, requiring the defendant to appear at a certain day therein named, being a rule day, and defend, or otherwise the bill will be taken for confessed. The Code does not state where the defendant is to appear, but as he is to appear on a rule day, and as no Court will ordinarily be then in session, it is manifest that he must appear at the Master's office.

§ 198. Form, Manner and Time, of the Publication.—A copy of the order, entered on the rule docket, mentioned in the preceding section, is published by the Clerk for four consecutive weeks in the newspaper mentioned in the order, or designated by the general rules of the Court. This order should contain: (1) the name of the defendant to be notified; (2) the order requiring him to appear; (3) the style of the Court before which, or before the Clerk of which, he must appear; (4) the time when, and the place where, he must appear; (5) the purpose for which he must appear, specifying the name of the person filing the bill, or the style of the suit against which he must defend; (6) the fact that the bill will be taken for confessed if he fails to appear and defend; (7) the date on which the order was made; (8) the name of the Clerk and Master, or his deputy, making the order; and (9) when the suit is against an unknown defendant, the order of publication should also describe such unknown party as near as may be, both by the character in which he is sued, and by reference to his title or interest in the subject-matter of the litigation.

It is not necessary that the foregoing constituents of the order of publication should be stated in the order of succession given above. A substantial observ-

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.14

To Peter Poe.

John Doe
vs.
Richard Roe and Peter Poe.

In this cause, it appearing from the bill which is sworn to, [or, it appearing by affidavit, or by the Sheriff's return,] that Peter Poe, one of the defendants, is a non-resident of the State,16 he is, therefore, hereby required to appear, on or before the 1st Monday of June17 next, before the Clerk and Master of said Court, at his office in Clinton, and make defense to the bill filed against him in said Court, by John Doe, or otherwise the bill will be taken for confessed.

It is further ordered that this notice be published for four consecutive weeks in the Clinton Gazette.

This 7th day of May,18 1890.

J. C. Scruggs, C. & M.

§199. Evidence of Publication.—Ordinarily the fact that publication was duly made pursuant to the order of the Court, or Clerk and Master, is proved by the affidavit of the printer, or the actual production in Court of the copies of the newspaper containing the published notices;22 but any other competent evidence is admissible.23 If the decree recites that publication was duly made, that is prima facie sufficient, in the absence of clear proof to the contrary on a direct attack.24

§200. Effect of Publication.—When publication has been duly made in pursuance of an order duly made, and the day of appearance has arrived, the defendant is in Court; and is as much liable to interlocutory orders as though actually served with subpoena; and the Court may bind him by its orders in relation to taking proof, fixing a day for the hearing, appointing receivers, and by a pro confesso for want of an answer.

14 Instead of using this heading, or the more common heading, "Non-resident Notice," in making the publication, it should be omitted entirely, and the notice headed thus: To Peter Poe. This heading will attract the attention of the defendant, or his acquaintances, while the other two headings will not. The object of the publication is to notify Peter Poe; and good faith and fair dealing require that the publication be so headed as most effectually to answer this purpose. The form of the ordinary notices almost seems to have been originally devised to conceal the name of the person to be notified as effectually as possible. See, post, §877.

15 The order should show, on its face, a statutory ground for publication; and should state that ground as nearly as possible, in the very language of the statute. The Courts require a strict compliance with the provisions of the law. Ferriss v. Lewis, 2 Tenn. Ch., 291.

16 The defendant may be required to appear at a rule day. Code, §4354; Fellows v. Cook, 10 Heisk., 81.

17 This publication would have been in time, if actually begun on May 7th. The first publication would then have been on May 7th; the second, on May 14th; the third, on May 21st; the fourth, on May 28th, and there were five days from May 28th to June 2d, 1890, it being the first Monday of the month. § 201. When an Attachment May be Had.—When the complainant calls upon the defendant to make a discovery under oath as to the matters charged in the bill, he has a right to such a discovery; and the defendant, if served with subpoena, cannot lawfully deprive him of that right, by refusing to answer. Ordinarily, in such cases, the complainant is content to have his bill taken for confessed, but occasionally he cannot get full relief without a discovery. In such a case, he may proceed against the defendant by process of contempt, to compel an answer.1

This process of contempt is an attachment for the body of the defendant, and may be had either upon order of the Chancellor, at the instance of the complainant,2 or from the Master direct, when the time for answering has expired.3 Before an attachment can be had, however, it must appear by the return, or affidavit, of the proper officer, that the subpoena to answer was duly served on the defendant.4

If a married woman be in contempt, her husband must, also, be included in the attachment, unless she has obtained leave to answer alone, or it appears by affidavit that her husband cannot control her, or is out of the State.5 But the husband, if in the State, must obtain leave to answer separately, or he will be held liable to be attached along with his wife. And so, the wife is not bound to acquiesce in her husband’s answer, and may obtain an order to answer separately.6

§ 202. Form of an Attachment.—An attachment is in the nature of a capias or warrant of arrest; and requires the Sheriff to take the body of the defendant into his custody, and bring him before the Court. The following is the ordinary FORM OF AN ATTACHMENT FOR CONTEMPT.

The State of Tennessee,
County of Knox.

To the Sheriff of Knox County:

You are hereby commanded to attach Richard Roe, so as to have him before our Chancery Court, at Knoxville, on the 4th Monday of May7 next, then and there to answer touching a contempt, which he, as is alleged, has committed against the State, in not answering the bill of John Doe,8 and also touching such other matters as shall then and there be laid to his

1 Code, § 4360. Inasmuch as the subpoena issues in the name of the State, and the State, through her officers, commands the defendant to appear, and answer, his willful refusal so to do is in the nature of a rebellious and contemptuous disregard of the sovereignty of the State, and the majesty of the Law: and is visited with penalties and pains adequate to enforce obedience to the command of the writ, and vindicate the authority of the State. Formerly, when a defendant failed to answer a bill, and was not arrested on the attachment, he was (1) warned to appear by public proclamation, made by the Sheriff; if he failed to appear, he was (2) declared “a rebel and a contemner of the law,” and a commission of rebellion was appointed, consisting of two, three, or four, commissioners, to see that he was arrested; if these commissioners, with the aid of the Sheriff, and other peace officers, failed to arrest the defendant, then (3) process of sequestration issued, directed to four sequestrators, to take possession of all the defendant’s goods and chattels, lands and tenements, and hold the same subject to the order of the Court, until the defendant appeared and purged his contempt. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 62-74; 1 Tenn. Ch. Pr., (original edition.) 572-651. In 1801, our Legislature enacted that “there should be no other process of contempt than attachment, but without proclamation.” 1 Scott’s Rev., 687.

7 The attachment may be made returnable to any day of the term, or to any rule day in vacation. Code, § 4362.

charge, and to perform and abide such order as said Court shall make in this behalf. Herein fail not, and have you then and there this writ.

This 9th day of April, 1890.

There may be alias and pluries writs of attachment, as in case of other writs. The Clerk and Master should endorse on the writ, the penalty of the bail bond to be taken by the Sheriff. If the defendant forfeits his bond by failing to appear, an alias attachment will be issued, upon which no bail bond can be taken; and the penalty of the bond already given may be decreed to be forfeited, and collected by execution.

§ 203. Procedures upon an Attachment.—The attachment may be returnable to a rule day in vacation, or to some day in term time; and upon its service, bail may be taken for the appearance of the defendant at the time fixed therein. If the Chancellor, or Master, do not specify the penalty of the bond, the law fixes it at two hundred and fifty dollars. The following is

THE FORM OF A BAIL BOND.

The State of Tennessee,
County of Knox.

We, Richard Roe, Henry Roe, and Robert Roe, agree to pay the State of Tennessee two hundred and fifty dollars, unless the said Richard Roe appears on the 4th Monday of May next, before the Chancery Court of said county, to answer a charge of contempt, in the case of John Doe vs. Richard Roe, in said Court, and does not depart without leave of the Court. This May 1, 1890.

Witness,
J. K. Lones,
Sheriff.

Richard Roe,
Henry Roe,
Robert Roe.

If the defendant fails to appear, in compliance with the terms of his bail, a second attachment issues, upon which no bail can be taken; and the penalty of the bail bond may be decreed forfeited, and collected by execution. If the defendant appears in pursuance of his bond, but refuses to answer fully, he shall be committed to jail, there to remain until he purges himself of the contempt, and complies with the requirements of the law by filing a full and complete answer.

After the defendant has been arrested if he fail to give bond, on his petition, or on motion of the complainant, a writ of habeas corpus will be ordered by the Court to issue to the Sheriff ordering him to bring the defendant before the Court to answer for his said contempt. Such writ may be as follows:

WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS.

The State of Tennessee,
County of Knox.

To the Sheriff of said County:

You are hereby commanded to have the body of Richard Roe, now in your custody, before our Court of Chancery, at Knoxville, on the 21st day of November, 1895 [or forthwith] to answer for certain contempts wherewith he is charged, to be dealt with as said Court shall order. And have you then and there this writ with your return thereon.

This 20th day of November, 1895.

H. B. Lindsay, Chancellor.

If the writ is issued in term it will be signed by the Clerk and Master.

If the defendant is committed for contempt, the complainant may proceed with his action as if the bill had been taken for confessed, the allegations being taken as in all respects true. But in that case, all further proceedings for the contempt shall cease, and the Court, or the Judge thereof, may discharge the defendant from custody.\textsuperscript{16}

After an attachment for contempt, no plea or demurrer shall be received unless by order of the Court upon motion.\textsuperscript{17} The Court, or the Clerk and Master, may, however, at any time after attachment proceedings have been instituted, and even after commitment, on good cause shown, grant the defendant further time in which to file an answer.\textsuperscript{18}

Where the defendant has been attached for failing to answer the bill, the following order may be made:

ORDER FOR DEFENDANT TO ANSWER.

John Doe
vs.
Richard Roe.

The defendant, Richard Roe, having been attached, and being now in Court under bond, he is ordered to file a sufficient answer to the bill, and pay all the costs of the attachment, within forty-eight hours, [or such other time as the Court may order,] or the complainant may apply to the Court for such further order as may be just.

If the defendant continue in contempt, the Court may, on application of the complainant, make the following further order:

ORDER COMMITTING THE DEFENDANT FOR NOT ANSWERING.

John Doe
vs.
Richard Roe.

The defendant, Richard Roe, having failed to put in an answer [or, a sufficient answer,] to the bill as heretofore ordered, upon application of the complainant, it is ordered that the defendant, Richard Roe, for such his contempt, be committed to the common jail of the county of Knox, there to remain until he shall have put in a sufficient answer to the bill of complaint in this cause, unless the Court sooner orders his discharge, and the Clerk and Master will issue a certified copy of this order to the Sheriff of Knox county, such copy to operate as a mitimus.

§ 204. Effect of a Contempt.—It is a general rule, that a party in contempt is never to be heard, as to any matter connected with the merits of the suit: he is not allowed to make any motion, except for leave to clear his contempt.\textsuperscript{19} His first duty is to show to the Court that he has not wilfully disobeyed its process, or, if he has, that he sincerely repents. In either case, he must file or tender a full answer,\textsuperscript{20} and offer to pay the costs of the attachment, before he will be heard.

But while a defendant will not be heard on his own motion, with the exception stated, he will not be denied the right to be heard in opposition to any motion by the other side, in reference to the litigation.\textsuperscript{21}

Gant, 10 Hum., 464, it was held that the Master had no authority to receive an answer from a defendant in contempt; but since then, he has been given such authority. PROCEEDINGS BETWEEN PROCESS AND APPEARANCE.

PRO CONFESSOS, AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON.

§ 206. Effect of a Judgment Pro Confesso.
§ 207. When a Judgment Pro Confesso May be Set Aside.
§ 208. How a Judgment Pro Confesso May be Set Aside.
§ 209. When a Final Decree May be Taken on a Pro Confesso.

§ 205. When and How a Bill may be Taken for Confessed.—A defendant is required by the subpoena, or the publication notice, as the case may be, to answer, or make defence to, the bill; and he is given reasonable time so to do. If he fails to do so in the time prescribed by law, and the complainant desires that he shall answer under oath, and make the discovery called for in the bill, the defendant, if served with process, may be attached and compelled to answer, as already shown; but, if no such discovery is sought, the complainant may have an order taking his bill for confessed, the failure of the defendant to make any defence being deemed prima facie evidence that he has no defence to make, but, on the contrary, admits the material allegations of the bill to be true. So, if the defendant puts in a demurrer, plea, or answer, which have been adjudged insufficient, and thereafter fails to file a sufficient answer in the time allowed, he will be deemed to have abandoned all further defence, and to confess the truth of the bill; and the bill may accordingly be taken for confessed by order of the Court. Such an order is generally called a judgment pro confessa. A bill may, under the Code, be taken for confessed in the following cases:

1. When, being duly served with process, as already stated, the defendant fails to plead, answer, or demur, by the time fixed by law.

2. When, an order for his appearance having been duly made and published as prescribed by law, the defendant fails to cause his appearance to be thereupon entered, and to plead, answer, or demur, or to obtain time to answer.

3. When, process of contempt having been returned executed, or the defendant having been brought into Court upon such process, he refuses to answer the complainant’s bill, or puts in an insufficient answer, so adjudged by the Court.

4. When, a plea or demurrer having been overruled, and the defendant ordered to answer the bill, he fails to do so in the time fixed in the order, or, if no time be so fixed, on the next rule day.

1 As to when a defendant must make defence, see post, §§ 225-227.

3 Every one is presumed to know the law; and the defendant is presumed to know that his failure to make defence is equivalent to an admission, on his part, that the facts set forth in the bill are true. Acting on these presumptions, the Court, accordingly, treats the bill as confessed, and decrees the relief the confession warrants. Qui tacit, cum logui debet, rostitiae widetur.

§ 206. Effect of a Judgment Pro Confesso.—As has been said, the failure of a defendant to answer is in the nature of a confession that the bill is true, and that he has no defence to make; nevertheless this rule should manifestly be so modified as not to apply, 1, to persons under age, or of unsound mind, because they are unable to take care of themselves; 2, to executors or administrators, because they often represent minors and others not parties to the suit; 3, to defendants in divorce suits, because public policy forbids divorces by consent of parties; and 4, to non-residents and persons whose names and residences are unknown, when their property has not been attached, because they have had no actual notice of the suit, and, therefore, cannot be deemed to have confessed the truth of the bill. It has accordingly been enacted that, whenever an order pro confesso is lawfully had, the allegations in the bill are not to be taken as admitted if the defendant is: (1) an infant, or (2) a person of unsound mind, or (3) an executor, or administrator, or (4) a person sued for divorce, or (5) a non-resident whose property has not been attached, or (6) a person whose name or residence is unknown. In the excepted cases of infants and persons of unsound mind, the defendant shall appear by guardian, or committee, before the complainant can proceed with his cause. In the other excepted cases, the complainant may proceed as if the allegations of the bill had been put in issue by answer not sworn to, with the right to set the cause for hearing forthwith. On the issue thus made, the complainant may take his proof by filing interrogatories, or giving notice, as hereafter shown.

A pro confesso defendant is in quasi contempt, and has no right to be heard as to any matter arising out of the allegations of the bill: he can, ordinarily, be heard for one purpose only, and that is on a motion to have the pro confesso, and proceedings based thereon, set aside. But he can contest any proof taken after the pro confesso.

§ 207. When a Judgment Pro Confesso may be Set Aside.—The failure of a defendant to make any defence to the bill in the nature of a contempt of Court, as well as an implied confession that the allegations of the bill are true. For these reasons, the law gives the complainant a right to a judgment pro confesso, as soon as the defendant’s default occurs, and the Court has no right to deny such a judgment; and after the judgment has been taken, neither the Chancellor nor the Master has any right to deprive the complainant of the benefit thereof except within the time, in the manner, and on the grounds, specified in the law.

The law makes the difficulty of setting aside a pro confesso somewhat proportionate to the negligence of the defendant. Thus, a defendant who has been served with process, may at any time before final decree, on good cause shown, obtain from the Chancellor, or Clerk and Master, an order setting aside the decree pro confesso, upon filing a full and sufficient answer, and the payment of costs; and a defendant as to whom publication has been made because, (1) upon inquiry at his usual place of abode, he could not be found so as to be served with process, and there was just ground to believe that he had gone beyond the State; or because (2) the Sheriff made return upon a leading process that he was not to be found, or (3) because a judicial or original attachment had been lawfully levied on his property as a leading process,—in all such cases the defendant shall show merits in order to entitle him to appear and defend after judgment by default. On the other hand, a non-resident defendant, or one whose name or place of residence is unknown, and who is not served to the principal. Hence, the law deems the seizure of a man’s property, and a publication notice, as equivalent to personal service of process: and for this reason, except an order pro confesso, and subject to a final decree thereon without further proof.

with process, may appear and defend at any time before final decree, as of course, he not being deemed guilty of any negligence in failing to answer by the time fixed by law. And thus, when (1) subpoena was served, to have a pro confesso set aside, merits must be shown and costs paid; (2) when a subpoena was issued but not served, or when no subpoena was issued, but an attachment was levied, the pro confesso will be set aside on merits shown and without costs; and (3) when no subpoena was issued, or no attachment levied, the judgment pro confesso will be set aside, as of course, at any time before final decree, on an answer being filed, without merits being shown, or costs paid.

§ 208. How a Judgment Pro Confesso may be Set Aside.—As a general rule, a judgment pro confesso may be set aside at any time before final decree; and even after final decree, provided the term has not ended, or thirty days elapsed. The rights and liabilities of defendants, in reference to judgments pro confesso, are widely different, as already shown, and the consideration of those rights will be simplified by dividing all defendants into three classes:

1. All defendants who have been served with process, must show good cause, file a full and sufficient answer, and pay all the accrued costs of the cause, before they are entitled to an order setting aside the decree pro confesso.

2. Non-resident defendants, or those whose names or places of residence are unknown, and who are not served with process, may appear and defend at any time before final decree, as of course, that is, on mere motion and the tendering of such an answer as the bill calls for. In such case, no affidavit accounting for the delay is required, and the merits of the answer are not considered. When, however, the pro confesso has been followed by a final decree, against such a defendant, the Court may require both a sufficient excuse for the delay, and a meritorious answer under oath, before setting aside both the final decree and the pro confesso, and may also adjudge all the costs accrued in the cause against the defendant, especially where there has been negligence.

3. All other defendants, as to whom personal service is dispensed with under the Code, § 4352, must show merits, in order to entitle them to appear and defend, after judgment by default. By “merits” is meant, (1) a sworn answer, showing a meritorious defence, and (2) a sufficient excuse for the delay, shown by affidavit. In such a case, no costs will be imposed. If, however, there has been a final decree, the Court may impose costs.

The Master may, on a rule day, set aside a pro confesso, and allow an answer to be filed; but he has not the enlarged discretion of the Chancellor in such cases. Before the Master can set aside the pro confesso, and thereby deprive the complainant of his statutory right to a pro confesso, the defendant must not only show good cause for his neglect, but must tender a sufficient answer: this good cause can only be shown by affidavit. An appeal lies to the Chancellor from the action of the Master in setting aside, or in refusing to set aside, a judgment pro confesso. Before a pro confesso is set aside, in cases where

If, on appeal, by the complainant from the action of the Master, in setting aside a pro confesso, no sufficient affidavit appears to have been made, or, no sufficient sworn answer filed, the Chancellor will reverse the action of the Master, and reinstate the pro confesso. Cook v. Dewes, 2 Tenn. Ch., 496. In this case, Judge Cooper held that a “press of other business,” on the part of counsel wo merits must be shown, the Chancellor or Master should not only require of the defendant an affidavit, sufficiently excusing his seeming default, but should, also, invariably require him to present his proposed answer, in order that a judgment may be formed as to the merits of the defence to be made, and not subject the complainant to the annoyance and delay that may result from any answer, however insufficient, the defendant may think proper to file.\(^{30}\) The answer thus presented should always be verified by the oath of the defendant, even in cases where the bill waives the defendant’s oath, such verification not being for the purpose of substituting a sworn pleading for one not required to be sworn, but exclusively as an evidence of the good faith of the defendant in claiming to have a meritorious defence. It is for the Chancellor, and not the defendant, to determine whether a defence is meritorious; and how can he determine that except the answer be read, and that answer properly verified? And when such an answer is presented by a corporation, it should, in like manner, and for like reason, be verified by the oath of the officer, or agent, of the corporation best acquainted with the truth of the contents.\(^{31}\)

One defendant cannot object to the action of the Chancellor in setting aside a pro confesso against a co-defendant.\(^{32}\)

Affiant further says that he is advised that he has a meritorious defence to the bill filed against him in the cause, which defence will fully and at large appear by reference to the answer he desires leave to file to said bill, which answer is true to affiant’s personal knowledge, and is duly sworn to, and is made a part of this affidavit, and marked A.

Affiant, therefore, prays that the order pro confesso heretofore entered against him in this cause [and the final decree based thereon] be set aside, and for nought held; and that he may be allowed to file said answer, and to have due time thereafter to take its proof.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al.

In this case the defendant, Robert Roe, having by affidavit shown a good excuse for his failure to answer the bill, and having tendered a sworn answer showing merits, on his motion, the judgment pro confesso heretofore rendered and entered against him is set aside, and he is allowed to file said answer, upon the payment of the costs of the cause. answer was, thereupon, filed accordingly. An execution will issue against said Robert Roe for said costs.\textsuperscript{34}

Or, the following shorter form may be used:

In this cause, on the defendant Robert Roe’s motion, supported by affidavit and a sworn answer, the judgment \textit{pro confessio} heretofore taken against him is set aside, on the payment of the costs of the cause, and said answer allowed to be filed. The answer was, thereupon, filed accordingly. Execution is awarded for said costs.

Or, if the defendant is a non-resident, or one whose name or residence is unknown, and was brought into Court by publication alone, the order may be as follows:

In this cause, Samuel Stokes, who is a non-resident [or, whose name or residence is unknown] and who was brought before the Court by publication only, comes, and by Solicitor [or, in person,] enters his appearance; and, on his motion, the judgment \textit{pro confessio} heretofore entered against him, was set aside, and he was allowed to file his answer, which answer was filed accordingly.

\textsection{209. When a Final Decree May be Taken on a Pro Confesso.}—When a judgment \textit{pro confessio} is against a defendant not belonging to one of the foregoing excepted classes,\textsuperscript{35} so long as it continues in force, it is equivalent to a solemn admission in open Court that the material allegations of fact contained in the bill are true; and, for this reason, not only is no further proof of such allegations necessary,\textsuperscript{36} but such proof would be immaterial, the confession of record being plenary proof of every fact alleged.\textsuperscript{37}

If, therefore, the bill alleges enough facts to justify a final decree, taking the facts for admitted, the complainant may, in a case not excepted,\textsuperscript{38} take a final decree on his \textit{pro confessio} when the cause is reached on the docket for hearing.\textsuperscript{39} No final decree can be taken at a special term, in an excepted case, on a \textit{pro confessio} taken at the Master’s rules since the regular term: complainant must wait until the next regular term. A final decree may, however, be taken at a special term on a \textit{pro confessio} taken during, or prior to, the preceding regular term.\textsuperscript{40} If, however, the bill does not aver sufficient facts, taking them as true, to support a final decree, as when (1) an accounting is sought, or is necessary, to ascertain the amount due from the defendant, or where (2) the allegations of the bill are indefinite, or inconclusive, or alternative, in all such cases the complainant cannot, even after a judgment \textit{pro confessio}, have a final decree, unless he establish his demand by satisfactory evidence.\textsuperscript{41} If, therefore, a final decree be based on a confessed bill, which does not aver enough facts to support such decree, it will be reversible on a bill of review for errors apparent, or on appeal, or on a writ of error.\textsuperscript{42}

There are three cases, however, wherein a final decree cannot be had until the next term after the bill is taken for confessed: 1, When, process of contempt having been returned executed, or the defendant having been brought any further, or otherwise, than as to the distinct and definite averments of fact set out in the bill. \textit{Ibid.} Sewell v. Tuthill & Patterson, 4 Cates, 271.\textsuperscript{43} 2 The proportion of reversible degrees, based on judgments \textit{pro confessio}, is very large when compared with decrees resulting from a contested litigation. The demurrers, pleas, answers and other criticisms of the defendant, often occasion amendments to bills that would not, on a \textit{pro confessio}, have entitled the complainant to any relief whatever. Solicitors are not always proof against the temptation of taking more in their decrees \textit{pro confessio} than the allegations of their bills would strictly warrant; and Chancellors are not always proof against the temptation to entrust the decree in such cases wholly to the complainants’ Solicitors. But in Equity, a decree on a \textit{pro confessio} can rightfully be only such as would be authorized by the state of the pleadings, if there had been no default. No decree can rightfully be granted beyond what the allegations of the bill will warrant, and if the bill does not entitle the complainant to any relief, the fact he has a \textit{pro confessio} will not enlarge his rights, or increase his remedies. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 526; Lancaster Mills v. Merchants Co., 5 Pick., 32.
into Court upon such process, he refuses to answer the complainant's bill, or puts in an insufficient answer, so adjudged by the Court; 2, When, a plea or demurrer having been overruled, and the defendant ordered to answer the bill, he fails so to do upon a rule given; and 3, When, exceptions to an answer having been allowed by the Clerk and Master, and the defendant or his Solicitor notified thereof, and ordered to answer, the defendant fails to file a sufficient answer within thirty days, or to appeal from the order of the Master. In all other cases, where a pro confesso admits the truth of the bill, a final decree may be pronounced at the return term of the process.

§ 210. When a Pro Confesso will Not Authorize a Final Decree.—While a judgment pro confesso, based on service of subpoena, or on attachment of property and publication, is such an admission of the truth of the bill as renders further proof unnecessary, except in those cases where a pro confesso only makes an issue; nevertheless, if proof be made by a co-defendant, that the allegations confessed are really false, the Court will dismiss the bill as to both defendants, in all cases where such defendants have a common or joint interest in the subject-matter of the suit. Thus, (1) where a bill is filed against two partners, and one answers and disproves the complainant's whole case, while a judgment pro confesso is taken against the other, the Court will dismiss the bill as to both defendants, and the trustee makes defence; and (3) where a vendee is pro confesso, and his vendor answers; and (4) where one personal representative defends, and the other suffers a judgment by default, in all such cases, the defence by the defendant who answers avails the defendant who does not answer, and, if sufficient, overcomes the effect of the judgment pro confesso against him. This doctrine, however, is not applied to an answer by a defendant who has distinct rights or liabilities, and no joint or common interest or liability with the party who fails to answer.

Nor will a judgment pro confesso authorize a decree in favor of the complainant, unless the bill shows a ground for relief against the defendant. If the complainant in his bill fails to show such a state of facts as entitles him to a decree, a pro confesso will avail him nothing, and his bill must be dismissed. This is especially the case where, on a pro confesso, the complainant asks a decree against a public officer, private agent, or other merely nominal party, as against whom no right of recovery exists.

§ 211. Effect of a Final Decree Based on a Pro Confesso.—There is no difference between the validity, force, or efficacy, of a final decree based on a pro confesso so far as third persons are concerned, and the validity, force, or efficacy, of a final decree based on a bill, answer and proof; and a decree based... on a pro confesso, if executed before it is set aside under any of the foregoing provisions, will be a protection to all persons acting upon its validity, and will confer a good title to all property sold under it.\(^5^4\)

It is no objection to the execution of a decree rendered against a defendant, that it was founded on a bill taken for confessed, without personal service; but the Court may, and generally ought to, require the complainant to give sufficient security, in such sum as the Court deems proper, to abide by and perform such order, touching the restitution of property, or repayment of money, as the Court may make, upon the defendant subsequently setting aside the decree, and successfully resisting the complainant’s suit.\(^5^5\)

And as between the complainant and the defendant, the final decree against the latter, based on the judgment pro confesso, is as valid as though pronounced upon answer and proof, until set aside, or reversed, in the manner prescribed by law;\(^5^6\) and even when the defendant is brought before the Court by publication alone, a personal judgment for the debt sued on may be rendered against him, in the same manner, and to the same extent, as though he had been brought before the Court by service of subpæna.\(^5^7\)

A final decree based on a judgment pro confesso, against a defendant served with subpæna, may be set aside during the term at which it was rendered, provided not more than thirty days have elapsed since its rendition. After the expiration of the term, or of said limit of thirty days, the decree cannot be set aside, except upon proper proceedings instituted for that purpose, as in case of decrees based on bill, answer and proof.\(^5^8\) These proceedings in suits brought by original or judicial attachment or property, will be found fully considered under the head of Attachment.\(^5^9\) In all other than attachment cases, a decree without personal service of process against a defendant who does not appear to defend, is not absolute until three years from the decree, unless a copy of the decree is served upon the defendant, in which case it becomes absolute if the defendant fails to come forward and make defence within six months after service.\(^6^0\)

The death of the defendant proceeded against without personal service, whether the death occur before or after the filing of the bill, does not render the proceedings void, but his heirs or representatives, as the case may be, have the right, within three years from the rendition of the final decree, to make themselves parties by petition, verified by affidavit, showing merits, and contesting the complainant’s bill.\(^6^1\)

The original defendant, his heir, representative, or assignee claiming under him by virtue of any act done before the commencement of the suit, may, within six months after service of a copy of the decree, or within three years after the decree when not served with such copy, be admitted to answer the bill, upon petition showing merits, and giving security for the payments of costs; and witnesses on both sides may be examined, and such other proceedings may be had thereon, as if the cause were then newly begun.\(^6^2\)

§ 213 PRO CONFESSOS, AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON.

If the petition show merits on its face, and is not fatally contradicted by the record, it is sufficient, and need not be accompanied by an answer. The proper way to test the sufficiency of the petition is by a motion to dismiss, and, in deciding on the motion, the Court will look alone to the petition and to the record, and no answer to the petition will be allowed. If the motion to dismiss is overruled, the decree complained of will be set aside, and the defendant allowed to make all defenses of law and fact to the bill, as if the bill had just been filed and process served.

§ 213. Forms of Petition and Decree to Set Aside a Decree Based on a Pro Confesso.—The following forms of a petition and a decree will illustrate what has been said in the preceding section:

PETITION TO SET ASIDE A DEGREE BASED ON A PRO CONFESSO,

To the Honorable Andrew Allison, Chancellor:

Your petitioner, the above named defendant, Richard Roe, respectfully shows to the Court, I.

That on the................., day of [giving date,] the above named John Doe filed his bill in said cause against petitioner in this Court, alleging among other things that petitioner was a non-resident, and praying publication against petitioner. A judgment pro confesso was at the May term, 1890, of this Court, pronounced against petitioner, based on an alleged publication as to petitioner and a supposed default by him; and at the same term a final decree was made in the cause based on the said bill, the deposition of the complainant, and said judgment pro confesso, by which decree the said complainant was given a recovery of four hundred dollars, and all the costs of the cause, against petitioner, and execution awarded. Said execution was on [giving date] levied on the following tract of land, the property of petitioner: [Here describe it according to the levy; and, also, by a fuller description, if necessary.] Said land was sold, under said execution, to the complainant, for the sum of four hundred and twenty dollars; and the Sheriff made him a deed therefor accordingly, which deed has been registered, and the complainant is now holding and claiming said land by virtue of said deed, and the previous proceedings in said cause. For a fuller account of all the said proceedings, reference is made to the record in said cause now in this Court.

Your petitioner positively and solemnly avers and declares that, when said bill was filed, and all the proceedings thereunder had, as herein above stated, he was a non-resident of the State of Tennessee, and a resident of the State of Indiana, that he had no knowledge, whatever, of said proceedings, or of any of them, but was absolutely and wholly ignorant of the filing of the bill, and of all of the orders, decrees, and other proceedings in said cause, until the third day of the present month, [January, 1891,] when he came to this county on other business, and, greatly to his astonishment, learned of said suit, and of the sale of his said tract of land thereunder.

III.

Your petitioner positively and solemnly avers that the cause of action set forth by said complainant in his said bill is, and was at the filing of said bill, wholly false, and without any foundation whatever in fact, or in law. Your petitioner did not owe said complainant any sum on any account whatever at the filing of said bill, or at the time of said decree; and did not owe him the account exhibited to said bill, or any part thereof. [Set forth specific denial of the cause of action alleged in the bill, and give any and all explanations, acquittances, releases, receipts, &c., the petitioner may have, making his defences as full, clear and strong as possible, according to the facts. Go into details; and remember that this petition is in the nature of an affidavit, and should be positive and specific, and adequate to the end in view.]

IV.

Your petitioner herewith exhibits his answer to said bill, duly verified by his oath, and he makes said answer a part of this petition, and says that said answer is true on his own personal knowledge, and he praying that notice of the filing of this petition be served on said complainant, returnable instantaneously; and that, on the hearing of this petition, said final decree, and said judgment pro confesso, and said Sheriff's deed, be set aside, and for nought

63 Metcalf v. Landers, 3 Bax., 35. There is no need for an answer, until the Court has determined that the defendant has the right to answer. But a sworn answer disclosing merits will strengthen the defendant's application, and may turn the scale in his favor. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 267.

64 Brown v. Brown, 2 Pick., 277. The effect of allowing the petition to be filed unconditionally is to annul the decrees in the cause, and to restore the defendant to the status of a defendant whose time to answer has not expired. Ibid.

65 See, post, §§ 888-890, for similar proceedings in attachment suits.

66 It is good practice to tender an answer, but no answer is required until the right to answer has been determined. Metcalf v. Landers, 3 Bax., 35; Brown v. Brown, 2 Pick., 277.

67 Notice may be served on the complainant before the petition is presented, stating the day when it will be presented, and the motion made to set aside the decree.
DEGREE SETTING ASIDE A DEGREE AGAINST A NON-RESIDENT.

No. 618.

On this 17th day of January, 1891, came the defendant, Richard Roe, and presented his petition, praying therein that the order pro confesso and the final decree and other proceedings in this cause be set aside, and that he be allowed to answer the bill, tendering with his said petition an answer, duly sworn to. And notice of the presentation and filing of said petition having been heretofore given the complainant, and he being present by his Solicitor, and the said petition and answer, and the original record in the case, having been read, and argument of counsel heard, the Court is of opinion that the petitioner is entitled to have both the order taking the bill for confessed, and the final decree in this cause, set aside, vacated, and for naught held.

It is, therefore, ordered and decreed by the Court, that said order pro confesso and said final decree be both set aside and vacated, and the defendant is allowed to file the answer exhibited to his said petition, which answer is filed accordingly, and said petition also. And it being admitted in open Court by the complainant, through his Solicitor, that the complainant is by his tenant in possession of the tract of land sold in this case, it is ordered by the Court, on motion of the defendant, that a writ of restitution issue to restore to the defendant the possession of said tract; but the tenant in possession will not be ousted until the end of the present year, provided he will attend to the defendant.

The cause is remanded to the rules for proof generally, and the defendant is granted leave to cross-examine the complainant, whose deposition has heretofore been taken.

After the decree has been set aside, and the answer filed, witnesses on both sides may be examined, and such other proceedings may be had and taken in the cause as if the issue had been duly made up by filing the answer at the appearance term. The effect of the order, allowing the answer to be filed, is to annihilate the interval between publication and the presentation of the petition to set aside the decree; and to give the defendant every right he would have had, if his answer had been filed at the appearance term, and if the term at which it is filed was the appearance term.

When a non-resident defendant is permitted to make defence after final decree, he must do so by an answer, and not by a demurrer.

If the property has been sold to a stranger, the defendant, on having the decree set aside, will not be entitled to recover back the property. Sexton v. Alberti, 10 Lea, 458.

The petition should be sworn to by all the petitioners. An affidavit to the petition by their Solicitors is not sufficient. Cook v. Dew, 2 Tenn. Ch., 496; Totten v. Nance, 3 Tenn. Ch., 264; 1 Barh. Ch. 68

MOTIONS BY COMPLAINANT.

§ 214. Motions and Affidavits generally Considered.
§ 215. Motions for Leave to Amend the Bill.
§ 216. Motions in Reference to Defendants under Disability.
§ 217. Motions for Orders Pro Confesso.

§ 214. Motions and Affidavits generally Considered.—A motion is an oral application to the Court in term time, or to the Chancellor or Master in vacation, for some order in relation to the suit in which the application is made. An affidavit is a statement of facts reduced to writing, and sworn to before some person authorized to administer the oath. Affidavits are ordinarily made in support of motions, in order to bring before the Court some fact not otherwise appearing.

The subject of motions and affidavits will be hereafter fully considered in Articles devoted thereto; but the principal motions and affidavits made in Court, or before the Chancellor, or Master, after service of process, and before the defendant has filed any pleading, will be considered here.

§ 215. Motion for Leave to Amend the Bill.—Although the complainant may amend his bill before defence made without application to the Court, nevertheless, if Court be in session when the necessity for an amendment appears, it is proper to move the Court for leave to amend. Such a motion may be in the following form:

MOTION AND ORDER TO AMEND THE BILL.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al.
No. 618.

In this cause, the complainant moved the Court for leave to so amend his bill as to allege that John Brown claims to own an interest in the tract of land sought to be sold for partition in this cause, but that the extent of such interest, if any, is unknown; and so as to make said John Brown a defendant, and require him to discover the nature and extent of his interest, if any, and how evidenced, which motion was by the Court allowed, and said amendment was made accordingly on the face of the bill. A subpoena, and a copy of the bill as amended, will issue, and be served on said John Brown.

When a motion to amend the bill is made after answer filed, it must ordinarily be supported by affidavit, showing (1) why the amendment was not made before, (2) specifying the substance of the proposed amendment, and (3) averring that the matter of the proposed amendment is true.

The subject of amending bills and of supplemental bills will be hereafter fully treated in a separate Chapter.

§ 216. Motions in Reference to Defendants under Disability.—If his bill is filed against a defendant who is a minor, or a person of unsound mind, without a general guardian, it is the duty of the complainant, at the appearance term, or on or after the appearance rule day, to have a guardian ad litem appointed for such minor, or non compus. The Chancellor, or Master, may, on motion, make the appointment in vacation; or, if the Court be in session, the appointment may be made by the Court. The motion and order, if made in Court, may be as follows:

ORDER APPOINTING A GUARDIAN AD LITEM.

In this cause, the complainant moved the Court to appoint a guardian ad litem for Charles Jones, one of the defendants, and it appearing to the Court that said Charles Jones is a minor [or, person of unsound mind,] duly in Court by service of process, [or, by publication,] and that he has no general guardian, the Court appointed John W. Green, Esq., a Solicitor of the Court, guardian ad litem of said Charles Jones, to defend this suit for him; and the said John W. Green in open Court accepted said appointment, [and filed his answer as such guardian.]

A guardian ad litem cannot be regularly appointed until the day the person under disability is required to appear; and the appointment cannot be made at all, unless such person has been actually brought before the Court, by service of subpeona, or by publication. In contemplation of law, the infant, or lunatic, must be in Court in obedience to its process, before the Court has such jurisdiction of his person as to authorize it to appoint a guardian ad litem for him. 2

§ 217. MOTIONS for ORDERS PRO CONFEcesso.—On any rule day after the time allowed for making defence has expired, the complainant may move the Court or Master, for an order to take the bill as confessed. In vacation, the defendant has all of the appearance rule day in which to file his defence, and so a pro confesso cannot be entered against him until the next rule day. If the first day of the term, or any Monday of the term, is appearance day, the defendant must make his defence on appearance day, or on the first two days thereafter; or on, or after, the fourth day, he will be liable to a pro confesso. If the motion is made in Court, it may be as follows:

ORDER PRO CONFEcesso.

In this cause the complainant moved the Court for a judgment pro confesso against the defendant Daniel Roe; and it appearing to the Court that said Daniel Roe is duly in Court, by service of subpeona [or, by publication,] requiring him to appear and defend on the first Monday in February, 1891, and that he has failed to make any defence to complainant’s bill as required by the rules of this Court, it is ordered by the Court, that said bill be taken as confessed, as to said Daniel Roe, and the cause set for hearing ex parte, as to him.

The taking of pro confessos has, heretofore, been fully considered, and the reader is referred to the Article on that subject. 3

§ 218. MOTION for ALIAS, or MESNE, Process.—If the Sheriff has failed to find a defendant, or the publication is defective, the complainant should move the Court at the appearance term for alias process, to bring the defendant into Court; or, in a proper case, he may have a judicial attachment against the defendant’s property, and an order for publication. If the Court will continue sufficiently long, such alias, or mesne, process may be made returnable to any Monday of the term. 4 The order for alias process may be as follows:

ORDER FOR ALIAS PROCESS.

In this cause, on motion of the complainant, alias subpeona to answer is awarded against the defendant, George Smith, returnable to the 4th Monday of the present term, being the 24th day of the present month.

1 The form of the motion, and order, when made in the Master’s office, is substantially the same as when made in Court.

2 Not that the person under disability must be actually and bodily in Court, but that the subpeona must have been served, or the publication made, and the day set for his appearance must have come; until then, he is not in Court, in contemplation of law. See, ante, § 106; post, § 227.

All alias process runs like original process, except that it commands the officer, "as he has heretofore been commanded," to do so and so. The following is the form of

To the Sheriff of said County:

You are hereby commanded, as you have heretofore been, to summon Peter Poe to appear [&c., as in § 187, ante.]

If a defendant has died, or married, since served with process, such fact may be proved in open Court, and a scire facias ordered by the Court, on motion, against the husband of the married defendant, or the heirs or personal representatives of the deceased defendant. The following is the form of an ORDER FOR A SCIRE FACIAS.

John Doe,
vs.
No. 618

In this cause, the death of James Jones was suggested and proved in open Court. And it being suggested that Henry Jones is his administrator, [or, that William Jones and George Jones are his heirs at law,] it is ordered by the Court, on motion of the complainant, that a scire facias issue to notify said Henry Jones [or, said William Jones and George Jones,] to appear on [some Monday of the term, or at some rule day, specifying the day,] and show cause, if any he has [or, they have,] why this suit should not be revived against him, [or them.]

§ 219. Motions for Attachments for not Answering.—If the defendant fails to answer a bill seeking a discovery, within the time required by law, the complainant may either take an order pro confesso against him, or may move the Court, or Master, for an attachment against the body of the defendant to compel him to answer. In such a case, the motion may be in the following form:

MOTION FOR AN ATTACHMENT.

John Doe,
vs.
No. 618

In this cause, the complainant moved the Court for an attachment against the defendant, George Smith, to compel him to answer the bill; and it appearing to the Court, that the subpoena to answer the bill was duly served on the defendant, George Smith, on the 10th day of February, 1891, that he has failed to answer, or make other defence to said bill within the time required by law, and that said bill calls for a discovery from said defendant under oath, it is ordered by the Court that an attachment issue against said George Smith for not answering said bill, said attachment to be returnable to Thursday of the present week. The Sheriff may take a bail-bond in the penalty of five hundred dollars.

§ 220. Motions by Complainants in Person.—There are some motions best made by a complainant in person, or made by a Solicitor in his presence. Where a person's name is used as sole complainant, or as co-complainant, without authority, he must take steps to repudiate the suit as soon as he has notice of its existence. If the suit be pending, he should present an affidavit that the bill was filed without authority, and move the Court to order the bill taken from the files or dismissed as to him, and that the Solicitor filing the same be taxed with all the costs of the cause. Upon such motion the Court will hear the evidence, the burden of proof being on the Solicitor to show authority.

Where the suit has ended before the complainant learns of its existence, and he has suffered any loss by such suit, he should file an original bill in the nature of both a bill to impeach a decree for fraud and a bill of review, setting forth the facts, and making the Solicitor and all of the parties to the original suit defendants, and praying to be relieved from all liability under the decree complained of, and, if necessary, for an injunction against its enforcement as to him.

So, where a complainant complains of, or repudiates, any act of his Solicitor, he should do so in person; or, at least, should be present in Court at the time his complaint is made.

§ 221. Suits by Motion in Chancery.—Suits may be commenced in the Chancery Court by motion, and decrees rendered summarily, without pleadings, and generally without notice, against certain officers and attorneys, and against those indebted to certain sureties, stayors and endorsers. The proceedings in such suits are wholly foreign to the pleadings and practice in Equity, and are purely statutory. They are seldom resorted to in the Chancery Court, and, as they are treated of in books on practice in the Circuit Courts, and would unnecessarily enlarge this volume, already cumbersome, they will not be further considered.

§ 225. When a Defendant Served with Subpoena is Bound to Appear.
§ 226. When a Defendant Brought into Court by Publication is Bound to Appear.
§ 227. When and How Defendants under Disability Appear.
§ 228. Where a Defendant, or Other Person Summoned, is Bound to Appear.

§ 222. What is an Appearance.—The subpoena and the notice by publication require the defendant to appear, on or before a day named, before the Chancery Court, to answer the complainant’s bill. What is meant by appearing is not coming bodily into the Court House, when and where the Court is in session, but making some motion, or doing some act of record, in a cause, or filing with the Clerk and Master some written defence to complainant’s suit.¹ This motion, act of record, or written defence the defendant ordinarily makes through his Solicitor,² but he may make it in person.³ Unless a defence is made, in the manner and time required by the practice of the Court, a judgment pro confesso will be entered against the defendant.

An appearance is, then, any act whereby a defendant recognizes the jurisdiction of the Court, in the particular case wherein he is a defendant. This appearance, or recognition of the Court’s jurisdiction, may be: (1) a limited, or special, appearance; or (2) an unlimited, or general, appearance. A limited, or special, appearance is ordinarily made for the express purpose of disputing the jurisdiction of the Court;⁴ and the appearance must affirmatively, or necessarily, appear to be for such limited, or special purpose, as, for instance, to plead in abatement,⁵ or it will be deemed to be an unlimited, or general appearance. A general appearance is one that is not expressly, or necessarily, limited to the particular matter, motion, or pleading constituting the appearance. All appearances are deemed to be general, or unlimited, unless expressly declared to be special and limited, or unless its special or limited character is necessarily implied from the nature of the motion, or pleading, constituting the particular appearance in question.

A defendant may appear voluntarily as soon as the bill is filed, and without waiting for the subpoena to be served on him.⁶ This is sometimes called appearing gratis, and is generally resorted to, when a defendant wishes to make some immediate application to the Court in the cause,7 or to resist some application by the complainant.8 A defendant, who so appears, has every right he would have had if subpoena had been served on him, returnable on the day he voluntarily appeared.9 Thus, an appearance to have pro confesso set aside is not such an appearance as will debar a defendant from pleading in abatement to the bill.10

§ 223. What Constitutes Appearance.—In practice, the service of a subpoena on the defendant is equivalent to his appearance at the time and place specified in the writ;11 and it is only when there has been no personal service of subpoena, that an actual appearance by the defendant becomes important. A defendant may be brought before the Court by attachment of his property and publication in a newspaper; or, in some cases, by publication without any attachment; but such devices are only substitutes for actual notice, and are allowed only because otherwise there would often be a failure of justice.12 In all such cases, Courts proceed with uneasiness and misgivings, they realizing that it is the manifest right of every one who is sued to have a reasonable notice of the suit, and a fair opportunity to make defence. For this reason, Courts yearn for some evidence that a defendant brought before the Court by publication has actual knowledge of the litigation, and they seize, with some eagerness, upon any act of the defendant recognizing the jurisdiction of the Court over him, in the particular case.

Hence, the filing of any pleading,13 the making or resisting of any motion,14 the filing of exceptions to a Master’s report, the taking of depositions to be read in the cause, the making of any agreement with the complainant, or his Solicitor, relative to any proceeding in the cause,15 or any other act in the cause, between the filing of the bill and the rendition of the final decree, whereby the pendency of the suit is recognized expressly, or by necessary implication, will, if there be record evidence of the fact, constitute a general and unlimited appearance,10 unless limited by express declaration, or necessary implication, in which case the appearance will be limited.

In all cases of voluntary appearances, where no pleading is filed or motion made by the defendant, in order to avoid disputes or misconstruction, it is proper to have some entry of record in reference to the defendant’s appearance. Such entry, however, is not indispensable, for the Courts will not permit a party, who appears to have had actual knowledge of the pendency of a suit against him, to complain because he was not formally notified.17 Courts of Equity regard substance, not ceremony, and actual notice is the substantial thing, and not the ceremony of notification.

§ 224. Effect of an Appearance.—As the object of process, whether by subpoena, or by attachment of property and publication, or by publication alone, is to notify the defendant of the pendency of a suit against him in a particular Court, it follows that the actual appearance of the defendant cures any defect, appearance, or imperfection, in the process, or in its execution.\textsuperscript{17a} Indeed, if the defendant actually appears, it matters not whether any process in fact ever issued at all.

And when a defendant does any act, indicating unmistakably that he recognizes himself as a party to the particular suit, he is conclusively deemed to have knowledge of the contents of the pleadings, and of the whole record in the cause, including all that has been done in it; and he conclusively waives any irregularity or informality in the process whereby he was notified of the suit; and indeed waives the process itself.

Appearance in an attachment suit gives the Court jurisdiction of the person of the defendant but not of the property sought to be attached: the latter depends on the validity of the attachment proceedings.\textsuperscript{18}

A regular guardian can waive process for his ward, and so can a husband for his wife, when they are living together, and her separate estate is not involved in the litigation. A partner can, while the partnership exists, enter the appearance of his firm; but not after its dissolution. Infants and lunatics can neither enter an appearance, nor waive process; and all proceedings against them not based on proper process, properly executed, are void. There can be no guardian \textit{ad litem} appointed for them, until after such service of process, and until the return day thereof; and, therefore, a guardian \textit{ad litem} cannot enter their appearance, or waive process for them.\textsuperscript{19}

But where the Court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, an appearance by the defendant does not give the Court the right to proceed and pronounce a decree.\textsuperscript{20} If, however, the objection to the jurisdiction is merely local or personal, such objection is waived by appearance, and defence to the merits, except in suits relating to land.

\section*{§ 225. When a Defendant Served with Subpoena is Bound to Appear.—A defendant is bound to appear at the time and place specified in the subpoena, or publication notice. This time is not uniform throughout the State, because by statute, original process may, by rule of Court applicable to the Court where made, be returnable to the rule days, and all others except final process may be so returnable.\textsuperscript{22} In pursuance of this statute, in many of the counties, there is a Chancery rule providing that all process, except final process, shall be made returnable to the rule days. Where there is no such rule of Court, all original process is returnable to the first day of the regular term, and service of the original subpoena on the defendant five days before the return day, binds him to appear within the first three days of the term, if the Court hold so long, otherwise on the first day of the term.\textsuperscript{23} But, if the subpoena be served upon the defendant, within five days before the first day of the term, he is not bound to appear before the first day of the second term after the service, unless the term last longer than one week and the subpoena is made returnable to some subsequent day of the term, in which case he must make his defence within the first three days of such return day, or be liable to a \textit{pro confesso}; and if the subpoena is made returnable to a subsequent day, as stated, but executed the Court is about to adjourn, \textit{pro confesso} may be taken in any case in which defense has not been made. Acts of 1905, ch. 472.

The original act (Code, § 4350) was intended for Courts held for two or three days in certain small counties, the Chancellor holding Court in one county from Monday to Wednesday, and in the next county from Thursday to Saturday. Under this section as amended, a \textit{pro confesso} can be taken on the second morning of the term; but, if the Court should continue until Thursday, it would be proper to retake the \textit{pro confesso}; unless the defendant had, in the meantime, made a defense, which he might lawfully do, and have the \textit{pro confesso}, entered on the second day of the term, set aside on motion, as, of course, without affidavit and without costs.\textsuperscript{24}} within the five days before the return day, then the Monday succeeding such return day becomes the return day, and the defendant is allowed the three succeeding days thereafter to make defense.25

Under these rules, if the subpoena is served on the defendant on the Wednesday next before the return day, such service would be in time to require the defendant to appear on such day, or on the Tuesday or the Wednesday next following; and if he failed so to appear, a judgment pro confesso could be entered against him, in open Court, on Thursday morning.26 The defendant in such case has all the first three27 days in which to appear, and make his defense, or to obtain further time for that purpose.28

But if the Court hold less than three days, the defendant is bound to appear and make his defense on the first day of the term, and if the business of the Court has been finished within three days and the Court is about to adjourn on the second or third day of the term, a pro confesso may be taken against him if he has made no defense. In such a case the order may be in the following form, omitting the title of the cause:

ORDER PRO CONFESSO ON 2ND DAY OF TERM.

In this cause, on motion of complainant's Solicitor, and it duly appearing to the Court that the defendant, Richard Roe, is duly in Court by service of subpoena, [or, by publication,] and that he has failed to appear and make defense to complainant's bill within the time required by law, and the Court being about to adjourn, it is ordered that complainant's bill be taken as confessed by him, the said Richard Roe, and the cause set for hearing ex parte. [And in a proper case, a final decree may be taken and entered at the same time. See ante § 205.]

When the subpoena is returnable to a rule day, by a rule of the Court, the defendant has all of the return rule day in which to file his pleading;29 and, as no pro confesso can be entered against him until the next succeeding rule day, he has all the intermediate time in which to file his pleading. It must be remembered, however, that each day of the term, as well as the first Monday of every month in vacation, is a rule day, and, a rule day for all rule day business; and if a term of Court comes between the return rule day and the first Monday of the next month, a judgment pro confesso may, for want of a defence, be entered on any day of such term.

The return days of all mesne process in the Chancery Court, such as subpoenas to answer supplemental, and amended bills, and bills of revivor, shall be the rule days of the Court;30 and, in such cases, the defendant must file his written defence with the Clerk and Master before the rule day next after the return rule day, or a pro confesso may be entered against him on such next rule day. But, if a term of Court should begin before such next rule day, the pro confesso may be entered on any day of the term, inasmuch as every day of a term is a rule day.31

But, alias or mesne process taken out at any time may be returnable to any Monday of the term, and if executed five days before the return day the defendant has the first three days of the term, if the Court hold so long, otherwise the first day of the term to make defense, or obtain time therefor; and after said three days, or one day, as the case may be, the cause stands to be proceeded in for all purposes. If such alias or mesne process be executed within the five days before the return day the succeeding Monday becomes the return day, and the cause stands to be proceeded in at that term.32

§ 226. When a Defendant brought into Court by Publication is Bound to Appear.—When the defendant is brought into Court by attachment of property

26 Dickinson v. Lee, 2 Cold, 615.
27 The allowance of three days, (called days of grace,) in which to perform a duty that should have been done on the first day, is a very ancient custom, and grew out of the fact that "our sturdy ancestors held it beneath the condition of freemen to appear, or to do any other act, at the precise time appointed." 3 Blackstone's Com., 278, citing Tacitus, to show it was German law, before the Christian era.
28 For the practice where the defendant is required to appear at a rule day, and when pro confesso may be taken at rules, see Proceedings in the Master's Office, post, § 1157.

and publication, the last publication must be at least one week before the time fixed in the published order for the defendant's appearance.\textsuperscript{33} If, therefore, the time so fixed be the first day of the term, and there be less than one week between the last publication and the first day of the term, it would seem that the defendant is not bound to appear until the first three days of the second term of the Court after such publication,\textsuperscript{34} but if the appearance day is a rule day, then the defendant need not appear until the rule day coming at least one week after the last publication; and he has all of such rule day in which to make his defense.

When the defendant is brought before the Court by publication, without any attachment of property, the fourth publication is equivalent to the service of the subpoena on the day of such fourth publication; and if five or more days elapse between the day of such last publication and the rule day specified in the published order for the defendant's appearance, then such rule day is his day for appearance,\textsuperscript{35} but if less than five days elapse, then the next succeeding rule day is his appearance day. In all such cases, the defendant has all of the appearance day in which to make his defense, and no \textit{pro confesso} can be entered against him until the rule day next succeeding the appearance day.

If, in any case, the defendant has a demurrer, plea, or answer, properly filed, no \textit{pro confesso} can be entered against him, even though he may have been in default when such pleading was filed. And, if in any case, a term of Court comes while a defendant is in default, a \textit{pro confesso} can be entered against him on any day of such term, unless he filed a proper pleading before the motion for such a judgment was made.

\textsection{227. When and How Defendants under Disability Appear.}—As already shown, minors and persons of unsound mind must be brought into Court in the same way as defendants not under any disability; but as minors, idiots and lunatics cannot bind themselves by any contract, and, as a consequence, cannot retain counsel, and as they are incapable of making their own defence, the law of the Court requires that they should appear by regular guardian, when they have such; and, if they have none, it becomes the duty of the Court, or of the Master, if the Court be not in session, to appoint a guardian for them, for the purpose of the particular litigation. This guardian is called a guardian \textit{ad litem}.\textsuperscript{36}

Neither the Chancellor nor the Master can rightfully appoint a guardian \textit{ad litem} unless: (1) the infant, idiot or lunatic is made a defendant to the bill; and (2) is duly in Court by service of subpoena, or publication fully made. The Court must have actually acquired jurisdiction of the person of the infant, idiot or lunatic before a guardian \textit{ad litem} can be appointed, and this jurisdiction can be acquired only by proper service of proper process;\textsuperscript{37} and not then, until the return day of such process;\textsuperscript{38} for, until the return day, the process is, in contemplation of law, in the Sheriff's hands, and the Court cannot know whether it has been duly served or not; and besides, the party served is not required to appear until the return day of the process.\textsuperscript{39} Hence, any appointment before the return day would be premature.\textsuperscript{40} An infant without a general guardian does not become a defendant to a bill unless (1) the bill names him of the highest honor, to zealously and jealously guard all the interests of his ward. As to the rights, powers, and duties, of guardians \textit{ad litem}, see, ante, §§ 106-108.

When a defendant, witness, or other person, is subpoenaed, or in any way notified by service of process, or by publication, or by an order of record, "\textit{to appear before the Court,}" the place for him so to appear is in the office of the Clerk and Master of the Court, who is authorized by law and the practice of the Court to represent the Court, \textit{pro hac vice}; and who will, on due inquiry, inform the person so appearing what is required of him, so that he may order his movements advisedly.\footnote{43 See, post, §§ 1156-1159.} A person does not, ordinarily, appear before the Chancery Court \textit{in propria persona}, unless he does so (1) to manage his own case,\footnote{44 Code, § 3979.} or assist his Solicitor therein, or (2) is under arrest, or on trial, or (3) is a witness examined in open Court, or (4) is present in reference to the execution of some bond or other instrument, or the solvency of the sureties of some party.

A party appears before the Court, as a rule, in the person of his Solicitor, and whatever paper he wishes to present or file, and whatever motion or argument he wishes to make, and whatever protest or request he desires to submit, and whatever other action he feels called on to take, in reference to any matter before the Court, is, usually, done by or through his Solicitor, either in the office of the Clerk and Master, or in open Court, as the exigency may require or convenience suggest.

DEFENCES GENERALLY CONSIDERED.

\section*{§ 229. Proceedings Preliminary to Making Defence.}

When a defendant is notified by service of subpoena, or by publication, that a bill has been filed against him, his first duty is to employ a Solicitor of the Court, in which the bill is filed, to represent him, unless he intends to defend in person. He must be careful to make defence within the time required by law, or a judgment \textit{pro confesso} will be entered against him. If he has not been served with a copy of the bill, he is entitled to a copy on demand;\footnote{1 Code, § 4344.} he is, also, entitled to see the original bill, and the exhibits thereto, if any; but he has no right to take them out of the office of the Clerk and Master.

The employment of a Solicitor by the defendant is ordinarily verbal; but, where the defendant does not sign, or swear to, his answer, the better practice is for the Solicitor to obtain from the defendant a written authority to appear for him in the cause. However employed, the Solicitor has all the rights his client would have; and may have a copy of the bill, and an inspection of the original bill, and the exhibits; but he has no right to take any of them out of the office, without the express permission of the Court, or the Clerk and Master.

Having read the bill, or obtained a copy, the defendant, or his Solicitor, will, with all diligence, possess himself of the real facts in the case; and, especially, of the matters relied on as a defence.

1. If there be any ground for disputing the jurisdiction of the Court, a plea in abatement must be filed before any other defence is made, or offered to be made, or even before any motion is made in the case.

2. If, on inspecting the bill, it shows a manifest want of Equity on its face; or, if any prerequisite of the writ be wanting, he may enter a motion to dismiss the bill, provided the defendant is subpoenaed to appear on the first day of the term. If, however, he is subpoenaed to appear at a rule day out of term, this motion is not available, as it cannot be made except in open Court.

3. If the bill be demurrable, the demurrer must be drawn and filed, taking care not to apply it to the whole bill, unless so intended.

4. If none of these defences can be made, but the bill is liable to be defeated by a plea in bar, such a plea is the next defence in order.

5. If such a plea is not available, or if available is not advisable, then the defendant must answer the bill, or disclaim; and if an answer will be insufficient to enable him to make complete defence, or to obtain all the rights he is entitled to arising out of the controversy, or the subject-matter thereof, he may, 6. File his answer as a cross-bill; or, if it is necessary to bring new parties before the Court, he must file a separate cross-bill.

7. If the bill is made up of several distinct matters, and a demurrer will lie to a part of it, a plea in bar to another part, and an answer can be made to the remainder, the defendant may join all of these defences; and may, in addition, file a cross-bill if he needs any affirmative relief growing out of the subject-matter of the litigation.

The fact that all of the foregoing matters are involved in every defence, and that the various defences must be made in the order stated, and that the making of any of the defences is a waiver of all the defences that precede it, show how important it is for a defendant to be diligent in employing a competent Solicitor; and how diligent and cautious the Solicitor must be after his employment.

If there be any paper referred to in the bill as an exhibit and not filed, the defendant may have an order, by the Master, entered on the rule docket, requiring such exhibit to be filed, and extending the time for answering until a reasonable period after the defendant is notified of the filing.

§ 230. Defences generally Considered.—The bill and the subpoena require the defendant to answer the bill. If, however, there are sufficient reasons, either inside or outside of the bill, why he should not answer it, he may avail himself of these reasons. These reasons, if outside of the bill, are brought forward by plea, or by a motion to dismiss, which is, in such a case, in the nature of a plea. If the reasons, however, are inside of the bill, or, in other words, apparent on its face, they are brought forward by demurrer, or by a motion to dismiss, which is, in such case, in the nature of a demurrer. If the defence thus made is sustained by the Court, the bill is dismissed, unless the defect in the bill can be cured by amendment, in which case it may be amended on proper application. Some of the defences thus set up do not reach the merits of the controversy, and though they may cause the bill to be dismissed, such dismissal will not prevent another bill being filed on the same grounds. But others of these defences do go to the merits, and, if sustained, not only cause the dismissal of the bill, but also forever terminate the matters in controversy.

The defences which merely dismiss the suit, without touching the merits, are called dilatory defences, because they only delay a decision on the merits; the defences, which result in the decision of the controversy on its merits, are called peremptory, or permanent defences, because they result in a permanent determination of the controversy. 3

1. Dilatory Defences are those which insist: (1) that there are such irregularities in bringing the suit, or in selecting the venue, or in issuing, or executing the process, that the defendant has the right to have the suit abated; and (2) that the Court has no jurisdiction to determine the matters set forth in the bill.

2. Peremptory Defences are those which insist: first, that the complainant never had any right to institute the suit; or second, that if any such right ever existed, it is extinguished or ended. The defence that no right to sue ever existed includes the following: (1) that the complainant’s rights are not superior to those of the defendant; (2) that the defendant has no interest in the controversy; and (3) that there is no privity between the complainant and the defendant, or any other right in complainant to maintain the suit against the defendant. The defence that if the complainant ever had any right to sue the defendant such right is extinguished, or ended, is based on the ground; (1) that the right to sue has been extinguished by the act of the parties themselves; or (2) that it has been ended by operation of some law. 4

§ 231. Various Modes of Defence.—The mode and order in which these matters of defence may be made are: 5

1. By Disclaimer, a species of answer whereby the defendant disclaims all interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and prays to be dismissed.

2. By Plea in Abatement, a pleading which (1) relies on some single fact outside of the bill itself, and also outside of the merits of the controversy, to abate the suit; or (2) denies some jurisdictional allegation.

3. By Motion to Dismiss, which is an informal and summary method of ending the litigation, and is based on the fact (1) that the bill is unknown to the forms of the Court; or (2) that there is no Equity on the face of the bill; or (3) that the Court has no jurisdiction of the defendant or the subject-matter; or (4) that some one or more of the prerequisites of the writ are wanting; or (5) that there is a mis-joinder or non-joinder of parties; or (6) that the bill is multifarious; or (7) that there is some other statutory ground of dismissal. 6

4. By Demurrer, a pleading which insists that, as a matter of law, the statements in the bill do not entitle the complainant to the relief prayed by him against the demurrant.

5. By Plea in Bar, a pleading which raises an issue on some single matter of fact touching the merits, which issue if decided in the defendant’s favor will end the suit; or, at least, end so much of the bill as the plea covers.

6. By Answer, a pleading which either denies the material allegations in the bill, or admits them, and sets up new matters which avoid them.

7. By Cross Bill, a pleading which brings such additional matters, or parties, or both, before the Court as are necessary for the defendant’s full protection and defence, or for a full adjudication of all the matters in controversy.

8. By a Joinder of any two or more of the foregoing defences, when the bill contains distinct matters subject to distinct defences.

§ 232. Order in Which Defences Must be Made.—It is important for the pleader to keep in mind the order in which the various kinds of defences must be relied on, inasmuch as a mistake, in this matter, may preclude him from availing himself of the only successful ground of defence open to him. The order of defence is strictly logical, beginning with the most technical, and least meritorious, kind of defence, and proceeding, by regular stages, to the least technical and most meritorious. The order of defence is prescribed by statute, and is in strict accord with the true logic of pleading. It is as follows:

3 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 434.
5 Code, § 4384.
6 Code, § 4386.

1. Pleadings in Abatement, including, under this term, all pleadings which seek to dispute the jurisdiction of the Court over the person of the defendant, or over the subject-matter of the suit.

2. Motions to Dismiss, including all the various grounds whereon the defendant seeks to have the bill summarily dismissed, without filing any written pleading.

3. Demurrers, whether to the whole bill, or only to a part thereof.

4. Plea in Bar, comprising all pleadings which do not dispute the jurisdiction of the Court.

5. Answers, which also include Disclaimers, whether the disclaimer covers the whole, or only part, of the subject-matter of the litigation.

6. Cross Bills, whether joined to the answer, or filed as a separate pleading.

The adoption of any one of the foregoing defences is a waiver of the right to set up any defence that precedes it; but, where strong reasons can be shown, especially where the defendant is a person under disability, the Court will allow the answer to be withdrawn, and a demurrer filed; or a demurrer to be withdrawn, and a plea in abatement filed. Each of these defences will be fully considered in subsequent sections.

| § 235. Motions in Reference to the Filing of Exhibits. | § 239. Motions for Rules on Complainant to Take Steps. |
| § 236. Motions by Husband, or Wife, to Answer Separately. |

§ 233. Motion for Complainant’s Solicitor to Show his Authority.—If the defendant has any good reason to believe that complainant’s Solicitor has no authority to institute the suit, he may move the Court to make a rule on the Solicitor, to produce his authority. This motion must be based on an affidavit, because the Court presumes the Solicitor has due authority. The affidavit may be as follows:

AFFIDAVIT OF WANT OF AUTHORITY.

John Doe,
v.s.,

In this cause, the defendant, Richard Roe, makes oath that he has good reason to believe, granted on the payment of all the costs of the cause, accruing subsequent to the filing of the answer, unless the defendant was misled by the conduct of the complainant, as in Merchant v. Preston, 1 Lea, 280.

1 Sec. ante, § 220; and, post, § 1174.

2 Lynn v. Gildwell, 8 Yerg., 1; Cage v. Foster, 7 Yerg., 561; Wright v. McLemore, 10 Yerg., 235; Gillespie ex parte, 3 Yerg., 325; Jones v. Stockton, 6 Lea, 135.

3 Rogers v. Park, 4 Hum., 480; Jones v. Williamson, 5 Cold., 379.

The first step to be taken by a party who proposes and does believe, [or, has been reliably informed and believes,] and charges, that Henry Jones, who signed the bill of complainant as Solicitor, and who brought this suit and is now prosecuting it, did not then have, and does not now have, authority so to do; and that he is acting as complainant's Solicitor in this cause, without any lawful warrant or authority so to act. Wherefore, affiant prays the Court to require said Henry Jones to produce and exhibit his authority to act as complainant's Solicitor in this cause.

RICHARD ROE.

On such affidavit being presented, and said motion entered, the Court will enter a rule on the Solicitor to produce his authority. The following is a form of a MOTION AND RULE ON A SOLICITOR TO PRODUCE AUTHORITY.

In this cause, the defendant moved the Court to make a rule on Henry Jones, Esq., a Solicitor of this Court, to show his authority, if any he have, for bringing and prosecuting this suit; and the affidavit of the defendant having been read in support of said motion, on consideration thereof, it is ordered by the Court that said motion be allowed, and the said Henry Jones, Esq., is ruled to produce his authority for prosecuting this suit within five days [or such other time as the Court may allow, taking into consideration the distance to the place where the complainant lives, or may be found.] or the suit will be dismissed at his personal cost.

After the lapse of a term after the filing of the bill, the rule will not be made, unless the delay is satisfactorily accounted for. The authority need not be in writing, and, if in writing, need not be a formal power of attorney, and need not be formally probated. Satisfactory evidence of authority is all that is required. If the authority of the principal Solicitor is undisputed, his assistant's authority cannot be questioned. A husband can employ counsel for his wife, and one of several joint contractors may employ counsel for all.

§ 234. Motions in Reference to Security for Costs.—If the complainant has failed to give a bond for the costs, or to take and file the pauper oath in lieu, or the bond, or the oath, on file is fatally defective in substance, a motion will lie to dismiss the suit on that account; and the Court will sustain the motion, unless the deficiency is supplied before the motion is finally ruled on. The Court will allow the complainant a reasonable time, within which to file the bond, or take the pauper oath; such time, however, not to extend beyond, the term. If the bond, or oath, is tendered at any time during the term, it will be received, and any order dismissing the suit will be set aside, and the suit reinstated.\footnote{Sharp v. Miller, 3 Sneed, 42; Irvins v. Mathis, 11 Hum., 603; Bettis v. Mansfield, 11 Hum., 604.}

If the bond has been given, and the sureties to such bond are wholly insufficient, the defendant may make affidavit of such insufficiency; and, on such affidavit, make a motion for a rule on the complainant to give sufficient bond, or justify his sureties. Such affidavit and motion may be as follows:

AFFIDAVIT OF INSUFFICIENCY OF SURETIES.

In this cause, the defendant, Richard Roe, makes oath that John Smith and George Brown, the sureties on the complainant’s prosecution bond, are wholly insufficient. [Jurat.]

MOTION FOR BETTER COST BOND.

In this cause, on motion of the defendants and for sufficient cause shown, it is ordered by the Court that the complainant give a sufficient cost bond, or justify the sureties on his present bond, on or before the last day of the present term, [or, on or before the second day of the next term, or, on or before some other fixed day,] or his suit will be dismissed.

If the suit is brought on the pauper’s oath the suit may be dismissed on that ground, or the complainant required to secure the costs, if it be shown by disinterested persons that the allegation of poverty is probably untrue, or the cause of action frivolous or malicious.\footnote{See Moyer v. Moyer, 11 Heisk., 495; Heathery v. Hill, 8 Bax., 176. The object of the law allowing paupers to sue on oath of poverty is to place the weak on a level with the strong in the Courts.} The motion is usually made to require the complainant to secure the costs, such motion being based on an affidavit that he is able so to do; and the Court hears the evidence orally and decides summarily.\footnote{Cod. 2 § 3, 3194.}

§ 235. Motions in Reference to the Filing of Exhibits.—It is the duty of the complainant to file all papers and documents referred to in his bill;\footnote{Cod. 3 § 423. The English law is more liberal to pauper litigants than ours. See Dan. Ch. Pr., 37-44; 111.} and if he fails so to do, the defendant may obtain from the Master, or the Court, an order requiring such papers and documents to be filed, and extending the time for answering until such order has been complied with.

ORDER TO FILE EXHIBITS.

In this cause, on motion of the defendants, it is ordered by the Court that the complainant file the exhibits to his bill within two days, [or within some other specified time,] and the defendants are given until ten days after the filing of said exhibits in which to file their answer.

If the complainant should fail to comply with this order, the defendants may have a rule on him to file the exhibits by a given day, and, on failure so to do, may have the suit dismissed.\footnote{Cod. 2 § 4389-4390.}

§ 236. Motions by Husband or Wife to Answer Separately.—It is a general rule that, in a suit against husband and wife, the husband must file the joint answer of himself and wife, or the bill may be taken as confessed by both. If, therefore, either party wishes to answer separately, an order must first be obtained allowing it. The cases in which such an order will be made have already been fully stated. If the facts on which the motion is based do not appear in the record, they must be made to appear by affidavit.

ORDER ALLOWING A HUSBAND OR WIFE TO ANSWER SEPARATELY.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.,

No. 618.

In this cause, on motion of the defendant, Richard Roe, [Rachel Roe] supported by his [her] affidavit, he [she] is allowed to answer separately from his wife [her husband.]

Such an order may be made without affidavit when not contested by the other spouse.

§ 237. Motions for Further Time to Make Defence.—If, for any good cause shown, the defendant is unable to answer the bill within the time required, he may obtain from the Court, Chancellor, or Master, further time within which to file an answer. Such good cause should ordinarily be shown by affidavit. It is far more easy to get an extension of time within which to answer, than to have an order pro confesso set aside. If the Master grants an extension, he should enter it on his rule docket. The extension, if granted by the Court, will be entered on the minutes; and, if granted at Chambers, will be endorsed by the Chancellor on the written application, and transmitted to the Master.

ORDER EXTENDING THE TIME FOR ANSWERING.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.,

No. 618.

For good cause shown by affidavit, the defendants are allowed the further time of ten days, [or, until the day of , next] in which to file their answer.

§ 238. Motions to Set Aside Orders Pro Confesso.—If the bill has been taken as confessed by the defendant, his first and most urgent duty and task are to have the order pro confesso set aside. When and how this must be done has already been fully stated, but the defendant cannot be too strongly impressed with the following facts:

1. The application should be made at the earliest possible moment, and any delay must be duly explained by affidavit.

2. The failure to file an answer, or to make other defence, must be satisfactorily accounted for by affidavit.

3. An answer must accompany the application to set aside the order pro confesso; and this answer must not only show a meritorious defence, but must, also, be sworn to, even though the bill waive the defendant’s oath, or though the answer be by a corporation.

§ 239. Motions for Rules on Complainant to Take Steps.—If a complainant fail to take any step necessary to the progress of the cause, the defendant may have a rule made by the Master, or the Court, requiring such step to be taken, or the cause dismissed. The grounds for such a rule are ordinarily: 1, failure to bring all the defendants before the Court; 2, failure to revive a suit where some necessary party has died; 3, failure to amend a bill when leave has been obtained, and the amendment is essential; 4, failure to revive when a single woman who is a party marries; 5, failure to comply with an order to file the exhibits to his bill; 6, failure to file a proper cost bond, or a proper pauper oath, in lieu; and (7) failure to supply lost papers.

ORDINARY RULE TO TAKE STEPS.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.,

No. 618.

In this cause, on motion of the defendant, Richard Roe, the complainant is required to 15 Ante, §§ 88; 99; and, see, Answers, post, §§ 236; 383.

16 Code, § 4368.

17 Ante, §§ 205-213; post, 888-890.

18 In such a case, the answer is sworn to, not as a pleading, but as an affidavit, evidencing the good faith of the applicant, and the meritorious character of the defense. No Court will set aside pro confesso, in order to let the defendant file an answer disclosing no defense. But see, ante, § 207.
take, and prosecute with due diligence, all steps necessary to bring all the defendants before the Court [or, all steps necessary to revive this cause against the proper representatives of Robert Roe, deceased.]

PEREMPTORY RULE TO TAKE STEPS.

In this cause, on motion of the defendant, Richard Roe, it is ordered by the Court that unless the complainant immediately take, and prosecute with due diligence, all steps necessary to bring all the defendants before the Court within ninety days, this suit will be dismissed at the next term.

ARTICLE III. Pleas in Abatement to the Bill.
ARTICLE IV. Frame and Form of Pleas in Abatement.
ARTICLE V. Pleas in Abatement in Attachment Suits.
ARTICLE VI. Proceedings upon a Plea in Abatement.

ARTICLE I.

PLEAS IN ABATEMENT GENERALLY CONSIDERED.

§ 240. Pleas in Abatement Defined. — A plea in abatement, in our practice, either (1) alleges some matter, not otherwise appearing in the record, which, if true, will abate the suit; or (2) denies some matter, appearing in the record, which, if false, will abate the suit; if the plea is successful, the Court is ousted of jurisdiction to proceed any further in the suit; and is, therefore, bound to dismiss the bill.¹ If a fact, which if not alleged would be a ground for a plea in abatement, be alleged in the suit it will be a ground of demurrer.²

There are only two pleadings by which the jurisdiction of the Court can be disputed: 1, pleas in abatement, and 2, demurrers. A plea in abatement disputes the jurisdiction (1) by denying some jurisdictional allegation in the record, or (2) by alleging some fact not in the record. A demurrer disputes the jurisdiction by taking advantage of some one or more material allegations set out in the bill. But, inasmuch as a demurrer politely admits the bill to be true, pro hac vice, and disputes the jurisdiction by argument only, while a plea in abatement peremptorily disputes the jurisdiction of the Court to try the suit on the merits, the Court requires a plea in abatement to be filed before a demurrer.

§ 241. Pleas in Abatement and in Bar, Distinguished According to Tennessee Practice.—All pleas in our Chancery Courts are divided by our statutes into: 1st, Pleas in Abatement; and 2d, Pleas in Bar.³ All pleas that dispute the jurisdiction of the Court to try the case, and seek to have the bill dismissed without any investigation of the merits of the controversy, are pleas in abatement.⁴ All other pleas are pleas in bar. The defences that can be set up in a plea in bar may, also, be set up in an answer, and are generally so set up, but matters proper for a plea in abatement cannot be set up in an answer.⁵

¹ The word “abatement,” in the English Chancery Court practice, means “suspension” or “obstruction;” whereas, in a law court, it means “destruction.” The failure to note this distinction, has produced no little confusion in the text-books and reports. In Tennessee Chancery practice, the word abatement has, generally, the same meaning as in the law courts; and a plea in abatement does not seek to suspend, or obstruct, the suit, but to destroy it; to terminate it, for the time being. When the term “abatement” is used in reference to suits, whose progress has been obstructed by the death, marriage, or bankruptcy, of a party, it then has, in Tennessee, the English meaning, and is equivalent to “suspension.” ² Bouvier’s Law Dict., “Abatement;” Sto. Eq. Pl., § 354. ³ Parker v. Porter, 4 Yerg., 81; Code, § 4386; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 605. ⁴ Code, § 4384. ⁵ Code, §§ 4305, 4318. The classification of pleas, in our Chancery practice, is quite unlike that found in Story, § 242. Rationale of the Practice in Pleas in Abatement.—Good reason suggests that if a defendant desires to dispute the jurisdiction of the Court he should do this before he makes any defense against the merits of the case stated in the bill; for (1) it would be a great waste of time and of money to contest a case on the merits, by putting in an answer, and taking the depositions of witnesses, and other proof, and going through the forms of a hearing, if the party did not intend to submit to the decision of the Court when made; and (2) it would be mere trifling with the Court and the opposite party, if not an act of bad faith, to make such a contest, when the defendant reserved the right to dispute the jurisdiction of the Court in case the decision, or the probabilities, were against him.

The uniform rule of all Courts has, therefore, required a defendant who intended to dispute the jurisdiction of the Court, to do so at the outset, and before he made any defense to the charges against him on the merits of the controversy; for, if he could show that the Court had no right to try him on the case made by the complainant, then good reason and good faith required him to show it in the very beginning, in limine as the books say, and thus save time, trouble and expense, and preserve good faith to the Court.

§ 243. Pleas in Abatement, How Divided in Our Practice.—Pleas in abatement, in our practice, may be divided into (1) Pleas in Abatement to the Process, and (2) Pleas in Abatement to the Bill.

1. Pleas in Abatement to the Process attack the process by showing (1) that it wrongfully issued, or (2) was wrongfully executed.

2. Pleas in Abatement to the Bill attack the bill by showing (1) that the Court has no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, or (2) no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit, or (3) that the bill is prematurely filed, or (4) that the complainants are not partners as they allege, or (5) that by reason of some other matter the bill should be abated.

ARTICLE II.
PLEAS IN ABATEMENT TO THE PROCESS.

§ 244. Pleas in Abatement to the Process generally Considered.

§ 245. Pleas in Abatement to the Subpoena.

§ 246. Pleas in Abatement to the Attachment.

§ 244. Pleas in Abatement to the Process Generally Considered.—Pleas in abatement to the process are unknown to general Equity pleading, all such pleas being to the bill; but our Chancery system of pleas is largely statutory, and our pleas in abatement in the Chancery Court are analogous to such pleas in the Circuit Court.

Daniel, Barbour, and other writers, who give the English Chancery practice. The division given in the text is the only one consistent with the logic of our statutes, and the only one that will rescue our Chancery practice, in reference to pleas, from its present disheartening confusion.

It is a fundamental maxim in pleading, that a matter in abatement cannot be incorporated in an answer, but that a matter in bar may. Our Code allows all matters to be incorporated in an answer, except objections to the jurisdiction. Hence, it follows, as an inevitable deduction of logic, that all objections to the jurisdiction are matters in abatement, and that all other defenses are in bar, and may be made in the answer. See Nailer v. Young, 7 Lea, 738. The line of division, between pleas in abatement and pleas in bar, in the Circuit Court, is different; and this fact has tended to increase the confusion as to the classification of pleas in the Chancery Court.

6 Code, § 3779a; Acts of 1859-60, ch. 104. See form of plea, post, § 254. This under our practice would not be a plea in abatement if our Legislature had not so named it. Legitime imperandi parere necesse est.

7 Under general Equity pleading, pleas in abatement are: 1, to the jurisdiction; 2, to the person of the complainant, or defendant; and 3, to the bill.

1. Pleas to the jurisdiction assert that some other Court, ordinarily some other Court with equitable jurisdiction, has jurisdiction of the matter in question.

2. Pleas to the person of the complainant or defendant are described below. See § 252.

PLEAS IN ABATEMENT. § 245

Pleas in abatement to the process may, in order to avoid confusion, be divided into: 1, Pleas in abatement to the subpoena; and 2, Pleas in abatement to the attachment; and will be considered separately.

§ 245. Pleas in Abatement to the Subpoena.—Pleas in abatement to the subpoena are those that seek to terminate, or abate, the suit by reason of some fatal irregularity in the issuance or service of the subpoena. They include the following:

1. That the process, whereby the defendant was brought before the Court, was issued or served on Sunday, in a case wherein such issuance or service is not authorized by law.
2. That the process was served on the defendant while attending his duty at a muster of militia, or at an election, or as a witness, or juror.
3. That the defendant is a joint drawer of negotiable paper with others, and the original writ was not served upon any one of the joint drawers.

PLEA TO THE SUBPOENA.

James Martin, vs.
Richard Ramsey.

The defendant, Richard Ramsey, for plea in abatement to the suit brought against him in this cause, says, That the subpoena to answer in the cause was executed on him by the Sheriff of De Kalb county while he, the defendant was in attendance at the Circuit Court of said De Kalb county, sitting at Smithville, the defendant being then and there in attendance as aforesaid, under summons as a witness in a suit pending in said Circuit Court between John Martin, plaintiff, and R. R. Stephens, defendant; and this the defendant is ready to verify. Therefore, he prays the judgment of the Court, whether he shall be compelled to make any other answer to the bill; and prays to be dismissed.

RICHARD RAMSEY.

State of Tennessee,
County of DeKalb.

Richard Ramsey makes oath that the above plea is true in substance and in fact.

§ 246. Pleas in Abatement to the Attachment.—The object of an original attachment of property is to compel the appearance of the defendant, and if the attachment is fatally defective, either (1) for want of a legal ground, or (2) for want of the prerequisites, or (3) because not levied on the defendant’s property, the defendant may plead such facts in abatement to the writ; for when a complainant undertakes to obtain a decree against a man without serving a direct notice upon him, he should be required to take every preliminary step prescribed by the law as a substitute for such direct notice. The following are the grounds of a plea in abatement to the attachment:

4. That the grounds, on which the original attachment writ issued, were false, or did not exist.
5. That the attachment was issued without affidavit and bond.
6. That the property, on which the attachment was levied, did not belong to the defendant.

8 See note 80 to § 264, post.
9 Code, § 2902.
10 Would publication for a non-resident, made in a newspaper published exclusively on Sunday, be a ground of abatement?
11 Martin v. Ramsey, 7 Hum., 260. In this case, the plea, that the defendant was subpoenaed to answer the bill while attending the Circuit Court as a witness, was allowed, and the bill dismissed. This decision, in so far as it holds that such a plea, if true, operates to dismiss the bill is questionable on grounds of good practice, good reason and common justice. See, post, 264, note 80.

PLEAS IN ABATEMENT TO THE BILL.

§ 247. Pleas in Abatement to the Bill generally Considered.

§ 248. Pleas in Abatement Because of Prematurity of the Suit.

§ 249. Pleas in Abatement to the general Jurisdiction of the Court over the Subject-Matter.

§ 250. Pleas in Abatement to the Local Jurisdiction of the Court over the Subject-Matter.

§ 251. Pleas in Abatement to the Local Jurisdiction of the Court over the Person of the Defendant.

§ 247. Pleas in Abatement to the Bill Generally Considered.—The object of these pleas is to defeat the jurisdiction of the Court: 1, by denying some jurisdictional allegation of the bill; or 2, by alleging some matter not stated in the bill, which, if true, will defeat the jurisdiction. The principal pleas in abatement to the bill, under our system of Chancery pleading, are the following:

§ 248. Pleas in Abatement Because of the Prematurity of the Suit.—If a suit is brought before the cause of action is matured, the defendant may plead such prematurity in bar of the action, or may set up the defence in his answer, but if the suit is brought before the defendant is liable to suit, by reason of some statute exempting him from suit, for a season, he may plead that fact in abatement of the suit. Thus, if an executor or administrator is sued within six months after his qualification, unless the suit be by a surety of the deceased, the defendant is required by the statute to plead the prematurity of the suit in abatement.19

PLEA IN ABATEMENT BECAUSE OF PREMATURITY OF SUIT.

John Doe,

vs.

John Smith, Admr., &c.

In the Chancery Court at Loudon.

§ 249. Pleas in Abatement to the General Jurisdiction of the Court over the Subject Matter.—The jurisdiction of the Chancery Court over money demands, where the suit is not in aid of a judgment creditor, is limited to debts or demands of not less value than fifty dollars. If, therefore, it appears on the face of the bill that the debt or demand is of less value than fifty dollars, the defendant may have the bill dismissed, on motion or demurrer, unless the suit is in aid of a judgment creditor, or to recover land, or specific personal property. If the debt or demand be alleged to exceed fifty dollars, when it is in fact of less value than fifty dollars, the defendant may plead that fact in abatement of the bill.21

19 See § 26, ante.
20 It is a fundamental maxim in pleading, that any matter, which, if alleged, would make the bill demurrable, may, if not alleged, be set up by plea. Our Supreme Court has intimated that a plea would be when the value of the debt or demand is really less than fifty dollars, although alleged in the bill to be over fifty dollars. Spurlock v. Falke, 1 Swan, 289; Wagstaff v. Braden, 1 Bax., 304. See also, Smets v. Williams, 4 Paige, (N. Y.), 364; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 558, note. It was held in Birmingham v. Tapscott, 4 Heisk., 382, that this defense could not be made in an answer. Such seems, also, to have been the holding in Wagstaff v. Braden, 1 Bax., 304. The plea must, therefore, be a plea to the jurisdiction, and is, consequently, in our practice, a plea in abatement.
The defendant may, also, plead in abatement any other fact that will show the subject-matter of the suit to be without the general jurisdiction of the Court.

PLEA IN ABATEMENT TO THE GENERAL JURISDICTION OF THE COURT.

The defendant, John Smith, for plea in abatement to the bill, says, That the amount he owes the complainant, in this cause, is less than fifty dollars; and, therefore, beneath the dignity of this Court; and he prays the judgment of the Court, whether he shall answer further.

[To be properly sworn to. See post, § 254.]

§ 250. Pleas in Abatement to the Local Jurisdiction of the Court over the Subject-Matter.—There are various provisions of the statutes requiring that suits, relating to certain specified matters, shall be brought in certain specified counties; and if a bill, dealing with these specified matters, is filed in a county other than that specified in the statute, the defendants, even though personally served with process, may file a plea in abatement to the local jurisdiction of the Court over the subject-matter of the suit.

The various requirements of the statutes, as to the local jurisdiction of the Court over the subject-matter of the suit, have already been fully stated, and need not be repeated. In a general way, these statutes may be summarized as follows:

1. All bills to recover, or to divest, or clear, the title to land, or to foreclose mortgages or trust deeds relating to land, or to specifically execute contracts relating to land, or to sell the lands of decedents to pay debts, must be filed in the county where the land, or material part of it, is situated.

2. All bills to foreclose mortgages, or trust deeds, on personalty, must be filed in the county where such mortgage is registered.

3. All bills to sell the lands of persons under disability, or to partition, or sell for partition, lands held in common, must be filed in the county where the land, or some part of it, lies, or where the defendant resides.

4. All bills to transfer the administration of an insolvent estate from the County Court, must be filed in the county wherein the will was proved, or letters of administration were granted, or where the personal representatives reside or are served with process.

5. All bills for the appointment of administrators, must be filed in the county where the deceased resided at the time of his death, or where his estate, goods and chattels, or effects, were at the time of his death.

6. All bills against cities and counties must be filed (1) in case of cities, in the county containing the city, and (2) in case of counties, in the county sued.

If suits in reference to any of these matters are not brought in the county required by the statute, the defendant may plead that fact in abatement of the suit.

The following is the form of a plea in abatement to the local jurisdiction of the Court over the subject-matter:

PLEA IN ABATEMENT TO THE LOCAL JURISDICTION OF THE SUBJECT-MATTER.

John Doe,
vs.
John Smith.

The defendant, John Smith, for plea in abatement to the bill, says, That the tract of land sought to be recovered in this cause, [or, the title to which is sought to be divested or cleared up in this case, or, the contract as to which is sought to be specifically executed in this cause,] lies in the county of Anderson, and no part of it lies in the county of Knox. Wherefore, this defendant says, that this Court ought not to take further jurisdiction of this cause.

22 See, ante, § 177. If a suit be local, and imperatively required by statute to be brought in a particular county, it can be brought in no other county, and if brought in another county the whole proceeding is void, whether the jurisdiction be objected to or not. Nashville v. Webb, 6 Cates, 432. Nor can this requirement be evaded or nullified by means of a counterpart subpoena. Ibid. See, ante, § 177, note 17; 30. But a transitory suit brought in the wrong county, may be successfully prosecuted unless abated by plea of the defendant. Code, § 2812.
§ 251. Pleas in Abatement to the Local Jurisdiction of the Court over the Person of the Defendant.—While the Court of Chancery acts ordinarily in personam, and, therefore, suits may generally be instituted in any county where the defendant, or any material defendant, may be found;23 nevertheless, there are some important statutory exceptions to this rule; and, if any one of these exceptions is violated, the defendants may show the fact by plea in abatement, and thus defeat the suit. The exceptions have been already set forth with particularity, in considering the local jurisdiction of the Court,24 and need not be repeated here, in detail.

The following are the principal grounds for pleas in abatement to the local jurisdiction of the Court over the person of the defendant:

1. That the complainant and the defendant resided, at the time the suit was brought, in the same county, and the bill is filed in another county;25 and the Court, where the suit is brought, has no local jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit.

2. That neither the defendant pleading in abatement, nor any other material defendant, was served with process in the county wherein the suit was brought;26 nor do they reside27 in such county; and the jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit is not in such county.

The county in which a bill must be filed has already been fully shown.28

The following will serve as a guide in drawing pleas, under this section:

PLEA IN ABATEMENT TO THE LOCAL JURISDICTION OVER THE DEFENDANT.29

John Doe,
vs.
John Smith.

In the Chancery Court at Knoxville.

The defendant, John Smith, for plea in abatement to the bill, says: This suit is brought to recover an alleged debt, and the complainant and the defendant both resided in Anderson county when the bill was filed, and the defendant was not then and is not now, residing in Knox county.

Wherefore, he prays the judgment of the Court whether he shall answer further.

§ 252. Pleas in Abatement to the Person under the Old Practice.—Under the old Equity practice pleas to the person were in abatement. These pleas in cluded,

1. Pleas to the Person of the Complainant, that he is an infant, idiot or lunatic, or a bankrupt, or that she is a married woman, or that the complainant is not the person he claims to be, or does not sustain the character in which he sues; and,

2. Pleas to the Person of the Defendant, that he does not possess the character in which he is sued, as for instance that the defendant is not an unmarried woman, or is not an executor, administrator, guardian or heir, or that he is a bankrupt.30

Under the Tennessee practice all of these defences can be set up in the answer, as they do not dispute the jurisdiction of the Court, and are, therefore, not matters for a plea in abatement. But the Legislature having enacted that, whenever two or more persons sue as partners upon an account, bill of exchange, bond or note, it shall not be necessary for them to prove their partnership, unless the defendant files a plea in abatement denying the partnership on oath,31 of course such a plea by this ipse dixit becomes a plea in abatement, and due

FRAME AND FORM OF PLEAS IN ABATEMENT.

§ 253. Requisites of a Plea in Abatement, under General Equity Practice.

§ 253. Requisites of a Plea in Abatement under General Equity Practice.

A plea in abatement must possess all of the requisites of a plea in bar, stated in subsequent sections; except,

1. The ground of a plea in abatement must be sufficient to merely dismiss the suit, and not to bar it.

2. A plea in abatement must not touch upon any matters affecting the merits of the controversy.

The requisites of an affirmative plea in abatement, under the general Equity practice, are: 1, it must be based on matter outside of the bill; 2, such matter must reduce the decision of the cause to a single point, on which issue can be taken; 3, this point must be one that, if decided for the defendant, will dismiss the bill, and not bar it; 4, the plea must be direct and positive, and not argumentative, or inferential; 5, it must be verified by the direct and positive oath of the defendant, unless it is proved by a Court record, and then it is verified by the record; and (6) it must be filed and determined, before any other mode of defence is resorted to. A negative plea in abatement merely denies the jurisdictional allegations of the bill. If, after a plea in abatement has been filed, and while it is pending, any other defence is made, such as a demurrer, motion to dismiss, plea in bar, or answer, the plea in abatement will be deemed to be waived, and will be treated as abandoned, under the general practice, but not in this State.

Pleas in abatement are not favored by the Courts, because they do not go to the merits of the case; and no latitude in practice is extended to them. They must always be filed in the right time, in the right form, and with the right verification; they are strictly construed and strictly dealt with, and intendments in their favor are not allowed to supply defects. A party, who relies on a technicality to defeat an equity, must not present an untechnical techni-eality, for a Court of Justice will not aid or favor him in his efforts to defeat justice. Nevertheless, the Court will give him the full benefit of the law, and will not violate its own rule of regarding substance rather than form. If, therefore, a plea in abatement is good in substance, the Court will not overrule it, merely because it is bad in form, but will allow the form to be amended.

§ 254. Frame and Form of Pleas in Abatement.—An affirmative plea in abatement must contain a succinct statement of the facts relied on to abate the suit; and the forms given in the Code, being models of brevity and certainty, can be safely followed in Chancery pleading. A negative plea in abatement merely denies the jurisdictional allegations of the bill. The forms of the commencement and conclusion of pleas in abatement and in bar are substantially the same.

pleas in abatement with as much force as to any other pleading. Code, §§ 2363-2371. See Wrompfel-

No reason occurs why a plea in abatement should be disfavored by Courts. Surely, a Court does not want to exercise an unlawful jurisdiction, and all a plea in abatement undertakes to do is to show the Court that it has no lawful jurisdiction in the case; and this showing a defendant has the right to make,
and when made the Court should impartially consider it. The plea is no impeachment of the integ-rety of the Chancellor, but the mere assertion of a legal right, one that it is the duty of a Solicitor to assert when the facts justify. The Act of 1897, ch. 121, gives this plea a standing in Court equal to any other defense.

ARTICLE V.

PLEAS IN ABATEMENT IN ATTACHMENT SUITS.

§ 255. When a Plea in Abatement Should be Supported by an Answer. When an attachment bill charges a fraudulent transfer of property, both as a ground of equitable relief and as a ground for an attachment of property, and alleges particulars of the fraud charged, a plea in abatement denying the alleged fraudulent transfer should be supported by answer denying the specifications of fraudulent conduct, when the defendant is called on to answer unto them on oath; because complainant is entitled to the discovery he seeks in aid of his charge of fraud. The bill in such a case combines (1) a pleading alleging indebtedness, (2) an affidavit of fraudulent transfer and (3) a call upon the defendant for a discovery.

But when an attachment bill charges a single fraudulent disposition of property, both as a ground of attachment and as a ground of equitable relief, without averring any matters of evidence in support of the charge of fraud, and the defendant by plea in abatement denies the fraudulent transfer, no answer in support of such plea is necessary: 1st, because there is no discovery to be made in the answer; and 2d, because all the answer could do would be to deny the fraudulent transfer, and that had already been done by the plea in abatement. Hence, an answer under these circumstances would overrule the plea, under the old practice, but not under the present practice.

A plea in abatement need not be supported by an answer when the defendant’s oath to his answer is waived, for that is a waiver of any discovery.

§ 256. Pleas in Abatement in Attachment Suits Generally Considered.—Proceedings in Court by attachment of property are purely statutory. Attachments are of two kinds, original and ancillary; but, while both are obtained and executed in the same way, and both alike impound the defendant’s estate, their objects are different. The primary object of the original writ is to aid in compelling the defendant to appear in Court and defend the suit wherein the writ issued; and the secondary object is impound enough of his property to secure the debt sued for; while the only object of the ancillary writ is the seizure of the defendant’s property as security for the complainant’s demand, the defendant being brought into Court by service of subpoena.

All attachment suits, therefore, have a two-fold object, (1) a decree for the debt of demand claimed, and (2) the seizure, at the beginning of the suit, of enough of the defendant’s property to satisfy the decree when obtained.

See Article on Pleas supported by an answer, post, §§ 341-349, where forms are given, which are good for pleas in abatement.

46 Seifried v. People’s Bank, 1 Bax., 200; Pique v. Young, 1 Pick., 263. An answer in support of a plea is no part of the defense. The defense is contained in the plea; the answer is the discovery the complainant has called for. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 129; 1Dan. Ch. Pr., 624. The answer in such a case, must expressly show that it is in support of the plea. If the oath to the answer is waived, the plea need not be supported by an answer. Cheatham v. Pearce, 5 Pick., 668.

48 Acts of 1897, ch. 121; see, post, §§ 260-261.

49 Cheatham v. Pearce & Ryan, 5 Pick., 668.

50 An original attachment suit has a third object: to compel the appearance of defendant by the seizure of his property.
§ 257. PLEAS IN ABATEMENT IN ATTACHMENT SUITS.

So, an attachment bill has a twofold nature: it is (1) a pleading setting forth a cause of action, and (2) an affidavit of some statutory ground or grounds for the preliminary seizure of the defendant's property to satisfy the anticipated recovery.

As a result of this twofold attack upon him the defendant has a twofold defense: he has a defense to make to the bill as a pleading, and another defence to the bill as an affidavit. His defense to the bill as a pleading is made by demurrer, plea in bar, or answer; and his defense to the bill as an affidavit is made by a plea in abatement; or, in some cases, by a motion to dismiss.

§ 257. Objects of Pleas in Abatement in Attachment Suits.—The objects of the bill in all attachment suits are: (1) to obtaining a decree for the demand sued on, and (2) to impound enough property to satisfy it; and in case of an original attachment suit, (3) to compel the appearance of the defendant.

The object of a plea in abatement to the attachment whether original or ancillary, is to abate the writ, and discharge the levy made under it, thereby restoring the possession and title of the property to the defendant. And, in case of an original attachment, the abatement of the writ also abates the suit, for the suit being bottomed on the writ falls with the writ.⁵¹

And when the attachment is abated, and the levy thereunder discharged, any transfer of, or lien on, the attached property obstructed by the levy becomes operative as though such levy had never been made.

§ 258. Pleas in Abatement Not Overruled by Defences on the Merits.—Pleas in abatement in attachment suits differ so materially from such pleas in ordinary Equity pleading that considerable discrimination is necessary to avoid confusion and error. In ordinary Equity pleading the defendant is brought before the Court by subpoena, served upon his person; but in an original attachment suit he is brought before the Court by a seizure of his property, and notice of that fact, and of the suit, given him by publication. So, in an attachment suit the defendant may have two very different defenses, one to the merits of the suit, and another to the merits of the attachment; and may wish to set them both up by pleading in abatement to the attachment, and by demurring, pleading in bar, or answering, to the bill. But inasmuch as under the general rules of Equity pleading, a demurrer, plea, or answer, overrules a plea in abatement to the bill, it was once thought that they would, also, overrule a plea in abatement to the writ of attachment, whether such writ was original or ancillary,⁵² not considering the great difference between pleas in abatement to the bill in ordinary Equity pleading and pleas in abatement to the attachment under our Code pleading.

It is, however, now settled, after much controversy and contrariety of decisions, that a defendant may, at the same time, plead in abatement to the attachment, whether original or ancillary, and demur, plead in bar, or answer to the bill, and that there is no inconsistency in the two simultaneous defenses;⁵³ and the Legislature has recently confirmed this adjudication by enacting that a defendant can plead in abatement, and plead or answer to the merits at the same time, and that his plea in bar or answer is no waiver of his plea in abatement.⁵⁴

In case of either an original or an ancillary attachment, the defense to the attachment may fail, and the defense to the bill may succeed, or vice versa. The defendant is often benefitted by defeating the attachment even when he fails to defeat the bill on the merits, because, when the attachment is defeated, the lien

⁵¹ Sublata fundamenta cadit opus. (When the foundation is removed what is built upon it tumbles down.)
⁵² An original attachment becomes ancillary whenever a subpoena is served on the defendant. Templeton v. Mason, 23 Pick., 625; or whenever the defendant enters his appearance.
⁵³ Bank v. Foster, 6 Pick., 735. When a defendant in an original attachment both pleads in abatement and answers, the attachment thereby becomes ancillary. Templeton v. Mason, 23 Pick., 625.
⁵⁴ Acts of 1877, Ch. 121. is discharged ab initio, and any intervening sale or lien becomes operative and valid.

§ 259. Forms of Pleas in Abatement in Attachment Suits.—There is no technical difficulty in drawing pleas in abatement in attachment suits. The attachment writ is grounded on the causes of attachment alleged in the bill, and the plea in abatement merely denies each and all of the causes alleged.

William Boon.

The defendant, William Boon, for the plea in abatement to the original and ancillary writs of attachment in this cause says, That he had not fraudulently disposed of his property, or of any part thereof, nor was he about fraudulently to dispose of his property or any part thereof, at the time of the issuance of such writs or either of them, or at any other time before or since that time, as in and by the bill of complaint is most falsely and erroneously alleged.

ARTICLE VI.

PROCEEDINGS UPON A PLEA IN ABATEMENT.

§ 260. When a Plea in Abatement must be Filed under General Equity Practice.

§ 261. When a Plea in Abatement may be Filed and Heard under the Tennesse Practice.

§ 260. When a Plea in Abatement must be Filed under General Equity Practice.—Inasmuch as a plea in abatement undertakes to dispute the right of the Court, to take any step in the suit, the Court requires the plea to be filed before any step is taken. If a defendant intends to dispute the jurisdiction of the Court, on any ground, common reason requires that he should do so, at the threshold of the litigation; and the practice of the Court accordingly is, that he must file his plea in abatement before making any other sort of defence whatsoever. And not only must he file his plea in abatement, before either moving to dismiss, or demurring, or pleading in bar, or answering, but he must have his plea finally disposed of, before making any other sort of defence; for if, after 57 This plea was held good in Boon vs. Rahl, 1 Heisk., 12.

58 The proceedings upon a plea in abatement are substantially the same as proceedings upon a plea in bar; and, to save repetition, reference is made to the Article on that subject in the Chapter on Pleas in Bar, post.

filing a plea in abatement, he moves to dismiss, or demurs, or pleads in bar, or answers, such a step is deemed an abandonment of his plea in abatement, and he will not be allowed to return to it. The Court will not, ordinarily, allow a plea in abatement to be filed, after a pro confesso has been set aside.59

The party who contests the right of the Court to take jurisdiction, because of some fatal irregularity in the issuance or service of process, or because of the locality of his residence, or of the subject-matter, must do no act that recognizes or acquiesces in that jurisdiction. He must dispute the jurisdiction, (1) in the right way, (2) at the right time, and (3) in the right form. (1) The right way is, by a plea in abatement. (2) The right time is, at the appearance term, and before any other defence is made, or any leave is asked or obtained in reference to any other defence. (3) The right form is a plea containing the requisite substance, and a sufficient verification.

But under the Act of 1897, a plea in abatement and a plea in bar, or an answer, may be filed at the same time; and the filing of a plea in bar or an answer will not overrule a plea in abatement.

§ 261. When a Plea in Abatement May be Filed and Heard Under the Tennessee Practice.—Down to the passage of the Act of 1897,60 there was great contention at the bar, and no little difference of opinion on the bench,61 (1) as to when a plea in abatement might be filed, (2) as to the effect of filing a plea in bar or an answer on a plea in abatement, and (3), as to the effect of a decision against a plea in abatement upon an issue of fact; and these contentions between Solicitors and differing opinions among Chancellors were greatly increased and aggravated by the impossible endeavors to reconcile pleas in abatement in attachment cases with pleas in abatement in ordinary Equity pleading, complicated as the former pleas were by pleas in abatement to the subpoena, a plea utterly unknown to Equity pleading, and injected into our Chancery pleading by the ill-considered act of the Courts making the statutes in reference to grounds for pleas in abatement in the Circuit Courts applicable to the Chancery Courts.

The Act of 1877 changes all this, and not only makes a plea in abatement equal in favor with a plea in bar or an answer, but in some respects makes it the most favored, thereby reversing all former rules of pleading, for the Act not only allows a plea in abatement to be filed along with an answer, thitherto the most favored of all pleadings by a defendant, but provides that if at the trial the plea in abatement is found true the Court is bound to sustain it and dismiss the bill, even though the answer fail to set up a good defence, or, setting up a good defence, is proved to be false and the bill proved to be true; the result being that a plea in abatement, if found to be true, overrules the answer.62

By the Act of 1897, the defendant may plead over to the merits of the bill after judgment against his plea in abatement rendered either upon motion to strike out, or upon argument as to its sufficiency, or upon demurrer, or upon an issue of fact, as to its merits.63 In other words, no act of the defendant in unsuccessfully filing or relying upon a plea in abatement, and no adverse action of the Court in reference to the sufficiency or truthfulness of such plea, will debar him from making any defence to the merits he could have made if no plea in abatement had ever been filed by him.

But the statute goes further, and authorizes the defendant to plead in abatement, and, at the same time, to plead in bar to the merits or to answer to 60 Acts of 1897, ch. 121.

62 Query: suppose the answer confesses the debt, under the Act of 1897 would the defendant be entitled to have the bill dismissed if his plea in abatement should be found true on trial?
merits; and, in such plea in bar or answer, to rely on any defenses he might have made had no plea in abatement been interposed.\textsuperscript{64}

The act of the defendant in filing a plea in bar, or an answer, after pleading in abatement, is not to be deemed a waiver of his plea in abatement, but both defenses shall stand, and the issues of fact raised by both shall be heard at the same time.\textsuperscript{65} and if the plea in abatement is found to be true, the suit will be abated and the bill dismissed, even though complainant may be entitled to a decree on the merits;\textsuperscript{66} but if, at the hearing, the plea in abatement is found to be false, the Court will then adjudicate the case upon the merits in favor of the complainant or defendant as Equity may require.\textsuperscript{67}

Where a defendant unsuccessfully relies upon a plea in abatement, the issue of fact being found against him, and he fails to plead over, or apply for leave to plead over, a pro confesso can be entered against him, and then a final decree on the pro confesso.\textsuperscript{68}

In case of either an original or an ancillary attachment, the defendant, without the aid of the statute, may plead in abatement to it, and at the same time answer the bill on the merits.\textsuperscript{69}

\textsection{262. Setting a Plea Down for Argument.}—The first question for the complainant to consider when a plea is filed, whether it be a plea in abatement or in bar, is its sufficiency. If he deem the plea insufficient, either in form or substance, he must set it down with the Clerk to be argued.\textsuperscript{70} He may do this by an entry upon the minutes of the Court, if in session; or upon the rule docket, or by filing with the Clerk a paper containing the substance of such entry, if Court be not in session. The following is a

The complainant says the defendant’s plea in abatement is insufficient.

1st. Because it is not properly verified.\textsuperscript{71}

2d. Because, if true, it presents no ground for abating the suit.

Wherefore he sets said plea down for argument.

\textbf{Edward T. Sanford,} Solicitor.

The plea must be set for argument at the first term after it is filed;\textsuperscript{72} and, if on argument, it is judged to be sufficient, the complainant must take issue upon it, instanter; if, however, the plea is overruled, the defendant must answer the bill by the next rule day,\textsuperscript{73} which will be the next day if the term continues; he may, however, obtain further time\textsuperscript{74} from the Court, on application.

\textsection{263. Taking Issue upon a Plea.}—Issue is taken upon a plea,\textsuperscript{75} whether it be a plea in abatement or in bar, by filing the statutory replication thereto, as follows:

64 This further time should not extend beyond the adjournment of the term. If a defendant delays a suit, by an insufficient dilatory pleading, he should not reap the reward of a delay, which is often all he expects; he should be required to answer next day, or if given more time, he should be given it only on payment of the costs of the cause. This ruling is within the spirit of Code, § 2938, authorizing the costs of the cause to be adjudged, for filing a frivolous demurrer.

§ 264. PROCEEDINGS UPON A PLEA IN ABATEMENT.

REPLICATION OF A PLEA.

John Doe, vs. Richard Roe.

The complainant joins issue on the plea filed in this cause.76

EDWARD T. SANFORD, Solicitor.

This replication may be written immediately under the plea, on the same paper; but whether so written, or put in on a separate sheet of paper, it should be duly filed by the Clerk.

A negative plea makes an issue without a replication,77 and the practice is to treat an affirmative plea as at issue without a replication after complainant has had twenty days' notice of its filing, and has taken no action thereon.78

If the complainant has ground for a special replication, he may file the same, in addition to his general replication, on obtaining leave of the Court.79 A replication to a plea should be filed, or the plea set down for argument as to its sufficiency, before the lapse of twenty days after the filing of the plea.

§ 264.—Effect of the Decision of a Plea in Abatement.—If a plea in abatement is good, both in form and substance, the complainant must dismiss his bill, or take issue upon the plea, and have the issue tried upon the evidence. If, on the trial of this issue of fact, the plea be found true, the Court will order the bill to be dismissed.80 Such dismissal, however, cannot be pleaded in bar of a second suit on the same cause of action. If the plea in abatement is overruled upon argument,81 the order of the Court is, that the defendant pay the statutory costs82 and answer the bill.83 The following is the form of an ORDER RULING ON A PLEA IN ABATEMENT.

John Doe, vs. Richard Roe.

The plea in abatement filed by the defendant, having been set down by the complainant to be argued, and having been read, and argument as to its sufficiency having been heard, the Court is of the opinion that the plea is sufficient. It is, therefore, ordered by the Court that the complainant reply to said plea within ten days [If the plea be found insufficient, omit all after the word “opinion,” and add, in lieu:] that the plea is insufficient in law. It is, therefore, ordered by the Court that said plea be overruled and disallowed, and that the defendant answer the bill within two days,84 and that he pay the statutory costs, for which an execution will issue.

If the defendant wished to rely on his plea in abatement to the jurisdiction, in the Supreme Court, under the old practice he had to decline to answer the bill and make no further defense, for any further defense was deemed an

79 Code, §§ 2931-2932.
80 This rule is not to be understood as applying to pleas to ancillary attachments; but it applies to pleas to all other writs.
81 It is easily seen, how, on principle, the sustaining of a plea in abatement will result in the dismissal of a suit at law, because a suit at law is commenced by summons, Code, § 2813; and if the summons becomes null for any reason, the suit grounded on it must become null also; for, subule fundamento cadit opus. But a suit in Chancery is begun by the filing of the bill, Code, § 4312, and not by the issuance of the subpoena; and it is hard to see how abating the subpoena will abate the bill, in those cases where the plea is founded on an illegal issuance or service of process, to say nothing of the injustice of punishing the complainant for a wrong done by a Clerk, or Sheriff, himself, an officer of the law. Nevertheless, it has been adjudged that such is the effect. Martin v. Ramsey, 7 Hum., 260. The Code, treating of pleas in abatement to the process, evidently refers to suits at law, using the term, “actions;” Code, § 2502; while the pleas in abatement under the head of Chancery practice are pleas to the local and personal jurisdiction of the Court; Code, §§ 4309: 4384-4385; and not pleas to the process. Parker v. Porter, 4 Yerg., 81. Pleas in abatement to the process are unknown in equity pleading, and the practice of abating suits in equity, by plea in abatement to the process, is an anomaly; but it may be law. Baker v. Compton, 2 Head, 471. But, see Grove v. Campbell, 9 Yerg., 7; Wilson v. Scruggs, 7 Lea, 639; Rattelle v. Youngstown R. M. Co., 16 Lea, 364; Rogers v. O’Mary, 11 Pick., 514.

abandonment of his plea; but under the present practice he has the right to defend on the merits after his plea has been found untrue on the facts.

Where, however, the issue tendered by a plea in abatement, is tried on its merits, upon an issue of fact, if the plea be found false, the complainant, prior to the Act of 1897, was entitled to an order taking his bill for confessed, and a final decree thereon; but now the defendant has the right to plead over to the merits, or answer. The entry on the minutes of the Court, in case of a trial on an issue of fact, may be as follows:

DEGREE ON THE HEARING OF A PLEA IN ABATEMENT.

John Doe, vs. Richard Roe.

This cause came on to be heard, this 18th day of April, 1891, before the Chancellor [or, before the jury heretofore demanded in the cause, to-wit: William Brown and—naming them all—who were duly sworn and to try and determine the issue made] on the plea in abatement, and the proof having been read [or, heard, if tried by a jury and argument of counsel heard, the Chancellor [or jury] finds the issue in favor of the defendant.

It is, therefore, decreed by the Court that the bill be dismissed, and that complainant and Frank Friend, his prosecution surety, pay all the costs of the cause, for which let execution issue.

[If the issue be found in favor of the complainant, insert after the words, "in favor of," in the above form, the following:] the complainant. And the defendant not applying for leave to plead over or answer, it is, therefore, decreed by the Court that the bill of complaint be taken for confessed. And, thereupon, this cause coming on to be further and finally heard upon the bill, the order pro confess, and the whole record, upon consideration thereof, the Court orders and decrees [then give the decree complainant is entitled to, on a pro confess.]

If the defendant has pleaded in abatement and answered at the same time, as he has the right to do under the Act of 1897, and the cause is heard at the same time upon the issues made by the bill and plea, and by the bill and answer, then this decree will be modified, as follows:

[If the issue on the plea be found in favor of the complainant, insert after the words "in favor of" in the first paragraph of this decree the following:] the complainant.

And thereupon, this cause coming on to be further [and finally, if it be a final decree] heard upon the bill and the answer of the defendant thereto, and the evidence, and whole record in the cause, and argument of counsel, the Court is of opinion that complainant is entitled to the relief by him specially prayed in his bill.

It is, therefore, decreed by the Court that complainant have and recover of the defendant the sum of seven thousand, six hundred and fifty-four dollars and thirty-two cents ($7,654.32) and all the costs of the cause, for which an execution will issue.

[If any property has been attached, omit all of the decree after the words "costs in the cause," and recite that property has been attached, and order its sale as shown in § 887, post. If complainant has a lien upon any property, let the decree so recite and declare the lien, and then order the property to be sold as shown in § 567, post.]

The Act of 1897 provides that a plea in abatement and an answer may be filed at the same time, and when so filed shall be heard at the same time, in which case the decree may be as follows:

The Code, § 4393, says that if a plea be found false, the complainant shall have the same advantages as if it had been so found by verdict at common law; and at law, this advantage is equivalent to a judgment by default. Bacon v. Parker, 2 Tenn. (Overt.) 55; Wilson v. Scruggs, 7 Lea, 635; Simpson v. Railway Co., 5 Pick., 304.

This last case expressly overrules Battelle v. Youngstown R. M. Co., 16 Lea, 355.

89 The defendant can waive the benefit of the Act of 1897; and, if he fail to plead over or answer at once, or to apply for leave so to do, when his plea in abatement is overruled on an issue of fact, he will be deemed to have waived such benefit, and a pro confess and final decree can at once be pronounced against him, as was the practice prior to the Act of 1897. DEGREE ON BILL, PLEA IN ABATEMENT, ANSWER AND PROOF.

John Doe, et al.,
vs.
Richard Roe.

In Chancery Court at Dandridge.

This cause coming on this day to be heard upon the bill, the plea in abatement and the answer, and the proof having been read as to all the issues and argument of counsel heard; the Court finds the issue on the plea in abatement in favor of the defendant. It is, therefore, decreed that the bill be dismissed, and that complainant and Frank Friend, his prosecution surety, pay all the costs of the cause, for which an execution is awarded.

If the issue on the plea in abatement is found against the defendant, then omit all in the above decree after the words "in favor of" and insert, in lieu, the following:

the complainant. And the Court being of opinion that the complainant is entitled to the relief by him prayed, it is, therefore, ordered, adjudged and decreed, that [For forms of decrees, see post, §§ 566-568.]

§ 265. Effect of the Trial of a Plea in Abatement in Attachment Suits.—If the plea in abatement is to an original attachment and the defendant is not before the Court by service of subpoena, or by voluntary appearance outside of his pleadings, and the issue on the plea be found in his favor, the bill will be dismissed, as shown in the preceding decree; but if the defendant is before the Court, and has answered as well as pleaded in abatement, if his plea be found in his favor, and the issues on bill and answer be found in favor of the complainant, then the attachment will be discharged, a decree rendered in complainant's favor on the bill and answer, and an execution awarded for the amount of the decree. In such case, in the preceding decree omit all after the words, "in favor of the defendant," an insert, in lieu, the following:

It is, therefore, decreed that the writ of attachment be quashed and the levy thereunder released and discharged, and the costs incident to the attachment will be paid by the complainant.

The Court, also, finds the issues raised by the bill and answer in favor of the complainant; and it is, therefore, ordered, adjudged and decreed that [For forms of decrees, see post, §§ 566-568.]

If the issues on the plea in abatement to the original attachment be found in favor of the complainant, and the issues on the bill and answer be, also, found in favor of the complainant, then omit all after the words "in favor of" in the foregoing decree, and insert, in lieu, the following:

the complainant.

It is, therefore, decreed by the Court that the plea in abatement be overruled and disallowed.

And the Court, being of opinion that the complainant is entitled to the relief by him prayed, it is, therefore, ordered and decreed that [Here insert decree as prayed, and order the property attached to be sold. For forms, see post, § 887.]

If the Court on the hearing should decide against both the plea in abatement and the bill, then the bill will, of course, be dismissed, and the costs of the suit apportioned accordingly, adjudging the costs incident to the plea against the defendant, and the balance of the costs against the complainant, unless Equity otherwise require.
CHAPTER XIV.
MOBIONS TO DISMISS BILLS.

§ 266. Office of a Motion to Dismiss.—If there appear in the record, some fatal irregularity in the bringing or prosecution of the suit, or, if some fatal defect be manifest on the face of the bill, the Code provides that the bill may be dismissed on motion of the defendant, because of such irregularity, or defect. The object of the motion is to summarily end the suit; and, as a consequence, the ground of the motion must be both manifest and conclusive. If, by amendment, the irregularity can be remedied, or, if the defect or omission can be supplied, it is the duty of the Court to allow it to be done; for Courts are instituted to enable complainants to have a hearing on the merits. If, however, it is manifest from the positive averments of the bill, or from other matters affirmatively appearing, that the defect is fatal, and cannot be remedied, the bill will be dismissed. The statute provides this summary method by motion because, in such a case, the complainant having no standing in the Court, the sooner the suit is ended the smaller the costs he will be obliged to pay.

§ 267. Grounds of Motions to Dismiss.—A bill may be dismissed on motion of the defendant:

1. For want of equity on its face.
2. Because unknown to the forms of the Court.
3. If it appear on the face of the bill, that the Court has no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.
4. For want of any of the prerequisites to the issuance of the writ.
5. For mis-joinder or non-joinder of parties, where the fact appears on the face of the bill.
6. For multifariousness.
7. For such other grounds as may be specially declared sufficient by the Code. Some of these other grounds are: (1) champerty; (2) the omission of the allegation, in an insolvent estate bill, that the estate amounts to one thousand dollars in value; and (3) a failure to speed a cause according to a rule. All of these grounds will be more fully considered in the following sections. The 1st, 3d, 5th, and 6th causes of dismissal, are in the nature of demurrers are tenus, and may be raised by demurrer, but the demurrers for such causes must be special enough, not to fall under the ban against general demurrers. A bill cannot be summarily dismissed on motion, except for the causes above enumerated. By the Code, § 4388, the 1st, 5th and 6th causes of dismissal, may also be raised by demurrer, and by §§ 4309, 4319, it is enacted that the jurisdiction of the Court may, also, be resisted by demurrer.

1 Code, §§ 4387; 2863-2869.
2 Code, § 4386.
3 Code, § 1783.
4 Code, § 2365; see, as to amounts, Code, § 2362; and Steel v. Maness, 15 Lea, 143.
5 Code, § 4390.
6 Code, § 4388.
§ 268. Motion to Dismiss for Want of Equity on the Face of the Bill. Whenever (1) the supposed rule of law or Equity, on which the bill is founded, manifestly does not exist; or (2) if existing, whenever the facts alleged manifestly fail to bring the case within such rule; or (3) if within the rule, whenever the facts alleged clearly show that the case falls within some manifest exception to the rule; in each of these three cases, there is a want of equity on the face of the bill, and a motion to dismiss the bill for that cause will be sustained.

The Court will not, however, sustain the motion, unless the cause thereof be not only good, but manifestly good; by which is meant, that the Court will not, on such a summary motion, search the bill for fatal defects, nor weigh in delicate balances any nice points of law urged against the bill. Such matters must be brought forward by demurrer. If there be any ground for reasonable debate, as to whether there is a want of Equity, the motion to dismiss will be overruled. Indeed, it may be said generally, that the want of Equity, to justify a motion to dismiss on that ground, must be so manifest and so complete, that the Chancellor would not be reversed, if he should dismiss the bill on his own motion. 8

If there be any Equity, at all, on the face of the bill, even if it be defectively stated, the motion to dismiss cannot prevail; 9 and, on such a motion, every reasonable presumption is to be made in favor of, rather than against, the bill. 10

§ 269. Motion to Dismiss, Because the Form of the Bill is Unknown.—While the Chancery Court looks to substance and not to form, yet form is necessary to substance. If the essential formalities of a bill were not adhered to, it would widen into such a loose indefiniteness of style and statement, and into such an utter abandonment of method and meaning, that it would be impossible oftentimes to define its substance amid the chaotic conglomeration of its multiform informalities. Pleadings must have some form; 11 and no party has a right to substitute his own form of a bill, for the form sanctioned by the Court. In Chancery, no form is required not necessary to a clear, orderly, and respectful presentation of complainant’s grounds of suit; and common politeness and good manners both require that this necessary and simple form be substantially adhered to. The dignity of the Court, and the due, decent, orderly and accurate administration of justice, require that the ordinary form of a bill should not be substantially departed from.

A bill will, therefore, be dismissed if it be unknown to the forms of the Court. 12 If a bill (1) should be addressed not to the Chancellor but to the Clerk, or should have no address; or (2) if it should contain no prayer; or (3) if it should be in rhyme; or (4) if it should fail to name the parties defendant; or (5) if it should be in a foreign language, or so badly written as to be illegible; or (6) if it should be unintelligible; or (7) if it failed to give the names and residences of the parties; in any and all such cases, the bill would probably be deemed unknown to the forms of the Court, and would be dismissed on motion.

8 Quinn v. Leake, 1 Tenn. Ch., 70; Henderson v. Mathews, 1 Lea, 34; Earles v. Earles, 3 Head, 367; Maye v. Biggs, 3 Head, 19; Thompson v. Paul, 8 Hum., 117; Merriman v. Norman, 9 Heisk., 269; Knight v. Atkinson, 2 Tenn. Ch., 384; Anderson v. Mullenix, 5 Lea, 287.

9 Anderson v. Mullenix, 5 Lea, 287; Randall v. Payne, 1 Tenn. Ch., 137; Colville v. Colville, 9 Hum, 534; Thompson v. Paul, 8 Hum., 114; Henderson v. Mathews, 1 Lea, 34.

10 Kerr v. Kerr, 3 Lea, 227; Anderson v. Mullenix, 5 Lea, 287. Ut res magis velat quam perTai. This maxim applies to bills when questioned by a motion to dismiss, or by a demurrer. See §§ 63; 317, note 11. Ferta dat esse. The want of form constitutes a just objection to the proceedings in every Court of Justice; for to reject all form would be destructive to the law as a science, and would introduce great uncertainty and perplexity in the administration of justice. Every irregularity of this sort is fraught with inconvenience, and generally tends to delays and doubts. And it has been well remarked, that infinite mischief has been produced by the faculty of Courts of Justice in overlooking errors in form. It encourages carelessness; and places ignorance too much on a footing with knowledge. To which it may be added, that it often exposes the parties themselves to no small hardships, by embarrassing them at every step in the progress of the cause; and involving the merits of the cause in superfluous details and inartificial allegations, at once loose, obscure, and misleading. Sto. Eq. Pl., § 454. The disregard of form is a glory in a Court, but a shame in a litigant. Form is the scabbard of the sword of justice that keeps it bright and keen.

12 Code, § 4386.
But, if a bill contains allegations sufficient, if true, to entitle the complainant to some relief, the fact that the bill is inartificially drawn, or is misnamed by the draftsman, will not justify a motion to dismiss. In such a case, the Court judges the bill, not by its name, or want of technical precision in its frame and averments, but by its substance, and the matters of Equity it sets forth. While the proper name of the bill will not atone for defects of substance, yet proper substance will atone for a defect in the name. The name of a bill is mere matter of form, and is absolutely immaterial; and, whatever be its name, the Court will look at its allegations and prayers, and judge the bill thereby, and not by the particular name it may happen to bear. The rights of the parties will be determined exclusively by the matters of Equity alleged, and not by the appellation given the bill by the complainant’s solicitor. This is especially true of bills not strictly original, some of which have highly technical names, and others have various objects and offices. All such bills are judged by their averments, and prayers for relief, and not by their names.

What is meant by the maxim, that Equity regards the substance and not the forms of things, is that if there be sufficient substance in the pleading, the Court will not disregard that substance merely because of the want of some technical formality.

§ 270. Motion to Dismiss, for Want of Jurisdiction of the Defendant.—It has already been shown that the Court will not entertain a bill, when it has no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, provided objection is properly made on that ground. This want of jurisdiction, when not apparent on the face of the bill, must be made to appear by plea in abatement; but, when apparent, a motion to dismiss, or a demurrer, will lie to the bill. The local jurisdiction of the person of the defendant is a matter oftentimes of great importance to him; and when that jurisdiction is wanting, when the bill is not filed in the proper county, the defendant may object to the jurisdiction over him. This objection frequently appears on the face of the bill, because the Code requires the county residence of the parties to be stated in the bill; and when the objection does so appear, the defendant may move that the bill as to him be dismissed.

§ 271. Motion to Dismiss, for Want of a Prerequisite to the Writ. —Before a subpæna can issue, or publication be made, the complainant must give the required cost bond, or file the required pauper oath in lieu thereof. Such bond or oath is a prerequisite to the writ, and for the want of such a prerequisite the bill will be dismissed on motion. 20

So, in an original attachment suit, a sworn bill containing a good ground for an attachment, and an attachment bond, or a pauper oath in lieu thereof, are prerequisites to the issuance of the writ of attachment, and for the want of either of such prerequisites, a motion to dismiss the bill will lie. 21

The motion to dismiss may, also, be made in a case of a fatal defect in any of said prerequisites. The defects in the form of attachment bonds and affidavits may, however, be amended; and where no attachment bond, at all, has been given, or one fatally defective, a sufficient bond may be given, even after a motion to dismiss for want of a sufficient bond. 22

A bill filed on Sunday, without the prerequisite affidavit, may be dismissed on motion. 23

§ 272. Motion to Dismiss, on Other Grounds.—A bill may, also, be dismissed: (1) for mis-joinder or non-joinder of parties, where the fact appears on the face of the bill; (2) for multifariousness; 24 (3) for want of the allegation, in a bill to administer an insolvent estate, that the value of the estate equals one thousand dollars; 25 (4) for want of a prosecution bond, when the complainant’s oath of poverty is shown to be untrue, or his cause of action frivolous or malicious, or is one that cannot be paupered; 26 (5) for failure of complainant to comply with a rule to speed the cause; 27 (6) for failure of a non-resident complainant to answer interrogatories, by a given day, on a peremptory order so to do; 28 (7) for champerty or maintenance; 29 (8) for uncleanness of complainant’s hands; and (9) for want of jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit. 30 The last six grounds of dismissal may be relied on at any time before final decree, 31 the other three grounds must be taken advantage of in due season, or they will be waived.

A bill in Chancery cannot be ordinarily dismissed, on motion of the defendant, except for the causes enumerated in the statutes. 32 This does not, however, prevent a bill being dismissed by the complainant himself, either orally, in open Court, or in writing during vacation. 33

§ 273. When a Motion to Dismiss must be Made.—The different modes of defence have been heretofore stated, and the order in which they must be relied on. 33a It is too late to make a motion to dismiss because of some defect apparent on the face of the bill after demurrer, or plea in bar, or answer has been filed. The adoption of any one of these defences, is a waiver of the right to make a motion to dismiss. 34 The only mode of defence, that precedes a motion to dismiss, is a plea in abatement, a defence which seeks to end the suit by reason of some objection outside of the merits of the controversy, and outside whereas, its local jurisdiction may be resisted by plea in abatement, demurrer, or motion to dismiss. Code, § 4309; post, § 292. This construction harmonizes all the sections of the Code on the subject, and harmonizes the vast majority of the decisions of the Supreme Court in reference to demurrers to the jurisdiction. One distinguishing feature of our practice is, that when a party objects to any matter in Court, he must specially designate the ground of his objection, and put his finger on it, by way of identification. It has been held that a demurrer for want of equity, is a demurrer to the jurisdiction. Chessen v. Rodgers, 1 Heisk., 241; post, § 292; and so it cannot well be seen how a motion to dismiss for want of equity can deny the jurisdiction, unless the matter be absolutely beyond either legal or equitable cognizance.

of the body of the bill. All of the grounds of a motion to dismiss, except the one for want of Equity, also seek to end the suit without contesting the merits. It is a rule of Courts, that, after a defendant has taken issue with the complainant on any of the merits of the controversy, he will not be allowed to set up any defence that is based on some matter outside of the merits. A motion to dismiss, therefore, must be made before demurrer, plea in bar, or answer, or it will not be entertained, except in the cases hereinbefore referred to. 35

§ 274. How a Motion to Dismiss May be Defeated, or Avoided.—There are two ways to meet motions to dismiss: 1st, to show that the motion is not sustainable on the face of the record; and, if sustainable, 2d, to avoid the motion by supplying the defect. If no leave to supply the defect be necessary it should be supplied, if possible, before the motion to dismiss is argued; but if leave be necessary such leave should be applied for before or during the argument of the motion to dismiss.

The complainant may amend his bill, or supply the prerequisites of the writ, after a motion to dismiss has been made; and even after such a motion has been sustained. 36 In the latter case, however, the amendment must be made, or the prerequisite of the writ supplied, during the term at which the motion to dismiss was sustained; or at least, leave to amend, or to supply, must be obtained during such term, or within thirty days after the entry of dismissal, if the term is longer than thirty days.

MOTION TO DISMISS BILL ALLOWED, AND DISMISSAL SET ASIDE.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.

No. 618.

In this cause the defendants moved the Court to dismiss the bill for want of a prosecution bond or pauper oath in lieu, and, it appearing that no bond or oath has been filed, said motion is allowed, and the bill dismissed, at complainant's cost, and an execution will issue accordingly.

Thereupon, complainant tendered and filed a prosecution bond, and moved the Court to set aside and vacate the order dismissing his bill, which motion is allowed, and said order of dismissal is vacated and annulled, and the cause reinstated on the docket to be proceeded in. 37

ARTICLE I.

DEMURRERS GENERALLY CONSIDERED.

§ 275. The Theory of Bills.—Every bill presupposes some general rule of law or of Equity, whereby the Court addressed is authorized to grant to the complainant certain relief, on a certain state of facts, against the defendant; and on such supposition (1) alleges a state of facts intended to bring the complainant’s case within the purview of this general rule; and (2) prays for the specific relief the rule gives, when the state of facts it contemplates has been established. When, therefore, a bill in Equity is thoroughly analyzed, it will be found to contain: (1) a presupposed rule of law, or of Equity; (2) the right of the particular Court addressed, to enforce that rule; (3) that the bill contains the substance of the case, contemplated by the rule; (4) that complainant is entitled to the relief given by the rule; and (5) that the defendant is chargeable with that relief.¹

If (1) the rule of law or of Equity be such as complainant presupposes; and if (2) the Court addressed has jurisdiction to enforce that rule in the case made by the bill; and if (3) the case made by the bill is such as the rule contemplates; and if (4) the complainant is entitled under the rule to the special relief he prays for; and if (5) the defendant is the proper person to be held liable to complainant’s specific demands, then the bill is a good one, on its face: and all that the complainant needs, to entitle him to relief, is proof of the material facts alleged in his bill. In such a case, the defendant must contest the case on the facts by plea, or by answer.

§ 276. Office of a Demurrer.—But, as each of these five component² parts of a bill is essential to the maintenance of a bill, if any one of them is wanting, or materially defective, the complainant would be entitled to nothing, even should he prove the facts he alleges. There would, therefore, no benefit accrue to him from such proof: and it would be a useless waste of time, trouble and money, to make such proof. In such a case, the Court allows the defendant to admit the truth of the bill, for the purpose of testing its sufficiency in law, by a pleading called a demurrer.\(^3\)

A demurrer, therefore, is a pleading which raises questions of law only, and only such questions as arise on the face of the bill, taking the bill as true; and the questions ordinarily raised on the face of the bill by a demurrer, are, that supposing the facts to be as alleged in the bill, (1) the general rule of law or of Equity, presupposed by the bill, does not in fact actually exist, or at least not to the extent and with the effect supposed; (2) but, if so, that the facts set forth in the bill are not such as the rule contemplates and provides a remedy for; (3) but, if so, that the bill shows other facts which draw the case within some exception to the rule of law or Equity supposed; (4) but, if not so, the Court in which the bill is filed, is without jurisdiction to enforce the rule; (5) but if not so, that the complainant is not entitled to bring the suit; (6) but, if so, that the defendant is not liable to the particular relief prayed.\(^4\)

And these various grounds of demurrer may be further summarized as follows:

1. Complainant mistakes the general rule of law; or,
2. He mistakes the force of the facts; or,
3. He mistakes the exceptions to the general rule of law; or,
4. He mistakes the forum; or,
5. He mistakes his rights under the law and facts; or,
6. He mistakes the defendant’s liability.

§ 277. Grounds of a Demurrer Analyzed.—Taking into consideration the rules heretofore given, as to the various relations between the parties, and the duties arising from those relations, and considering demurrers in connection with those rules,\(^5\) a demurrer to a bill should present one or more of the following objections:

1. The supposed law of the relation does not, in fact, exist; or, at least, does not exist for the purpose, or to the extent, assumed by the bill.\(^6\)
2. The facts alleged in the bill do not show the relation contemplated by the supposed law.\(^7\)
3. The facts alleged do not show any violation of the supposed law.\(^8\)
4. The relief prayed is not of the character or extent allowed by the supposed law.\(^9\)
5. The complainant shows in his bill some fact that puts his case within an exception to the supposed law.\(^10\)
6. The defendant is not liable to the specific relief prayed.\(^11\)
7. The Court addressed has no jurisdiction to enforce the supposed law in favor of the complainant and against the defendant, on the facts alleged, and to the extent prayed.\(^12\)

All of these seven grounds may be condensed into one: The complainant

\(^3\) The word demurrer comes, so Lord Coke has said, from the Latin word, demorari, to abide; and, therefore, he who demurs in law, is said to abide in law; moratur, or demoratur in lege, and will go no further. But the Court has decided whether the other party has shown sufficient matter, in point of law, to maintain his suit. Sto. Eq. Pl. § 441.

\(^4\) A bill must not only show that the complainant is entitled to, or interested in, the subject-matter of the litigation, and is clothed with such a character as entitles him to maintain the suit, and that the defendant is liable to the relief sought against him, or is, in some manner, interested in the dispute, and that there is such a privity between him and the complainant as gives the complainant a title to sue him, but it must, also, pray the Court to grant the proper relief suited to the case, as made by the bill; and if, for any reason, founded on the substance of the case, as stated in the bill, the complainant is not entitled to the relief he prays, either in the whole, or in part, the defendant may demur. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 325-326.

\(^6\) As when a bill is filed to enforce a verbal contract made by a married woman, to give a lien on land to secure money borrowed to pay for the land. Durant v. Davis, 10 Heisk., 522.

\(^7\) As when a bill for divorce from bed and board, and for alimony, is filed by a woman who shows in her bill that at the time she married the defendant she had a living husband.

\(^8\) As when a creditor files a bill to collect a debt shown not to be due. Carter v. Turner, 2 Head. 52.

\(^9\) As when a judgment creditor, upon a sulle bond return, files a bill to reach money in the debtor's pocket, and to have him compelled, by attachment, to pay the judgment out of such money. Webb v. Jones, 13 Lea, 200.

\(^10\) As when the bill shows that the suit is barred, or that there has been a former recovery, or any other defense in avoidance.

\(^11\) As when a vendeec seeks to have a specific performance of a sale of realty, admitted to be in parol.

\(^12\) As when a divorce bill shows on its face that the complainant is a non-resident.
makes out in his bill no such case as entitles him to the relief he prays against the defendant, in the Court addressed. This, however, would be in the nature of a general demurrer, and for that reason not allowable. The specific reason, or reasons, why the complainant is not entitled to the relief prayed must be clearly stated. The demurrant must, so to speak, put his finger on the defect in the bill, and show precisely wherein it is a defect. General and indefinite demurrers will not avail.

§ 278. Demurrers of Right, and by Allowance.—The foregoing are really all the substantial grounds of demurrer the defendants have the real right to rely on; but there are some others which the Court allows the defendants to set up, in the interests of good pleading and of a proper administration of justice, such as: 1, That the bill seeks to litigate only a part of a controversy; 2, That the complainant should be repelled, because his hands are unclean; 3, That all the persons necessary to a complete determination of the whole controversy, are not made parties; 4, That the complainant is guilty of laches; 5, That the bill is multifarious, it improperly confounding distinct grounds of suit; 6, That the bill contains repugnant causes of action; and 7, That there is another suit pending, for the same matter between the same parties. These grounds of demurrer being in the interest of good pleading, or of the proper administration of justice, and being for that reason allowed by the Court, are mere criticisms on the structure of the bill, or the conduct of the complainant; and, therefore, on sustaining such demurrers, the Court, on proper application, will, with two exceptions, grant complainant leave to amend his bill, or to otherwise obviate the objections raised by the demurrer, as he may be advised; whereas, when a demurrer, which is filed as a matter of right, is sustained, there is, generally, no ground for amendment, and the bill is dismissed. The two exceptions above mentioned are when the complainant has been guilty of iniquity, or of laches. Demurrers are allowed in these cases, not as a matter of right to the defendant, but because the Court, being a Court of Conscience, founded to redress unconscientious acts, will not assist a person whose own unconscientious conduct has aided in causing the wrong of which he complains, or whose laches has rendered it impossible for the Court to do him justice without great risk of doing the defendant injustice. No one has the right to call the powers of a Court of Equity into operation, unless his hands are clean and his feet are swift.

The reason demurrers of right usually end the suit when they are sustained, is that they either oust the Court of its jurisdiction, or show the want of substance in complainant’s claim for redress. Demurrers by allowance, on the other hand, do not question either the jurisdiction of the Court, or the substance of a complainant’s case. Demurrers of right show that, under the law, the defendant cannot be held liable in that suit, and in that Court. Demurrers by allowance submit to the Court the question, not whether the defendant is liable, but whether the Court ought, under the circumstances, to allow the complainant to proceed with his suit. Demurrers by allowance question the propriety of the suit, demurrers of right question its validity.

§ 279. Demurrers to the Discovery.—If the bill seeks a discovery, to that extent it is in the nature of an examination of the defendant, as a witness, in support of the complainant’s case. Hence, it inevitably follows that the defendant cannot be compelled to discover any matter he could not be called on to state as a witness; nor is the complainant entitled to any discovery not necessary to aid him in making out his own case. A bill for relief and discovery is both a pleading, and a series of interrogatories for the defendant to answer as a witness; and an answer to such a bill is both a pleading and a deposition.

§ 280. Demurrers not Applicable to Pleas, or to Answers.—Demurrers are inapplicable to pleas, or answers. If a plea be bad in substance, the course is not to demur to it, but to set it down for argument; and if then found bad, it is at once overruled. If an answer is insufficient, in its responses to the charges and statements in the bill, the objections are to be taken to it by exceptions filed. If it be in substance bad as a defence, and no further proofs are required by the complainant, the case can be set down for a hearing upon the bill and answer.\(^1\)

§ 281. Demurrers by Allowance Generally Considered.—As already shown,\(^1\) there are some grounds of demurrer which Courts allow, not because the demurrant has rights that the bill seeks to violate, nor because the complainant has no right to relief against the demurrant, but because the science of good pleading, or the proper administration of justice, is promoted by such demurrers. These grounds of demurrer are: 1, Because the bill is not for the whole matter; 2, Because there is a want of proper parties; 3, Because the bill is multifarious; 4, Because the complainant’s hands are not clean; 5, Because of the laches of the complainant; and 6, Because of the pendency of another suit, between the same parties, about the same matter.

It is manifest that none of the foregoing grounds of demurrer are based on any right of the defendant; and that their allowance is wholly a matter within the discretion of the Court. In each of the six foregoing cases, the defendant may be in the wrong, and liable to the relief prayed; but in the first three of the foregoing cases the Court refuses to proceed further, when a demurrer is interposed, unless and until the complainant conforms his bill to the requirements of good pleading; and in the last three of the foregoing six cases the Court will ordinarily, on demurrer, stay its hand because the complainant has estopped himself from asking the aid of a Court of Conscience.

\(^1\) A demurrer will lie to a defective plea in a Court of law, Code, § 2928; Caruth. Law Suit, 215. In Witt v. Ellis, 2 Cold., 38, a plea supported by an answer was demurred to. Such a practice is irregular, but as Courts of Chancery look to substance, and not to forms, such a demurrer will be treated as equivalent to a motion setting the plea down for argument as to its sufficiency. Klepper v. Powell, 6 Heisk., 503. For the same reason, a motion to strike out a plea will be treated as equivalent to setting it down for argument as insufficient. Brevard v. Summer, 2 Heisk., 97.

Setting a cause down for hearing on bill and answer is in the nature of a demurrer to the answer. 17 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 456; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 542, note. 1 Ante, § 278.
§ 282. Demurrers Because the Bill is Not for the Whole Matter.—A bill may be good as far as it goes, but it may not go to the full extent that complete justice may require; that is, it may seek to litigate a part of a matter only, leaving the balance open for further litigation. Of course, in such a case, the defendant would have no right to require the complainant to so shape his bill as to sue for the whole matter; but as Courts of Equity delight to do complete justice, and not by halves, and as they seek to prevent a multiplicity of suits, they allow a defendant, who has been sued as to a part only of given matter, to insist by demurrer that he shall be sued as to all, or as to none. And, in general, whenever it appears by the bill, that the object of the suit does not embrace all the relief, which the complainant is entitled to under the facts stated, the Court will allow a demurrer on that ground. But, if a complainant should split his cause of action, and sue on one part of it, a recovery on that part will bar a suit on the balance. This ground of demurrer, however, seldom appears on the face of a bill, except in case of bills filed for an accounting; and even in such a case, the defendant will seldom undertake, by demurrer, to force the complainant to enlarge his claim.

§ 283. Demurrers Because of Want of Proper Parties.—Who are the proper parties to a suit has been fully considered elsewhere. Whenever the want of proper parties appears on the face of the bill, it constitutes a good ground of demurrer; but if no demurrer be filed, or motion to dismiss made, an objection at the hearing will avail nothing.

Whenever a demurrer is put in for want of necessary parties, it must show who are the proper parties from the facts stated in the bill; not indeed by name, for that might be impossible, but in such a manner as to point out to the complainant the objection to his bill, and to enable him to amend by making proper parties.

On sustaining a demurrer for want of proper parties, the Court will always give leave to make the new parties, either by an amendment, or by a supplemental bill, when substantial justice between the actual parties to the suit requires it. And even if the bill should be dismissed for this defect, the dismissal will be without prejudice to another bill.

The general rule, requiring all persons in interest to be made parties, is not so much a right of the parties before the Court, as a rule prescribed by Courts of Equity themselves in order to prevent future litigation. Hence, the Court will allow the necessary parties to be brought before the Court at any stage of the suit, even at the hearing.

DEMURRER FOR WANT OF PARTIES.

Because the bill shows that Roland Roe has an interest in the land sought to be sold, [or, has the legal title to the land sought to be sold, or, is interested in the account prayed to be stated,] and he is not made a party to the bill; for which reason, no complete decree can be made in the cause.

§ 284. Demurrers Because the Bill is Multifarious.—The subject of multifariousness has already been fully discussed. The cases upon the subject of multifariousness are extremely various; and the Courts, in deciding them, seem to have considered what was convenient in particular circumstances, rather than to have attempted to lay down any absolute rule. Demurrers for multifariousness may be divided into two kinds. 1, Frequently, the objection raised to a bill, though termed multifarious, is, in fact, properly speaking, a misjoinder of causes of suit, the cases or claims asserted in the bill being of so different a character, that the Court will not permit them to be litigated in one suit. It may be, that the complainants and the defendants are parties to all of the transactions which form the subject of the suit; but, nevertheless, those transactions may be so dissimilar, that the Court will not allow them to be joined together in one suit; but will require distinct suits. 2. But what is more familiarly understood by multifariousness, as applied to a bill, is, where a party is made a defendant upon a record, with a large portion of which, and of the case made by which, he has no connection whatsoever. In such a case, a demurrer is allowed because uniting distinct matters in one record will put the parties to great and useless expense.12

But the objection of multifariousness must still be confined to suits, where the case of a particular defendant is entirely distinct and separate, in its subject-matter, from that of the other defendants. If the case against one defendant is so entire as to be incapable of being prosecuted in several suits, the fact that some other defendant may be a necessary party, to some portion only of the case stated, will not make the bill multifarious. It is not indispensable that all the parties should have an interest in all the matters contained in the suit; it will be sufficient if each party has an interest in some matters in the suit, and they are connected with others.13

Mere multiplicity of matters charged in the bill will not make it multifarious, if these matters have any such connection as renders their joint determination necessary or proper to the adjustment of all the equities arising from that connection, or from the complications of the case. Where the matters spring from a common root, or result from one transaction, or have any other connecting ligaments, they are not multifarious, however numerous.

The result of the principles to be extracted from the cases on the subject of multifariousness seems to be, that where there is a common liability, and a common interest, a common liability in the defendants, and a common interest in the complainants, different claims to property, at least if the subjects are such as may without inconvenience be joined, may be united in one and the same suit without making it multifarious.14

And so, by the Code, the uniting in one bill of several matters of Equity, distinct and unconnected, against one defendant, is not multifariousness.15

The reason why the objection for multifariousness must be taken by the defendant by demurrer, and not at the hearing, is that this objection proceeds on the ground that the union of distinct matters creates unnecessary trouble and expense to the party who has no concern with some of the transactions, by putting him to the trouble and expense of litigating questions with which he has nothing to do; and if the defendant answers and takes his proof, the expense is in a great measure incurred, and it will be too late for him to complain, if he suffers the cause to proceed to a hearing.16 And now, by statute, it is provided that the objection of multifariousness must be made by motion to dismiss, or by demurrer.17

1. Essentials of Multifariousness. To make a bill demurrable for multifariousness, it must contain all of the following characteristics:

1. It must join two or more causes of action against two or more defendants.

13 The multiplication of matters in a single bill is not multifarious where the matters have any such connection as renders their joint determination necessary or proper to the adjustment of all the equities arising from that connection, or from the complications of the case. Where the matters spring from a common root, or result from one transaction, or have any other connecting ligaments, they are not multifarious, however numerous.
14 And so, by the Code, the uniting in one bill of several matters of Equity, distinct and unconnected, against one defendant, is not multifariousness.
15 The reason why the objection for multifariousness must be taken by the defendant by demurrer, and not at the hearing, is that this objection proceeds on the ground that the union of distinct matters creates unnecessary trouble and expense to the party who has no concern with some of the transactions, by putting him to the trouble and expense of litigating questions with which he has nothing to do; and if the defendant answers and takes his proof, the expense is in a great measure incurred, and it will be too late for him to complain, if he suffers the cause to proceed to a hearing. And now, by statute, it is provided that the objection of multifariousness must be made by motion to dismiss, or by demurrer.
16 1 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 271, note.
17 The sections of the Code, upon the subject of multifariousness, are as follows:
4325. Multifariousness, misjoinder, or non-joinder of parties, is no sufficient cause for the dismissal of a bill in Equity, unless objection is made by motion to dismiss, or demurrer.
4326. If a demurrer for multifariousness is sustained, the Court may authorize amendments, by directing separate bills to be filed without new process as to the parties before the Court, and by the addition of new parties, or otherwise, as may be deemed necessary for the attainment of justice.
4327. The uniting in one bill of several matters of Equity, distinct and unconnected, against one defendant, is not multifariousness.
2. These two or more causes of action must have no connection or common origin, but must be separate and independent.

3. The evidence pertinent to one or more of the causes must be wholly impertinent as to the other, or others.

4. One or more of these separate and independent causes of action must be capable of being fully determined, without any necessity of bringing in the other cause or causes, in order to adjust any of the legal or equitable rights of the parties.

5. The decree proper, as to one or more of these separate and independent causes of action, must be exclusively against one or more of the defendants, and the decree proper as to the other cause or causes, must be exclusively against the other defendant, or defendants.

6. The relief proper against one or more of the defendants, on one or more of these separate and independent causes of action, must be distinct from the relief proper against the other defendant or defendants, on the other cause or causes of action.

7. The satisfaction of the proper decree by any one of the defendants, to the extent of his alleged liability, on any one or more of said distinct causes of action, must not be a satisfaction of the proper decree against the other defendants, on the other cause or causes of action.

8. Upon the consideration of the entire bill, the multifariousness must be apparent, and the misjoinder of distinct causes of action manifest. 18

2. Forms of Demurrers for Multifariousness. The following are forms of demurrers for multifariousness, omitting the caption:

DEMURRERS FOR MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

Because it appears by said bill that it is brought against this defendant and various other defendants for distinct matters and causes of suit, with several of which this defendant is not alleged, or shown to be, in any manner interested or concerned, and that the bill is multifarious.

Because said bill is multifarious, in that it is filed against this defendant mainly to have a certain tract of land sold for partition; but it, also, seeks to recover alleged debts in no way connected with said land from the other defendants, and seeks to hold this defendant liable for an alleged balance due complainant as a former partner; and this defendant is not in any manner interested in or connected with the debts sought to be collected from his co-defendants, nor is said partnership in any way connected with said land.

Because the bill is multifarious, in that it seeks to recover from him a debt alleged to be based on certain mercantile transactions with which it is not charged the other defendants are concerned; and seeks to recover rents and damages for waste from the other defendants, and it is not charged that this defendant is in any way liable for either said rents or said damages.

§ 285. Demurrers Because of Repugnancy.—Where the bill sets out two or more distinct causes of action against the same defendant which are repugnant, or contradictory, or inconsistent, a demurrer will lie on that ground. Thus where the bill sets forth a cause of suit based on the validity of a writing, and another cause based on facts that invalidated the writing, and the reliefs prayed were inconsistent, a demurrer for repugnancy will lie. 19 The difference between repugnancy and multifariousness seems to be that the former sets up discordant grounds of suit against one or more defendants, while multifarious bills set up distinct grounds of suit against several defendants. The Code rule 20 allowing several distinct causes of action against one defendant, does not contemplate repugnant causes of action.

§ 286. Demurrers Because of the Pendency of Another Suit.—If the bill show that another suit is pending between the same parties, about the same matter, in a Court of concurrent jurisdiction, a demurrer will lie. Thus, where the County or Circuit Court has rightful jurisdiction, concurrent with the Chancery Court, over a particular matter, a demurrer will lie on that ground to a bill in Chancery seeking to assume the jurisdiction of such matter then pending in either the Circuit or County Court, and to enjoin further proceedings in such matter in the latter Court.

§ 287. Demurrers Because the Complainant's Hands are not Clean.—He who has done iniquity shall not have equity. Courts of Conscience require of their suitors, that they shall not have willingly participated in any unconscientious or illegal transaction, which they are asking the Court to enforce, to set aside, or to correct. As a rule, whenever it appears on the face of the bill that the complainant's hands are stained with any iniquity, or illegality, connected with the subject-matter of the suit, a demurrer will be allowed, for, according to the maxim, in pari delicto potior est conditio defendantis.

But if the complainant was not in equal fault, or if public policy requires it, the Court may allow him relief, even where he has, to some extent, participated in the wrong he seeks to have righted.

The demurrer because the complainant's hands are not clean may be as follows:

DEMURRERS BECAUSE COMPLAINANT'S HANDS ARE NOT CLEAN.

[For title, commencement, and conclusion, see post, § 310.]

Because the bill shows that the complainant conveyed the land, he now seeks to recover, to this defendant for the purpose of hindering and delaying his creditors; and that he willingly, knowingly, and actively participated in the fraud of which he complains.

Because the bill shows that the note sued on was given [or, that the contract sought to be enforced was based] on an iniquitous consideration [or, on an immoral, or illegal consideration] to the enforcement of which this Court will not lend its aid.

§ 288. Demurrers Because of Laches of Complainant.—Equity assists those who are vigilant, and not those who sleep on their rights. Nothing can call the Court into activity but diligence and good faith. If, therefore, the bill discloses gross laches on the part of the complainant, especially in bills for injunction, or specific performance, or in cases where prompt disaffirmance was necessary, or where acquiescence is grossly reprehensible, the Court will allow a demurrer because of such laches.

ARTICLE III.

DEMURRERS OF RIGHT.

§ 289. Demurrers Because of Want of Equity in the Bill. Following, then, the logical subdivision of the grounds of demurrer heretofore stated, the first cause of demurrer to be considered is, that, taking the facts as stated in the bill to be true, there is no rule of law or of Equity whereunder the complainant is entitled to the relief he seeks, or to any relief. While this is a good ground of demurrer when specifically applied to the facts stated, yet, if put in the old form, "There is no equity in the bill," or in any similar general form, it will be deemed too general for a special demurrer. The result is, whenever there is a manifest want of Equity in the bill, or in other words, whenever the general rule of law or Equity presupposed by the bill does not in fact actually exist, or, at least, does not exist to the extent and with the effect supposed, the defendant usually takes advantage thereof by a motion to dismiss, which is a sort of statutory parol demurrer.

There are violations of moral duties which Courts do not undertake to redress, because not attended with pecuniary loss, or not involving a breach of legal obligation. There are, also, equities so mixed up with iniquities that a Court of Conscience will not soil its hands by trying to separate the one from the other. There are cases of strict legal right, accompanied with such circumstances of oppression and injustice, that a Court of Equity will not lend its aid in enforcement of such an unconscientious advantage. There are pecuniary injuries done which cannot be redressed because of some other rule of law or Equity more important to be observed, growing ordinarily out of dealings with persons under disability, or resulting from a failure to comply with some statutory requirement. There are cases where pecuniary compensation by way of damages is manifestly the appropriate remedy, and a specific performance impracticable, if not impossible. There are matters which estop a complainant from setting up what would otherwise have been legal or equitable rights, and thereby defeat his suit.

5 Such as the disinheritance of a deserving child, or the breach of a contract based on no consideration.
6 As where money was given to be used for some illegal, or immoral, purpose, and the complainant seeks to recover it back, because the defendant misused it.
7 As where a former guardian comes into a Court of Equity to enforce a contract made with his ward, the day after he attained his majority, wherein the defendant agreed to convey him land, for a grossly inadequate consideration.
8 Such as loans of money to, or executory contracts with, infants, unmarried women, and lunatics.
9 Such as the statute of frauds; and the registration laws.
10 Such as suits to compel the defendant to marry the complainant, or to paint a picture, write a book, and the like.
DEMURRERS OF RIGHT. § 290

In all such cases, and, also, in all criminal cases, and cases of a criminal nature, a Court of Equity refuses to take jurisdiction, because there is in them a manifest want of Equity; and bills in such cases may either be dismissed on motion for want of Equity, or a special demurrer will lie to the bill.

The following form will indicate how a demurrer, for want of equity on the face of the bill, must be drawn in order not to be a general demurrer:

SPECIAL DEMURRERS FOR WANT OF EQUITY.

[For title, commencement, and conclusion, see post, § 310.]

Because the complainant is not entitled to the relief he prays, nor to any relief, his bill showing that the contract sued on was voluntary and without consideration [or, was not reduced to writing.]

Because the complainant is not entitled to the relief he prays, nor to any relief, his bill showing that he had constructive notice by registration of this defendant's title [or, had actual notice of this defendant's equities] when he made the purchase he is now seeking to enforce.

Because the complainant is not entitled to the relief he prays, nor to any relief, the matters contained in his bill not being such as create any obligation on the part of this defendant, enforceable in the Chancery Court, by reason of the infancy [or coverture] of this defendant.

§ 290. Demurrers Because of Want of Jurisdiction in the Court Over the Subject-Matter.—Jurisdiction is the rightful authority and power of a Court, to determine a controversy, and grant the appropriate relief. Hence, it is the first and fundamental rule that, whatever the object of the bill, it must state a case within the jurisdiction of the Court addressed. If it fails in this respect, the error is fatal in every stage of the cause, and can never be cured, either by waiver or consent. Consent may cure a want of local jurisdiction, and will give jurisdiction of the person, but not of the subject-matter.11 If the Court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, all of its proceedings are void, and its decrees in the case are nullities,12 except it be a decree dismissing the bill and adjudging the costs thereof against the complainant.

If, therefore, the bill shows that the Court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the defendant should demur to it on that ground. For instance, if the bill should call on the Court to try a criminal case, or an issue of devisavit vel non, or an appeal from another Court, or an action for injuries to person, property or character, involving unliquidated damages, or a proceeding by certiorari, or a contest over the election of a Sheriff, in any such case a demurrer will lie. But the matters over which the Court has, and has not jurisdiction, having heretofore been considered, will not be here repeated.13

But, in order to sustain a demurrer to the whole bill, for want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter, it must appear that no substantial and essential part of the complaint is within the jurisdiction of the Court. Where any matter set up in a bill is within the jurisdiction, the bill will be sustained as against a demurrer to the whole bill, even though there be matters in the bill clearly without the jurisdiction.14 A demurrant, in such cases, must confine his demurrer to so much of the bill as is objectionable, or his demurrer will be overruled because too broad.15 and the demurrant must specially state that the objection is for the want of jurisdiction.16

There may, also, be a want of local jurisdiction of the subject-matter, or of the person, but this sort of want of jurisdiction will be considered later.17

11 The rule, that if the defendant answers without objecting to the jurisdiction of the Court, he cannot thereafter object to the jurisdiction, must be taken with the qualifications. (1) that the Court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter; (2) that it is competent for the Court to grant the relief sought; and (3) that the case is fit to be investigated in a Court of Equity. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 550, note; Stockley v. Rowley; 2 Head, 493; Starnes v. Newsom, 1 Tenn. Ch., 245; Baker v. Mitchell, 21 Pick., 610; Travers v. Abbey, 20 Pick., 665. See Hooper v. Rhees, 3 Shan. Cas., 145. If the Court has no jurisdiction of Demurrers for want of jurisdiction should specify the fact that they question the jurisdiction of the Court. The following forms will indicate the manner in which such demurrers should be drawn:

DEMURRERS FOR WANT OF GENERAL JURISDICTION.

For title, commencement, and conclusion, see post, § 310.

Because the bill shows that this is a suit to recover unliquidated damages for an injury to the property [person or character] of the defendant, and this Court has no jurisdiction thereof, the complainant having a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at Law.

Because the bill seeks to enjoin the collection of taxes due the State [or, to try an issue of delusio vel non, or, to determine the validity of a patent, or, to enjoin the breach of a copyright, or, to wind up a National Bank,] and this Court has no jurisdiction to grant such relief.

§ 291. Demurrers Because the Value of the Subject-Matter is Beneath the Dignity of the Court.—The true ground of this objection is, that the entertainment of suits of small value has a tendency, not only to promote expensive and mischievous litigation, but, also, to consume the time of the Court in unimportant and frivolous controversies, to the manifest injury of other suitors, and to the subversion of the public policy of the land. Courts of Equity sit to administer justice in matters of grave interest to parties, and not to gratify their passions, or their curiosity, or their spirit of vexatious litigation. Our Code accordingly declares that the Court has no jurisdiction of any debt, or demand, of less value than fifty dollars, except in certain cases heretofore stated.

DEMURRERS BECAUSE THE DEMAND IS FOR LESS THAN FIFTY DOLLARS.

For title, commencement, and conclusion, see post, § 310.

Because the debt [or demand, or subject-matter] sued for is of less value than fifty dollars, as appears by the statements of the bill, and therefore beneath the dignity of the Court, and not within its jurisdiction. The averments after the word "dollars" are not essential, but customary.

§ 292. Demurrers Because the Bill has been Filed in the Wrong County.

This ground of demurrer is based on the fact that some other Court of Chancery is invested with the proper jurisdiction. The statutes specify in what counties certain Chancery suits shall be brought, thereby defining and limiting the local jurisdiction of each Court over the subject-matter of various suits; and if a suit, the jurisdiction over which has been localized by statute, should be brought in a county other than that required by the statutes, the jurisdiction of the Court in such county may be resisted by demurrer.

The statutes, also, in some cases, make the local jurisdiction of the defendant depend on the residence of the parties, and require suits to be brought in the counties of such residence: if this requirement is violated, and the bill so shows, it will be demurrable.

But the local jurisdiction, either as to the subject-matter, or as to the person, may be waived by failing to object to it by motion to dismiss, or by demurrer, when it appears on the face of the bill, or by plea in abatement when it does not so appear. The filing of an answer, without having previously objected to the jurisdiction, is a waiver of all objections thereto.

The local jurisdiction of the Court has been elsewhere fully considered, and its repetition here is unnecessary; but it may be stated that a demurrer for want of local jurisdiction of the subject-matter is a waiver of the local jurisdic-

Demurrers Because the Suit is for Injuries, Involving Unliquidated Damages.—If the bill show on its face that its object is to recover unliquidated damages for an injury to person, property, or character, a demurrer will lie for want of jurisdiction on that ground. If, however, the damages have either been liquidated, that is, agreed on, in advance of the suit, by the parties, they may be recovered by bill in Chancery; and so may damages that, though unliquidated, are not for injuries to person, property, or character, such as damages for breach of contract or for fraudulent conduct. The following is the form of a demurrer in such a case:

DEMURRER BECAUSE THE SUIT IS FOR DAMAGES FOR INJURIES.

Because the bill is filed to recover unliquidated damages for injuries to the person [or property, or character,] of the complainant, and the complainant has a plain, adequate and complete remedy at law; and the Chancery Court has no jurisdiction of the case made by the bill.

§ 294. Demurrers Because the Complainant has a Plain, Adequate, and Complete, Remedy at Law.—In general, Courts of Equity will not take jurisdiction where the powers of the common law Courts are sufficient for the purposes of justice, unless such jurisdiction is expressly or impliedly conferred by statute. It may, therefore, be stated, generally, that, where the complainant can have as effectual and complete a remedy in a Court of law as in a Court of Equity and that remedy is direct, certain, and adequate, a demurrer to the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court will hold, unless that Court has obtained concurrent jurisdiction with the Courts of law, by statute. But where there is a clear right, and no plain, adequate, and complete, remedy therefor at law adapted to the particular exigency, there Courts of Equity will assume jurisdiction, by virtue of their inherent powers.

But the fact that a Court of law has jurisdiction of the case stated in the bill, is no longer a ground of demurrer, in Tennessee; because it may be a case of concurrent jurisdiction. The demurrer must be because the Chancery Court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

Prior to the Act of 1877, increasing the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court, the most common ground of demurrer in that Court was that "the complainant involving unliquidated damages, was conferred upon the Chancery Court concurrently with the Circuit Court; and a demurrer, for want of jurisdiction of the cause of action, was denied by the same Act, excepting in cases of unliquidated damages for injuries to person, property, or character. See, ante, §§ 21; 29.

30 Post, § 305.
31 Dan. Ch. Pr., 555; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 437, note.
32 Acts of 1801, ch. 6; 1 Scott's Rev., 688; Code, §§ 4305; 4321.
33 By the Act of 1877, ch. 97, jurisdiction of all the civil causes of action triable in the Circuit Court, except for injuries to person, property or character, had a plain, adequate, and complete, remedy at law;" but since that Act, this ground of demurrer has almost ceased to exist, except in so far as it may be applicable to bills filed to probate wills, to enjoin suits or executions at law, or otherwise relieve against proceedings, suits, judgments, or executions, at law. Where the jurisdiction of the Chancery and Circuit Courts is concurrent, the Court that first takes jurisdiction thereby acquires exclusive jurisdiction in that particular case; and if the bill should show that the Circuit Court had acquired jurisdiction, in such a case a demurrer would lie, on that ground.

The questions of jurisdiction that now arise, are not so much questions of jurisdiction between the Courts of Equity and the Courts of law, as questions of local jurisdiction between the various Courts of Chancery, themselves.

But while it is ordinarily true that, in cases of concurrent jurisdiction in the Circuit and Chancery Courts, a demurrer will lie to the bill, if it shows on its face that the same cause of action between the same parties is pending, or has been tried, in the Circuit Court, nevertheless, if the bill show some good reason why the Chancery Court should assume the jurisdiction, a demurrer will not hold. Thus, if a party can make out his case more effectually in the Chancery Court, or can obtain some substantial relief beyond what he could obtain at law, he may come into Equity and enjoin the action at law; this is especially true in cases where, by accident, mistake, or fraud, a party is at a disadvantage in a Court of law, whether he be complainant or defendant in such Court.

The following forms of demurrer will indicate how the fact that the complainant has an adequate remedy at law, may be taken advantage of:

DEMMURERS BECAUSE OF REMEDY AT LAW.

Because the complainant has a plain, adequate, and complete, remedy at law, by appeal to the Circuit [or, Supreme] Court; [or, by certiorari; or, by a writ of error coram nobis; or, by a writ or error or supersedeas in the Supreme Court.]

Because the bill shows that all the matters of controversy, in this suit, are now being litigated between the parties to this suit, in the Circuit Court of Anderson county; and said Circuit Court, having first obtained jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit and the parties, being able to administer a plain, adequate, and complete, remedy, should be allowed to retain exclusive jurisdiction of the matters in controversy.

A complaint has not a plain and adequate remedy at law in the following cases:

1. Where the injury threatened, or being committed, would be irreparable, and damages would not put the complainant in statu quo; and especially when the defendant is insolvent. A Court of law can only award damages; it can grant no injunction, nor otherwise stay the hand of the defendant; and he may, therefore, persevere in his wrong-doing, even when at law he has been brought against him.

2. Where the complainant needs the reformation of a written instrument, either (1) to assert his real rights, or (2) to protect himself from loss, or (3) to resist an unjust and inequitable claim by the defendant. A Court of law cannot reform a writing, and will not hear proof that tends to vary, or contradict, a written instrument. Written instruments include notes of hand, deeds, mortgages, and other written evidences of contract.

3. Where a written instrument has been obtained by fraud, accident, or mistake, and the defendant has put it in his power, by a sale of the instrument, or property conveyed by the instrument, to injure the complainant. A Court of law cannot compel the defendant to surrender such an instrument; or, if it be a deed, cannot reinvest the complainant with title to the property.

4. Where damages for the breach of a contract would be inadequate, especially in cases of contract for the sale, or purchase, of land, and in other cases where justice requires that the contract should be specifically enforced. A Court of law cannot decree, or enforce, a specific performance; it can award damages only, in such a case.

5. Where the complainant has a beneficial interest in property, the legal title to which is vested in a trustee, who is violating, or jeopardizing, the trust. A Court of law does not recognize such interests, but regards the trustee as the real, and only owner, it having respect for no one but the holder of the legal title.

6. Where an accounting between the parties is necessary, and the items are too numerous, and the matters too complicated, for a jury, acting largely, or wholly, on oral evidence. A Court of law cannot, by means of a jury, and on oral testimony, take and state, a long and intricate account with reasonable accuracy.

7. Where the complainant has a vendor's, or other lien on property, the sale of which is necessary to enable him to get his money. A Court of law cannot enforce a vendor's lien, or any other lien, except as given jurisdiction, by statute. A Court of law can, as a rule, award a general execution, only.

8. Where the complainant's rights, or interests, are equitable, and not legal; as in cases of trusts, mortgages, deeds of trust, evidences in land based on agreements to convey, marshalling securities, and cases where the relation of trust and confidence existed between the parties, and cases where the complainant is entitled to a set-off and the defendant is a non-resident, or insolvent.
§ 295. Demurrers Because the Subject-Matter of the Suit is Unfit for, or Foreign to, a Court of Equity.—This ground of demurrer is very similar to the one first mentioned, the want of Equity in the bill, and what is said of that ground applies to this. This ground covers: 1, All criminal cases and cases in the nature of criminal cases; 2, All cases of which the Circuit and County Courts have exclusive jurisdiction; 3, All cases wherein a co-ordinate department of the State Government is sought to be coerced, or restrained, in those matters exclusively within its jurisdiction; 4, All cases wherein the Courts, or the Officers, of the United States Government, are sought to be reached, or affected as such; and 5, All cases of which the United States Courts have exclusive jurisdiction, such as questions affecting patents and copyrights, and questions arising out of the Acts of Congress, or treaties with foreign nations.

§ 296. Demurrers Because the Bill Seeks to Enforce a Penalty, or a Forfeiture.—Another ground of demurrer is, that it appears on the face of the bill, that its object is to enforce a penalty, or a forfeiture. It is a universal rule in Courts of Equity, not to lend their aid to enforce any penalty, or forfeiture; but to leave the party to his remedy at law. But if the complainant seeking relief, is solely entitled to take advantage of the penalty, or forfeiture, and he expressly waives any right to the penalty, or forfeiture, the bill is maintainable.34

§ 297. Demurrers Because the Facts do not Bring the Case Within a General Rule.—It may be that the rule of Equity is as supposed by the bill, and that the Court has jurisdiction of the defendant, and yet the state of facts set out in the bill may be insufficient to bring the case within that rule; and, as a consequence, the complainant may have no right to the benefit of the rule.35 Thus, the complainant may fail to show any actionable interest in the subject-matter of the suit, or may fail to show that the supposed relation exists, or that any of its duties have been violated by the defendant. In all such cases, if the facts set forth in the bill plainly show the infirmity of the complainant’s case, a demurrer will lie, such demurrers being, generally, that, on the facts set out in the bill, the complainant is not entitled to the relief he prays, nor to any relief, as against the demurrant.

§ 298. Demurrers Because the Case Falls Within some Exception to the General Rule.—Whenever the general rule, entitling a complainant to bring a suit in Chancery, on a given state of facts, has one or more exceptions, (as, perhaps they all have,) if the facts set forth in the bill bring the case there made within one or more of these exceptions, a demurrer will lie for that reason. Some of the most common exceptions, on which demurrers may be grounded, are the following:

1. Prematurity of the Suit. Although the general rule is that a debtor must pay the creditor what he owes him, yet the latter cannot sue until the debt falls due. And a suit cannot be brought against an executor or administrator within six months after his qualification.

2. The Statutes of Limitation. If a creditor delays bringing suit until it is barred by the statutes of limitations, and this fact is clearly shown in the bill, a demurrer may be interposed,36 unless other circumstances are shown in the bill avoiding the bar.

34 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 387; 563; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 521.
What is the effect of the statute, giving the Chancery Court jurisdiction of suits at law, in case of a bill filed to enforce a penalty, or forfeiture, is yet to be determined. It would seem, however, that if the complainant could enforce a penalty, or a forfeiture, in the Circuit Court, his rights would be the same in Chancery.

DEMURRERS OF RIGHT.

DEMMURRER BECAUSE THE SUIT IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE.

[For title, commencement, and conclusion, see post, § 310.]

Because the bill shows on its face, that the cause of action accrued more than six [or three, or seven, or ten] years before the bill in this case was filed. [Or:] Because the bill shows on its face that the cause of action sued on did not accrue within three [six, seven or ten] years next before the bill in this case was filed.

3. The Statute of Frauds. The bill may state what would otherwise be a contract within some general rule, but if the statute requires such contract to be in writing, and the bill shows that it is in parol, a demurrer will hold to the bill.37

DEMMURRER BECAUSE THE CONTRACT IS NOT IN WRITING.

Because the bill shows on its face, that the contract sued on was not reduced to writing, as required by the statute for the prevention of frauds and perjuries, but that said contract rests in parol.

4. Other Demurrable Exceptions. If any other exception to the general rule authorizing suit in the particular case, appear clearly on the face of the bill, it will be a good cause of demurrer. It may be stated, generally, that any matter which would be proper for a plea in bar, if it did not appear in the bill, will be a good ground of demurrer if it does appear in the bill. These grounds are, in addition to those already stated: (1) payment, or other adjustment; (2) former judgment or decree; (3) an award; (4) a release; (5) a stated, or settled, account; and (6) innocent purchaser for value.

The following forms will serve as a guide in drawing demurrers under this sub-section:

DEMMURRER BECAUSE OF MATTERS IN AVOIDANCE.

[For title, commencement, and conclusion, see post, § 310.]

Because the bill shows on its face, that the matters in controversy have been adjusted, and no facts are set out invalidating said adjustment.

Because it appears from the face of the bill, that the debt sued for has been paid [or, has been reduced to a judgment, or, has been settled by an award, or, has been released.]

Because it appears by the face of the bill, that this defendant is an innocent purchaser, for a valuable consideration, without any notice of the equities alleged.

§ 299. Demurrers Because the Complainant is not Entitled to Bring the Suit. The general rule supposed may be correct, the proper forum for the enforcement of the rule may have been chosen, the case made may be within the general rule, and not within any exception thereto, and yet the bill may show on its face that the complainant is not the proper party to bring the suit. The matters which disable the complainant from prosecuting the suit, are ordinarily the following:

1. The Complainant is Under a Personal Disability. If an infant, or a married woman, or an idiot, or a lunatic, exhibiting a bill, appear upon the face of it to be thus incapable of instituting a suit alone, and no next friend, or guardian, or committee, is named in the bill, the defendant may demur. But if the incapacity does not appear upon the face of the bill, the defendant must take advantage of it by plea. This objection extends to the whole bill, for, as the defendant might at the hearing be entitled to costs, he would be materially injured, by being compelled to answer a bill exhibited by persons, whose property is not at their own disposal, and who are, therefore, incapable of paying the costs.38

DEMMURRER BECAUSE COMPLAINANT IS AN INFANT.

[For title, commencement, and conclusion, see ante, 310.]

Because the bill shows on its face that complainant is under the age of twenty-one years, and yet he sues without anyone being named as his guardian, or next friend.

DEMURRER BECAUSE COMPLAINANT IS A MARRIED WOMAN.

[For title, commencement, and conclusion, see, ante, 310.]

Because complainant's bill shows she is a married woman, and yet she sues without her husband, or a next friend, and her bill alleges no such facts as justify her in so suing.

2. The Complainant is not Entitled to the Character in which he Sues. The defect of the title of the complainant to the character in which he sues, is the proper subject of a demurrer, where the objection positively appears upon the face of the bill. Thus, for example, if it should appear upon the face of the bill, that the complainant sued as administrator, in virtue of the grant of administration in a foreign country, the objection might be taken by demurrer; for it is clear that the complainant has no right, under that administration, to sue in our courts.

So, if a voluntary association of persons, not incorporated, should affect, by their bill, to sue in the style and character of a corporate body, the bill would be demurrable on that very account, if the objection appeared upon the face of it; for it is the exclusive prerogative of the government to create corporations, and invest them with the powers of suing, as such, by their corporate name. 39

3. The Complainant Shows no Interest in the Subject-Matter. If the complainant sets forth in his bill facts, that show he has no interest in the subject-matter of the suit, or no interest in some material part thereof, a demurrer will lie; in the latter case, however, the demurrer must be expressly limited to that part of the bill liable thereto. The complainant must not only show an interest in the subject-matter, but a right to institute a suit concerning it, against the defendant. In order to enable a complainant to sue upon a contract, there must ordinarily be some privity between him and the defendant, whereby he has the right to make a demand of him. A defendant may be in the wrong in a given matter, and yet the complainant may not be the proper person to bring suit upon such wrong. Thus, the debtor of a decedent ought to pay the debt, but a legatee or distributee cannot sue him. But there are many cases where no privity is needed to enable a complainant to maintain a bill, as (1) in cases of injunctions to prevent trespasses, nuisances and the like; (2) in cases of fraud, actual and constructive; (3) in cases of contribution, 41 and (4) in cases of marshalling of securities.

What sort of interest will sustain a suit has been heretofore fully discussed. 42

4. The Complainant has Failed to Take a Necessary Preliminary Step. Where some preliminary step must be taken to perfect a right of action, as where a notice must be given, or a tender made, and the bill fails to allege that such step has been taken, a demurrer will lie for that reason; and so where a tender is alleged but the money tendered is not filed with the bill. 43

5. Some of the Complainants have no Right to Sue. If any one or more of several complainants have no common interest in the suit, or have separate and diverse interests therein, this is such a mis-joinder as constitutes a good ground of demurrer, and such a demurrer goes to the whole bill. 44 But the Court would allow the improper complainants, with the consent of the other complainants, to dismiss the bill as to themselves, and this may be done even after a demurrer for such mis-joinder has been sustained, and the bill dismissed, if the application be made within thirty days, or before the term ends. The objection that there is a mis-joinder of complainants, cannot be taken advantage of at the hearing, but the Court will then decree according to the respective rights of the complainants; and if any of them then appear to have no interest in the suit, or in the recovery, the bill will be dismissed as to them. 45 proper application, will, also, allow co-complainants to be made, defendants when their interests, or the rights of the other complainants, so require. But the demurrer to the bill, in such cases, must be narrowed to the particular relief objected to, otherwise it will be overruled because too broad.

Where there is a mis-joinder of parties, if the mis-joinder is of parties as complainants, all the defendants may demur: for such a mis-joinder is a proper ground of objection by all. If the mis-joinder is of parties as defendants, those only can demur who are improperly joined.

§ 300. Demurrers Because the Defendant is not Liable.—The defendant may not be liable at all, or he may not be liable to the extent prayed, or he may not be liable to the complainant. He may have no interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and may in no way be liable to any decree, and may not be entitled to the benefit of any decree. In any such case, he is not a proper party, and a demurrer will lie on that ground, if it plainly appear in the bill.

On the other hand, the defendant may be liable to the complainant in some way, and yet not liable in the particular way, or to the particular extent, the bill prays. Almost all demurrers to the substance of the bill are, in effect, demurrers to the relief prayed, but the ground of demurrer here referred to, is not because the complainant is not entitled to relief, but because he is not entitled to the special relief he prays for, or at least not entitled to some of it, as against the demurrant.

Whenever, therefore, the bill prays for some particular relief against a defendant, which the facts stated do not warrant, a demurrer will lie to the bill to that extent; but such demurrer must be so drawn as to be confined to that part of the bill seeking the unwarranted relief, otherwise, the demurrer will be overruled because too broad.

It may be stated, in general, that if, for any reason, founded on the substance of the case, as stated in the bill, the complainant is not entitled to the relief which he prays, the defendant may demur. It is obvious, that if the case stated is such, that, admitting the whole bill to be true, the Court ought not to give the defendant the relief, or assistance, which he prays for, in whole, or in part, the defect, thus appearing upon the face of the bill, is not only a sufficient, but an appropriate ground of demurrer. And, where the objection is thus on the face of the bill, it should be taken by a demurrer, and ought not to be taken by a plea.

§ 306. A Demurrer must not be Too Broad.

§ 307. A Demurrer must not Speak.

§ 308. Rules when a Demurrer is Joined with Another Pleading.

§ 301. Demurrers Defined, and Explained.—Whenever any ground of defence is apparent upon the face of the bill itself, either from the matter contained in it, or from some defect in the case made by it, the proper mode of defence is by demurrer.

A demurrer is a pleading by a defendant which, while admitting the matters of fact stated in the bill to be true, shows (1) that, as they are therein set forth, they are insufficient for the complainant to proceed upon, or to oblige the defendant to answer; or (2) that, for some reason apparent on the face of the bill, or because of the omission of some matter, which ought to be contained therein, or for want of some circumstance which ought to be attendant thereon, the defendant ought not to be compelled to answer. It, therefore, demands the judgment of the Court, whether the defendant shall be compelled to answer the complainant’s bill, or that particular part of it to which the demurrer specially applies.1

A general demurrer is one that assigns no particular or specific ground of objection to the bill, except the usual formulary, “that there is no Equity in the bill.” A special demurrer is one that points out the particular defects in the substance of the bill. In our practice, a general demurrer is not allowed, however deficient in Equity the bill may be. The Code requires every demurrer to state the objections relied on; and the Courts hold that these objections must be stated with certainty and directness.2

§ 302. When a Demurrer will Lie.—A demurrer will lie whenever it is clear that, taking the charges in the bill to be true, the bill would be dismissed at the hearing. A demurrer will not be sustained, however, unless it is an absolute, certain, and clear proposition that the bill would be dismissed; for, if it is a case of circumstances, in which a minute variation between them as stated by the bill, and those established by the evidence, may either incline the Court to modify the relief prayed, or to grant no relief at all, the Court, although it sees that the granting the modified relief at the hearing will be attended with considerable difficulty, will not support a demurrer; for, if there is any possibility that the complainant will be entitled to any relief, at the hearing, a demurrer to the whole bill will not lie.3

If a bill contains two or more supposed equities, or causes of action, or joins as defendants several parties, if one of these supposed equities or causes of action is manifestly not maintainable, as against one of the defendants, a demurrer may be filed to so much of the bill as sets forth such insufficient matter, or the defendant, not answerable, may demur to the relief prayed against him. Hence, the general rule that a demurrer will lie to the whole bill, when complainant does not show himself entitled to any relief; or it will lie to a part of a bill, when complainant is not entitled to the relief he prays as to that part. A demurrer to the whole bill should be based on some short, dry, point of law, destructive of the relief sought,4 and it must be plain that, for the reason stated in the demurrer, the bill must be dismissed at the hearing, for want of merits.5 If there be doubt whether the grounds of the demurrer are sufficient to destroy the bill, or that part of the bill which it specifically covers, such doubt will enure to the benefit of the bill, and the demurrer will be overruled.

The causes of demurrer must be upon some matter in the bill, or upon the omission of some matter which ought to be therein, or attendant thereon; and not upon any foreign matter alleged by the defendant.6 No matter outside of the bill can be considered on the hearing of a demurrer, except the law and such matters as the Court may take notice of judicially; and no demurrer will lie to the form of the bill.7

§ 303. The Office of a Demurrer.—A demurrer is a pleading which, in substance, insists that, admitting the bill to be true, the complainant is not entitled to the relief he seeks against the demurrant, and that, therefore, the bill should be dismissed as to him. The logic of a demurrer is that, as the complainant cannot by proof make out a case stronger than the allegations of his bill, if those allegations, when admitted to be true, will not warrant any decree against the demurrant, then proof of those allegations will avail nothing, and hence the bill should be dismissed without any further costs, or proceedings, by either party.

The object of a demurrer, therefore, is to save costs, and bring the litigation to a speedy close. If no one of these ends is obtained, there is little use in a demurrer. For, in general, if a demurrer would hold to a bill on its merits, the Court, although the defendant answers, will not grant relief upon hearing the cause. There have been, however, cases in which the Court has given relief upon the hearing, although a demurrer to the relief would probably have been allowed. But such cases are rare, and the relief granted in such cases is, generally, based in part upon the answer.

In regard to the appropriate use of a demurrer, it may be stated as a general rule, that, whenever the ground of objection or defence is clearly apparent on the face of the bill itself, either from matter contained in it, or from some defect in its frame, the proper mode of setting up the objection, or defence, is by demurrer, and not by way of plea. Hence, if the case of the complainant, as stated in his bill, will not entitle him to a decree, the proper course is for the defendant to insist upon it by way of demurrer, although it may be equally fatal at the hearing. When the bill is manifestly fatally defective in substance, it is advisable to demur, because it saves unnecessary expense to all parties. When the objection is to a defect in matter of form, the objection must be taken by motion, demurrer for matter of form having been abolished by statute.

Demurrers are, also, often used to dispute the jurisdiction of the Court, as already fully shown.

§ 304. What a Demurrer Admits.—As a demurrer proceeds upon the ground that, admitting the facts stated in the bill to be true, the complainant is not entitled to the relief he seeks; it is held that, at least for the purpose of argument, all the matters of fact which are stated in the bill are admitted by the demurrer, and cannot be disputed in arguing the question whether the demurrer be good or not; and such admission extends to the whole manner and form in which the bill states the facts. Upon this ground, where a bill misstates a deed by alleging it to contain a proviso, the Court, upon the argument of a demurrer to the bill, refused to allow the defendant’s counsel to refer to the deed itself for the purpose of showing the incorrectness of the manner in which it was set out, although the bill contained a reference “for greater certainty as to its contents, etc.” to the deed as being in the custody of the defendants.

But, although a demurrer confesses the truth of the facts alleged in the bill, such confession is strictly confined to the facts. The demurrer does not admit any matters of law suggested in the bill, or inferred from the facts stated; nor does it admit the arguments, deductions, inferences, or conclusions, set forth in the bill. Nor does a demurrer admit allegations contrary to facts, judicially known to the Court. Upon the argument of a demurrer, the bill alone must be looked to for the facts of the case, except such facts as the Court may judicially know. If a bill materially misstates a deed in the defendant’s possession, and refers to it for greater certainty as to its contents, the Court will not allow the defendant to read the deed on the argument of the demurrer for the purpose of contradicting the bill.

But where a bill, not original, refers to a record in the original cause, and in effect makes such record, or any part thereof, a part of itself, then such a 8 Payne v. Berry, 3 Tenn. Ch., 157. A very large proportion of the demurrers filed are too near the line of frivolousness to justify a Court in an endeavor to determine on which side they are. Now that all the benefits of a demurrer to the merits may be had by relying thereon in the answer, (except when the jurisdiction of the Court is to be contested,) a separate demurrer should never be filed, unless it is certain to be destructive of the bill, or of some material part thereof. record, or part, may be looked to on the argument of a demurrer to such a bill.

A demurrer necessarily admits the truth of the facts stated in the bill, so far as they are relevant, and are well pleaded; but it does not admit the conclusions of law drawn therefrom, although they are also alleged in the bill. Thus, if a demurrer extends to any particular discovery, the matter sought to be discovered, and to which the demurrer extends, is taken to be as stated in the bill. And if the defendant demurs to the relief only, the whole case made by the bill as the ground of the relief prayed for, is considered as true. A demurrer, therefore, was formerly always preceded by a protestation against the truth of the matters contained in the bill, a practice borrowed from the civil law, and probably intended to avoid any conclusion in another suit; for in the present suit it is wholly without effect. But this protestation is not only wholly unnecessary, but is obnoxious to good pleading, and should be wholly omitted. It is one of those prolix and unnecessary allegations the Chancellor is authorized to order stricken out.

§ 305. All Demurrers must be Special.—Formerly, a demurrer to a bill might be general; but now, the Code requires all demurrers to state the objections relied on; and a general demurrer is a nullity. The very objection to be relied on by way of demurrer must be stated in the demurrer, and stated specifically, and not inferentially, or by way of intendment. Thus, if the defendant intends to demurr because the Court of Chancery has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter in controversy, he must allege this want of jurisdiction as his ground of demurrer. It will not avail him, in such a case, to demur generally, because complainant’s bill contains no ground of Equity entitling him to any relief; for such a demurrer admits the jurisdiction, even in case where there is a clear want of jurisdiction. So, where the demurrer is based on the ground that the Court has no local jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit, this practically concedes that the Court has jurisdiction of the person of the demurrant, even in a case where that jurisdiction could have been resisted by a demurrer on that particular ground. The demurrant cannot allege one cause of demurrer in his pleading, and another in his argument. As he makes his bed so must he lie in it.

A demurrer must not only always specify the several causes on which it is founded, but if the demurrer does not go to the whole bill, it must, also, clearly specify the particular parts of the bill which it is designed to cover; for, if the particular parts are not distinguished, the Court will be compelled to look over the whole bill, in order to pick them out, which task the Court will not undertake. And this designation of the particular parts of a bill which the demurrer, or the particular cause of demurrer, is intended to cover, must be done, not by way of exception, as by demurring to all, except certain parts of the bill; but by a positive definition of the parts, to which the defendant seeks to avoid making any answer.

If a demurrer is too general, that is, if it covers, or is applied to, the whole bill, when it is good to a part only; or, if it is a demurrer to a part of a bill only, but yet is not good to the full extent which it covers, but is so to a part only, it will be overruled; for it is a general rule, that a demurrer cannot be good as to a part of what it covers, and bad as to the rest; and therefore it must stand or fall altogether. But a demurrer may assign several causes of demurrer; and 21 See next section.

§ 306. A Demurrer must not be Too Broad. A demurrer may be too broad; by which is meant, it would have been good if it had been confined to a specific part of the bill, but being a demurrer to the whole bill, and not to the specific part to which it might have been confined, it disputes the whole bill, and, there being some Equity in the bill, the demurrer must, for that reason, be overruled. 26

When a demurrer to the whole bill is sustained, the whole bill is destroyed, and the Court will not dismiss the whole bill merely because a part of it is demurrable. If, therefore, the defendant seeks to cover only part of the bill by his demurrer, he must, in the commencement of his demurrer, specify with particularity that part as the part to which he demurs, and, at the conclusion, pray to be hence dismissed as to such part. The reports contain many instances of demurrers overruled because too broad, which would have been sustained if confined to that part of the bill really demurrable. 27 But, if the bill contains no cause of action whatever, it may be dismissed, although the causes of demurrer assigned may not cover the real defects. 28

A demurrer intended for only a part of a bill, must not only be specific, and designate that part of the bill which is intended to be covered by it, but the designation must be so clearly made that the Court will be in no doubt as to the part intended, and will have no difficulty in directly ascertaining that part. The part specially demurred to must be designated in such clear and precise terms that not only the Court will have no trouble in ascertaining the part covered by the demurrer, but in case the demurrer is sustained, the Master may have no trouble, on exceptions to the answer for insufficiency, in ascertaining how much, and what part, of the bill remains in Court to be answered unto. 29

A defendant may, however, put in separate and distinct grounds, or causes, of demurrer to separate and distinct parts of a bill; for the same grounds of demurrer frequently will not apply to different parts of a bill. And if separate grounds of demurrer are put in to different and distinct parts of a bill, one ground of demurrer may be overruled upon argument, and another be allowed. 30

Where there are several defendants, if they all join in one demurrer to a bill, the demurrer may be good, and be allowed, as to one of the defendants, and be bad, and disallowed, as to the other defendants; for the defence may be good as to one person, and be wholly inapplicable to another. And there is a clear, although a nice, distinction between a demurrer which is too broad in regard to all the defendants, and one which is too broad, or inapplicable, to some of the defendants. 31

Where a demurrer has been overruled, the Code says no other demurrer shall be received, but the defendant shall answer the allegations of the bill. 32 This, 26 Saunders v. Gregory, 3 Heisk., 575; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 443.
28 Riddle v. Motley, 1 Lea, 468; Russell v. Bank, 20 Pick., 614; Tyner v. Fenner, 4 Lea, 472.
29 Some of these cases are the following, in all of which the rule is recognized, that a demurrer, bad because too broad, is bad altogether, and will be disallowed: Allen v. Lanier, 4 Hay., 290; Colville v. Colville, 9 Hum., 524; Foy v. Jones, 1 Head, 443; Hunter v. Justices, 7 Cold., 49; Crowder v. Denny, 3 Head, 359; Saunders v. Gregory, 3 Heisk., 567; Mann v. Bamberger, 4 Heisk., 486; Bittick v. Wilkins, 7 Heisk., 512; Riddle v. Motley, 1 Lea, 468; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Day, 4 Lea, 247.
31 Sto. Eq. Pl., §§ 447-458; note; Buckner v. Abrahams, 3 Tenn. Ch., 349.
32 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 444.
33 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 445.
34 Code, § 4395.
however, is probably not imperative, for, if a demurrer should be overruled because too broad, when, if it had been narrowed it would have been sustained as to a part of the bill, the Court would be justified in allowing the demurrer to be amended, if by so doing the litigation would be greatly narrowed, and the costs greatly lessened.\footnote{33}

§ 307. A Demurrer must not Speak.—From what has been said as to the nature and office of a demurrer, it is clear that it can lie only for objections apparent upon the face of the bill itself, either from the matter inserted, or omitted, or from defects in the frame thereof. A demurrer cannot, therefore, state what does not appear upon the face of the bill, otherwise it would be what has been emphatically called a speaking demurrer, that is, a demurrer wherein a new fact is introduced in order to support it.\footnote{34} Thus, for example, where a bill was filed to specifically enforce a contract for the sale of land, without stating whether it was in writing or not, a demurrer to the effect that the complainant was not entitled to the relief sought because the contract was not in writing, was a speaking demurrer, the bill not stating that the contract was not in writing and the presumption being, on demurrer, that it was in writing.\footnote{35}

§ 308. Rules when a Demurrer is Joined with another Pleading.—As has been already stated, a demurrer may be to a part only of a bill. In such a case, the remainder of the bill must either be pleaded to, or be answered. Every defence must be a complete bar to any recovery, whether that bar be one of law, presented by demurrer, or one of fact, presented by plea in bar, or by answer, or whether the bar consist of some two or more of these defences. All this will be fully shown hereafter, when treating of the Joinder of Defences.\footnote{36}

ment of the Court whether the bill is sufficient to justify the Court in compelling him to answer it, and whether, for the reasons set forth in the demurrer, the bill should not be dismissed without further proceedings thereon.

A demurrer formerly commenced with a solemn protestation, that the defendants did not confess any of the matters in the bill contained; but this ancient and useless formula is now generally omitted by the best pleaders, it being not only absolutely unnecessary, but, also, mere surplusage, and liable to be stricken out, under the statute, by the Chancellor on his own motion, at the cost of the demurrant.¹

After the protestation, came the general or special causes of demurrer; and these in turn were followed by a verbose prayer for the judgment of the Court as to whether the demurrant should answer further, and for dismissal. The old form of a demurrer will be seen in a foot-note to the next section.

Now, all this stiff pomposity of verbiage, which was akin to the silk gowns, and the ponderous wigs, of the lawyers and the Judges of the same period, has given way to the simpler forms now in use. The following form of demurrer is in conformity with the spirit of our present practice:

John Doe,

Richard Roe, et al.

In Chancery at Kingston.

The defendant, Peter Poe, demurs to the bill in this cause,

1st. Because he is not a proper party, having no interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and not being in any way liable to the complainant.

2nd. Because complainant is not entitled to any relief against him, and does not specially pray any.

Wherefore, this defendant prays the judgment of the Court whether he must answer further, and prays to be dismissed.

JAMES SEVIER, Solicitor.

In order to prevent delays by putting in frivolous demurrers, it is required by the practice of the Court, that the demurror should be signed by counsel, or by the defendant. But it is not required to be put in on oath, as it asserts no fact, and relies merely upon matter apparent upon the face of the bill.²

§ 310. Form of Demurrers.—Formerly demurrers began with a "protestation," long and formal, and ended with a "wherefore," equally long and formal; but now all such formalities are forbidden by the Code,³ and in drawing a demurrer, the protestation clause, and most of the wherefore clause, should be omitted as useless verbiage. The following is a proper

No. 983.—In the Chancery Court, at Clinton.

[The Commencement.]

The defendant demurs to the bill filed against him in this cause on the following grounds:

[The Grounds, or Causes of Demurrer.]

1st. The bill shows its face, that the cause of action therein set forth accrued more than three [or six, or ten] years before the filing of the bill, and is barred by the statute of limitations of three [or six, or ten] years.

2d. The contract sued on is shown by the bill to be usurious, and the Court will not lend its aid to enforce an illegal contract.

And the defendant prays the judgment of the Court, whether he shall be compelled to answer further, and prays to be dismissed.

A DEMURRER IN AN ANSWER.

John Doe,
\textit{vs.}
Richard Roe, \textit{et al.}

No. 716.—In Chancery, at Sevierville.

The demurrer and answer of the defendant, Richard Roe, to the bill filed against him and others in the above entitled cause.

This defendant, Richard Roe, demurs to the bill filed in this cause, [or demurs to so much of the bill filed in this cause, as—(Here setting it out as in § 316;) and for cause of demurrer shows:

1st. [Here set out the causes tersely, and number them in order.]

And this defendant, not waiving his said demurrer, but relying thereon, for answer to said bill, says: [Here set forth the answer to each and every allegation of the bill, in the same manner as though no demurrer had been prefixed to the answer.]

This subject will be further considered in treating of the Joinder of Defences;\(^8\) but it may be said, generally, that great caution must be exercised in joining two or more defences.

§ 312. When a Demurrer Must be Filed.—If a defendant desires to demur to the whole bill, he must do so before answering the bill; for an answer to the bill will overrule a demurrer to the whole bill. If, however, he wishes to demur to a part only of the bill, he can do so, and then answer the balance of the bill, at the same time, taking care to indicate clearly the part of the bill demurred to, and the part answered.\(^9\)

A demurrer to the bill cannot be filed after a plea in bar or an answer has been filed;\(^10\) nor can a demurrer be interposed when time is given to answer the bill, a demurrer not being regarded as an answer in the sense contemplated in the order giving the time.\(^11\)

If the demurrer is the first pleading the defendant intends to file, he must deliver it to the Clerk in the time specified in the subpoena to answer, as already shown,\(^12\) or a pro confesso will be entered against him; and if he intends to § 313. How Demurrers are Disposed Of.

§ 313. How Demurrers are Disposed Of.—A demurrer is a challenge by the defendant to the complainant to test the right of the latter to require an answer to his bill; and the complainant can take no step forward so long as the demurrer remains undisposed of. If he thinks the demurrer good, but avoidable by an amendment to his bill, he can avoid it by amending his bill; if, however, he thinks the demurrer fatal to his case, the only course open to him is to allow the Court to determine the sufficiency of the demurrer, or to dismiss his bill on his own motion. If, on the other hand, he thinks the demurrer bad, for any reason, he may demand the action of the Court upon it, either when the case is reached on the docket, or at any earlier time allowed by the rules of the Court.

At the hearing of a demurrer the usual course of procedure is as follows: (1) the complainant reads his bill; (2) the demurrant reads his demurrer, and opens the argument in support of it; (3) the Solicitor of the complainant then replies to the argument of the demurrant; and (4) the demurrant concludes the argument. In hearing a demurrer, the argument is strictly confined to the case presented by the bill, which is, for the purpose of the argument, not only conclusively deemed to be absolutely true, but is, also, given a construction favorable to its maintenance.

The Court may sustain one or more of the grounds of demurrer assigned, or may sustain all, or may overrule all.

§ 314. When Demurrers are Disposed Of.—Inasmuch as a demurrer, if good, will destroy the whole, or at least, a part of the bill, it is manifestly useless to proceed further with the suit, until the sufficiency of the demurrer has been tested. For this reason, the statute requires that a demurrer shall be set for argument at the first term after it is filed.

But, as in case of a plea in abatement, the demurrant must not take any step in the cause until his demurrer has been disposed of, or he will be conclusively deemed to have abandoned his demurrer. The object of a demurrer is to ascertain whether the Court will require the defendant to make any further answer to the bill, and if the demurrant voluntarily makes further answer, either by filing a plea or an answer, such action is a voluntary abandonment of his demurrer.

If the defendant has incorporated a demurrer in his answer as provided by

1 Code, § 4333.
2 Some Chancellors allow demurrers to be called up, and argued, on motion days, after motions of course, have been all heard. Such a practice greatly expedites the preparation of a cause for hearing, especially in counties where the term lasts several weeks.
3 The leading counsel for the demurrant usually replies to the complainant's Solicitor. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 596.
4 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 596; post, § 317. If exhibits are made a part of the bill, they may be considered at the hearing of a demurrer. Pope v. Harrison, 16 Lea, 52. On the hearing of a demurrer to a bill of review, the pleadings and decree sought to be reviewed may be considered. See, post, § 1251.

the Code, he must, also, comply with the further requirement of setting down the matters of demurrer for argument at the next term of the Court, or it may be treated as abandoned. And even where leave has been given to rely on a demurrer in the answer, the advantage of it will be lost, and the demurrer waived, unless it is disposed of before the cause is heard on the merits.

§ 315. Effect of Sustaining, and of Overruling, a Demurrer.—If the complainant conceives that there is not sufficient cause apparent in his bill to support a demurrer put in to it, or that the demurrer is too extensive, or is otherwise improper, he may take the judgment of the Court upon it; but if he conceives the demurrer to be good, and that, by amending his bill, he can remove the ground of the demurrer, he may do so before the demurrer is argued. But after a demurrer to the whole of a bill has been argued and allowed, the bill is out of Court, and therefore cannot be regularly amended. To avoid this consequence, the Court has, sometimes, instead of deciding upon the demurrer, given the complainant liberty to amend his bill, on his paying the costs incurred by the defendant. And this is always done in the case of a demurrer for want of parties. Where a demurrer leaves any part of a bill untouched, the whole of the bill may be amended, notwithstanding the allowance of the demurrer; for the suit in that case continues in Court, the want of which circumstance seems to be the reason of the contrary practice, where a demurrer to the whole of a bill has been allowed.

But, in practice, the Court delivers its opinion upon the demurrer, before entering up judgment, thus giving the party an opportunity to move for leave to amend, before final judgment upon the demurrer; or, what is more common, the counsel interpose orally, at the bar, a suggestion to the Court, that if the opinion of the Court should be against them, upon any point, reducible by amendment, they will ask leave for that purpose.

Even after a demurrer to the whole bill has been allowed, however, the Court will allow the bill to be amended, if it can be done at that term, so as to be proof against the demurrer, and otherwise sustainable; but the amendment should be made known to the Court, before it is to make it is allowed, so that the Court, and not the complainant, may judge of its merit.

If the demurrer is based on, what is termed in this book, grounds of allowance, such as (1) that the bill is not for the whole matter, or (2) that there is a want of proper parties, or (3) that the bill is multifarious, the Court will always readily allow the bill to be amended so as to correct the defect, on proper application, either before or after the demurrer is sustained.

After a demurrer to the whole bill has been overruled, a second demurrer to the same effect cannot be filed, and the defendant must plead in bar to the bill, or answer it. The Court may, however, allow a demurrer to be amended or the Court may, in a doubtful case, overrule a demurrer with leave to the demurrant to rely upon it, in his answer and at the hearing; but if, in such a case, the defendant goes to a hearing, without previously insisting on the demurrer in his answer, he is deemed to have waived his demurrer. If, however, a demurrer is overruled without leave to rely on it, such a ruling is final, and the Chancellor is bound by it, and cannot redetermine the question, and sustain the demurrer, at the hearing.

A decree which sustains a ground of demurrer that goes to the entire bill, but overrules other grounds of demurrer, is a final decree, and an appeal lies from it. The overruling of a demurrer in general terms, when the bill presents distinct grounds for relief, does not adjudicate that all the grounds are maintainable, but only that there is sufficient Equity in the bill to require an answer. When a demurrer is overruled, the defendant must answer the bill by the next rule day, or by the time prescribed by the Court, or the bill may be taken for confessed, and final decree pronounced. And if the bill is brought on a note of hand, a judgment or decree, bond, stated or sworn account, or other prima facie evidence of debt, and is demurred to, and the demurrer overruled, and the defendant fails then and there to plead in bar, or answer, or obtain time to make defence, the complainant is entitled to a pro confesso and a final decree thereon, instanter.

ORDER PRO CONFESSO ON OVERRULING A DEMURRER, AND FINAL DECREE.

Cowan, McClung & Co.,

vs.

John Donaldson.

The demurrer of the defendant to the bill having been overruled, and the defendant having failed to answer the bill in the time allowed by law, on motion of complainant's Solicitor, the bill is ordered to be taken for confessed and set for hearing ex parte.

And thereupon this cause coming on to be further and finally heard upon the whole record, and especially on the bill and the said judgment pro confesso, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed by the Court, that, [Here set out the decree in accordance with the special prayers of the bill. See post, §§ 566-568.]

DEGREE SUSTAINING A DEMURRER, AND DISMISSING THE BILL.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.

No. 716.

The demurrer of the defendants coming on this day to be argued, the Court is of opinion that the demurrer is good and sufficient, and it is therefore allowed; and the Court, thereupon, orders and decrees that the bill be dismissed, and that complainant and Henry Doe, his prosecution surety, pay the costs of the cause, for which an execution will issue.

§ 316. Amending Demurrers.—A demurrer may be amended like any other pleading; but, inasmuch as a demurrer is, itself, a fault-finder, the Courts show it but little favor when its own fault is confessed, and leave to amend is prayed only in order to enable it to find more fault. Where, however, a part of the bill is clearly demurrable, but the demurrer, while really aimed at such part, in fact covers the whole bill, the Court will sometimes allow the demurrer to be narrowed and confined to so much of the bill as is really demurrable. As already shown, many demurrers, which would have been good, if confined to part of the bill, are held bad because they are not so confined. It is manifest, that a demurrer will not lie to the whole bill, merely because a part of the bill is demurrable. Where a part only of the bill is demurrable, the demurrer should be strictly confined to such part. The strictness of the practice on this subject, however, is not consistent with the liberality of our practice in other and similar respects, and the Chancellor would be abundantly justified in allowing a demurrer, which is too broad, to be so narrowed in its terms as to apply exclusively to the demurrable part of the bill, especially when such a course ing, on the issues of fact, go for naught. A demurrer should be finally determined, when first heard; because, when subjected to a redetermination, it introduces into the suit an element of uncertainty, that tends to prevent a full development of the facts; the defendant hoping, and the complainant fearing, that the demurrer may be sustained, at the next hearing, and, the evidence taken, be, thereby, rendered absolutely valueless. As a consequence of this state of uncertainty, neither side, in preparing proofs, puts forth the effort it would have made, had the demurrer been finally determined when first heard.

would greatly narrow the litigation, and consequently lessen the costs of the suit.27

To illustrate what is meant by a demurrer being too broad, and being narrowed, suppose a bill to be filed by John Doe, an administrator, to sell some of the decedent’s town lots, to pay the decedent’s debts; and, also, to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of other lots to Richard Roe, one of his heirs, all of the heirs being defendants to the bill; and suppose Richard Roe should file this demurrer:

FORM OF A DEMURRER TOO BROAD.

Demurrer.

The defendant, Richard Roe, demurs to the bill filed against him, and others, in this cause, on the following grounds:

1st. The estate of the complainant’s intestate, not being alleged to be insolvent, the complainant, as his administrator, has no right to file a bill to set aside his intestate’s conveyance to this respondent, on the ground that it was made in fraud of creditors.

Wherefore, this defendant prays the judgment of the Court, whether he shall be compelled to answer further, and prays to be hence dismissed.

John Jennings, Solicitor.

On argument, this demurrer would be held to be too broad, and would be overruled, notwithstanding the manifest fact that the demurrer would have been good had it been confined to that part of the bill which sought to set aside the conveyance to Richard Roe. The demurrer, in the commencement, shows that Richard Roe “demurs to the bill,” that is, to the whole bill; and, in its conclusion, it “prays the judgment of the Court whether the defendant shall be compelled to answer further, and prays that he be hence dismissed.” While, therefore, it is plain that the demurrer is good to a part of the bill, it is equally plain that it is not good to the whole of the bill, and that, as a consequence, Richard Roe must “answer further,” and cannot be “dismissed,” because the bill is good as to him, in so far as it seeks to sell some of the town lots to pay debts.

Now, if the Court should allow this demurrer to be narrowed, its commencement and conclusion would be amended so as to read as follows:

FORM OF A DEMURRER TO PART OF A BILL.

Demurrer to the Bill.

The defendant, Richard Roe, demurs to so much of the bill as seeks to set aside the conveyance made by complainant’s intestate to this defendant, and for cause of demurrer shows:

[Here set out the same ground of demurrer.]

Wherefore, this defendant prays the judgment of the Court whether he shall be compelled to answer further as to so much of the bill as seeks to set aside said conveyance; and he prays to be hence dismissed as to such part of said bill.

John Jennings, Solicitor.

The following are further forms of rulings illustrating probable phases of the case:

RULING OF COURT ON A DEMURRER TOO BROAD.

No. 683.

The demurrer of the defendant, Richard Roe, to the bill coming on this day to be heard, the Court is of opinion that the demurrer is bad and insufficient, because too broad, and overrules the same, and requires the demurrant to answer the bill on tomorrow.

Thereupon the demurrant having narrowed his demurrer, by leave of the Court, so as to confine it to so much of the bill as seeks to set aside the conveyance made to him by the decedent, and argument having been heard thereon, the Court is of opinion that the demurrer, 27 The Supreme Court, itself, did this, in the case of Riddle v. Motley, 1 Les, 468. See, also, Sto. Eq. § 443, note 4. Courts of Equity should always be liberal, when liberality promotes justice.

§ 317. The Disposition of the Court towards Demurrers.

The Courts do not favor demurrers; and for this several reasons: (1) they are often unnecessarily filed; (2) they are frequently hypercritical; (3) they are many times filed for delay; (4) they sometimes evince a disposition to stifle an investigation of the merits of the controversy; and (5) as a result, they very seldom have any merit; and are, consequently, generally overruled.¹

The legislation of our State,² and that of England, has long been hostile to frivolous demurrers; and the object of our statute, in allowing a defendant to rely on a demurrer in his answer, was to save the delay occasioned by separate demurrers,³ and in that way mitigate some of the evils resulting from demurrers without adequate grounds.

The Courts make every reasonable presumption in favor of the bill when assailed by a demurrer;⁴ and if, upon a critical examination of the facts stated in the bill, there is a possibility that the suit may be sustained, though upon a different ground from that assumed, a demurrer to the whole bill will be overruled,⁵ the policy of the Courts being, to give every complainant an opportunity to be heard on the merits of his case, when any Equity whatever appears in his bill, although defectively stated.⁶ For this reason, demurrers are now less frequently filed than formerly.⁷

§ 318. The Practical Value of Demurrers Considered.—Demurrers are often of more practical value to the complainant than to the defendant; and the only substantial ground of complaint against demurrers, is the delay occasioned by

As a rule, a defendant should never demur, unless the point of his demurrer will almost certainly either, (1) cause the bill to be dismissed for want of jurisdiction of the person or the subject-matter; or (2) will penetrate to the very heart of the bill, and thus totally destroy it; or (3) will be fatal to some substantial part of the bill, in which latter case, he should be very careful to confine his demurrer to that part of the bill intended to be aimed at. Such a demurrer is a vindication of the right of a demurrer to a place in the science of pleading, for it ends the litigation with the least possible delay, and the least possible costs; and thus benefits alike the complainant, the demurrant, and the Court.

A demurrable bill generally exposes a vulnerable part to plain view, and a demurrer is some keen point of law, driven into the bill through this weak and exposed part. A demurrer operates like a stiletto, and not like a bombardment. The brevity of an axiom, or a proverb, should characterize its form; and its

8 The following observations of Wigram are quoted in a note to section 359, of Story’s Eq. Pl.: “A defendant, who demurs, indeed, may have the benefit of every objection, which is apparent from the face of the bill, and a decision in favor of a demurrer, if submitted to by the plaintiff, will put a more speedy termination to a suit, than a defense by answer. But this possible advantage is purchased at the price of a premature discussion of the case, of which, if the demurrer should be unsuccessful, upon argument, or the plaintiff be permitted to amend his bill, or if he should make a new bill, he will not fail to take advantage. The injurious consequences of such discussions have, almost universally, induced counsel of the greatest experience to advise against the submission of a demurrer, except where it was of paramount importance to the defendant, to avoid some of the discovery sought by the bill. The necessity for discovery would never have existed, if a defendant could, by answer, be protected against the discovery, which the demurrer would cover. A plea, which raises a question of law only, is in the same predicament as a demurrer. A plea, however, which raises a question of fact, is open to observations of a graver character, which would necessarily supersede its use, if a defendant might, by answer, protect himself against discovery, said that, which may be necessary to try the plea itself. If the defendant has several grounds of defense, he will, by plea, lose the benefit of all, except that which his plea may raise; whereas, by answer, he may have the benefit of them all. If circumstances exist, as in the case put by Lord Redesdale, by which the plaintiff’s right to relief may be qualified, the defendant, by pleading, may lose the benefit of those qualifying circumstances, which an answer would save. And, if the ground of defence be single, the defendant will obtain no advantage by a plea, which an answer will not equally afford him, but will subject himself to the disadvantage of a premature discussion of his case, which has already been adverted to. Negative pleas were (although reluctantly) admitted in Equity pleadings; because, without such a mode of meeting a case, the defendant was without the means of protecting himself against discovery.”

9 Wigram on Discovery, §§ 153-161. Inasmuch as a discovery is seldom sought now, the effect of the foregoing quotation is: Never to demur, or plead, when the same defence may be made by answer.

10 What is meant here by “some substantial part of the bill,” is, some part, which, when destroyed, will (1) either lessen the costs, or, (2) lessen the recovery against the demurrant.
substance should not only be good law, but law that will pierce the heart of the bill to its very core.

If the bill includes more matters than one, a demurrer may be applied to one of these parts, in which case great care should be taken to expressly confine the demurrer to the particular part of the bill intended to be covered by the demurrer. A bill cannot be destroyed by striking at one if its limbs. The books are full of cases of demurrers overruled because too broad,—demurrers which would have been allowed, if they had been narrowed and confined to the particular matter assailed. When you demur to a part of a bill only, say so, and specify the part; and answer the remainder of the bill. Remember these rules:

1. Never demur to the whole bill, unless the point of your demurrer will destroy the whole bill.
2. Never demur to the whole bill, when the point of your demurrer is fatal to a part only of the bill.
3. When your ground of demurrer is destructive of a part only of the bill, confine your demurrer to such part only, and answer the remainder of the bill.
4. Condense each ground of your demurrer into a single short and cogent sentence, or proposition.
5. Assign no cause of demurrer unless (1) it is applicable to the facts contained in the bill, and (2) will certainly show that those facts do not entitle the complainant to the relief thereon sought against the demurrant.
6. Content yourself with two or three grounds of demurrer, no ground covering more than five or six lines in writing.
7. Never demur when your demurrer will benefit your adversary more than your client.
8. Always demur when the bill shows a want of jurisdiction; the failure to demur in such a case may be fatal to your client.

§ 320. Pleas in Bar Defined.—When any matter fatal to the bill, or to any substantive part of it, appears on the face of the bill itself, it may be taken advantage of by a demurrer, and, sometimes, by a motion to dismiss; but, when a matter fatal to the bill, or to any substantive part of it, exists in fact, but is not apparent on the face of the bill, it must be brought before the Court by an affirmative plea, or by an answer. So, if some single allegation of the bill be false, and if the proof of its falsity will defeat the bill, or defeat a material part of the bill, such allegation may be denied by a negative plea. Hence, it may be generally stated that the office of a plea is either (1) to bring forward some single matter of fact, omitted from the bill, which, if true, will destroy the bill, or (2) to deny some single matter of fact alleged in the bill, which, if false, will deprive the bill of its Equity, and cause its dismissal. The former is called an affirmative plea, the latter a negative plea. It will thus be seen, that a plea is a special answer showing, or relying on, a single matter of fact as ground for dismissing the bill. But while the defence proper for a plea is one that presents a single point or matter of fact, which will cause the dismissal of the bill, or that part of it to which the plea applies, nevertheless it is not necessary that the defence should consist of a single fact: the defence may consist of a variety of circumstances, if they are all material, and all tend to one point. The office of a plea in bar is to narrow the issue, lessen the costs, and speed the decision of the controversy. For this reason, the Court does not ordinarily allow more than one plea in bar to be filed; for, if more than one plea be filed, the costs and delays would be nearly or quite as great, as though the defendant had answered.

An affirmative plea brings forward a matter of fact omitted from the bill, and which if alleged would have rendered the bill demurrable; while a negative plea denies a matter of fact which, if it had been omitted from the bill, would

1 Pleas in bar are seldom used in Tennessee Chancery practice, as all matters that can be set up by such pleas can now be set up in an answer. Code, § 4318. Such pleas, however, are largely considered in this book, 1st, because they are allowable and sometimes used; and 2d, because they show the defences that can be made by an answer, and illustrate the particularity required in an answer when certain special defences are set up. As to the practical value of pleas in bar, see, ante, § 318, note 8; and, post, §§ 324; 359.

2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 603; Stu. Eq. Pl., § 649. The matter of fact, which the plea presents, may be made up of several constituent facts. Thus, the plea of innocent purchaser brings forward the several facts constituting that defence: (1) Seizure in fee, by the defendant's vendor; (2) conveyance, in fee, to the defendant; (3) the payment of the purchase-price, and (4) the absence of notice of complainant's alleged equities.
§ 321. Pleas in Bar Distinguished from Pleas in Abatement.—The division of pleas in the English practice is into: (1) pleas to the jurisdiction; (2) pleas to the person of the complainant or defendant; (3) pleas to the bill; and (4) pleas in bar. In our practice, all pleas are divided into (1) pleas in abatement, and (2) pleas in bar. All pleas in abatement dispute the jurisdiction of the Court over the person, or the subject-matter. Pleas in bar include all defences, proper for a plea, that do not dispute the jurisdiction of the Court. The matter of a plea in bar can always be set up in an answer; whereas the matter of a plea in abatement can never be set up in an answer, but must always be pleaded specially, and pleaded before any other defence is made, or offered to be made. Pleas in abatement deny that the Court has any right to take any step at all in the suit, except to dismiss it. Pleas in bar concede the right of the Court to proceed in the cause, but deny that the complainant is entitled to the relief prayed, or at least to some substantive part of the relief prayed. In our practice pleas in bar range in effect all the way from a simple dismissal of the bill, as in case of a plea of a former suit pending, to a total bar of the subject-matter of the bill, as in case of plea of former judgment.

§ 322. The Various Kinds of Pleas in Bar.—Pleas in bar are, ordinarily, divided into: (1) the pure, or affirmative, (2) the negative, or impure, and (3) the anomalous.

1. Affirmative Pleas in Bar are those which merely state matter not apparent upon the bill, and rely upon the effect of such matter in bar of the complainant’s claim. Such a plea usually proceeds upon the ground that, admitting the case stated by the bill to be true, the matter suggested by the plea affords a sufficient reason why the complainant should not have the relief he prays, or the discovery which he seeks; and when such a plea is put in, the Court, in order to save expense to the parties, or to protect the defendant from a discovery which he ought not to be compelled to make, instantly decides upon the validity of the defence, taking the plea and the bill, so far as it is not contradicted by the plea, to be true.7

2 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 604.
4 Code, §§ 4318; 4309; 4385; Lowery v. Naff, 4 Cold., 370; Bennett v. Wilkins, 5 Cold., 240; Ken drick v. Davis, 3 Cold., 524.
9 Defences in bar are the same, whether set up in a plea, or in an answer; and, although the ordinary practice now is to set up these defences in an answer, rather than by plea; nevertheless, the defences are the same, and can be as well considered under the head of pleas, as under the head of answers. An answer is a mere series of pleas; and the averments necessary in a plea are equally necessary in an answer. Hence, the space devoted to pleas is, by no means, misused; but essential to a thorough understanding of the science of defensive pleading.
6 See Pleas in Abatement, ante, § 241.
* § 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 604.
The grounds of affirmative pleas in bar are almost as numerous as are the affirmative defences that may be set up in an answer; but the following are the principal grounds: (1) prematurity of the suit; (2) another suit pending; (3) a former judgment; (4) an award; (5) payment; (6) a release; (7) a stated account; (8) the statute of limitations; (9) the statute of frauds and perjuries; and (10) innocent purchaser.

2. Negative Pleas in Bar are those which, instead of admitting the facts stated in the bill, and destroying their effect by setting up some new fact or chain of facts, undertake to destroy the complainant’s right to relief, by denying some matter of fact stated in the bill on which his right depends. Thus, where a bill is filed to redeem, or to foreclose a mortgage, or to settle a partnership, a negative plea averring that there is no mortgage, or that there is no partnership, will be good. So this plea will lie to negative the character in which the complainant sues, or the defendant is sued, as where the complainant sues, or the defendant is sued, as heir, executor, administrator, guardian, or as a corporation, or partner.

A negative plea must, ordinarily, be supported by an answer, when the bill sets up matters which, if not denied by the answer, would, if true, defeat the plea.

Negative pleas in bar ordinarily deny (1) that the complainant possesses the character in which he sues, or (2) that the defendant possesses the character in which he is sued, or (3) that the complainant has the title he claims, or (4) that the defendant executed the instrument sued on, or (5) that complainants are partners, or (6) that the debt or demand sued on is of the value of fifty dollars.

3. Anomalous Pleas in Bar are those which, strictly speaking, neither affirm new matter nor negative the complainant’s title as alleged in the bill, but which reassert some fact stated in the bill, and which the bill seeks to impeach, and deny all the circumstances which the complainant relies upon as the ground upon which he seeks to impeach the fact so set up. Thus, where a bill is brought to impeach a decree, on the ground of fraud used in obtaining it, the decree may be pleaded in bar of the suit, with averments negating the charges of fraud. Anomalous pleas must be supported by an answer, when the bill seeks a discovery, or alleges facts or circumstances in avoidance of the admitted bar.

§ 323. The Rationale of Pleas in Bar.—The logic of an affirmative plea in bar is this: the complainant having omitted from the bill an essential matter of fact, which, if it had not been omitted, would have rendered the bill demurrable, the defendant may, by bringing this omitted essential matter of fact before the Court, destroy the apparent case contained in the bill, and in this way terminate the litigation, quickly and cheaply. Thus, a bill may show on its face a good cause of action, setting up many details, and praying for relief. If, however, the bill suppresses the fact that there has been a payment or a release, or a former adjudication, or that the suit is barred by the statutes of limitation, or that any other statutory, or equitable, defence exists, in any such case the defendant may set up this suppressed fact by a plea in bar, and, thereby, end the suit.

Separately considered in this Chapter. The characteristics of each of the three classes are distinctive; and any attempt to treat them under one head, or even under two heads, is sure to result in confusion if not in error. Beames, Story, and Daniel, find themselves obliged, constantly, to use qualifying phrases, and make exceptions, in treating of pleas; because, much that is true of one sort of pleas, is not true of the other two sorts. See Beames’ Pl. in Eq., 6; 7; 9-18; 36; 124-125; Sto. Eq. Pl., §§ 651; 660; 667-671. This confusion is almost entirely obviated by separating pleas into three classes, as has been done in the text. Daniel recognizes these three classes. 1 Dan. Ch. Fr., 604-607.
§ 324. PLEAS IN BAR.

A negative plea in bar denies some essential allegation contained in the bill, some averment on which the case rests; and the logic of the plea is: that, inasmuch as the complainant’s alleged rights all depend on a false allegation of a single essential matter of fact, it is unnecessary for the defendant to answer all the various charges and averments in the bill, when the suit can be ended by a plea denying the allegation of this one essential matter of fact. A negative plea in bar is the opposite of an affirmative plea; an affirmative plea in bar seeks to bring into the case an essential matter of fact which the bill has left out, while a negative plea seeks to strike out of the case an essential matter of fact which the bill has brought in. In other words, an affirmative plea seeks to end the suit by injecting into it a fatal fact, and a negative plea seeks to end the suit by extracting from it a vital fact.

It is plain, that both affirmative and negative pleas in bar are really nothing more than short, pointed answers, intended to confine the litigation to a single issue, that, if decided in favor of the defendant, would end the suit; and, it is for this reason, the Courts often disallow a plea in bar as a plea, but allow it to stand as an answer, with liberty to the complainant to except to it for insufficiency, as an answer.

§ 324. PLEAS IN BAR no Longer Necessary.—Under the old practice, the defendant was required to answer most searching interrogatories in reference to his business affairs; and could be forced to divulge the most important secrets relative to the matters in controversy. To avoid the unpleasant necessity of these disclosures, the lawyers of those days resorted to pleas in bar whenever they could be made available. The result was a very artificial system of pleading, quite foreign to the simplicity of the original Chancery practice. But now that a discovery is seldom sought by a bill, and parties are competent witnesses, the old necessity for pleas in bar has, to a great extent, ceased to exist; and they are, therefore, seldom used. Under our practice, a defendant is not required to specially plead any matter in bar, but may incorporate all matters of defence to the merits in his answer. Unless, therefore, the defendant desires to plead some matter in abatement, he will, ordinarily, set forth his defences in an answer, and thus avoid the perils and perplexities incident to pleas in bar. Nevertheless, when either a negative or affirmative plea in bar will greatly narrow the controversy, and thereby lessen costs, and shorten the litigation, such a plea would be good practice. As illustrations of cases where pleas in bar may be advantageously interposed, may be mentioned the following affirmative pleas: (1) accord and satisfaction, (2) payment, (3) account stated or settled, (4) award, (5) former judgment, (6) failure of consideration, (7) infancy, (8) coverture, (9) duress, (10) statute of limitations, (11) statute of frauds; and the following negative pleas: (1) denial of the character in which the complainant sues, or the defendant is sued; (2) denial of the relation alleged, and (3) non est factum.

12 Code, § 4318.
13 While pleas in bar are no longer necessary, and are, in fact, seldom resorted to, nevertheless their logic remains, and he who wishes to be a good pleader must master that logic. All the defences that can be made by plea in bar can, also, be made by answer; but the defences are the same, and the essential averments are the same; and no pleader can intelligently draw an answer who does not thoroughly understand the rules and principles applicable to pleas in bar. They illustrate the logic of legal defence; and the uniform ruling of our Courts is, that, when matter proper for a plea is incorporated in an answer, all the certainty required in a plea is necessary in the answer. Connell v. Furgason, 5 Cold., 405; Rhea v. Allison, 3 Head, 179; Stephens v. Porter, 11 Heisk., 348. See Arnold v. Kyle, 8 Bax., 322. As to the practical value of pleas, see ante, § 318, note 8.
ARTICLE II.

KINDS OF PLEAS IN BAR.

§ 325. Pleas to the Bill. Courts of Equity delight to do complete justice, and not by halves. This maxim means that the Court delights to do complete justice in one and the same suit, and not to do half justice in one suit, and risk the chance of doing the other half, in another suit about the same general cause of action. For this reason, Courts of Equity require (1) that all the persons necessary to enable the Court to do complete justice in one suit shall be made parties, either complainant or defendant; and (2) that one cause of action shall not be split into several.

These matters may be set up by plea; but such pleas, like demurrers by allowance, are not based on any ground of right in the defendant, and are allowed by the Court only in the interest of good pleading, and in aid of the proper administration of justice. The grounds of these two pleas may be more fully stated as follows:

1. That the Bill is for Only a Part of the Subject-Matter of the controversy, that the complainant is splitting up his cause of action, and is, thereby, giving occasion for a multiplicity of suits.1

2. That there is a Mis-Joiner of Parties Complainant, or a non-joiner of parties complainant or defendant.2 If the complainants have no joint right of action against the defendant, he may plead that fact. So, if there is such a deficiency of parties, whether complainants or defendants, that the Court will be unable to do complete justice, this fact may be pleaded, the plea showing the persons proper to be made parties, either by name or description, to the end that the complainant may know how to amend his bill,3 and bring the deficient parties before the Court, either by making them co-complainants, or by making them defendants, or both.

Pleas for want of proper parties are, however, seldom filed, as they very seldom profit the defendant. Under our Code, a non-joiner of parties is no sufficient cause for the dismissal of a bill in Equity, unless objection is made by motion to dismiss, or demurrer.4 On such a plea being sustained by proof, the cause will be ordered to stand over, with leave to the complainant to amend, but if the amendment is not made on a rule given, the bill may then be dismissed.5

§ 326. Pleas to the Person. These pleas, in effect, maintain that whatever may be the merits of the case on the facts, either (1) the complainant is not the person to call upon the Court to investigate them, or (2) if the complainant

4 Code, § 4325. This section is not in conflict with § 4337; for, while the latter section recognizes a plea for want of proper parties, yet it does not authorize a bill to be dismissed because of such a plea. The order on sustaining such a plea, would be to let the bill stand over, with leave to amend 5 It is difficult to classify pleas to the bill; their matter and effect are in abatement, but as they do not object to the jurisdiction of the Court, they may be set up in an answer, and must, therefore, in our practice, be classed among pleas in bar. See Code, §§ 4337; 4386; 4388.

by adding the necessary parties, as is done even where a demurrer for want of parties is allowed.

is the person, that the defendant is not the person he is alleged to be. These pleas question, ordinarily, either the character in which the complainant sues, or in which the defendant is sued, and include the following:

1. That the complainant is an infant, or married woman, or a person of unsound mind, and sues in his or her own name, without next friend, or guardian.

2. That the defendant is not a single woman, nor an adult, nor a person of sound mind.

3. That the complainant is suing, or the defendant is being sued, as administrator or executor, when he does not possess that character in this State, having been appointed by some other State.

4. That the complainant does not sustain the character in which he sues; that he is not a corporation, or an administrator, or executor, or guardian, or trustee, or partner, or heir, or husband, or wife, or widow, or devisee, or legatee, or distributee, or tenant in common.

5. That the defendant does not possess the character in which he is sued; that he is not a corporation, or an executor, or administrator, or guardian, or trustee, or heir, or husband, or tenant, or partner, or the official he is represented to be.

6. That the complainant or defendant is a bankrupt. If a complainant, who has made an assignment in bankruptcy, sues for a debt included in his assignment, the defendant can plead that fact in bar to the bill, or may allege it in his answer. On the other hand, if a defendant has been discharged in bankruptcy, and is sued upon a debt from which he has been discharged, he can plead such discharge in bar to the bill, or may set it up in his answer. The certified discharge is evidence of the jurisdiction of the Court granting the discharge, and of the regularity of the proceedings, and of the discharge itself. A discharge in bankruptcy does not, however, proprio vigore, nullify all antecedent debts, but must be pleaded, and if the defendant fails to plead his own discharge, or the assignment in bankruptcy by the complainant, he is deemed to have waived such defense, and must suffer judgment accordingly. But a discharge when pleaded and proved is conclusive and cannot be avoided.

These pleas, under the old practice, were generally classed as pleas in abatement, but in our practice they are pleas in bar, because they do not question the jurisdiction of the Court, and may, therefore, be relied on in an answer. The last three classes are, also, pleas in bar by the strict logic of pleading, because, if true, they do not abate the suit, but bar the complainant’s right of recovery against the defendant, and forever terminate the controversy. These pleas are the same in effect as those that deny the title of the complainant to institute the suit, or deny the interest of the defendant in the subject-matter of the suit.

PLEA THAT COMPLAINANT IS A MARRIED WOMAN.

[For title, commencement, and conclusion, see, post, § 340.]

The defendants, for plea to the bill filed against them in this cause, say,—

That the complainant, Sarah Doe, before and at the time of the filing of her said bill, was, and now is, a married woman, the wife of John Doe, who is still living and fully capable of suing, if necessary, in her behalf.

proceedings have taken away from the bankrupt complainant his rights, or from the bankrupt defendant his liability. Whatever destroys the complainant’s suit, and deprives him forever from recovering, may be pleaded in bar. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 638. If a party who sues as heir is not an heir, does not a plea denying his heirship as completely bar the suit as would a plea admitting his heirship, but denying his ancestor's title? The want of character cannot be cured as to that suit; and, if complainant subsequently becomes an heir, administrator, guardian, or other character, and then sues, as such, it is as much a new and different suit as that of a complainant, who, after being deceased, for want of a title to a particular farm, should bring a second suit, after acquiring that title.

9 10 Eq. Pl., §§ 708; 722.
11 Eq. Pl., § 734.

In all the cases in the last four classes stated in the text, the plea, if found true, forever terminates the controversy, by showing, either (1) that the complainant has no right to the relief he seeks, because he has no title to the character in which he sues; or, (2) that the defendant is not liable to the complainant, because he has not the character, and consequent liability, the complainant alleges; or, (3) that the bankruptcy
PLEA THAT DEFENDANT IS A MARRIED WOMAN.

[For title, commencement, and conclusion, see, post, § 340.]

The defendant, Mary Roe, for plea to the bill, says:
That when the bill in this cause was filed she was and now is married to one Richard Roe, who was then and still is her husband, and living in Knox county, Tennessee.

PLEA THAT COMPLAINANT IS AN INFANT.

[For title, commencement, and conclusion, see, post, § 340.]

That the said complainant at the time of filing his said bill was, and now is, an infant under the age of twenty-one years, and he sues by neither a guardian nor a next friend.

PLEA OF BANKRUPTCY OF THE DEFENDANT.

That, on the....day of.........., 190..., in the District Court of the United States for the............. District of Tennessee, he was adjudged a bankrupt, and was duly discharged from the debt or demand set forth in complainant's bill, as will more fully appear from said discharge which is herewith filed, marked A, and made a part of this plea.

§ 327. Plea of Title in the Defendant.—If the defendant's title be superior to the complainant's, he may plead it in bar. Such a plea will, generally speaking, be founded either (1) on an adverse possession sufficiently long to bar the suit, or (2) on a will, or (3) on a conveyance. To a bill brought by an heir at law against a devisee in possession, the latter may plead his title under the will, averring that the will was duly executed and proven. To a bill by an heir against the defendant in possession of land claimed by the former, the defendant may plead a conveyance executed to him by the ancestor. To a bill brought by the holder of the last deed in the regular chain of conveyances from the grantee against a person in possession, the latter may plead, (1) that he has had twenty years' notorious and continuous adverse possession of the land; or (2) that the land has been granted, and that he has had seven years' notorious and continuous adverse possession thereof, under a color of title; or (3) that he has had seven years' continuous adverse possession thereof. The last plea is a plea of the statute of limitations, as it merely bars the suit, while the first two pleas are pleas of title, the possession being merely the evidence of title, and standing in the place of a deed, and having the same force and effect. The matter of the first and second of the above named pleas may be relied on without being specially pleaded.

§ 328. Plea of Former Suit Pending.—In Courts of concurrent Equity jurisdiction, the one that first acquires jurisdiction thereby obtains exclusive jurisdiction. If, therefore, there be a suit pending, in another Court of concurrent Equity jurisdiction, between the same parties, concerning the same subject-matter, and for the same object, the defendant to the second suit may plead the pendency of the former suit as a defence to the second suit. But the pen-

15 The exact character and class of the plea of former suit depending seem involved in some doubt; and, in our Courts, the plea has oscillated between pleas in abatement and pleas in bar. It is said, in Green v. Neal, that it is not strictly a plea in abatement, but is in the nature of a plea in bar. 2 Heisk., 219. In Macy v. Childress, it is said to be in the nature of a plea in abatement. 2 Tenn. Ch. 25. And in Morley v. Power, 5 Lea, 697; and, in Connell v. Ferguson, it is said to be strictly, neither a plea in abatement, nor in bar, but a plea to the bill. 5 Cold., 405. In Tennessee, all pleas are either pleas in abatement, or pleas in bar. Code, § 4384. This is, manifestly, not a plea in bar, logically considered, for, if successful, it does not bar the suit, but only abates it; and if, after the plea is allowed, the former suit is dismissed by the complainant, he can bring a third suit in the Court, allowing the plea, against the same parties, and for the same purpose; and the dismissal of both, or either of the former suits, cannot be pleaded in bar of the third suit.

Nevertheless, the plea of former suit depending questions not so much the jurisdiction of the Court as the manifest injustice of permitting the defendant to be twice sued, at the same time, for the same matter; and, to this extent, it goes to the merits. For this reason, in our practice, this defense may be relied on in the answer; and, hence, under the Code, must be treated as in the nature of a plea in bar, as to the time, and manner, of setting it up; but as in the nature of a plea in abatement, when its effect is to be considered. Connell v. Ferguson, 5 Cold., 401; and cases cited above. Cited. Parmlee v. Railroad, 13 Lea, 600. It is said in Turley v. Turley, 1 Pick., 261, that all pleas may be relied upon in an answer, which do not go to the jurisdiction of the Court; and this is the true, and only, criterion in our State. And in Railroad v. Brigham, 11 Pick., 625, citing the above section of this book, (then, § 333,) it is held that a plea of former suit pending is a plea in abatement in our Circuit Courts, but a plea in bar in our Chancery Courts. See, ante §§ 241; 243; 321.
tendency of two suits 16 for the same subject-matter, and the same purpose, in two different Chancery Courts in this State, will not prevent both Courts from proceeding to a hearing where each suit is instituted by a different person. 17 The pendency of a suit in another State, or in a United States Court sitting in this State, cannot be pleaded in abatement, or in bar, to a suit in our own State between the same parties upon the same matter. 18

The plea should set forth, with certainty, (1) the commencement of the former suit, its general nature, and character, and objects and the relief prayed, giving the substance of the former bill or declaration; (2) that the second suit is for the same subject-matter as the first, and between the same parties, or their privies; (3) that the proceedings in the former suit were taken for the same purpose; (4) that there have been proceedings in the suit, such as an appearance, or process requiring an appearance, and (5) that the former suit is still pending. 19

It is not necessary that the former suit should be between precisely the same parties as the latter suit: it may be between their privies. 20 Nor is it necessary that the entire subject-matter of the latter suit be included in the former suit, for if the latter suit is for a part of the subject-matter of the former suit, the plea will lie. 21 Thus, if after a bill is filed to recover property, and a second bill is filed to recover a part of the same property, either by the original complainant or a purchaser from him, the pendency of the former suit may be pleaded.

Where there is a plea of the pendency of a former suit, the course is to obtain a reference of the plea to the Master to ascertain and report, whether both suits are substantially the same; and the course, which the Court has taken, where the second bill has appeared to embrace the whole subject in dispute, more completely than the first, has been, to dismiss the first bill with costs, and to direct the defendant in the second cause to answer, upon being paid the costs of a plea allowed; which puts the case on the second bill in the same situation as it would have been if the first bill had been dismissed before filing the second. 22

16 Searight v. Payne, 1 Tenn. Ch., 186; Macy v. Childress, 2 Tenn. Ch., 2; Cunningham v. Campbell, 3 Tenn. Ch., 491. It is stated, in works on Equity Pleading, that this plea will not lie when the pending suit is in a Court of law; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 742.

Story says, that where the defendant is being sued also at law, he is not without a remedy for the double vexation; let a Court of Equity will, upon the coming in of the defendant’s answer, put the complainant to his election, whether he will proceed in the suit at law, or in Equity; and, if he elects the latter, then, an injunction will issue to stay further proceedings at law; if he elects the former, then, the bill will be dismissed. But, if the complainant should fail in his suit at law, this dismissal of his bill will not be a bar to his bringing a second bill. Sto. Eq. Pl., § 742; Coke v. Dotson, 1 Tenn., (Overly), 6; Franklin v. Hersch, 3 Tenn. Ch., 469; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 126.

17 Moore v. Holt, 3 Tenn. Ch., 141. As instances of suits of this character may be mentioned, the plaintiff not willing to wind up a partnership, suits to partition land lying in different counties, or to sell them for partition.

18 Lockwood v. Nye, 2 Swan, 515; Cunningham v. Campbell, 3 Tenn. Ch., 491.

19 Brien v. Marsh, 1 Tenn. Ch., 628; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 137.

20 But it must be brought by the same complainant, or by some person in the same right; for, if the two bills are filed by different persons, though for the same purpose, the Court will not stop either before decree. Moore v. Holt, 3 Tenn. Ch., 141; but, see, Green v. Neal, 2 Heisk., 217, where it was held that a defendant, by a defendant, as administrator, for a devastavit, was good ground for a plea of former suit to a bill afterwards brought by a creditor against the same administrator for the same devastavit, on the ground that the first suit was for the creditor’s benefit, and he could have become a party to it by Motion, or even by Motion.

21 Searight v. Payne, 1 Tenn. Ch., 186. For tests when the plea will lie, see test of the sufficiency of a plea of former suit, supra, § 728. The test of the identity of the matters of the two suits, is whether the judgment in the first could be pleaded to the second in bar as a former adjudication. Moore v. Holt, 3 Tenn. Ch., 144; trained law.

22 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 738. Story evidently refers to cases where both suits are in the same Court. Exactly how the truth of a plea of former suit depending is to be ascertained, is not definitely settled.

In Green v. Neal, 2 Heisk., 217, the plea was referred to the Clerk and Master for a report as to whether the two suits were the same; and the question was determined on exceptions to his report; but, in this case, both suits were in the same Court. See Searight v. Payne, 1 Tenn. Ch., 191. In Allen v. Allen, after reviewing the authorities, it was held, by Chancellor Cooper, that this plea must be dealt with like all other pleas; set down for argument, if deemed bad; issue taken on it, if deemed good, but false. 3 Tenn. Ch., 145; and, see Montgomery v. Olwell, 1 Tenn. Ch., 184; Searight v. Payne, 1 Tenn. Ch., 190; and Macy v. Childress, 2 Tenn. Ch., 23.

The correct practice, under our statute, is the one indicated by Chancellor Cooper. Our statute prescribes one uniform course, on all pleas, whether in abatement, or in bar. Code, § 4393. Why refer the plea to the Master, when it raises such nice questions of law and fact as will inevitably result in exceptions to any report the Master may make? Why not have it decided by the Court, in the first instance, by an English lawyer; ours are, generally, not. The English practice, also, contemplates that both suits are in the same Court, England having but one Chancery Court; whereas, as a matter of fact, in our State, the Where a decree is made upon a bill brought by a creditor, on behalf of himself and of all other creditors of the same person, and another creditor comes in before the Master to take the benefit of the decree, and proves his debt, and then files a bill on behalf of himself and the other creditors, the defendants may plead the pendency of the former suit; for a person coming in under a decree, is a quasi party. The proper way for a creditor in such a situation to proceed, if the complainant in the original suit is dilatory, is by application to the Court for liberty to conduct the cause. 23

The matter of this plea may be incorporated in an answer, without the necessity of pleading it specially; but, when so incorporated, there must be the same certainty of averments that is required in a plea; 24 but as the plea of former suit depending need not be sworn to, 25 so an answer setting up the same defence need not be sworn to, when the oath to the answer is waived.

The plea may be good as to part of the two suits, and bad as to the residue, in which case it will be allowed to stand as a defence in so far as it is good. 26

The following form will illustrate the frame and essentials of a plea of former suit pending:

PLEA OF FORMER SUIT PENDING.

John Doe,

Richard Roe, et al.

In the Chancery Court, at Kingston.

The defendants, for plea to the bill filed against them in the above entitled cause, say, That heretofore, and before the complainant filed his present bill in this Court, to-wit: on the 5th day of March, 1891, he filed another bill of complaint in this Court, [or, in the Chancery Court of Loudon county] against these defendants for the same matters, and to the same effect, and for the like relief, as he, the complainant, does, by his present bill, demand and set forth, that is to say, the complainant in his said former bill, alleges that [Here give the substance of the former bill and its prayers.] to which said first bill these defendants did put in their joint and several answers, denying [Give the defences set up in the answer;] and other proceedings were thereupon had; and the said former bill is still pending in this Court, [or, in said Chancery Court] and the matters thereof undetermined; and, therefore, the said defendants do plead the said former bill, answer, and proceedings in bar of the present bill, and demand the judgment of this Court, whether they shall be required to make any other, or further answer thereto; and pray to be hence dismissed with their costs.

S. C. Brown, Solicitor.

§ 329. Plea of Former Judgment, or, Res Adjudicata.—If the same controversy has been already adjudicated on its merits between the same parties, The former suit is, generally, in some other Court. When we have a plain statute, it would seem to be as binding on our Courts as the practice of the Court of another nation, especially when the latter is not adapted to the state of facts here prevailing. See Green v. Neal, 2 Heisk., 217. As to the necessary evidence to sustain the plea, see Seagriff v. Payne, 1 Tenn. Ch., 186; Macey v. Childress, 2 Tenn. Ch., 24. Moore v. Holt, 3 Tenn. Ch., 142; Cunningham v. Campbell, 3 Tenn. Ch., 488. The proper proof in support of the plea is a certified copy of the record of the former suit. Parmalee v. Railroad, 13 Lea, 600. See, also, Williams v. Caplinger, 6 Hum., 237.

If the plea be found false, it has been decided that the defendant has the right to answer over, and contest the issue upon the merits. Cunningham v. Campbell, 3 Tenn. Ch., 488; See Battelle v. Youngstown Co., 16 Lea, 355. But why make an exception in favor of this plea when the statute makes no such exception? In Seagriff v. Payne, 1 Tenn. Ch., 186, Chancellor Cooper seemed to be of opinion that the practice in reference to this plea was unsettled. The Code, § 4393, prescribes one uniform practice in case of all pleas; and when we follow our own statutes the road is plain and straight, but when we disregard our own statutes for the sake of conformity to the English practice, then arise uncertainty and confusion. If our statute is observed, then, when a plea of former suit pending is filed, if deemed insufficient, it must be set down for argument; if deemed or held sufficient, a continuation of it must be filed. If found false by the Court at the hearing on the facts, the complainant is entitled to the same advantages as if it had been found false in fact by verdict at common law, that is, he is entitled to a final decree as on a judgment pro confesso. Code, § 4393; Bacon v. Parker, 2 Tenn., (Overt.), 55; Wilson v. Scruggs, 7 Lea, 635; Simpson v. Railway Co., 5 Pick., 304.

23 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 740.

24 Connel v. Furgason, 5 Cold., 405; Macey v. Childress, 2 Tenn. Ch., 25; Morley v. Power, 5 Lea, 697.

25 Green v. Neal, 2 Heisk., 219. All the authorities agree that when the former suit is in the same Court, the plea of such suit need not be sworn to; but there is a difference of opinion on the subject when the former suit is in another Court. Some authorities hold that in the latter case the plea must be sworn to. Mitt. Eq. Pl., 247, note; the great weight of authority, however, is to the effect that a plea of a former suit pending in another Court need not be sworn to. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 118; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 686-687; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 742, note; Beames, Pleas in Eq., 150. The reason given for not requiring a plea of former suit pending to be sworn to, is that the Court takes cognizance of its own records. This reason is good only when the former suit is in the same Court. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 688. On principle, it would seem that where the former suit is in another Court, the plea should be on oath.

or their privies, in a Court of competent jurisdiction, the judgment or decree of such Court may be pleaded in bar to the second suit. Such plea must, however, show that the issue and the subject-matter in the two suits were the same, and that the former suit was between substantially the same parties as the present suit; and so much of the former bill and answer must be set forth as is necessary to show that the same point was there in issue.

Although a final judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction, whether in this, or in any other State, will operate as a bar to a claim for the same matter in a Court of Equity, yet if, from any circumstance, such as fraud, mistake, accident, or surprise, it is against conscience that the defendant should avail himself of such a bar, a Court of Equity will interfere to set it aside. Where, however, a bill for that purpose is filed, the defendant may plead the judgment in bar, negating by averments, and denying by an answer in support of his plea, the equitable circumstances alleged in the bill upon which the judgment is sought to be impeached.

John Doe,

Richard Roe, and Roland Roe.

PLEA OF RES ADJUDICATA, OR FORMER JUDGMENT OR DECREES.

The defendants, for plea to the bill filed against them in this cause, say, That heretofore, and before the complainant filed his said bill in this Court, to-wit: on July 25, 1882, lie, the complainant, filed another bill in this Court [or in the Chancery Court at Knoxville] against the defendant for the same matter and demand and to the same effect, and for like relief, as he, the complainant does, by his present bill, demand and set forth; that is to say, the complainant in his said former bill alleged (1) that the defendant, Richard Roe, was justly indebted to him in the sum of one thousand dollars, evidenced by a note of hand, dated January 1, 1880, and due one day after the date thereof; and alleged (2) that this defendant, Richard Roe, intending and contriving not to pay said debt, did, on August 6, 1881, convey to this defendant, Roland Roe, the following tract of land in the 10th civil district of Knox county. [Here describe it exactly as it is described in complainant's former bill]; and alleged (3) that this conveyance was made and contrived of fraud, covin, collusion and guile, to the intent and purpose to delay, hinder and defraud the creditors of said Richard Roe of their just and lawful debts, and especially to delay, hinder and defraud complainant of his said debt; and alleged (4) that this defendant, Roland Roe, took said conveyance from his co-defendant, the defendant Richard Roe, well knowing the fraudulent purpose and character thereof, and with intent to aid his co-defendant, the defendant, Richard Roe, to hinder, delay and defraud his creditors, especially the complainant, of their just debts; and that said conveyance was collusively made, and that there was a secret agreement between the defendants whereunder the defendant, Roland Roe, was to hold said land in secret trust for the benefit of his co-defendant, Richard Roe; and alleged (5) that while said conveyance recites that it was made for the consideration of one thousand dollars in hand paid, the recital is false, and that no cash was paid at all, and that if any was pretended to be paid it was a mere device in furtherance of the covin, collusion and fraud whereby the defendants were contriving to hinder and delay the complainant; and (6) prayed for process against defendants, and for a decree against the defendant, Richard Roe, for the amount due complainant as hereinafore shown, and for principal and interest, and for costs of the suit, and to have said conveyance decreed to be fraudulent and void as against complainant, and said tract of land sold and the proceeds applied to the satisfaction of complainant's debt; and (7) prayed further that all other creditors of the defendant, Richard Roe, might be allowed to come in and prove their debts, that the bill be sustained as a general creditors' bill, that said property be attached, that the defendant, Roland Roe, be enjoined from selling, encumbering, or in any way disposing of said property, or any part thereof, and for general relief; all of which will fully and at large appear by reference to the record of said suit herewith filed, marked A, and made an exhibit to this plea, and a part hereof.

28 But a former judgment, between the same parties and for the same property, will not bar a new suit based upon a subsequently acquired title.
29 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 791.
30a It is best to file the record of the former judgment as an exhibit.

28 But a former judgment, between the same parties and for the same property, will not bar a new suit based upon a subsequently acquired title.
29 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 791.
30a It is best to file the record of the former judgment as an exhibit.

These defendants were served with process under said former bill, and made answer in substance as follows: (1) defendant, Richard Roe, denied the justness of said note, and averred that it was obtained from him by fraud and duress under the form of a compromise into which he was forced, and that the only consideration was money lost in gambling with the complainant; (2) both of these defendants answered fully to the charges of fraud, covin, collusion and guile, and denied each and all of them absolutely, and denied that there was any trust or secret agreement wherein this defendant, Roland Roe, was, or is, to hold said land for the benefit of his co-defendant, Richard Roe; and (3) both of these defendants averred that said conveyance was made in pursuance of a title-bond executed two years before said alleged note of hand, and that the consideration expressed in said conveyance was duly and wholly paid, eight hundred dollars of it before said alleged note was executed, and the remaining two hundred dollars on the day said conveyance was executed.

These defendants further say that on the issues thus made, proof was taken and the suit came on for final hearing, and was heard in and by this Court, [or, by the said Chancery Court at Knoxville,] and this [or said] Court decreed that said note for one thousand dollars, then and now sued on, was based on a gambling consideration, and was fraudulent and void, and disavowed said former bill of complainant, and taxed him with all the costs of said former bill and suit, and the complainant prayed no appeal from said decree.

Therefore, these defendants plead said former suit, proceedings and adjudication in bar of the present bill, and aver and say that said adjudication is and remains in full force and effect; and they pray the judgment of the Court whether they shall be required to answer further, and pray to be hence dismissed with their costs.

The question whether the former suit and the present one are for the same cause of action, the parties being substantially the same, is answered in the affirmative if the subject-matter of the present suit is either identical with, or included in, the subject-matter of the former suit, or the same question might have been raised. To ascertain whether the subject-matter of the present is included in the former suit, these two tests may be applied: 1st, Could the subject-matter of the present suit have been properly included in the adjudication of the former suit, the pleadings being considered? and 2d, Would the evidence pertinent in the present suit have been admissible in the former suit? If these two questions, and they are alternative forms of the same test, are answered affirmatively, then it conclusively follows that the two causes of action are the same, and the former adjudication is ground for a plea in bar of the present suit.

It is not required that the results of the two suits should be the same, any more than it is required that the results of two trials of the same suit at law should be the same. When a new trial of the same suit is had at law, the second verdict often differs from the first; and so the evidence in the second trial often differs from that in the first. These considerations show, that the decisive test whether the two suits are for the same cause of action, does not depend on whether the evidence in the second suit was actually introduced in the first, nor on whether the judgment in the first suit actually included the subject-matter of the second suit. The real questions are: 1st, Could the evidence in the present suit have been legally introduced in the former suit? 2d, Could the former judgment have legally included the subject-matter of the present suit?

If, therefore, the capacity and scope of the former suit were sufficient to have legitimately included the subject matter of the present suit in its adjudication, then, in the sense of the rule, the two suits are for the same cause of action, whether the former adjudication, as a matter of fact, embraces the precise subject-matter of the present suit, or not. The estoppel of a judgment or decree extends to all matters material to the decision which the parties might have brought forward.

And of course, the tests that apply to a plea of former judgment, apply with equal force to a plea of the pendency of a suit not yet determined.

§ 330 KINDS OF PLEAS IN BAR.

To constitute a good plea of former judgment, it must be shown by giving the substance of the former bill and answer, (1) that the same issue was joined in the former suit, as is tendered in the bill; (2) that the subject-matter of the suit was the same, and (3) that the proceedings in the former suit were for the same object and purpose, and if the former suit was decided in favor of the defendant, the plea must show, (4) that the former judgment was rendered on the merits, and (5) that the former judgment was final. If the facts set out in the plea or answer make out the defence, it is not necessary to use any merely technical phraseology, or to aver in so many words, that the defendant relies on the defence of res adjudicata.

§ 330. Plea of the Statute of Frauds.—Whenever any agreement required by the statute to be in writing exists really in parol, only, the statute may be pleaded to any bill filed to enforce such agreement; and so may the statute be pleaded to a bill setting up an essential verbal variation of a written contract within the statute. This plea is applicable to suits brought for the specific execution of contracts for the sale or lease of lands, when such contracts have not been reduced to writing, but that fact does not appear on the face of the bill. If the fact that the contract was in parol appear on the face of the bill, the proper method of taking advantage of the fact is by demurrer.

The plea must contain express averments, denying that the contract specified in the bill was reduced to writing and signed by the defendant, or by any person by him thereunto lawfully authorized; and must rely on the statute in bar of the bill.

If this defence is set up in an answer, it must be made specifically. A verbal contract for the sale of land is not void, but voidable only; and, if it is admitted in the answer, such written admission will be a compliance with the statute, and will authorize the Court to enforce the contract, unless the defendant in his answer expressly relies on and pleads the statute, in bar of the relief prayed.

The following is the form of a

PLEA OF THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

[For title, commencement, and conclusion, see, post, § 340.]

The defendant, Richard Roe, for plea to the bill filed against him in the above entitled cause, says, That neither he, nor any person by him, thereunto lawfully authorized, did ever sign any contract or agreement in writing, or any memorandum or note thereof, for the sale [lease or mortgage], to the complainant of the tract of land [for, lot] mentioned and described in the said bill. And the defendant pleads and relies on these matters, and the statute for the prevention of frauds and perjuries, in bar of complainant's suit; and prays to be dismissed.

§ 331. Plea of a Statute of Limitation.—If the bill show on its face that the recovery sought is barred by a statute of limitation, a demurrer will lie:
but if the bill suppress the fact of the bar, such fact must be set up by plea, the plea ordinarily averring, either that the cause of action did not accrue within the period specified in the particular statute of limitation relied on; or, in suits to recover specific property, that the defendant had been in continuous adverse possession for the time requisite to bar the recovery sought.

The bill, may, however, show that the cause of action arose more than the statutory limit of years before suit was brought, and may avoid the bar by alleging a fraudulent concealment of the cause of action by the defendant; or a new promise by him, or a statutory disability, or the non-residence of the defendant. In such a case, a pure plea would not lie; and the defendant must file an impure, or anomalous, plea, setting up the limitation relied on, and denying the new promise, or the disability, or the non-residence, or denying the fraud, or denying that the fraud, if any, was first discovered within the limitation. The plea should, also, be accompanied with an answer in its support, containing a like denial of the promise, or other matter charged, and all the circumstances thereof.

A statute of limitation which bars the remedy only must be pleaded, or specially set up in the answer, or it cannot be relied on at the hearing; but a statute which cuts off the right need not be pleaded, or relied on in the answer, but may be relied on at the hearing, as a bar to the complainant's title. Statutes of limitation which bar the right are those which give title to personal property, or to land, if not sued for within the period of limitation. Heirs, or other persons who inherit land, may plead the statute of limitations to protect their land in an administration suit, if the administrator fail to do so.

The plea must be verified, or it may be disregarded, but the verification may be waived by filing a replication to the plea, or by taking proof on it.

The following is the form of a

PLEA OF A STATUTE OF LIMITATION.

John Doe.

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.

The defendant, Robert Roe, for plea to the bill filed against him and others, in the above entitled cause, says, That the complainant's cause of action, if any he has, accrued more than destructive and vigilant. The interests of society require that there should be some end to the right to litigate. The law allows all claimants a reasonable time in which to bring suit; and if they fail to do so within this time, as a consequence, suffer loss, they must impute that loss to their own negligence or misplaced confidence, and not to the law, which was made for the general good, and cannot be warped to suit the exigencies of individuals. Statutes of limitations are made for the good of society, and for the peace and quiet of mankind, so that they may know when to be at rest, and when the troubles of threatened litigation may cease. Smith v. Hickman, Cook, 332. Nature, herself, appoints a season for everything, and if anything is not done in the season appointed, the wheels of time are not reversed for the benefit of any one. The doors of the Courts open at the summing of those only who are diligent. The statute of limitations, not only in this State, but generally, is now looked upon with favor, as a statute of repose. Codex v. Houshia, 3 Lea, 112; Coleson v. Blanton, 3 Hay, 152. Time is depicted carrying a scythe and a hour-glass. While, with his scythe, he cuts down the evidence which might protect a party against unjust demands, he, at the same time, with his hour-glass, metes out the period when unjust demands can be no longer sued on. Smith's Eq. Jur., 20. See, ante, § 70.

54 Bomar v. Hagler, 7 Lea, 89. In this case, the reason of the text is clearly shown by Judge Cooper.

Courts of Chancery are equally as much bound to respect the statutes of limitations as are Courts of law. Hickman v. Geither, 2 Yerg., 207. And in all cases where the Courts of law and Equity have concurrent jurisdiction, these statutes apply with as much vigor in one Court as in the other. Peebles v. Green, 6 Lea, 474. But, a Court of Chancery, having no such forms of actions as the statutes of limitations specify, it must, of necessity, look to the evidence; and if, upon that evidence, a suit at law would be barred, it will be barred in Equity. Phillips v. Richmond, 1 Ham., 21. In applying the statutes of limitations, Courts of Equity have made but one exception beyond those contained in the statute, and that is in cases where the cause of action has been concealed by the fraud of the defendant. Nicholson v. Lauderdale, 3 Hum., 206; Vance v. Motley, 8 Pick., 310; and where a beneficiary sues an express trustee, Hughes v. Brown, 4 Pick., 578.

The statutes of limitations now cover nearly the whole field of Equity, and the exceptions recognized in the Chancery Court are very few. By the act of 1885, ch, 9, vendors' liens on realty retained in the face of the deed, mortgages, deeds of trust, and assignments of reality to secure debts, are barred in ten years after the maturity of the debt.

six [or, ten] years before said bill was filed, [and if a new promise is alleged, add—and that he did not promise to pay the debt sued on within six years next before the filing of the bill.]

McCroskey & Peace, Sol's.

In drawing pleas of the statutes of limitations, it is a safe practice to follow the language of the statute itself as closely as possible, as by so doing the statute is pleaded in its own words.

The plea of the statute of limitations in case of suits brought to recover lands must conform to the statute relied on. The following form will aid the pleader:

PLEA OF SEVEN YEARS' ADVERSE POSSESSION.

John Doe,

vs.

No. 518.

In Chancery, at Wartburg.

The defendants, for plea to the bill filed against them in this cause, say, That they, and each of them, have had by themselves [or, by themselves and those through whom they claim, or, by those through whom they claim,] continuous adverse possession of the tract of land sued for by complainant, for more than seven years before the bill in this case was filed.

[Annex an affidavit and jurat, as in § 254, ante.]

WILLIAM A. HENDERSON, Solicitor.

§ 332. Plea of Innocent Purchaser.—From what has been above stated, it is obvious that where a conveyance is insisted upon by plea, as an adverse title, it must bear date at a period anterior to the commencement of the complainant's title as shown by the bill: there are cases, however, in which a conveyance may be insisted upon, though posterior in point of date, to the complainant's title. In such cases, however, it is necessary to the validity of the plea, that the conveyance should have been for a valuable consideration, and that, at the time it was perfected, the defendant, or the person to whom it was made, should not have had notice of the complainant's right. A plea of this sort is called a plea of purchase, for a valuable consideration, without notice; and it is founded upon the principle that where the defendant has an equal claim to the protection of a Court of Equity to defend his possession, as the complainant has to the assistance of the Court to assert his right, the Court will not interpose on either side.

Such a plea must contain the following essentials:

1. It Must Aver a Conveyance. It must show that the defendant holds the land in dispute under a deed of purchase, giving its date, and name of vendor.

An agreement to convey, or a title bond, is not sufficient.

2. Seisin, Actual or Pretended, in the Vendor. It must aver that the vendor was seized, or pretended to be seized, in fee, at the time he executed the conveyance. If the conveyance pleaded be of an estate in possession, the plea must aver that the vendor was in possession, at the time of the execution of the conveyance. And, if it be of a particular estate, and not in possession, it must set out how the vendor became entitled to the reversion. But, although a bill be brought by an heir, the plea need not, on that account, aver the purchase to be from the complainant's ancestor.

3. Payment of the Consideration Money. The plea must, also, distinctly aver that the consideration money, mentioned in the deed, was bona fide and truly paid, independently of the recital of the purchase deed; for, if the money be not paid, the plea will be overruled, as the purchaser is entitled to relief against the payment of it. The particular consideration must also be stated.

There can be no objection to the amount of the consideration; for, if it be valuable, the plea will not be invalidated by mere inadequacy. The question is, not whether the consideration is adequate, but whether it is valuable. For, if it be such a consideration as will not be deemed fraudulent within the statute, or is not merely nominal, it ought not to be impeached in Equity. 66 But the consideration must have been advanced at the time the title is taken; for a conveyance, in consideration of a pre-existing debt, will not protect the purchaser. 67

4. Denial of Notice of Complainant’s Claim. The plea must, also, deny notice of the complainant’s title, or claim, previous to the execution of the deed and payment of the purchase money; for till then, the transaction is not complete; and therefore, if the purchaser have notice previous to that time, he will be bound by it. The notice so denied must be notice of the existence of the complainant’s title, and not merely notice of the existence of a person who could claim under that title. 68 But a denial of notice, at the time of making the purchase and paying the purchase money, is good.

The notice must be positively and not evasively denied, and must be denied whether it be, or be not, charged by the bill. 69 If particular instances of notice, or circumstances of fraud are charged, the facts from which they are inferred must be denied as specially and particularly as charged. But the defendant need only by his plea deny notice generally, unless where facts are specially charged in the bill as evidence of notice.

If there are circumstances charged to show that the defendant had notice, the plea must be supported by an answer denying notice, and denying the particular facts alleged in the bill to show notice. But the denial of notice in the answer, does not exempt the defendant from the necessity of denying notice in his plea. 70

If, however, a defendant omit to deny notice either in his plea, or in his answer, and the complainant fails to object in the proper time and manner, he will be deemed to have waived the question of notice; and, even if notice be proved, it will avail nothing at the hearing. 71

A person affected by notice has the benefit of the want of notice to intermediate parties, and may shelter himself under a purchaser without notice. But notice to an agent is notice to the principal. 72

The defence of innocent purchaser cannot be made at the hearing, unless set up by plea, or answer; 73 and when set up in an answer must contain the same essential averments, and be otherwise as full and explicit, as though set up in a plea. 74 Indeed, in such a case, an answer is both a plea and an answer in support of it.

70 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., § 678. Story says that it is not the office of a plea to deny particular facts of notice, even if such particular facts are charged. Sto. Eq. Pl., § 806; and such would seem the better practice. It is the office of the answer supporting the plea to deny the particular facts; and, it is believed that a general denial of notice in a plea will be sufficient, even when the bill charges particular facts and circumstances to show notice. But in the latter case, the plea must be supported by an answer denying such particular facts and circumstances.

73 It cannot be made by demurrer. Dunham v. Harvey, 9 Cates, 620.
74 Rhea v. Allison, 3 Head, 177. Pomeroy gives the necessary allegations of a plea, or answer, setting up the defence of innocent purchaser, as follows:

The allegations of the plea, or of the answer, so far as it relates to this defence, must include all those particulars which are necessary to constitute a bona fide purchase. It should specify the consideration, which must appear from the averment to be "valuable," within the meaning of the rules upon that subject, and should show that it has actually been paid and not merely secured. It should also deny notice in the fullest and clearest manner, and this denial is necessary whether notice is charged in the complaint or not. The denial must correspond with the settled rules upon the subject of notice, so as to bring the case within the operation of those rules. The defendant must allege that the grantor from whom he immediately took his title, was seized, or appeared to be seized, or pretended to be seized, of a legal estate at the time of the conveyance, and also that such grantor was in possession, if the conveyance purported to be of a present estate in possession. Consequently, the defendant must allege that by the conveyance in question he either actually obtained a legal freehold estate, or else obtained what purported and appeared to be such an estate, and what he at the time purchased as, and supposed and believed to be, such a freehold legal estate — that he acquired a legal seizin from his immediate grantor. 3 Pum. Eq. Jur., § 725. See Dunham v. Harvey, 9 Cates, 620.
The following is a short but sufficient form of a plea of innocent purchaser:

PLEA OF INNOCENT PURCHASER.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al.

This defendant, Romeo Roe, for plea to the bill filed against him and others, in this cause, says:

That on the 8th day of May, 1899, his co-defendant, Richard Roe, was seized, or pretended to be seized, in fee, of the lot described in the bill, and was in actual possession thereof, and this defendant on said day purchased from said Richard Roe said lot, for the consideration of one thousand dollars, which was then and there truly and actually paid to said Richard Roe, and this defendant then and there took from said Richard Roe, in pursuance of said purchase, a deed conveying to this defendant said lot in fee, with full covenants of seizin, right to convey, and general warranty of title, which deed was on said day duly acknowledged, probated, and registered. And this defendant avers that, at and before the taking of said deed, and the payment of said money, he had no notice whatever of the title and claim the complainant sets up to said lot in his bill, and had no reason to believe or suspect that he had any such title or claim, or any claim or title whatsoever, but he verily believed that said Richard Roe then had the legal and equitable right to sell and convey said lot; and that in all he did in making said purchase and in paying said consideration money, this defendant acted in good faith, without any notice whatever of complainant's alleged rights, and without any intention in any way to injure or defraud the complainant. And so this defendant insists and pleads that he is a bona fide purchaser of said lot, for a good and valuable consideration, and without notice of the title and claim set up by the complainant to said lot; and he, therefore, prays to be dismissed.

If the bill charges circumstances showing notice, or charges fraud, the plea must be supported by an answer denying the circumstances, or the fraud.\(^75\)

This answer may follow the plea, thus:

ANSWER SUPPORTING A PLEA.\(^76,77\)

And this defendant, not waiving his said plea, but relying thereon, and for better supporting the same, for answer to said bill, says: [then proceed with a denial of the particular facts or circumstances alleged in the bill as evidence of notice; or with a denial of the fraud alleged; and conclude the answer in the usual way.]

\(\text{§ 333. Pleas of Stated, and of Settled Accounts.}—\text{When a bill is filed for the purpose of compelling the defendant to account, if there has already been a stated account, or if there has been a settled account, he may set up this defence by plea in bar.}\)

An account is stated when the matters of charge and discharge on both sides have been examined, a balance struck, and such balance admitted to be correct. When such balance is paid, the account is called a settled account.\(^77\)

To sustain a plea of stated account, the account must be shown to be (1) in writing, (2) that a balance was struck, (3) what that balance was, (4) that the balance was agreed on as correct, and, (5) that the settlement resulting in such balance was final.\(^78\) It is not necessary to aver or prove that the account was settled upon a minute investigation of items, a general agreement or composition being sufficient; nor will the fact that errors were excepted be a sufficient ground for opening an account, unless specific errors are pointed out in the bill.\(^79\) It is not essential to the validity of a stated account as a bar, that it should be signed by the parties; it will be sufficient if it has been delivered and acquiesced in for a considerable length of time. The plea must, however, aver that the stated account is just and true, to the best of the defendant's knowledge and belief.\(^80\) Where fraud is charged, and the defendant pleads the account in bar, he must in his supporting answer deny the allegations charging fraud.\(^81\)

Settlements with the County Court, made by executors, administrators, and guardians, when the beneficiaries are infants, are only prima facie correct, and

May be opened without surcharging and falsifying them; they will, however, be prima facie evidence in the taking of the general account. But where the beneficiaries are of age, and have notice of the settlement, and the right of contest and appeal, such settlements have all the force and effect of a stated account.

A stated account will not be opened, unless the complainant charges and clearly proves either fraud on the defendant, or specific error caused by mistake. Where, however, the relation of attorney and client, principal and agent, guardian and ward, or trustee and beneficiary, exists, the Court will open a stated account on much less proof than when there is no such confidential relation; and will do so in such cases even where only general errors are pointed out, if fraud or undue influence be shown.

But where there is no fraud, and where errors or mistakes only are shown to exist in the account, the account will not be opened, but the complainant will be permitted merely to surcharge and falsify it. This is an important distinction, because, where an account is opened, the whole of it may be unraveled, and the parties will not be bound by deductions agreed upon between them, on taking the former account. The onus probandi is always on the party having the liberty to surcharge and falsify; for the Court takes it as a stated account. If the party can show omission for which there ought to be credit, it will be added, (which is a surcharge), or of any wrong charge is inserted, it will be deducted, (which is a falsification). This, however, must be done by proof on his side. Although a party seeking to open a settled account, must specify the errors he insists upon, yet it is not necessary that he should, at the hearing, prove all the errors specified in his bill. If he proves some of them, he entitles himself to a decree giving him liberty to surcharge and falsify. Where parties are at liberty to surcharge and falsify, they are not confined to mere errors of fact, but may take advantage of errors of law; and where one party is allowed to surcharge and falsify, the other is allowed the same privilege.

PLEA OF STATED, OR SETTLED ACCOUNT.

John Doe,
vs.

In Chancery, at Knoxville.

The defendant, Richard Roe, for plea to so much of the bill as seeks an account, says that on or about the 10th day of April, 1893, [giving the date of the settlement] the complainant and defendant made and stated a full and final account in writing of all the matters and things referred to in the bill, which account was true and just to the best of his knowledge and belief, and resulted in a balance of $200, [state the amount] due the defendant, [or, the complainant.] [If the account was settled then add.] And that the complainant approved said account and paid [or received] the said balance due from [or to] him on said account, on or about the 15th day of April, 1893 [giving the date of the payment. If the defendant received the balance and gave a receipt thereon, then add.] And thereupon the complainant gave the defendant a receipt for the same as follows: [here copy it in full]. [If vouchers were delivered up or destroyed, then add:] thereupon defendant surrendered [or, with complainant's consent, destroyed] all his vouchers relating to said settlement. [If the bill charges fraud in avoidance of the account, add:] and the defendant denies each and every allegation of fraud contained in the bill.

Therefore the defendant pleads said stated [or settled] account in bar of the complainant's bill, and prays to be hence dismissed.

[Annex affidavit of the truth of the plea. See post, § 340.]
A. B., Solicitor.

If fraud is charged in the bill as a ground for opening the account, then not only must the plea deny the fraud, but it must be accompanied by an answer denying the fraud.

§ 334. Other Pleas in Bar.—There are various other pleas in bar, among which the following are the most usual:

1. Plea of an Award. Whenever the matters set up in a bill as the ground... of relief, have been included in an award, such award may be pleaded to the bill. If the bill be filed to set aside an award, the award may be pleaded in bar to the bill, in which case the fraud, or misconduct alleged in the bill, must be denied by way of averment in the plea, and the plea must be supported by an answer denying all the charges which assail the award. An agreement to refer the matters in dispute to arbitrators cannot, however, be pleaded.

2. Plea of a Release, Payment, or Accord and Satisfaction. If the complainant has released his claim, or if he has been paid, or if there has been an accord and satisfaction, these matters may be pleaded in bar of a bill seeking a recovery on the same claim, or cause of action. In such a case, the consideration upon which the release was made, or the amount paid, or the terms of the accord and satisfaction, should be specified in the plea; and if the bill seeks to avoid the release, payment, or satisfaction, because of fraud, duress, accident, or mistake, these grounds must all be generally denied by the plea, and must be specially denied by an answer in support of the plea.

3. Plea of Prematurity of the Suit. If the bill should be filed before some necessary preliminary act has been done, or before the debt sued on was due, or before the right to make demand had vested, or before an executor had probated the will, in any such case the defendant may plead the prematurity of the suit in bar of the bill.

4. Plea of Non est Factum. This plea is interposed when the suit is based on some obligation purporting and alleged to be executed by the defendant, and he wishes to deny that he executed it.

PLEA OF NON EST FACTUM.

[For title, commencement, and conclusion, see post, § 340.]

That the note, [bond, or other instrument sued on in the bill,] upon which the complainant's bill is founded, was not executed by him, or by any one authorized to bind him in the premises.

The plea must be verified. See ante, § 254.

5. Plea that Complainant is Connected with a Trust. When the complainant, or any other person or corporation interested in the prosecution of the suit, is connected with, or the cause of action grows out of, some business with a trust, that fact may be pleaded in bar of the suit.

PLEA THAT COMPLAINANT IS CONNECTED WITH A TRUST.

[For title, commencement, and conclusion, see post, § 340.]

The defendant for plea to the bill filed against him in this cause, says that the complainant [or William Brown, one of the complainants,] is a member of, or connected with, and the cause of action grows out of business, or a transaction with, a trust [pool, contract, arrangement, or combination] made with a view, or which tend, to prevent full and free competition in [Here insert some one or more of the things declared illegal by the Act of 1891, ch. 218, sec. 1, such as] the manufacture and sale of tobacco in this State.

6. Plea of Tender. When, before the bill was filed, the defendant tendered to the complainant all the complainant was entitled to, such tender can be pleaded in bar to the bill.

PLEA OF TENDER OF MONEY.

[For title, commencement, and conclusion, see post, § 340.]

The defendant for plea says that after complainant's cause of action accrued, and before the bill in this case was filed, he tendered to complainant the sum of,............dollars [stating the amount], which was the full amount due complainant on the note, [contract, account, or other cause of action,] sued on by him in his said bill, but the complainant refused to receive the same. The defendant has always been, and still is, ready and willing to pay said sum to the complainant, and he now brings it into Court along with this, his plea, and deposits it with the Clerk and Master, and tenders it to the complainant.

7. Plea of an Estoppel. All matters relied on as an estoppel must be specifically pleaded, whether deeds, judgments, decrees, records, agreements, conduct or words.

8. Other Pleas in Bar Every matter of defence, outside of the denial of the charges in the bill, must be specially set up, such as, besides pleas already stated, (1) non-performance of condition precedent, (2) set-off, (3) recoupment, (4) novation, (5) alteration of contract, (6) rescission of contract, (5) fraud, (6) failure of consideration, (7) consideration, illegal or immoral, (8) infancy or coverture of defendant when contract was made, or obligation incurred, (9) duress and (10) drunkenness.

A plea or set-off must be so definite and specific that an issue of fact may be made thereon.\(^4\)

\(^5\) Sto. Eq. Pl., § 657. The reason why a defendant is not, generally, allowed to plead more than one plea in Equity, while he can plead several at law, is, that the defendant at law has no opportunity of filing an answer to all the various matters set up in the declaration. The reason a plea is allowed in Equity, lessen the expense, to determine the suit upon a single point. Whereas, if more than one plea should be allowed, then, there may be as many pleas as there are matters to be put in issue; and, thus, pleas would tend to lengthen the litigation, and increase the expense. As an answer is only a connected series of pleas, if more than one plea is necessary, the defendant should almost invariably be required to answer. Benson v. Jones, 1 Tenn. Ch., 498; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 657, note; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 608.

§ 336. Requisites of an Affirmative Plea.—An affirmative plea, in addition to the characteristics and requisites stated in the preceding section, must also possess the following:

1. It must be founded on some new matter, that is, on matter not apparent on the face of the bill; or, as the technical phrase is, it must be founded on some matter dehors the bill.9

2. It must not only reduce the case to a single point, but it must be such a point as is issuable; and also, such as, if decided in favor of the plea, will result in the dismissal, or bar of the bill.10

3. It must be direct and positive, and not state matters by way of argument, or inference. Where, however, the defendant is executor, administrator, or heir, and the facts are not in his personal knowledge, he may swear to the plea, according to his best knowledge and belief.11

4. It must clearly and distinctly aver all the facts necessary to render the plea a complete defence to so much of the case made by the bill as the plea is intended to cover, so that the complainant may, if he chooses, take issue upon it. Averments are also necessary to exclude intendments, which would otherwise be made against the pleader.12

§ 337. Requisites of a Negative Plea.—The office of a negative plea is not to bring forward some new matter to displace the Equity of the bill, but to deny some single material fact alleged in the bill, and thus end the suit. To illustrate: if the bill be by a party claiming to be an heir, personal representative, partner, or tenant in common, it is manifest that if he does not possess this character he cannot maintain his suit, and the office of a negative plea is to put in issue this character in which the complainant sues, by emphatically and briefly denying that he possesses such character, thus reducing the contest to a single narrow issue.13 And so, the defendant may, by a negative plea, deny the character of heir, administrator, guardian, partner, or husband, attributed to him by the bill, if the result of the suit hinges on his possessing that character.

A negative plea is not, however, by any means, confined to a denial of the character in which a complainant sues, or the defendant is sued, but such a plea is proper whenever any alleged fact, essential to the relief sought, is false, and can be so negatived as to present a single narrow issue of fact, decisive of the suit. A negative plea may not only be filed to put in issue some single fact on which the complainant’s right to relief depends, but may, also, be used to deny any single fact on which the bill rests the alleged liability of the defendant.

9 Stou. Eq. Pl., § 692.
10 Stou. Eq. Pl., § 661.
A negative plea is often required to be supported by an answer, especially when the Equity of the bill is based on charges of fraud, or of notice.

§ 338. Requisite of an Anomalous Plea.—An anomalous plea, as already shown, is one which reasserts some matters stated in the bill, and which the bill seeks to impeach, and denies the alleged matters of impeachment. Thus, where a bill is filed to impeach a decree on the ground of fraud used in obtaining it, the defendant may plead the decree in bar of the suit, aiding his plea by averments negating the charges of fraud alleged in the bill. Of the same nature are pleas, setting up the award itself, to a bill filed for the purpose of impeaching it on the ground of partiality or fraud in the arbitrators; and pleas setting up stated accounts and releases where bills have been filed for the purpose of setting them aside. Such pleas simply rely on the decree, award, account, or release, and deny the matters of avoidance alleged in the bill; in other words, an anomalous plea relies on that which the bill seeks to avoid, and seeks to avoid that on which the bill relies.

Anomalous pleas must be supported by an answer, denying all the facts and circumstances charged as matters of fraud in the bill.

§ 339. Frame of a Plea.—Formerly pleas, like demurrers, were prefaced by a protestation against any admission of the facts stated in the bill; but this always unnecessary precaution is now obsolete; and the defendant now, after giving the style of the cause and of the Court, proceeds at once to state the extent to which his plea goes; as whether it is to the whole bill, or to part only of the bill; and in the latter case, to what part it is intended to apply: then follows the substance of the plea, or matter relied upon, as an objection to the jurisdiction of the Court, or to the person of the complainant, or of the defendant, or in the bar of the suit, together with such averments as are requisite and necessary to support it. The conclusion of the plea is a prayer for the judgment of the Court, whether the defendant ought to be compelled to make any further answer to the bill, or to the part of it to which the plea is offered, or the plea may conclude with a simple prayer to be dismissed generally, or to be dismissed as to so much of the bill as the plea covers.

Pleas in bar setting up any defence, not a matter of record, must be sworn to; but pleas of any matter of record in the Court itself, need not be upon oath. Pleas must also be signed by counsel. The verification of a plea in behalf of a firm, by one member of the firm, is sufficient. A plea may be verified by the Solicitor, if he show in his affidavit that he is acquainted with the facts set out in the plea. A plea may be sworn to before any person authorized to swear a defendant to his answer.

§ 340. Forms of Pleas in Bar.—Pleas, like all other pleadings in Chancery, were formerly long and complicated; but the Code sweeps away all prolixity, and discountenances all unnecessary and false allegations in pleadings; and pleas in Chancery should now conform to the terse models set forth in the Code, for Courts of Law. The following is a proper

FORM OF A NEGATIVE PLEA IN BAR.

John Doe,
v. Richard Roe, Adm'r, &c.

In the Chancery Court, at Jacksboro.

The defendant, Richard Roe, who is sued in said cause as administrator of Robert Roe, deceased, for plea to the bill, says, that he is not, and never has been, administrator of the estate of said Robert Roe, deceased, as said bill alleges. Wherefore, he prays to be dismissed with his costs.

[Affidavit and jurat, as above.]

There is no difference in form between a plea in bar and a plea in abatement, and the fact whether a plea is in bar, or in abatement, is ascertained by the subject-matter and not by the form.

If a plea in bar is to only a part of the bill, it must so show on its face; and must be expressly limited to such part, or it will be disallowed on argument, because insufficient to bar the whole bill.

If the bill should seek to enforce other equities besides, for instance, a parol sale of land, the plea of the statute of frauds should be limited as follows:

FORM OF A PLEA TO PART OF A BILL.

John Doe,

The defendant, Richard Roe, for plea to so much of the bill as seeks to enforce an alleged contract for the sale of land therein described, says:

That neither he, nor any other person by him thereunto lawfully authorized, ever signed any contract or agreement, or any memorandum or note thereof, in writing, for the sale of said land, or of any part thereof, or of any interest therein, to the complainant.

Wherefore, he prays to be hence dismissed as to so much of said bill as seeks to enforce said contract of sale.

C. J. Sawyers, Solicitor.

But where a part of a bill is pleaded to, the remainder of the bill must be answered; and in answering, care must be observed to limit the answer to so 25 Pleas that require to be sustained by evidence, not of record, must be sworn to. Ante, § 339.

26 Code, § 2908.
27 The old form of the title and commencement of pleas is as follows:

The plea of Richard Roe to the complaint filed against him in the Chancery Court at Jacksboro, by John Doe.

This defendant, by protestation, not confessing any of the matters in said bill to be true, for plea to said bill for, for plea to so much of said bill as prays, &c.] says: [Stating the ground of the plea.]

And the old form of the conclusion of a plea is as follows:

Therefore this defendant doth plead said matter to said bill, and prays the judgment of the Court whether he should be compelled to make any further answer to the said bill for, to so much of said bill as is hereinbefore pleaded to; and prays to be hence dismissed with his reasonable costs.

much of the bill as has not been pleaded to; for, if the whole bill be answered, the answer will overrule the plea. Where the plea covers only a part of the bill, the answer to the remainder of the bill may follow the plea, on the same page of the paper, as follows:

And the said defendant, not waiving his said plea, but insisting thereon, for answer to the remainder of said bill, says: [Here set out the answer to so much of the bill as is not covered by the plea.]

ARTICLE IV.

PLEAS SUPPORTED BY AN ANSWER.

§ 341. When a Plea Must be Supported by an Answer.
§ 342. Why a Plea Must be Supported by an Answer.
§ 343. Origin of this Class of Pleas.
§ 344. Character of Such a Plea.
§ 345. Character of the Supporting Answer.

§ 341. When a Plea Must be Supported by an Answer.—The cases, in which it is necessary that a plea should be supported by an answer, may be conveniently divided into: 1, Those where the defendant denies some allegation in the bill necessary to the relief the complainant prays; 2, Those where the complainant admits the existence of a legal bar, but alleges some equitable circumstances to avoid the effect of the bar; and 3, Those where the complainant does not admit the existence of any legal bar, but charges some circumstances, which may be true, and to which there may be a valid ground of plea, and also charges other circumstances which are inconsistent with the substantial validity of the plea. 1 In the first case, the defendant must answer when the bill charges facts or circumstances which would tend to disprove, or otherwise invalidate, the plea, responding in his answer to all matters not expressly met and denied by his plea. 2 In the second case, the defendant may insist, by way of plea, upon the legal bar, denying the circumstances, which would avoid it; and he must accompany the plea with an answer, making a discovery as to all the circumstances charged in the bill, in support of his plea. 3 In the third case, the defendant must distinguish those facts, which if true, would not invalidate or disprove his plea; and plead to the relief and discovery sought with regard to them. And he must then accompany the plea with an answer to those facts, and to those only, which if true, would disprove, or invalidate his plea, and to all the matters which are specially alleged as evidence of those facts.

Even a plea in abatement denying the ground of an attachment may be properly supported by an answer denying the various charges of misconduct tending to support the fraudulent transfer alleged as the ground for an attachment. 4

28 The answer will be deemed an answer to the whole bill, whether so intended or not, and although the whole bill be not in fact answered, unless the answer show affirmatively on its face that it is an answer to a part only of the bill.
1 Benson v. Jones, 1 Tenn. Ch., 498. Seifred v. People’s Bank, 1 Bax., 200; Pigue v. Young, 1 Pick., 263.
2 The most common cases of this class are bills (1) to avoid the effect of a judgment at law, (2) to avoid the effect of a judgment at law, (3) to set aside a release, or (4) an award, or (5) to open a stated account. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 616.
3 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 616; Sto. Eq. Pr., § 674.
4 Seifred v. People’s Bank, 1 Bax., 200; Pigue v. Young, 1 Pick., 263. The pleas in abatement in these cases were strictly negative pleas, and the supporting answers were clearly within the rule applicable to such cases.
Where the bill charges fraud or notice, or other equitable matter in avoidance of the bar pleaded, the plea must be supported by an answer denying the fraud, notice, and other facts and circumstances alleged by the bill in avoidance.

§ 342. Why a Plea Must be Supported by an Answer.—All negative and anomalous pleas in bar of a suit must be supported by an answer, when a discovery is prayed in the bill.

It has heretofore been fully shown that a bill is both a pleading and an interrogation, and that an answer under oath is both a pleading and a deposition. As a pleading, the bill may be met by a negative or anomalous plea, denying some essential fact contained in it, but such pleas are no answer to the matters of interrogation, and the interrogation may be intended to obtain the very evidence necessary to maintain the bill, and defeat the plea. An affirmative plea does not deny any matter contained in the bill; indeed, for all the purposes of the plea, it admits all of the matters of fact charged in the bill. An affirmative plea, therefore, in effect, admits the bill, but seeks to displace its Equity, by bringing forward a single additional matter of fact. Inasmuch, then, as an affirmative plea admits the truth of the bill, the complainant cannot find fault with the defendant for not answering his interrogation. Nor can the complainant object to a plea because not supported by an answer, when he in his bill has waived an answer on oath.

Anomalous and negative pleas, however, deny some essential fact or facts alleged by the complainant, and at the same time admit nothing, but leave the complainant's interrogation wholly unanswered, thus depriving him of the very evidence his bill was, in part, filed to obtain in furtherance of his case. And, besides, if such a plea is not supported by an answer negating those charges and allegations of the bill which tend to sustain the matter denied by the plea, such charges and allegations become evidence for complainant on argument of the sufficiency of the plea.

§ 343. Origin of This Class of Pleas.—The origin of this class of pleas may be easily traced to a change in the frame and character of bills and pleadings, from those which existed under the old practice of the Court. Bills were formerly of a very simple character, not taking any notice of the real or supposed defence which would be set up by the defendant. The defence came out upon a plea; the replication stated the matter in avoidance of the plea; then the rejoinder denied the matter in the replication; and the parties were then at issue. When, for example, according to the old practice, a complainant by his bill stated a case for relief, if there had been a former decree on the merits, which he sought to set aside on account of fraud in obtaining the decree, the bill did not, in any manner whatsoever, allude to the decree. It was left to the defendant to plead the decree, as a defence barring the complainant's right. And the complainant then, by his replication, would reply that the decree had been obtained by fraud; by which the complainant would admit that the decree was a bar, if not capable of impeachment on the ground of fraud. The defendant would, by his rejoinder, avoid or deny the charge of fraud, and sustain the decree; and the issue would be simply on the charge of fraud.

But, when a change of the frame of pleadings took place, and special replications, rejoinders, and surrejoinders, fell into disuse, and the bill, instead of relying solely on the matter constituting the complainant's original case, proceeded to anticipate the defence, and charged facts to avoid that defence (thus performing the double functions of a bill, and of a replication under the old practice), and required a discovery as to the matters charged, a change in the mode of making his defence became indispensable for the protection of the defendant; and he was compelled to put in a plea, which was, in part, both a plea and a rejoinder. That is, he was obliged to plead the bar, and to negative the charges and circumstances which sought to avoid it. And, as a discovery was sought in relation to these very matters charged in avoidance, he was also compelled to accompany his plea with an answer, fully discovering and responding to these matters. The material issue thus made between the parties was not the bar set up in defence; but it was the facts and charges set up in the bill to avoid it. Nor was the plea, under such circumstances, liable to the imputation of duplicity; for it contained, in the whole, but one single defence. And the answer was necessary in support of the plea; because the complainant was entitled to the discovery of the facts and charges, stated in his bill in avoidance of the bar, and which might be indispensable to prove his case at the hearing.14 And while such an answer is technically called an answer in support of the plea, nevertheless it is, in effect, often an answer in support of the bill.

6 See post, § 345.

12 Seifred v. People's Bank, 1 Bax., 200.
13 Sto. Eq. Pl., § 676.

§ 344. Character of Such a Plea.—The plea, as well as the answer, must contain averments negating the facts and circumstances set up in the bill in avoidance of the bar admitted by the bill. For otherwise, the plea will not amount to a complete defence to the bill, since the denial of those facts and circumstances is in truth the only point in the controversy. If those facts and circumstances do not exist, the bar or defence is admitted by the complainant to be perfect. If they do exist, the defendant must equally admit that the bar or defence is fatally defective.15 In drawing the plea, it is important to keep in mind the distinction between so much of the bill as is a pleading, and the part that is a mere interrogation. The office of the plea is to effectually meet so much of the bill as is a pleading, and no more. It should not cover any part of the bill that is in effect a mere interrogation calling for a discovery. A plea is not rendered double by the insertion of several averments16 that are necessary to exclude conclusions arising from allegations in the bill to anticipate and defeat the bar set up in the plea.

Hence it is, that, in every case where an answer is required to accompany a plea, the plea should not cover the whole bill. It should cover so much of the bill only as is a pleading; and not cover any part of the bill which relates to the discovery of the particular facts; for, as to these, the complainant has a right to require an answer. If the plea covers such a discovery, it will be bad; because the defendant is bound to make that discovery.17

It must be remembered that the answer in support of the plea is no part of the defence. The defence is the matter set up in the plea, and the answer is merely the evidence the complainant has called for to sustain his case,18 although when that evidence makes for the defendant, the effect of the answer is to aid the latter, and not the complainant.

§ 345. Character of the Supporting Answer.—In drawing the answer in support of the plea, the fact that a bill is both a pleading and an interrogation must be kept in mind. The object of the answer is two fold: 1st, To respond to the matter charged in support of the case made by the bill, and to this extent it is a sort of deposition; and 2d, To negative those averments and charges in the bill, which, if not denied by the answer, would, by intendment, show the plea to be insufficient.19

§ 346 PLEAS IN BAR.

The answer in support of a plea must be full and clear, or it will not support the plea; for the Court will take all of the bill not covered by the plea, or the answer, to be true.\(^{20}\) If there is any charge in the bill, which is an equitable circumstance in favor of the complainant's case against the matter pleaded, such as fraud, or notice of title, that charge must be denied by way of answer, as well as by averment in the plea. In such a case, the answer must be full and clear, or it will not be effectual to support the plea; for the Court will intend the matters so charged against the pleader, unless they are fully and clearly denied. But if they are in substance fully and clearly denied, it may be sufficient to support the plea, although all the circumstances charged in the bill may not be precisely answered. Even though the Court, upon argument of the plea, may hold these charges sufficiently denied by the answer to exclude inteniments against the pleader; yet, if the complainant thinks the answer to them is evasive, he may except to the sufficiency of the answer in those points.\(^{21}\)

Where an answer is filed in support of a plea, care must be observed not to extend the answer so as to cover that part of the bill already covered by the plea; for, in such a case, the answer would overrule the plea. The same rule prevails where no answer is required to support the plea: in such a case, no discovery being called for, the bill is a mere pleading, and is, therefore, wholly covered by the plea. Consequently, in such a case, any answer would overrule the plea.\(^{22}\)

The best test of the sufficiency of an answer in support of a plea is, to consider as true every allegation in the bill not sufficiently denied by the answer, and then to consider whether, if these allegations be true, the plea is a sufficient bar to the complainant's claim for relief.\(^{23}\)

§ 346. When a Supporting Answer is Not Required.—If it appears from the bill, that no discovery is sought by the complainant, in aid of the facts and circumstances he alleges in avoidance of the bar he admits, the defendant need not put in any answer at all.\(^{24}\)

In order to require, or even to justify, an answer, there must be some specific facts charged in the bill, to which such an answer is a proper response. A bill may be specific in two respects. It may allege a particular fact, and charge that the evidence thereof is in the possession of the defendant; or it may be specific in charging a general fact; such as the fact upon which the title of the complainant is founded, and charge particular circumstances to prove that general fact, and require discovery thereof from the defendant. It is necessary, in order to the allowance of an answer in support of a plea, that the bill should contain some charge of one kind or of the other. Therefore, where the bill does not charge any specific fact, inconsistent with the plea, negativating, and avoiding, as it were, that plea by anticipation, it is not necessary to put in an answer in support of the plea; for nothing is charged, which is specific in any point of view, to defeat the plea, and an accompanying answer is unnecessary; and indeed is improper, since it would overrule the plea.\(^{25}\)

In general, an answer is not required to support a plea, unless the complainant charges fraud, notice, or some other equitable ground of avoiding the bar admitted by his bill. And when such an answer is required, it ordinarily arises from one of two considerations: 1. It is in the nature of proof called for by the bill, to enable the complainant to obviate the bar he is seeking to avoid; in which case the defendant must fully answer all the charges of fraud, notice, or other equitable circumstances alleged. In such a case the answer is for the complainant’s benefit. 2. It is in the nature of a support to the plea, and is intended by its denial of the details, specifications, and circumstances of fraud, notice, or other equitable matters, to exclude those intendants which, without such a denial, would be made against the defendant; for, upon argument of a plea, every fact stated in the bill and not denied by the answer in support of the plea, is taken to be true. In cases of this sort, the answer is for the defendant’s benefit, and is, in reality, in support of the plea; whereas, in the former case the answer is required by the complainant as a means of proof to overthrow the defence set up by the plea; and is, in reality, in support of the bill.26

§ 347. Frame of a Plea, and of the Supporting Answer.—The office of the plea is to put in issue the matters alleged in avoidance by the bill, ordinarily fraud or notice; and the office of the answer in support of the plea is to respond to all the charges whereby the avoidance is sought to be sustained. Thus, in a bill seeking to set aside a decree, because of fraud in its procurement, and specifying the circumstances of the alleged fraud, the plea will set up the decree in bar of the bill, by proper general averments denying the allegations of fraud; and the answer will meet fully and deny all the circumstances of fraud alleged in the bill, and will respond to all other matters of interrogation in the bill.

In all cases where a plea is accompanied by an answer, it must be put in upon oath, unless the defendant be a corporation, and then its seal must be affixed.27 When an answer accompanies a plea in order to support it, it is prefaced with an averment that the defendant does not thereby waive his plea, but wholly relies thereon. So, where the plea is not to the whole of the bill, but only to a part, the answer is commenced with the same protestation against a waiver of the plea, and with a declaration that it is intended to be only in answer to the part of the bill, not covered by the plea.28

As the averments negating the charges of fraud are used merely to put the fact of fraud, as alleged by the bill, in issue in the plea, they may be expressed in the most general terms, provided they are sufficient to put the charges of fraud, contained in the bill, fully in issue. And as the complainant is entitled to have the answer of the defendant, upon oath, to any matter in dispute between them, in aid of proof of the case made by the bill, the defendant must answer to the facts of fraud, alleged in the bill, so fully, as to leave no doubt in the mind of the Court, that, upon that answer, if not controverted by evidence on the part of complainant, the fact of fraud could not be established. If the answer should not be full in all material points, the Court may presume that the fact of fraud may be capable of proof in the point not fully answered; and may, therefore, not deem the answer sufficient to support the plea as conclusive; and, therefore, may overrule the plea absolutely, or only as an immediate bar, saving the benefit of it to the hearing of the cause. But, although the answer may be deemed sufficient to support the plea upon argument, the complainant may except to the answer, if he conceives it not to be so full to all the charges, as to be free from exception; or, by amending his bill, he may require an answer to any matter, which may not have been so extensively stated, or interrogated to, as the case warranted; or to which he may apprehend, that the answer, although in full terms, may have been in effect evasive.29

If, however, the complainant excepts to the answer, that is an admission that the plea is sufficient. The better practice for the complainant is to set 26 While the answer, in such cases, is called an answer in support of the plea, it is such, in reality, only when it effectually overcomes the special matters charged in the bill; if the answer confirms those answer in support of the plea, but an answer in support of the bill.

§ 348. Form of a Plea, and of the Supporting Answer.—The form of an answer in support of a plea is simple and untechnical. The plea is in the usual form of a plea in bar, and the supporting answer follows the plea, on the same paper. All this will more clearly appear by the following general form of a plea and a supporting answer, showing their characteristics, and how joined.

GENERAL FORM OF A PLEA AND A SUPPORTING ANSWER.

John Doe

v.

Richard Roe, et al.

No. 618. In Chancery, at Knoxville.

The defendant, Richard Roe, for plea to the bill filed against him in this cause, says:

That [Here set out the matter pleaded, such matter being ordinarily a release, former judgment, award, account stated or settled, innocent purchaser, or other matter in avoidance of the bill.] Therefore, this defendant pleads the said release [former judgment, award, account stated, account settled, innocent purchaser, or other matter pleaded in avoidance,] in bar of the complainant’s bill [or, in bar of so much of the complainant’s bill as is hereinbefore particularly mentioned,] and prays the judgment of the Court hereon.

And this defendant, not waiving his said plea, but relying thereon, and in support thereof, for answer to the residue of said bill, says, that the release, [former judgment, award, account stated or account settled,] was not obtained by any artifice or fraud whatsoever; and he denies the fraud and artifices charged, and denies the undue influence alleged, and says that all and singular the allegations of fraud set forth in the bill are untrue. [Deny the particular circumstances of fraud charged. If notice is alleged in the bill as the ground of its equity, say—The defendant had not at the time he purchased said lot, [or at the time he took his deed therefor, or at the time he paid the purchase-money for said lot,] any notice whatever of complainant’s alleged claim to said lot, and the defendant says that the first notice that he ever had of said claim was when he read complainant’s said bill, and that until he read said bill he never had any notice of complainant’s claim, or any suspicion thereof, or any reason or ground of suspicion.]

Therefore, the defendant prays to be hence dismissed.

W. P. Washburn, Solicitor.

§ 349. The Present Practice.—The old practice of filing a negative plea, and supporting it with an answer, is still in force, although seldom resorted to. The present practice is to incorporate all matters of defence to the merits, in the answer. It is now good pleading to incorporate in the answer all the averments that would constitute a good negative or anomalous plea, and in the same answer to respond to all matters of interrogation. In short, the plea and supporting answer of the old practice can now be both incorporated in one and the same answer, the present answer in such cases being, in effect, a plea supported by an answer. And our Courts discourage the practice of answering in support of a plea, where an answer can be avoided.

30 Sto. Eq. 1st, § 689.
31 The author has set forth this practice, in this Article, more to make his book complete, than as evidence of his appreciation of the present value of this form of pleading and defence. The principles involved are, however, valuable to all who seek to master the science of pleading. Pleas in bar should now never be resorted to when they require an answer in their support, as an answer, under our present practice, can perform the two-fold office of a plea and an answer; and a defence by that mode is less perplexing, less technical, and more apt to be sustained, than the old method by plea and supporting answer.

PROCEEDINGS UPON A PLEA IN BAR.

§ 350. How a Plea is Put at Issue.
§ 351. The Truth of Pleas, How Ascertained.
§ 352. Overruling and Allowing Pleas.
§ 353. When a Plea May be Ordered to Stand for an Answer.
§ 354. Amendment of Pleas.

§ 350. How a Plea is Put at Issue.—If the complainant conceives any plea to be naught, either for the matter or manner of it, he may set it down with the Clerk to be argued; or, if he thinks the plea good, but not true, he may take issue upon it, and proceed to trial. Upon the argument of a plea, every fact stated in the bill, and not denied by the averments of the plea, or by the answer, must be considered as true, and on the other hand, the matter contained in the plea must be considered as true, upon such argument.

If, therefore, the complainant conceives a plea to be defective in point of form, or of substance, he may take the judgment of the Court upon its sufficiency, as stated above. Upon argument of a plea in bar, it may either be allowed or disallowed, or the benefit of it may be saved to the hearing; or it may be ordered to stand for an answer. If allowed on argument, the plea is determined to be a full bar to so much of the bill as it covers, if the matter pleaded, with the averments necessary to support it, are true. If, therefore, a plea is held sufficient upon argument, or if the complainant without argument thinks it, although good in form and substance, not true in point of fact, he may take issue upon it, and proceed to disprove the facts upon which it is endeavor to be supported.

But, upon argument, the Court may not be content either to overrule the plea or to allow it, being of opinion, that, while the plea, if strictly true, may be a defense, nevertheless the complainant may introduce matters in evidence under his bill which would avoid the plea. In such a case, the Court, in order to give both sides a full opportunity to present their case, will, without overruling the plea, direct that the defendant may have the benefit of it at the hearing. Upon such an order the complainant may prove matters that will either disprove or avoid the plea.

If the complainant takes issue on the plea, and the plea be found true, it will be a good defence to so much of the bill as it covers, for the plea may

1 The proceedings upon a plea in bar and upon a plea in abatement are the same, except that a plea in abatement can never be ordered to stand for an answer. And what is said in this article about (1) putting pleas at issue; (2) ascertaining the truth of pleas; (3) overruling and allowing pleas; and (4) amending pleas, applies to pleas in abatement as well as to pleas in bar.

2 It is irregular practice to demurr to a plea, but should such a demurrer be filed, the Court would treat it as a mode of setting the plea for hearing as to its sufficiency. Klepper v. Powell, 6 Heisk., 306. In Witt v. Ellis, 2 Cold., 38, a plea was demurred to, and no objection raised to the practice. See Dan. Ch. Pr., 692, note. A demurrer lies to a plea in the Circuit Court, Harris v. Taylor, 3 Sneed, 536.

3 Code, 4393; post, § 351. Our Statutes and Rules of Practice are silent as to when and how issue must be taken on a plea; but insomuch as a plea is a special answer, and an answer must be excepted to within twenty days after notice of its being filed, it would seem that a plea must be set down for argument, (which is equivalent to excepting to its sufficiency,) or issue taken upon it, within twenty days after notice of its being filed; and if the complainant fail to set the plea down for argument, or to take issue upon it, within said time, the defendant may have his plea taken for confessed, or may treat the cause as at issue, without a replication, in which latter case the cause would stand for trial at the term next following. See Code, §§ 4400, 4401; 4322; 4338; 4432; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr. 121; Allen v. Allen, 3 Tenn. Ch., 145; Seifred v. People's Bank, 2 Tenn. Ch., 17; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 696, note. apply to only a part of the bill, or, if it applies to the whole bill, may be true only as to a part, in which latter case it will bar such part. Unlike a demurrer, a plea may be good in part and bad in part, and such a plea will be sustained to the extent of its goodness.

If the complainant deems a plea insufficient, either for the manner or the matter of it, he may set it down with the clerk to be argued, or he may set it down for argument by an entry on the minutes, if the Court be in session. The following is a

FORM OF SETTING A PLEA DOWN FOR ARGUMENT.

John Doe,
v.s.
Richard Roe, et al.

The complainant says the plea of the defendant, Richard Roe, is not sufficient:
1st. Because it is not properly verified.
2d. Because, if true, it presents no matter sufficient to bar the suit.
3d. Because it does not cover the whole bill; and does not profess to be to a part only of the bill.

Wherefore, he sets said plea down for argument.
Leon Jourolmon, Solicitor.

If the complainant considers the plea good in form and in substance, but false in fact, he must take issue upon it, if an affirmative plea, and proceed to trial. Issue is taken, ordinarily, by filing a replication within twenty days.

REPLICATION TO A PLEA.

John Doe,
v.s.
Richard Roe, et al.

In Chancery, at Knoxville.

The complainant joins issue on the plea filed in this cause by the defendant, Richard Roe.

§ 351. The Truth of Pleas, How Ascertained.—If the plea, upon argument, is held to be good; or, if the complainant admits it to be so by replying to it, the truth of the plea is the only subject of question remaining, so far as the plea extends; and nothing but the matters contained in the plea, as to so much of the bill as the plea covers, is in issue between the parties. If, therefore, issue is thus taken upon the plea, the defendant must prove the facts it suggests. If he fails in this proof, so that at the hearing of the cause, the plea is held to be no bar, and the plea extends to the discovery sought by the bill, the complainant is not to lose the benefit of that discovery; but the Court will order the defendant to be examined on interrogatories, to supply the defect. But, if the defendant proves the truth of the matter pleaded, the suit, so far as the plea extends, is barred, even though the plea is not good, either in point of form or of substance. Therefore, when a defendant pleaded a purchase for a valuable consideration, and omitted to deny notice of the complainant’s title, and the complainant replied, it was determined that the plea, although irregular, had been admitted, by the replication, to be good; and that the fact of notice not being in issue, the defendant proving what he had pleaded, was entitled to have the bill dismissed.

Pleas of a former decree, or of another suit depending in the same Court, are generally referred to the Master to inquire into the fact; and if the Master 9 If the plea is one requiring verification, and is not properly verified, it may be stricken from the files on motion.

10 A negative plea makes an issue without a replication. A replication is, however, allowable, but not necessary. Bank v. Foster, 6 Pick., 735, modifying Cheatham v. Pearce, 5 Pick., 668.
11 Code, § 4393, Cheatham v. Pearce, 5 Pick., 668.
12 Code, § 2910. The contrast between the form of this replication and the old form, well illustrates the superiority of our present forms of pleading over the old forms. The form of the replication above given is the one used in the Circuit Court, but it is equally available in the Chancery Court.
13 The burden of proof is on the defendant when he pleads an affirmative plea, but the burden is on the complainant when the defendant files a negative plea. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 697-698.
reports the fact true, the bill, on confirmation of the report, will be dismissed. But the complainant may except to the Master's report, and bring on the matter to be argued before the Court.\(^\text{15}\)

The complainant may go into evidence to disprove the plea, and if he has in his bill alleged any matter which, if true, may have the effect of avoiding the plea, such as notice or fraud, he may introduce any proof he may have in support of his allegation. And where the plea introduces matter of a negative nature, such as denial of notice or fraud, if the existence of the notice or fraud is not admitted by the answer in support of the plea, it will be necessary for the complainant to produce evidence in support of the affirmative of the proposition. After the complainant has replied to a plea, the validity of the plea can never be questioned, but only its truth; in fact, nothing but the matters contained in the plea, as to so much of the bill as the plea covers, is in issue between the parties. If, therefore, issue is thus taken upon the plea, the defendant must prove the facts which it suggests. But, if the defendant proves the truth of the matter pleaded, the suit, so far as the plea extends, is barred, even though the plea is not good, either in point of form or substance.\(^\text{16}\)

A plea in bar presupposes that, if a certain essential fact, omitted from the bill, could be made to appear; or, if a certain essential fact contained in the bill could be made to disappear, then the bill would be demurrable. On this presupposition, the plea avers that the omitted essential fact exists, or that the alleged essential fact does not exist. If complainant disputes the legal accuracy of the presupposition, he will set the plea down for argument as to its sufficiency, thus making an issue of law;\(^\text{17}\) if he admits the presupposition, but disputes the truth of the plea, he will take issue upon it, and thus raise a question of fact.\(^\text{18}\)

\section*{§ 352. Overruling and Allowing Pleas.}—If, upon argument, the Court is of opinion that the plea is insufficient as a defence, it is overruled, and the defendant required to answer the bill.\(^\text{19}\)

If, however, the plea is allowed, it is thereby determined to be a full bar to so much of the bill as it covers, if the matter pleaded be true; in which case the complainant must dismiss so much of the bill as is covered by the plea, or take issue upon the plea.\(^\text{20}\)

Sometimes, upon the argument of a plea, the Court considers that, although the plea appears to set up a good defence, yet there may be facts in avoidance. In such a case, the Court may direct that the benefit of the plea be saved to the defendant at the hearing, in which case the plea must be replied to by the complainant;\(^\text{21}\) or the Court may allow the defendant to rely upon the matter of the plea in his answer, which is the better practice.\(^\text{22}\)

If the complainant files a replication to the plea, and the plea is, at the hearing, found to be true in fact, it will be a complete bar to so much of the bill as the plea covers, even though the plea is not good, either in form or in substance.\(^\text{23}\)

\(^{17}\) In strict Chancery practice, a demurrer is not the proper method of testing the sufficiency of a plea; but, inasmuch as a demurrer is used for that purpose in the Courts of law, and is withal a plain, intelligible and definite method of testing a plea's sufficiency, no reason exists, outside of ancient usage, why a demurrer should not lie to an insufficient plea in Equity as well as at law. Setting down a plea for argument is in the nature of a general demurrer, while demurrers, being now special, point out the particular objections to the plea relied on, and thus more fully conform to the spirit of our present system of pleading. And our Courts have practically either as a demurrer, Witt v. Ellis, 2 Cold., 40; or as a mode of setting the plea for argument on its sufficiency. Klepper v. Powell, 6 Heisk., 506, ante, § 350.

argument, the Court considers that the matter offered by way of plea may be a defence, or part of a defence, but that it has been informally pleaded, or is not properly supported by the answer, so that the truth is doubtful, it will, in such case, instead of overruling the plea, direct it to stand for an answer. 24

If a plea is ordered to stand for an answer, it is allowed to be a sufficient answer to so much of the bill as it covers; unless, by the order, liberty is given to the complainant to except to it for insufficiency; and where a defendant pleaded to the whole bill, and, on arguing the plea, it was ordered to stand for an answer, without saying, one way or the other, whether the complainant might except, the complainant was not allowed to except, because, by the terms "for an answer" in the order, a sufficient answer is meant, an insufficient answer being no answer. It is to be observed, that, if a plea be to a part only of the bill, and is accompanied by an answer to the rest, an order that it may stand for an answer, without giving the complainant liberty to except, will not preclude the complainant from excepting to the answer to that part of the bill which is not covered by the plea. The order for the plea to stand for an answer, is, however, frequently accompanied with a direction that the complainant shall be at liberty to except; but the liberty is sometimes qualified so as to protect the defendant from any particular discovery, which he ought not to be called upon to make. When a plea has been ordered to stand for an answer, with liberty to except, the complainant must proceed to deliver his exceptions within twenty days, otherwise the answer will be deemed sufficient. The proceedings upon the exceptions are the same as those upon exceptions to answers in general. 25

If a plea is accompanied by an answer, and is ordered to stand for an answer, without liberty to except, the complainant may yet except to the answer, as insufficient to the parts of the bill not covered by the plea. If a plea, accompanied by an answer is allowed, upon argument as sufficient, the answer may be read at the hearing of the cause to counterprove the plea. 26

§ 354. Amendment of Pleas.—Pleas may be amended where there has been an evident slip or mistake, and the material ground of defence seems to the Court to be good. Yet the Court always expects to be told precisely what the amendment is to be, and how the slip happened, before it will allow the amendment to be made. The defendant will, also, be tied down to a short time in which to amend. 27

The motion to amend must be supported by an affidavit, and be accompanied by the draft of the amendment proposed, that the Court may judge of its materiality. 28 A defect in the form of a plea, or in the form of its verification, may be amended without affidavit, the plea being resworn to after amendment. 29 After a plea has been argued and overruled, no second plea will be allowed. 30

THE ANSWER AS A PLEADING.

§ 355. General Nature of an Answer.—If a defendant is unable to overthrow the bill by a plea in abatement, or a motion to dismiss, or by a demurrer, or a plea in bar, he must answer the bill. An answer may have a four-fold nature: 1. It may set forth the defendant’s defences to the charges contained in the bill, and to this extent it is a mere pleading; 2. It may contain the defendant’s responses to the discoveries sought by the bill, in which case it is also a sort of deposition; 3. It may set up matters as to which the defendant is entitled to some affirmative relief either against the complainant or against a co-defendant, and to this extent resembles a cross-bill; and 4. It may enter into a detail of all the matters that can be set up in answer to the equities of the bill, in order to sustain a motion to dissolve an injunction, or to defeat a motion for a receiver, in which case the answer partakes of the nature of a counter affidavit. All of these different phases of an answer will be duly considered in their proper places; but, for the present, an answer will be considered in its character as a pleading, and as a deposition.

The general nature of the answer which a complainant has a right to require from each defendant upon the record, is sufficiently shown by the old form of prayer in a bill requiring an answer on oath: “that the defendant may, upon his corporal oath, according to the best and utmost of his knowledge, recollection, information and belief, full, true, direct and perfect answer make to all and singular the several matters and things hereinbefore contained, and that as fully..."

1 The party filing an answer as a pleading is termed a defendant, because he defends; but when he, also, answers the question propounded by the bill, or makes the discovery called for, he is termed a respondent, because he responds. The term respondent is the more formal and ancient, but in this book, the term defendant is preferred. (1) because it is now almost universally used in our statutes and Supreme Court Reports; and (2) because an answer is generally a mere unsworn pleading, setting up defences, and a response under oath is seldom called

3 The failure to note these various phases an answer may assume, has caused some apparent, and some real, conflicts in the rulings of Courts in reference to answers. See, Sto. Eq. Pl., § 850; 1 Dan.
§ 356. Answer as a Mode of Defence.—In its character as a pleading, an answer may set up all the defences of fact the defendant can present on the merits of the controversy. These defences may consist: (1) in a denial of any one or more of the material allegations of the bill; or (2) in a confession of the apparent case made out by the bill, and the presentation of new matters that avoid some one or more of the material averments of the bill; or (3) an answer may deny some allegations, confess others, and confess and avoid the rest; or (4) it may admit the material allegations of the bill, and set up some defence thereto that might have been pleaded in bar, such as the statute of limitations, the statute of frauds, innocent purchaser, former adjudication, and the like.

An answer generally controverts the facts stated in the bill, or some of them; and states other facts to show the rights of the defendant in the subject of the suit, or the absence of any right on the part of the complainant. But sometimes it admits the truth of the case made by the bill, and, either with or without stating additional facts, submits the questions, arising upon the case thus made, to the judgment of the Court. If an answer admits the facts stated in the bill, or such as are material to the complainant's case, and states no new facts, or such only as the complainant is willing to admit, no proof is necessary: the answer, in such a case, is considered as true; and the Court will decide the cause upon its admissions. But, if the answer does not admit all the facts in the bill, material to the complainant's case, or states any fact which the complainant is not disposed to admit, the truth of the answer, or any part of it, may be controverted by the complainant, and the truth of the allegations of the bill established by proper evidence.6

A defendant should, in his answer, confine himself to the facts pertinent to the case, and should refrain from stating arguments, inferences, or conclusions of law. The object of a pleading is to notify the adverse party of the facts intended to be proved, and not to inform either him or the Court what inferences of law should be drawn from the facts.7 If, however, a defendant undertakes, in his answer, to make out a particular defence, which he deduces from the facts he sets out, he will not be allowed, at the hearing, to use these same facts for the purpose of establishing a different defence;8 for such a course would not only operate as a surprise to the complainant, but would, also, enable a defendant to mislead his adversary.

§ 357. What Defences May be Made by Answer.—The defendant in his answer is not confined to any one defence, but may avail himself of any and all matters of law or fact, which will constitute either a partial or a complete defence to the charges contained in the bill. He may, in his answer: (1) deny any or all of the complainant's material allegations; or, (2) may confess and avoid any or all of them; or, (3) may set up any matter of law or fact that would constitute a plea in bar to the relief prayed; or, (4) may adopt any two or more of these various methods of defence.

A defendant may, in his answer, set up as many defences as may be deduced from the same state of facts. Thus, he may rely both on the statute of limitations, and on the laches of the complainant, as the evidence to support each is substantially the same. He may, also, rely upon various defences in the alternative; thus he may deny that he ever executed the writing charged, and may 7 An answer should content itself with giving the facts. The Chancellor, generally, knows the law as well as counsel; and when the facts are set forth, he will determine their force and legal effect. An allegation that the defendant has a good and valid defence, without specifying the defence so that the Court can judge of its merits, is vex at prateretur ad, and cannot be noticed at all. Montgomery v. Olwell, 1 Tenn. Ch., 172.

aver that, if executed by him, its execution was obtained by duress or fraud, and that there was a failure of consideration; and, as a further defence to it, may plead the statute of limitations. A defendant cannot, however, set up two defences which are absolutely inconsistent and contradictory.9

The defendant is not required to file any other pleading than an answer, unless he intends to set up matters in abatement, or to object to the jurisdiction of the Court.10 He may set up, in his answer, any matter that would be a ground of demurrer, or the subject-matter of a plea in bar. And, in general, he may incorporate all matters of defence in his answer, and is not required to plead specially, or to demur, in any case, except to the jurisdiction of the Court.11 The result is, a plea in bar is seldom necessary, and seldom used.

§ 358. All the Defences Relied on Must be Stated. — The defendant in answering must be careful to set forth, clearly, any and all special defences he intends to rely on,12 whether such special defences be matters of law, or matters of fact. If he intends to rely on (1) the want of proper parties,13 (2) on the statute of frauds, (3) the statute of limitations, (4) the defence of innocent purchaser, (5) non-partnership with a co-defendant,14 (6) failure, or illegality, of consideration, (7) usury, (8) payment, (9) satisfaction, (10) release, (11) former adjudication, (12) non-performance of condition precedent, (13) alteration of instrument sued on, (14) tender, (15) higher security taken, (16) merger, (17) an account stated, (18) title paramount, (19) an award, (20) a compromise, (21) infancy, (22) coverture, (23) drunkenness, (24) mental unsoundness, (25) fraud, (26) duress, (27) estoppel, (28) non est factum, (29) non-partnership of complainants, (30) set-off, (31) recoupment,15 or the like, he must set up these defences in a clear and unambiguous manner, to the end that the complainant may be apprized thereof; for he cannot avail himself of any matter in defence which is not stated in his answer, even though it should appear in the evidence.16

It would be a gross fraud upon the complainant to allow a defendant to set up one defence in his answer, and to make out and rely upon an entirely different defence in his proof. If such a practice were tolerated, instead of a pleading subserving the purpose of notifying the adversary of what the pleader intended to prove, it would be a mere ruse to enable him to mislead and deceive his adversary as to his real cause of action, or real defence. And where a defendant has made out a case by proof, different from the one set up in his answer, he should not be allowed to amend his answer so as to conform to the proof, without being operated with the costs of all the proof taken in the cause. The proofs must be conformed to the pleadings, and it is a reversal of both logic and law to allow a party to conform his pleadings to his proofs.

In stating a defendant's case, however, it is only necessary to use such a degree of certainty as will inform the complainant of the nature of the defence to be made; and the same degree of definiteness need not be observed in setting out these defences as is required of the complainant in specifying the grounds on which he relies for relief.17 Nevertheless, it is a fundamental rule of pleading, applicable alike to bills, pleas, and answers, that nothing can be proved or dis-

And when the matter of a plea is set up in an answer, the averments must contain all the certainty of a plea, not in its technical niceties, but in its material statements. "Certainty of allegation constitutes the beauty of Equity pleading." Turley, Judge, in High v. Batte, 10 Yerg., 338.
16 The defence that the claim is stale may, however, be insisted on without being set up in the answer. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 714, note 5. The reason of this is that staleness is not so much a defence as it is a rule, regulating the discretion of the Chancellor.
proved which has not been alleged. As to the particularity required in setting forth defences reference is made to the preceding Chapter on Pleas in Bar. Whatever may be pleaded in bar may be set up in an answer, and when so set up the same degree of definiteness, particularity and directness should be observed.

§ 359. Answer Superior to a Plea as a Mode of Defence.—Where the same defence can be made by an answer that could be made by plea, it is generally better to make it by answer, because: (1) an answer is less technical, and more easily framed; (2) an answer can set up all the facts and circumstances that tend to aid, or strengthen, the defence; (3) an answer enables a defendant to present his defences in all their fullness and particularity, and shows a disposition to boldly and frankly meet all the alleged equities set up in the bill; whereas, (4) a plea rather indicates a disposition to avoid a contest on the merits, and sometimes implies that the defendant has no defence except some hard rule of law, or some technical bar; and (5) as a result, a plea is often regarded with disfavor by the Court, when the same defence set up in an answer, and especially when explained and supported by equitable circumstances, will be regarded with, at least, an impartial disposition. Chancellors have a yearning to penetrate to the heart of the merits of a controversy, and sometimes feel that a plea is like a door, that shuts them out of the chamber where the real truth is to be found.

As shown elsewhere, pleas were formerly resorted to in order to avoid being compelled to make a discovery, which was often irksome and embarrassing, as well as damaging, for when a defendant answers under oath he is required to answer fully. By means of a plea, the defendant relieved himself from the disagreeable task of answering as to all the many matters he was required to discover. But now, in Tennessee, bills praying a discovery under oath are seldom filed, and all defences, except matters in abatement and objections to the jurisdiction, may be incorporated in the answer, including both matters of law and matters of fact. Hence, pleas are seldom necessary, and less seldom resorted to; and the tendency is here, as throughout the Union, to present all defences by means of an answer; and this is especially true where an unsworn answer is permitted. As a bill is the simplest and most natural, and yet the most effective method of presenting a complainant’s cause of action to a Court, so an answer is the simplest and most natural, and yet the most effective method of presenting the defendant’s side of a legal controversy.

§ 360. What is a Sufficient Answer when a Defendant’s Oath is Waived. An answer having been originally intended to be a sworn discovery of facts in the defendant’s knowledge, necessary to enable complainant to make out his case, it was natural for the defendant to evade full and direct answers to the charges and interrogatories contained in the bill; and we accordingly find the books of Chancery Practice full of cases where answers have been excepted to because evasive, and because not containing full and direct responses to the bill. But when an unsworn answer is called for, it is manifest that no discovery is sought or expected, and that complainant contemplates nothing more from the defendant than a pleading making an issue.

For this reason, it has been uniformly held that an unsworn answer cannot be excepted to, for insufficiency. If, therefore, an unsworn answer cannot be excepted to for insufficiency, the result would seem inevitable that an answer containing nothing but a general denial of “each and all of the allegations of the bill, and every part thereof,” would be a sufficient unsworn answer, as it makes an issue, and puts the complainant to the proof of all the material allegations in his bill.\(^\text{24}\) If, however, no real benefit is to be obtained by calling them into play, a resort to them is a useless consumption of time, and sets ponderous machinery in motion to no purpose.

The provisions of our statutes for enforcing an answer,\(^\text{26}\) and for securing a sufficient answer by means of exceptions, were intended for sworn answers where discoveries were sought, in whole or in part; and such provisions were not intended to apply to unsworn answers, containing nothing scandalous or impertinent.\(^\text{27}\)

Nevertheless, whatever may be the strict law when tested, it is unquestionably the better practice for an unsworn answer to respond to each of the material allegations, in their order, and conclude with a general denial of each and every allegation not already answered unto. Besides, where a defendant, by denying well known facts, thereby causes the cost of proving them, it would be a proper exercise of discretion to operate him with a part of the costs, even when successful. For all parties owe it to the Court, and owe it to the cause of justice and of good pleading, to circumscribe the issues as much as possible, and to make the costs of the litigation as light as possible.

In all cases where the statute requires a plea to be sworn to, an answer incorporating such a plea must be sworn to, even when the oath of the defendant to his answer is waived by the complainant. In such a case, the answer is a mere pleading, but nevertheless a pleading required by the statute to be under oath.\(^\text{28}\)

\(^{24}\) This is the conclusion fairly deducible from the cases cited in Smith v. St. Louis Ins. Co., 2 Tenn. Ch., 599, and in Steed v. Akers, 1 Tenn. Ch., 326. By the Code, § 4322, "no replication is required or allowed, even when the answer, by confession and avoidance, presents an issue wholly different from the one tendered by the bill. In such a case, an issue on the new matter in the answer is made by operation of the statute, much the same as an issue on the matters in the bill is made by a pro confesso against an infant. As an answer without oath ordinarily denies everything in the bill, it would much speed the cause to allow the complainant to waive an answer entirely, except when it wishes a discovery on oath, or when the defendant wishes to set up matters in avoidance; and in case of such waiver to have an issue made by operation of law on all averments of fact contained in the bill. Be this as it may, the logic of the foregoing authorities demonstrates that any unsworn answer, that makes an issue of fact on all the material averments of the bill, is a sufficient answer. See, also, Payne v. Berry, 3 Tenn. Ch., 154. In Story's Equity Pleading, § 875, c., it is said with great positiveness: "There can be no question, upon principle, it would seem, that the answer of the defendant not upon oath, although responsive to the bill, is to be treated merely in the nature of a plea of denial, by way of special traverse, and it would be of the same effect, precisely, if it were a mere general issue."

\(^{25}\) The Code, §§ 4360-4368.

\(^{26}\) "This peculiar machinery was not devised for unsworn answers; and hence, where no discovery is sought, and where the answer contains nothing impertinent or scandalous, such answer cannot be excepted to for insufficiency, if it contains enough to put all of the complainant's material allegations in issue, and this it may do by a general denial of "each and every allegation in the bill contained," as well as by a specific denial of each specific allegation, seriatim."

\(^{27}\) Payne v. Berry, 3 Tenn. Ch., 154.

\(^{28}\) Code, §§ 2909; 3777; 3779 c. The defendant may confine his affidavit to so much of the bill as denies the partnership, or the execution of the instrument sued on. The waiver of the defendant's oath to his averments means that the complainant does not want the answer as a deposition; it does not mean that the defendant is to be allowed to plead non-partnership or non est factum without swearing to the plea. This he must do even in the Circuit Court. The plea denying the alleged partnership, is misnamed a plea in abatement by the statute. Code, § 2908. It is no more a plea in abatement than is the plea of non est factum, or the plea of not guilty. The defence of non-partnership may be set up in an answer. It would be disrespectful to the Legislature to suppose that they meant anything more than that such a defence must be sworn to. See, Eaton v. Dickinson, 3 Sneed, 405.
§ 361. Answer as a Mode of Proof. — Formerly, the principal purpose of an answer was the discovery of facts within the defendant's own knowledge, either because the complainant had no other means of proof, or to save the expense of obtaining other proof. The defendant was not formerly a competent witness in any Court, and his evidence could only be had by making him a party to a bill in Equity, and compelling him to answer. 1 Parties being now competent witnesses, however, the necessity of a discovery from a defendant now seldom arises; and, as a consequence, the oath of the defendant is generally waived. Nevertheless, cases arise when an answer on oath is required, and in such cases the defendant must respond particularly and precisely to each and every material allegation and charge contained in the bill; making the discovery called for, if in his knowledge or power; denying such allegations as are personally known to be untrue; admitting such as are personally known to be true; expressing belief or disbelief as to those not personally known to be true or untrue, but as to which the defendant has information; averring want of information or of belief as to those parts of the bill of which he has no knowledge, information or belief; and bringing forward such matters of avoidance, or in bar, as he can present to defeat the whole, or any part, of the relief sought by the complainant.

§ 362. What Must be Answered, and How. — The defendant is required to answer to each and all of the matters of fact contained in the bill, not only according to his positive knowledge of the facts stated, and to his best remembrance of them, but also according to the best information he may have received, and the best belief he may have in reference thereto. It is not necessary, however, that the defendant should say, in so many words, that he has no knowledge, information, or belief, in relation to the matters charged. Any other expression which amounts to the same thing will be sufficient. 2 It is not necessary for a bill to contain specific interrogatories, in order to obtain a specific answer from the defendant. 3 The general interrogatory or request in the bill, "that the defendant may answer make to all and singular the premises, fully and particularly, as though specially interrogated," is sufficient to entitle the complainant to a full disclosure of the whole subject-matter of the bill, equally as if he had specially interrogated the defendant to every fact stated in the bill, with all the material circumstances. 4 Nevertheless,

1 Gardner v. Gardner, 4 Heisk., 310. In consequence of the general habit of waiving the defendant's oath to his answer, there is a tendency in Tennessee, even when the oath is not waived, to regard the answer primarily, and almost exclusively, as a pleading, whose office is to present the intended defences rather than to furnish evidence in support of the complainant's case. Nevertheless, the rules of practice on the subject of a discovery are in full force, and must be observed whenever an answer under oath is called for.
2 Gleaves v. Morrow, 2 Tenn. Ch., 597. In this case, Chancellor Cooper says that the object of a discovery is not merely to purge the conscience of the defendant, but to lighten the burden of proof. On this point see, Chapter on Bills of Discovery.
3 Gleaves v. Morrow, 2 Tenn. Ch., 597.
4 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 715, note 4; Sto. Eq. Pt., § 38.
special interrogatories are often added in order to prevent evasion, and to thoroughly sift the conscience of the defendant. 5

§ 363. Particularity and Precision Required in an Answer as a Deposition. In its character as a deposition, an answer must contain a full and perfect response to each and all of the material allegations in the bill. It must confess, avoid, deny, or traverse, all the material parts of the bill. It must state facts and not arguments. It is not sufficient that it contains a general denial of the matters charged; but there must be an answer to the sifted inquiries upon the general subject. It should, also, be certain in its allegations, as far as practicable. To so much of the bill as it is necessary and material for the defendant to answer, he must speak directly and without evasion; and he must not merely answer the several charges literally; but he must confess or traverse the substance of each charge. 6

And, wherever there are particular and precise charges, they must be answered particularly and precisely, and not in a general manner, although the general answer may amount to a full denial of the charges. Thus, where a bill required a general account, and at the same time called upon the defendant to set forth whether he had received particular sums of money, specified in the bill with many circumstances respecting the times when, and of whom, and on what accounts, such sums had been received, it was determined that setting forth a general account by way of schedule to the answer, and referring to it as containing a full account of all sums of money received by the defendant, was not sufficient. And the complainant, having excepted to the answer on this ground, the exception was allowed, the Court being of opinion that the defendant was bound to answer specifically to the specific charges in the bill; and that it was not sufficient for him to say, generally, that he had in the schedule set forth an account of all sums received by him. 7

In that part of an answer that is a pleading, the defendant must state his case distinctly, and specify his defences; but he is not required to disclose the proofs on which his defences rest. On the other hand, that part of the answer which is a deposition must give a direct and full answer to every question asked, and to every allegation and charge made; for, as to this part of his answer, the defendant is a witness giving in his evidence, and sworn to tell the truth, and the whole truth. 8

§ 364. What Matters Must be Discovered, and How.—Where defendants have in their power the means of acquiring the information, necessary to enable them to give the discovery called for, they are bound to make use of such means, 9 whatever pains or trouble it may cost them; therefore, where defendants filling the character of trustees are called upon to set out an account, they cannot frame their answer so as merely to give a sufficient ground for an account in the Master’s office; they are bound to give the best account they can by their answer. But a defendant ought not to be required to obtain information so as to meet the complainant’s wishes, and thereby become his agent to procure testimony. 10 Where executors, or other trustees, are called upon to set out accounts, they must set them forth; although, for the purpose of rendering their schedules less burdensome, they may, instead of going too much into particulars, refer to the original accounts in their possession; and when it is said that a defendant may refer to an account in his possession, it must not be understood as authorizing him to refer, by his answer, to accounts made out by himself for the purposes of the case, but only to accounts previously in existence. 11 But where a defendant is required to set forth a general account, he may set forth the account, or the statement of the sums received, by means of schedules annexed to his answer, and made part thereof. 12

§ 365. The Answer as a Deposition.

In many cases where the defendant is asked, as to his knowledge or information of facts, it is not sufficient for him to say that he has no knowledge or information of those facts, if the facts are such as have passed between his agent and the complainant, and he is interrogated thereto; for under such circumstances he is bound to make inquiries of his agent before he makes his answer. Such a case is not governed by the same considerations as one where the facts are equally open and accessible to both parties, and the means of information are the same; for the principal has means of knowing from his agent what the facts are; and he has no right in his answer to say that he does not know what his agent has done. It is plain that if he answered that he had been informed by his agent that the facts were so, and he believed the information, the answer would be good evidence, and might be material. So if a party is interrogated as to his knowledge, remembrance, information and belief, and the answer alleges that the defendant has no knowledge or information that a fact is not true, that is not sufficient, for he ought to state whether he believes it to be true.13

§ 365. Thoroughness of the Required Discovery.—It is a fundamental rule of Equity pleading that, when an answer on oath is called for, and the defendant answers, he must answer fully, and leave no charge or allegation in the bill without an adequate response; and he must answer "as to his knowledge, remembrance, information and belief." And, in general, if a fact is charged, which is in the defendant's own knowledge, as if done by himself, he must answer positively and not to his remembrance or belief only, if it is stated to have happened within seven years before. It seems, however, that where a special cause is shown, so positive an answer may be dispensed with. As to facts which have not happened within his own knowledge, the defendant must answer as to his information and belief, and not as to his information merely, without stating any belief either one way or the other. It is not, however, necessary to make use of the precise words "as to his information and belief;" the defendant may make use of any expressions that are tantamount to them; thus, to say that the defendant "cannot answer the facts inquired after, as to his belief or otherwise," is generally considered a sufficient denial; for though the word, "information" is not used, the expression, "belief or otherwise," is held to include it. And so where an answer was in this form—"And this defendant further answering saith, it may be true for anything he knows to the contrary, that," &c., and after going through the several statements, it concluded thus —"but this defendant is an utter stranger to all and every such matters, and cannot form any belief concerning them," the defendant in stating himself to be an utter stranger to all and every the matters in question, did answer as to his information, and did, in effect, deny that he had any information concerning them. A defendant cannot, by merely saying "that a matter may be true for anything he knows to the contrary," avoid stating what his recollection, information, or belief, with reference to it is, or saying that he has no recollection or information, or that he cannot form any belief at all concerning it, either in these words or in equivalent expressions.14

If the defendant answers that he has not any knowledge or information of a fact charged in the bill, he is not bound to declare his belief one way or the other. It is not sufficient to answer that the specific facts charged "may be true, but the defendant has no knowledge of them, and leaves the complainant to prove them." Nor is it sufficient to say that "the defendant has not any knowledge of the foregoing facts but from the statement thereof in the bill." A denial by the defendant, "according to his recollection and belief," is not sufficient, when the fact is directly charged to be within his knowledge; but when a defendant states that he is "utterly and entirely ignorant," as to a 13 Sto. Eq. Pl. § 855, w.

fact, it is sufficient.\textsuperscript{15} It is not necessary that a defendant should say in so many words, that he has no knowledge, information, or belief in relation to the matters charged; any other expression which amounts to the same thing will be sufficient.\textsuperscript{16}

In general, if a fact is charged which is in the defendant's own knowledge, as if it is done by himself, he must answer positively, and not to his remembrance or belief, at least if it is stated to have happened within seven years before. But as to the facts which have not happened within his own knowledge, he must answer as to his information and belief, and not his information merely, without stating any belief either one way or the other. As to recent facts, however, within his own knowledge, he must answer positively, and not on belief, although not so as to the result of a conversation.\textsuperscript{17}

§ 366. How Charges must be Denied.—If the defendant deny a fact he must traverse it directly, and not by way of negative pregnant; thus, if a fact be laid to be done with divers circumstances, the defendant may not traverse it literally as laid down in the bill, but he must traverse the point of substance; as, if a man be charged to have done a thing upon such a day, or in such a place, he must not deny that he did it in manner and form as charged, for that implies that, in some sort, he did it. So, if he be charged with the receipt of one hundred dollars, he must deny that he has received one hundred dollars, or any part thereof; and if he has received any part, he must set forth what part.\textsuperscript{18} So, an answer to a bill of discovery for documents in the defendant's possession, merely alleging the defendant's belief that the documents do not contain evidence, or tend to show the complainant's title, is not sufficient, but the answer must distinctly negative the allegations in the bill. However, no positive rule can fully provide for all the various difficulties in cases of this sort; and each case must, therefore, be decided upon its own circumstances.\textsuperscript{19} The purpose of all the rules on this subject is that, when an answer on oath is called for, the defendant shall be compelled to make a full, direct, clear, and frank response to all charges, averments and allegations in the bill; and shall not be permitted to be silent, evasive, indefinite, or ambiguous in his answers to those charges and allegations. It is the duty of the defendant to make full, true, direct, and perfect answers to all and singular the matters stated and charged in the bill; and such answers must not only exhaust his knowledge and remembrance, but, also, his information, hearsay and belief; and this duty the Courts will firmly enforce.

§ 367. Difference between an Answer Sworn to and an Answer not Sworn to.—The difference between an answer sworn to by the defendant on the complainant's demand, and an answer not sworn to because of the complainant's express waiver of such oath, is the difference between a paper which is both a pleading and a deposition, and a paper which is merely an adverse pleading. The Code says, that where an answer from a defendant under oath is waived by the complainant in his bill, the answer is entitled to no more weight as evidence than the bill.\textsuperscript{20} The result is, an answer, the oath to which is waived, is a mere pleading, whose exclusive function is to make an issue of fact,\textsuperscript{21} or a mixed issue of law and fact,\textsuperscript{22} whereas an answer, the oath of the defendant to which has not been waived, is not only a pleading containing all of the defendant's defences to the merits of the bill, but is also a deposition,\textsuperscript{23} in so far as it is responsive to the averments and the charges contained in the bill, and as such, has all the force and effect of any other deposition in the cause. If, however, the bill is one required to be sworn to, it also partakes of the nature of a deposition for enough to balance any contrary averments or statements in a sworn answer.\textsuperscript{24} The failure to keep this distinction in mind has resulted in much confusion in specifying the requirements of answers.\textsuperscript{25}

\textbf{§ 368. The Answer Must Make an Issue.}—An answer that makes no issue is no answer, and may be stricken from the files on motion,\textsuperscript{1} and an order pro confesso taken. Every answer, whether on oath or not, should distinctly and fully meet every material averment and charge contained in the bill; and should do so specifically, and not by way of general sweeping denials. A general admission of all the allegations and charges set forth in the bill, is, however, sufficient.

While the failure to admit or deny a charge or allegation is not deemed an admission of its truth, nevertheless, such failure would be deemed a circumstance against the defendant in weighing the evidence for and against such charge or allegation.\textsuperscript{2}

\textbf{§ 369. Answer Where There are Several Defendants.}—Where there are several defendants, no one of them is required to answer matters that relate exclusively to his co-defendant. Co-defendants can answer separately or jointly, but when their defence is joint they should answer jointly. One defendant can, also, adopt the answer of a co-defendant in whole or in part, using appropriate language to make it his own as fully as though he had himself made each and every response therein adopted.\textsuperscript{3}

Where a defendant answers, and meets fully the equities set up in the bill against a co-defendant who has been pro confesso for want of an answer, such answer, if sustained by the proof, will also protect the latter from a decree on the pro confesso, when there is privity of interest between them, such as partner and partner,\textsuperscript{4} trustee and beneficiary,\textsuperscript{5} vendor and vendee,\textsuperscript{6} and the \textsuperscript{2}An answer required to be under oath, when not properly sworn to, stands as an unsworn answer and only makes an issue. Chester v. Canfield, 2 Shan. Cas., 309.

\textsuperscript{4}In England, under the present practice, every allegation in a bill not denied, nor expressed to be not admitted by the answer, is deemed to be admitted, except in case of answers by married women, infants, and lunatics. Snell's Pr. Eq., 669. In New Jersey and Kentucky, a material fact averred in the bill, and not denied in the answer, is taken as admitted. In New Hampshire, the Chancery Rules provide that "all facts well alleged in the bill, and not denied, or explained in the answer, will be held to be admitted." 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 937, note. In our courts of law, all allegations in the declaration, not denied in the plea, are taken as true. Code, § 2910. See, also, Code, § 2919. It has often been held that an answer may be "too faint in its denial to call for proof on the part of the complainant." Rhea v. Allison, 3 Head, 179; Cox v. Waggoner, 5 Sneed, 544.

\textsuperscript{5}If an answer "too faint in its denial" is equivalent to an admission, it would seem that an answer that does not deny at all could not have any more force, to say the least. Nevertheless, the weight of authority is that a failure to admit, or deny, any material allegation in a bill, is not an admission, and that the complainant must prove the truth of the allegation not replied to. Smith v. St. Louis M. L. Ins. Co., 2 Tenn. Ch., 599. In this case, the point is thoroughly considered, and all of our cases cited.

like. But where the rights of the pro confessoed defendant are distinct rights, and he has no joint or common interest with the defendant who answers, this rule does not apply.

§ 370. What Documents a Defendant Must Produce, and When.—In so far as an answer is a deposition, it is the duty of the defendant to disclose his possession of any and all books, papers, writings, and other documents, called for by the bill, if in his possession, custody, or control. If he is charged with having in his possession, custody or power, books, papers, or writings, a statement in his answer that there are certain books, papers, or writings, in some other county or State, the particulars of which he is unable to set forth, without any answer as to the fact, whether they are in the defendant’s possession, custody, or power, will be insufficient; for, if the defendant admits the books, papers, or writings to be in his possession, custody, or power, the complainant may make a motion upon the defendant to produce them; and the Court will, upon such motion, order them to be brought in within a reasonable time. And so, where a defendant stated, in his answer, that he had not certain books, papers, and writings in his possession, custody, or power, because they were coming over to this country, it was held that they were in his power, and that the defendant ought to have so stated in his answer. It may be observed here, that where books, papers, or writings, are in the custody or hands of the defendant’s Solicitor, they are considered to be in the defendant’s own custody or power, and should be stated to be so in his answer. So, generally, all the books, papers, and documents which the defendant has a right to inspect, provided he can enforce that right, are deemed to be in his power.

If a defendant is called upon to set out a deed, or other instrument, in the words and figures thereof, he should do so, or give some reason for not complying with the requisition; he may, however, avoid this by admitting that he has the deed, or other instrument, in his possession, and offering to give the complainant a copy of it. It may here be observed that it is, always, a proper precaution, where a defendant sets out a deed, or other instrument, in his answer, whether in hac verba, or by way of recital, to crave leave to refer to it, as, by so doing, the defendant makes it a part of his answer, and relieves himself from any charge in case it should be erroneously set out.

The defendant will be required to produce documents and papers (1) admitted, in his answer, to be in his possession, or under his control; or, (2) referred to in his answer, and not admitted to be in his possession, or under his control, but shown to be; or, (3) when referred to in his answer for greater certainty. But the complainant is not entitled, as a matter of right, to the discovery and production of any documents, or papers, called for by the bill, except those which appertain to his own case, or the title made by his bill. Documents and papers, which wholly and solely respect the defendant’s title, or defence, he is not compellable, by his answer, to discover, or to produce; but if he voluntarily refers to them, for greater certainty, he may be compelled to produce them.

§ 371. What Matters Need Not be Answered.—A defendant need not answer any matter that is scandalous or immaterial; nor need he answer any interrogatory not based on some material matter of fact charged in the stating part of the bill. If an answer to an interrogatory, either in the affirmative or negative, would not be pertinent to the matters put in issue by the bill, such

1 In Brian v. Peterman, 5 Head, 499, a denial of the justice of an account, by one of two executors, was held sufficient for both, they being jointly charged, citing Petty v. Hannum, 2 Huns., 102. See, also, Smith v. Cunningham, 2 Tenn. Ch., 565, where the authorities are cited. In McDaniel v. Goodall, 2 Cold., 395, it is declared to be "a well settled principle of this [the Supreme] Court, that if a joint defendant answers the bill and removes the Equity set up against himself, and the other defendant, who does not answer, no decree can be rendered against the defendant failing to answer." See, also, Butler v. Kinzie, 6 Pick., 31, in which case, Caldwell, J., cites all the cases on this question, in our reports.

interrogatory need not be answered. 12 It may be stated as a rule, that any matter charged in a bill, that is clearly immaterial, may be absolutely ignored by the defendant in his answer. One test of materiality is to ascertain whether, if the defendant should answer in the affirmative, the admission would be of any use to the complainant in the cause, either to assist his Equity, or to advance his claim to relief. If it is, it must be answered, for it is material; if not, it is immaterial, and need not be answered. 13

In considering what is material to be answered unto, it must be remembered that a discovery may be material to the complainant’s general case, if made by some one of the defendants, which would be wholly irrelevant if made by another; in such cases, the defendant, from whom the discovery would be immaterial, is not obliged to make it. A defendant is, in fact, only obliged to answer so much of the complainant’s bill as is necessary to enable the complainant to obtain a complete decree against him individually. Defendants in Equity are frequently formal parties, and are introduced for the purpose of bringing before the Court all persons who have an interest in the subject in dispute: and although, in practice, it is very common for each party to answer every part of the bill, it is often unnecessary. Thus, a trustee, or encumbrancer, or heir at law, need answer only so much of the bill as applies to him. The propriety of this distinction is obvious, when the nature of a bill in Equity is considered, namely, that although it is a suit combining several parties for the purpose of obtaining an object, in which they are all in some manner interested, yet the suit is distinct as against each defendant. Each defendant, therefore, is liable only so far as the bill prays relief against him; and his defence may, therefore, be applicable to that part of the case only, 14 and he need not answer any part of the bill except what applies to, or concerns, himself. 15

The Court will not, in general, allow the circumstance of a complainant’s having a claim upon a defendant, to be used for the purpose of enabling such complainant to investigate all the private affairs of such defendant. Nor will the Court compel the defendant to make a discovery, where the interests, which the complainant may have in it, is very remote in its bearings on the real point in issue, and would be an oppressive inquisition. 16

But it must always be remembered that a defendant cannot be compelled to discover any facts which (1) may tend to eradicate him; or (2) subject him to a forfeiture, or to something in the nature of a forfeiture; or (3) which are immaterial to the relief sought against him; or (4) which may be matters of professional confidence; 17 or (5) which relate to his own title in cases where there is no privity between him and the complainant. 18 In these cases, the defendant is not compelled to protect himself from a discovery, by plea or demurrer, but may in his answer decline to disclose such facts, upon stating the grounds upon which he bases his actions; such grounds, if matters of fact, to contain the substance of a plea. 19 The Court must be satisfied from the circumstances of the case that his grounds are sufficient. 20 In such cases, the question whether the defendant is, or is not, obliged to make the discovery, will be determined by the Court, in case the complainant excepts to the answer for insufficiency. 21

§ 372. Scandal and Impertinence not Allowable.—An answer, like any other pleading, must be free from any scandalous, improper, irrelevant, or impertinent matter.

1. As to Scandal. If an answer goes out of the case stated in the bill, and drags in anything scandalous, it will be expunged, by order of the Court. 22

20 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 716.
22 Gleaves v. Morrow, 2 Tenn. Ch., 592.
But, as in a bill, so in an answer, nothing relevant can be deemed scandalous; but the substance of the matter may be relevant, and yet the mode of expression may constitute scandal. What is scandal has heretofore been considered.

2. As to Impertinence. Strictly speaking, every statement in pleading beyond the naked facts relied on is impertinence; and if an answer goes out of the case, made by the bill, to bring in some matter not material to the defence, it will be deemed impertinent; and, upon proper application, will be expunged. Long recitals, unnecessary digressions, setting forth documents at length, and prolix details, constitute impertinence. An answer should contain a clear and orderly statement of the facts on which the defence is founded, without prolixity or repetition. Nothing material is impertinent.

The best rule, for determining whether any given matter be impertinent, is to consider whether it would be proper to put it in issue, or to establish it by evidence; for, it is plain that if any matter need not be either admitted, denied, or proved, it can have no relevancy to the merits of the controversy, and must be absolutely impertinent and unnecessary; and its introduction should, in some proper way, be rebuked by the Court.

In the Code, it is made the duty of the Court to discountenance prolixity and unnecessary and false allegations, in all Chancery pleadings; and for this purpose the Court may, on its own motion, or upon application of the opposite party, refer the pleadings to the Master to be revised, or order particular parts to be stricken out, and charge the party in fault with the unnecessary costs. Under this section of the Code, all scandalous, impertinent, and irrelevant matter would be deemed unnecessary matter; but how a Court, or a Master, can ascertain what allegations in a pleading are false, by a mere examination of the pleading itself, is not apparent. At the hearing, however, the Court can impose costs on a party whose "false allegations" have caused "unnecessary costs."

All scandalous and impertinent matter will be expunged, on exception being taken thereto; or the Court may, on its own motion, refer the pleadings to the Master to be revised, or order particular parts to be stricken out.

§ 373. Prayer for Counter Relief.—The Code, in specifying the contents of an answer, says, it should contain a "prayer of dismissal, or counter relief." This would seem to indicate an intent to allow an answer to set up matters proper for a set off, or cross action, such as are allowed in the Circuit Court, but the practice is to require the answer to be filed as a cross-bill, when such matters are set up, and counter-relief sought thereon. Nevertheless, when there are counter equities in the defendant's favor, which may be granted on the maxim, that he who seeks equity must do equity, it is proper for such a defendant to set these out fully in his answer, and pray for such counter-relief. The answer, when filed as a cross-bill, will be considered hereafter.

§ 374. When an Answer Must be Sworn to, even when the Oath is Waived. There are two classes of cases wherein the answer must be sworn to, even when the complainer has waived an answer under oath: (1) where the statute requires the defence to be on oath; and (2) where the defendant uses his answer both as a pleading and as an affidavit.
1. Where the Statute Requires It. Under the Code, all pleas which (1) deny the execution, or assignment, by the defendant, his agent, attorney, or partner, of any instrument in writing the foundation of the suit, whether produced, or alleged to be lost or destroyed; and (2) all pleas since the last continuance, must be sworn to. 39 So, when any of these defences are set up in answer, the answer must be sworn to.

Where the plea is required to be sworn to, if the defendant cannot admit or deny the fact for want of sufficient knowledge, he may state his want of knowledge, and thereupon make the denial necessary to present the defence.40

Every written contract, instrument, or signature, purporting to be executed by the party sought to be charged, his partner, agent, or attorney in fact, and constituting the foundation of an action, is conclusive evidence against such party, unless the execution thereof is denied under oath.41 If the party be dead, the personal representative may make the denial under oath, according to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief.42

The execution or assignment of instruments offered in evidence by the defendant, when allowed by law, is equally conclusive as when introduced by the complainant, unless denied under oath.43

When two or more persons sue as partners upon an account, bill of exchange, bond or note, unless the partnership is denied by a plea, or answer on oath, the partnership need not be proved.44

A sworn account from another county, or State, is conclusive evidence against the party sought to be charged, unless he shall on oath deny the account, or prove that it has been paid.45

So, if the instrument sued on, although originally executed by the defendant, has been materially altered since its execution without authority from the defendant, he must in his answer, or by a special plea of non est factum, so aver; and such answer or plea must be sworn to,47 even though the bill call for an unsworn answer.

And if an endorser is sued on his endorsement, he must deny, on oath, the execution of the endorsement, and as a result, his plea or answer denying the endorsement must be sworn to.48

The answer denying the execution or assignment of such instruments, must be as definite and comprehensive as a plea. But, in such cases, the defendant is not bound to swear to the truth of any other matter or defence contained in his answer, when his oath to his answer is waived, and may limit his oath to such parts of the answer as contains the required denial; or he may annex to his answer as a part thereof a sworn denial.

SPECIAL AFFIDAVIT TO AN ANSWER.

Richard Roe makes oath that so much of his foregoing answer as denies that complainants are partners [or, as denies the execution, or assignment, or endorsement, of the note, account, or other instrument, sued on.] is true.

the defendant needs to use his answer as an affidavit, in order to meet a sworn bill in some interlocutory matter, such as on an application to set aside a judgment pro confesso, or on a motion to dissolve an injunction, or to secure or resist the appointment of a receiver, or for some other purpose.\(^4\) In all such cases, the answer must be sworn to, in order to be of any avail.\(^5\)

§ 375. Essentials of an Answer.—An unsworn answer must contain the following essentials:

1. It must be properly entitled.
2. It must respond to all the material allegations of the bill sufficiently to admit them, or to put them in issue.
3. It must set up, distinctly, each and every special defence to be relied on at the hearing.\(^6\)
4. It must be free from scandal and impertinence.
5. It must be properly signed.
6. It must be filed in the cause.

A sworn answer, in addition to the foregoing essentials, must contain the following:

1. It must make full and true discovery of every matter charged in the body of the bill, or contained in the interrogatories, as to which the defendant has either personal knowledge or remembrance, or information from others, or belief; and if, as to any such matter, the defendant has neither knowledge, remembrance, information, nor belief, he must so distinctly state.
2. It must be properly sworn to.

If any of these essentials, except the third, is wanting in an answer, it will be subject to exceptions, as hereafter shown.

§ 376. When an Answer Must be Filed.—Unless a plea in abatement, demurrer, or plea in bar, has been duly filed on or before the third day of the appearance term, if the Court holds three days, and if not, on the first day of the appearance term, an answer must then be filed, or the defendant will be in default, and liable to an order taking the bill for confessed, and to a final decree thereon.\(^7\) But, on good cause shown,\(^8\) the defendant may obtain further time within which to file his answer: in which case the answer must be filed within the time given, or he will be liable to a pro confesso.\(^9\)

\(^4\) It must always be sworn to in support of a motion to set aside an order pro confesso, when the defendant is required to show merits. No Court should set aside a pro confesso in order to let in an unsworn answer. But after such an answer is filed, if the bill has waived the defendant's oath, the affidavit to the answer is functus officio.

\(^5\) See, ante, §§ 387; 842.

\(^6\) This is really not an essential in the ordinary meaning of the term. An answer will be good without it, but a defendant would not be allowed to prove any matter in avoidance, unless it was specially pleaded. It is, therefore, essential to the defendant's defence that such special matter be set up in his answer.

\(^7\) See, ante, §§ 225-227.

\(^8\) See, post, § 62, sub-sec. 8, as to what is meant by "good cause shown."

THE FRAME AND FORM OF AN ANSWER.\(^1\)

§ 385. Forms of Titles and Commencements of Answers.

§ 386. Forms used in Framing Answers, and Setting up Defenses.

§ 377. Commencement of an Answer.—In the first place, an answer must be entitled in the cause so as to agree with the style of the cause in which it is to be filed. A defendant may correct any mistake in his own name made by the bill,\(^2\) but cannot correct or alter the names of other parties,\(^3\) or change the style of the cause.\(^4\) There are several forms of titles of answers, all of which will be hereafter considered.

An answer must clearly show (1) of which of the defendants it is the answer; and (2) the names of the complainants in the cause in which it is filed as an answer. Two or more persons may join in the same answer, and where their interests are the same, and they appear by the same Solicitor, they ought to do so, unless some good reason exists for their answering separately. It may be stated as a general rule, that the defendants should answer jointly, unless their titles are different. An answer, purporting to be the joint answer of five defendants, cannot be sworn to as the answer of three only, but it ought to be amended by striking out the names of the other two. An answer misnaming the complainant, is considered as no answer; and the defendant, therefore, is not bound by it. If there is a mistake in a name, the answer may be taken off the file, corrected, and resworn. But where there is a misnomer of the complainant in the cause, and a proper answer is afterward put in, the first answer will be ordered to be taken off the file, by the description of a paper writing, purporting to be an answer.\(^5\)

After giving the title of the cause, it is common, in drawing an answer, to make a reservation of the benefit of all exceptions to the bill because of its errors, uncertainties, and imperfections; but such a reservation is not only utterly worthless, but downright surplusage, and mere impertinence; and may be stricken out on motion of the complainant, or by the Court on its own motion.\(^6\) But if the defendant desires to rely on a demurrer in his answer, it is ordinarily set out before the answer of the bill is undertaken.

§ 378. Body of the Answer.—Next after the demurrer, if any, comes the substance of the answer, according to the defendant's knowledge, remembrance, information and belief, in which the matter of the bill, with the interrogatories founded thereon, are answered one after the other, together with such additional matter as the defendant thinks necessary to bring forward in his defence, either for the purpose of qualifying, or of adding to, the case made by the bill, or of stating a new case on his own behalf.\(^7\)

The answer should contain a clear and orderly statement of the facts on which it is founded, without prolixity or repetition; and should not refer to files of another Court as containing a statement of the defendant’s case.

After the responses to the various charges and interrogatories, and after setting up any matters in avoidance, and any pleas or other special defences to be relied on, the answer usually contains a general traverse or denial of any and all other matters not already otherwise specifically answered, and concludes with a prayer of dismissal or counter-relief, according to the nature of the case.

Where there are several defendants, one of them may sufficiently answer by adopting a sufficient answer, put in by a co-defendant; but it will not be a sufficient adoption to say that the facts in the co-defendant’s answer are “substantially correct as far as this defendant is concerned.” Where two defendants answer jointly, and one of them speaks positively for himself, the other may, where not charged with anything on his personal knowledge, say he has read the answer and believes it to be true.

An answer, like a bill, should be divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively, each paragraph containing, as nearly as possible, a separate and distinct response, statement, or allegation. This practice has been found not only conducive to brevity and certainty in pleading, but greatly facilitates reference to the contents.

§ 379. When, How, by Whom, and Before Whom, an Answer Must be Signed and Sworn to.—The signing and verification of an answer are matters of no little importance: they are the acts which vitalize it and entitle it to a place among the records of the Court, and to be filed in the cause whereof it is entitled.

1. By Whom an Answer Must be Signed. An answer must be signed by the defendant in person, or by his Solicitor, and that Solicitor must belong to the bar of the Court in which the answer is filed. The reason a Solicitor is required to sign the answer, when a party does not sign in person, is to ensure that it is in proper form, and contains no scandalous or impertinent matter; and to enable the Court to know to whom to look, in case of gross irregularities in the body of the answer.

2. By Whom an Answer Must be Sworn to. An answer must also be sworn to by each and all of the defendants joining in the same, except those whose oath is waived by the bill. The defendants may jointly, or separately, or jointly and severally; answer, but in either case each defendant whose oath is not waived, must swear to his answer, or it will be no answer as to him. A joint answer of husband and wife must be sworn to by both, unless the complainant consents to receive it on the oath of the husband only. The guardian of a minor, or of a non compos, and a guardian ad litem, swear to the answers they put in for their wards, they swearing only to their belief in the truth of the defence made. When a married woman is also an infant, she must answer by guardian ad litem.

But the signature of a party, or of his counsel, or of both, or the oath of a defendant, will be deemed to have been waived, if not objected or excepted to within the time allowed for filing exceptions to the answer.18

The answer of a corporation is put in without oath, and under the corporate seal, if it have one; if none, then, under a scroll attested by its president or other proper officer. But if a corporation desires its answer to perform any of the functions of an affidavit, or as a ground for dissolving an injunction, it must be sworn to by some officer acquainted with the facts.19

If the bill does not waive an answer on oath, the defendant must make affidavit to the truth of his answer, unless the defendant is a corporation, in which case its corporate seal is attached as its most solemn affirmation of the truth of its answer.20 The proper verification of the answer is always a matter of great importance, and often the rights of the defendant depend on the force and effect of the affidavit to his answer.21 Where a defendant is neither an infant nor a lunatic, he must swear to his answer, in his own proper person. A married female defendant must swear to her answer when the bill so requires. Guardians ad litem sign and swear to their own answers.22 Neither an infant nor a lunatic is required to sign or swear to his answer, unless the infant is over fourteen years of age, and the object of the suit is to sell his property for reinvestment, or for his education and support, in which case he must answer, and swear to his answer, in person.23

If the answer (1) sets up and relies on the plea of non est factum, or if (2) it denies the execution of any written instrument purporting to be signed by the defendant, and constituting the foundation of the suit, or if, (3) it denies the partnership of the complainants in certain cases, such an answer must be sworn to, even when the bill waives the defendant's oath to his answer.24

3. Before Whom an Answer May be Sworn to. Answers may be sworn to (1) before any Judge, Justice of the Peace, Court Clerk, or Notary Public, in this State; and (2) in another State, before any Judge, or Justice of the Peace, accompanied by a certificate of his official capacity by the Clerk of his Court; and (3) before a Commissioner of this State appointed by the Governor, or by a Notary Public, whose attestations shall be under their seals of office; and (4) in any foreign government, before any officer authorized to take probates of deeds, and authenticated in like manner.25

§ 380. Form of an Answer.—It will be seen, from the foregoing analysis, that there is very little formality in an answer. If it is properly entitled, and is responsive to the bill, and is duly signed and verified, when verification is necessary, it will be a sufficient answer. The following is a

FORM OF AN ANSWER. 26

The Title, or Style of the Cause.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al. } In Chancery, at Jacksboro.

Commencement.

The defendant, Richard Roe, for separate answer to the bill filed against him and others in said cause, says:

The Substance, or Body.

I.

That he admits that he purchased from complainant the tract of land described in the bill, at the time and for the price alleged in the 1st paragraph of the bill; but he denies that there was to be any lien retained. On the contrary, this defendant says that it was expressly agreed that there should be no lien, and the deed received by this defendant acknowledges on its face that the purchase-money was fully paid at the delivery of said deed, such acknowledgment being in strict accord with the agreement of the parties.

II.

This respondent denies the allegations contained in the 2d paragraph of the bill, in so far as they charge that the certificate of deposit, given complainant by this defendant, was intended as collateral security for the said purchase-money; and this defendant positively avers the fact to be, that said certificate of deposit was assigned to complainant without recourse, and was received by complainant as equivalent to cash money, and as an absolute and unconditional payment for said land.

III.

This defendant has no personal knowledge, and no information, relative to the matters alleged in the 3d paragraph of the bill, and cannot therefore admit them, or any of them; and he has no belief as to their truth, and demands that they be strictly proven, if deemed material.

IV.

In answer to the allegations contained in the 4th paragraph of the bill, this defendant denies that he ever promised or agreed, to convey to complainant the house and lot described in said paragraph, and says he never made any such, or any, promise or agreement to make said conveyance; and he says that, if any such agreement was made by his co-defendant, Peter Poe, the latter was not by him thereunto lawfully authorized, and this defendant says that there is not, and never was, any agreement in writing to sell or convey said house and lot, or either of them, or any interest in them, signed by him, or by any one by him thereunto lawfully authorized, and as to this paragraph of the bill, and the prayer for specific performance predicated thereon, he relies on and pleads the statute for the prevention of frauds and perjuries.

V.

The General Traverse.

All allegations contained in said bill not already specifically denied are here and now generally denied, and denied as fully as though separately and specifically denied.

The Conclusion.

And now having fully answered, this defendant prays to be hence dismissed with his costs.

26 The Code provides no form for an answer, but declares that the answer should contain a clear and orderly statement of the facts on which the defense is founded, without prolixity or repetition, and conclude with a prayer of dismissal, or counter relief, according to the nature of the case. § 381. Old Form of an Answer.—The old form of an answer was almost as cumbersome and tautological as the old form of a bill, and contained almost as many unnecessary words. Indeed, in both pleadings the sense was often suffocated by the pleonasm in the clauses, and the inversions in the sentences.28 The following form illustrates what were the usual commencements and conclusions of answers, before our Code:

OLD FORM OF ANSWER.

The joint and several answers of John Smith and Henry Jones, two of the defendants, to the bill of complaint, filed against them and others in the Chancery Court at Nashville, by Charles Brown, an infant, by William Brown, his father and next friend, complainant.

These defendants, now and at all times hereafter saying and reserving to themselves all, and all manner of, benefit and advantage of exceptions that can or may be taken to the manifold errors, uncertainties, imperfections and insufficiencies in the said complainant’s said bill contained, for answer thereunto, or unto so much and such parts thereof as these defendants are advised is material or necessary for them to make answer unto—answer and say, they admit, [stating what they specially admit,] and these defendants deny [stating what they specially deny, and concluding as follows:]

And these defendants deny all, and all manner of, unlawful combination and confederacy wherewith they are, in the said bill, charged, without that, that any other matter, cause, or thing, in the complainant’s said bill of complaint contained, material or necessary for these defendants to make answer unto, and not herein or hereby well and sufficiently answered unto, confessed or avoided, traversed, or denied, is true, to the knowledge or belief of these defendants. All of which matters and things these defendants are ready and willing to ever, maintain and prove, as this honorable Court shall direct; and humbly pray to be hence dismissed with their reasonable costs, and charges in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

A. Jackson, Solicitor.

[Annex affidavit by both of the defendants. See ante, § 380.]

Henry Jones.

It will be noted that the whole ground covered by the above answer is covered by the first five and last three lines of the answer set out in the preceding section.

§ 382. An Answer by Adoption.—Where there are several defendants having similar interests and defenses, and one of them has answered, this answer may be adopted in whole or in part by the others, or by any one or more of them. If the answer is adopted in whole by any one or more of such defendants he, or they, may, with the consent of the defendant who has answered, write under such answer words to the following effect:

John Doe, [vs.]

Richard Roe, et al.

In Chancery, at Jacksboro.

* The defendants, Robert Jones and Henry Smith, say they have read, [or, heard read.] the foregoing answer of their co-defendant, Richard Roe, and that the contents thereof are true of their own knowledge, except as to the matters therein stated to be on information and belief, and these matters they believe on information to be true.

And these defendants adopt the foregoing answer of Richard Roe as their own.

Robert Jones.

Henry Smith.

This must be sworn to by the defendants who sign it, unless the bill waives their oath.

If a defendant wishes to adopt an answer in part, but has no personal knowledge of certain matters answered unto on personal knowledge, he can do so by specifying these matters, and answering as to them on information and belief or otherwise, as shown in the following form:

ANSWER BY ADOPTION.

John Doe, [vs.]

Richard Roe, et al.

In Chancery, at Jacksboro.

The defendant, Roland Roe, for answer to the bill in this cause says that he has read of affidavit is often used for both bills and answers:

State of Tennessee, [Sworn to, as above.]

County of Hamilton.

Richard Roe makes oath [or, affirms,] that the statements in his foregoing answer, made as his own knowledge, are true; and those made as on information and belief, he believes to be true.

More care should be given to the forms of affidavits and jurats than is sometimes done. See Article on Affidavits, post, §§ 788-789.

[or, heard read] the answer of his co-defendant, Richard Roe, and that the said answer is true as of his own knowledge, except as to the parts thereof contained in paragraphs 4 and 5, in reference to certain alleged trespasses [specifying with particularity the parts excepted,] and as to these matters he has no personal knowledge but on information believes the answer as to them to be true.

And this defendant adopts the said answer of Richard Roe as his own.

Roland Roe.

This answer must be sworn to, unless the bill waives this defendant’s oath. If the oath of the defendant is waived, he can write under the answer he desires to adopt, the following: “I adopt the foregoing answer, and make it my own,” and sign it, and have the Clerk and Master refute it as his answer.

§ 383. Answer of an Infant.—An infant answers by his general guardian, if he have one, if not, he answers by a special guardian appointed by the Court, _pro hac vice_, called a guardian _ad litem_, as heretofore fully shown.29

The guardian _ad litem_ ordinarily files a mere general answer for his ward, placing his rights and interests under the protection of the Court,30 but, if on investigation, he deems it advisable to put in a special answer for his ward, it is his duty to do so.31

If an infant who has answered by guardian _ad litem_ attains his majority while the cause is pending, he has the right to put in a new answer, upon satisfying the Court that his interests will be promoted thereby. His application to put in a new answer should be supported by affidavit showing merits, and should be made without delay.32

The following is the usual form33 of a

GENERAL ANSWER OF AN INFANT BY GUARDIAN AD LITEM.

John Doe,

_vs._

Richard Roe, _et al._

In Chancery, at Jacksboro.

The defendant, Robert Roe, an infant, for separate answer to the bill filed against him in said cause, answering by J. E. Cassady, his guardian _ad litem_, says, That he is an infant about ten years old, and knows nothing about the matters in said bill alleged, and, therefore, neither admits nor denies them, but submits his rights and interests in said matters to the protection of the Court.

By J. E. Cassady, Guardian _ad litem._

The answer must be sworn to by the Guardian _ad litem_; indeed, the answer is considered to be his, and not the infant’s; and the infant is not bound by it; and it cannot be excepted to for insufficiency.33a

§ 384. Answers of Other Persons Under Disability.—An idiot answers by his regular guardian, or by a guardian _ad litem_ specially appointed by the Court to make proper defence for him. If a defendant is reduced to a state of second childhood by age and infirmity, the course is for him to answer by a guardian _ad litem_ in the same manner as an infant. The answer of a lunatic is, also, to be made by his regular guardian, or by the person appointed as his guardian _ad litem_ by the Court to defend the suit. And a complainant cannot except, for insufficiency, to the answer of a defendant of unsound mind, against whom a commission of lunacy has issued, he answering by his guardian _ad litem_; but if he answers by a regular guardian his answer may be excepted to.34

A married woman generally answers jointly with her husband, but sometimes she answers separately by leave of the Court; in which case she answers by her next friend. Where a marriage has really taken place only to defraud creditors, a married woman may be made to answer as if she were single. And it has been held, that where a husband and wife have answered jointly, and the bill is afterwards amended, and then the husband goes abroad, the wife remaining in this country, and being the material defendant, there must be an order upon her to answer separately, or it will not be any contempt of the Court in her if she refuse to answer.\footnote{35}

A married woman may, by leave of the Court, answer separately from her husband (1) when their interests are antagonistic; (2) when he is mental; incompetent to answer; (3) when she disapproves of the defence he intends to make; (4) when they are living separate; and (5) in any other case when it seems proper to the Court that she should be allowed to answer separately.\footnote{36}

§ 385. Forms of Titles and Commencements of Answers.—While, as has often before been remarked, the Chancery Court looks to substance rather than to form, and while there is no prescribed form of an answer, nevertheless there must be enough form to enable the Court and its officers to identify the writing as an answer, and there must be enough title and commencement to clearly show what particular bill it answers. The following are some of the most common forms of titles and commencements used in our State:

TITLES AND COMMENCEMENTS OF ANSWERS.

1. For Husband and Wife.\footnote{37}

The joint answer of Richard Roe and Rachel Roe, his wife, defendants to the bill of complaint of John Doe, filed against them [and others] in the Chancery Court at Nashville.

These defendants reserving to themselves all right of exception to said bill, for answer thereto say: [Or the following form can be used in lieu:]

\begin{align*}
\text{John Doe,} \\
\text{vs.} \\
\text{Richard Roe, et al.} \\
\end{align*}

These defendants, as husband and wife, jointly answering the bill in said cause, say: [Or when the wife answers separately, the commencement will be:]

The defendant, Rachel Roe, answering the bill in said cause separately from her husband the said Richard Roe, by leave [or order] of the Court, says:

2. For Two or More Defendants who are Sui Juris, and Join in Answering.

The joint and several answers of Roland Roe and Romeo Roe, defendants, to the bill of complaint filed against them [and others] in the Chancery Court at Memphis by John Doe and Henry Doe.

These defendants reserving to themselves all right of exception to said bill, say: [Or the following form can be used in lieu:]

\begin{align*}
\text{John Doe,} \\
\text{vs.} \\
\text{Rich Roe, et al.} \\
\end{align*}

The defendants, Roland Roe and Romeo Roe, jointly and severally answering the bill in said cause, say:

3. For Separate Answer by a Defendant who is Misnamed in the Bill.

The separate answer of Richard Roe in the bill called Rich Roe, defendant, to the bill of complaint filed against him and others in the Chancery Court at Chattanooga by John Doe.

This defendant reserving all right and benefit of exception to said bill, for answer thereto says: [Or the following form may be used in lieu:]

\begin{align*}
\text{John Doe,} \\
\text{vs.} \\
\text{Rich Roe, et al.} \\
\end{align*}

The defendant, Richard Roe, in the bill in said cause, called Rich Roe, separately answering said bill, says:

4. For Separate Answer by a Corporation.

\begin{align*}
\text{John Doe,} \\
\text{vs.} \\
\text{Montvale Springs Company.} \\
\end{align*}

The defendant, the Montvale Springs Company [or, the County of Blount, or the City of Knoxville, or the Knoxville & Augusta Railroad Company,] for separate answer to the bill filed against him in said cause, says:

§ 386. Forms Used in Framing Answers, and in Setting up Defences.—There are certain formulas used in framing answers, which, while not essential... are evidences of good pleading, and the young Solicitor would do well to adopt them wherever applicable. The following are those oftener needed:

1. Where a Defendant Admits a Statement. This defendant, further answering, says he has been informed and believes it to be true, that [or, This defendant admits that, (specifying the substance of the allegation in the bill intended to be admitted.)]

2. Where the Defendant is Ignorant as to the Allegation. This defendant, further answering, says that he knows nothing whatever as to the truth of the allegation in the bill that, [here stating the allegation briefly:] and this defendant has no information or belief in reference thereto, he being an utter stranger to all these matters, and to each of them.

3. Where the Defendant Denies an Allegation in the Bill. This defendant, further answering, denies that, [or, says it is not true that,] this defendant [or, the complainant,] did [specifying the substance of the charge denied.]

4. Where the Defendant Denies an Allegation and Calls for its Proof. This defendant denies that [here giving the substance of the allegation denied:] and if such fact is material, this defendant requires that it be duly proved, [or, that the deed, or other writing, be produced and duly proved, or, that said decree, judgment, award, or contract, be produced at or before the hearing of the cause, and proved in the manner required by law.]

5. Where a Defendant Believes a Statement to be True. And this defendant, further answering, says that he believes it to be true that, [stating the allegation in the bill referred to:] but the defendant does not know the same of his own knowledge.

6. Where an Account of Moneys Received, or Paid, is Required. And this defendant, further answering, says he has, in a schedule to this answer, marked A, which he makes a part hereof, set forth, according to the best and utmost of his knowledge, remembrance, information and belief, a full, true, and particular account of all and every sum and sums of money by him received for or on account of [the matter in controversy, stating it.]

7. Where a Defendant Admits a Statement as to a Written Instrument. And this defendant further says that he has been informed and believes it to be true that the allegation in complainant's bill as to the existence of a certain deed [will, contract, bond, mortgage, or other writing, specifying the instrument referred to,] is true, but this defendant has no knowledge of the contents thereof, and for greater certainty as to its contents refers to the said deed [or other instrument] when the same shall be produced and duly proved, and such production and proof this defendant requires.

8. General Denial of Allegations not Already Admitted or Denied. All and every charge and allegation in complainant's bill not hereinbefore answered, admitted, avoided, or denied, is here and now denied, and the complainant required to fully prove the same, according to the rules of law and of this Court.

9. Where the Defendant Pleads the Statutes of Limitations in his Answer. This defendant avers and pleads that the cause of action set forth in the bill, if any there be, accrued more than six [or ten] years before said bill was filed; and he relies on and pleads the statute of limitations of six [or ten] years in bar of the complainant's bill and alleged cause of action. [Or, To so much of the bill as seeks to hold this defendant liable on (or, seeks to recover, or, seeks a decree for, the account, note, debt, bond, mortgage, or lien,) he pleads and relies on the statute of limitations of six (or ten) years in bar thereof, the cause of action alleged having accrued more than six (or ten) years before the bill was filed, as he avers and pleads.]

10. Where the Defendant Pleads the Statute of Frauds in his Answer. This defendant avers and says that the agreement for the sale of the land described in the bill [or other agreement sought to be enforced] alleged to have been made by this defendant, and sought to be enforced by the bill, was not reduced to writing, nor was any memorandum or note thereof ever signed by him, or by any one by him thereunto lawfully authorized, and he pleads this fact, and the statute for the prevention of frauds and perjuries, in bar of any relief on said alleged agreement.

11. Where the Defendant Pleads in His Answer that he is an Innocent Purchaser. This defendant avers and says that on May 8, 1890, his co-defendant, Roland Roe, was seized, or pretended to be seized in fee [and so on, using the remainder of the words contained in the plea of innocent purchaser in § 332.]

12. Where the Defendant in His Answer Pleads a Former Judgment or Decree. These defendants, for further answer, say that heretofore, and before the filing of said bill, to-wit, on July 25, 1882, the complainant filed another bill in this Court [or, in the Chancellor Court at ............] against these defendants [and so on, using the remainder of the words contained in the plea of former judgment, in § 329.]

88 If the bill sets up facts to avoid the statute of limitations the answer should specifically and directly deny all the alleged facts. See, once, § 147.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS AS TO ANSWERS.

§ 387. As to Answers When to be Used as Affidavits.

§ 388. As to Setting up Matters in Avoidance.

§ 389. As to Pleading the Statutes of Limitations.

§ 390. As to Pleading the Statutes of Frauds, Innocent Purchaser, and Former Judgment.

§ 391. How to Frame an Answer.

§ 392. As to Answering Fully.

§ 387. As to Answers When to be Used as Affidavits.—Attention has already been called to the fact that an answer often serves the double purpose of a pleading and an affidavit, especially when (1) it is to be used to resist the granting of an injunction prayed for, but not yet allowed; (2) when it is to be used as the basis of a motion to dissolve an injunction already granted; and (3) when it is to be used to resist the appointment of a receiver; or (4) to have the order of appointment modified. In all such cases, the answer must possess all the definiteness, particularity, precision, and directness, necessary in an affidavit; and its value and force will be in direct proportion to its clearness, fullness, and appositeness, and in proportion to the number of its material statements based on the personal knowledge of the defendant himself. Therefore, it is often of vital importance (1) that the answer should show on its face what statements are based on the personal knowledge of the defendant, and what on information and belief; and (2) that the affidavit to the answer should be that the facts stated are on the defendant’s own knowledge are true, and those based on information he believes to be true.

§ 388. As to Setting up Matters in Avoidance.—In drawing an answer, the most important matter for you to consider is: what is your client’s real defence;—on what facts does he rely to defeat the bill. Of course, all the material allegations of the bill must be responded to, and if your client’s defence is purely negative, that is, consists entirely in denying the material facts charged, then an answer negativing the charges in the bill will be adequate to the emergency. But if your client’s defence consists in new matters, matters not stated in the bill, or, if stated, incorrectly stated, then you must set forth these matters in your answer, fully and clearly, according to the facts your client will be able to prove. These new matters are commonly called matters in avoidance, and you will not be allowed to prove them, or to read your proof in reference to them, at the hearing, unless you have in your answer set them up as a defence. It is no uncommon thing for defendants to suffer, because of their failure to set up, in their answer, the facts in avoidance constituting their defence.

The most common matters in avoidance are: (1) fraud, vitiating the contract; (2) failure of consideration; (3) payment; (4) a release; (5) an award; (6) a former judgment; (7) a subsequent agreement; (8) a recission; (9) statute of limitations; (10) statute of frauds; (11) innocent purchaser; (12) usury; (13) tender; (14) infancy; and (15) set-off. In all cases, where matters in avoidance exist, the complainant may, and ordinarily will, aver the original agreement, or other cause of liability, in such a way that he will be entitled to a decree against your client at the hearing, on the pleadings and proof, if, in drawing the answer, you content yourself with merely denying the allegations of the bill. In all such cases, you should be particular to set up your affirmative defences, specifically, fully, and clearly, conforming your allegations to the facts your client will be able to prove.

You must, however, be careful not to get caught between the horns of a dilemma, by setting up matter in avoidance which will entitle the complainant to a decree against your client, on the facts set out in avoidance. Thus, if you allege a contract, or a state of facts disclosing a liability, different from that charged in the bill, the complainant may abandon the grounds for relief alleged in his bill, and take a decree against your client on the facts contained in the answer.

§ 389. As to Pleading the Statutes of Limitations.—If the effect of the lapse of time is to vest title in your client, you need not plead the statute of limitations. Thus, if your client, sued in ejectment, has had seven years open, continuous, adverse possession of the land in dispute, before suit brought, holding under a grant, deed, devise, or other writing purporting to be a conveyance in fee, and the land is granted land, he becomes thereby vested with title thereto, and need not plead the statute of limitations. So, adverse possession of three years gives title to personal property, and you need not plead the statute in such a case. Nevertheless, all prudent pleaders set up and rely on the statutes of limitations, in every case where it can be pleaded.

Remember, the statute cannot be relied on as a defence, except in the two foregoing cases, unless specially set up in a plea, or in the answer. This defence is one a defendant is not obliged to rely on, and the law does not allow it, unless it is relied on; and, where a defendant fails to rely on it, he is deemed to decline the benefits of the statute.

As a result, he will not ordinarily be allowed to amend his answer, so as to set up the statute of limitations, without the payment of the costs of all proof then on file, and frequently will be taxed with all the costs then accrued; and, if the motion to so amend is not made until the trial term, it may be refused altogether.

The defence of the statute of limitations is generally made in the answer, along with all the other defences to the bill, but whether made in the answer, or in a plea, it must be specifically made. It is a fundamental rule in Chancery pleading to allege every fact on which the pleader relies, to make every charge he expects to prove, to set up every defence he hopes to establish, and to bring forward every matter likely to help his case.

§ 390. As to Pleading the Statute of Frauds, Innocent Purchaser, and Former Judgment.—The fact that these, and all other defences in bar, may be set up in an answer, has caused young pleaders to think that, when relied on in an answer, the same measure of definiteness and particularity is not necessary as when relied on by plea. This is an error, that has often resulted in disaster to the defendant. It may be stated, generally, that every defence proper for the subject-matter of a plea in bar, should, when pleaded in the 3 The fact that an unsworn answer is usually called for, often causes Solicitors to draw and file a mere negative answer, in the nature of a general denial of the cause of action, without ever investigating the facts. The result is, defendants, not unfrequently, find themselves, at the hearing, either obliged to submit to a decree, because their proof in avoidance is ruled out; or, are obliged to pay all the costs of the cause, in order to get leave to amend their answer, or to set on their defence in avoid.

answer, be set forth with the same precision and accuracy as when set up in a plea in bar.\footnote{8 See, ante, § 324, note 14.}

1. The Statute of Frauds cannot be relied on at the hearing unless specially pleaded, or set up as a defence in the answer. It will not avail to call attention, in the answer, to the fact that the agreement sued on is not in writing; nor will it profit to deny that it is in writing, or to allege that it is not in writing. The fact that it is not in writing must not only be distinctly averred, but the Court must also be plainly notified that such fact is set up, and relied on as a defence and bar to the relief prayed.\footnote{9 See, ante, §§ 330; 390.}

2. The Defence of Innocent Purchaser is often insufficiently made in answers. Pleading "in short" has sometimes, though with painful reluctance, been condoned by the Courts of law, but never by the Courts of Chancery; and to say in an answer, in a general way, that the defendant was an innocent purchaser and relies on that fact as a defence, avails nothing, and is a mere delusion. The indispensable elements of this plea have been already fully enumerated and treated of, and every prudent pleader will consult his books before framing this defence in his answer.\footnote{10 See, ante, §§ 332; 390.}

3. The Defence of a Former Judgment, or Decree, requires to be drawn with great care in order to be available.\footnote{11 See, ante, § 329.} Instead of great care, however, it often happens that the defence is set up so indefinitely and carelessly that it is wholly ignored at the hearing; and the result is loss to the client, and mortification, not to say disgrace, to the Solicitor.

§ 391. How to Frame an Answer.—In drawing an answer, you should keep in mind the doctrine of relations, and of the general rule of law, already stated.

1. Where Relations Exist.\footnote{12 See, post, § 415, for a summary of all possible defences on the merits.} If the bill is based upon relations, you must either (1) deny the relation alleged, or the facts alleged as showing the relation; or (2) you must show that no such duties or rights as alleged resulted from those relations; or (3) you must, by way of avoidance, set up some new facts, such as payment, release, adjustment, former judgment, award, statute of limitations, or the like.

2. Where No Relations Exist. If no relations are alleged, you must either (1) deny the complainant's title; or (2) you must deny the injury he alleges your client has done; or (3) you must, by way of avoidance, set up some of the new facts above stated in case of relations.

3. As to Setting up Defences. In an answer, you can unite as many defences as exist. You may deny the relation and the violation of the relation, and may set up matters in avoidance at the same time. So, you may deny complainant's title and the injury he alleges, and at the same time set up any matters in avoidance. Great care must be observed in such cases, however, to prevent your answer from presenting inconsistent or antagonistic defences. Thus, while denying the title or relation, and the injury alleged, you may say:

DENIAL AND AVOIDANCE, HOW COMBINED.

Further answering, the defendant says that, while not now nor then admitting complainant's title [or, the relation alleged,] and not admitting the wrongs he complains of, nevertheless, for the sake of buying peace and to save himself the trouble and expense of defending a suit, the defendant did on [such a day, giving the date,] pay the complainant the sum of fifty dollars, [or other amount,] in full satisfaction of said supposed injuries; and the defendant pleads said payment and satisfaction in bar of the recovery sought by the bill.

In the same way, a release, former judgment, award, or the statute of limitations, may be set up in bar of any recovery, even when the answer denies the original liability.

Always keep in mind that you cannot rely on, at the hearing, any special defense, it matters not how good a defence it is, nor how clearly it is proved, unless it has been distinctly set up in the answer.\textsuperscript{13}

4. As to the Phraseology of an Answer. Ordinarily, in drawing an answer it is best to begin with the beginning of the bill, and answer its charges and averments, one by one, in the order in which they appear in the bill. If the bill is divided into paragraphs, as it should be, divide your answer into corresponding paragraphs, if practicable, admitting or denying the allegations of the bill, paragraph by paragraph.

Avoid all literary displays, all attempts at wit, all repartee, retorts, or unkind allusions or insinuations, either towards the complainant, or his Solicitor, and all scandal. Courts are not arenas for the display of rhetoric, poetry, wit, sarcasm, or invective, much less of billingsgate or scandal.

In detailing facts, omit all profane and indecent expressions, and all manifestations of indignation or passion. Clothe hard facts in soft words. By the courtesy of your language, show that you are a gentleman, and that you, also, have respect for your profession and for the Court.\textsuperscript{14}

If the answer is called for on oath, remember it becomes both a pleading and a deposition, and let the defendant’s responses to the charges be full, clear, and direct, and let it be sworn to in due form, as heretofore shown.

If the answer is not on oath, have your client sign it; if it is on oath, his signature to the affidavit will be sufficient evidence that it is his answer.

§ 392. As to Answering Fully.—It is a general rule of Equity pleading that, if a defendant answers at all, he must answer fully, if an answer on oath is called for; but that, if his oath is waived, his answer cannot be objected to for insufficiency, provided it makes an issue. Under the operation of this exception to the general rule, many pleaders make their answers a mere string of empty formalities and general denials. This practice had its origin in the fact, that many unworn answers are drawn in the absence of the defendant, and consequently in ignorance of the facts. Nothing, but the most imperious necessity, should ever induce a Solicitor to draw an answer in the absence of his client.

An unworn answer should, not as a rule of pleading, but as a rule of great practical value, be as full as a sworn answer, if the defendant has any defence, or even excuse, to present to the Court. The bill often opens up the details of the controversy, and pictures in dark colors the wrongs alleged, making the narrative hot with flashes of invective and denunciation against violations of trust and confidence, or pathetic with the sufferings of injured innocence, or the wails of victimized suppliants — all done to arouse indignation against the defendant, and sympathy for the complainant.

To such a hot storm of allegation and denunciation, mere cold and formal denials of the material allegations of the bill are totally insufficient. Such an answer is often regarded as but little better than an admission, that the defendant has no merits on his side, and that his only hope of success depends on denials, and the failure of proof. To meet such a bill, the defendant, even when his oath is waived, should go into the details of the controversy from his own point of view, and should show, as far as possible, that the complainant has drawn on his imagination for his facts; and should, in a dispassionate and calm manner, meet all the allegations, and show the hollowness of complainant’s charges. Do not undertake to meet heat with heat, or denunciation with denunciation; but, on the contrary, reprove such displays in a Court, and adopt a style of coolness and a tone of moderation, as a sign of confidence in the justness of your defence, and of your willingness to have all the facts presented to the Court.

\textsuperscript{14}Chancellors frequently debate in their hearts, while pleadings are being read, whether to order scandalous and impertinent matter to be stricken out, or to reprove counsel therefor, or to pass the matter in silence. It is amply sufficient in a bill, to charge that the adverse party used indecent or profane language, without specifying the language used. The language used is mere evidence, and not a proper allegation. No pleading should contain such matters of evidence.

Therefore, as a rule, answer fully, whether your client's oath is demanded or waived. Such an answer can do no harm, and will often do much good. A bill is a sort of opening argument on behalf of the complainant; and that argument will seldom be met by a mere formal general denial: Let your answer present your side of the controversy, as fully as the facts and the rules of pleading will permit.

If your client has a meritorious defense have him swear to his answer, even when his oath is waived. Such an answer has more force. The Court is impressed by the fact that it is not a mere pleading by counsel.

ARTICLE VI.
DISCLAIMERS TO BILLS.

§ 393. Disclaimers Defined.
§ 394. When Defendant not Allowed to Disclaim.
§ 395. When Disclaimer Allowable.

§ 393. Disclaimers Defined.—If the defendant has no defence, and does not desire to make any, he need not answer the bill, or make any other defence thereto, unless a discovery is sought from him, in which case he must answer; for, if he does not do so voluntarily, he can be compelled by attachment. If he claims nothing, and the bill on its face shows that he has no interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and that no relief is prayed against him, he may demur, unless the bill alleges that he has, or claims, an interest, in which case he must disclaim, or answer. If he claims no interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and he has not been claiming any, and has not been exercising any acts of possession or ownership thereover, he may disclaim. A disclaimer is a sort of answer, which renounces all claim to the subject of the complainant's demand, and makes no defence other than a denial of any and all charges that the defendant is claiming an interest in the subject-matter of the suit, or is in possession of it, or exercising acts of ownership over it, when such charges are made.

A disclaimer is distinct, in substance, from an answer, although sometimes confounded with it. But it can seldom be put in without an answer; for, if the defendant has been made a party by mistake, having had an interest, which he may have parted with, the complainant may require an answer sufficient to ascertain whether that is the fact, or not; and if, in truth, it is so, an answer seems necessary to enable the complainant to make the assignee a party, instead of the defendant disclaiming. And although a mere witness may avoid answering by a disclaimer, yet an agent, charged by a bill with personal fraud, cannot, by disclaiming any interest, avoid answering fully.

§ 394. When Defendant Not Allowed to Disclaim.—A defendant cannot, by a disclaimer, deprive the complainant of the right of requiring a full answer from him; unless it is evident that the defendant ought not, after such disclaimer, to be retained as a party to the suit. For a complainant may have a right to an answer and a discovery notwithstanding a disclaimer; and, in such a case, the defendant cannot shelter himself from answering, by alleging that he has no interest in the subject-matter of the suit.\textsuperscript{2} Although he has no interest in it, others may have an interest in it against him. He may be deeply accountable; and the very statement, that he is deeply accountable, is, in one sense, an allegation that he has an interest in the suit. A man cannot disclaim his liability. Under such circumstances, it may be necessary to revive a suit against the personal representatives of a deceased defendant, who had himself disclaimed.\textsuperscript{3} Nor can a disclaimer by one defendant prejudice the complainant’s right as against the others.\textsuperscript{4}

A party cannot get rid of his liability to answer a suit by a mere disclaimer, if his answer may properly, under all the circumstances, be required.\textsuperscript{5} Thus, for example, if his disclaimer does not show that he is under no liability in respect to the matters of the bill, it will be bad. So, if the bill alleges some other facts, as, that the defendant has mixed himself up with the whole transaction, and has by his personal conduct made it necessary that the bill should be filed, a mere disclaimer will not entitle him to be dismissed from further answering the suit; for, under such circumstances, justice might not be done to the other party. Generally speaking, therefore, a mere disclaimer is scarcely to be deemed sufficient, or proper, except where the bill simply alleges that the defendant claims an interest in the property in dispute, without more, for under such circumstances, if the defendant, claims no interest, that is a sufficient answer to the allegation.\textsuperscript{6} It would seem, on principle and authority, that a disclaimer cannot be made by a person, incapable from disability, of conveying the property or right disclaimed.\textsuperscript{7}

Unless the defendant has been claiming, or been in possession of, the subject-matter, or exercising acts of ownership over it, the disclaimer generally ends the suit at complainant’s cost. But if the disclaimer is false, the complainant may prove its falsity, and thus not only entitle himself to a decree, but subject the defendant, in the discretion of the Court, to the costs of the suit.

§ 395. When Disclaimer is Allowable.—A disclaimer is ordinarily filed by a defendant, when he is falsely charged with claiming an interest in certain property, assets, or rights, specified in the bill. A party who claims an interest in land may be sued, even though not in possession, or not exercising any acts of ownership;\textsuperscript{8} and if the allegation that he claims an interest is false, in whole or in part, he must disclaim as to so much of the land as he does not claim, be it all or only a part. So, if the bill seeks to recover more land than the defendant is in possession of, or is exercising acts of ownership over, he must disclaim as to so much of the land as he does not claim, or is not in possession of, or is not exercising acts of ownership over; and as to the part he does claim, he must plead or answer. Any plea, or answer, which denies that the defendant is unlawfully withholding the land sued for, or is unlawfully claiming an interest in, or unlawfully exercising acts of ownership over, the land sued for, admits that the defendant is in possession of the premises sued for, unless he states distinctly in his answer the extent of his possession.\textsuperscript{9} Hence, it is of great importance to the defendant, to show distinctly, in his answer, by metes and bounds, or other definite description, the extent of his possession or claim, and to enter a full and absolute disclaimer as to the balance of the land sued for; otherwise, although he may defeat a recovery as to that part of the land which, outside of his answer, he really claims, he will be liable to the costs of the cause for contesting the complainant’s right to all the land sued for. But a defendant cannot dispute the complainant’s entire claim, and, at the same time, in the same answer, disclaim as to part; for, in such a case, his answer would overrule his disclaimer.\textsuperscript{10}

\textsuperscript{2} Wallace v. County Court, 3 Shan. Cas., 556.  \textsuperscript{3} Sto. Eq. Pl., § 840.  \textsuperscript{4} 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 707.  \textsuperscript{5} Wallace v. County Court, 3 Shan. Cas., 556.  \textsuperscript{6} Sto. Eq. Pl., § 838.  \textsuperscript{7} Bouv. L. Dig., "Disclaimer."  \textsuperscript{8} Code, § 3231.  \textsuperscript{9} Code, § 3240.  \textsuperscript{10} Lea v. Slatterly, 7 Bax., 235; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 709; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 839. The two defences are absolutely inconsistent. \textit{Allegans contra non est audendus}.
A defendant cannot, after bill filed, transfer his interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and then disclaim.

§ 396. Effect of Disclaimer.—If the defendant disclaims, and it appears that the bill was exhibited for vexation only, the Court will dismiss the bill, with costs against the complainant. But if the complainant had probable cause or reason to exhibit his bill against such defendant, he may, if he pleases, pray a decree against such defendant, and all claiming under him, since the bill was exhibited; and it is commonly granted. The course to be pursued by the complainant, after a sufficient disclaimer to the whole bill has been filed, is either to dismiss the bill as to the party disclaiming, or to amend; unless the disclaimer is false, and this he may prove.

If a defendant puts in a disclaimer, and afterwards discovers that he had an interest, which he was not apprized of at the time when he disclaimed, the Court will, upon the ground of ignorance, or mistake, permit him to make his claim. But the Court will, in such a case, require the defendant to show a strong ground by affidavit, to get rid of the disclaimer upon the record. If the defendant takes no steps to get rid of the effect of the disclaimer, he will be forever barred, because it is matter of record. Where a defendant claims rights against a co-defendant, but not against the complainant, he should reserve such rights in his disclaimer, or they will not be considered in determining the suit.

When an answer amounts to a disclaimer, any matter in it, not responsive to the bill, is mere surplusage. Thus, where the stock of a shareholder in a corporation was attached, and such a corporation being a co-defendant, answered that it had no interest in the stock, but that a third party not sued had, the allegation as to such third party was held to be mere surplusage.

If the disclaiming defendant has occasioned the suit by his own miscon duct, as by setting up a false claim, the complainant may so show, and on this being done the costs will be adjudged against such defendant.

§ 397. Frame of Disclaimer.—Though a disclaimer is, in substance, distinct from an answer, yet it is, in point of form, an answer, and is preceded and concluded by the same formal words, and it is put in and filed, in the same way. It contains simply an assertion that defendant disclaims all right and title to the matter in demand; but, in order to entitle the defendant to be dismissed with costs, the disclaimer should state that the defendant does not, and never did, claim any, and that he now disclaims all, right and title in the subject-matter of the suit. The forms given in the books of practice are all of an answer and disclaimer, joined in one pleading.

If a defendant puts in a disclaimer when he ought to answer, or accompanies his disclaimer by an answer which is considered insufficient, the defendant may except to it, in the same manner as to an answer. And if a disclaimer and answer are inconsistent, the matter will be taken most strongly against the defendant on the disclaimer.

A defendant may disclaim as to one or more matters in the bill, and answer as to the others. So, he may demur to one part of the bill, plead to another part, answer to a third, and disclaim to a fourth; but each of these defences must clearly refer to a separate and distinct part of the bill, and no defense must lap on any part of the bill covered by another defence, for reasons already given.

Under our Code, a disclaimer will be deemed a species of answer; and must, like an answer, be sworn to by the defendant, when his oath is not waived, and must be signed by the defendant in person, or by his Solicitor.

§ 398. Form of Disclaimer.—The essential thing in all pleadings in Chancery is substance; and so a disclaimer is sufficient, if, (1) it contains the necessary substance, and (2) is properly entitled and filed in the cause, and (3) is duly signed when the defendant’s oath is waived, or is duly signed and sworn to, when the oath is not waived. The following is a

John Doe, vs. V No. 423. — In the Chancery Court, at Kingston, Tenn.

Richard Roe, et al.

This defendant, Roland Roe, for answer and disclaimer to the bill filed against him and others in this cause, separately answering, says:

I.

That he disclaims any and all right, title, interest, or claim in and to the tract of land described in the bill, [or to the legacy or property or other subject-matter of the suit.]

II.

[If the facts will warrant it, then add:] This defendant further says that he does not now claim said land, [or other property.] or any interest whatever therein, and never did claim any interest whatever, and never had any possession of said land, and never exercised any acts of ownership over it.

He, therefore, prays that this disclaimer may be taken as a full and sufficient answer to said bill, and that he may be hence dismissed with his costs.

CHAPTER XVIII.
CROSS BILLS.

§ 399. Cross Bills Generally Considered. — It frequently happens that the original bill is so framed as to cramp a defendant in making his defence; or that full justice cannot be done all the parties, and especially a defendant, without bringing other and cognate matters before the Court; or without a discovery from the complainant; or that it is necessary to bring a new party before the Court in order to fully adjust the rights and equities of the original parties; or that the defendant has affirmative rights growing out of, or incident to, the subject-matter of the controversy, which he wishes to have adjudicated and enforced in the same litigation; or that the defendant is entitled to a set off, a receiver, an injunction, or some other affirmative relief connected with the litigation. In any such cases, the defendant may file a cross bill, in order more fully to make his defence, or in order to obtain the affirmative relief to which he deems himself entitled.

In our practice, the efficacy of cross bills has been enlarged, and the variety and extent of the reliefs granted greatly increased; so that, by means of both original and cross bills, the Court is enabled to fully dispose of the entire subject-matter of every litigation; and to do complete justice to all the parties, complainant and defendant; and enforce the rights and duties of all, so as to leave no roots out of which new suits may arise.1

§ 400. When a Cross Bill should be Filed. — The proper time for filing a cross bill, when such a bill is deemed necessary, is at the time of putting in the answer to the original bill; for the cross bill is, ordinarily, for the purpose of making a more complete defence than can be made by an answer. If a cross bill is not then filed, the delay must be satisfactorily accounted for, or the proceedings on the original suit will not be stayed.2

Under our Code, the answer may be filed as a cross bill, if the relief thereby sought is against the complainant; but, if it is necessary to bring new parties before the Court, a separate cross bill must be filed. Ordinarily, all of the equities and legal rights the defendant desires to bring before the Court, and have adjudicated, may be set up as well in an answer, filed as a cross bill, as in a separate cross bill;3 and, as a consequence, separate cross bills are now seldom filed, except when necessary to make a new party, or when filed subsequently to the filing of the answer to the original bill. Sometimes, the necessity for a cross bill does not appear until after the filing of the answer; and sometimes the facts, necessitating a cross bill, do not arise until after the filing of the answer: in such cases, a separate cross bill must be filed; and, if prompt and proper application is made, leave to file it will be readily granted.

§ 401. Proceedings upon a Cross Bill. — When the defendant resorts to a cross bill, he is required to answer the original bill before he can require the original complainant to answer the cross bill. A cross bill may be dismissed on motion, demurred to, pleaded to, or answered; and these various defences must be made, at the same time, and in the same way, as in case of defences to original bills. The testimony taken in the original cause may be read in the cross cause, and vice versa, as a rule: the two causes are generally treated as one cause; and generally heard and determined at the same time, and in the same decree. At the hearing, the cross bill may be dismissed, and relief granted on the original bill; or, the original bill may be dismissed, and relief granted on the cross bill; or, relief may be granted on both bills; or, both bills may be dismissed.

The subject of cross bills will be fully treated in a subsequent Chapter, specially devoted to them. They are briefly alluded to in this part of the book, because, in order of time, they belong here. Their treatment, however, requires too much space to make it convenient to consider them, in detail, here.

5 See, post, §§ 725-738.
CHAPTER XIX.

JOINDER OF DIFFERENT DEFENCES TO A BILL.

§ 402. Joinder of Two or More Kinds of Defence. — As already shown in treating of demurrers and pleas in bar, a defendant is not obliged to confine himself to any one mode of defence; but, if the bill furnish occasion, he may demur to one part of it, plead in bar to another, answer to a third, and disclaim as to the balance; and all of these defences may be joined, and relied on, at the same time. It must, however, be kept in mind, that there cannot be two kinds of defence made to the same part of the bill, at the same time, by separate pleadings; thus, the same part of a bill cannot be demurred to and pleaded to, or answered, at the same time in separate pleadings; nor can the same part be pleaded to and answered, at the same time, in separate pleadings; for a demurrer is overruled by a plea or an answer, and a plea is overruled by an answer. Where two or more kinds of defence are, therefore, made at the same time, by separate pleadings, they must clearly relate to separate and distinct parts of the bill.¹

To illustrate how these various defences may be joined in resisting the same bill: Suppose one complainant should file a bill against one defendant, alleging: (1) that the defendant had agreed, in writing, for a valuable consideration, to convey to him a certain farm; (2) that the defendant at the same time agreed, for a valuable consideration, to sell and convey to him another certain farm adjoining the former; (3) that notwithstanding complainant had fully paid for the former tract, and had duly tendered the stipulated price for the latter tract, the defendant refused to convey either tract; (4) that on complainant remonstrating with the defendant for repudiating said agreements, the defendant assaulted and severely beat him, doing him great injury and damage; and (5) that the defendant is now claiming a part of complainant’s home farm adjoining said latter tract, and is threatening to cut some of the timber trees thereon; and suppose complainant in his said bill should pray: (1) for a specific performance of the two contracts of sale; (2) for damages resulting from the battery charged; and (3) for a decree settling complainant’s title to his home farm. There being only one defendant, the bill could not be attacked for multifariousness,² but the defendant might (1) demur for want of jurisdiction as to the claim for damages; (2) might plead the statute of frauds as to the agreement to sell the second tract mentioned, and show that the agreement was not in writing; (3) might answer as to the agreement in writing to convey the first named tract, and show that the agreement to convey contains a material mistake, hurtful to defendant, and designedly caused by the complainant; and (4) might disclaim as to complainant’s home farm; and (5) might file his answer as a cross bill, or file a separate cross bill, to show the particulars of the mistake in the written agreements to convey, and pray to have it corrected, and the writing reformed.

Our practice favors the incorporation of a demurrer in an answer, and the incorporation of a plea in an answer, the object being to enable the parties to take their proof pending the demurrer, or plea, and thus hasten the final determination of the cause. The statute allowing a defendant to rely on a demurrer or plea in his answer, allows a defendant to answer to so much of the bill as he demurs or pleads to; and in such a case the rule that an answer overrules a demurrer or plea when both apply to the same part of the bill, does not prevail. If, however, the demurrer or plea be merely prefixed to the answer, and not contained in it, or made a part of it, but is intended to be a separate and distinct pleading, an answer covering the part of the bill demurred or pleaded to, would overrule the demurrer, or plea. If, however, the defendant seeks to object to the jurisdiction of the Court, he must file a separate demurrer, or a separate plea, as all answers admit the jurisdiction.

§ 403. How a Demurrer and an Answer Must be Joined.—As an answer overrules a demurrer to so much of the bill as is answered, it is of great importance, when a demurrer does not go to the whole bill, to have it clearly express the particular parts of the bill which it is designed to cover; for, if the particular parts are not distinguished, the Court will be compelled to look over the whole bill, in order to discover them. And this designation of the particular part demurred to must be done, not by way of exception, as by demurring to all, except certain parts of the bill, but by a positive designation of the particular parts intended to be demurred to.

Thus, for example, where a defendant puts in an answer and demurrer, the demurrer extending to the whole of the bill, “except only as to such part, and so much thereof, as requires this defendant to set forth, whether, &c., &c.,” the demurrer was overruled, because it imposed upon the Court the duty of comparing the demurrer and the answer with the whole bill. So, where a defendant put in an answer to so much of the bill as he was advised he was bound to answer, making an answer to certain charges in the bill, and then put in a demurrer “to all and every the other allegations, and charges, and matters, and things in the complainant’s bill contained,” the demurrer was overruled; for it imposed on the Court the necessity of finding out what was demurred to, by examining every part of the bill. So, where a demurrer was put in to all the relief and to all the discovery prayed by the bill, “except so far as the bill seeks a discovery touching the several title deeds, &c., in the bill mentioned, &c., &c.” and as to the residue of the bill, not demurred to, proceeded to answer the facts specified and excepted, the demurrer was held bad, and overruled for the like reason.

In framing a demurrer to one part of the bill, and answering to another part, care must be taken, not only not to include in the part demurred to any part of the bill which is covered by the answer; but also, not to include in the answer any matter to which the demurrer, although not in form, yet in substance, properly applies; for, in such a case, the demurrer is overruled by the answer.

The following is the form of § 404 JOINDER OF DIFFERENT DEFENCES.

I.

This defendant, for demurrer to so much of said bill as seeks to obtain a recovery of damages against him for the assault and battery alleged in the bill, says that this Court has no jurisdiction of such cause of action, but that the jurisdiction thereof is in the Circuit Court; and he prays to be hence dismissed as to so much of said bill as seeks said recovery.

II.

And as to the remainder of said bill, the defendant, not waiving his said demurrer, for answer to said remainder, says; [Then proceed with the answer to the residue of the bill, being careful, however, to say nothing whatever relative to the assault and battery; and conclude as in case of an ordinary answer.]

The matter of demurrer may, however, under the Code, be incorporated in the answer; and, in such a case, the answer may cover matter so relied on without overruling the grounds of demurrer thus set up, unless such grounds dispute the jurisdiction of the Court over the subject-matter or the person. 10 If the defendant desires to dispute the jurisdiction of the Court by a demurrer, he must file a separate demurrer for that purpose, for all answers admit the jurisdiction. 11

The following would be the form of a

DEMMURRER INCORPORATED IN AN ANSWER.

John Doe,

\textit{vs.}

Richard Roe, \textit{et al.} \]

No. 716.—In the Chancery Court, at Jacksboro.

The demurrer and answer of the defendant, Roland Roe, to the bill filed against him and others in the above entitled cause.

This defendant demurs to the bill, because it shows on its face that complainant’s cause of suit accrued more than six years before his bill was filed, and is, therefore, barred by the statute of limitation of six years; and the defendant relies on this ground of demurrer as a defence to the bill.

And for answer to the bill, this defendant, not waiving his foregoing demurrer, says that he paid the debt, for the recovery of which complainant sues, before the filing of the bill.

This defendant, therefore, prays to be dismissed.

§ 404. How a Plea and Answer must be Joined.—What is said in the preceding section, about the care and caution to be observed in joining a demurrer and answer, applies with full force to the joining of a plea and answer. The part pleaded to must be designated with such particularity of description, that there can be no uncertainty as to what part of the bill is covered by the plea; and in answering to the remainder of the bill, care must be taken to say nothing whatever about the particular part of the bill covered by the plea. 12 How this may be done is shown by the following form of a

I.

This defendant, for plea to so much of said bill as seeks a specific performance of the alleged agreement by this defendant to sell and convey to the complainant the second tract of land mentioned in the bill, and therein designated as the "Ridge Farm," says,

That neither this defendant, nor any person by him thereunto-lawfully authorized, did ever sign any contract or agreement in writing, or any memorandum or note, in writing, of any contract or agreement, for the sale to complainant of the said "Ridge Farm," or of any part thereof. And as to so much of said bill as seeks the specific enforcement of the alleged contract for the sale of said "Ridge Farm," this defendant pleads the foregoing matter, and relies on the statute for the prevention of frauds and perjuries.

II.

And, as to the remainder of the said bill, this defendant, not waiving his said plea, for answer to said remainder, says: [Then proceed with the answer to the residue of the bill, carefully avoiding any mention of, or allusion to, any of the allegations in the bill in reference to the "Ridge Farm," and conclude as in case of ordinary answer.]}

A defendant may, however, under the Code, incorporate the matter of any plea in bar in his answer; and he is not required to file a separate plea in any case, except when he seeks to dispute the jurisdiction of the Court. A plea to the jurisdiction of the Court must be separately filed, and any answer will overrule it. The following is the form of a PLEA INCORPORATED IN AN ANSWER.

The plea and answer of the defendant, Robert Roe, to the bill filed against him and others in the above entitled cause.

This defendant, for plea to the said bill, says that the note [bond, or other instrument,] sued on by the complainant, and constituting the foundation of his suit, was not executed by him, or by any one authorized to bind him in the premises. And not waiving his said plea, but relying thereon, this defendant further answering said bill, says: [Here he may set up any other matters of defence, such as infancy, duress, insanity, drunkenness, statute of limitations, or other matter.]

And now, having fully answered, he prays to be dismissed.

Robert Roe.

The plea set up in the foregoing answer must be sworn to, even though the oath to the answer be waived.

§ 405. Form of an Answer Filed as a Cross Bill.—An answer, when intended to be filed as a cross bill, must combine the form and substance of an answer with the substance and prayers of a cross bill. In so far as it is to be an answer, it must conform to all the requirements of an ordinary answer; and when the bill has been fully answered, then the draftsman will set up any equities, connected with the subject-matter of the litigation, which he may desire to have enforced, unless, as generally happens, these equities have already been sufficiently shown in answering the bill. The answer as a cross bill will then conclude with a prayer for process, and for the special relief sought, and for general relief. The following is the form of an answer filed as a cross bill, the original bill having been filed by a wife against her husband and the trustee and beneficiary in a trust deed, to enjoin the sale of the land by the trustee, and assert her rights to a homestead therein:

ANSWER AND CROSS BILL TO ENFORCE DEED OF TRUST.

Ann E. Enochs, by her next friend, John Doe, vs. John W. Wilson, P. E. Wilson, and James W. Enochs.

The joint and several answer and cross bill of John W. Wilson and P. E. Wilson, to the bill filed against them and James W. Enochs, in the above entitled cause.

These respondents, for answer to said bill, say:

I.

They admit that the complainant, Ann E. Enochs, is the wife of their co-defendant, James W. Enochs; and that the complainant's husband is in possession of the tract of land containing one hundred acres described in her bill; and that the defendant, John W. Wilson, is about to sell said tract, in pursuance of authority given him by her husband by a deed of trust, in which she did not join; but these defendants find nothing else in the bill that they can admit, and each and all of the allegations of the bill, not hereinabove admitted, are each and all denied.

II.

The facts connected with the attempt of the defendant, John W. Wilson, to sell said tract, are as follows: James W. Enochs, on January 5, 1876, conveyed the tract of 100 acres described in the bill to the defendant, John W. Wilson, in trust, to secure a note of the said

16 Code, §§ 2909; 3777; ante, §§ 374; 380, note 24.
17 See post, §§ 732-733.
18 This form is based on Enochs v. Wilson, 11 Lea, 226, in which case the original bill was dismissed, and the prayer of the cross-bill granted. See also, Chestnut v. Frazier, 6 Bax., 217.
James W. Enochs, executed on that day to the defendant, P. E. Wilson, for the sum of fifteen hundred and eighty-five dollars, bearing interest from date, at the rate of ten per cent, per annum, and due two years after the date thereof: said trustee, John W. Wilson, upon default in the payment of said note, was authorized in and by said trust deed to sell said tract for cash, and apply enough of the proceeds to pay said note, principal and interest.

III. Said note having matured, and none of it having been paid, or offered to be paid, the defendant, P. E. Wilson, requested said trustee, the defendant John W. Wilson, to advertise and sell said tract in the manner specified in and by said trust deed; and he, the said trustee, had advertised the same accordingly; and was about to sell when he was restrained by the injunction of your Honor's said Court, in this case.

IV. These defendants, further answering, say, that it is true that the complainant did not join her husband in the execution of said trust deed; but she fails to state to your Honor, what these defendants aver to be the fact, that, at the time said trust deed was executed, her said husband owned a tract of land containing one hundred and forty-six acres, adjoining said one hundred-acre tract; and that, at said date, she and her husband and children resided on said one hundred and forty-six-acre tract, as their homestead. These defendants aver that said homestead tract was well worth three thousand dollars at the time said trust deed was made; and these defendants were at the time, and now are, advised that it was not necessary for the complainant to join her husband in the execution of said trust deed.

V. These defendants further answering, say, that since the execution of said trust deed the complainant's husband has sold and conveyed said homestead tract, selling ten acres of it to one M. O. King, on February 23, 1876; seventy acres on March 20, 1876, to one Segroves for the benefit of certain creditors; and on March 23, 1877, he sold the residue of said homestead tract to one H. Fuller, his wife's father, for a pretended consideration of two thousand dollars; but he, the defendant Enochs, and the complainant and their family, continue to reside on said residue as before.

VI. Further answering, these defendants say, that the complainant joined her husband in said deed to Segroves, and that the seventy-acre tract conveyed to him, Segroves, was at the date of the conveyance well worth fifteen hundred dollars. Complainant also signed the deed to said Fuller, and her privy examination was duly taken to its execution; but for some reason her husband did not sign the deed, although the deed purports to be made by him.

VII. And now, having fully answered, these defendants are advised that, on proper application by cross-bill, your Honor will declare and enforce their rights in the premises; and they, therefore, file this their answer as a and assuming to that extent the character of cross-complainants, on the foregoing statement of facts, which they say is true, pray:

1st. That all proper process issue, and be served on said Ann E. Enochs, and her said husband, James W. Enochs, who are made defendants to this cross-bill, requiring them to answer this cross-bill, but not on oath.

2d. That the amount due the cross-complainant, P. E. Wilson, on said note, which is here-with filed as an exhibit to this cross-bill, marked “Exhibit A,” be ascertained; and that he have a decree against the cross-defendant, James W. Enochs, for the amount due thereon.

3d. That said deed of trust, which is herewith filed as an exhibit to this cross-bill, and marked “Exhibit B,” be specifically enforced by decree of your Honor; and the tract of land therein described, to-wit: said one hundred-acre tract, be sold as therein stipulated for cash, and in bar of all equity of redemption, or homestead rights, in satisfaction of the amount decreed to be due on said note, and of the costs of this cross-bill.

4th. That and the cross-complainants have all such other and further relief as they may be entitled to.

Latta & Marshall, Solicitors.

If the oath to the answer is waived, no affidavit need be annexed to the answer filed as a cross-bill, unless some extraordinary process is prayed; in such case, the affidavit may, if so desired, be so framed as to cover only the facts on which the prayer for extraordinary process is based.

ANSWER AND CROSS BILL FOR SUBROGATION.19

John Doe, et al.,
vs.
Rachel Roe.

In Chancery at Nashville.

The answer and cross-bill of Rachel Roe to the bill filed against her in said cause.

The defendant for answer to said bill says:

I.

That she admits the death of James Doe, and it may be that he was the father of complainants, John Doe and George Doe, but how this is she has no knowledge, and calls on complainants to prove their kinship.

II.

Further answering, she admits said James Doe at one time owned the house and lot described in the bill, but she denies that he was the owner or possessor thereof at his death. That your Honor may understand the nature of defendant’s ownership and possession of said house and lot, further answering, she says, that she and James Doe were living together in said house, but occupying different rooms and beds; and she positively denies that they were cohabiting when he died, or had been cohabiting for several years next before his death. While so living in the same house, and about six years ago, he borrowed four hundred dollars from the Ideal Building and Loan Association, and gave it a mortgage on said house and lot to secure the loan. Soon afterward and after paying about one hundred dollars on said mortgage he fell sick and was never able to do any more work, and she supported him with the labor of her hands until he died, and then she paid the expenses of his last sickness and funeral. After said James Doe became unable to work, said house and lot were advertised for sale under said mortgage, and was about to be sold, when he took his deed for said house and lot out of his trunk, and handed it to defendant, in presence of witnesses, and said to her “Here is my deed for this house. I cannot pay the balance of the mortgage, and I turn it all over to you, and you can do the best you can. If you lift the mortgage the property is yours. Here’s the deed.” Thereupon the defendant took the deed and has kept it ever since, claiming said house and lot as her own property. Defendant thereupon made a contract with said Building and Loan Association to pay them ten dollars a month on said mortgage, and at this rate, except when she paid more, she finally paid the entire balance on said mortgage, aggregating three hundred and seven dollars, for all of which she has the receipts given by said Association, and has said mortgage endorsed to her by said Association.

III.

Further answering, defendant denies that said James Doe was ever of weak mind, but she admits that he was weak in body and so weak as to be unable to work the last five years of his life. She denies that she ever exercised any influence over him to obtain said deed. On the other hand, she begged him to take it, and do all she could to keep the property from being sold under the mortgage, a thing she was slow to do, for fear that after paying a great deal she might not be able to pay all, and thereby lose what she had paid. She emphatically denies all fraud and imposition in obtaining said deed and mortgage, or either of them, or any sale to her by said James Doe of said property, except as herein stated.

IV.

Further answering, defendant denies that she is insolvent. She owes nobody anything, has her taxes all paid and seventy-three dollars loaned out on good security, and is still able to work, and does work, and is earning over ten dollars a month besides her expenses, and can give security for the rents of said house and lot pending this litigation, if your Honor so requires.

V.

Further answering, the defendant files with this answer said deed and mortgage, marked A and B, respectively.

And now having fully answered said bill she prays that it may be dismissed. But being advised that, on the facts of this case, if she cannot hold said house and lot, she has an equitable lien thereon to reimburse her for what she paid on said mortgage, and for said medical and funeral expenses, which latter amounted to fifty-five dollars, therefore, she files this answer as a

and the premises considered prays:

1st. That the complainants, John Doe and George Doe, be required by subpoena to answer this cross bill, but not on oath.

19 This is the answer to bill in § 1050, post. The Supreme Court granted the subrogation prayed which is based on Vaughn v. Vaughn, 16 Pick., 282. in the cross bill.
2d. That the title to said house and lot be declared in her, and vested in her.

3d. But if not entitled thereto that she be subrogated to the rights of said Building and Loan Association under said mortgage, and that said mortgage be foreclosed, and said lot sold for cash and in bar of redemption, the mortgage so stipulating, and out of the proceeds she be paid the amount paid by her on said mortgage, and interest on her payments. She also prays for a decree for the said medical and funeral expenses, and for such further and other relief as she may be entitled to.

Rachel Roe.

John Ruhm, Solicitor.

[Annex affidavit, as defendant's oath to her answer was not waived. See, ante, §§ 380; 789.]

To perfect the answer as a cross bill, a prosecution bond must be given, or pauper oath filed in lieu, and a subpoena to answer the cross bill must issue and be served on the complainants.
CHAPTER XX.
ANALYSIS AND COMPARISON OF PLEADINGS.

ARTICLE I. Rationale of Pleadings.
ARTICLE II. Different Defences Distinguished.

ARTICLE I.

RATIONALE OF PLEADINGS.

§ 406. Object of Pleadings.
§ 407. Logic of Pleadings.
§ 408. General Rule, and Doctrine of Relations, Applied to Pleadings.

§ 406. Object of Pleadings.—The object of a pleading is to give the opposite party and the Court notice of what matters of fact and law the pleader intends to submit to the decision of the Court. As to these matters, and none others, proof must be made, if they are disputed; and on these, and none others, a decree must be based; if proof is made as to other matters, such proof is impertinent; and if a decree is based on other matters, to that extent it is coram non judice and void.¹

While it is true, that no affirmative proof can be made by a party except as to matter by him alleged in his pleadings, nevertheless, it is not required that a pleader should go into the details of the facts by him set up; nor is it necessary for him to specify what particular facts he relies on, nor the proofs by which he expects to establish them. The rules of Chancery pleading have been relaxed since depositions have come to be taken in the presence of both parties, who can thus learn and have a full opportunity to meet the particular evidence set up in support or denial of the matters contained in the pleadings. But when, under the old practice, depositions were taken in secret, and their contents not known to the parties until the proofs were all closed, and publication passed, it was of very great importance that each party should have specific notice what his adversary expected to prove, otherwise surprises would have been inevitable, and either injustice done, or a remandment to the rules for rebutting proof made necessary. Nevertheless, it is, and must forever remain, a fundamental rule of pleading, that nothing is in issue except what has been alleged; and neither can proof be made, nor decrees be pronounced, as to matters not contained in the pleadings.¹⁸

§ 407. Logic of Pleadings.—Every bill is of the nature of a syllogism, the major premise of which, consisting of the supposed general rule of law applicable to the case, is ordinarily not expressed, but taken for granted. The statement of facts contained in the bill constitutes the minor premise of the syllogism, and the special prayer is the conclusion of the syllogism.

Take an ordinary syllogism: All Europeans belong to the white race: John Samboyer is a European. Therefore, he belongs to the white race. In ordinary conversation, the major premise is taken for granted; and we say John Sam-

¹ One fundamental matter Courts and pleaders should ever keep in mind is, that adjudications must be based on issues; and that issues cannot arise, except between antagonistic parties whose pleadings create the issues; and who have, thus, a chance to introduce evidence, and to examine and cross-examine witnesses on these issues. If antagonism exists between defendants, whose answers create an issue between them a decree can be based on such an issue. But, without an issue, there can be no proof, and no decree except by consent.

boyer belongs to the white race, because he is a European. So, a bill ordinarily omits the major premise, (which is the supposed general rule of law applicable to the case,) and states only the minor premise, (or particular facts,) and the conclusion, (or special prayer).

To analyze a bill filed by an administrator to set aside a fraudulent conveyance made by his intestate: (1) the major premise, or supposed general rule of law, which is not stated in the bill, but taken for granted, is: that on application of an administrator by bill, the Chancery Court will set aside a fraudulent conveyance made by his intestate; (2) the minor premise, or statement of facts, is that the intestate of the complainant made the fraudulent conveyance alleged; and (3) the prayer, or conclusion, is that the conveyance be set aside.

1. A plea in abatement to this bill would say, in substance, that admitting the bill to be true, nevertheless the Court has no jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed, because neither is the land situated, nor was any material defendant served with process, in the county wherein the suit is brought. 2. A demurrer would say, in substance, admitting the facts alleged in the bill to be true, nevertheless the complainant is entitled to no relief, because the general rule of law is not what he supposes it to be, such relief being granted only when the estate is insolvent, and no suggestion of insolvency is alleged. 3. A negative plea in bar would deny that the complainant was administrator, or would deny that the conveyance was fraudulent. 4. An affirmative plea in bar would say, in substance, that admitting the facts alleged, and that on them the complainant is entitled to the relief prayed, that nevertheless, there is another fact not mentioned in the bill which destroys the right to relief, to-wit: that the defendant has been in adverse possession of said land under said deed for more than seven years before said suit was brought. 5. An answer need not admit anything, and it may deny complainant’s right to relief, (1) on the ground that the complainant was not administrator; (2) on the ground that there was no fraud in the conveyance, as alleged; (3) on the ground that the estate was not insolvent; and (4) on the ground of seven years’ adverse possession. 6. A disclaimer would deny that the defendant was in possession of the land, or claiming any interest in it, or exercising any acts of ownership over it, and would disclaim any interest in, or title to, said land under said deed, or otherwise; and would deny ever having had, or claimed, any title or interest therein.

And thus, 1, the plea in abatement disputes the right of the Court to determine the controversy; 2, the demurrer directly disputes the conclusion of the syllogism, and indirectly disputes the unexpressed major premise; 3, the negative plea in bar denies a material allegation in the bill, and thus negatives the minor premise; 4, the affirmative plea in bar sets up a new fact, which, if true, would constitute an exception to the general rule, or major premise; 5, the answer sets up (1) three facts, any one of which, if proved, negatives the minor premise, and (2) one fact which, if true, constitutes an exception to the major premise, or general rule; and 6, the disclaimer denies a material allegation in the bill, and, also, sets up a new fact, the joint effect whereof is to negative the minor premise.

It will, thus, be seen that every properly constructed bill is a syllogism, whose major premise, the supposed general rule of law, is suppressed; and when this conception of a bill is thoroughly grasped, the Solicitor of the complainant will find it of great practical value in formulating his bill, and in expressing it in an orderly and logical manner; and, on the other hand, the Solicitor of the defendant will the more readily understand what defences to set up, and when and how.

§ 408. General Rule, and the Doctrine of Relations, Applied to Pleadings. In drawing a bill where there are relations, the first matter to be considered is, what are the relations of the parties, and what the legal duties resulting from those relations, in connection with the facts and circumstances of the case. Having settled these preliminaries, the next matter is to ascertain whether there is any general rule of law or Equity applicable to the facts of the case, and to the relations of the parties, entitling the complainant to relief. The general rule being determined (corresponding to the major premise in a syllogism,) such facts and circumstances of the case, and no more or other, should be alleged as will show that the case is within the general rule of law or Equity on which the suit is to be based. (These facts and circumstances are the minor premise of the syllogism.) The case being thus shown to be within the general rule, the relief prayed follows as an inevitable conclusion, both in logic and in law. Every general rule has its exceptions: these exceptions should not ordinarily be mentioned in the bill; for, if they are, it becomes necessary to negative them in order to make out a case, and in that event the complainant assumes unnecessary burdens. It devolves on the defendant, as will be hereafter shown, to aver and prove that the case comes within one of these exceptions to the general rule.

To illustrate the foregoing, take the case of a promissory note held by the payee. The relation of the parties is that of debtor and creditor; and the facts are that the debtor has executed a promissory note to the creditor as evidence of his indebtedness. The general rule of law applicable to the facts of the case, is that the maker of a promissory note is bound to pay it after maturity to the payee, if he is the holder. But to this rule there are several exceptions, among them the following: (1) the maker is not bound to pay, if, when the note was executed and delivered, he was a minor; or (2) was of unsound mind; or (3) was drunk; or (4) was under duress; or (5) was fraudulently imposed on; nor is he bound if (6) the consideration wholly failed; or (7) if the note is based on an illegal consideration, or (8) is barred by the statute of limitations. Complainant, in drawing a bill to collect the note, should content himself with alleging that the defendant executed the note to him, stating date and amount, and that it is over due. These allegations bring the case within the general rule. It is not even absolutely necessary to allege that it is complainant's property, or that it is unpaid, the law presuming these facts, the note having been executed to the complainant, and he having the note in his possession. Much less is it necessary to allege that the note was given for a valuable and lawful consideration, or that the defendant was an adult, of sound mind, sober, free to act, and not imposed on by any artifice. These are all matters for the defendant to set up.

If, however, the note should be barred by the statute of limitations, and it becomes necessary to disclose this fact in the bill, in such case, it is essential to go further, and set up the facts which avoid the bar of the statute, such as non-residence of the defendant, or a promise to pay the note made within six years.

Of course, if the bill seeks a discovery from the defendant, it may and should go into a detail of the facts and circumstances as to which the discovery is sought, and on which the interrogatories, if any, are based.

If there should be no relations between the parties, the first question to be considered by the draftsmen of the bill is the rights of the complainant, these rights being ordinarily rights to the title, use, control, or benefit, of particular property; the second question is wherein the defendant is interfering with those rights; and the third question is the general rule of law or Equity applicable to the facts of the case, and entitling the complainant to relief on those facts. Here, again, this general rule is the major premise of the syllogism, the facts, bringing the case within the general rule, constitute the minor premise

\[2\text{ But if the demand is barred by the statute of limitations the complainant must so show if he intends to avoid the bar, as heretofore stated. See, ante, § 147.}\]

\[3\text{ But if the note is barred. see, ante § 147.}\] of the syllogism, and the special relief prayed is the conclusion of the syllogism. 4

§ 409. Summary of the Principal Rules of Equity Pleading.—The following summary of rules governing all pleadings, except demurrers, may be of benefit to the inexperienced pleader. 5

1. All pleadings must state the essential facts: it is not necessary, however, as a rule, to state the evidence by which those facts may be proved.

2. It is not necessary to allege any matter of either law or fact, of which the Court will take judicial notice.

3. It is not necessary to state matters which would more properly come from the adverse party.

4. It is not necessary to allege circumstances that are necessarily implied from what is alleged.

5. It is not necessary to allege what the law will presume.

6. Where the items of an account sued on are numerous, it is sufficient to state their character, and the amount, without specifying them in the pleading. In such a case, however, they should be contained in an exhibit.

7. Less particularity in statement is required when the facts are shown to be better known to the opposite party than to the party pleading. One of the very objects of the bill may be to ascertain these facts.

8. Pleadings must not be argumentative: they must be confined to allegations of facts.

9. Pleadings should not contain mere recitals of what the pleader has been informed, or what he believes; but should specify what he alleges the facts to be: these facts, however, he may allege on information and belief.

10. All scandal, impertinence and surplusage must be avoided. The following matters are surplusage: (1) matters judicially known to the Court; (2) conclusions of law; (3) matters of evidence; (4) matters of information or belief, on which no positive allegation of fact is based; (5) all arguments and inferences; and (6) all displays of rhetoric, poetry, wit, sarcasm, or invective.

11. All pleadings should contain the truth, even when not under oath. No party should allege any affirmative matter that is not pertinent, and a fact capable of being proved. Not that he must be able to prove all that he alleges, but that his allegations must be facts believed by him to be provable.

12. All pleadings must be consistent: an inconsistent bill is demurrable for repugnancy; an inconsistent answer may be treated as no answer, and an inconsistent amendment will not be allowed. 5a

13. Bills that pray injunctions or receivers, or charge fraud, or seek to undo what has been formally done, should be positive and precise, and give particulars and circumstances; in such bills general allegations only are insufficient. 6

14. Answers to such bills should unequivocally deny all material allegations that are false, and explain away all that are true, giving particulars and circumstances. 7

15. All pleadings should conform to approved precedents, both in form and phraseology.

§ 410. Some Minor Defects in Pleadings.—There are some minor defects in pleadings too insignificant to be reached by a demurrer, and generally of too little importance to be the subject of a motion, but nevertheless of a character that greatly impairs the merit of the particular pleading. Some of the defects are the following:

4 No Solicitor, unless he be a genius, will ever succeed as a draftsman of bills, if he fails to thoroughly grasp the doctrine of relations, and the value of comprehending the general rule, applicable to the case. This failure is the cause of so many bills being confused, prolix, tautological, obscure, and chaotic, the equities whereof are enveloped in mists, submerged in surplusage, and nebulous to the eye of justice. See, ante, §§ 165-168.

5 These rules are taken partly from Stephen on Pleading; and, while intended for Courts of law, are equally applicable to pleadings in Chancery. See, ante, § 149; 283; 672; 64, sub-sec. 2; Hardwick v. American Can Co., 7 Cates, 392.

6 See, ante, §§ 142; 838-843.

7 See, ante, § 361-367; post, 842.
1. The Failure to Specify the Date of an alleged transaction. It is not uncommon to see expressions of this sort in bills and answers: (1) "on the—day of—188—;" (2) "some time in the year 187—;" and (3) "on the—day of—.

2. The Failure to Specify Quantity and Value. Such allegations as the following are utterly inadmissible, and display gross negligence, carelessness, and indifference to, if not ignorance of, the fundamental rules of pleading: (1) "containing—acres, more or less," (2) "of the value of—dollars," (3) "amounting to at least—;" (4) "to the number of—;" and (5) "in the—district, adjoining the land of—."

3. The Failure to Specify the Given Names of Persons. An initial letter is too indefinite. J. Smith may stand for Joel, James, Jesse, Jacob, Joseph, Julius, Jeptha, Jared, or Jasper, as well as John, Smith. The first names of parties are often described by their initials: this often results in confusion and delay, and sometimes in loss. Where a party signs a paper sued on by initials, it is well to describe him both by his full given name and by the name subscribed to the paper, thus: T. J. Smith, otherwise called Thomas J. Smith.

4. Erasures, Interlineations, and Other Changes on the Face of Pleadings. Pleadings are sometimes so full of erasures and interlineations that it is almost impossible to decipher them, and to certainly determine whether various important matters are intended to be changed or not; and if to be changed, it is difficult to tell exactly what the changes are. No pleading should have any interlineations, except such as are authorized by the Court; nor should any considerable erasures, or other changes, be made on the face of any pleading. The pleadings should be certain and definite, and these qualities are incompatible with erasures, interlineations, or other changes, in the original text.

It is a fundamental rule of pleading, applicable to all of the foregoing matters, that whatever is alleged in a pleading must be alleged with certainty, to the end that the adversary may know exactly what is alleged, so that he may be able to deny or admit, or to confess and avoid, the particular matter.

5. All Pleadings should be Properly Entitled. Every suit has a name, and by that name it is known and distinguished from all other suits. The statute forbids the Clerk to change the style of a cause;8 and the Chancellor should see to it that Solicitors, also, conform to this statute. No pleading should be allowed to go into a file unless its style entitles it to be so filed.

6. All Pleadings should be in the Second and Third Persons. It is no uncommon thing in some counties to find bills and answers partly in the first person and partly in the third person. This is execrable, whether viewed from a grammatical or a legal standpoint. The party pleading, in addressing the Chancellor, may use the second person, but he should refer to himself as complainant or defendant; and not as "I."9

7. All Pleadings Should be Free from Scandal, Impertinence, and Surplusage. A Chancery pleading is not the place for a display of wit, humor, sentiment, poetry, rhetoric, or pathos. Nor is it the place to indulge in sarcasm, irony, invective, insinuation, abuse, or any other scandalous or impertinent matter.10 Such improprieties are not only exceedingly reprehensible in themselves, but they also incite similar reprehensible retaliations from the reverse side. These scandalous and impertinent displays are sure to excite the indignation of the Chancellor, and the ridicule or disgust of the bar. Solicitors, in drawing pleadings, should repress too great an enthusiasm for their client’s supposed rights, and too great indignation at the defendant’s supposed misconduct; and

8 M. & V.’s Code, § 3664.
9 In England, under the new practice, all answers are in the first person, the defendant saying: “I admit,” “I deny,” “I believe,” “I do, say, aver, charge,” etc. 3 Dan. Ch. Pr., 2111, note. But an answer is reprehensible that says: “The defendant, for further answer, says that the charge that I acted fraudulently is false.” Such a shifting, from the third, to the first person, is inadmissible to the pleader, and shows that he is as unskilled in pleading, as in parsing.

thereby escape the mortification of being rebuked by the Court, or ridiculed by the bar, for excess of zeal, or deficiency of discretion.

8. All Exhibits should be Lettered and Filed. It is not uncommon for bills and answers to refer to, and profess to exhibit, a document not even in the party’s possession, sometimes referring to it as on such a page of such a book in the Register’s office, or as in the records of another Court. This is wholly inadmissible. All papers and documents referred to in pleadings must be filed with the pleadings, and so lettered, or numbered, or described, as to be identified. No book belonging to any public office, and no original record of another Court, or office, can be made an exhibit to a pleading. If such a record is needed as an exhibit a certified copy must be exhibited; but an original record of the same Court may be referred without being exhibited, and the opposite party notified in the pleading that it will be read at the hearing. A document may be referred to thus: “as in said deed, [contract, will, letter, decree, book, record, or other written or printed thing, naming it,] will more fully appear, and which [or, a certified copy of which,] is herewith filed, marked A, and made a part of this bill [or answer.]” Papers referred to in a bill or answer, and not numbered, lettered, or otherwise identified, will not be considered in the Supreme Court, even when actually copied into the transcript.

ARTICLE II.

DIFFERENT DEFENCES DISTINGUISHED.

§ 411. Various Kinds of Pleadings Contrasted.

§ 412. Differences between a Demurrer and a Plea in Bar.

§ 413. Differences between an Answer and a Plea.

§ 411. Various Kinds of Pleadings Contrasted.—If the bill shows a state of facts within a general rule of law or Equity, the defendant must either deny one or more of the complainant’s essential allegations of fact; or, admitting the facts in the bill, he must show such additional facts as will bring the case within at least one of the exceptions to the general rule. To take the illustration above used, the essential allegations in the bill are, 1st, That the defendant executed to complainant the note sued on; 2d, That the complainant holds it; and 3d, That it is overdue. If either of these three allegations is denied, a valid defence is set up. If, however, these allegations are true, the defendant must admit them, and make out a defence by showing additional facts, bringing the case within one or more of the exceptions to the general rule. In other words, he must admit the facts alleged in the bill, but avoid them by showing that, when he executed and delivered the note sued on, he was a minor, or deranged, or drunk, or under duress, or defrauded, or that the consideration was illegal, or has totally failed, or that the note is barred by the statute of limitations, or some other matter in avoidance.

If the bill shows on its face that it does not come within any general rule of law or Equity, entitling the complainant to relief, the defendant may demur to the bill. So he may demur, if the facts stated in the bill bring the whole case within some exception to the general rule, and no facts are alleged obviating the exception.

11 Ch. Rule I., sec. 2; post, § 1190.
12 Simmons v. Taylor, 22 Pick., 729.

1 See, ante, §§ 166; 275-277, notes; and see note 2, infra.
The purpose and office of a demurrer, then, is to show that the case made by the bill, either does not come within any general rule of law or equity entitling the complainant to relief, or else comes within some exception to the rule. And the purpose and office of a plea in bar is, by alleging some single fact suppressed in the bill, or by suppressing some single fact alleged in the bill, to show either that the complainant’s case is not within the general rule, or else that it is, also, within some exception to that rule. The office of an answer is to deny enough of the facts alleged in the bill to destroy the case made; or to admit the bill, and set up such new facts as will take the case out of the general rule, or put it into some exception to that rule.\(^2\)

§ 412. Differences Between a Demurrer and a Plea in Bar.—The office of a demurrer is, to raise a question of law on the facts as the bill gives them; and a demurrer maintains that, on those facts, the complainant is not entitled to some, or to any, of the relief he prays. The office of a plea in bar is, not to deny the Equity of the bill, but (1) either to deny some matter of fact in the bill, which, if false, destroys that Equity, or (2) to bring forward some new matter of fact, which, if true, obviates that Equity. A demurrer takes the facts as the complainant states them, but disputes the conclusions of law or Equity he seeks to draw from those facts. In short, a demurrer deals exclusively with questions of law, whereas a plea deals exclusively with questions of fact. A demurrer admits the facts of the bill, but disputes its law; whereas, a plea in bar admits the law of the bill, but disputes its facts.

An affirmative plea in bar does not dispute any fact alleged in the bill, or any alleged deduction from the facts stated; but seeks to bring before the Court a new fact, which, if true, destroys the complainant’s right to belief. A negative plea in bar denies some substantial averment of fact in the bill, but never challenges any of the deductions of law or Equity the complainant seeks to draw from the facts he alleges. A demurrer to the relief, however, neither seeks to bring forward new matters, nor to deny any fact alleged in the bill, but merely disputes the deductions sought to be drawn from the matters of fact stated, the demurrer, for the purpose of testing the validity of the bill, admitting all the facts alleged.

\(^2\) The following diagram is given as illustrative of the foregoing discussion:

![Diagram of the general rule and exceptions]

The large circle represents the general rule of law or Equity; see, ante, § 166; and the small circles represent the exceptions to the general rule. It will be noted that the small circles are not really within the circumference of the large circle, but are formed by loops in its circumference, thus limiting the area of the large circle, as exceptions limit the comprehensiveness of the general rule.

Using the case already supposed, the general rule, represented by the large circle, is: The maker of a promissory note is bound to pay it to the payee, small circles represent eight exceptions to this general rule, the maker not being so bound if: when the note was executed, he was (1) a minor; or (2) deranged; or (3) drunk; or (4) under duress; or (5) was fraudulently imposed on; or (6) there was a want of a legal consideration; or (7) the consideration has wholly failed; or (8) the note is barred by the statute of limitations.

1. The office of a Bill, as a pleading, is to present a case within the general rule, entitling the complainant to relief.

2. The office of a Demurrer is to show (1) that there is no such general rule of law or Equity, as the bill presupposes; (2) that, if there is, the case made out by the bill does not come within such rule; or (3) that, if within the rule, the facts alleged in the bill show that the case falls within one, or more, of the exceptions to the rule.

3. The office of an Affirmative Plea in Bar is to allege some new fact that will bring the case within one of the exceptions to the general rule.

4. The office of a Negative Plea in Bar is to deny some material fact alleged by the bill, and thus show that the case is not within the general rule, as when (1) the plea of non est factum is put in; or (2) a plea that the complainant is not the payee, or not the holder, and not entitled to collect the note.

5. The office of an Answer, as a pleading, is (1) to deny some allegation of the bill necessary to bring the case within the general rule; or (2) to make some additional allegation, that will take the case out of the general rule, or force it into some exception to the rule. And, thus, an answer may perform the offices of both an affirmative, and a
The office of a plea in bar is to bring forward some matter of fact, which, if it had been alleged, or to deny some matter of fact, which, if it had not been alleged, would have made the bill subject to demurrer. Hence, any fact which, if it had been alleged, would have made the bill demurrable, is good matter for an affirmative plea; and any fact which, if it had not been alleged, would have made the bill demurrable, is the proper subject of a negative plea.

It results from these premises, that pleas in bar and demurrers are in the nature of correlative; and that whatever fact, if alleged or omitted by the bill, would be a ground of demurrer, will, if not alleged or omitted, be a ground of plea.\(^3\)

The following are the principal differences between a demurrer and an affirmative plea: (1) a demurrer applies to matters expressed; an affirmative plea applies to matter suppressed; (2) a demurrer applies to the case as brought before the Court by the bill; an affirmative plea applies to the case as modified by a new matter of fact which it has brought before the Court; (3) a demurrer demands the judgment of the Court on the case as the bill states it; an affirmative plea demands the judgment of the Court on the case as modified by the new fact brought forward by the defendant in his plea.

And the following are the principal differences between a demurrer and a negative plea: (1) a demurrer admits all the facts alleged in the bill, a negative plea positively denies, at least, one material fact; (2) a demurrer seeks to have the case decided on the facts contained in the bill, a negative plea seeks to have it decided after some material fact has been, in effect, stricken out of the bill.

A demurrer never raises any questions except those of law, a plea never raises any questions except those of fact. All pleas, however, admit every allegation in the bill not by them expressly denied.

\(\S\) 413. Differences Between an Answer and a Plea.—The office of an answer, as a pleading, is to contest the claim for relief set up in the bill; and this contest is made either, (1) by denying the truth of the case made by the bill, or (2) by bringing forward new matter which avoids that case.\(^4\) A plea in bar has identically the same office; an affirmative plea bringing forward some new matter of fact in avoidance of the case made by the bill, and a negative plea denying the truth of some material allegation of the bill. The only substantial differences between an answer and a plea in bar are: (1) an answer is often both a pleading and a deposition, whereas a plea is always a pleading and never a deposition; (2) an answer may both deny and avoid a case made by the bill, whereas a plea in bar always does either one or the other, but never both; (3) an answer may deny or avoid every material allegation contained in the bill, whereas a plea can ordinarily deny or avoid only one material allegation. Hence it is that a plea in bar is sometimes called a special answer;\(^5\) and an answer, as a pleading, is, in effect, merely a series of pleas of one or more kinds.

It will thus be seen that an answer includes all possible pleas in bar, and covers all the bill; and, as the greater includes the less, and the whole contains all its parts, it follows, both as a matter of pleading and of logic, that an answer supersedes and overrules a plea in bar to the same matter.

A plea in abatement does not question the merits of the controversy, but seeks to abate the suit for some reason outside of the merits. Both a plea in bar and an answer, in effect, admit that there is no ground of abatement, or else none the defendant cares to rely on; and each seeks to contest the bill on its merits. The result is that if, after filing a plea in abatement, the defendant

\(^3\) Thus, if, in a bill for specific performance, the sale of the land is alleged to be in parol, that is a ground of demurrer; whereas, if this allegation be made, it is a ground of a negative plea.

\(^4\) In this book, all pleas are divided into (1) pleas in abatement, and (2) pleas in bar. Ante, §§ 241; 243; 321.

\(^5\) 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 603; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 649.
either pleads in bar or answers, he in effect abandons his plea in abatement; and, hence, the universal rule that a plea in abatement is overruled by a plea in bar, and either or both pleas are overruled by an answer. This important qualification must, however, be kept in mind: an answer overrules a plea in bar only, when the former covers the ground occupied by the latter, for as here-tofore and hereafter shown, a defendant may plead to part of the bill, and answer to the residue.

A demurrer contests the bill exclusively on the issues of law arising from the facts contained in the bill itself; a plea contests the bill on some single issue of fact which, if found in favor of the plea, will end the suit; and an answer contests the bill either by denying the facts it alleges or by avoiding them, or by both. It will thus be seen that every matter which is ground for a plea in bar may be set up in an answer; but inasmuch as an answer contests the bill exclusively on the merits, no ground of abatement which disputes the jurisdiction of the Court can be set up in an answer; nor can a plea in abatement be joined with any other kind of defence. The Courts favor defences on the merits, and when a defendant has once made defence to the merits, he will be deemed to have waived and abandoned all objections to the jurisdiction by him made, and not determined.6

§ 414. General Analysis of Defences on the Merits.—A bill in Chancery is generally filed to assert rights growing out of relations, or to assert rights which are independent of relations. In the former case, it ordinarily alleges (1) the relation between the parties; (2) the duties of the defendant, and the rights of the complainant arising from the relation; (3) the violation of those rights and duties by the defendant, and (4) prays for consequent relief.

In order, therefore, to meet these allegations on the facts, the defendant must (1) deny the alleged relation of the parties, or (2) must in some way invalidate that relation, if it ever existed, or (3) must deny that any of said rights and duties were violated as charged; or (4) must show affirmatively that, since such violation, there has intervened some act of the parties,7 or some rule of law,8 that avoids his liability and bars the suit.

The denial of the relation can often be made by a negative plea; the matters in avoidance are frequently proper for an affirmative plea, and any and all of the defences are proper to be set up in an answer.

If the bill is filed to assert rights which are independent of relations, it ordinarily alleges (1) the title, interest, or right sought to be enforced or protected, or the wrong sought to be prevented; (2) the manner in which the defendant is interfering with complainant's rights or property, or is committing or threatening the wrong complained of; and (3) prays for the consequential relief.

To meet these allegations on the facts, the defendant must (1) deny the alleged title, interest or right of the complainant; or (2) must deny the commission of the wrongs alleged; or (3) must set up, affirmatively, some bar or equal Equity.

The first defence may often be made by a negative plea, and the last by an affirmative plea; all three defences may be made by answer.

§ 415. Summary of the Various Defences on the Merits.—In order that the various defences that can be made on the merits, in a Chancery suit, may more specifically appear, the following table has been prepared, giving (1) the defences where the bill alleges no relations, and (2) the defences where relations are alleged.

TABLE OF DEFENCES ON THE MERITS.

A. WHERE NO RELATION IS ALLEGED IN THE BILL,

the defences are:

I. Non-existence of Rights Claimed,

because of

1. Want of privity between the parties; or
2. Complainant having no title, interest or right; or
3. Title in the defendant; or
4. Title in a third person.

II. Non-existence of the Injuries Alleged,

because of

1. The acts complained of not having been done; or
2. The acts complained of having been committed by a stranger; or
3. The acts complained of having been authorized by some law, or license.

III. Matters in Avoidance,

because of

1. Defendant being an innocent purchaser; or
2. Accord and satisfaction; or
3. Award; or
4. Former judgment; or
5. Statutes of limitations; or
6. Laches; or
7. Estoppel.

B. WHERE A RELATION IS ALLEGED IN THE BILL,

the defences are:

I. Non-existence of the Alleged Relation,

because

1. No such contract or relation as charged existed; or
2. The complainant does not possess the character he claims; or
3. The defendant does not possess the character alleged; or
4. Non est factum, (the deed, note, or other instrument sued, not having been executed by the defendant.)

II. Invalidation of the Alleged Relation,

because

1. Parties not competent to contract, by reason of:
   (a) Mental unsoundness; or
   (b) Infancy; or
   (c) Coverture; or
   (d) Drunkenness; or
   (e) Duress.
2. Insufficiency of consideration, by reason of:
   (a) Total failure of consideration; or
   (b) Gross inadequacy of consideration; or
   (c) Illegality of consideration.
3. Contract obtained by fraud, by means of:
   (a) Misrepresentation; or
   (b) Concealment; or

9 This table has been mainly compiled from Lube's Equity Pleadings and Chitty's Pleadings. A careful study of it will enable the student to grasp, thoroughly, all possible defences, on the merits, to all possible bills; and he will find it of great value in preparing his defences.

10 Matters in avoidance must be specially set up, and relied on, by plea or answer; and the burden of proving them is on the defendant.

11 Where the defence seeks to invalidate the alleged relation it must be specially set up, and proved, by the defendant, as in other cases of avoidance.
(e) Undue use of confidential relations.

4. Act to be done illegal or impossible.

5. Form of contract insufficient, either
   (a) At common law, or
   (b) By statute.¹²

III. Non-existence of the Alleged Violations of Complainant's Rights, because

1. The suit was prematurely brought; or
2. The acts complained of were not done; or
3. The acts complained of, if done, were authorized by some law, or license

IV. Matters in Avoidance,¹³

consisting of

1. Acts of both parties, to-wit:
   (a) Alteration, or recission, of the contract; or
   (b) Account stated; or
   (c) Payment, or accord and satisfaction; or
   (d) Release of the debt sued for; or
   (e) Award for the same cause of action; or
   (f) Novation, (a new note or contract executed in lieu.)

2. Acts of the complainant alone, consisting of
   (a) Former recovery for the same cause of action; or
   (b) Non-performance of condition precedent; or
   (c) Pendency of another suit for same cause; or
   (d) Assignment of the debt to a third person; or
   (e) Laches; or
   (f) Estoppel.

3. Acts of the defendant alone,
   consisting of
   (a) Performance of the contract or duty; or
   (b) Tender of the money, property, or services due; or
   (c) Set-off.
   (d) Recoupment.

4. Acts of the law,

   (b) Statute of limitations.
   (c) Bankruptcy.

¹³ These matters in avoidance must all be specifically set forth in a plea, or answer, and relied on as a defence. In all such cases, the burden of proof rests on the defendant.
CHAPTER XXI.
HOW PLEADINGS ARE TESTED.

ARTICLE I. Testing the Sufficiency of Pleadings.
ARTICLE II. Exceptions to Answers.
ARTICLE III. Suggestions as to Testing Pleadings.

TESTING THE SUFFICIENCY OF PLEADINGS.

§ 416. Testing of Pleadings.
§ 417. Object and Results of Testing Pleadings.
§ 418. Testing the Sufficiency of Bills.
§ 419. Testing Pleas and Demurrers.

§ 416. Testing of Pleadings.—There is some method of testing the sufficiency of every pleading. The very pleadings that are used as tests are themselves the subjects of tests. All of these tests have reference to the fitness of the particular pleading, for the office it seeks to perform; and if such pleading is unfit for such office, the sooner this fact is ascertained the better for all the parties concerned. Pleading is a practical logic applied to matters of forensic controversy, and the severest scrutiny of reason is visited upon every bill, demurrer, plea, and answer, filed in the progress of a cause; and, on a challenge of insufficiency, the Court must hear argument, and determine whether the pleading challenged is equal to the duty it is commissioned to discharge. The sufficiency of a bill is tested by a motion to dismiss, or by a demurrer; the sufficiency of demurrers and pleas is tested by setting them down for argument, which is in the nature of a demurrer "ore tenus"; and the sufficiency of an answer is tested by written exceptions filed to it, these exceptions being in turn tested by argument, in order to ascertain whether they are well taken, or should be disallowed.1

As soon, therefore, as a pleading is filed, it is the duty of the opposite party to apply the proper test of its sufficiency; and if he fail to apply such test, then its sufficiency is conceded. Hence, when a bill is filed, the defendant must test its sufficiency by a motion to dismiss, or by demurrer; when a demurrer or plea is filed, the complainant must test it by having it set down for argument; and when an answer is filed, the complainant must test its sufficiency by filing exceptions.

§ 417. Object and Results of Testing Pleadings.—The general object of testing a pleading is to ascertain whether it, if true, will accomplish the purpose for which it was filed. Thus, a bill is filed to obtain the relief prayed, and the objects of a demurrer and motion to dismiss are, to test whether the allegations of the bill, if true, entitle the complainant to the relief he seeks. So, a plea is filed in order to defeat the bill, and the object of argument on the sufficiency of a plea is to test whether the plea, if true, will defeat the suit. Neither a bill

1 Demurrers have been filed to answers, and pleas have been both demurred to, and excepted to, in order to test their sufficiency. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 542; 692; 758, notes. The sufficiency of answers, and pleas, cannot, of course, be tested that way; but, if a demurrer to an answer contain the essentials of an exception to an answer, it may be treated as such; and, a demurrer, or exception, to a plea may be treated as a method of setting the plea for argument, as to its sufficiency. Ante, § 359. The sufficiency of a demurrer, itself, is tested by setting it down for argument, which is as much a test of the sufficiency of the demurrer, as the demurrer is a test of the sufficiency of the bill.
nor a plea becomes any stronger because proved to be true; and if they are insufficient, when admitted to be true, it necessarily results that it is useless to go to the trouble and expense of proving them to be true. The Court, therefore, refuses to allow any proof to be taken upon a bill, or a plea, which is insufficient, provided the proper tests are applied to such pleadings, and applied in due season.

It often happens, however, that these tests disclose the fact that the pleading under scrutiny, while defective, is nevertheless, capable of being made sufficient by amendment. In such a case, on proper application in due season, the Court will, ordinarily, allow a proper amendment to be made; for it is the duty of Courts to give a complainant a reasonable opportunity, to properly present his side of the controversy; and likewise to give the defendant an equal opportunity, to set up his defences.

The results of testing pleadings, are, therefore, generally, either (1) an amendment of the pleading tested; or (2) its total overthrow and disallowance; or (3) its vindication as sufficient, and the disallowance of the test.

§ 418. Testing the Sufficiency of Bills.—As already stated, the sufficiency of a bill is tested either by a motion to dismiss, or by a demurrer. If, when either or both of these tests are applied, the complainant sees that his bill needs amendment, he may avoid the effect of the test by making the necessary amendment. Or, he may, either before or after such tests, discover that his bill is defective, and insufficient to give him the relief he seeks; in which case he may amend, by leave of the Court, when such leave is necessary. Indeed, as will be seen, the Court will allow a bill to be amended even after allowing a motion to dismiss, or, after sustaining a demurrer, provided the amendment avoids the objection allowed, and is made in due season. Motions to dismiss and demurrers have already been fully considered.

§ 419. Testing Pleas and Demurrers.—The sufficiency of all pleas, whether in abatement or in bar, is tested by setting them down for argument, as already fully shown elsewhere. When a plea is filed, the bill may be amended so as to avoid the point of the plea, and the plea may be amended so as to strike more unerringly the vulnerable part of the bill. And thus, argument, like a two-edged sword, may prove the bill deficient, or may prove the plea deficient. How pleas are tested, and the practice relative thereto, has already been fully stated.

While motions to dismiss and demurrers are means of testing the sufficiency of a bill, they are themselves tested upon argument as to their own sufficiency, and are often overruled because not well taken. And, as tests, they may be amended so as to make the tests more efficacious. But, as tests are critical in their nature, they should be free from criticism themselves; and, for this reason, Courts are slow in allowing motions to dismiss and demurrers to be amended.

2 See Chapter on Amended and Supplemental Bills, post; and see Index for various sections on Amendments.
3 See, ante, § 350.
4 It will be seen, upon a critical survey of the foregoing tests, that, after all, argument is the final and supreme test of the sufficiency of every pleading; and, authority, statute, and reason are the three arbiters, to determine the sufficiency of the argument. Ratio et auctoritas duas clarissimas mundi lumina. (Reason and authority, the two brightest lights of the world.)
§ 420. Testing the Sufficiency of Answers.

§ 421. When Exceptions to an Answer Will Lie.

§ 422. When Exceptions to an Answer will not Lie.

§ 420. Testing the Sufficiency of Answers.—It must be remembered, that an answer under oath is both a pleading and a deposition. As a pleading, it is not subject to any test as to its sufficiency except at a hearing on bill and answer, the test then being as to whether it is sufficient to bar complainant’s right to relief. As a deposition, however, an answer can be excepted to, on the ground of the insufficiency of its responses to the charges and interrogatories contained in the bill. The exceptions challenge the sufficiency of the answer as a deposition, pointing out with particularity wherein the answer fails to respond to the discovery called for in the bill. These exceptions are, in their turn, tested by argument, and are often disallowed as not well taken.

§ 421. When Exceptions to an Answer Will Lie.—As already fully shown, a sworn answer must admit or deny every material allegation in the bill; and must set forth fully and frankly the details of particular matters called for by the bill; and must, at the same time, be free from all scandalous and impertinent matter. If the complainant, upon an examination of the answer, finds that (1) it does not admit or deny all the material allegations of the bill, or (2) does not set forth fully and frankly the particular matters called for, or (3) contains matters that are scandalous or impertinent, he may test its sufficiency by filing written exceptions to it, pointing out such parts of the bill as are insufficiently answered, or such matters in the answer as are scandalous or impertinent. The Court may, also, on its own motion, except to an answer because of its proximity, and its unnecessary and false allegations, and may order the Master to strike out particular parts of it, or to revise it.

When a partial demurrer, or a partial plea, has been overruled, and has left so much of the bill unanswered as was covered by the demurrer or the plea, the complainant must except to the answer, if he wishes a fuller answer; because, an answer being on file, the defendant is not bound to answer further, unless exceptions are taken. So, when a plea is ordered to stand for an answer, with liberty to except, the complainant may file exceptions to such answer, so as to obtain a response to so much of the bill as is not covered by the plea.

1 Howsoever evasive and unresponsive an answer may be, it will stand as a sufficient answer, unless the complainant, by due exceptions, compel a more direct, and more responsive answer. Phillips v. Overton, 4 Hay., 292; Smith v. St. Louis M. L. Ins. Co., 2 Tenn. Ch., 603.

2 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 758-760, notes. Formerly, all answers were under oath, and one of the main objects of the bill was to extort testimony from the defendant, in support of the complainant’s case. Then, answers were frequently evasive, insufficient, irrelevant, irresponsible, impertinent, and scandalous, and exceptions were constantly resorted to, in order to enforce fuller, and more direct answers, and to purge the answer of its irrelevant, irresponsible, impertinent, and scandalous matter. But, now that sworn answers are seldom called for, exceptions to answers have become correspondingly seldom. Answers were, formerly, both depositions and pleadings; now, they are, generally, pleadings only. See, ante, § 361. The best rule to ascertain whether the matter in question is impertinent is to see whether the subject of the allegation could be put in issue, or given in evidence between the parties. 1 Bach. Ch. Pr., 202. As to what matters are impertinent, and what scandalous, see, ante, § 150.

3 Code, § 4316. It has been well said, that “The Court itself was concerned to keep its records clean, and without dirt, or scandal, appearing thereon.” Lord Eldon said, with reference to the subject of scandal in proceedings, that he did not think that any application, by any person, was necessary; and that the Court ought to take care that allegations, hearing cruelly upon the moral character of individuals, and not relevant to the subject, should not be put upon the record. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 351.
IN such a case, a plea is only a partial answer. But if a plea is ordered to stand for an answer without express liberty to except, no exceptions can be taken.4

Exceptions to an answer must be filed by the complainant’s Solicitor, within twenty days after he receives notice of the filing of the answer, or the right to file them will be waived.5

§ 422. When Exceptions to an Answer Will Not Lie.—Exceptions for insufficiency of discovery will not lie to an answer, the oath to which the complainant has waived, because such an answer is not evidence, but only a pleading;6 neither will exceptions for insufficiency of discovery lie to the answer of an infant, nor to the answer of a corporation, nor to the answer of an Attorney-General, nor to the answer of a guardian ad litem;7 but they will lie to the answer of a general guardian.8 Exceptions will not lie to an answer because it does not state fully and explicitly matters that are purely in avoidance.9

The complainant cannot except to an answer to an amended bill, on the ground that such answer does not respond to matters contained in the original bill; because, by not excepting to the answer to the original bill, he admitted the sufficiency of such answer. For a like reason, if, after filing exceptions, the complainant amends the averments of his bill, he will be considered as having waived his exceptions.10

Where there is a plea, or a demurrer, to a part of the bill, and an answer to the residue, if the complainant except to such answer before the argument of the plea or demurrer, the effect of such exception is to admit the validity of the plea or demurrer.11

§ 423. Frame and Form of Exceptions to Answers.—Exceptions to an answer must point out particularly in what respects the answer is insufficient, or what matter is scandalous or impertinent. A general exception will be deemed no exception. The complainant must put his finger on each material allegation in the bill not answered, or not sufficiently answered. Exceptions founded on verbal criticisms, slight defects, and immaterial matters, will be invariably disallowed, and treated as vexatious.12 Each ground of exception should be separately and specifically stated, and the various exceptions consecutively numbered. They must be properly entitled, and signed by the complainant, or his Solicitor. Verbal exceptions to an answer will not be considered.

If there be separate answers by different defendants, separate exceptions must be filed to each answer.13

The frame of exceptions to answers will be better seen by reference to the following forms:

EXCEPTIONS TO AN ANSWER FOR INSUFFICIENCY.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.

No. 618.—In Chancery, at Knoxville.

The complainant, John Doe, excepts to the answer of the defendant, Richard Roe, because of its insufficiency.

1st. For that the defendant has not answered to the best of his knowledge, remembrance, information and belief whether [such an allegation or charge in paragraph 3 of the bill is true, specify the allegation, or charge.]

2d. For that the defendant has not answered whether he did or not [setting forth a charge], as in paragraph 3 of the bill it is alleged he did.

3d. For that the said defendant has not in his said answer set forth and discovered how, when, and to whom he paid the money by him received from the complainant, as alleged in paragraph 4 of the bill.

4th. For that the said defendant has not fully answered as to the matters and charges set forth in paragraph 5 of the bill.

5th. For that the said defendant has not fully answered and discovered when, how, and to whom he transferred the funds that went into his hands as alleged in paragraph 6 of the bill.

6th. For that the said defendant has not to the best of his knowledge, remembrance, information and belief, and answered and set forth a full, just and true inventory of the goods and chattels, notes and accounts, and other effects that came into his hands, or under his control, or should by due diligence have come into his hands, belonging to said estate [or to said partnership, or to complainant.] and how, when and to whom, and for how much, the same or any part and what part thereof has been sold or disposed of, and what part has not been disposed of, and what is become thereof, as he was called on and required to do in the bill.

Wherefore, the complainant prays that the said respondent may be compelled to put in a full and complete answer to complainant's bill.

From the ruling of the Master on the 1st, 2d and 6th exceptions, the defendant appeals.

July 25, 1891.

LEON JOURDOLMON, Solicitor.

§ 424. How Exceptions are Disposed of.—The complainant must set his exceptions down for hearing before the Master, within ten days after they have been filed, or upon failure to do so, the answer will be deemed sufficient. Upon the exceptions being thus set down for hearing, the Master shall act upon them immediately; and, if allowed, he shall notify the defendant's Solicitor to file a sufficient answer within thirty days. From the action of the Master allowing the exceptions, the defendant may, within the thirty days, appeal to the Chancellor. If the defendant, in obedience to the Master's order, file an answer deemed sufficient by the latter, he shall, by letter or otherwise, notify the complainant's Solicitor of the same, and he may appeal to the Chancellor within ten days after the notice. These various appeals must be acted on by the Chancellor at his earliest convenience; and he may hear them in vacation, and may make such order in the matter of the appeal as may be proper.
If the defendant, upon exceptions sustained to the sufficiency of his answer, neglects and refuses to put in a sufficient answer, or shall put in another insufficient answer, the complainant may take his bill for confessed as to the part to which his exceptions relate, and proceed with the cause as in other cases; or he may, at his election, have the defendant attached, in which latter case the same procedure may be had as though no answer, at all, had been filed. The filing of exceptions to an answer does not delay the taking of depositions, or otherwise preparing the cause for hearing.

If the Master allow the exceptions, or any of them, he will so find, putting his findings in writing, at the foot of the exceptions; and he will date and sign his rulings; and, at once, give the proper notice of his action. The party desiring to appeal from the rulings of the Master, will write his appeal immediately below the ruling appealed from, and will date and sign it.

There is some difference in practice between exceptions for insufficiency and exceptions for scandal and impertinence: the latter exceptions may be filed and acted on at any time, by leave of the Court; indeed, the Court may, on its own motion, or upon application of the opposite party, refer the answer to the Master to be revised, or order scandalous and impertinent matter to be stricken out of the answer.

ACTION OF THE COURT ON EXCEPTIONS TO AN ANSWER.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.

No. 618.—In Chancery, at Knoxville.

The exceptions taken by the complainant to the answer of the defendant, Richard Roe, because of its insufficiency, coming on to be heard on appeals from the rulings of the Master, and the same having been argued by counsel, it is ordered that the 1st, 2d and 5th exceptions be allowed and the 3rd, 4th and 5th exceptions be disallowed; and it is ordered that the defendant, Richard Roe, file a sufficient answer within thirty days, or the complainant may take his bill for confessed as to the parts to which his said exceptions relate, and proceed with the cause as in other cases.

ARTICLE III.

SUGGESTIONS AS TO TESTING PLEAS.

§ 425. Suggestions to the Solicitor of the Complainant.

§ 426. Suggestions to the Solicitor of the Defendant.

§ 425. Suggestions to the Solicitor of the Complainant.—It will be found important for you to keep in mind the following matters in reference to the testing of pleadings:

1. Suggestions as to Demurrers. Do not specially dread a demurrer: as a rule, demurrers are the complainant's friends: if the bill is utterly unmaintainable, a demurrer will end it, at the least cost; if, on the other hand, it is at all maintainable, the demurrer will ordinarily point out to you some deficiency.
in the bill which you can readily correct, and which might have greatly injured you at the hearing, had not the demurrer pointed it out to you in season. If the demurrer shows some deficiency, at once amend your bill, and have copy and notice thereof duly served on the defendant. If, however, you wish to obtain the benefit of argument, and of the Court’s opinion, you will set the demurrer down with the Clerk to be argued. Remember, nevertheless, that you may amend before argument of the demurrer without leave of the Court, and at slight cost; while, after argument, you must obtain leave of the Court, and submit to such terms as the Court may impose;4 and the Court may refuse to allow you to amend, or may tax your client with all the costs of the cause.2

2. Suggestions as to Pleas. As soon as you are notified3 of the filing of a plea, you should consider it; and if you deem it sufficient you should file a replication; if you deem it insufficient you should set it down with the Clerk, in writing, to be argued. If you fail to do this within twenty days, the defendant may proceed to take proof on it; or, if the local rule permit, may take his plea for confessed, for want of a replication. And remember, that a deficient plea, one you might have had adjudged insufficient, may defeat your suit, if you are forced to a hearing on an issue of fact as to its truth.5

3. Suggestions as to Answers. Whenever an answer is filed, it is the duty of the Clerk and Master to forthwith notify you.6 On receiving such notice, you should within twenty days carefully peruse the answer, in order to see: (1) whether its disclosures are such as to necessitate an amendment of your bill; (2) whether you desire to except to it for insufficiency; and (3) whether its admissions are sufficient to justify you in setting the cause down for hearing on bill and answer.

If an amendment to your bill is necessary, you should take the requisite steps with all diligence: if you desire to except to the answer for insufficiency, you must file your exceptions within twenty days after receipt of notice of the filing of the answer; if you wish to set the cause for hearing on bill and answer, you must do so within twenty days after notice of the filing of the answer; or, in case of exceptions and a new answer, then within twenty days after notice of the filing of a sufficient answer.7

If you fail to except to an answer for insufficiency, within the twenty days, you thereby admit the answer to be sufficient; and the statute operates as a replication to the answer, and thus makes an issue of fact. If you have called for a discovery from the defendant on oath, you are not likely to obtain a full discovery without the coercion of exceptions to his answer for insufficiency. Hence, the vital importance of filing such exceptions within the twenty days.

Remember that, if you file exceptions to an answer for insufficiency, you must set them down for hearing before the Master within ten days after they are filed; or, upon your failure to do so, the exceptions will be deemed to be abandoned, and the answer will be deemed sufficient.8

§ 426. Suggestions to the Solicitor of the Defendant.—Inasmuch as you represent the defendant, the same measure of diligence and vigilance is not ordinarily required of you and your client as are required of the complainant. The following matters, however, demand prompt and intelligent attention:

1. Suggestions as to the Bill. As soon as you are retained, procure a copy of the bill, so that you may be able to apply the tests of its sufficiency in due season. Remember, that after a pro confesso has been entered against your client, it is too late to move to dismiss, and too late to demur. If, on inspecting the bill, you can have it dismissed on motion, enter your motion, specifying the particular ground, or grounds, on which it is based. If you can destroy the bill, or have any substantial part of it dismissed, by demurring, file your demur-ner, being careful (1) to make it special, and (2) if it be to a part only of the bill, to confine it, by appropriate language, to such part. If the result of a demurrer will be merely to compel the complainant to amend his bill, consider whether such a demurrer will not profit him more than you.

2. Suggestions as to the Answer. If you receive notice that exceptions to your answer have been sustained by the Clerk and Master, at once consider whether you will file a further answer, or will appeal from the ruling of the Master. Remember, that if you fail to appeal, within thirty days after notice to file a sufficient answer, it will be too late to appeal; and, that if a sufficient answer is not filed in time, your client is liable to a pro confession, or to an attachment, as the complainant may elect.

AMENDMENTS TO PLEADINGS GENERALLY CONSIDERED.

§ 427. What Matters May be Amended.
§ 428. General Rules as to Amendments.
§ 429. How to Prevent Amendments becoming Obstacles to Justice.

§ 427. What Matters May be Amended.—Perfection is the exception, and imperfection the rule, in all human proceedings; and the right to amend what was defectively done without bad faith, is deemed sacred, provided such right is sought to be exercised in good faith, in good season, in due form, and before any contrary right has intervened. Imperfections and errors occur often in judicial proceedings, and both the Courts and the Legislature have endeavored to make rules whereby such imperfections and errors would work as little hardship as possible. It has been enacted that no summons, writ, pleading, process, return, or other proceeding in any civil action in any Court, shall be abated or quashed for any defect, omission, or imperfection; and that no civil suit shall be dismissed for want of necessary partieis, or on account of the form of the action, or for want of the proper averments in the pleadings; but the Courts shall have power to change the form of action, strike out or insert in the writ and pleadings the names of either plaintiffs or defendants, so as to have the proper parties before the Court, and to allow all proper averments to be supplied.

These statutory provisions are full of beneficence, and all-comprehensive; and in construing them, the Courts hold that any and every paper filed, or proceeding instituted, in a Court of Justice is amendable, and cannot be brought to nought for any defect, omission, or imperfection, provided the defect or omission be supplied, or the imperfection be corrected, in the right way and at the right time.

Any and every paper filed in any proceeding in the Chancery Court is amendable, unless it be so defective as to be a nullity. If it has a root of substance, its trunk may be pruned, or new shoots may be added; but if it has no substance or virtue at all, then there is nothing to amend. Amendments must be made to an existing substance, either by changing its form, or by adding omissions, or by correcting defects or imperfections. This rule applies to process of all sorts, to bonds and pleadings of all kinds, to motions, petitions, reports by the Master, proceedings in the Master's office, and to a limited extent, even to the orders and decrees of the Court. The law intends that suits shall be tried upon their merits, without being entangled in ceremonies, or strangled by formalities, and the object of the statutes quoted was to place common sense upon her native seat, from which she had been driven by technicalities.\textsuperscript{9}

Forms were invented to aid, and not to impede, the administration of justice.

§ 428. General Rules as to Amendments.—Courts should be liberal in allowing all amendments to pleadings, necessary to enable a party to have his side of the controversy fully presented on its merits;\textsuperscript{7} but the Court is under no obligation to favor a party who is interposing obstacles to a hearing on the merits. This liberality in allowing amendments should be balanced by an equivalent severity in the imposition of costs on the parties seeking to amend.

The following are the general rules on the subject of amendments:

1. The Proposed Amendment Must be Pertinent and germane to the Controversy, and must be of such a character that it will either enable the applicant the better to present his case, or will enable the Court the better to understand the controversy, and to do complete justice between the parties. No amendment that is impertinent, or multifarious, or that brings in foreign matters, or that is inconsistent with, or antagonistic to, the claims or prayers of the original bill, or that is proper matter for another suit, should be allowed on any terms.\textsuperscript{8}

2. The Application to Amend Should be Made at the First Opportunity after the applicant has learned of the necessity of the amendment, or of the existence of the facts on which his application is based.\textsuperscript{9} A party who allows his adversary to take steps, or costs to be unnecessarily incurred, after he has knowledge of a defect, and an opportunity to amend, should be held stopped to make the amendment. Good faith requires diligence in such cases. Courts are slow to help the slow.

3. The Application to Amend should be Made Before the Court Acts on the particular pleading sought to be amended. A party should not be allowed to experiment with his pleading, by waiting to see what the Court may think of it, after his attention has been called to its defects. A party who voluntarily assumes risks, should be bound by the result, and should not be heard to complain, or to ask another trial of chance.\textsuperscript{10}

4. The Application should Not Only be at the Right Time, as stated in the two foregoing rules, but it should be made in the right way, and in accordance with the practice and rules of the Court. If affidavits of diligence and good faith are required by the rules or practice, they should be duly presented, in support of the application. Statements "as on affidavit," are almost in the nature of a contempt of Court on the part of a suitor or Solicitor who is already in default, because he is seeking to correct one error by making another.\textsuperscript{11} If ever a Solicitor should diligently, fully, and cheerfully, comply with the requirements of every rule, however stringent, it is when, being in default, he is confessing it, and asking leave of the Court to make the necessary amendment. If the rules of the Court require that the proposed amendment should be reduced to writing, and sworn to before presented, this, also, should be done. And more: all the requirements of the rules should not only be complied with, but this compliance should be frank and prompt, not sullen and slow.

5. And the Application to Amend should be Accompanied by an Offer to Pay Such costs, or to comply with such other terms and requirements the Court may impose, as the price or condition of allowing the amendment to be made.\textsuperscript{12}

As, in some religious images, invented to aid in the worship of God, became, in process of time, themselves the objects of worship, and thus supplanted God himself; so, in some Courts, the forms invented to aid in the administration of justice, have come to be regarded of more importance than justice itself. AMENDMENTS TO PLEADINGS.

§ 429. How to Prevent Amendments Becoming Obstacles to Justice.—It is manifest that if Courts were to allow amendments of any kind, at any stage of the litigation, without restriction, impediment, or penalty, it would not only be destructive of good practice and correct pleading, but great delays and difficulties in judicial procedure would be the result. License is as dangerous as tyranny, and want of forms is as detrimental to the administration of justice as is the excess of technicalities.

If amendments are allowed without affidavits showing diligence, good faith, and a good excuse, and without the imposition of penal costs, the practice of the Court will soon degenerate into a comedy of errors; the rules of pleading will be utterly ignored; confusion and uncertainty will reign where order and certainty should be supreme; and Justice will be obliged to grope her way, in her own temple, through dark labyrinths, without a guide.

If no penal costs are imposed, Solicitors will cease to object to defects in the pleadings or proceedings of their adversaries, inasmuch as their objections will avail them nothing; but, on the other hand, will be a downright benefit to the party in default, by enabling him to perfect his ease. "The glorious uncertainty of the law" will become then a reality, and not a jest. The practice prevalent in our County Courts will become the course of procedure in all the Courts; and our Supreme Court will find itself so overwhelmed by irregularities and deficiencies that it will be unable to administer justice on appeal.

The remedy for these evils consists in stern rules, sternly enforced, requiring:

1. That every motion to amend shall be made in due season; and shall, in case of delay, be supported by an affidavit showing merits, diligence, and good faith. 2. The affidavit should specify the proposed amendment, and should give a sufficient excuse for any apparent delay. 3. If a pleading is to be amended, the truth of the amendment should be sworn to. 4. The amendment, be obtained by a complainant recovering on a claim, which, the proof shows, had been paid, released, or otherwise discharged, because the fact of payment, or release, had not been set up in the answer. See, Furman v. North, 4 Bax., 296; Sto. Eq. Pl., § 902; McEwen v. Troost, 1 Snced, 186; McVey v. Ely, 5 Lea, 438.

When all the foregoing requirements are complied with, the applicant is ordinarily entitled, as a matter of right, to make the amendment desired; and if his application is denied, he is in the best possible condition to have the ruling of the Chancellor reversed in the Supreme Court. But when he fails to comply with the foregoing rules, then the granting of the amendment becomes a matter of discretion, and the Supreme Court will not, ordinarily, undertake to revise that discretion.

6. But Where the Pleading is in Behalf of an Infant, or Person of Unsound Mind, the Court will not require the same measure of diligence, in the matter of amendments, as when the party applying is under no disability. Courts consider infants and persons of unsound mind as under their general guardianship, and will not permit them to suffer either by error of omission, or by error of commission, in the pleadings of their next friends, or guardians. The Court will even act affirmatively in their behalf, when necessary, on its own motion; and will order an improper admission or submission in a pleading, filed in behalf of an infant, to be stricken out, or an affirmative amendment to be made, when necessary to the infant’s rights. 13

7. But When an Amendment to a Bill or Answer is Manifestly in Furtherance of justice, and necessary to prevent an irreparable injury, or to prevent the adverse side from obtaining the benefit of an unconscientious advantage, the Court will, as a general rule, allow any such amendment at any stage of the suit,14 taking care, however, to punish any negligence or delay, by the imposition of penal costs.

13 Sto. Eq. 1st, § 892; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 72.
14 As illustrations of an irreparable injury, and an unconscientious advantage: (1) An irreparable injury to a complainant would arise, should he be not allowed to so amend as to include in his suit some proven item that he would be barred from recovering in another suit; and, (2) on the other hand, the benefit of an unconscientious advantage would AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL PLEADINGS. § 430

if it causes any delay, or additional proof, should be granted only on the payment of a portion, or all, of the costs of the cause.15

Solicitors dislike to write affidavits, and clients dislike to pay costs. The Chancellor will be importuned to hear statements "as on affidavit," and to forego the imposition of costs; but affidavits and costs constitute the penalty parties must suffer for their negligence, and the price parties must pay for leave to amend; and the Chancellor who enforces the rule rigorously will soon find that applications to amend will seldom be made, that the practice in his Court will greatly improve, that diligence will characterize the members of his bar, and that general satisfaction and general commendation will be the result.

Patched-up pleadings are alike discreditable to the Chancellor and to the Solicitor responsible therefor—discreditable to the Chancellor for tolerating such looseness of pleading, and discreditable to the Solicitor because of his ignorance, or negligence.

ARTICLE II.

AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL BILLS.

§ 430. When Bills May be Amended. | § 431. Supplemental Bills.

§ 430. When Bills May be Amended.—The consideration of Amended and Supplemental Bills requires so much space that a separate Chapter will be hereinafter devoted to them.1 It may be stated generally, however, that a large liberty of amendment is allowed the complainant. Courts are made for complainants, and the law gives them all reasonable opportunities to so amend and perfect their bills as to be able to bring before the Court, in proper form, the particular matters they desire to submit to its adjudication. If the amendment is made before a plea or answer is filed, or before a demurrer is argued, it may be done as a matter of course, without any leave of the Chancellor, or Master, as hereafter more fully shown. In all other cases, the bill can be amended only by leave of the Chancellor, given in open Court.2 Such leave, however, will readily be given when (1) the importance of the amendment is made to appear, and (2) diligence and good faith are shown by affidavit in support of the application. The bill may even be amended at the hearing, when (1) merits manifestly appear in the record, and (2) no laches, or bad faith, taints the conduct of the complainant, and (3) when such an amendment will not operate harshly, or unjustly, upon the defendant, or take him by surprise, or cut him off from a valid defence he might have made.

If new facts arise, or new parties acquire interests, after the original bill has been filed, a supplemental bill is the proper pleading to bring such new matters, or parties, before the Court; and application to file such a bill should be made as soon as the facts come to the complainant's knowledge; and it is good practice to accompany the application with an affidavit, explaining any seeming delay; and with a copy of the proposed supplemental bill duly verified, as will more fully be shown in the Chapter on Amended and Supplemental Bills, to which reference is made for a fuller consideration of the subject.

15 There is no hardship in these rules. Why should your client suffer because of the negligence, or ignorance, of his adversary, especially if that adversary be the complainant? And, on the other hand, why should you not suffer the just penalty of your own want of diligence and skill? He who seeks Equity must do Equity. To allow amendments, without terms, tends to corrupt the practice, degrade the science of pleading, and to put negligence on a par with diligence, and ignorance on a par with skill. See Waiver, ante, § 71; and Show Cause, ante, § 62, sub-sec. 8.
1 See, post, §§ 666-667.
2 Code. §§ 4332-4334.
§ 431. Supplemental Bills.—Any change may be made in the matter of an original bill, or in the parties thereto, before an answer has been put in; and such changes may be made, of course, and without application to the Court. These changes are made as amendments to the original bill, and the bill when so changed is called an amended bill. But when it becomes necessary to change the matter, or parties, of a bill, after an answer has been put in, this change is made by a supplemental bill, or, as it is often termed, an amended and supplemental bill. In strictness, however, a supplemental bill is more comprehensive than an amended bill, and may include matter which has come into existence since the original bill was filed; whereas, an amended bill speaks as of the date of the filing of the original bill, and cannot, therefore, properly include matters which have come into being since the original bill was filed.

The subject of supplemental bills will be hereafter fully treated in a separate Article; but it may be stated here that the office of a supplemental bill is to bring before the Court: 1, Matters pertinent to the original suit which have occurred since the bringing of the suit; 2, Matters which existed when the suit was brought, but which cannot now be added to the original bill, because it has been answered, and the issues are made up; 3, Matters necessary to obtain an additional discovery, the necessity often arising because of the disclosures in the answer; 4, To bring new parties before the Court; and 5, To remedy defects in the prayer of the original bill.

ARTICLE III.

AMENDED DEMURRERS AND PLEAS.

§ 432. When Demurrers May be Amended. | § 433. When Pleas May be Amended.

§ 432. When Demurrers May be Amended.—As already stated, any pleading may be amended; and while demurrers are not regarded with favor by the Courts, nevertheless, on application before argument, the Court will readily allow a demurrer to be amended. If the bill is without Equity, the Court may, and perhaps should, allow the demurrer to be so amended as to reach the vulnerable part of the bill. So, if the demurrer is to the whole bill when only a part of the bill is demurrable, the Court may, on proper application, allow the demurrer to be so amended as to apply exclusively to that part of the bill liable to demurrer.

The amendment of demurrers has already been fully considered, and need not therefore be further elaborated here.

§ 433. When Pleas May be Amended.—In cases where a plea discloses a substantial ground of defence to the bill, but the plea has not been so framed as to sufficiently make the defence, the Court will, on proper application, allow the plea to be amended. If the plea is too defective to be amended, and there is an apparent ground of defence disclosed by the plea, the Court will allow the defendant to plead de novo. Amendments to pleas in abatement are more slowly allowed than to pleas in bar, for a party who disputes the jurisdiction of the Court should not ask any favors of a tribunal whose authority he disputes.

This subject will be found further considered under the head of Pleas.
ARTICLE IV.
AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWERS.

§ 434. Amended Answers Generally Considered.

§ 435. What Amendments May be Made to Answers.

§ 434. Amended Answers Generally Considered.—In amending answers there is some difference between answers required to be sworn to and answers not so required. An answer sworn to is in the nature of a deposition as well as a pleading, while an unsworn answer is a pure pleading. Courts are very slow to allow a sworn answer to be amended; and it is only under very special circumstances that a defendant will be allowed to make any material alteration in it, after it has once been filed. If, however, the Court is satisfied that the error, mistake, or omission, was the result of accident or inadvertence, that the proposed amendment is meritorious, that there is no bad faith in the matter, and that the application has been promptly made after the discovery of the error or omission, the amendment will ordinarily be allowed, on such costs as are equitable. The Court must, ordinarily, be satisfied of these facts, by the affidavit of the party making the application.

If the Court allows an unsworn answer to be withdrawn because prepared by counsel in the absence of the defendant, and a new answer to be filed in lien, the original answer cannot be read as evidence against the defendant at the hearing. There is no limit to the time within which an application to amend an answer, or file a supplemental answer, must be made; but the longer the lapse of time since the answer was filed, the more slow the Court is in granting the application, and the greater the costs the defendant will be required to pay. But where the complainant cannot be placed in the same situation he would have been in had the new matter been set up in due season, the Court will not permit an amendment to be made, or a supplemental answer to be filed. Nevertheless, where a refusal to allow an amendment will work irreparable injury to the defendant, and give the complainant an unconscientious advantage, the Court will, at any stage of the suit, allow any amendment to an answer that is in absolute furtherance of justice, always punishing the defendant for any negligence, or delay, by a proportionate imposition of costs.

The Court will always allow time in which to take proof upon any new issue of facts raised by an amended or supplemental answer, for otherwise such an amendment would be nugatory.

§ 435. What Amendments May be Made to Answers.—There is no limit to the character of the amendments that may be made to an answer, except that

2 Hurst v. Jones, 10 Lea, 8.
5 In Furman v. North, 4 Bax., 296, the Supreme Court remanded the cause, with leave to the defendant to amend his answer, if desired, so as to put in, issue a release of the debt sued for, such release
6 The bill, in this case, was filed and answered in 1855; the release was executed in 1867, was proved in the cause in 1870, or 1871; and, in 1874, the Supreme Court granted leave to amend. Manifest justice required this amendment. In McVey v. Ely, 3 Lea, 438, the amended answer was allowed to be filed two years after the filing of the original answer, in order to give the defendant an opportunity to set up a defense, discovered since he filed his original answer. The defence, in this case, was the fraudulent alteration of the note sued on; and the refusal to allow the amendment would have been a violation of justice.
7 Stull v. Goode, 10 Heisk., 58.
after one defence has been set up and proof taken thereon, the Court will not allow another and inconsistent defence to be set up by way of amendment, or by a supplemental answer. 7

Amendments may be allowed to correct (1) a mistake or error in a matter of fact, or in the statement of a fact, or (2) a mistake in the admission of assets, or (3) to set up new matters of defence that have come to the defendant's knowledge since his answer was filed. Mistakes by counsel in drawing the answer, or in advising his client that it was not necessary to set up an omitted defence, may be corrected by prompt affidavit of the facts. 8 But no amendment will be allowed in order to plead the statute of limitations, or the statute of frauds, 9 unless, perhaps, where the application to amend is made with great promptness; nor will an amendment be allowed to set up any unconscientious defence. Where, however, such defences are defectively set forth, an amendment will be allowed to give the defendant the benefit of the defence he intended to set up. 10

The Court is very reluctant to allow amendments after the proof has been taken; 11 nor will it allow an amendment based on the ground that the defendant answered under a mistake of law. 12 Amendments that contradict the statements in the first answer, or that change the ground of the defence, are inadmissible. The defendant must clearly show that it is due to justice to permit the defence already made to be altered in the manner proposed. 13

§ 436. How an Answer is Amended.—If the amendment desired is in a small matter, not going to the merits, the Court will allow it to be made on motion; but if the defendant desires to amend his answer in a material point, he must present his own affidavit verifying the proposed amendment, explaining how the error, mistake, or omission happened, and excusing any apparent delay. 14 An application to file a supplemental answer must be supported in the same way. 15

Applications to amend answers are, usually, made in open Court. In matters of urgency and moment, however, the application may be made to the Chancellor in vacation, on due notice to the complainant.

Unsworn answers are allowed to be amended with somewhat more liberality than where the defendant is required to answer on oath; nevertheless, the same rules apply. An unsworn answer is as much the solemn averment of record of the defendant as if sworn to. 16

§ 437. When a Supplemental Answer Must be Filed.—If the proposed amendment is one that materially changes the nature of the defence set up, or necessitates any erasures, or serious interlineations, or brings forward new matter, or makes explanations, the defendant will be required to file a supplemental answer, and will not be allowed to make any erasures, or considerable interlineations, in his original answer.

The supplemental answer should be drawn and duly verified before being presented to the Court, and the application for leave to file should be supported by the affidavit of the defendant, and, if necessary, of his agent, or Solicitor, showing a sufficient reason why the facts contained in the supplemental answer were not introduced into the original answer, accounting for any apparent delay, and averring that justice requires that he should be permitted to alter the defence already made.

While by the strict rules of pleading, a defence arising after the cause is at issue, such as a payment, or release, or award, must be set up by a cross bill in the nature of a plea since the last continuance, nevertheless, under our liberal practice, a supplemental answer might be filed by leave of the Court, setting up such a defence, and any other defence that has arisen since the original answer was filed.

An amended or supplemental answer may be in the following form:

AMENDED OR SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWER.

John Doe, vs.
Richard Roe, et al.] In the Chancery Court, at Nashville.

The amended [or, supplemental] answer of Richard Roe to the bill filed against him and others in this cause.

This defendant, in addition to [or, in explanation of, or, in correction of,] the answer heretofore filed by him in this cause, leave of the Court having first been obtained, says that, [Here set out the additions, explanations, or corrections, stated or referred to in the order of the Court allowing the amended or supplemental answer to be filed; and conclude as in an ordinary answer.

An amended or supplemental answer should be signed and sworn to; but if leave to file it has been previously obtained, and the oath of the defendant is waived by the bill, it need not be sworn to.

PROCEEDINGS IN A SUIT IN CHANCERY, FROM THE CLOSE OF THE PLEADINGS TO THE CONCLUSION OF THE HEARING.

CHAPTER XXIII.

HEARING A CAUSE ON BILL AND ANSWER.

§ 438. Motion to Set a Cause for Hearing on Bill and Answer. — If, on reading the answer, the complainant is willing to admit the truth of the answer, he may, by motion, specially set the cause for hearing on bill and answer. ¹ This motion may be made before the Master by the complainant, and entered on the rule docket; or it may be made in open Court. It must, however, be made within twenty days after complainant’s Solicitor has notice of the filing of the answer; or, in case of exceptions and a new answer, within twenty days of his notice of the filing of a sufficient answer,² unless the Court allows the motion to be made after said time, which allowance the Court will readily make,³ on due application, especially if no proof has been filed. The motion may be in the following form:

MOTION TO SET A CAUSE ON BILL AND ANSWER.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe.

This cause is by the complainant this day specially set for hearing on bill and answer.

§ 439. Hearing a Cause on Bill and Answer. — When a cause has been set down for hearing by the complainant, on bill and answer, the answer is admitted by the complainant to be true; and therefore, no proof is needed,⁴ unless it becomes necessary to prove some of the exhibits to the bill which have not been fully admitted, or to produce some record of the Court, to which the answer refers.⁵

¹ Code, §§ 4322; 4430. Setting a cause for hearing on bill and answer is in the nature of an oral demurrer to the answer.

² The reason of this is, that the lapse of twenty days is equivalent to the filing of a replication; Code, §§ 4322; 4328; and, under the former practice, a cause could not be set for hearing on bill and answer, after replication; because a replication denied the truth of the answer; whereas, on setting a cause for hearing, on bill and answer, complainant admits the truth of the answer. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 318; 249-252. The Court, however, will permit a cause to be specially set for hearing, on bill and answer, after issue made up.

⁴ Bowers v. McGavock, 6 Cates, 438. As to when, and how, causes are set for hearing, on bill and answer, see ante, § 438.

⁵ 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 829; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 308; 318. A cause stands for trial at the first term after it is at issue, even though no proof be filed by either party. Code, §§ 4328; 4401; 4432. And the setting of a cause for hearing, by the complainant, expressly on bill and answer, within the twenty days allowed for that purpose, must not be confounded with the regular hearing of a cause, on the call of the docket, after the lapse of twenty days from the filing of a sufficient answer. In the latter case, the cause is not set for hearing, by the complainant, on bill and answer; but it is set for hearing, by the Clerk and Master, in obedience to law. Code, § 4431, and sections above cited; and, when so set for hearing, by the Clerk and Master, instead of the answer being admitted to be true, it is deemed denied, by the complainant. Code, §§ 4432; 4328.
On the hearing of a cause on bill and answer, every matter set up in the answer, whether responsive to the bill or purely in avoidance, must be taken as true. This rule includes even those matters which the defendant avers that he believes and hopes to be able to prove. And matters which the defendant neither admits or denies will be deemed denied, when a cause is thus heard on bill and answer. Exhibits to the answer are, also, taken as true and duly proved.

But the rule that the answer is to be considered true in all points, does not mean that the legal deductions insisted on in the answer are to be considered as true, but only such matters of fact as are stated in the answer.

If the complainant sets the cause down for hearing on bill and answer, and the Court should be of opinion that there is not sufficient matter confessed by the answer, to entitle the complainant to any of the relief prayed, the bill will be dismissed with costs. But, as a rule, where a cause has thus been heard, and the complainant fails to make out his case for want of sufficient admissions in the answer, the suit will either (1) be dismissed without prejudice; or, (2) the complainant will be given leave to withdraw his application to have the cause heard on bill and answer, and the cause will be remanded to the rules for proof: in either case, however, the complainant will be taxed with all the costs of the cause.

§ 440. Form of a Decree When Cause is Heard on Bill and Answer.—The following form will show the commencement of a decree when a cause is heard on bill and answer.

DECREES ON BILL AND ANSWER.

John Doe,

Richard Roe.

This cause, having been heretofore specially set for hearing by the complainant on the bill of complaint, and the answer of the defendant thereto, came on to be heard, this June 4, 1891, before Hon. John P. Smith, Chancellor, upon the bill and answer, as aforesaid, and argument having been heard, on consideration thereof, the Chancellor is of opinion that the answer fully meets and overcomes all the equities and causes of suit alleged in the bill. It is, therefore, ordered and decreed by the Court, that the bill be dismissed; and that the complainant and David Doe, his surety for the costs, pay all the costs of the cause, for which execution will issue. [If the Chancellor should be of opinion that the complainant is entitled to relief, then say after the words, “on consideration thereof,” the Chancellor is of opinion that the complainant is entitled to the relief by him prayed. It is, therefore, ordered, adjudged and decreed, by the Court, that [following the prayer of the bill.] See, post, §§ 566-568.]

6 The reason of the rule is that, by setting the cause for hearing on bill and answer, the complainant has debared the defendant from the opportunity of proving what he hopes to prove. Brinkerhoff v. Brown, 7 Johns. Ch. 223. This rule prevails whether the oath to the answer is waived or not. Ibid., note.

7 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 318; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 982; Rodgers v. Rodgers, 6 Heisk., 489; Railroad v. Murrell, 11 Heisk., 717. Under the old practice, if the defendant intended to dispute the truth of the answer, he filed a replication; if he did not file a replication, the truth of the answer was admitted, and the cause was set for hearing, on the bill and answer. Lowry v. McGeer, 3 Verg., 238; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 249. Under our present practice, the lapse of twenty days after answer filed, operates as a statutory replication; and, if a suit is set down for hearing, by the complainant, on bill and answer, before the lapse of the twenty days, the effect of such act is to admit the truth of the answer. It, therefore, behooves the complainant to diligently scrutinize the answer, before setting the cause down for hearing, on bill and answer; and to examine carefully into the exhibits filed to the answer, and the records referred to in it; and to the force of all matters set up in avoidance; and to the effect of all denials, and of all matters the defendant says he believes to be true, and hopes to prove.

EVIDENCE IN CHANCERY.

ARTICLE I. Evidence Generally Considered.

ARTICLE II. When Proof is, and is not, Necessary.

ARTICLE III. Pleadings When Evidence.

ARTICLE IV. When Proof Must be Filed.

ARTICLE V. Practical Suggestions Concerning Proof.

ARTICLE I.

EVIDENCE GENERALLY CONSIDERED.

§ 442. When Parol Evidence is Admissible to Vary, or Annul, Writings or Records. § 448. Fraud Proved by Circumstances.

§ 443. Burden of Proof. § 449. When Fraud Will be Presumed.

§ 444. Presumptions Generally Considered. § 450. Inspection in Aid of Proof.

§ 446. The Probative Force of Court Records.

§ 441. General Rules of Evidence.—Evidence is the means whereby the mind is induced to believe, or disbelieve, an allegation of fact; and legal evidence includes all oral statements by parties, or witnesses, and all writings, or other documents, proper to be heard by a Judge in determining an issue of fact. The office of evidence is to prove or disprove what is alleged; and to contradict or weaken, or corroborate or strengthen, other evidence already made. Proof is sufficient evidence to satisfy the mind that an allegation of fact is probably true. The production of evidence is governed by four general rules:

1. The Evidence Must Correspond With the Allegations in the pleadings, and be confined to the points put in issue by the pleadings. This rule includes facts and circumstances relating to the matters in issue, and facts that tend to strengthen, or weaken, the evidence introduced.

2. The Substance, Only, of the Issue Need be Proved. As a rule, allegations of time, place, quantity, quality, and value need not be proved strictly as alleged, unless the jurisdiction of the Court, or the right of action, depends upon such matters, or they are otherwise essential.

3. The Burden of Proving a Proposition in Issue Lies Upon the Party Who Substantially Asserts the Affirmative. The best tests for ascertaining on whom the burden of proof lies, are to consider who would lose, if (1) no evidence were introduced by either side; or, (2) if the allegation to be proved were stricken

1 Proof and evidence are often used as synonymous terms, but they differ in meaning. Proof is the end, and evidence is the means. Proof establishes the truth; evidence only tends towards it. Bump, Fraud. Conv., 578. Proof convinces, makes certain, demonstrates, creates full belief; evidence influences, indicates, makes probable, creates partial belief.

2 Kelley v. Fletcher, 10 Pick., 1.

4 Greenl. Ev., §§ 56-62. The substance of the case, made by the pleadings, must be proved; that is, all the facts alleged in his pleading, which are necessary to the case of the party alleging them, must be established by evidence, unless they are admitted by the opposite party, either in his pleading, or in a separate writing. The complainant, however, is required to prove so much, only, of his bill as is necessary to entitle him to a decree. A party must not only prove the substance of the case, alleged by him, but he must prove, substantially, the same case as that stated in his pleading; he cannot prove a different case, even though it be a good one; for that would be a surprise to the other party which the Court would not permit. Each party's proof must be confined (1) to proving what he affirmatively alleges, and (2) to disproving what he denies. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 837-860.

5 See, post, § 443.
out of the record; the burden of proof rests upon the party who, in such a case, would lose.6

4. The Best Evidence of Which the Case, in its Nature, is Susceptible, Must Always be Produced.7 This rule ordinarily excludes hearsay, and parol evidence of the contents of writings, records and other documents; and requires that the originals, or certified or examined copies of records be produced; and that writings be duly called for, or their loss duly shown, before allowing parol evidence of their contents.8

The rules of evidence as to the competency of witnesses, and the methods of obtaining testimony, are the same in Courts of Chancery as in the other Courts of this State, except so far as changed by statute.9 In all causes in Chancery, except divorce cases, and when a trial by jury is had, the testimony of witnesses is required to be taken in writing, without compelling their personal attendance.10 In divorce cases, and in trials by jury, either party may examine the witnesses in open Court, or take their testimony by depositions, as in other cases.11 Exhibits to bills, or answers, may be proved by affidavit filed with the exhibits in the Clerk’s office, at any time before the hearing, or by witnesses at the hearing.12

§ 442. When Parol Evidence is Admissible in Chancery to Vary, or Annul, Writings or Records.—As a rule, parol contemporaneous evidence is inadmissible to contradict, or vary, the terms of a valid written instrument.19 This rule was one of the most sacred known to the common law Courts, and was based upon the principle that the contracts of parties, deliberately written and signed, could safely be evidenced and perpetuated only by the writings themselves; and to permit the enlargement, diminution, or change, of their terms to be made by the frail and treacherous recollections of witnesses, would be to make the writings themselves useless, and the rights intended to be secured by them uncertain and doubtful, and would, also, furnish a strong temptation and incentive to perjury and fraud.20

Inasmuch, however, as under the protection of this rule, the fraudulent sometimes gain inequitable advantages; and, in the formation of written contracts, however solemn, the necessities sometimes yield to oppression, and the ignorant and rash sometimes blunder into mistakes, the rigor of the rule has been, in many cases, relaxed by Courts of Equity, in order that fraud may be thwarted, mistakes corrected, accidents relieved against, trusts set up and enforced, and usury exposed and eliminated.21 Most of the cases in which Courts of Equity admit parol evidence to vary, reform, contradict, enlarge, diminish, or annul, written instruments, may be classified as follows:

1. Cases of Fraud, Accident, or Mistake. When, by some accident or mistake, the writing does not truly and adequately express the real intent of the contracting parties;22 or, when by fraud, some undue and inequitable advantage has been taken by the defendant, either in framing the contract, or in obtaining the consent of the complainant thereto, or otherwise, on a bill being filed for the express purpose of correcting, or annuling, such a written contract, parol evidence will be heard to be the accident, mistake, or fraud complained of.23

2. Cases to Set Up, or Enforce Trusts. When, by parol, some trust is engrafted upon a will, deed, or other written instrument, a Court of Equity will, on a bill filed for that purpose, hear parol proof to set up, and establish, such trust.\(^{24}\) On a bill filed to have a resulting or implied trust declared and enforced, the complainant may prove, by parol, that he, or the alleged beneficiary, paid or furnished the consideration, even when the deed shows otherwise. The complainant may, also, show, by parol, that the defendant made the purchase, or took the title, as his agent, or for his benefit in whole, or in part. The declarations and admissions of the holder of the legal title may be proved, even after his death, to set up a trust in favor of another in the property so held. And so the defendant may prove, by parol, that the money, or other consideration, paid or advanced, was intended to be a gift; and that no trust was intended.\(^{25}\)

3. Cases to Have Deeds Declared Mortgages. Upon a bill being filed to have a deed, absolute on its face, declared to be a mere mortgage, or security for a debt, a Court of Chancery will allow the complainant to show the truth of his allegations by parol testimony. So, a complainant may, upon a bill being filed for that purpose, show by parol evidence, that when a deed absolute on its face was executed, there was coupled with it, by parol, the right of re-purchase, or the right to repay the purchase-money and have a re-conveyance.\(^{26}\)

4. Cases for a Specific Performance. Upon a bill to enforce a specific performance of a written contract, the defendant may show, by parol evidence, that, because of fraud, surprise or mistake, the written contract sought to be enforced does not express or contain the real agreement between the parties; or, else, that the agreement was entered into through mistake, or was obtained by fraud.\(^{27}\)

5. Other Cases Where Parol Evidence is Admissible. There are other cases wherein parol evidence will be heard by the Chancery Court to vary, reform, or annul writings, the most important of which are the following: 1. In cases of settled accounts, when the bill alleges specific errors, mischarges, or omissions; and seeks to surcharge and falsify the account, because of fraud, or mistake, in relation to said errors.\(^{28}\) 2. In cases of decrees and judgments, when the bill alleges that the decree or judgment complained of was obtained by fraud, accident or mistake, the facts constituting the alleged fraud, accident or mistake, may be proved by parol, even when they contradict, or vary, the record itself.\(^{29}\) 3. In cases of bills filed for a rescission of a written contract, because the complainant was drunk, insane, under duress, unduly influenced, or an imbecile, or that some fraud or imposition was practiced upon the complainant, the facts alleged as a ground of rescission may be proved by parol, even though the writing is thereby contradicted.\(^{30}\) 4. In cases of latent ambiguity in a will, or other writing, parol proof is admissible to show the meaning of the testator, or other party to the writing.\(^{31}\) 5. Parol evidence is admissible to show (1) that a written contract has been totally discharged; or, (2) that a new and distinct agreement upon a new consideration has been made, either as a substitute for the old, or as an addition to it; or, (3) that the time or place of performance has been changed; or, (4) that damages for the breach of a contract have been waived, or remitted; or, (5) that the contract was founded upon an insufficient, or an unlawful consideration, or was without consideration. So, it may be shown by parol, that only a part of the contract was, in fact, reduced to writing, or intended to be reduced to writing, and that there was a part of the contract intentionally left in parol; or, that there was an additional and suppletory agreement in parol. 6. Receipts may be varied, or contradicted, by oral testimony, in so far as they are receipts, both at law and in Equity.

§ 443. The Burden of Proof.—The duty of proving, or disproving, the facts in dispute on an issue between the parties to a suit, is termed the burden of proof. This burden rests on that party against whom, on the state of the pleadings, the issue would be decided if no proof in regard to it was introduced. Inasmuch as the complainant would generally lose the suit if no evidence was introduced, the burden of proof generally rests on him; but, sometimes, it rests on the defendant; for there are cases in which the defendant would lose the suit if no evidence was introduced, as where he admits the material allegations of the bill but sets up new matter in avoidance. Where the material allegations of the bill are denied by the answer, the burden of proof rests upon the complainant; but where the plea, or answer, expressly or constructively confesses the material allegations of the bill, and sets up new matters in avoidance of the bill, the burden of proof rests upon the party who maintains the affirmative of the issue, or, as it might be more definitely expressed, it rests upon that party whose material affirmative allegations are not expressly, or impliedly, admitted by his adversary. So, when a complainant alleges facts in his bill to avoid some bar, such as the statute of limitations, payment, an award, a release, a former judgment or decree, the burden of proving such facts rest on him. In general, when ever a prima facie right is disclosed by the pleadings, the burden of proof rests upon the party disputing that right; and whenever, at any stage of the proof, one party would be entitled to a decree, the burden of proof devolves upon the other party until he becomes entitled to a decree, and in this way the burden of proof may shift several times before the proofs are finally closed. The Court will always treat a deed, or other instrument, as being the thing which it purports to be, until the contrary is shown. Wherever there is a presumption that a fact exists, he who makes an allegation to the contrary must prove it. In cases where the presumption of law is in favor of one party, the other party must overcome it, even if it be necessary to prove a negative, as where the child of a married woman is alleged to be illegitimate.

§ 444. Presumptions Generally Considered.—A presumption is (1) a conclusion of law, or (2) an inference of fact drawn from experience and observation, or deduced from proven facts, that a certain fact not proven exists. 23 1 Greenl. Ev., §§ 302-304; 284; 2 King’s Dig., § 2741.

23 1 Greenl. Ev., §§ 302-304; Bissenger v. Guite-man, Heisk., 277; 2 Meigs’ Dig., § 1430; 2 King’s Dig., § 2746.

26 2 Meigs’ Dig., § 1179; 2 King’s Dig., § 2778.

27 The leading maxims are: Et incumbit probatio qui dicit non qui negat. (The burden of proof rests upon him who asserts a fact, not upon him who denies.) This is the great rule. Best Pr. Ev., § 269. Afirmanti, non neganti, incumbit probatio. (The burden of proof rests upon him who affirms, not upon him who denies.) In genere, quicunque aliquid dicit sine acto sine reus, necesse est ut probet. (In general, whoever asserts a fact, whether he be complainant or defendant, is bound to prove it.)

28 These allegations, while generally affirmative, are sometimes negative; as where a complainant grounds his right of action upon a negative allegation, and where the establishment of this negative is an essential element of his case. 1 Greenl. Ev., § 78.

29 In strictness, the burden of proof does not shift in such a case, but it is the weight of the evidence that shifts. 1 Greenl. Ev., § 74, note.

30 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., § 81.

31 Facts from which inferences are drawn are termed “evidentiary” facts; the facts inferred are termed “ultimate” or “principal” facts. McKelvey on Ev., 8.
Presumptions are of two kinds: presumptions of law and presumptions of fact. 1. Presumptions of law are rules which, in certain cases, either forbid, or dispense with, any proof as to the truth, or falsity, of the fact presumed. 2. Presumptions of fact are inferences of the existence of some fact not otherwise proved, deduced from the existence of other facts which have been proved: these inferences being such as the common sense and common experience of mankind show to be the facts usually occurring in such cases.

Presumptions are either conclusive or disputable. Conclusive presumptions will yield to no proof, however strong; but disputable presumptions may be overcome by proof. As illustrations of conclusive presumptions of law may be mentioned: 1, that every one knows the criminal law; 2, that every sane man contemplates the probable consequences of his own acts; and 3, that every one has knowledge of a deed duly registered.

Disputable presumptions of law are prima facie proof of the fact, and throw the burden of proof on the party disputing them. As illustrations of disputable presumptions of law, the following may be mentioned: 1, that everyone is innocent of the fraud charged upon him; 2, that the possessor is the owner; 3, that the acts of persons having apparent authority are rightful; 4, that a state of facts once known to exist continues a reasonable time; 5, that all children are legitimate; 6, that all persons are sane; 7, that everyone over seven years of age is competent to testify; 8, that everyone who has not been heard from for seven years, after due inquiry by those best informed, is dead; and 9, that a man and woman cohabiting as husband and wife are lawfully married.

The following presumptions are, also, disputable, and may be rebutted by parol evidence in Chancery: 1, that the recitals in Sheriff's deeds are correct; 2, that a receipt is correct; 3, that a resulting trust arises in favor of the person paying the consideration when the deed is taken in the name of a stranger; 4, that such a trust does not arise when the deed is taken in the name of a wife, child, or dependent; 5, that a deed absolute on its face is not a mortgage; 6, that an account stated or settled is correct; 7, that every writing fairly expresses the intention of the parties thereto; and 8, that the judgments and decrees of Courts having jurisdiction of the subject-matter are correct.

Time is a witness in Chancery that what has long been acquiesced in must originally have been founded on some right: this presumption is wholly independent of the statutes of limitation. Presumptions, also, arise from acquiescence.

§ 445. Amount of Evidence Necessary.—Civil causes are determined in accordance with the preponderance of the proofs. The party upon whom the burden of proof rests must introduce sufficient evidence to satisfy the mind of an impartial Judge that the fact he alleges is probably true. Courts proceed upon the preponderance of probabilities; and a mere preponderance of evidence, however slight, must necessarily turn the scale. If a party is charged with a great moral wrong, he may introduce evidence of his good character, and invoke the legal presumption of innocence.

There are, in almost every suit, certain presumptions of law which are in the nature of evidence, and must be overcome by evidence, before there can be even an equiponderance of evidence. These presumptions have created, what is sometimes termed, exceptions to the general rule that a mere preponderance of evidence is sufficient in civil cases. When, however, it is considered that these presumptions stand for evidence, it will be seen that they constitute no exception to the rule. Presumptions vary in cogency from the slight to the indisputable, or conclusive; but inasmuch as conclusive, or indisputable, presumptions necessarily shut out all proof, and make evidence absolutely inadmissible, it follows that only disputable presumptions of law can be met and overcome by evidence. In the absence of any other evidence, these presumptions are plenary proof of the fact presumed; and will sustain a decree as effectually as though the fact presumed had been proven by parol, or written, evidence. It follows, therefore, that when a disputable presumption of law exists in a lawsuit, it throws the burden of proof on the party who disputes the presumption. This burden varies in degree from the very weak to the very strong; presumptions, like witnesses, or other proofs, differing in cogency, some being easily overcome, and others being almost conclusive.

When, therefore, we read in the books that, in various cases, such as suits to reform writings, to set up a resulting trust, to have a deed declared a mortgage, and the like, a mere preponderance of evidence will not suffice, nothing more is meant than that a mere preponderance of evidence on the side of the complainant will not overcome the defendant's evidence, reinforced, as the latter is, by a presumption of law in favor of the writing assailed. If, however, the complainant's evidence outweighs both the presumption and the other evidence in favor of the defendant, then the complainant has made out his case, even though the preponderance in his favor be very slight; and this is true, whatever the character of the suit, and howsoever strong the presumption to be overcome. In ascertaining the preponderance of evidence, in any case where a presumption exists, such presumption will equal in weight so much of the adverse evidence as is necessary to neutralize the presumption.

It may, therefore, be laid down as a general rule, without exception, that treating presumptions as evidence, the complainant will be entitled to a decree when he makes out his case by a preponderance of evidence, however slight.

In this connection, it must not be forgotten that there are presumptions in the complainant's favor, as well as presumptions against him; and when a presumption arises in favor of the complainant, it throws the burden of the proof on the defendant, as to the fact presumed.

§ 446. The Probative Force of Court Records.—A Court record is some-

49 Disputable presumptions of law are witnesses; and, like other witnesses, vary in probative force, from very weak to very strong. All disputable presumptions are based on the probabilities of the happening of the thing presumed. If the probabilities are weak, the presumption is proportionately weak; if they are strong, the presumption is proportionately strong. But these probabilities have no reference to the particular fact presumed; they have reference to the happening of such a fact, as a rule, that is, generally, or in a majority of cases; and, because it happens that way generally, or in a majority of cases, we infer, in the absence of contrary proof, that it has happened that way in the particular case in question; and this general inference is a presumption, and is sufficient proof of the fact presumed, when there is no sufficient actual evidence to the contrary. Presumptio ex eo quod plurumque sit. (A presumption arises from that which happens very often.)

50 The presumption in favor of the correctness of a writing may be greatly weakened by interlineations, erasures, bad penmanship, gross illiteracy, or other defects upon its face not fully explained, and also, by circumstances of secrecy, haste, collateral or imposition attending its execution.

51 Stone v. Manning, 19 Pick., 232, citing the above section of this book, then § 447.

53 Supposing that 100 chances (the whole number) equals certainty, then any number of chances less than 50 equals possibility, and any number more than 50 equals probability. The nearer the number of chances that an allegation is true approaches 50, the nearer the possibility of its truth approaches probability; and the nearer the number of chances, over 50, approaches 100, the nearer the probability of its truth approaches certainty. Thus, the possible gradually takes on the color and substance of the probable as the number of chances of the allegation being true increases; and when that number reaches 51 out of the 100, then the possible is merged into the probable; and as the number of chances that the allegation is true increases from 51 to 100, so the probable takes on the color and substance of the certain; and when the number of chances reaches 100, then the probable is merged into the certain. In Court, whenever the complainant shows by proof that there are over 50 chances out of the 100 that his contention is true, then his contention is probable, and he is entitled to have it considered proved, and entitled to a decree accordingly. When over 50 out of the 100 chances thus favor any proposition there arises a presumption or inference that the proposition is true.
times offered in evidence to show what one or the other of the parties stated in his pleading, or in some affidavit or deposition in the cause, and is then used mainly for purposes of contradiction or of estoppel. But the probative force of a Court record is, ordinarily, contained in the judgment or decree. A judgment or decree imports absolutely verity, and is conclusive on the parties, and on all claiming under them; and when offered in evidence cannot be assailed or discredited by proof outside of the record containing it; but, if attacked at all, must be attacked because of some infirmity appearing in the record itself, or by another decree declaring it to be void.

As to their efficacy and probative force, judgments and decrees are of three sorts:

1. Valid Judgments and Decrees, being those based on jurisdiction of both the subject-matter and the person, and justified by the pleadings and proofs, or the consent of the parties: they are proof against direct attacks by appeals or writ of error, or by bill in Chancery, and, of course, also, against collateral attacks.

2. Voidable Judgments and Decrees, being those which are valid on their face, and, therefore, proof against collateral attack, but are reversible on direct attack by appeal or writ of error, or by bill in Chancery.

3. Void Judgments and Decrees, being those that appear on the face of the record itself to have been rendered without jurisdiction of the parties or the subject-matter, or without being justified by the pleadings, or the consent of parties. Void judgments have no efficacy or probative force, and yield to collateral attack.

In a valid decree, the Court has jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, and the decree is justified by the pleadings, or by the consent of the parties, such consent appearing in the record. In a voidable decree, the record falsely shows jurisdiction of parties and subject-matter, or such consent, if the decree is at variance with the pleadings, no fatal infirmity being disclosed in the record itself; and this is why it is invulnerable to collateral attack. Whereas, a record containing a void decree discloses its fatal infirmity on its face, shows a want of jurisdiction of parties or subject-matter, or a decree at variance with the pleadings and not consented to by the parties in interest.

§ 447. Amount of Evidence Necessary to Vary, or Annul, Writings or Records. In all civil suits, in the absence of a statute prescribing the quantum of proof, a preponderance of probabilities prevails, however slight such preponderance may be. It is sometimes said that to vary, reform, or rescind, a settled or stated account, or a written instrument, or a judgment or decree of a Court, on the ground of fraud, accident, or mistake, or to have a deed declared a mortgage, or to set up a trust, by parol evidence, such evidence must be of the clearest and most convincing nature; but, if the writing, or decree, itself, be considered a witness, and is given the degree of probative force to which it imports absolutely verity, such a decree, while correctible in the Supreme Court, is absolutely impregnable to attack when offered in evidence. A collateral attack on evidence. On a collateral attack no evidence can be looked at, whether it is in the record or out of it. The decree is judged of by the pleadings, process and its own contents; and, unless these show that the decree is void, it is valid in every Court when offered in evidence. Kindell v. Thus, 9 Heisk., 727; Campbell v. Bryant, 2 Shan. Cas. 146; Freeman on Judgments, §§ 120; 124.

55 If a statute prescribes the quantum of proof, the Court varies, or annuls, the fact on less evidence than that prescribed. Simmons v. Leonard, 7 Pick., 194. Thus deeds and wills of reality and agreements within the statute of frauds, must be proved as prescribed by the statute.

is entitled under all the circumstances, then the general rule of preponderance of probabilities will prevail.57 When relations of trust and confidence exist between the parties to a written instrument, and in cases where the parties do not deal upon an equality, less proof is needed to overcome the writing, or decree.58

In a suit to set up a resulting trust, if the money is proved to have been paid by A, and the legal title is taken in the name of a stranger, the Court will presume a resulting trust in favor of A; but if the title be taken to a wife, child, or other person for whom A is morally bound to provide, the Court will presume that it was a provision, advancement, or gift: either of these presumptions will, however, yield to satisfactory contrary proof.59

§ 448. Fraud Proved by Circumstances.—Fraud is seldom established by direct and positive proof, and such proof is not necessary. Generally, the first effort of a man, who intends to commit a fraud, is to throw a veil over the transaction, to conceal it from discovery, to baffle all attempts at detection, and to shield it against attack. No man willingly furnishes the proof of his own turpitude. Fraud is, for this reason, rarely perpetrated openly and in broad daylight. It is committed in secret, and is usually hedged about by every guard that can be devised to prevent its discovery and exposure. Its path is crooked and circuitous, its footprints are carefully covered up, the signs of its operations are diligently removed, or attempted to be removed, and the mask of honesty and good faith is put over the face of the real transaction. For these reasons, fraud is usually proved by circumstantial evidence.60

In consequence of the abhorrence with which fraud is regarded by Courts of Conscience, in consequence of the heinousness of the offence, and, in consequence of the artifices, devices and coverings used to conceal it, and to baffle detection, a wide range of evidence is allowed in proving its existence; and Courts of Equity do not restrict themselves by the same rigid rules that Courts of law do, in the investigation of fraud, and in the evidence and proofs required to establish it.61

Fraud assumes many shapes, disguises and subterfuges, and is generally so secretly hatched that it can only be detected by a consideration of facts and circumstances, which are frequently trivial, remote and disconnected, and which cannot be interpreted without bringing them together, and contemplating them all in one view. In order to do this it is necessary to pick one fact or circumstance here, another there, and a third yonder, until the collection is complete. Each detached piece of evidence is not, therefore, to be rejected when offered, because apparently trivial. A wide latitude of evidence is allowed; and if a fact or circumstance relates directly, or indirectly, to the transaction, it is admissible, however weak or slight it may be, its relevance depending, not upon its weight or force, but upon its bearing or tendency.62

See Article on Fraudulent Conveyances, post, §§ 1009- 1017. Smith v. Harrison, 2 Heisk., 243. In charging the jury, in the case of Floyd v. Goodwin, 8 Yerg., 490, the Circuit Judge said: "In most instances, the evidence of fraud must be gathered more from the circumstances attending the transaction, than upon tangible proof; such things are not generally told or done openly." Lord Coke says, it is hatched in secret; and another great man has gone further, and says, It is hatched in the hollow of a tree. It, therefore, has to be ferreted out by carefully following its marks and signs; for fraud will, in most instances, though never so artfully and secretly contrived, like the snail in its naasae, leave its slime, by which it may be traced." This charge was sustained by the Supreme Court, and has often been quoted approvingly. Harris v. Smith, 2 Cold. 308. Fraud is usually hatched in secret, in arbore cava et opaca. Bump, Fraud. Conv., 31.61 Sto. Eq. Jur., § 190; Bump, Fraud. Conv., 579; Wait on Fraud. Conv., § 281.62 Bump, Fraud. Conv., 579; 1 Wharton on Ev., § 35, note. The proof of fraud, usually, consists of many items of evidence, which, standing detached and alone, would be immaterial; but which, in connection with others, tend to illustrate, and shed light upon, the character of the transaction, and show the position of the parties, and their motives, conduct, and relation to each other. Qua singula non prostat, jura jura. Circumstances may stamp upon a transaction the indelible marks of fraud, and are quite as reliable as positive evidence. Bump, Fraud. Conv., 601. The evidences of fraud are often so intangible and indistinct yet so convincing that Chancellors are said sometimes to smell it rather than see it.
Issues of fact in civil cases are determined by a preponderance of testimony, and the rule applies as well to cases in which fraud is imputed as to any other; and if the evidence is of sufficient force to produce a preponderance of assent in favor of the allegation of fraud, that is all that the law requires, and the fraud will be deemed proved, although there be some doubt of its existence.63

The Court of Chancery is the arch enemy of fraud; and to that Court those who are the victims of bad faith generally apply for redress, not only because the Chancery Court can grant more perfect relief, but, also, because it will often grant that relief upon weaker presumptive evidence than will a Court of law.64 Where the Court can pronounce a decree that will place each of the parties in substantially as good a condition as they were in respectively at the time the alleged fraud was committed, it will act upon less evidence than would ordinarily be required to support a verdict.65

§ 449. When Fraud Will be Presumed.—It is often said, that fraud will not be presumed;66 by this nothing more is meant than that fraud will not be presumed merely because it is alleged.67 When, however, certain states of facts are once shown to exist, a presumption of fraud will arise sufficiently strong to throw on the defendant the burden of proving that there was nothing fraudulent, or inequitable, in the transaction sought to be impeached.68 Among these states of facts, the following are the most common:

1. Where Confidence Has Been Violated. When an advantageous conveyance, contract, or gift, is obtained from another by a person standing to him in a relation of trust and confidence, as in case of advantageous conveyances, contracts, and gifts, obtained by guardians from wards, attorneys from clients, trustees from beneficiaries, agents from principals, parents from their children, physicians from patients, priests from parishioners, the trusted from the trusting, in any and all such cases, on the relationship and advantage being proved, fraud will be presumed.69

2. Where a Trustee Deals With Himself. When a person acting in a fiduciary capacity, directly or indirectly deals with himself for his private and personal benefit, as when a trustee, administrator, guardian, agent, or sheriff, sells property to himself, or makes a personal profit out of a transaction by him in his fiduciary capacity, in any and all such cases, fraud will be presumed.70

3. Where the Consideration is Shockingly Inadequate. Where the consideration paid, or promised, is so grossly inadequate as to shock the conscience, espec-

64 The rule in a Court of Chancery will presume fraud, when a Court of law will not, is this: When a Court of law finds fraud, it is incapable of restoring the parties to their original condition, and of giving to each his own: it simply destroys the contract, and often leaves the defendant poorer, and the plaintiff richer, than they were at the making of the contract; and, thus, a judgment at law will, sometimes, put the plaintiff in a better position, and the defendant in a worse position, than strict justice will justify. On the other hand, a Court of Equity, while doing full justice to the complainant, requires him to do full justice to the defendant; and when a contract is rescinded, on the ground of fraud, by a Court of Chancery, on complaint of the person defrauded, the defendant is restored to all of his original rights; and, if he has paid the complainant any money, or has otherwise prejudiced the complainant, the Court will make him whole. In short, the Chancery Court can, and will, so adjust the rights of the parties, that a rescission of the contract, on the ground of fraud, will give each of the parties all that his exact due; and, for this reason, the Court will often find fraud, on comparatively slight evidence, well knowing that such a finding can do the defendant no great harm; whereas, a failure to find fraud, would ruin the complainant. But, where parties can be placed in statu quo, the evidence of fraud should be as clear in a Court of Equity as in a Court of law.
65 Presumption and inference are sometimes confounded. Fraud can always be inferred from facts and circumstances proved; indeed, it is seldom directly proved, and is nearly always inferred. What is meant by "badges of fraud," is, certain signs by means of which fraud is inferred. See, post, § 1010.
66 Wait on Fraud, Conv., § 7.
67 See, post, § 1011.
69 Thus, the relation of confidence and trust, is, in the law of fraud, an important element. The great principle, by which Courts of Equity are governed, in such cases, is: That he who obtains an advantageous bargain, from a person placing confidence in him, is bound to show that no undue advantage was taken of that confidence; and the burden of proof is devolved on him to establish, affirmatively, the perfect fairness, adequacy, and Equity of his claims. This rule applies to parents, guardians, trustees, pastors, attorneys, physicians, and all others standing in confidential relations with those with whom they bargain. 3 Greenl. Ev., § 253. Sec. ante, § 46.
70 2 Pom. Eq. Jur., § 958; Collins v. Smith, 1 Head, 256.
ially when accompanied by other inequitable circumstances, such as (1) concealments, misrepresentations, undue advantage or oppression on the part of the person obtaining the benefit, or (2) ignorance, weakness of mind, sickness, old age, incapacity or pecuniary necessity, on the part of the other party, in such cases, fraud is presumed.\(^1\)

4. Where a Person of Weak Mind is Imposed On. Where a very advantageous bargain, or a very valuable gift, is obtained from a person of great mental weakness, especially when accompanied with other inequitable circumstances similar to those in the preceding paragraph, fraud is presumed.\(^2\)

5. Where Gifts by Debtors Injure Their Creditors. Where the debtor makes a voluntary conveyance of his estate, or of any part thereof, without leaving enough in his hands to satisfy his creditors, fraud is presumed.\(^3\) Equity requires a man to be just before it allows him to be generous.

6. Where Property is Held in Trust for an Insolvent Debtor. Where a debtor, against whom an execution has been returned unsatisfied, has property, or money, held in trust for him, fraud is presumed, except where the consideration proceeded from a third person, and the trust is evidenced by will duly recorded, or deed duly registered.\(^4\)

7. Where Misrepresentations Have Misled. When the misrepresentations made by the defendant were of such a character as would naturally induce any ordinary person to act upon them, and the complainant did act upon them to his detriment, then the defendant will be presumed to have made the misrepresentation to induce the complainant so to act.\(^5\)

§ 450. Inspection in Aid of Proof.—Although Courts of Chancery determine every matter by written or printed evidence, nevertheless, when the subject-matter of the evidence can be readily produced in Court, and is of a character to elucidate the evidence, the Chancellor will order the production of such subjects before him, for his better satisfaction as to the truth.\(^6\) Thus, he will (1) order an infant to be produced in Court for satisfactory proof of its existence, age, and discretion; or, (2) will order an original document, or book, to be produced, in order to ascertain its genuineness, and integrity, or its age, or meaning, or precise state, and character; or, (3) will require models, machines, and patented articles to be brought into Court, especially when a comparison becomes important; and, (4) where the subject is immovable;\(^7\) or, (5) where the inspection of the inside of a house, or of a room, or of a lot or tract of land, is necessary to enable the party out of possession to make proper proof, the Court will order the party in possession to permit an inspection by witnesses.\(^8\)

§ 451. What Matters the Chancellor Cannot Consider.—Solicitors are sometimes not clear as to what matters a Chancellor can or cannot consider, in determining the facts of a case; and the following general rules are given on this subject:

1. Evidence as to Matters Not Alleged in the Pleadings cannot be considered by the Chancellor,\(^9\) no matter how good a cause of action they indicate, or how strong a defense they present. The Chancellor can no more make a decree on proof not justified by the pleadings than on pleadings not justified by the proof.\(^10\)

\(^10\) A decree must stand on two feet, one foot supported by the pleadings, the other foot by the proof. A decree on proof alone is coram non judice, and void. See, post, § 555, note 4.
§ 452  WHEN PROOF IS NECESSARY.

2. His Own Knowledge of the Facts cannot be considered by the Chancellor, any more than a juror can take into consideration his own personal knowledge of facts pertinent to the case. Every suit must be determined on the facts found in the record of the cause. The Chancellor's private knowledge of facts is the knowledge of the man, and not the knowledge of the officer.\textsuperscript{81} Were the rule otherwise, the Chancellor might decide the case on a state of facts that would not appear in the transcript on appeal, and would, therefore, be unknown to the Supreme Court.

3. His Own Knowledge of the Character of a Witness cannot be regarded by him. If the party most concerned is content to allow a man of bad reputation to testify, without proving his reputation, it is not for the Chancellor to impeach the witness by his own private knowledge of his character. On the other hand, the Chancellor cannot prefer the testimony of a witness, because of his personal knowledge of his integrity. The tests of a witness’ credibility must be found in his deposition, or elsewhere in the record.

4. That One of the Parties is Poor, or is a Woman, or is Unfortunate, is a matter that the Chancellor cannot consider. As a man, he may and must commiserate the poor and the unfortunate; but if, as a Judge, he took such matters into consideration, he would not only sink the Judge into the man, but would be guilty of deciding the cause according to favor and affection. Such conduct would not only be grossly partial, but would savor of corruption and oppression. A Judge is sworn to determine causes by his head, and by a cool head at that, and not by the sympathies of his heart.\textsuperscript{82}

5. What Does Not Appear in the Record Does Not Exist, so far as the Court is Concerned,\textsuperscript{83} except as to matters that are judicially known; and this fundamental rule has no exceptions, and it includes the three rules already given. Nor should the Chancellor allow a Solicitor in his argument to allude to matters not in the record; such allusions necessarily imply that the Solicitor either does not know his own duty; or thinks that the Chancellor does not know his, and can be swayed by undue influences.

ARTICLE II.
WHEN PROOF IS, AND IS NOT, NECESSARY.

§ 452. What Need Not be Proved.
§ 453. When Evidence by the Complainant is Not Necessary.
§ 454. When Evidence by the Defendant is Not Necessary.

§ 455. What Facts are in Issue.
§ 456. What is in Issue Upon a Plea.
§ 457. What is in Issue Upon an Answer.

§ 452. What Need Not be Proved.—Often a great deal of unnecessary evidence is injected into the record of a litigation. To aid the inexperienced Solicitor in determining what need not be proved, the following summary of rules is given:

1. Whatever is Not Put in Issue by the Pleadings Need Not be Proved. Evidence as to matters not in issue is immaterial, irrelevant, impertinent, and illegal: the Court will reject such evidence on objection being made to it; and will dis-

\textsuperscript{81}Non referit quid notum sit iudici, si notum non sit in forma iudicis. See, ante, § 62, sub-sec., 1.
\textsuperscript{82}The Judge is sworn "to administer justice without respect of persons, and impartially to discharge all the duties incumbent on him, as a Judge, to the best of his skill and ability." Code, § 309. Hence, a Judge cannot have "respect of persons," whether they be male or female, rich or poor, friends or foes; and he must decide controversies "to the best of his skill and ability," and not according to the sympathies of his heart or the inclinations of his feelings. If his heart prompt him to aid the unfortunate, let him do so by contributing from his own pocketbook, and not by forcing a litigant to contribute.
regard it, as mere worthless rubbish, if not objected to. The sole object of evidence is to prove what the pleadings show to be in dispute, and thus enable the Court to determine the controversy. No decree can be based on evidence as to matters not alleged in the pleadings.

2. What is Judicially Known to the Court Need Not be Proved. This judicial knowledge includes our form of government, National and State; the Constitution and public laws of the United States, and of our own State; the general officers of these two governments; the main facts in the public history of the two governments; the main geographical facts of the United States, and of this State; the subdivisions of the State, its counties, towns, rivers, and general geography; the officials of the county where the Court is sitting; the religion and general customs of the people; their language and the meaning of words; the rules of grammar and arithmetic; and a great multitude of other matters, which every well-informed citizen of the State is presumed to know.

3. Whatever is Admitted in the Pleadings, Expressly or by Necessary Implication, Need Not be Proved. If a defendant confesses and avoids, the complainant need not prove his cause of action; he must confine his efforts to resisting the defence set up. What a plea does not deny it admits, by necessary implication; and the complainant need concern himself only as to the issue raised by the plea.

4. Whatever is Admitted by Written Agreement of the Parties Need Not be Proved. Such admissions are absolutely conclusive, and partake of the nature of solemn admissions of record. Neither will the Court hear evidence to explain, or vary, such an agreement.

§ 453. When Evidence by the Complainant is Not Necessary.—No evidence is necessary to sustain the bill:

1. Where the bill has been taken for confessed against an adult defendant, not non compos, who has been served with subpoena, or who has voluntarily entered his appearance, or who has been brought into Court by attachment of his property and publication.

2. Where the answer confesses the Equity of the bill, and sets up new matter in avoidance of that Equity. But after the matter in defence is proved, the complainant must rebut it.

3. Where the foundation of the suit is a written contract, note, or other instrument, and the execution thereof is not denied under oath.

§ 454. When Evidence by the Defendant is Not Necessary.—The defendant is not required to make any proof:

1. Where no relief is prayed against him; as where he is made a party because an officer of the law having process, or is made a defendant as officer of a corporation whose sworn answer is called for, or is made a party as a mere agent, or otherwise, no decree being sought against him.

2. Where he disclaims, and no attempt is made to show that he has been setting up any claim to the property involved in the suit, or exercising any acts of ownership over it.

3. Where he has denied the material allegations of the bill, and none of them have been sustained by proof.

4. Where, though some relief may be prayed against him, he does not seek

2 Shaw v. Patterson, 2 Tenn. Ch., 171; Henderson v. Birmingham, 12 Heisk., 58; Rogers v. Breen, 9 Heisk., 679; Bedford v. Williams, 5 Cold., 207. But in the Chancery Court, it is not necessary in order to put a matter in issue that it shall be alleged by one party and denied by the other, for a matter in avoidance alleged in the answer is in issue, as is a matter alleged in the bill and neither denied nor admitted in the answer.
3 Quod constat Curia obere testium non indiet. (What is known [judicially] to the Court needs not the aid of witnesses.)
4 But the laws of another State must be proved, as any other fact, or they will be presumed to be the same as the laws of our own State. Bagwell v. McTighe, 1 Pick., 618; Templeton v. Brown, 2 Pick., 53. Præsumitur Judex habere omnis jura in civibus pectoris sui. (A Judge is presumed to have all the laws in the book-case of his breast.)

to dispute the complainant’s right thereto, and is willing he may have the relief he prays.

5. When he has, by his answer, admitted the material allegations of the bill, or the bill has been taken for confessed by him. In the latter case, however, if the bill pray an account, the defendant may, and should, introduce his evidence before the Master at the taking of the account.\(^8\)

§ 455. What Facts are in Issue.—The object of pleadings is, (1) to notify the opposite party what matters will be offered in evidence; and (2) to inform the Court what matters are submitted to its adjudication. It is, therefore, (1) a fundamental rule of pleading that no facts are in issue, unless they are alleged in the pleadings; and (2) it is a fundamental rule of evidence that no proof is admissible, unless it relates to the facts alleged in the pleadings.\(^9\) The Court cannot notice matter, however clearly proved, unless it be alleged in the pleadings; and omissions in the allegations of the bill cannot be supplied by evidence.\(^10\)

It may be laid down as an indisputable proposition, that whatever facts are necessary to entitle a complainant to a decree, or to enable the defendant to sustain the defence in avoidance by him set up, must be proved, unless they are admitted by the other party.\(^12\) In strictness, any fact alleged by one side and admitted by the other, in their respective pleadings, is not in issue, and need not be proved, whether the admission be express, or constructive.\(^13\) Any matter alleged in the bill, and neither admitted nor denied in the answer, must be proved.\(^14\)

§ 456. What is in Issue upon a Plea.—A plea in bar admits every material allegation of the bill not covered by the plea. This is necessarily so from the fact that the complainant is entitled to an answer to every allegation and charge contained in the bill; and so much of the bill as the defendant does not dispute by his plea, is deemed admitted, for all the purposes of the issue made by the plea.\(^15\) On the argument of a plea in bar, every fact stated in the bill, and not denied by the averments in the plea, and by the supporting answer, if any, must be taken as true;\(^16\) and so, when a replication is filed to a plea, the complainant need not prove the truth of such of his allegations as are not denied by the plea. The only facts in issue, and on which proof need be taken, are those put in issue by the plea. Thus, if the statute of frauds is pleaded to a bill for a specific performance, the agreement not being alleged in the bill to be in writing, nothing is in issue except the existence of a written agreement, the balance of the bill being admitted. So, if such a bill allege the agreement to be in writing, and a negative plea is filed denying that allegation, the only matter in issue is whether the agreement is, in fact, in writing, all the other facts alleged in the bill being admitted. Hence, the rule may be laid down that on the trial of a plea in bar, nothing is in issue but the truth of the plea; if the plea be affirmative, the burden of proof is on the defendant; if the plea be negative, the burden of proof is on the complainant.\(^17\)

\(^9\) Gres. Eq. Ev., 229. Mr. Gresley says that all evidence is impertinent when it relates to (1) matters not in issue; (2) matters admitted in the pleadings; (3) matters that are immaterial, and (4) matters that are needlessly prolix. Ibid, 229-246.
\(^11\) Shaw v. Patterson, 3 Tenn. Ch., 174; Woodward v. Walton, 7 Heisk., 50. The failure of the bill to set up matters in avoidance of a defence cannot be cured by proof. The proper practice is to amend the bill and allege the matters in avoidance. See ante, § 147.

\(^14\) Smith v. St. Louis M. L. Ins. Co., 2 Tenn. Ch., 603, and cases there cited; Bank v. Jefferson, 8 Pick., 537; Nichols v. Cecil, 22 Pick., 455. In some of the States, all facts well alleged in the bill, and not denied, or explained, in the answer, are deemed admitted. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 837, note 4. This is the rule in our Circuit Courts. Code, § 2910; and it is the true rule. The holding of our Supreme Court to the contrary is unfortunate, when the oath of the defendant is waived; because (1) it, without reason, makes the law of pleading in Chancery different from that in the Circuit Court; (2) it violates a fundamental rule of pleading; and (3) it encourages imperfect and evasive answers. An unsworn answer is a mere pleading, and the rule of pleading in the Code, § 2910, should be applied to it.

WHEN PROOF IS NECESSARY. § 457

So, on a plea in abatement: if the plea brings forward new matter, nothing is in issue but the truth of the new matter; in which case the burden of proof is on the defendant: if the plea in abatement deny some allegation of fact in the bill, the truth of that allegation is the only matter in issue; and, on that issue, the burden of proof rests on the complainant. And, in general, it may be stated that the rules applicable to the frame, form and proof, of pleas in bar, affirmative and negative, apply to the frame, form and proof of pleas in abatement, affirmative and negative.

The admission of the truth of so much of the bill as is not denied by the plea, or by the plea and supporting answer, when such answer is filed, is called a constructive admission. 18

§ 457. What is in Issue upon an Answer.—When a bill has been answered, every material fact, alleged in the bill and not admitted by the answer, is in issue. At law, every fact alleged in the declaration, and not denied in the plea is taken as true; 19 but in Chancery, every allegation of fact in the bill not admitted or denied in the answer, must be proved, the failure to admit or deny being equivalent to a denial. 20

It is a fundamental rule in Chancery, as in the courts of law, that no evidence will be admitted in reference to any matter not noticed in either the bill, or the answer. 21 For this reason, if a complainant proves a case outside of the pleadings, such proof will not entitle him to any decree; and if, on the other hand, the defendant proves a defence, outside of the issues raised by the pleadings, such a defence will not profit him, 22 except the defence be that of champerty.

If the defence consists in a denial of the material allegations of the bill, then the truth of those allegations is the main issue, and the burden of proof is on the complainant; if the defence consists of matters in avoidance, then the truth of those matters is the main issue, and the burden of proof is on the defendant. 23

It must be kept in mind, however, that evidence of particular facts may be given under an allegation of the general fact; thus, where the character of an individual, or his general behavior, or the state of his mind, is charged generally, evidence of particular facts and acts, bearing directly on the charge, may be proved. 24 The rule that no evidence will be admitted in support of facts not mentioned in the pleadings, does not require that the evidence containing those facts should be mentioned, nor does it require that the materials, of which those facts consist, should be detailed in the pleadings. 26 And if the facts and circumstances which constitute a ground of relief be stated, these may be proved, although the ground of relief be not designated in technical language. 26

18 Ibid.
19 Code, § 2910.
21 This subject will be found fully considered in the Chapters on Bills and Answers; and the reason of the rule there given, requiring parties to allege in their pleadings every matter they expect to prove. Ante, §§ 140-142; 358. The very object of pleading is to inform the Court of what the charges and the defences are; and to notify the opposite side what facts he must meet.
22 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 853. Sappington v. Rutherford, 3 Hay., 271. In such cases, the Court will, sometimes, allow the pleadings to be amended, so as to set out the facts. See Article on Amendments.
23 But, if the complainant sets up matters in avoidance of an anticipated defence, and such defence is made, then, as to such matters, the burden of proof is on the complainant. Jenkins v. DeWar, 4 Cates, 684; Gross v. Disney, 11 Pick., 592; Sully v. Childress, 22 Pick., 109. See, ante, § 147.

26 Weatherhead v. Boyer, 7 Yerg., 545; Bartee v. Tompkins, 4 Sneed, 624; Cunningham v. Wood, 4 Hum., 417; Cox v. Waggoner, 5 Sneed, 543. Indeed, it is always safe pleading to set out the facts on which the pleader relies, whether the pleading be a bill, a plea, or an answer.
§ 458. Admissions in the Bill.—The facts, positively and directly alleged in the bill, are in the nature of admissions by the complainant; and the defendant may use them as such at the hearing. Whether such allegations are true, or not, is immaterial, they being put forth as true are of the nature of judicial admissions, for the purposes of that particular trial. If, however, an amended bill has been filed correcting, or changing, any of the facts alleged in the original bill, the original bill cannot be read against the complainant, in so far as it has been changed, or corrected, by the amended bill. Where damaging admissions are inadvertently made in a bill, especially in a bill not required to be sworn to, the Court will, on proper application, allow the bill to be so amended as to omit, or avoid, or explain, the injurious admission.

§ 459. Admissions in the Answer.—All admissions in an answer, whether the answer is under oath or not, are conclusive against the defendant; and may be read against him as evidence at the hearing, whether the facts admitted are on his own personal knowledge, or merely on information and belief. What a defendant states in his answer, on information only, will not be deemed an admission; but if he answers that he "believes," or is "informed and believes," that the fact is so, this will be deemed a sufficient admission of the fact, in the absence of qualifying or contrary clauses; for, the general rule is, that what the defendant believes the Court will believe.

The answer of one defendant cannot be read against a co-defendant, unless such co-defendant claims through him whose answer is proposed to be read, or is a partner, or jointly interested in the transaction in question, or they are otherwise identified in interest; or, unless the answer is adopted, in whole or in part, by the defendant against whom it is read.

§ 460. The Answer when Evidence for the Defendant.—When the complainant makes the defendant a witness, by calling for his answer on oath, such answer is not only evidence in favor of the complainant in so far as it admits the allegations of the bill, but it is, also, evidence in favor of the defendant, in so far as it directly and positively denies such allegations, or is otherwise responsive to the bill. The general rule is, that such an answer is evidence in so far as it is directly responsive to the allegations and charges made in the bill; and if it directly and positively denies the material allegations and charges of the complainant, his bill must be dismissed; unless he can overcome the answer.

4 3 Greenl. Ev., § 283; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 841; Turner v. Collier, 4 Heisk., 95. But see Sawyers v. Sawyers, 22 Pick., 597, which holds that the answer of one defendant cannot be read against a co-defendant claiming under him when he had transferred the property or interest before he filed his answer.
5 The test of the responsiveness of an answer is: Was the response one directly called for by the bill. If so, it is responsive; if not so, it is not responsive.

If the bill propounds an interrogatory, or makes a charge, and calls on the defendant to answer it, if the answer give the precise information called for, in whole, or in part, or directly and positively admits or denies the charge, it is responsive. If the answer is, in effect, "yes, but," or "no, but," it is responsive in so far as it admits, or denies, but not responsive as to the "but," excuses, explanations, and avoidances, these not having been called for. The complainant must take what he called for, but cannot be compelled to take what he did not call for. The defendant must make out his part of the suit for himself.
(1) by the testimony of two witnesses to the substantial facts, or (2) by one witness and corroborating circumstances, or (3) by circumstances of greater weight than the evidence of one witness; or (4) by documentary evidence of greater weight than one witness. These corroborating circumstances may be found in the answer itself, or in the evidence in the cause, the corroboration requisite being only so much as may be necessary to produce a clear preponderance of proof in favor of the complainant.

When issues are submitted to a jury, a sworn answer may be read as evidence on behalf of the defendant; in which case it will be given the same weight it would be entitled to if the issues of fact were submitted to the decision of the Chancellor.

The Weight of a Sworn Answer, as Evidence, is ascertained by the same rules as are applicable to a deposition, as evidence; and if it contain elements that impair, or destroy, its effect as credible testimony, it may be overcome by one witness. The rule, that a sworn answer is equal to one credible witness, does not prevail:

1. Where the answer makes new averments, or brings forward matters in avoidance, or discharge.
2. Where the answer is unreasonable, or contradictory in itself, or sets forth circumstances corroborative of the bill.
3. Where the answer is not direct, positive and unequivocal in its denials, or explanations.
4. Where the answer is on information and belief.
5. Where the answer itself shows, or it is apparent from the defendant’s situation, or condition, that, though the answer is positive, he swears to matters of which he could not have personal knowledge.

But the weight of the answer as evidence for the defendant is not to be lessened because he is an interested party; nor can the complainant assail the character of the defendant in order to weaken the effect of his answer.

§ 461. The Answer when Not Evidence for the Defendant.—The rule that an answer is evidence for the defendant has several exceptions, besides those referred to in the preceding section, the most important of which are the following:

1. When the Oath of the Defendant is Waived by the complainant in his bill, the answer is entitled to no more weight than the bill as evidence. In such a case, the answer merely makes an issue.
2. Answer of a Corporation merely creates an issue, even when sworn to by one of its officers.
3. Answer in a Divorce Suit, though sworn to, merely creates an issue, both by operation of the statute, and because of the fact that the bill, also, is required to be under oath.
4. Whenever the Law Requires a Bill to be Sworn to, as in case of an injunction bill, then a sworn answer thereto merely creates an issue, and one credible witness will be sufficient to overturn the denials in the answer.\footnote{The reason of this rule would seem to include bills for attachments, ne exact, and the appointment of receivers, as well as in case of bills for injunctions. It has not been so expressly adjudged. The decisions all refer to injunction bills. The reason of this rule is, that where both bill and answer are sworn to, the oath of the complainant neutralizes the oath of the defendant. Scarry v. Pannell, Cooke, 110; McLeod v. Linnville, 10 Hum., 163; Boyd v. Reed, 6 Heisk., 631; Trabue v. Turner, 10 Heisk., 447; Montgomery v. Rich., 3 Tenn. Ch., 664. It seems, however, that if a bill required to be under oath, is not based upon the personal knowledge of the complainant, but merely upon information and belief, and the answer is direct and positive, and on the personal knowledge of the defendant, one witness only will not overcome such an answer. Spurlock v. Pukes, 1 Swan., 289. The report of this case contains several misprints. The sentence referred to (pp. 290-291) should read: "Near the close of the opinion, should be "received." Carrick v. Prater, 10 Hum., 270.}{19}

5. Answer of an Infant, or of a Person of Unsound Mind, though called for on oath and sworn to, cannot be read as evidence against them. The answers of infants, and persons of unsound mind, are generally framed and sworn to by their regular guardians, or their guardians ad litem; and the Court will not hold them bound by any admissions such guardians may make, and will often order damaging admissions to be stricken out of their answers. As a rule, the answer of an infant, or non compos, merely makes an issue of fact on every material allegation of the bill affecting such defendant.\footnote{The answer of a married woman, however, may be read against her, if she is not an infant, or of unsound mind.}{20}

6. When the Answer Sets up Matter in Avoidance it is not evidence for the defendant, as to such matter, because he is not a witness, except in so far as he is required to answer. When, therefore, he sets forth in his answer matters in avoidance, or other matters not referred to in the bill, to that extent his answer is not responsive, and not therefore, a deposition, but a mere pleading.\footnote{Hence, matters in avoidance set up in an answer must be proved by the defendant; and, if he fail to prove them, the complainant will be entitled to a decree.}{21}

7. When an Answer Required to be on Oath is not properly sworn to it only makes an issue.\footnote{If, on the other hand, a sworn bill is full, clear and emphatic, and the sworn answer thereto merely creates an issue, and one credible witness will be sufficient to overturn the denials in the answer.}

8. When a Complainant Answers the Petition of an intervening creditor, his answer merely makes an issue.\footnote{§ 462. When the Bill is Evidence in Behalf of the Complainant.—Ordinarily, a bill is a mere pleading, but, when it is required by statute, or the practice of the Court, to be sworn to, it partakes of the nature of an affidavit, and has a probative character. Thus a sworn bill, with proper allegations, will justify a writ of injunction, attachment, ne exact or replevin, or the appointment of a receiver, or administrator, or guardian ad litem, or a publication to bring the defendant before the Court, the bill in such case being regarded both as a pleading and an affidavit. Ordinarily, a bill when fully met by a sworn answer must be overcome by two witnesses, or by one witness and corroborating circumstances, for the sworn answer has the force of a deposition. 8. When a Complainant Answers the Petition of an intervening creditor, his answer merely makes an issue.\footnote{Ordinarily, a bill is a mere pleasing, but, when it is required by statute, or the practice of the Court, to be sworn to, it partakes of the nature of an affidavit, and has a probative character. Thus a sworn bill, with proper allegations, will justify a writ of injunction, attachment, ne exact or replevin, or the appointment of a receiver, or administrator, or guardian ad litem, or a publication to bring the defendant before the Court, the bill in such case being regarded both as a pleading and an affidavit. Ordinarily, a bill when fully met by a sworn answer must be overcome by two witnesses, or by one witness and corroborating circumstances, for the sworn answer has the force of a deposition. But if the bill is one required to be sworn to, and is sworn to, it also, has the force of a deposition, and thus neutralizes the probative force of the answer; it is witness against witness. While this is generally true, nevertheless if the sworn bill be weak and indefinite, or general, in its allegations, or its allegations be sworn to on information and belief, and especially if sworn to by some one not appearing to know the facts, its probative force is greatly impaired. And so with the answer. If, on the other hand, a sworn bill be full, clear and emphatic, and the sworn answer thereto merely creates an issue, and one credible witness will be sufficient to overturn the denials in the answer.}
§ 463. Steps Preliminary to the Taking of Proof.—As soon as the issue of fact is made, each party should narrowly scrutinize the pleadings in order to ascertain (1) exactly what matters are in issue, and (2) on whom the burden of proof rests, and (3) in what event, and how, such burden may be cast upon the other side. The parties must consider not only what must be proved by each of them, respectively, but, also, how the proof is to be made.

The complainant should consider whether he can risk setting the cause for hearing, on bill and answer; or whether he had better except to the answer, for insufficiency: if he have a pro confesso he should consider whether such pro confesso is a confession of the bill, or only makes an issue of fact.

The defendant should remember that if his defence is in avoidance, the burden of proof rests upon him, and not upon the complainant. All parties should be diligent in getting in their evidence, and keep in mind that the cause stands for hearing at the first term after answer filed.

§ 464. When a Cause is at Issue.—A cause is at issue for the taking of proof whenever a plea or answer has been filed to the bill by all of the defendants, or a pro confesso has been entered against those not pleading or answering, and a replication has been filed to the plea in case a plea is filed, or twenty days have elapsed since answer filed. The issue usually consists of an allegation of a fact or facts by one party and a denial of such allegation or allegations by the other party. The allegation of facts is usually made by the complainant, and the denial by the defendant; but this is not always so; the allegation upon which the issue is made is sometimes made by the defendant, and the denial is sometimes made by the law. Thus, 1, The defendant may, in his answer, confess the material allegations in the bill, and set up new affirmative matters in avoidance, in which case the law makes an issue by interposing a denial of these new matters, and requiring the defendant to establish them by proof; 2, The defendant may, and often does, answer without denying all the material facts alleged in the bill, in which case, unless the complainant except to the answer for insufficiency, the law interposes a denial, and requires the complainant to prove

1 Formerly, a replication to the answer was necessary to put a cause at issue in the Chancery Court, the issue is regarded as made in the same way as if a replication had been filed, unless the cause is set for hearing expressly on bill and answer. The statute, proprio vigore, operates as a replication filed at the end of the time allowed for putting in excep-what is neither admitted, nor denied, in the answer; 3. Where a plea is filed, and the complainant, without filing a replication, takes proof as to its truthfulness, or acquiesces in the taking of proof by the defendant as to the truth of his plea, in such a case, the Court will consider the plea as having been denied, and as being at issue, and will allow a replication to be filed as of a date prior to the taking of the proof, or will consider such a replication as filed; 2 and 4. In those cases, where a pro confesso is not deemed a confession, the law makes it equivalent to a denial of all the allegations of the bill. 8

It will thus be seen that an issue, for the purpose of taking proof, is ordinarily made either (1) by the filing of a replication to a plea; or, (2) by an answer; or, (3) by an order pro confesso for want of a plea, or answer. The filing of exceptions to an answer for insufficiency does not prevent the taking of proof; and for all purposes of taking proof, or otherwise preparing for a hearing, a cause becomes at issue as soon as an answer is filed, whether the answer be excepted to or not. 4

The complainant’s Solicitor is allowed twenty days, after notice of the filing of the answer, to put in exceptions to the answer for insufficiency; or to set the cause for hearing on bill and answer. If he fail to except, or to set the cause for hearing on bill and answer, within that time, the cause becomes at issue. 5 If the complainant put in exceptions to the answer, various steps are taken in consequence that result in the answer being adjudged sufficient or insufficient; if adjudged sufficient, the cause becomes at issue upon such adjudication being made; if, however, the answer be adjudged insufficient, the cause does not become at issue until a sufficient answer has been filed. 6 Hence, the rule may be stated to be, that a cause is at issue, after answer filed, for the purposes of a hearing (1) at the end of twenty days after complainant’s Solicitor receives notice of the filing of the answer, unless within that time he excepts to the answer; and (2) if he excepts, then the cause is at issue for the purposes of a hearing whenever the exceptions are finally disallowed; or (3) if the exceptions are allowed, then the cause is at issue, and stands for trial whenever a sufficient answer is filed. 7

A pro confesso makes an issue as against all defendants who are (1) infants, (2) persons of unsound mind, (3) executors, (4) administrators, (5) defendants to divorce bills, (6) defendants to bills without attachment of property who are non-residents, and (7) defendants whose names and residences are unknown; the issue in all such cases being the same as though the allegations of the bill had been denied by an answer not sworn to. 8

A cause is, also, at issue for the purposes of taking proof, and also of a hearing, at the return term of the process on which a pro confesso is taken against a defendant for failure to make defences, when duly brought into Court (1) by service of subpoena, or (2) by publication, or (3) by attachment and publication. In all other cases where a pro confesso is taken, the cause stands for hearing at the next term after the bill is taken for confessed. 9

If time is granted a defendant to plead, or answer, “so as not to delay,” such a grant has the same effect as though a plea or answer was then filed; and the cause is then at issue for all the purposes of taking and filing proof.

When a cause is set down by the complainant for hearing on bill and answer, it is not deemed at issue for the purpose of taking proof; but the complainant, by such act, is deemed to admit everything alleged in the answer, and to acquiesce in the truth of the defendant’s denials, thus rendering the taking of proof wholly unnecessary. 10

§ 465. The Time Allowed for Taking Proof.—All proof in chief must be taken within four months, and all rebutting proof within six months, after the cause becomes at issue.\(^\text{11}\) If an order is made giving the defendant time to plead or answer, “so as not to delay,” the time for taking proof will begin to run from the date of the order. The Chancellor, or Master, may, however, extend the time for taking proof by either party, upon sufficient cause shown by affidavit, and upon terms.\(^\text{12}\) Proof in chief, in the meaning of the Chancery rule, is proof that tends to establish the affirmative allegations of the pleadings;\(^\text{13}\) and rebutting proof is proof that tends to refute these allegations, or that assails the evidence, or witnesses, of the other party. Proof of matters in avoidance is proof in chief. Rebutting proof may be taken at any time within the six months after the time for taking proof begins to run; but proof in chief, whether by the complainant or the defendant, must be taken within the four months.\(^\text{14}\)

§ 466. When Documentary Evidence Must Be Filed. The Chancery Rule requiring each party to take his proof in chief within four months, and his rebutting proof within two months, does not apply to documentary evidence,\(^\text{15}\) but is confined to depositions. This is shown by the following considerations: 1. The expression “take proof,” in the Rule, is applicable exclusively to taking depositions, and not to filing documentary evidence. Documentary evidence is not “taken.” 2. The Code and the Chancery Rules both provide for exceptions to depositions, because not filed in reasonable time;\(^\text{16}\) but do not provide for exceptions to documentary evidence, on any such ground. 3. Exhibits to bills and answers may be provided by witnesses at the hearing.\(^\text{17}\) Such exhibits are always documentary. 4. Documentary evidence consists ordinarily of notes, bonds, deeds, wills, records, books, and other writings, and these are often (1) of too much value to suffer the risks and hazards of a Court file; and (2) they are generally well known to the opposite side, and (3) they are often muniments of title, or choses in action, and are consequently private property, and not proper matters to be filed in Court after the manner of depositions, and for these reasons may be retained by the party by special order of the Chancellor, or Master.\(^\text{18}\) 5. \(^{11}\) Ch. Rule, II, § 4, says: “After a cause is set for hearing, the same shall be open to both parties for proof, without leave of the Court.” A cause is “set for hearing,” as soon as it is on the list. Code, § 4431. As to when a cause is at issue, see, ante, § 464.

\(^{12}\) As to when documentary evidence must be filed, see the next section. The statute does not give the parties six months in which to take proof, but makes six months the maximum limit, and allows the case to be tried at any time after it is at issue. Rather v. Williams, 10 Pick., 543, citing the above section, then § 463. Harris v. Bogle, 7 Cates, 701. See, post, § 1191.

On a continuance each party has only the remainder of the four and two months in which to take his proof, unless his time be extended by the Court, the Chancellor or the Master, as elsewhere shown, or by consent of the other party.

The object of Chancery Rule, II, § 4, post, § 1191, was to ensure a trial at the second term after the bringing of the suit; and to give a right of trial at the first term, if the answer has been filed in time to take the requisite proof, especially if such proof is documentary, or in a narrow compass. The statutory time for taking proof is ample, and the Chancellor should vigorously enforce the limit prescribed. The 69th rule of the United States Equity Courts provides that “unless within three months and no more, shall be allowed for the taking of testimony, after the cause is at issue; unless the Court, or a Judge thereof, shall, upon special cause shown by either party, enlarge the time; and no testimony taken after such period shall be allowed to be read in evidence at the hearing. In England, the evidence in chief, on both sides, must be closed within eight weeks after of Tennessee should keep abreast of the times; and, in these days of railroads, telephones and telegraphs, Court business should not be conducted on a slow-coach system. 2 Pr., 463.

\(^{13}\) Ch. Rule, II, § 4; ante, § 62, sub-sec. 8. The affidavit should be special; and should not only show a good excuse for not taking the proof within the limit allowed, but should, also, give the names of the witnesses sought to be examined, and specify the facts each is expected to prove. The order extending the time should designate the witnesses allowed to be examined, and should operate the party applying with the costs of all the proof thereafter taken, both by him and the opposite party. This rule as to costs should never be relaxed, except in cases where the failure to take the proof in time was caused by some act of the opposite party, or by some accident or mistake of the applicant, unmixt with negligence on his part.

The fact that the evidence of the other party was filed at the last moment allowed for so doing is no ground for enlarging the time for taking evidence in chief, if it is confined to matters distinctly put in issue by the pleadings. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 890.

\(^{14}\) Proof in chief is proof necessary to produce a result contrary to what would be the decree if no proof at all were introduced.

\(^{15}\) When a bill or answer is allowed to be amended so as to alter the issue of the case, all depositions may be allowed to take proof on such issue. Stull v. Goode, 10 Heisk., 58.

§ 467. When Documents will be Ordered to be Produced.—The Chancery Court has inherent authority to order a party to produce documents in his possession, or control, provided (1) he admits that the documents are in his possession, or control; and (2) it satisfactorily appears that their production is necessary, to enable the party demanding their production to make out his case. This order is usually made on the defendant, in which case it is based on an admission in his answer, or in his deposition; but it may, also, be made on the complainant, if he admits in a pleading, or in a deposition, that he has in his custody, or control, a document necessary to the defendant's case. If the complainant, however, has documents whose production is valuable to the defendant, the latter may file a cross bill, and pray a discovery, or he may file interrogatories under the statute. The Court, however, in its general disposition to aid in discovering all facts material to the controversy, will, on motion of either party, compel the other party to produce any document admitted, or proved, to be in his possession, and material to the party seeking its production.

The Court will not, however, compel the production of a document when such production would violate professional confidence, or would tend to subject the party having it to a criminal charge, or to a penalty, or forfeiture. In such cases, however, the party objecting to an order of production, on any of these grounds, must distinctly swear that he believes the document to be privileged, or that its production would tend to criminate him, or expose him to a penalty, or a forfeiture.

An order for the production of documents is enforced by attachment for contempt, which will issue on proof of service of the order to produce, and of failure to produce as required by such order. Or, when necessary, the Court may appoint sequestrators, and order them to seize the documents required to be produced.

The document must be produced in the Clerk's office, and filed with him; and if any part of the document is privileged from production, the Chancellor will, upon proper affidavit of the fact, allow the party ordered to produce, to seal up such privileged part.

Documents not in the possession of a party to the suit may be obtained, or their production enforced, by a subpoena ducos tecum. If this subpoena is not obeyed, the person upon whom it is served may be attached and punished for contempt, on proof that the document is in his possession.

Where either party has, in his pleading, notified the other that he will, at the hearing, read certain deeds, contracts, decrees, or other documentary evidence, referred to in his pleading, but not exhibited, such evidence need not be filed until the hearing. ORDER TO PRODUCE A DOCUMENT.

§ 468. When and How Exhibits Must be Proved.—Exhibits comprise all writings, printings, and other things, (1) exhibited, or annexed to a bill, answer, petition, affidavit, report, deposition or other paper, filed in a cause, or (2) proved in a cause when not exhibited, or annexed, to any pleading or other paper.

1. Exhibits to Pleadings May be Proved (1) by affidavits, filed with the exhibits in the Clerk’s office at any time before the hearing; or (2) by witnesses, at the hearing.

Ordinarily, no exhibit can be proved at the hearing by witnesses, if it requires more evidence than the mere proof of its execution, or of handwriting, to substantiate it. If the authenticity of the exhibit is questioned, and a cross-examination becomes necessary, it cannot be proved viva voce at the hearing. The examinations of the witnesses is restricted, at the hearing, ordinarily to three or four very simple points, such as: (1) the custody and identity of an ancient document produced by its custodian, (2) the accuracy of an office copy by the proper officer, (3) the execution of a deed, or other writing, by the attesting witness, and (4) the handwriting of a letter, receipt, note, or other writing. The Court may ask the witness questions suggested by adverse counsel, and a limited cross-examination may be allowed. If, however, the Court should see that the adverse party is surprised by the introduction of viva voce evidence, and that a cross-examination would not be sufficient to enable the adverse party to test the authenticity, or genuineness, of an exhibit, the hearing of the cause should be suspended, and proof allowed to be taken as to the authenticity, or genuineness, of such exhibit.

2. Exhibits to Depositions Should be Proved by the witnesses to whose deposition they are exhibited. The depositions of subscribing witnesses to deeds, or other writings, should be taken with such instruments annexed thereto.

The following form is given as an illustration of how such exhibits are proved:

AFFIDAVIT TO PROVE AN EXHIBIT.

John Jones, being duly sworn, says:

§ 469. When to Begin Taking Proof.

§ 470. What Must be Proved.

§ 471. As to Documentary Evidence.

§ 469. When to Begin Taking Proof.—If you have any witness whose testimony is vital, you should take his deposition at the earliest moment possible. If the witness is aged, or infirm, or going out of the county, or State, or is the only witness to a material fact, you may take his deposition at any time after filing your bill, without waiting for an answer, or plea. In no event allow any delay in taking your proof, especially if the burden of proof rests upon you. Many good causes are lost by negligence in preparing a cause for trial; and, on the other hand, many doubtful causes are won by diligence and skill in taking testimony.

Keep in mind, that all proof in chief must be taken within four months after issue joined, and all rebutting proof within two months thereafter.

§ 470. What Must be Proved.—A great deal of unnecessary proof is taken in almost every contested suit. This is generally the result of parties and Solicitors not really knowing exactly what proof is requisite. The first question you are called on to determine after the plea has been replied to, or the answer filed, is:

1. What are the Matters Really in Issue. To ascertain this, it is necessary to examine the bill, and see what the essential affirmative allegations are, and which of them have not been admitted by the answer. Nothing admitted by the answer is in issue; but every material affirmative allegation in the bill not admitted by the answer, and every material affirmative allegation, by way of avoidance, in the answer, is in issue, and must be proved by the party making the allegations.

The question next in importance to be determined in preparing to take proof, is:

2. On Which Side Rests the Burden of Proof. Ordinarily, the burden of proof rests on the complainant; but, whenever the defendant admits the material allegations of the bill, and sets up new matters by way of avoidance, the burden of proving these new matters rests upon him.4 The general rule is, that whichever party makes a material affirmative allegation, on him rests the burden of proving it, unless it is admitted by the opposite party. The defendant must prove: (1) payment; (2) a release; (3) failure, or illegality, of consideration; (4) fraud, when set up to defeat the deed, or contract, alleged in the bill; (5) a former judgment; (6) a new contract set up in lieu of the one sued on; or (7) any other affirmative matter by him set up to defeat the cause of action alleged by the complainant.

Defendants often lose when they have really good defences, because they are not aware that the burden of proof is on them.

3. Some Important Rules of Evidence. The following rules of evidence should be kept in mind in the preparation of proof:

1. The best evidence possible must be produced.
2. The evidence must be pertinent to the pleadings.
3. Nothing is evidence at the hearing that is not on file in the cause.
4. Presumptions prevail until rebutted by other proof.
5. Facts known to the Chancellor as an individual are not evidence.
6. He who asserts a material fact in his pleading must prove it, unless admitted.
7. He who confesses a material fact, and avoids it, must prove the matter in avoidance.
8. A preponderance of proof prevails.

§ 471. As to Documentary Evidence.—If you file a copy of any record, or of a registered deed, or other registered, or recorded, instrument, see to it that it is (1) properly copied, (2) properly certified, and (3) properly endorsed and marked filed in the cause. Note the names and dates in such copies to see that they are correct.

Remember, you cannot file a copy of a registered deed, or of any other instrument, that should be in your client’s possession, unless you have proved that the original has been unintentionally lost, destroyed or mislaid, and cannot be found on diligent search. Nor can you introduce parol evidence of the contents of a writing in the possession of the other side, unless you show that you have served reasonable notice on the possessor to produce the original. This notice should be given before the parol proof is taken; but if given in a reasonable time before the parol proof is read in evidence, that would be sufficient.5 This notice may be in the following form:

NOTICE TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS AT THE TAKING OF PROOF.

John Doe,
vs.

Richard Roe.

To the said Richard Roe:

You are hereby notified to produce before the Master, at his office, on the [day fixed for taking the depositions] the following books of account, [letters, deeds, and papers, describing them particularly so as to identify them,6] or I will prove their contents by secondary evidence.

By J. E. Cassady, Solicitor.

This notice may be added to the notice of the taking of the depositions.

4 As to the burden of proof, see, ante, §§ 441; 443; 445.
5 Notice should be sufficiently long to enable the party to produce the papers called for. 1 Greenl. Ev., § 562.
6 The notice must describe the writing or instrument demanded, so as to identify it. 1 Greenl. Ev., § 562; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 878.
§ 472. When and What Agreements to Make in Reference to Proof.—It frequently happens that there are important facts which are indisputably true, such as decrees of Courts, registered deeds and other matters of record, dates of well known events, names of heirs or distributees, contents of a book, or of a corporation's minutes, and the like. In all such cases, it is almost reprehensible for a Solicitor to refuse to agree that the fact is as he knows it to be, or, as he can, without much trouble, ascertain it to be. Often a deed, or a Court record, or a book of accounts, or other document, is needed only to show a simple fact, or date: in such a case, it is a great saving of costs to have an agreement in writing, as to the particular fact, or facts, contained in such document, and needed in evidence.

Agreements as to proof should be made as soon as the need for them appears; and, if possible, should be made before any of the acerbities incident to a litigation arise. Admissions and agreements should always be in writing, and duly signed; and they should be clear and distinct, and duly entitled, and filed in the cause.7 If not in writing, they should be incorporated in the decree, if the decree is, to any extent, based on them.8

The practice of making such agreements is one greatly to be commended; and, in construing them, the Courts will give them the force and effect contemplated by the parties at the time they were executed.9

For the purpose of the suit, an admission made by counsel is conclusive; and full authority to make admissions is presumed. Chancellors eagerly lay hold of such admissions as the basis of their decrees; and they are deemed better evidence of the facts than the finding of a jury.10 Such admissions once made, and acted on, cannot be retracted: if made without authority, the party's remedy is against his counsel, unless his consent was obtained by fraud.11

The following matters are proper to be included in written agreements between counsel, if the facts will abundantly justify such a course:

1. That a decree, to such and such an effect, was pronounced by such and such a Court, on such and such a day, between such and such parties.

2. That deeds, or grants, exist between such and such parties, for such and such a tract of land, dated so and so,—especially when such deeds are registered.

3. That both parties derive title from a common source, and the date of each party's title.

4. That the land in dispute is granted land, and was granted prior to such and such a day: these facts are ordinarily important only when a party is seeking to make out his case by means of adverse possession under a color of title.12

5. That such and such a book, such as a merchant's book, a corporation book, a family Bible, a diary, or memorandum book, contains such and such a statement, or entry, or date, or other fact. In such a case, it would be well to copy the statement, entry, or fact desired, in full, showing its date, the number of the page, and the connection in which it is found.

6. That such and such a witness will swear so and so, and that the agreement shall have all the force and effect of a deposition by such witness, but no greater or other force and effect.

8 The Court should by rule, require all such agreements to be in writing.
9 It is to be regretted, that many Solicitors stand in such awe of their clients that they are unwilling to make any agreement, whatever, in reference to the evidence; and, as a consequence, the adverse side is frequently forced to obtain copies of deeds, and records, and to take depositions, in order to prove facts well known to all the parties, thereby greatly and unnecessarily increasing the costs; and, to that extent, bringing the Courts into disrepute because of the expenses of litigation. On it being made to appear at the hearing, that the side filing such proof, in vain, requested his adversary to admit it, the Court would be justified in taxing the refusing party with a proportionate part of the costs, even though such party was successful in the suit. 19 Gres. Ev., 456-458. See, also, Gates v. Brinkley, 4 Lea, 710.
10 Jones v. Williamson, 5 Cold., 371; 2 Whart. Ev., § 1184.
11 The time has come for our Courts to presume that all land in litigation has been granted, such presumption to be rebuttable. A presumption of fact arises when a great majority of the probabilities are uniformly in favor of the fact presumed.

\[ \text{§ 473. Danger of Negligence, and Excess of Confidence, in Preparing Proofs.} \]

Some Solicitors, because of negligence, indifference, or excess of confidence, often tempt fate, by (1) failing to make their pleadings sufficiently full or sufficiently definite; (2) by failing to prove with sufficient certainty certain links in their chain of evidence; and (3) by relying too much on presumptions of law which are disputable, or do not certainly exist in the case. Very often, a doubtful suit may be made certain by (1) the addition of a single allegation in a pleading, or (2) by the answer to a single question in a deposition, or (3) by the filing of a single paper as evidence in the cause, or (4) by the giving of notice to the adverse side that a certain document will be read at the hearing, or (5) by due notice that parol proof of the contents of a written instrument will be offered on the trial of the cause.

Many suits for a long time hang trembling in the balance, ready to yield to a very slight increase in the weight of the evidence on either side. In such cases, diligence reaps golden harvests, and negligence is overwhelmed with avalanches of disaster. A pound of preponderance turns the scales of justice as effectually as a ton. The failure to make the necessary proof often arises from the fact that the matters are so notoriously true, that the party who should prove them hopes that the adverse side will admit them, or that the Chancellor may take a sort of quasi-judicial cognizance of them, or that they may not be disputed at the hearing.

The following are cases illustrative of the foregoing general statements:
1. Where a son claiming as heir failed to prove that he was a son.
2. Where heirs failed to prove the death of their father.
3. Where a legatee failed to prove that he was the nephew, Thomas, referred to in the will.
4. Where a party offered in evidence a copy of his deed, without accounting for the absence of the original.
5. Where a party failed to notify the adverse side to produce a particular writing, or he would prove its contents by parol.
6. Where a person performing a marriage ceremony, was not shown to be a minister, or a magistrate.
7. Where a party failed to file the deed under which he was claiming.
8. Where a party failed to notify the adverse side that he would read a record of the same Court on the hearing.
9. Where a party erroneously supposed that the burden of proof was on his adversary.
10. Where an unregistered deed filed in evidence was not proved by witnesses.
11. Where a party claiming under a will failed to file the will.

It is true, in many of such cases, the Courts will, ordinarily, allow the cause to stand over until the defect of proof can be remedied; but, as a rule, they impose on the delinquent party one-half, or more, of the costs of the cause, as a penalty for his negligence, and as a warning to all others.

DEPOSITIONS IN CHANCERY.

§ 476. How Depositions are Taken.
§ 477. Before What Officers Depositions May be Taken.

§ 478. How Commissioners are Appointed to Take Depositions.
§ 479. Value of Depositions Compared With Oral Testimony.

§ 474. When Depositions May be Taken.—In the Circuit Court, the evidence of witnesses may be taken by deposition,1 in certain specified cases; but the statute requires that in all cases in Chancery, excepting divorce causes, and cases tried by jury, the testimony of witnesses shall be taken in writing, without compelling their personal attendance. In divorce causes, and on the trial of issues by a jury, either party may examine the witnesses in open Court, or take their proof by depositions.2

1. Taking Proof Before Suit Brought. The depositions of notaries, and other important witnesses, may be taken and perpetuated before any suit, in the manner specified in the statutes.3

2. Taking Proof Before Answer Filed. When witnesses are aged, or infirm, or are going out of the Chancery Division, or do not reside in such Division, the Court, or Clerk and Master, upon affidavit of the facts, may, at any time after the bill is filed, either before or after a cause is at issue, authorize the depositions of such witnesses to be taken de bene esse, on such notice as may be thought just; and depositions thus taken may be read as if taken regularly, unless retaken by order of the Court, upon application of the opposite party.4 The Court will not, however, except for strong reasons, suppress the depositions thus taken; but will, ordinarily, on mere motion, give the opposite party leave to cross-examine the witnesses upon giving proper notice to the party who took their depositions.

1 Code, § 3836.
2 Code, §§ 4456; 4467; 4470. These sections would not prevent the Court from ordering, on motion of any party, a witness to be subpoenaed to attend Court in order that his deposition might be taken instantaneously, sufficient grounds appearing to sustain such motion. Nor would they prevent the Court from ordering an attachment for a recalcitrant witness. Code, §§ 4106; 4455; Ch. Rule, VII, §§ 6-7.
3 The statute as to Notaries is as follows: The evidence of a Notary Public, in any matter officially done by him, may be taken and perpetuated, without petition, upon notice to the other side by actual service or publication, as provided in section 1802, as if suit were pending. Code, § 3889.
4 The deposition of a Notary may be taken, whether a suit be pending or not, on ten days' notice to the opposite party, if resident in the State, and forty days' notice if out of it; to be read as evidence between the same parties in any suit then or afterwards depending, should the Notary die or remove out of the State before the trial. Code, § 1802.

As to the perpetuation of the testimony of other witnesses, see Code, §§ 3876-3888; and post, §§ 1125-1132, where the practice is fully set forth.

4 Code, § 4462.
If the witness is the only one to a material fact, his deposition may, also, be taken at any time after the suit is commenced, upon giving the usual notice. ⑤

3. Taking Proof After Answer Filed. The complainant may take testimony at any time after answer filed, or after a decree pro confesso; and the defendant may take testimony at any time after filing a sufficient answer. ⑥ The pendency of an appeal from the ruling of the Master on exceptions to an answer will not, however, prevent either party from proceeding to take his proof. ⑦

4. Taking Proof on a Plea. The statute does not expressly state when a plea is to be put at issue; but as a plea is a special answer, it would seem from analogy that a plea should be put at issue by filing a replication within twenty days after notice of its being filed. ⑧ Of course, whenever the complainant actually files a replication, that puts the plea at issue. ⑨ Proof may be taken on a plea at any time after issue taken. Indeed, if both parties take proof on a plea before any replication is filed, the Court will allow a replication nunc pro tunc, or will treat the case as though a replication had actually been duly filed.

§ 475. Depositions of Parties to the Suit.—In all Chancery causes, and proceedings in the nature of Chancery causes, the depositions of parties may be taken upon notice simply as in the case of other witnesses: the fact that a person is a party, or interested in the suit, or the wife or husband of a party, is no disqualification. ⑩

If a party to a suit, whose testimony is desired, resides beyond the limits of the State, the person wishing his evidence may file interrogatories with the Clerk and Master, which shall be answered before such party can be allowed to proceed to hearing. ⑪

Should such person delay to answer in a reasonable time, to be judged of by the Court, or Clerk, a peremptory order may be made by the Court, or Clerk, requiring the interrogatories to be answered by a given day, and on failure, if the delinquent is the complainant, the bill may be dismissed, notice of which shall be given by the Clerk and Master to the party, or his Solicitor; or the answer may be taken off the file, and the bill taken for confessed, if the defendant be in default. ⑫

§ 476. How Depositions are Taken.—Depositions may be taken (1) by consent, (2) on notice, or (3) upon interrogatories. A party’s consent is conclusively presumed if he cross-examines the witness. When there is no consent, notice of the time and place of taking the deposition must be given; and, if the deposition is to be taken on interrogatories, notice of their being filed must be given.

No permission need be obtained in order to take a deposition, unless: (1) the witness has already been examined as to the same facts, by the same party; or (2) the cause is not at issue; or (3) the time for taking proof has expired. Each party may begin the taking of proof as soon as his right accrues, as here-tofore shown; and may continue taking until his time has expired.

The details of the time, place, manner, and form, of taking depositions, the ⑤ Code, §§ 3836; 3838. While these two sections were probably primarily intended for suits in the courts of law, they, no doubt, were intended by the codifiers of the Code to apply to suits in Chancery also, as the chapter is general, and includes all civil actions. Code, § 4326. See, also, § 3869. Indeed, the universal practice in Chancery is to take depositions, and to test the correctness of their taking, according to the provisions of the Code contained in the Chapter concerning Depositions; and this is authorized by the Code, § 4455, which reads as follows: The rules of evidence as to the competency of witnesses; and the methods of obtaining testimony, are the same in Courts of Chancery as in the other Courts of this State, except so far as they may be altered by the express provisions of this Code. As to taking proof de bene esse, see, post, § 4455.

⑥ Code, § 4457. The complainant is allowed twenty days after notice that the answer has been filed to except to such answer; and, if he fail to except within said time, the cause shall be at issue. Code, §§ 4400-4401; post, § 1190; Ch. Rule, I, § 5. Hence, in strict law, the defendant cannot begin taking his proof until the time for excepting to his answer has expired.

various steps preliminary to their filing, and the time and manner of excepting to them, will all be found in the subsequent sections.

§ 477. Before what Officers Depositions may be Taken.—Depositions in Chancery are, usually, taken before the Clerk and Master, but depositions may also be taken by any Judge, Justice of the Peace, Mayor or chief magistrate of a town or city, the Clerk of any Court, a Notary Public, or any other person properly appointed, or commissioned by the Court or Clerk, not being interested, of counsel, or related to either of the parties within the sixth degree, computing by the civil law.\(^\text{13}\)

Commissioners of the State of Tennessee, appointed by our Governor in the different States, may, also, take depositions.\(^\text{14}\)

§ 478. How Commissioners are Appointed to Take Depositions.—Any person, qualified as above stated, may be commissioned to take depositions either in or out of the State, upon application of either party, and without any affidavit laying grounds.\(^\text{15}\) This commission is issued by the Clerk and Master, or his Deputy, and it has long been the practice to issue commissions in blank,\(^\text{16}\) to be filled by the party applying therefor, his attorney or agent, on obtaining a suitable person to act at the place where the deposition is to be taken. The following is the form of

A COMMISSION TO TAKE DEPOSITIONS.

The State of Tennessee,

TO MELVIN NORTON.

Confiding in your prudence and fidelity, you are hereby given full power and authority to summon before you John Clark, and his examination on oath, or affirmation, to take in writing, on behalf of John Doe, [upon the interrogatories hereto annexed,\(^\text{17}\)] in a cause pending in our Chancery Court at Maynardville, wherein John Doe is complainant, and Richard Roe and Peter Poe are defendants, said deposition when taken to be signed by said witness, and certified, sealed, addressed, and transmitted, by you to the Clerk of our said Court, in the manner and form prescribed by our laws.

Witness, Coram Acuff, Clerk and Master of our said Court at office in Maynardville, this July 1, 1891.

CORAM ACUFF, Clerk and Master.

§ 479. Value of Depositions Compared with Oral Testimony.—While often the oral examination of witnesses in open Court, before a jury, will enable an expert Solicitor to more effectually expose and crush a false witness; or to extort the truth from a hostile or unwilling witness; or to involve him in gross self-contradiction, or manifest inconsistencies; and while the appearance of the witness, and his demeanor in testifying, and his general conduct on the witness-stand,\(^\text{18}\) are great aids in judging of his intelligence, sincerity, impartiality, and reliability, there are nevertheless many weighty considerations in favor of taking proof in writing. These are:

\(^{13}\) Code, §§ 3865; 1802a-1802b; Acts of 1885, ch. 11. The statement in the caption, or certificate, of a deposition, that the person taking the deposition is a Justice of the Peace or other officer authorized to take depositions, or signing the certificate officially as such officer, is sufficient evidence of that fact. Hoover v. Rawlings, 1 Sneed, 267; Wilson v. Smith, 5 Yerg., 379; Carter v. Ewing, 1 Tenn. Ch., 212; Read v. Patterson, 11 Lea, 433.

\(^{14}\) The notaries should affix their seals, and if they live in another State should certify the date and expiration of their commissions. Code, § 1802, b; Acts of 1885, ch. 11, § 2. The official character of the Commissioners when not stated may be proved aliunde. Cooke, 431, note.

\(^{15}\) Code, §§ 3865; 4436. In Courts of law the taking of depositions is not a matter of course as in Chancery; and, hence, a party applying for a commission to take depositions in a law Court must make it appear, by oath or otherwise, that the case is one where, under the Statute, he has the right to take depositions. Code, §§ 3844-3845.

\(^{16}\) This blank, however, should be filled either before, or at the time of, the taking of the deposition.

\(^{17}\) The portion in brackets will be inserted only in case the deposition is to be taken upon interrogatories. If the deposition is to be taken in another State, the Solicitor should forward, along with the commission, full directions how to take the deposition, and enclose a caption, certificate, and an addressed and endorsed envelope; or the deposition will almost certainly be defectively taken and transmitted.

\(^{18}\) When we read a deposition we see the witness, as it were, "through a glass, darkly"; but, when he is examined in open Court, we see him "face to face."
1. Where testimony is in writing there can be no dispute as to what a witness has testified.\(^1\)

2. Witnesses are often more precise, and more clear, when giving in their depositions, than when testifying orally.

3. Witnesses are more apt to tell the truth, when they know that their words are being taken down, and therefore cannot be denied, or retracted, than when testifying orally in open Court.

4. When the evidence in a cause is all in writing, there is no danger of a party being surprised at the trial, (1) by his witnesses failing to appear; or (2) becoming sick; or (3) failing to testify as expected; or (4) testifying to what was not expected.

5. Where the evidence is in writing, a party knows when he is ready for trial, and the risks incident to oral evidence are all avoided. No new evidence can be sprung, no witness can be tampered with, no evidence can be lost.

6. A party who is in the right, is, as a rule, much more certain to be able to win his case when the proof is in writing, than when witnesses are required to attend and testify orally. It is difficult for a party to have all of his witnesses in attendance at one time. Some will be sick; some absent on business, or pleasure; some forget the day; some have sick families; some leave the State; some get tampered with; some become hostile, or unwilling; and some, for various other reasons, fail to attend, or, attending, do not testify as expected. But by ordinary diligence, the depositions of all such witnesses can be readily taken from time to time, and all disappointment avoided.

7. And lastly, the expenses of a litigation are much less when depositions are taken, than when witnesses give their personal attendance in open Court. It is safe to say, that the costs in an ordinary Chancery suit are less than one-half of the costs in an ordinary suit in the Circuit Court.

And, as either party may demand a trial by jury in the Chancery Court, and enforce the attendance of witnesses for oral examination in open Court, whenever such a course is promotive of justice, it will be seen that a Court of Chancery offers each party every means to enable him to overcome the machinations of his adversary, the enmity or dishonesty of witnesses, the dangers of perjury, and the risks of accident and mistake, and to get the real facts before the Court.\(^2\)

\(^1\) Vox emissa volat, litera scripta manet. (A word when spoken flies away, a letter when written remains.)

\(^2\) Both witnesses and parties should remember that the Chancellor is a man of large acquaintance with the ways of the world; and that he is not a mere machine to be stuffed with absurd, unreasonable, witness through and through, and writes him down as reliable, doubtful, or worthless. The witness who thinks he can impose false evidence on the Court, either overvalues his own ability in that particular, or undervalues the ability of the Court to distinguish the true from the false; and will find his testimony cast into the rubbish box where frauds, of the United States west of the Rocky Mountains, such time as the Court, or Clerk, may order, not exceeding forty days; in foreign countries, such time as the Court, or Clerk, may order. The Court, or the Clerk and Master, may, upon good cause shown, either restrict or enlarge the periods of notice above set forth; and, in all cases in which more than one person is complainant or defendant, the Court, or Clerk, may determine whether notice shall be given to each person, and, if not, to whom notice shall be given; a memorandum of the order being kept among the papers.

ORDER DISPENSING WITH NOTICE AS TO CERTAIN PARTIES.

John Doe, et al.,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.]

In this case it is ordered that notice to take depositions need not be served on Sarah Doe, a complainant, or on Julia Roe and Charles Roe, defendants. May 20, 1891.

N. H. Greer, C. & M.

The fact that this order was made should be noted on the rule docket, and the order itself kept among the papers of the cause.

§ 481. Form and Requisites of Notice.—The statute allows either party litigant to take the depositions of witnesses, upon giving the opposite party legal notice of the time and place, or by filing interrogatories. The only object of this notice is to give the opposite party due opportunity to be present and cross-examine the witnesses whose depositions are to be taken. The notice should therefore state: (1) the style of the cause; (2) the Court where pending, (3) the names of the witnesses, (4) where to be examined, (5) in what house, room, or office, (6) on what day, (7) beginning at what hour, (8) in whose behalf, (9) for what purpose, (10) should be duly signed by the party, or his Solicitor, (11) should be addressed to the opposite party, and (12) should be served on him in due time. These requisites need not appear in the notice in any particular order. If the substance is in the notice, the form is immaterial. The following is a good form:

NOTICE TO TAKE DEPOSITIONS.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.

In the Chancery Court, at Nashville, Tenn.

Richard Roe, the defendant, is hereby notified that I will, on the 2d day of June next, at the house of George Jones, in the city of Nashville, No. 76 Summer Street, take the depositions of Ann Jones and Julia Jones, to be used as evidence on my behalf in said cause, beginning said depositions at 10 a.m. on said day, and continuing the taking from day to day, if necessary, until completed. May 20, 1891.

To Richard Roe.

By Jack Baker, Solicitor.

The notice need not be dated, nor need it be formally addressed to the opposite party; it is sufficient if its form shows that it is intended as a notice to him; nevertheless, it is well to date it, and formally address it.

If a party, in person or by agent, participate in the taking of a deposition that is a waiver of notice.

21 Code, §§ 3851; 3853.
22 Code, § 4460; sec. also, § 3846. The “good cause,” should be shown by affidavit; and the length of notice should be readily shortened in cases of emergency when, by railroad or steamboat, the place for taking the depositions can be easily reached in a shorter time than the Code prescribes. Railroads and steamboats were unknown in 1817, when the length of notice was fixed by our statute. As to “good cause,” see, ante, § 62, sub-sec. 8.
23 Code, § 3855.
24 Code, § 3847.
25 Robertson v. Campbell, I. Tenn. (Overt.), 172.
26 A party cannot be required to attend at two different places on the same day. But he must elect which place he will attend, and attend accordingly, or he will not be in an attitude to except to either deposition. Blair v. The Bank, 11 Hum., 84.
27 The mention of the hour is not essential, if the taking of the deposition continues through one-half of the business hours of the given day; but a deposition begun and ended at an unusual hour, or ended in a short time and at once closed, and the witness dismissed, in consequence whereof of the adverse party, though present before noon, had no opportunity to cross-examine, should be suppressed on these facts appearing in the certificate of the Commissioner, or by the affidavit of the party injured, or his Solicitor. Smith v. Cocke, 1 Tenn. (Overt.) 296.
28 Unless the notice provides for continuing the taking of depositions from day to day, the taking must begin on the day specified, and the Commissioner has no power to adjourn the taking to the next day. But, see Read v. Patterson, 11 Lea, 434. If the taking is actually begun on the day named in the notice, the Commissioner may finish the taking on the next day. Brandon v. Mullens, 11 Heisk., 446. Read v. Patterson, 11 Lea, 434.
Notice of the filing of interrogatories must be given, when the deposition is to be taken on interrogatories. The following is a form:

NOTICE OF THE FILING OF INTERROGATORIES.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.

In the Chancery Court, at Kingston, Tenn.

Mr. John Doe: I have this day filed, in the office of the Clerk and Master, at Kingston, interrogatories to be propounded to John Jones, a witness in my behalf in the above named case. June 13, 1891.

RICHARD ROE,

By F. D. OWINGS, Solicitor.

§ 482. Service of Notice.—The Code provides that the Sheriff, coroner, or constable, of any county in this State, into whose hands a notice to take depositions has been put, shall deliver a copy of such notice to the proper person in due time, and return the original notice with the time of delivery marked thereon, to the Court, or Justice, before whom the suit is pending; 29 but a private person may serve a copy of the notice, in which case he must make affidavit of the fact and time of service, and exhibit the original notice to his affidavit. Counsel frequently accept service for their clients. 30

Service is effected by delivering a true copy of the notice to the person to whom it is addressed, if he be a resident of the State; but if he be a non-resident, the notice may be served upon his agent, or Solicitor. 31

In all cases in which more than one person is complainant or defendant, the Court, or Clerk, may determine whether notice shall be given to each person, and, if not, to whom notice shall be given; a memorandum of the order being kept among the papers. 32

DEPOSITIONS TAKEN ON INTERROGATORIES.

§ 483. When Depositions May be Taken on Interrogatories.

§ 484. Notice of Filing of Interrogatories.

§ 485. Form of Interrogatories.

§ 483. When Depositions May be Taken on Interrogatories.—It sometimes happens that it is too inconvenient, or too expensive, to take the deposition of a distant witness upon notice; or it may be difficult to ascertain where a distant witness will be at any given time. The Code accordingly provides that when the witnesses reside out of the State, or over one hundred and fifty miles from the place of trial, either party may take their depositions by filing interrogatories with the Clerk, giving the opposite party notice thereof, who shall have ten days thereafter to file cross interrogatories, to which rebutting interrogatories may then be put; at any time after which the deposition may be taken upon a certified copy of the interrogatories, to be issued by the Clerk. 1

If the opposite party is a non-resident, or if a judgment by a default, or pro confesso, has been taken for want of appearance, and defence, the depositions may be taken by filing with the Clerk a copy of the interrogatories, with a memorandum of the time and place of taking the depositions, for twenty days before taking the same. 2

29 Code, § 3854.
30 The verbal waiver of service should never be asked or given, for it is apt to result in difference of recollection, and consequent disagreement. The acceptance, or waiver, should always be in writing.
31 Code, § 3854 a; Ch. Rule, II, § 3, post, § 1191.
32 Code, § 3850. Such order may be entered by the Master on his rule docket. Code, § 4417.
1 Code, § 3855. Formerly, the general mode of ex- 2 Code, § 3856. If the opposite party is a non- hibiting a place in writing was to be intersected.
§ 484. Notice of Filing of Interrogatories.—The party desiring to take depositions on interrogatories must prepare his interrogatories in due form, numbering them numerically, giving them a proper caption and signing them, and file them with the Clerk. He must, then, give due notice of such filing. In giving this notice he must consider, 1st, the residence of the witnesses; 2d, the residence of the opposite party, and 3d, the state of the pleadings.

1. If the witnesses reside out of the State, or over 150 miles from the place of trial, ten days’ notice is sufficient.

2. If the witnesses live in the State, but the opposite party is a pro-confessoed non-resident, ten days’ notice is sufficient.

3. If the witnesses live in the State, but the opposite party is a non-resident who has made defence, or is a resident who has been pro-confessoed, twenty days’ notice must be given.

When witnesses reside out of the State, or over one hundred and fifty miles from the place of trial, they should be asked in one of the interrogatories where and in what State they reside, and how far distant from the place of trial. When the witness gives the name of the place where he resides, but does not give the distance, the Court will take judicial notice of the geography of the country, and thereby determine the distance.

§ 486. Caption of a Deposition.—The form of a deposition is prescribed by the statute, and this form must be closely adhered to. The caption must be substantially as follows: 14 vs. } C D.

GENERAL FORM OF THE CAPTION.

A B. } In the Chancery Court, ______ county, Tennessee.

Depositions of ______ and ______, witnesses for complainant, [or defendant,] in the above case, taken upon notice, [or interrogatories] on the____day of____, 189__, [giving the date specified in the notice] at [the place specified in the notice] in the presence of the complainant and defendant, [show the fact.]

The said witness, ______ aged ______, being duly sworn, 15 deposed as follows: [Then follow the questions and answers.]

Or, to conform the foregoing general caption to the notices given in a preceding section, and thus make a special form:

SPECIAL FORM OF A CAPTION.

John Doe, } In the Chancery Court of Davidson County, Tennessee.

vs. } Richard Roe, et al.

Depositions of Ann Jones and Julia Jones, witnesses for the complainant in the above case, taken upon notice on the 2d day of June, 1891, at the house of George Jones, in the city of Nashville, No. 76 Summer Street, in the presence of the complainant and the defendant, Richard Roe, and their Solicitors.16

The said witness, Ann Jones, aged 16 years, 17 being duly sworn, deposed as follows:
Q. 1, by the complainant.—[Then follow the questions and answers.]

§ 487. Body of Deposition.—The caption having been written out, the witness duly sworn, his or her name and age written down, the party or his Solicitor will then proceed to write 18 his questions as follows:

QUESTIONS BY EUGENE WEBB, SOLICITOR OF COMPLAINANT, [OR DEFENDANT.]

Q. 1. If you are acquainted with any of the parties to this suit, state which; and how long you have known them.

Ans. I know all the parties, and have known them for a year, or more.

Q. 2. If you are in any way related to any of the parties to this suit, state which, and how.

Ans. I am not related to any of them, to my knowledge.

Q. 3. If you have any agreement, letters, or other writing, relating to the matters in dispute signed by the defendant, Richard Roe, please produce the same. State what you know about their execution, and make them exhibits to your deposition.

Ans. I have an agreement signed by Richard Roe, and left by him with me to be kept, by consent of John Doe. I saw Richard Roe sign the paper, and I witnessed it at his request. This agreement I herewith file, and mark it Exhibit A to this my deposition.

14 Code, § 3848.
15 The witness should be sworn before his examination is begun. Code, § 3859.
16 Show which of the parties was present, and which had Solicitors present, if any, giving their names. It is often important to know what Solicitors were present. Sometimes the questions and answers are more intelligible when it is known what Solicitor examined the witness.
17 The age should always be stated. The weight to be given the testimony of a witness often depends to some extent upon his age; and the Chancellor cannot know a witness’ age otherwise than by the proof.
18 It is not essential to the admissibility of a deposition that the questions should be reduced to writing; they may be oral. Code, § 3859, is directory. Read v. Patterson, 11 Les. 430. In England, under the new practice, depositions are taken down ‘not ordinarily by question and answer, but in the form of a narrative. ’ 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 904. Indeed, in England, affidavits are now largely used instead of depositions. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 887-904.
FORMALITIES OF A DEPOSITION. § 488

It is important to see to it that all papers proved by a witness should be made exhibits to his deposition, and should be lettered, or numbered, and attached to the deposition. If this cannot, for any reason, be done, then the exhibit should have the style of the cause written upon it, and, also, the fact that it is an exhibit to the deposition, and should be marked filed by the Clerk when he opens the deposition. The Commissioner would do well to write his name, and official designation, on the exhibit when he signs the deposition.

The complainant will proceed with all his questions, writing them down in order as soon as each preceding question has been fully answered, being careful to ask no leading, scandalous or irrelevant question. He may conclude with a general question like the last one in the interrogatories; if the opposite party is not present. If he is present, any general question may be omitted. After the complainant has asked his last question, he will turn the witness over to the opposite party to cross-examine as follows:

CROSS-QUESTIONS BY WILLIAM B. FORD, SOLICITOR OF DEFENDANT, [OR COMPLAINANT.]

Q. 1. In what way are you interested in this suit? Ans. I have no interest in it whatever.
Q. 2. [The defendants will proceed with all their questions, and having ended their cross-examination, the complainant will again take the witness for re-examination.]

RE-EXAMINATION BY COMPLAINANT.

Q. 1. Please explain more fully how you happened to be at the place spoken of in answer to cross-question 5. Ans. I was there on a visit to my aunt; had gone there a week before.
Q. 2. [The complainant will ask all questions he desires, proper on a re-examination, and when the last one has been answered, the Commissioner will add:] And further this deponent saith not. Witness to mark: Ann X Jones. mark

DEPOSITIONS TAKEN ON INTERROGATORIES.

[If the deposition is to be taken on interrogatories, after the proper caption has been written, the witness will be sworn, and will then answer each direct interrogatory, as follows:] 1st. To the 1st interrogatory, the witness says:
My name is John Jones, I am 70 years old, and a merchant.
2d. To the 2d interrogatory, the witness says:
I reside at Eureka Springs, Arkansas, which place is over one hundred and fifty miles from the Court House at Nashville, Tenn.
[And so continue, until all the direct interrogatories have been fully answered; then let him answer the cross-interrogatories, if any, as follows:] 1st. To this the 1st cross-interrogatory, the witness says: [After the cross-interrogatories have all been answered, the Commissioner will add:]
And further this deponent saith not. John Jones.

§ 488. Certificate to Deposition.—After all the depositions have been duly taken and signed by the witnesses, the Commissioner will add the following certificate:

CERTIFICATE TO A DEPOSITION.

The foregoing depositions were taken before me, as stated in the caption, and reduced to writing by me, [or, by the witnesses.] And I certify that I am not interested in the cause, nor of kin or counsel to either of the parties, and that I sealed them up and delivered them to John Doe, [or, put them in the express office at Nashville, Tenn., or, in the post-office,] without being out of my possession, or altered after they were taken. Given under my hand, the 2d day of June, 1891.

19 Ante, § 485.
20 In many of the States, it is no objection to a deposition that the witness omitted to subscribe his name to it. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 917, note. Our Code does not require the signature. See, Code, §§ 3848; 3859; 3860; 3863.
21 The witness will write his own answers, and sign his own name, if he will can.
The last clause may be written across the back of the envelope on the sealed side, instead of inserting it in the certificate, in which case, there may be omitted from the foregoing certificate all the words between "parties" and "given under."

The Commissioner will then annex a

SAMUEL BRIGHT, J. P.

If the deposition is taken by the Clerk and Master of the Court wherein the suit is pending, the certificate is ordinarily omitted, and often the caption is quite informal. Indeed, in such cases, and in many others where both parties are present, the certificate is often waived. Where, however, only one party is present, and the deposition is not taken by the Clerk and Master, such party should see to it that the caption, certificate, sealing, and transmitting are all done in exact compliance with all the requirements of the law.

§ 489. Depositions When and How Taken in Shorthand, or in Typewriting. Persons authorized to take depositions may take them in shorthand, and subsequently reduce the same to manuscript or typewriting, or may take them directly on a typewriting machine; provided, that in case the deposition be taken in shorthand, the person taking it can truthfully certify, and does certify substantially, as follows:

CERTIFICATE WHEN DEPOSITION IS TAKEN IN SHorthand.

I certify that, being a stenographer, I took the foregoing deposition in the exact language of the witness, and reduced it to typewriting [or manuscript]; that it was then read over by the witness in my presence [or was read over by me to the witness], and was approved and signed by him; and I also certify that I am not, in any capacity, in the regular employ of the party in whose behalf this deposition is taken, nor in the regular employ of his attorney; and I certify that I am not interested in the case, nor of kin or counsel to either of the parties, and that I sealed up said deposition and delivered it to [or, delivered it to the express office, or, put it in the postoffice] without its being out of my possession, or altered after it was taken.

No deposition taken under this section shall be signed by the witness until it shall have been reduced to manuscript or typewriting. Depositions may be taken by stenographers in the regular employ of the litigant taking the deposition, or his attorney, where the opposite party consents.

§ 490. Enveloping and Transmitting a Deposition.—The deposition, when complete, shall, together with the commission, and interrogatories, if any, and all documents which may have been deposed to, and all exhibits, be duly enveloped and sealed, with the Commissioner’s name written across the seal, and directed to the Clerk of the Court where the cause is pending, with the title of the cause endorsed on the envelope: it may be sent by mail, express, or private conveyance.

The Commissioner will be careful to put everything in the envelope that belongs to the deposition, including the interrogatories, if any, the notice and

The Commissioner may, also, write across the back of the envelope the certificate mentioned in the preceding section, as follows:

I hereby certify that I sealed up the within depositions, and delivered them to John Doe, [or, put them in the post-office, or, in the Southern Express office,] without being out of my possession, or altered, after taken, June 2, 1891.

SAMUEL BRIGHT, J. P.

The Commissioner may, however, deliver the deposition to the Clerk and Master in person, in which case he need not envelope it at all. But he must take the messenger's oath before the Master on delivering the deposition, unless his certificate shows that he delivered it to the Master.\(^{30}\)

ARTICLE V.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF COMMISSIONERS, AND RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF WITNESSES.

§ 492. General Powers of Commissioner.
§ 493. General Duties of Commissioner.
§ 494. Rights and Duties of Witnesses.

§ 492. General Powers of Commissioner.—Every officer authorized by law to take depositions is, for that occasion, termed a Commissioner, whether a commission is issued to him by the Clerk and Master or not; and such officer is, while engaged in the discharge of his duties, vested with all the powers of a Court to preserve order, prevent interruption, and control the conduct of the parties in the examination of the witness. He may accordingly fine any person guilty of wilful disobedience, or resistance, to any lawful command he may make during the examination, such fine not to exceed ten dollars.

The Commissioner, or person authorized to take depositions, has power to issue subpoenas for witnesses, which may be served by the Sheriff, or any constable; and the certificate of the Commissioner, or person authorized, that the witness failed to appear, together with the return of the officer, is proof of the facts. Any witness who fails to appear in such cases, according to the terms of the subpoena; or who fails to answer the questions which may be lawfully put to him, is subject to the penalties provided for enforcing the attendance of witnesses to give testimony in Court, and compelling them to testify. The penalty for non-attendance may be enforced by the tribunal having cognizance of the suit, upon scire facias as in other cases.

If any witness refuse to give testimony when legally bound, he shall be committed to the common jail, by the Commissioners before whom he is bound to testify, there to remain without bail or main-prize, until he is willing to testify as the law directs.

If a witness fail to appear when summoned before a Commissioner, the subpoena is returned to the Chancery Court, with the endorsement of such failure made thereon, by the Commissioner; and scire facias issues as in other cases.

If a deposition is begun on the day fixed in the notice, and it is impracticable to finish it on that day, it may be finished on the next; but the Commissioner cannot postpone the beginning of the deposition.

A subpoena for witnesses may be substantially in the following form:

22 Code, § 3870. Under the old practice, no deposition was allowed to be opened, nor was the Commissioner allowed to divulge its contents, until all the proof in the cause had been taken, and the cause set for hearing. The seals of the depositions were then broken, and the contents of the depositions were made known to the parties. This was called “passing publication.” Cooke, 431; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 945. Great Eq. Ev., 71. Under our practice, the opening of a deposition by the Clerk is equivalent to publication in the English practice; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 945, note 7; and the expiration of the time for taking proof is, with us, equivalent to passing publication, in England.

2 Code, § 3859.

2 Code, §§ 4106-4107; 4112. The authority of the Clerk and Master in such cases, is greater. See, post, § 1196.

3 Code, § 3862.

4 Code, § 3863.

5 Code, § 3864. All other penalties for contempts before the Commissioner would probably be enforced in the same way, the Commissioner certifying the facts.

6 Code, § 3823.

7 Code, § 3825. This section requires the subpoena to be returned to the Circuit Court of the county; but in view of the Act of 1877, increasing the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court, and Code, 3864, the Chancery Court probably has jurisdiction when the Commissioner is acting as one of its officers.

SUBPOENA FOR WITNESSES.

The State of Tennessee.
To the Sheriff, or any Constable, of Knox County:

Summon Jane Brown and George Smith to appear before me, at the house of John Wilson, in the 10th civil district of said county, on June 25th, 1891, at 10 a.m., [naming the place and time specified in the notice,] to give testimony in behalf of the complainant in a suit pending in the Chancery Court, at Knoxville, between Richard Roe, complainant, and John Doe and others, defendants. Notify said George Smith, that he is required to bring with him a written contract deposited with him by the defendant, John Doe, on or about May, 1890, [or other paper needed, and in the witness' possession, describing it so as to identify it.]

Witness my hand, May 30, 1891.

I. C. Grant, J. P. and Commissioner.

§ 493. General Duties of Commissioner.—The Commissioner, having first sworn the witness according to law, should require the questions to be reduced to writing before being put, and then read to the witness; and should take down the answers in writing, or cause the same to be done by the witness himself, as near as may be in the witness' own words.

It is the duty of the Commissioner: (1) to preserve order; (2) to see that the witness is fairly dealt with; (3) to require a witness to answer all proper questions; (4) to examine each witness separate and apart from all the others named in the notice, when either party makes oath before him that he verily believes justice so requires; (5) to prevent a witness being taken aside privately by either party during his examination; (6) to read over to the witness, or allow the witness to read over, his deposition, if so requested, before it is signed, and to correct it, or allow the witness to correct it, where erroneous; (7) to annex to the deposition a bill of costs, showing what each witness is entitled to for attendance, mileage and ferriages, and what his own costs are, and (8) to properly certify, envelope, endorse and transmit the deposition when taken, without allowing it to be out of his possession, or in any way altered, after it has been taken. Commissioners should make and enforce all rules and orders necessary to prevent a witness from being tampered with, or instructed, or intimidated, while being examined, or while attending to be examined.

§ 494. Rights and Duties of Witnesses.—First of all a witness is entitled to courteous treatment not only while being examined, but while in attendance, and is entitled to protection from insult, menace, disturbance, or interruption. He has the right to make any changes in his deposition before he has signed it, but cannot make changes by erasures or interlineations, if objection be made; but must make his changes or explanations in writing at the foot of his deposition.

A witness may use notes to refresh his recollection as to dates, names and amounts, but he cannot be allowed to copy a writing into his deposition, nor to use a deposition previously prepared. If he has a writing he wishes to use he may exhibit it to his deposition, if either party desires it.

A witness may properly refuse to answer a question which may criminate him, or tend to criminate him, or expose him to a penalty or to a forfeiture, or which would involve a breach of professional confidence.

It is the duty of a witness to answer every question fully without reservation, to the best of his knowledge, telling not only the truth, but the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. A witness should not be allowed to spar with counsel; but should be required to confine himself to his duties as a witness, and not be allowed to comport himself as an entertainer, or as a judge of the 10 Code, § 3859. This section is directory as to the manner of putting the questions; they may be put verbally. Reed v. Patterson 11 Lea. 432.

11 Blake's Ch. Pr., 133; Barb. Ch. Pr., 282.
12 Objections are sometimes made to questions and answers expressly to help the witness, or to show him how to answer, or how not to answer, or else to intimidate him, or otherwise unduly influence him. A Commissioner who tolerates such conduct is either grossly ignorant of his duty, or lamentably deficient in courage to do his duty. Parties should be required to reduce their objections to writing, and no arguments should be allowed.

15 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 282; Blake's Ch. Pr., 133.
16 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 943-945. But if such questions are answered without objection by the witness, they cannot be objected to at the hearing by a party.
17 He is under pay as a witness, and should conduct himself accordingly.
§ 495. When an Interpreter is Needed.—If a witness whom it is proposed to examine does not understand and speak English, an interpreter must be used. The interpreter should be sworn, 1st, that he understands the tongue of the proposed witness, and 2d, that he will interpret truly. The oath may be administered by the Commissioner, in the following form. "You do solemnly swear that you understand the tongue of the witness, [naming him], and that you will truly and faithfully interpret to him the oath to be administered to him, and the questions to be put to him, out of the English language into the [German, or other language of the witness, stating it:] and that you will truly and faithfully interpret his answers thereto out of the [German or other language of the witness, stating it:] into the English language."\(^{718}\)

The deposition of a person who is deaf and dumb may, in like manner, be taken by the aid of a person skilled in the sign language, unless the witness can read and write, in which case he can, of course, read the questions and write his answers, being first sworn in writing.

Leave to use an interpreter may be obtained from the Chancellor in Court, or at Chambers, on notice to the adverse party.\(^{19}\)

§ 496. Exceptions Taken Before the Commissioner.—If the form of a question is objectionable, it must be excepted to in writing before it is answered;\(^{20}\) if the substance of the question is objectionable, it may be excepted to in writing before the Commissioner, or may be excepted to orally before the Court when read at the hearing. The reason of the distinction is: if the form of a question could be first excepted to in Court, it would enable the excepting party to reserve his objection until it was too late for the other party to remedy, or obviate, the defect; whereas, if the objection is raised before the question is answered, the form of the question can be changed, or a new question asked; and if the party questioning fails or refuses to change the form of his question on objection being duly made, he voluntarily assumes the risk of his question, and the answer thereto, being ruled out at the hearing. The ordinary objection to the form of a question is, that it is leading.

So, if an answer is objectionable because not responsive to the question, it must be excepted to on that ground in writing, before the Commissioner; because, if then excepted to, the questioner may ask a question expressly to get the benefit of the irreponsive matter, and thus make it competent evidence. All of the reasons and rules, applicable to objections to the form of a question, equally apply to objections to the form of an answer.

What is meant above by exceptions to the substance of a question are exceptions because the question is (1) impertinent, irrelevant, or immaterial, or (2) calls for hearsay, or (3) for parol proof of a writing, or (4) for privileged communications, or (5) for matter that would tend to criminate the witness, or (6) seeks to change a written agreement, or a will, by oral evidence, or (7) otherwise violates some rule as to the admissibility of evidence.

The Commissioner should never undertake to rule out a question, unless it is so manifestly ridiculous, or scandalous, as to be a matter of contempt. The opposite party should be allowed to write his objection to a question or answer, upon the face of the deposition; but he must not call upon the Commissioner to rule on his objection.\(^{21}\)

\(^{18}\) 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 285; Dan. Ch. Pr., 855.

\(^{19}\) Dan. Ch. Pr., 1063; post, § 775.

\(^{21}\) If Commissioners were given the right to pass on the admissibility of evidence, it would result in giving them the right to decide the lawsuit itself; for the Chancellor would be restricted to such evidence as the Commissioners saw fit to allow. It is a gross usurpation of authority for a Commissioner to exclude any evidence from the consideration of the Court, and the party invoking such action on the part of the Commissioner should be operated with all the costs occasioned thereby.

Commissioners should, however, suppress all wrangling between parties, or their Solicitors, or agents, at the taking of depositions; especially wrangling over the admissibility of evidence, or the legality of questions or answers. What parties wish to say by way of objection, let them reduce it to writing on the face of the deposition, or on a separate paper to be attached to the deposition.
ARTICLE VI.

EXCEPTIONS TO DEPOSITIONS.

§ 497. Exceptions to Depositions Generally Considered.

§ 498. Various Grounds of Exception.

§ 499. When Exceptions Must be Taken.

§ 500. How Exceptions are Taken and Ruled on.

§ 501. When and How Exceptions Must be Disposed of.

§ 497. Exceptions to Depositions Generally Considered.—Exceptions to evidence are of three kinds: 1, Exceptions taken to the competency of the witness; 2, Exceptions taken to the competency of the evidence; and 3, Exceptions taken to the admissibility of the deposition because not taken according to law. The last kind of exceptions do not question the competency of the witness, or the competency of the evidence, but merely questions the manner in which such evidence has been obtained, and brought before the Court. 1

In order (1) to give the opposite party an opportunity to be present and cross-examine the witness whose deposition is taken, and (2) to have the testimony fairly taken down, and (3) to secure it from alteration after it is taken, the law provides certain preliminaries, requirements, and safeguards, the violation or non-observance of any one of which will vitiate the deposition, if it is excepted to on that ground. As such exceptions, however, do not go to the substance of the deposition, but to its form, and are in the nature of matters in abatement, the law requires that they be made and disposed of before the trial is commenced, or they will be considered as waived. On the other hand, exceptions to the competency of the witness, or of his evidence, may be taken at the trial when the deposition is offered, or the evidence is sought to be read.

The object of exceptions to a deposition is to suppress it, or rule it out of the case; and, if the exceptions are sustained, the deposition is suppressed, and cannot be read at the hearing. The suppression of a deposition will not prevent the party taking it from, at once, retaking it, unless his time for taking such proof has expired.

§ 498. Various Grounds of Exception.—The grounds of exception to the admissibility of a deposition have reference mainly to the form, manner, and time, in which it was taken, and transmitted, and to the various formalities prescribed to secure a fair deposition, and preserve it from alteration.

The following are the principal grounds of exception to the admissibility of depositions:

1. Exceptions for Want of Notice. The statute requires that notice of the time and place of taking depositions, shall be served upon the opposite party; and a deposition may be excepted to for want of such notice. The requisites of this notice have been given in a previous section. 2 The opposite party may waive notice or may attend, or have an agent in attendance, without notice, in any of which cases he is estopped from excepting for want of notice. 3 A notice that is not sufficiently long is, in effect, no notice, and may be disregarded by the party on whom it is served. Notice cannot be given to take depositions at two different places on the same day; 4 nor can the Commissioner postpone the commencement of the taking. 5

1 An exception to a deposition is one thing; an exception to the evidence contained in the deposition is an entirely different thing. The deposition may be subject to exception, while the evidence, contained in the deposition, is absolutely exceptionable; and so, the deposition may be utterly free from exception, while the evidence it contains is wholly inadmissible. 2 Ante, § 481. 3 Ibid. 4 Blair v. The Bank, 11 Hum., 84. But the party notified must attend at one place or the other; or he cannot be heard to object. Ibid. 5 Where the notice is to take the deposition on a certain day, the Commissioner cannot postpone it to another day; but if the notice be to take on a certain day, and the deposition is then commenced, and it becomes impracticable to finish it on that day, it may be finished on the next day. Read v. Patterson, 11
2. Exceptions Because Not Taken at a Proper Time. A deposition may be excepted to if taken before suit was brought, if the statutory prerequisites were not complied with.  6 § 498
So may a deposition be excepted to if taken after suit was brought, but before issue joined, when such taking was not authorized by the statute, or by the Court, or by the Clerk and Master; or, if authorized, was not taken in the manner authorized.  7 If a deposition is taken after the time for taking proof has expired, or during the trial term, it may be excepted to on that ground, unless taken on a proper order, or by consent of the opposite party.  7a So, if proof in chief is taken after the time for taking proof in chief has expired, but while proof in rebuttal may be taken, the deposition may be excepted to in so far as it contains proof not in rebuttal.  8

3. Exceptions Because Irregularly Taken. A deposition may be excepted to: (1) when taken by a person not authorized to take depositions, or who is interested, or of kin, or counsel, to one of the parties; or, (2) when it does not appear that the witness was sworn; or, (3) when a witness makes answers prepared for him by another, or adopts another’s evidence; or, (4) when a witness copies a form of deposition previously by him prepared, or merely re-swears to a former deposition;  9 or, (5) when a witness fails, or refuses to answer proper interrogatories; or, (6) when a deposition was not reduced to writing by the witness, or the Commissioner;  10 or, (7) when a deposition is not signed, or sworn to, by the witness; or, (8) when the deposition is illegible; or, (9) when the deposition has been altered since it was taken; or, (10) when the witness was re-examined to the same facts by the same party without an order;  11 or, (11) when the witness refused to answer proper questions;  12 or, (12) when the party excepting was not allowed to ask a proper question, or proper questions were ruled out by the Commissioner; or, (13) when the questions are leading, to an excessive degree;  13 or, (14) when the witness was allowed to retire during his examination, and to have private conferences with the party examining him, or with his counsel; or, (15) when the witness was deeply intoxicated during his examination; or, (16) when his testimony is scandalous; or, (17) when he refused to be cross-examined, or the exceptant had no opportunity to cross-examine him;  14 or, (18) when any other irregularity occurred during the taking of the deposition, or since, whereby the excepting party has been injured without his fault.  15

4. Exceptions Because of Informalities in the Deposition. The statute prescribes the forms of the caption and of the certificate of a deposition, and if these forms are substantially departed from, an exception will lie for that reason. Such informalities consist of: (1) omission or misstatement of the style of the cause, or of the Court where pending; (2) failure to show that the witness was sworn; or (3) other defect in the caption; (4) failure to show who reduced the dep-

7 Anle, § 474. But a party who cross-examines a witness cannot except to the deposition on the ground that the cause was not at issue when it was taken. Harton v. Lyons, 13 Pick., 180.
8 In case of such exceptions, the Chancellor, on appeal, will allow the deposition to stand de bene esse, and will reserve his decision on the exceptions until the hearing. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 951, note; otherwise, it might be necessary to hear the pleadings and proof all read before he could determine the correctness of the exceptions.
9 Shea v. Mabry, 1 Lea, 331; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 907, note; 929.
10 A deposition cannot be reduced to writing by a third person even when he is so directed by the Commissioner. E. T., V. & G. Railroad Co. v. Arnold, 5 Pick., 197. The parties may, however, consent that a third person may write the answers of the witness.
11 Ch. Rul. II, § 6. In such a case, on appeal, the Chancellor will, unless the point be very clear, permit the deposition to stand de bene esse, and reserve the decision of the appeal until the hearing. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 951, note.
12 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 951, note.
13 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 922.
14 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 939. Some of the foregoing grounds of exception are of such a character that their sufficiency must be largely a matter of discretion; Underhill v. Cau Cordes, 1 Toma, Ch. 339, and Baney v. Baney, Ch. Pr., 951; depending on the aggravation of the particular irregularity. The irregularities may be shown by affidavit; Smith v. Coke, 1 Tenn. (Overt.), 296; or by the evidence of the Commissioner, or of the witness himself, or of other witnesses. In Oliver v. The Bank, 11 Hum., 74, the defect in the deposition not appearing on its face, it was proved by a witness, and the deposition ruled out. It was said in Wilson v. Smith, 5 Yerg., 407, that when a Commissioner sustains the necessary official character to act as such "the Court will give credence to all he certifies." Can then a Commissioner certify to matter, transpiring at the taking of the deposition, which would make it subject to exception? See Carter v. Ewing, 1 Tenn. Ch., 212; 3 Greenl. Ev., § 346. Where the questions in a deposition are grossly leading, the Court may disregard the evidence at the hearing, without any motion being made to suppress it, or any exceptions being taken to it. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 922.
osition to writing; (5) or showing that it was reduced to writing by an unauthorized person; (6) failure to show that the Commissioner was not interested, or not of kin, or of counsel; or, (7) failure to show that it was sealed up, and properly transmitted, without being altered or out of his possession; or (8) failure of the Commissioner to sign it; or (9) other defect in the certificate.

5. Exceptions Because of Irregularities After the Taking. A deposition may be excepted to for irregularities occurring after it was taken, such as, (1) the Commissioner may not properly envelope, or seal it; (2) he may not properly endorse the title of the cause on the envelope; (3) he may not write his name across the seal of the envelope; (4) he may not show what he did with the deposition after it was taken; (5) the person to whom it was delivered may not have made the affidavit required by the statute; (6) the Clerk and Master may not have endorsed on the deposition the source whence received, and that it was opened by him.

§ 499. When Exceptions Must be Taken.—The Code requires that all exceptions to depositions for want of notice, because not filed in reasonable time, or for other causes going to the admissibility thereof, except objections to the competency of the witness, or of his evidence, shall be made and disposed of before the commencement of the hearing, or trial, otherwise they will be considered as waived. Hence, all exceptions to a deposition, not based on the incompetency of the witness, or of his evidence, must be taken before the trial is commenced. It is not too late to take an exception after a cause has been reached on a call of the docket. The hearing, or trial, of a cause does not commence until some affirmative step has been taken, such as beginning to select the jury, or to read the declaration, or the bill, or to make a verbal statement of the case preliminary to reading the declaration, bill, or petition. The mere announcement of a readiness to try would not be the commencement of the hearing, or trial; but any affirmative step taken thereafter, such as swearing the jury, or reading the bill, or the like, would constitute such a commencement. Nevertheless, it would perhaps be too late for a party to file exceptions after announcing his readiness to try, on the case being called; but he would probably be allowed after such announcement, and before the commencement of the trial, to appeal from the action of the Clerk sustaining exceptions to his depositions, or to demand the action of the Court on appeals from the Clerk’s ruling, in cases where he had had no notice of such exceptions, or ruling.

§ 500. How Exceptions are Taken, and Ruled On.—Exceptions to depositions must be in writing, and must specifically point out the precise ground of exception to the deposition, after the manner of a special demurrer, or of exceptions to a Master’s report. A general exception to a deposition should always be overruled.

EXCEPTIONS TO A DEPOSITION.

The defendants except to the foregoing deposition of John Doe:
1st. Because the defendants had no notice of the time and place of taking the same.
2d. Because the deposition was taken after the complainant’s time for taking proof had expired.
3d. Because the deposition was taken by a person not authorized by law to take depositions.
4th. Because the certificate does not show what was done with the deposition after it was taken.
5th. Because there is nothing on the deposition, or annexed thereto, showing whence, how, or from whom, the Clerk and Master, received the deposition, or that the messenger made the required affidavit.

JAMES C. FORD, Solicitor.

17 There should be a rule of Court requiring the Clerk to notify the opposite party of the filing of exceptions, or the taking of appeals. Code, § 4422.
18 Ordinarily, only one or two grounds of exception will appear; more are given in the text merely for illustration.
The Clerk and Master will at once consider the exceptions, and forthwith write under them his rulings,\(^\text{20}\) as follows:

RULING OF THE CLERK ON EXCEPTIONS.

The foregoing exceptions are allowed [or, sustained.]

July 2, 1891. \(^\text{21}\) \(^\text{\textit{\textbf{[Or]}}}\) \(^\text{John J. Graham, C. & M.}\)

The foregoing exceptions are disallowed, [or, overruled.]

July 2, 1891. \(^\text{\textit{\textbf{[Or]}}}\) \(^\text{John J. Graham, C. & M.}\)

The 1st and 3d of the foregoing exceptions are sustained; and the others are overruled.

July 2, 1891. \(^\text{\textit{\textbf{[Or]}}}\) \(^\text{John J. Graham, C. & M.}\)

\(\text{§ 501. When and How Exceptions Must be Disposed of.}\) — All exceptions to depositions, for want of notice, or for failure to comply with any statutory requirement, or formality, or on any other ground, not going to the competency of the witness, must be made in writing before the Clerk,\(^\text{21}\) and be disposed of before the commencement of the hearing, or trial, or they will be considered as waived.\(^\text{22}\) The ruling of the Clerk on the exceptions disposes of them, if such ruling is submitted to by the party ruled against. If, however, either or both of the parties are dissatisfied with the decision of the Clerk, an appeal may be taken therefrom to the Chancellor.\(^\text{23}\) The entry of the appeal should be immediately under the entry of the Clerk’s ruling, in form substantially as follows:

APPEAL FROM THE CLERK’S RULING.

Complainant appeals to the Chancellor from the foregoing decision.

July 2, 1891. \(^\text{JAMES H. Lewallen, Solicitor.}\)

Appeal taken July 2, 1891.\(^\text{24}\) \(^\text{\textit{\textbf{[Or]}}}\) \(^\text{John J. Graham, C. & M.}\)

This appeal should be brought by the exceptant to the attention of the Chancellor, at the earliest moment possible. If the appeal is acted on in vacation, the Chancellor will endorse his action on the paper containing the exceptions, or on a paper annexed thereto, as follows:

CHANCELLOR’S RULING ON THE APPEAL.

The foregoing appeal heard; and the exceptions overruled, [or, sustained.]

July 3, 1891. \(^\text{John P. Smith, Chancellor.}\)

If Court is in session, the action of the Chancellor may be entered on the minutes, instead of endorsed on the paper containing the exceptions.

If the Clerk overrules the exceptions to a deposition, the exceptant must take and prosecute an appeal from the ruling of the Clerk, or he will be deemed to have waived his exceptions. If the Clerk sustains the exceptions, the party taking the deposition must appeal, or he will not be allowed to read the deposition at the trial.\(^\text{25}\) An appeal vacates the ruling of the Clerk, and leaves the deposition as though the exceptions had never been acted on by the Clerk. If, therefore, the Clerk sustains an exception, and an appeal is taken, the appeal vacates his ruling; and, unless the exceptant calls upon the Chancellor to act upon his exceptions, before the trial begins, they will be considered as waived. The exceptant must see to it that his exceptions are finally disposed of, before the commencement of the hearing, or trial. Therefore, when the Master sustains his exceptions, and the Master's ruling is appealed from, inasmuch as such appeal vacates the Master’s action and leaves the exceptions undisposed of, the duty devolves on the exceptant, and not on the appellant, to have the exceptions

If the regularity or admissibility of the deposition, regardless of the evidence it contains, is to be excepted to, the exceptions must be filed, and finally acted on, before the trial begins. Travis v. Laurance, 2 Shan. Cas., 109; Railroad v. Harris, 17 Pick., 527. If the evidence contained in the deposition is to be excepted to, regardless of the regularity or admissibility of the deposition, the exceptions must be made after the trial has begun, and when the exceptional evidence is offered, or at least before the evidence is closed. exceptions acted on by the Chancellor; and, if he fails to do so before the trial begins, his exceptions will be considered as waived, and the deposition may be read. In short, a deposition may always be read, unless there is standing against it, when the trial begins, an exception sustained without appeal; and it is too late after the trial begins either to take exceptions, or to appeal from the Master's ruling, or to call for the action of the Chancellor on an appeal already taken.

ARTICLE VII.

AMENDMENT OF DEPOSITIONS.

§ 503. What Amendments to Depositions May be Made.

§ 502. Amending Depositions Generally Considered.—Under the old practice, when the contents of a deposition were kept secret from everybody except the Commissioner himself, when it was considered a grave matter to allow the testimony to be known until all the proof in the cause had been taken, and when this secrecy was deemed essential to prevent perjury, amendments to either the form, or the substance, of the deposition, were allowed with very great hesitancy, and only for extraordinary reasons. But now that depositions are openly taken in the presence of both parties, and especially as the Commissioners have often but little experience in taking depositions, it would seem that there should be the same opportunity to amend depositions as is allowed in other proceedings in Court, to the end that justice may be attained, and causes be tried on their merits without being entangled in the nice formalities of the law. And it is accordingly, a common practice now to allow depositions to be amended when there is an informality or imperfection in the taking or transmitting of it, or when there is some error, omission, or mistake, in the evidence contained in it.

§ 503. What Amendments to Depositions May be Made.—Any defect, omission, or imperfection, resulting from accident or mistake, either in the form of the deposition, or in the transmission of it, or in the substance of it, may be amended, when the fact of the defect, omission, or imperfection, and of the accident or mistake causing it, is clearly made to appear in the manner stated in the next section.

1. Amendments to the Substance of a Deposition. When a witness has made a mistake in his testimony, or has omitted to answer some part of the interrogatories, or the Commissioner has omitted to take down, or has erroneously taken

27 If your exceptions are overruled by the Clerk, you may take and prosecute an appeal before the trial begins, or your exceptions will go for nought. If your exceptions are sustained by the Clerk, and the other party appeals, you must have the Chancellor act on your exceptions before the trial begins, or they will be considered as waived. Carter v. McBroome, 1 Pick., 378. If exceptions to your depositions are sustained by the Clerk, you must appeal, or your depositions go for nought. Brandon v. Mullinix, 11 Heisk., 446; Hawkins v. McNamara, 1 Heisk., 352. If you have grounds of exception to your adversary's deposition, you must take them and have them finally acted on before the trial begins, or you will be deemed to have waived them. Sugg v. Ellis, 11 Heisk., 80; Shea v. Mahby, 1 Lea, 119. A deposition may be read, if not specially excepted to before the trial begins, even when it is accompanied by neither caption, certificate, notice, commission, or authority of any kind for taking the same; and when nothing appears but the style of

to. A general objection to such a deposition will be construed as referring merely to the competency, or relevancy, or legal effect, of the testimony contained therein, and not as embracing any matter of form, or question of regularity, or authority, in the taking of such deposition. Garvin v. Luttrell, 10 Ham., 16; Miller v. State, 12 Lea, 223.
1 Code, § 2968; Bewley v. Ottinger, 1 Heisk., 354.
2 Hunter v. Sevier, 2 Yerg., 136.
Many errors in pleadings, depositions and decrees, some indelicate, others perplexing, and still others downright injurious, result from typewriters and stenographers either misunderstanding the words dictated, or misreading their stenographic notes. Even our statutes contain many such errors: thus by the Act of 1885, ch. 93, Milliken and Vertrees were "authorized, directed and empowered to revise, digest and qualify [codify intended] all the general statutes in force in this State;" and the Act of 1887, ch. 136, refer to their work as "Milliken & Vertrees' compilation [meaning compilation] of the laws of Tennessee." Courts should be very liberal in allowing such and similar errors to be corrected, even at down, some part of his answer; and in other like cases, where the defect of evidence has resulted from accident or inadvertence, leave to supply the defect and correct the error by a re-examination of the witness will be granted by the Court. In such cases, however, the re-examination will be restricted to the supply of the defect, or the correction of the error, without retaking any other parts of the testimony, unless the entire original deposition has been suppressed. 2

2. Amendments to the Form of a Deposition. Any defect, omission, error, or imperfection, in the form of the caption, or of the certificate, or in the signing of the deposition, or of the certificate, or in the endorsements on the envelope, or in the affidavit of the messenger, or in the endorsement of the Clerk, may be amended when such defect, omission, error, or imperfection is evidently the result of accident, or mistake, or inadvertence.

§ 504. How Amendments to a Deposition are Made.—Amendments may be desired either in, or to, the evidence contained in the deposition, or in the formalities incident to its taking.

1. Amendments in, or to, the Evidence. A witness has the right to read, or have read to him, the whole of his deposition, before he can be required to sign it. He may make any correction in his testimony, by an explanatory addition thereof, at any time before he departs from the presence of the Commissioner, "though the deposition be signed and closed, but he can make no change or addition after he departs, except by leave of the Court for that purpose, which leave the Court will sometimes grant, on proper application therefor.

The ordinary method of showing to the Court the fact and circumstances of the mistake, is by the affidavit of the witness; but the mistake may, also, appear from the certificate of the Commissioner, or upon the face of the deposition itself, or otherwise. Knowledge of the mistake is the important fact, and the Court, when once it has knowledge of the fact, will act upon that knowledge, regardless of the manner in which it may have been obtained.

Sometimes, in cases of clear mistake, involving only a verbal alteration, the Court, instead of ordering a re-examination of the witness, will permit the deposition to be amended on its face in open Court. This has been done by the alteration of a date stated by the witness by mistake, or by the correction of a mistake by the examiner; especially where the witness was old, and very deaf, the mistake being first clearly shown and proved, to the entire satisfaction of the Court. So, the Court would allow a witness to sign his deposition in open Court, when he had inadvertently neglected to do so, at the taking.

2. Amendments in, or to, the Form of the Deposition. If there has been any error or mistake by the Commissioner, in any matter of form in the caption, or certificate, of the deposition, or in the signing of the certificate, or in the endorsements on the envelope, the Commissioner, on motion for that purpose by any party interested, may, in open Court, under the direction and supervision of the Court, correct such error or mistake, making the amendment under his official oath. Such amendments, however, must state the facts as they really existed at the time the deposition was taken; and are made nunc pro tunc.

In like manner, if the Clerk and Master has neglected or failed to make the proper endorsements on the deposition after receiving or opening it, he, or motion, may be allowed in open Court to correct any error, or supply any defect, in such endorsements.

So, any failure on the part of the messenger to make the necessary affidavit,

8 3 Greenl. Ev., § 346.
The Chancellor may, unless the case is very clear, examine both the witness and the Commissioner, or require their affidavits, or even their depositions, so that cross-questions may be asked. See, 1 Dan. Ch.
Pr., 535.
11 3 Greenl. Ev., § 347.
12 Bewley v. Ottinger, 1 Heisk., 354; Eiler v. Richardson, 5 Pick., 575; Carter v. Ewing, 1 Tenn. Ch., 212.
when the deposition is sent by private conveyance, may be corrected at any time, by the messenger in person making the necessary affidavit; and it is probable that this may be done without the leave of the Court. 8

Amendments to the form of a deposition may be made, even after the deposition has been ruled out by the Clerk on exceptions based on the very de-fiency sought to be corrected by the amendments. In such case, the proper practice is, not to appeal from the Clerk’s ruling, but to obviate that ruling by applying to the Court for leave to make the amendment, and then making it accordingly. 9

Amendments must, however, be made before the beginning of the hearing, or trial, if the deposition stands ruled out, or suppressed, on exceptions.

ARTICLE VIII.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS ABOUT DEPOSITIONS.

§ 505. Rules for Questioning Witnesses.—Oftentimes, many unnecessary questions are propounded to witnesses, thereby unduly prolonging the examination, and needlessly swelling the record. This vexatious prolixity of aimless interrogation ordinarily arises from a failure to comprehend the real matters in issue. No question should ever be asked without a definite object, and that object should be either (1) to prove, or disprove, a matter in issue; or (2) to corroborate, or contradict, evidence already taken, or a witness already examined; or (3) to lay grounds for such corroboration or contradiction; or (4) to test the accuracy, veracity, or credibility, of a witness; or (5) to shake his credit by injuring his character, or general reputation; or (6) to give him an opportunity to explain. 1 Hence, it is indispensable to a lawyer-like examination that the questioner shall have well in mind (1) the issues contained in the pleading, (2) the evidence already taken in the cause, and (3) what can be proved or disproved by the witness.

1. Complainant’s Questions should, ordinarily, seek to draw out of the witness what he knows: (1) in reference to the truth of the affirmative matters of fact alleged in the bill; (2) in reference to the falsity of the affirmative matters of fact set up in the answer by way of avoidance; (3) in reference to the character, or hostile testimony, of the defendant’s witnesses; (4) in reference to any facts, or circumstances, tending to sustain the allegations of his bill, or to cor-rorbating the evidence, or witnesses, he has already introduced; and (5) in reference to any facts, or circumstances, tending to rebut the evidence, or discredit the witnesses, of the defendant.

2. Defendant’s Questions should, ordinarily, seek to show what the witness knows: (1) in reference to the falsity of the claims set up in the complainant’s bill; (2) in reference to the truth of any affirmative allegations set up by himself, by way of avoidance; (3) in reference to the character, or hostile testi-

8 The Clerk and Master may administer the oath to the messenger at any time before the hearing begins.

9 Bewley v. Ottinger, 1 Heisk., 354. In such a case, an appeal from the Clerk’s ruling would be in vain, as his decision would be correct, and would to the Court to have the defects and omissions in the depositions corrected according to the facts.

1 All evidence should be pertinent, material, pro-bative, explanatory, rebutting, corroborative, or cumulative.
mony, of the complainant’s witnesses; (4) in reference to any facts, or circumstances, tending to refute the evidence, or witnesses, of the complainant; and (5) in reference to any facts, or circumstances, tending to sustain his matters in avoidance, or to corroborate the evidence, or witnesses, he has already introduced.

Solicitors should avoid putting leading questions to their own witnesses; such a practice is not only grossly illegal, but is a direct injustice to the other side. And if the witness is easily led, and led too far, the opposite side will be apt to expose his ignorance, or his dishonesty. If, however, a witness is hostile to the party calling him, or is unwilling to testify, the Court will allow leading questions to be asked.²

§ 506. How to Examine a Witness.—As a rule, begin your direct examination of a witness by asking him his name, age, business, place of residence, how near he lives to the parties, or the property in dispute, his relationship to any of the parties, and how long he has known them, and what interest he has in the subject-matter in controversy, if any. These questions are generally of value in weighing the evidence of the witness; and they, also, have the effect of putting the witness at ease. As the Chancellor cannot see and hear the witness give in his evidence, the facts called forth by the above questions are often the only means he has of testing the comparative credibility of disagreeing witnesses.

Inspect upon your adversary’s witnesses being put under the rule, and examined separate and apart from each other, if you have any reason to suspect any concocted evidence, or false swearing. Witnesses on the same side often conform their testimony to that of those who have already testified.³ Oftentimes, your only chance to destroy false evidence is by having the witnesses examined out of each other’s hearing, and thereby involving them in conflict as to particulars and circumstances.⁴

Before you examine a witness, ascertain what he knows material to the controversy; this will render it unnecessary to ply him with a multiplicity of fishing questions, or to run a drag-net of general interrogations through his memory, in order to discover what he knows.

Never attempt to mislead an honest witness, or to entrap him. Deal fairly with those disposed to deal fairly with you. Be gentle with the young and timid; courteous to those disposed to tell the truth; firm and dignified with the flippant and impertinent; forbearing towards the ignorant and stupid; shrewd with the shrewd, and crafty with the crafty.

While a witness is being examined by the other side, keep a memorandum of points suggested by or during the examination, so that you will not forget to interrogate the witness in reference to them, when your turn comes to examine him. You should pay the closest attention to the examination when conducted by the other side, so that you may be able to object to the form, or substance, of any question propounded; and to see that anything favorable to your side in the answer of the witness is not omitted to be written down; and to prevent the entry of any thing unfavorable to your side, not said by the witness. Make all of your objections to the form, or substance, of questions, in writing, and neither argue them yourself before the Commissioner, nor allow the other side to argue them. The Chancellor, and not the Commissioner, is the proper officer to hear the arguments and pass upon the objections.

³ Weak witnesses are sometimes intentionally given a chance to hear other witnesses testify in advance of their examination, so that their recollection may be refreshed, and their confidence strengthened. By such means, a weak, or timid, or partial witness may be converted into a false witness, and learn to echo what he has heard others swear. Formerly, in Chancery, all witnesses were examined in secret, no one being present but the witness and the examiner, even Solicitors being excluded.

⁴ Witnesses often testify falsely because of defective memories, intending to swear the truth. When such witnesses are examined out of each other’s hearing, the deficiencies in their memories will become apparent from their conflicts; whereas, if they hear each other testify, they are apt to endeavor to make their testimony harmonize.
§ 507. How to Examine Your Own Witnesses.—It requires fully as much art and thought to properly examine witnesses, as it does to draw a pleading, or make a brief. In examining your own witnesses, you must keep in mind what proof you need to make, and what you can make by the particular witnesses you are examining.

1. Objects of the Direct Examination are (1) to prove the material affirmative allegations in your pleading; (2) to disprove the material affirmative allegations in your adversary’s pleading; (3) to destroy, or weaken, the evidence filed by the opposite party; and (4) to corroborate or sustain your own witnesses. Hence, in examining one’s own witnesses, it is all important to know (1) what you need to prove generally, (2) what has already been proved in the case, and (3) what you can prove by the particular witness you are examining. To know the first two you must know the contents of the pleadings, and the proof on file; to know the last, you, or your client, should have conferred with the witness before he was summoned. Solicitors who examine a witness without this three-fold knowledge, are like men groping for something in the dark, and they run like risks.

If your witness is young, timid, or diffident, ask him where he lives, how far he lives from the place in controversy, whether he knows the parties, or some similar questions, in order to put him at ease. If he is old, experienced in business, or self-possessed, observe a respectful courtesy in your demeanor, and proceed at once to the material facts you wish to prove. If he is flippant, or conceited, or disposed to be humorous or impertinent, be grave and dignified in your manner, and somewhat ceremonious, so as to impress the witness with the importance and solemnity of the examination.

2. Objects of the Re-examination are (1) to obtain from the witness an explanation of matters which are either not fully stated on the cross-examination, or which are apparently in conflict with his evidence on the direct examination; and (2) to prove by the witness some new fact, the proof of which is made necessary by the evidence elicited on the cross-examination. If the witness has been confused, or entangled, by the cross-examination, he may be given an opportunity to restate his evidence, and to disentangle himself.

Do not allow yourself to become annoyed because your witness has been worsted by the cross-examination; preserve your temper and equanimity, and open your re-examination by a reassuring tone and comforting manner, and so shape your questions as to enable the witness to readily recover his self-possession, and to correct, or explain, his inconsistencies, if any. By means of a skilful re-examination, a battered witness may often be repaired, and be enabled to leave the stand with his credit fully restored.

§ 508. How to Cross-Examine a Witness.—Never cross-examine a witness without a definite and pertinent object. Aimless, hap-hazard and random questions are not only of no benefit to the questioner, but they often result in drawing out answers that are a downright damage to him. Cross-examinations have, ordinarily, four objects: 1, To destroy, or weaken, the force of the evidence the witness has already given; 2, To draw forth some evidence in favor of the cross-examiner; 3, To destroy, or weaken, the credibility of the witness; and 4, To lay ground for contradicting him. Unless the witness is friendly, or wholly impartial, beware of trying to prove by him any fact material to your case, for an adverse answer from him may counterbalance your own proof on that point.

Witnesses to be cross-examined are, ordinarily, either (1) prejudiced against your side, or (2) friendly to your side, or (3) indifferent to both sides.

1. Witnesses Prejudiced Against Your Side should be cross-examined with great caution. If you can get along with your case without proving anything by them, never ask them any questions, except as to matters that may tend to impeach their evidence, or otherwise weaken its force. Show by them their kinship to the party calling them, their interest or feeling in the case, their unacquaintance with the facts, and any other matter that will impair the effect of their testimony. If, however, the witness knows the facts on which your success depends, and you cannot prove those facts by any other witness, but are obliged to tear the truth from the witness' throat, or wring it out of his heart, begin by asking him leading questions, as to the most remote circumstances of the case, circumstances so unconnected with each other that he cannot see the drift of your questions. Then, interrogate him as to circumstances nearer to the transaction, and draw nearer and nearer, until you reach the very time and place of the main fact. Do not, however, call on him to answer as to the truth of the main fact, until a contrary answer will be grossly inconsistent with the circumstances he has already sworn to, and will involve him in irreparable contradiction, and then demand of him whether, considering all he has testified to, the main fact is not as you claim it to be. Coerce a concession out of him, or demand an explanation of his glaring inconsistencies.

When an adverse witness, on cross-examination has answered several consecutive questions, by saying that he did not remember, inject a question covering a matter he has already sworn that he does remember; and, if he is dishonest, the chances are he will answer such question by saying that he does not remember, and will thus expose his wilful dishonesty, or gross unfairness.

When an adverse witness answers all of your questions in the negative, so change the form of your questions that a negative answer will make in your favor. Thus, if you wish to prove so and so, ask the witness if the contrary of so and so is not the fact. If, for instance, you wish to prove that A was not sober, ask such adverse witness if A was not perfectly sober on the occasion in question. An adverse witness will, on cross-examination, under the influence of seductive leading questions, and courteous demeanor, often admit some small circumstance, not deeming it worth an evasion. Truth, however, is so linked to truth, that a very small admission often necessitates another in confirmation, or explanation. In this way, admission after admission may be obtained, until the witness is hopelessly enmeshed in a web of contradictions of his own spinning. In order to get a witness to make an admission of remote circumstances, begin your cross-examination, as though you believed all he said, and had full confidence in his honesty, but wanted some small particulars which the other side had not called for.

2. Witnesses Friendly to Your Side, when introduced by the other side, are, as a rule, of more value to you than when introduced by yourself, because, (1) you can ask them leading questions, and (2) they cannot ordinarily be impeached, or contradicted, by the party introducing them. You should endeavor to prove by them every pertinent and material fact in their knowledge; and you may, as a rule, question them freely and unreservedly, for a witness friendly to you is apt to be somewhat hostile to the other side, because made a witness by them against his inclination.

3. Witnesses Who are Indifferent are dangerous, oftentimes, and must be cross-examined with care, lest they give you a damaging answer. If their indifference arises from general sullenness, be careful not to offend them, but be as courteous and suave as possible. If their indifference is the result of impartiality, then question them freely, but no further than the truth will warrant. If the heart of an indifferent witnesses can be won, he may prove a valuable acquisition; but if he is inclined to resent your advances, let him go: cave canem!

4. Witnesses When Intoxicated, Insubordinate, or Tampered With. If any irregularity occurs while taking a deposition, or depositions, prove it by a witness, or by the Commissioner. Among such irregularities may be mentioned (1) That a witness was intoxicated, or insubordinate, or quarrelsome; or (2) was tampered with by the opposite party, or his attorney. If a witness was in any way tampered with by the opposite side during his examination, or in any way approached, or stuffed, prove it by him while his deposition is being taken.

If important to show who is present at the taking of proof, show it by some witness, or by the Commissioner. You may question the witness as follows on the above matters:

QUESTIONS TO SHOW TAMPERING.

Have you not talked with X since the last question?
Did you not have a talk with X after I asked the preceding question, and before you answered it?
Have you not refreshed your recollection as to facts, figures, or dates, since your deposition began? or since you were summoned as a witness?
Please state in what way you so refreshed your recollection.
Please file the paper you so used in refreshing your recollection, and mark it exhibit A to your deposition.
Is not X present at the taking of your deposition, and is he not assisting in asking questions?
Has he not asked you some questions? If so, what ones?
Did X show you any papers when he talked with you about this case? What papers were they? Give their contents.

§ 509. Frame and Forms of Questions for Depositions.—It is a great saving of time and annoyance for proper questions to be propounded to a witness, whether his examination is on notice or on interrogatories; and is especially important in the latter case, as the opportunities of remedying any defect in question or answer is much less when the deposition is taken on interrogatories. To aid counsel in framing his questions, in the latter case, some common forms are here given. Counsel would do well, however, to divide many of these questions, 1st, because the witness may be confused by too many or too complicated questions being propounded at once; 2d, because Commissioners do not always take the trouble to have the witness answer all of the questions, main and subordinate, included in one interrogatory.

QUESTIONS FOR DEPOSITIONS.

1. Preliminary Questions.
   Q. State your age and occupation and post-office address. Do you know what this suit is about, and are you in any way interested in it? If so, state how.

2. To Prove Knowledge of Parties or Other Persons.
   Q. Do you know the parties to this suit [or O. P.] or any of them? and if any, which ones? And how long have you known them? [or, O. P.] If related to any of them, to whom and in what degree?

3. To Prove a Paper-Writing.
   Q. Look at the paper-writing here shown you, marked A, [or some other letter], and state whether you are acquainted with the handwriting of [naming person] and whether the name [giving name] subscribed to said paper-writing is in his handwriting. State whether or not the body of said paper writing, or any part of it, and if any what part is in his handwriting?

4. To Prove an Oral Agreement.
   Q. State whether you were present some time in the year 19..., when a conversation took place between complainant and defendant about [naming the subject]. If so, state that conversation fully, and what if anything was said about [naming the particular matter] State the agreement of said parties fully as to such matter.

5. To Prove a Written Agreement.
   Q. [Repeat the interrogatory above as an introduction]. State whether the said agreement or any agreement was then and there, or afterwards, reduced to writing and signed by said parties, or either of them and which one. Look at the paper-writing here shown you, marked [state how marked] and say whether or not it is the writing so signed. [If this witness is a witness to said agreement, then add:] Did you witness the signature of either or both parties to said paper-writing, and if either, which one. Did you, or not, subscribe your name to said writing as a witness? And is, or not, your name subscribed to said writing your own handwriting?

6. To Prove Hand-Writing.
   Q. Look at the paper writing now produced, marked A, purporting to be a promissory note for ........ dollars from B. C. [now deceased] to the complainant, dated the ........ day of § 509  SUGGESTIONS ABOUT DEPOSITIONS.  412

...I9..., and state whether or not you ever saw said B. C. write, or are you by any other means acquainted with his hand-writing? If so, state whether the body of said note is in his hand-writing? or whether his name subscribed thereto is in his own hand-writing?

Q. If you were ever in the employment of A. B., so state, and state in what capacity. Look at the book, here and now produced, and state whose book it is, and for what purpose it was used, and if it had a name or designation state it.

8. To Prove a Statement or Admission.
Q. State whether or not you are acquainted with A. B.? If so, and you heard him say anything about [state briefly what] give all he said on the subject. And if you know how he happened to make these statements, tell the circumstances.

9. To Prove an Account Stated.
Q. Did you ever, and if so when, make out an account in writing of the dealings and transactions between the complainant and defendant? If so, state how you happened to do so, and whether the complainant and defendant furnished you with any books, papers or memoranda to aid you, and if so what books, papers or memoranda? Specify them.
Look at the writing here shown you, marked A [or some other letter.] and state whether or not it is the account so drawn out by you, or a true copy thereof? State whether the paper-writing here shown and marked A contains a just and true account of all dealings and transactions between the complainant and defendant during the time appearing on its face, or are there errors, omissions or false charges therein, and if any point them out.
State whether you delivered, or mailed, a copy of said account so drawn out by you to the defendant, and if so which and when; and if you know whether the defendant received the same, so state.

10. To Prove a Deed, Note, Contract, or Other Writing.
Q. Look at the paper-writing here and now shown you, marked A, [or some other letter.] and state whether it was signed, or acknowledged by any person or persons in your presence as his, [her] or their act and deed. If so, state what person or persons, and whether he [or she] or they signed his, [her] or their names to, or acknowledged, said paper-writing. If either party signed by mark, state which party, and state who wrote the name of such party to said paper-writing.
[If this witness witnessed the paper-writing then add:]
Q. Are you, or not, a subscribing witness to the signing and delivering of said paper-writing? In whose hand-writing is your name subscribed to said paper?

11. To Prove a Payment.
Q. Were you present when the deed [mortgage, note, bill of sale, or other contract, stating if] was executed and delivered? If so, did you see the consideration money paid? If so, how much was paid and by whom and to whom? If the real consideration is not stated in said deed, tell what it was.

12. To Prove Acknowledgments of an Instrument.
Q. If you are acquainted with A. B., state whether or not and when you have heard him speak of a certain deed [note of hand, mortgage, deed of gift, bill of sale, or other written instrument] alleged to have been given by him to C. D., and whether or not he made any and what admissions or declarations in reference thereto. State all he said upon the subject.

13. To Prove a Tender of Money, or Other Thing.
Q. If you were present when A. B. is alleged to have made a certain tender to C. D., so state; and state all that then took place, and whether A. B. had the money [or other thing] present; and if so, how much money did he have, and whether he offered it to C. D., and whether C. D. accepted it. Give the date and place of this tender.

14. To Prove a Death.
Q. State whether or not you knew A. B.? If so, is he living or dead? If dead, how do you know that fact, from being present at his death, or at his funeral, or by public repute? or otherwise?

15. To Prove Service of a Notice, or Other Writing.
Q. State whether or not, on or about the ______ day of ______, 19.... [stating the date.] or at any other time, and when you delivered to C. D. a paper-writing, purporting to be a notice [or, a copy of a notice]; [state what it purported to be], from A. B.? If so, was or not it signed by said A. B.? Did you or not keep a copy [or the original]? Look at the paper-writing now shown you, marked A, and state whether or not it is a true copy [or the original] of the writing by you so delivered?

16. To Prove an Examined and Compared Copy of a Record.
Q. Look at the paper-writing here shown you, marked A, and state whether or not it is a true copy of any and what record of any and what Court [or office?] State whether or not you have carefully examined and compared said paper writing, here produced, with the original, and with whom, if anyone?

6 That is, who aided you, if any one, in making the comparison? Usually, one person reads the original while the other compares the copy.
17. To Lay Grounds to Contradict a Witness.

X. Q. Did you not have a conversation with A. B. at ..? [stating the place] on or about the .. day of .., 19... [stating the time:] about [state briefly what: ] and did you not then and there tell him that [stating what he is supposed to have said?] If you did not so state to him, tell what you did say to him at that time.

18. To Impeach a Witness on His Reputation.

Q. Are you acquainted with the general reputation of A. B. among his neighbors? Answer yes, or no, to this question. State what that reputation is—good, bad or what? State whether from that reputation you would believe A. B. on his oath?

Q. If you know of any other matter or thing relating to this suit that may throw light on it, or be of benefit to either the complainant or the defendant, please state it as fully as though specially and particularly questioned about it.

§ 510. Rebutting Evidence.—Never fail to do all the rebutting you can. Many good cases are lost, or greatly crippled, by failure to rebut. If your client has been proved to have done a damaging act, or made a damaging statement, or admission, be sure to put him on the stand to rebut the injurious evidence, if it be false, or if it be capable of a satisfactory explanation. Solicitors frequently fail to re-take their client’s depositions to rebut admissions, or acts, proved on them by the other side. Courts pay great attention to admissions by a party, when such admissions are clearly proved, and are not denied.

If the character or evidence of any of your witnesses is assailed, sustain them vigorously by rebutting evidence; and if they can aid you in this rebuttal, re-examine them. Corroborate your material witnesses as much as possible. A case is often lost for want of corroboration easily obtainable. The skill and diligence of a Solicitor are exhibited to the best advantage in marshaling his proofs so as to corroborate his own witnesses, and to rebut the proofs of the adversary.

§ 511. As to Exceptions to Depositions.—Remember, that all exceptions to depositions, (1) because not taken in time; or (2) for want of notice; or (3) for any defect in caption, or certificate, or in transmission; or (4) for other causes going to the admissibility of the deposition, must be made and disposed of, before the commencement of the hearing, or trial. Be careful, then, to get in all of your exceptions, and have them finally disposed of, before the cause is reached on a call of the docket; and, if any of your own depositions are excepted to, take all steps necessary to get rid of the exceptions: appeal, if the Clerk’s rulings are wrong; or apply to the Court for leave to have the informality corrected, if it be correctible. Remember, that an appeal from the Clerk’s ruling on exceptions annuls his rulings: therefore, if your adversary has appealed from the action of the Clerk sustaining your exceptions to his depositions, you must have his appeal acted upon by the Chancellor before the hearing is commenced, or your exceptions will go for naught.

§ 512. Exceptions to Evidence, When, Where, and How Taken.—The following are the principal rules governing the time and place for taking exceptions to evidence:

1. Objections to the Competency of a Witness may be made before he is examined, or as soon as his incompetency appears during the examination; but they must be made when his deposition is offered to be read at the hearing. The grounds of these objections will be stated hereafter.\(^7\)

2. Objections to the Form of the Question must be made when the question is asked, and before the answer is given, whether the question is asked while the witness’ deposition is being taken, or while he is being examined orally. Objections to the form of a question in a deposition must be in writing before the Commissioner, and must be repeated when the question is read in his deposition at the hearing, or the objection will be considered as waived. The opposite party will not be allowed to wait for an answer to an objectionable question, and object if he does not like the answer. His silence is a consent that the question may be answered: this same rule applies to objections to the substance of a question.\(^9\)

3. Objections to the Substance of the Question may be made in writing before the Commissioner when it is asked, and before the witness answers it, and this is good practice; but it must be made when the question is read in his deposition at the hearing, or it will be deemed to be waived.\(^10\)

4. Objections to Answers Because Not Responsive must be made before the Commissioner before another question is asked, and cannot be first made at the hearing. If the answer is illegal or irrelevant it may be objected to when made before the Commissioner, but must be objected to at the hearing.\(^11\)

5. Objections to Both Question and Answer because the evidence called for and given is irrelevant, incompetent or illegal, may be made before the Commissioner, but must be made before the Court when the question is read.\(^12\)

6. Objections to Evidence Heard by the Master on a Reference. When evidence is taken by, or offered before, the Master, on a reference to state an account, or make a report, incompetent evidence must be objected to before he closes the proof, or it cannot be objected to at the hearing of exceptions to the report. If the rule were otherwise, the evidence before the Chancellor might be different from that before the Master; besides, if the evidence had been objected to before the Master, the party offering it would have had the opportunity of curing or supplying the deficiency, if any.

§ 513. How to Read Depositions at the Hearing.—In reading depositions at the hearing, omit all formal parts, such as the style of the cause, the caption, the certificate, the number of questions, and the like. State the name of the witness and his age, and then read the first question and the answer thereto without any preteritory remarks. It is, ordinarily, unnecessary to say "question" before reading the question, or to say "answer" before reading the answer; the distinction between question and answer can, ordinarily, be indicated by the inflection of the voice.

A deposition taken by one party and not read by him may be read by the other party,\(^13\) if the evidence is competent. In such a case, the fact that the deposition was taken by the other party may be stated before the reading of it is begun.

CHAPTER XXVI.
MOTIONS PREVIOUS TO THE HEARING.

§ 514. Motions by the Complainant.—Motions have already been defined,¹ and will hereafter be fully considered in a separate Chapter.² The principal motions made by the complainant, between the perfection of his pleadings and the hearing of the cause, are the following:

1. Motions to Prepare His Case for the Hearing. These are: (1) motions to take a non-resident defendant's answer off the files, and to take the bill for confessed, because the defendant has failed to answer interrogatories in obedience to a peremptory order; (2) motions for a scire facias, and for a revivor of the cause; (3) motions for leave to file an amended bill to set up matters in being, but not known, when the original bill was filed; and (4) motions for leave to file a supplemental bill to set up matters that have come into being since the original bill was filed.

2. Motions to Protect, or Enforce, his Rights, Pending the Litigation. These motions are: (1) motions for an injunction, or a restraining order; (2) motions for a receiver; (3) motions for an attachment for contempt against the defendant, or against a witness; (4) motions by a wife for alimony; (5) motions to require money, choses in action, or other personalty, in possession of the defendant, to be deposited with the Master; (6) motions to impound, or loan out money; and (7) motions for an order on the defendant to produce and file deeds, contracts, or other documents, in his possession, which the complainant has the right to inspect.

§ 515. Motions by the Defendant.—The principal motions made by a defendant, after the issue has been made up, are the following: (1) for a rule on the complainant to take some step necessary to keep the suit in progress; (2) motions to dismiss the bill of a non-resident complainant because he has failed to answer interrogatories in obedience to a peremptory order; (3) motions to abate the suit for failure to revive on the death of the complainant; (4) motions for leave to file a crossbill to set up matters of defence that have arisen since the answer was filed; (5) motions to dissolve an injunction, or discharge an attachment; and (6) motions for leave to withdraw the answer, and file a plea or a demurrer.

² The Chapter on Motions deals in detail with the consequence, motions will be dealt with very briefly in this Chapter. See, ante, §§ 214-219; 256-262; 266-§ 516. Motions Common to Both Parties.—The following motions may be made either by the complainant or the defendant: (1) motions to require the adverse party to produce documents in his possession; (2) motions to shorten, or lengthen, the notice for taking depositions; (3) motions to extend the time for taking proof; (4) motions for leave to re-examine a witness, or retake a deposition; (5) motions in reference to exceptions to depositions; (6) motions for a trial by jury; (7) motions to consolidate two or more causes; (8) motions to revive on the part of the mover; and (9) motions for a continuance.

§ 517. Motions by a Quasi Party.—Receivers, guardians, and trustees, appointed by the Court, sureties on notes taken by the Master, purchasers at a Master’s sale, and the officers of the Court, may move the Court in reference to any matter wherein they are interested or concerned, connected with a suit.
(1) Receivers may apply for instructions; (2) guardians may apply for an allowance for their wards; (3) purchasers may ask to be relieved from their purchase; (4) the Master or Sheriff may apply for instructions as to his duty in any particular matter before the Court; and (5) persons who come in under a decree, to file and prove claims, may make motions in reference to their claims.

§ 518. Motions by a Stranger to the Suit.—A person, who is neither a party nor a quasi party to a suit, is termed a stranger. Such a person cannot, ordinarily, make any motion in the cause. The Court will, however, hear him, on petition, in the following cases: (1) on petition for leave to become a party to set up claim to property involved in the litigation; (2) on petition for leave to file a claim, or to come in under a bill, order, or decree, which allows creditors or claimants to become parties; (3) on petition for leave to reclaim property in the custody of the Court, or its officers; (4) on petition for leave to sue a receiver in order to establish a money demand against him, or to prove title to property in his possession; and (5) on petition in reference to a bid for property which the Master or receiver refused to receive, or to report.

ARTICLE II.

MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE.

§ 519. Motion for a Continuance.

§ 520. Form of an Affidavit for a Continuance.

§ 521. Terms Imposed on Continuances.

§ 522. Effect of a Continuance.

§ 519. Motion for a Continuance.—When a case is reached on the docket and called for trial, either party not ready for trial may move the Court to continue the cause, supporting his motion by affidavit or affidavits, unless the opposite side agree to the continuance. The affidavit must be both special and very strong, when the time for taking proof in chief has expired. An affidavit for a continuance should be made by the party in person; unless (1) he is prosecuting the suit by an agent, and then by the agent; or (2) unless he is unable to attend Court for any sufficient reason, in which case the affidavit may be made by his Solicitor, or any other person who has personal knowledge of the facts.

The affidavit for a continuance should show, with particularity:

If your client wishes a continuance on any present such affidavit. If a continuance is refused, ground at all debatable present such ground to the
and you lose the suit, your client will be less dissat-Court; and, if an affidavit in its support is advisable, fisfied.
1. The names and residences of the witnesses, whose depositions are desired to be taken and read at the hearing.

2. A detailed statement of the particular facts expected to be proved by each of these witnesses, such facts to be material to the issues involved, and favorable to the party asking a continuance.

3. The efforts put forth by the applicant to take the depositions of said witnesses. Such efforts should ordinarily be due attempts to take their depositions, or a sufficient reason given for not making the attempts. The efforts put forth must be such legal process as the law provides.

4. If the testimony was discovered too late to take their depositions, show that there was due diligence used in searching for evidence, and why these witnesses were not previously interviewed.

5. Show that the desired witnesses are within the jurisdiction of the Court, and amenable to process; and that their depositions can and will be taken within such reasonable time as the Court may allow.

6. If the desired witnesses live out of the State, show what grounds the affiant has for believing that their depositions can be taken in a reasonable time.

7. Show that the evidence of the desired witnesses could not have been supplied by any other known proof; and that there was no other witness or witnesses known to affiant by whom he could prove the same facts.

8. If affiant has been misled, or hampered, by the other party; or if his witnesses have in any way been interfered or tampered with by the other party, state the facts in detail, and show how he was thereby prevented from being ready for trial.

9. Aver that this application for a continuance is made not for delay, but in order that the affiant may have a reasonable opportunity to make his defence, and that justice may be done.

10. The affidavit should be based on the personal knowledge of the affiant; and, if on information and belief, the name of the informant should be given, and his affidavit should be presented in corroboration.

§ 520. Form of an Affidavit for a Continuance.—The following is a form of an affidavit for a continuance, based on the foregoing rules:

AFFIDAVIT FOR A CONTINUANCE.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al.,
In the Chancery Court, at Knoxville.

I.
By George Jones, who lives in Claiborne county, he has good reason to believe, and does believe, that he can prove that [Here set out in detail what you expect to prove by him, giving the particulars. General statements will be insufficient.] Affiant would have taken said Jones' deposition, but he did not learn the foregoing facts, or any of them, until six days ago, which was too late to have his testimony taken. Said Jones lives in Claiborne county, and affiant had no reason to suppose that he knew said facts, and [Here show why affiant did not interview Jones before, and why he did not suppose that Jones knew any material facts.]

II.
By said Henry Williams, who lives in this county, affiant has good reason to believe, and does expect and believe, that he will be able to prove that [Here set forth particularly what you expect to prove by him, stating the precise facts, and avoid general and sweeping averments of fact.] Affiant would have taken said Williams' deposition in due season, had it not been that said Williams was so sick that his physician forbade his examination. [Or, give such other reason for not taking his deposition as will show that you have not been negligent.]

This affidavit may, by paying proper attention to the matter in brackets, be used as a form and guide, either by a complainant or by a defendant.
§ 521. Terms Imposed on Continuances.—When a cause on the docket is called for trial, if either party be not then ready for trial, he may apply to have the cause continued. If he has had as much as six months in which to take his proof, no motion for a continuance should be entertained, unless supported by an affidavit showing that he has very strong evidence not yet taken, or filed, and a very strong excuse for not having taken or filed it, in due season. If the Chancellor, in such a case, should continue the cause, it should ordinarily be only upon the payment of one-half of the unadjudged costs of the cause; and if it be the second continuance by such party, then only upon the payment of all the unadjudged costs of the cause. If the applicant for a continuance has had a reasonable opportunity to get ready for trial, even though he has had less than six months in which to take his proof, the Chancellor should not heed his lounging and complainingly insist on a speedy hearing, prompted merely by the secret fear that the cause may be discovered. The proper maxim is: In preparatorio ad judicium factuor actori. (In matters preparatory to trial the complainant should be favored.) The old stage-coach methods of practice herefore pursued in Tennessee are not adapted to these days of railroads, telegraphs and telephones. The Courts should keep up with the times. Chief Justice Turney said: “Until communities have the assurance that they may command a ready redress of grievances and protection of rights, they will lack energy and firmness and respect for law. * * * It is expected—rightfully expected—of the Courts that they will do their whole duty in declaring and enforcing such rules as will secure speedy trials and just judgments, in all causes coming before them.” Wood v. Frazier, 2 Pick., 508.

Nothing spurs parties to diligence so effectually as the certainty that negligence will be visited with costs. No continuance should be granted except on affidavit showing good cause, and not then except on terms. Hart v. Scruggs, 1 Tenn. Ch. The rule requiring a party to pay costs, as the price of a continuance, is based on the maxim that “He who seeks equity must do Equity.” The Court

III.

By said John Smith and Charles Fen, who live in Union county, affiant expects, on good grounds, to be able to prove that [Here give the particular facts you expect to be able to prove by each witness. Statements that you expect to prove by a witness that you own the property in dispute, or that the defendant owes (or, does not owe,) the debt sued for, or that the defendant had (or, had none,) notice, or that the defendant did (or, did not do,) the wrongs charged in the bill, or that the defendant was (or, was not,) guilty of the fraud or other inequitable conduct alleged.—all such statements are too general: they are conclusions of law or inferences of fact rather than facts.] Affiant would have had the depositions of these two witnesses taken in time to read at the present term, if [Here show your excuse for not taking their depositions, stating particularly what efforts you made, if any, to take them, and why you were unsuccessful. If no efforts were made, state fully and clearly why not. If the adverse party has tampered with the witnesses, or has misled you, or in any way impeded or hampered you, show all the facts and circumstances connected with the conduct of which you complain.] application, unless it be supported by an affidavit showing diligence, and a good excuse for not having the desired evidence on file. If the parties have had less than two months in which to take proof, the cause will ordinarily be continued on mere motion of either party, and without terms. But where as much as four months’ time for taking proof has elapsed, the cause should not be remanded for taking proof for a longer period than four months.

Complainants in injunction and attachment suits should be required to put forth extraordinary diligence in preparing for trial; and severer tests should be applied, and harder terms imposed on complainants in such cases than in ordinary suits, if the injunction or attachment operates harshly on the defendant.

§ 522. Effect of a Continuance.—A party applies for a continuance because he is not ready to further proceed in the cause at that term, and when a continuance is ordered the cause is no longer before the Court for the balance of that term, and no further step can be taken in it at that term, unless (1) by consent of all parties in interest, or unless (2) the order of continuance is set aside on due notice to all parties interested.

RULING ON A MOTION FOR A CONTINUANCE.

This cause having this day been reached on the docket, the complainant, [or defendants,] moved for a continuance, and read the affidavits of himself and John Laggard in support of his, [or their,] application, on consideration whereof the Court continued the cause, and remanded the cause to the rules for two months, for the further taking of proof in chief, and for one month for proof in rebuttal, he to pay all the costs of the cause hereafter accruing. [Or, if the application is denied, omit all after the word "Court," and insert:] overruled the motion, and ordered the hearing to proceed; and thereupon the cause coming on to be further and finally heard this May 20, 1905, before Hon. Hal. H. Haynes, Chancellor, upon the original [and amended] bill [&c. See, post, § 568.]

should have no favors as between persons not under disability, except in so far as it favors those who are diligent; and the Chancellor has no right to grant a favor to one party at the expense of another. Favors should be paid for in costs; otherwise the party in default is rewarded and the party who has done his duty is punished.

A continuance always works an injury to one of the parties; and another maxim of Equity says that "where a loss must fall on one of two parties, it should fall on him whose act or default occasioned the loss," for otherwise, he would derive an advantage from his own wrong. A Chancellor should never deprive one party of the just rewards of his diligence, in order to relieve the other party of the just penalty of his negligence; for that would be to punish him who had done his duty, and to reward him who had failed to do his duty.

Judge Abraham Caruthers, in his History of a Lawsuit, (§ 341), says: "The Court, in granting continuances, may impose terms upon the party at whose instance the cause has been continued, by making him pay costs, or otherwise, as may best further the progress of the case, and the ends of justice." (Code, § 2942.) The Courts always had this power. The theory of the law is, that continuances are in the sound discretion of the Court. It is the strict legal right of the parties to have the cause tried at the time appointed by law; and if one asks delay, he asks what deprives the other of a strict legal right; and the Court may exact of him, as the condition upon which it will grant his request, that he shall yield to his adversary something which he is not in strict law entitled to, but which may be equally as necessary 'to the ends of justice.' He may be compelled to admit a deposition, or document, in evidence which ought to be, but cannot be admitted by the strict rules of law. He may be compelled to pay such part of the costs as the Court may, under the circumstances, think just, although by strict rules of law the costs are to abide the event of the suit. The Court, however, will take care that the terms exacted are not such as will defeat the ends of justice.

A party applying for a continuance is at the mercy of the Court. Cheatham v. Pearce & Ryan, 5 Pick., 668.

A party applying for a continuance is at the mercy of the Court which can impose terms as to the time, place and manner of taking proof. Cheatham v. Pearce & Ryan, 5 Pick., 668. If the applicant does not accept the terms he can withdraw his application.

If a longer period is allowed, the parties will often delay taking their proof until the week before Court; and then one side or the other will want a second continuance to rebut the proof thus recently taken; whereas, if only four months are allowed the Chancellor, or Master, may, in vacation, allow another month, when necessary, in which to take the rebutting evidence; and in this way the cause will become ready to be heard.

For various suggestions how to prevent the delay arising from amendments and continuances, see post, §§ 526-529.

If Hurst v. Selvidge, Thomp. Cas., 17; Crouch v. Bullen, 1 Heisk., 481.

A continuance obtained by fraud or imposition may be set aside on notice to the party obtaining it.
ARTICLE III.

MOTIONS TO DISMISS THE BILL.

§ 523. When Complainant Can or Cannot Dismiss His Bill.—The complainant is, ordinarily, the master of the suit, and, as a rule, can dismiss it at any time, before a decree, at his pleasure. But there are a few important exceptions to this rule, based on reason and good faith, and growing out of the fact that the Chancery Court, when justice requires it, will give a defendant all the rights of a complainant, and impose on the complainant all the liabilities of a defendant. This arises from the fact that the Court regards where a party stands on a vs. line as of less importance than where he stands on the line of justice and right, as shown by the pleadings and proof in the case.

The following are the principal exceptions to the rule which gives the complainant the right to dismiss the suit:

1. Where, on a bill for an accounting, there has been an interlocutory decree ordering an account.
2. Where a decree has been pronounced, adjudicating the principles involved in favor of the defendant.
3. Where the bill has been filed in behalf of others having concurrent rights, and one of these others offers a bond to cover all the costs of the cause and asks to be made a complainant.
4. Where the bill has been filed as a general creditors’ bill, and, on an account being taken the complainant is found to be a debtor and not a creditor, but various creditors have been duly made parties under the bill and proved their claims.
5. Where, in any case on the pleadings, a decree may be rendered in favor of the defendant, and steps have been taken to prepare the case for hearing since the answer was filed.
6. The dismissal of an original bill by the complainant will not be allowed to carry with it a cross-bill, or answer filed as a cross-bill, setting up grounds for affirmative relief, on which proof has been taken.
7. Where a husband and wife are co-complainants, and she a necessary complainant, the husband cannot dismiss the suit, without her consent given in open Court, or in the manner prescribed by the statute.

2. Code, § 3199; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 792; Fisher v. Stovall, 1 Pick., 316. He may dismiss his bill in writing in vacation. Code § 3199. At common law a plaintiff has the right to dismiss his suit whenever he may choose, except where the defendant pleads a set-off, as to which the defendant is a plaintiff, a plea of set-off being a sort of cross action. Riley & White v. Carter, 3 Hum., 230; Galbraith v. E. T. V. & G. R. R. Co., 11 Heisk., 173.
4. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 794.
6. In such and similar cases the defendant has a vested right to a hearing on the merits. When a complainant has instituted a suit that may benefit the defendant, or defendants, and especially in part for their benefit, and after the defendant, or defendants, have come into Court, at his instance, and filed an answer, or answers, setting up equities and asking for relief, it would be reprehensible trifling with the Court, and a gross exhibition of bad faith towards the defendant or defendants, for the complainant to try to dismiss the suit, and thus wilfully waste the time and labor of the Court, and unjustly disappoint the reasonable expectations of the defendant, or defendants, and require the matters in controversy to be litigated anew, with new expenditures of time, labor, and money.
7. Partee v. Goldberg, 17 Pick., 604. But complainant’s right to dismiss his bill is not defeated because defendant’s answer has been filed as a cross bill, when no bond has been given for a cross bill, and no appearance or answer thereto. Moore v. T illman, 22 Pick., 361.
8. No action in the name of husband and wife, commenced by the issuing of process, or pending in any Court, for slander of the wife, or for any other cause of action in which it is necessary to sue in the name of husband and wife, when the action survives to the wife, shall be dismissed by the husband, without the consent of the wife, given in open Court in term time; or in vacation, without the written order of the wife, witnessed by two witnesses with both of whom the Clerk of the Court is personally acquainted. And though such order be presented to the Clerk, yet the suit shall not be dismissed until ordered by the Court in term time. Code, §§ 2487-2488.
The fact that the statute gives the complainant’s Solicitor a lien on his right of action from the filing of the bill does not deprive the complainant of the right and power to dismiss his bill, whenever he chooses so to do.  A bill filed by a District Attorney, on the relation of another person to impeach the title of the defendant to a public office, may be dismissed by the District Attorney notwithstanding the protest of the relator.

§ 524. Motion by Complainant to Dismiss His Bill.—Subject to the exceptions in the preceding section, the complainant may, at any time before a decree, dismiss his bill on motion in open Court, or by writing filed with the Clerk in vacation. If there be several complainants, any one of them may dismiss his bill as to himself, when such dismissal will not injure his co-complainants. The complainant may dismiss his bill as to all of the defendants, or as to any one or more of them.

The following is a form of an ORDER DISMISSING A BILL.

In this cause, came the complainant this day by his Solicitor, and moved that he be allowed to dismiss his bill [as to the defendant, Richard Roe] which motion was allowed, and the bill [as to said Richard Roe] was dismissed accordingly. It is therefore ordered by the Court, that the bill in this cause stand dismissed [as to said Richard Roe] and that the defendants recover of the complainant, and David Doe, his prosecution surety, all the costs of the cause [accrued in consequence of said Richard Roe having been made a party] for which an execution is awarded.

If the dismissal is as to Richard Roe, only, the words in brackets will be inserted in the order; if the bill is dismissed as to all of the defendants, the words in brackets will, of course, be omitted.

If the complainant is not ready for trial, and is refused a continuance, he should dismiss his bill, and thereby avoid the bar that would result from his bill being dismissed at the hearing, by the Chancellor.

The dismissal of bills at the hearing will be fully considered hereafter.

But the Court may, at any time within thirty days, if the Court hold so long, for good cause shown and on due notice to the defendant, or his Solicitor, rescind the order of dismissal, and restore the cause to the docket.

§ 525. When the Court May, on its Own Motion, Dispose a Bill.—The Court may, on its own motion, dispose any bill that presents a case the subject-matter of which is wholly without the jurisdiction of the Court, or manifestly unfit for its consideration. If a bill has no equity on its face; if, on the facts alleged, the complainant is clearly entitled to no relief whatsoever, the Chancellor is not obliged to wait until the bill has been demurred to, or pleaded unto, or answered, or the cause brought regularly to a hearing; but he may, summarily, and on his motion, dispose the bill; for if, on his own statements, the complainant has manifestly no case whatever, and the dismissal of the bill at some stage of the cause is clearly inevitable, he has no right to complain if the Chancellor dismisses the suit before further costs have accrued. If the suit is being prosecuted under the pauper oath, and the burden of the costs for that reason is likely to fall on the officers of the Court, and the witnesses, there is all the greater reason why the Chancellor should, on his own motion, dismiss a frivolous bill. The Chancellor should not, however, dismiss a bill on his own motion, merely because it is inartificially drawn, if there be any Equity in it; nor because its cause of suit is defectively stated. If the bill is probably capable of being so amended as to develope a cause of action, the complainant should not be debarred from that right by the summary act of the Court, on its own motion. The true rule is probably this: If the affirmative facts stated in the bill show clearly and conclusively that no relief whatever can be grounded on these facts, the Chancellor may dismiss the bill on his own motion; but though the allegations of the bill are too defective to entitle the complainant to any relief, yet if those defects are capable of being supplied without contradicting any of the positive averments of the bill, in such a case the Chancellor has no right to dismiss the bill on his own motion: before he can have that right, the facts affirmatively alleged must manifestly oust the complainant of any right to any relief whatsoever.\footnote{14}

The Chancellor may, on his own motion, dismiss a bill because, on its face, it claims usury, or seeks to enforce a contract that is illegal, immoral or against public policy, or is filed to obtain a collusive or pro forma decree,\footnote{15} or to punish the defendant for a crime or misdemeanor, or because of champerty,\footnote{16} or the gross uncleanness of the hands of the complainant, as shown by his own bill. A Court of Equity will not lend its aid to enforce an illegal, or grossly inequitable, contract at the instance of a party who was an active participator in the iniquity, his own bill disclosing the turpitude.\footnote{17}

\section*{SUGGESTIONS HOW TO PREVENT DELAYS ARISING FROM AMENDMENTS AND CONTINUANCES.}

\subsection*{§ 526. Applications to Amend, or Continue, How Considered.}

\subsection*{§ 527. Rules to Prevent Delay.}

\subsection*{§ 526. Applications to Amend, or Continue, How Considered.—The Constitution says that ‘justice shall be administered without sale, denial, or delay.’ Chancellors are sworn to support, that is, to obey and enforce, this Constitution. To sell justice would be a crime, to deny justice would be an outrage akin to crime, and to delay justice is an intolerable wrong, for delay is equivalent to a denial while the delay continues: the virtue of justice often evaporates during the delay. Denial and delay are man and wife, and injustice and injury are their children. Nearly all the delays in a suit grow out of amendments and continuances.}

1. \textit{If Defendant asks to Amend, or Continue}, the Chancellor should consider (1) that a delay of justice is a \textit{pro tanto} denial; (2) that it is ordinarily to the interest of a defendant to have delay; and (3) that it is often part of a defendant’s tactics to seek delay, and to invent excuses for delay; and (4) that a defendant’s affidavit that his “application for leave to amend or continue is made not for delay, but that justice may be done,” means often, at most, justice from his point of view; and that generally his idea of justice is, merely to get a chance to prevent the complainant from obtaining the decree he is fairly and rightfully entitled to at the hands of the Court.

\footnote{2 Procrastination is an epidemic that infects all who minister in the Courts. The Sheriff who serves the writs, the parties and witnesses who are summoned, the Clerk who gets up the reports, the Solicitor who prepares the pleadings and takes the proof, and the very Judge himself, whose duty it is to see that all others do their duty, and that there is no procrastination, are all infected with the same epidemic, until Court files become hoary with age, the equities set up in them become stale and unprofitable, the Court itself falls into odium, and its proceedings are mentioned only to be the target for the feeble shafts of idle wit, or the flaming thunder-bolts of public indignation.}
2. If Complainant asks to Amend, or Continue, the Chancellor should consider (1) that the complainant has brought the suit, and forced the defendant to appear, and defend; (2) that all delays by the complainant increases the costs of the cause, and the fees of adverse counsel, and thereby works injustice to the defendant; and (3) that a complainant, who fails to diligently prepare his case for trial, converts the machinery of the Court into an engine of oppression; and transforms the spirit of justice into a Moloch of torture.

When a party is ready for trial, due time for preparation having elapsed, the Court should not rob him of the advantages of his diligence. Such a practice paralyzes diligence, demoralizes both parties, and degrades a Court of Justice to the low level of a dispensary of favors, and gives just occasion for the suspicion that either partiality and favoritism prevail, or that the Chancellor is deficient in the great virtues essential to his high office.

§ 527. Rules to Prevent Delay.—How to prevent delay becomes, therefore, a problem every conscientious Chancellor should studiously endeavor to solve. Down to the present, no solution has been found so simple, and yet so effectual, as the vigorous enforcement of the following rules:

1. That every motion to continue, made after the lapse of five months after issue, and every motion to amend made after the lapse of one month after answer, shall be supported by affidavit, showing clear merits, and fully excusing delay.

2. That the allowance of such motion to continue shall be conditioned on the payment of the costs of all proof thereafter filed; and if eight months shall have elapsed since issue, then the applicant for a continuance shall pay all the unjudged costs of the cause.

3. That, if any amendment, made as above stated, necessitates a continuance, the party amending shall pay the costs of all proof thereafter filed; and if a term has intervened since the answer was filed, the party amending shall pay all the unjudged costs of the cause, if his amendment necessitates a continuance.

No man has a right to cast his burdens upon his adversary, and compel him to bear them. We are commanded to love our enemies, but not to tax them to pay for our own losses. When, therefore, a party is prevented by sickness, death, accident, or mistake, from being ready for trial, it is grossly unreasonable for him to ask the Court to compel his adversary to bear, without compensation, the burdens resulting from a continuance, or an amendment. He who seeks Equity should do Equity; and he who seeks a continuance, or leave to amend, should do Equity, by paying costs proportionate to the benefits received by him, or to the burden imposed on his adversary.

The fact that the party seeking a continuance or an amendment, has been prevented from getting ready by reason of sickness, death, accident, or mistake, may be a just ground for allowing his motion; but it is no just ground for heaping burdens upon the other side. Continuances and amendments, when granted, should be paid for in costs. He who seeks a favor should do a favor. When one of two innocent persons must suffer a loss, he must bear it whose act, or neglect, caused the loss. The party continuing or amending causes an increase time is not delayed because the farmer was negligent, or sick, or otherwise burdened. Under the laws of Nature, each case is tried when reached, and there are no continuances; and yet no one blames the laws of Nature. The very reason that parties are negligent in preparing for trial is, because they believe they will be able to get a continuance. When they realize that no continuances will be granted, except for the most extraordinary causes, then they will prepare for the sessions of the Court as they will prepare for the seasons of nature; and continuances will become exceedingly rare. And then will come to pass that prophecy of our Constitution: "The Courts shall be open, and right and justice administered, without sale, denial, or delay." of costs and expenses, and should bear the burden thereof. If there has been ample time to prepare for trial, the party continuing or amending should be taxed with all the costs of the cause; in any event, he should, in such case, be taxed with the costs of all proof thereafter filed.

Parties dislike to pay costs before final decree; and Solicitors are fully aware of this dislike. The effect of this dislike and knowledge is to greatly stimulate diligence, both on the part of Solicitors and their clients. Parties who know that they will have to pay for favors will be slow to ask them, and quick to avoid the necessity of asking. The result is, great promptness in preparing for trial.

The application of the two foregoing maxims, (He who seeks Equity must do Equity, and, He who causes the loss should bear the loss,) regulates the discretion of the Court on the subject of continuances and amendments, by fixed equitable principles, readily understood, and easily applied. The party asking the favor gets it, and, therefore, cannot say he was denied the chance to present his case or proof fairly and fully before the Court; and the party resisting the application to continue or amend, cannot say that he was made liable for the costs occasioned by the favor granted to his adversary — and thus justice is done to all, and injustice to none.

§ 528. Exceptions to the Foregoing Rules as to Costs.—When, however, the suit is against an executor, administrator, guardian, partner, agent, trustee, or other person occupying a fiduciary relation toward the complainant, and the bill charges a breach of trust, it would be prudent for the Court, when the complainant is granted a continuance, or leave to amend, to reserve the adjudication of costs until the hearing; and if, at the hearing, the defendant should be found in the wrong, the costs incident to the favor granted should not ordinarily be adjudged against the complainant. The reason of this exception is, that no one should be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong. It is the duty of a fiduciary to fully disclose to the beneficiary every matter connected with the trust; and if, by reason of his failure or refusal so to do, a suit is brought, and a continuance or an amendment becomes necessary, such defaulting trustee should not be allowed to profit by his own default.6

Where, also, a continuance is necessitated by the fraud, or contrivance, of the opposite party, as a rule no costs should be adjudged against the party applying for such continuance; otherwise, the party guilty of the fraud would derive an advantage from his own wrong. It would be a fraud for a party to make an agreement, out of Court, with his adversary looking to a compromise, and then repudiate the agreement too late for his adversary to prepare for trial. The Court must not allow its rules to be used as snares by the artful to entrap the unwary. This would be to allow Justice to be wounded in her own temple, and with her own weapons.

Where the application for a continuance is based on accident or mistake, unmixed with fault or negligence on the part of the applicant, or is based on some misconduct of some officer of the law, without fault on the part of the applicant, the terms imposed as the price of a continuance might be reduced, or remitted entirely.

§ 529. Continuances by Consent,6 How Dealt With.—After the lapse of six months after issue, no continuance should be allowed on consent of parties, unless, (1) the agreement provides for the payment of at least one-half of the unadjudged costs of the cause; or (2) unless at least one-half of the unadjudged costs is divided between the parties by order of the Court. There should be a rule of Court to this effect. Continuances by consent, without the payment of costs, should not be allowed:

5 Loveman v. Taylor, 1 Pick., 1.
6 Chancery Rule VIII, § 1, was repealed at a called session of the Legislature, and the Act is probably unconstitutional. See, post, § 1197.
1. Because if parties intend to litigate, they should be required to litigate, and if they do not so intend, the suit should be terminated. They should not be allowed to confederate to defeat the rules of the Court in reference to continuances: such agreements are often mere evasions of the rules, and akin to a contempt of Court.

2. The officers of the Court, and the witnesses, are entitled to their fees; and the parties should not be allowed to deprive them of their just dues, by agreements to continue the suit.

3. The Chancellor owes it to the public to keep his dockets clean, and not to allow his Court to become a Rip Van Winkle cave for the slumber of lawsuits.

4. Unless costs are taxed in case of continuances by consent, the efficacy of all rules imposing costs in case of continuances will be greatly impaired; for Solicitors, ready in one case and not ready in another, will equalize their respective advantages and disadvantages by consenting to the continuance of both cases.

§ 530. The Rationale of Courts, and of their Jurisdiction.—The State having prohibited parties from settling their disputes by fraud or force is, therefore, under obligations to devise a better method of settling them. She has, accordingly, provided Courts and their ways and means of enabling a complainant to assert his just rights, and of giving a defendant a fair opportunity of disputing an unjust claim; and has empowered her judicial officers to decide the issues raised by the parties on their pleadings and proofs, and to right all wrongs, and to give to each party what is his due, and to require from each party what is due from him to the other.

Parties, having thus an opportunity to have their rights redressed, or to resist unjust demands, if they fail to take due advantage thereof, either by faults in their pleading, or deficiencies in their proof, or by negligence in preparation for trial, forfeit all right to complain of the decree pronounced against them, when such decree is based on the case as the Court found it, and the day for its determination had arrived in a due and orderly course of procedure, such case being made by themselves, and each with full and equal liberty to present everything he desired, or considered of value to his contention.

Hence it is that all disinterested men respect the vast majority of Court decisions, and consider Courts the best means of settling the contentions that arise among men.

§ 531. When a Cause is Ready for a Hearing.—Hearings take place when ever any matter is ready to be disposed of by the Chancellor, and the Court is in session. Matters are often apparently ready for such disposition, when some one or more of the parties are not ready, so that it is important to know when a matter is ready for the action of the Chancellor.

1. A Demurrer is Ready to be Heard as soon as it is filed, if Court is in session; and, if not in session, as soon as Court meets; and continues ready to be heard until the Chancellor takes it up and disposes of it; and this he may do when the cause is regularly reached on the call of the docket, or when motions are in order and one of the parties calls it up for the action of the Court; or at Chambers, on due notice.
2. A Plea is Ready to be Heard, as to its sufficiency, as soon as filed, and continues so ready for twenty days, and if not then heard or set for argument, its sufficiency is deemed to be admitted. After replication filed, a plea is ready to be heard on the issue of fact at the first term of the Court after its filing, and continues ready thereafter, when reached on a regular call of the docket, until heard; or may be heard at Chambers, on due notice.

3. A Cause is Ready for Hearing on Bill and Answer, after being specially so set, whenever regularly reached on the call of the docket. In such a case no proof is heard, except the exhibits to the pleadings, if any; or may be heard at Chambers, by consent of parties.

4. A Cause is Ready for a Final Hearing at the first term of the Court after the bill has been answered, and continues ready for a hearing at every term of the Court thereafter, if not then heard. If any of the defendants have not answered, and a pro confesso has not been entered against them, it should be taken when the cause is reached on the docket for hearing, for strictly a cause is not ready for a final hearing until all of the defendants have answered or been pro confessoed. A cause may, also, be heard at Chambers by consent of parties.

5. A Cause is Ready for Hearing on the Master's Report whenever regularly reached on the call of the docket. If the report has been excepted to such exceptions may be heard and disposed of whenever motions may be heard. If not excepted to the report may be confirmed, on motion, at any time after the second day of the term, when motions are in order.

6. A Cause is Ready for Motions to be Entered and Heard at such times as the rules of the Court wherein the cause is pending permit.

§ 532. The Ordinary Routine of the Court.—When the hour for the meeting of the Court arrives, the Chancellor takes the bench, and rapping for attention, directs the Sheriff to make proclamation that the Court is open. The Sheriff, thereupon, cries out: "Oyez! oyez! oyez! The Chancery Court for Knox County is now open for the dispatch of business." The Clerk and Master then delivers to the Chancellor the Court docket, unless the same is already on his desk. If it is the first day of the term, the Clerk and Master will also deliver to the Chancellor his Financial Report of money on hand, and his Report of Supreme Court Reports on hand; and will acquaint the Chancellor with any defect in any of his bonds by reason of the death, insolvency, or removal, of any of the sureties.

If there be minutes to be read, the Clerk will then deliver to the Chancellor, or to some Solicitor, the orders and decrees that have been entered on the minutes, and will either read the minutes himself, or have some other competent person read them, while the Chancellor, or Solicitor, having the orders and decrees, compares them with the minutes as the latter are being read.

The minutes of the first day of the term should be preceded by a caption, in substance, as follows:

1 Code, § 4432; see, post, § 533.
2 Ch. Rule IV, § 15; § 1193, sub-sec. 15.
3 Each Court has its own rules for hearing motions, demurrers, exceptions to pleas, appeals from the Master, and other preliminary matters.
4 The Constitution says that all Courts shall be open. Tenn. Const., Art. 1, § 17. This means: 1. That the Courts are always open for the filing of pleadings, and even for the filing of petitions when necessary to save the bar of the statute of limitations. Bledsoe v. Wright, 2 Bax., 471. 2. That the business of the Court should be transacted, and the minutes read and signed, in the Court House, and in public view; or, at least, in a place where the people may attend at pleasure. Code, § 4101; Bass v. State, 6 Bax., 383. But by consent, divorce suits and family suits may be heard in a private room. 5 These words are French, and mean: "Hear ye! hear ye! hear ye!" French was, at one time, the language of the Courts of England.
6 See, post, § 1161.
7 See, post, § 1162.
8 Code, § 335 a.
9 This comparison of the original orders and decrees with the minutes is indispensable to the accuracy of the latter, especially in the matter of names, dates, amounts, metes and bounds of lands, shares in case of partition, and other matters not inferable from the context.
10 This, technically, is also the caption of every order and decree made during the term; and when an order or decree is certified for any purpose it should be preceded by the captions of the term, and of the day the order or decree was made. 11 When CAPTION OF THE MINUTES OF THE TERM.\(\text{ib}\)

State of Tennessee:
Be it remembered that, at a regular [or, special,] term of the Chancery Court, for Knox county, begun and held at the Court House in Knoxville, on the first Monday in January, 1885, present and presiding Hon. William B. Staley, Chancellor of the Second Chancery Division, the following proceedings were had:

The proceedings of the Court will follow this caption in the order of time, as nearly as practicable. The caption of the minutes of subsequent days of the term may be in this form:

CAPTION OF THE DAY’S MINUTES.
TUESDAY, JANUARY 5TH, 1885.

Court met pursuant to adjournment, present and presiding Chancellor William B. Staley. The minutes of yesterday [or, of last Wednesday,] were read and signed, and the following further proceedings had:

Then follow the proceedings in order of time as near as possible.

After the minutes of the day have been read, and corrected, the adjourning order is written, unless it has already been written, and the Chancellor attests the accuracy of the minutes by signing them officially, just below the entry of adjournment. Such entry and signature, are, ordinarily, as follows:

ENTRY OF ADJOURNMENT.

The Court, thereupon, adjourned until tomorrow morning at 8 o'clock," [or, until the next term.] W. B. STALEY, Chancellor.

After the minutes have been signed by the Chancellor, he usually announces his conclusions as to the matters and causes that were submitted to him for his determination on the previous day. The Clerk is then directed to call the roll of Solicitors in order that they may make motions, read their drafts of decrees prepared for entry on the minutes, and bring before the Court such other matters as they may desire to have the Court pass on. The hearing of motions has been elsewhere considered, and will not be repeated here; but if there be any exceptions to deposition to be acted on, or any appeals from the ruling of the Clerk on such exceptions, or any notices of the introduction of documentary evidence to be given, or any other matter that must be done before the hearing of a cause is begun, this is a good opportunity to attend to such matters.

After all motions have been disposed of, the docket is called; and, as each case is called, it is continued, or set for a given day, or heard.

§ 533. When a Cause Stands for Trial.—A cause stands for trial at the first term after it becomes at issue. Where there are no exceptions filed to an answer, a cause is at issue at the end of twenty days after the complainant’s Solicitor has notice of the filing of the answer, and such notice will be presumed, in absence of any question raised, to have been received on the day the answer was filed. It may, therefore, be stated as a general rule, that a cause is at issue at the end of twenty days after the filing of the answer, in case no exceptions to the answer are put in.\(^\text{12}\)

The Code, in at least three sections, declares that a cause shall stand for trial at the first term after answer filed.\(^\text{13}\) Construing these sections along with those allowing twenty days within which to except to an answer, the conclusion is reached (1) that a cause stands for trial at the first term coming twenty or more days after the complainant’s Solicitor has notice\(^\text{14}\) of the filing of the answer, if no exceptions to the answer are put in within that time; and (2)

\(^{11}\) ante, §§ 514-521. And see Chapter on Motions, post, §§ 739-769.
\(^{12}\) Code, §§ 4328;4401, says that, if no exceptions to the answer are filed, the cause shall stand for trial at the first term after answer filed; but how can it be known that no exceptions will be filed, without waiting for the twenty days to expire? Suppose a term should begin within twenty days after answer filed, would not the complainant, nevertheless, have the whole of the twenty days within which to except? Most certainly. The statute then must mean that the cause is at issue at the end of twenty days after notice to complainant’s Solicitor, when no exceptions are filed within that period. ante, §§ 420-424.
\(^{13}\) Code, §§ 4328; 4401; 4432; ante, § 439. In harming v. Bogle, 7 Cates, 701, it is said that where the terms of Court are long, issue will be made, proof taken, and the cause stand for trial, all within the period of a single term.
\(^{14}\) Notice will be presumed to have been received by the Solicitor on the day the answer is filed unless the contrary appears. that if exceptions are put in, a cause stands for trial at the first term after they are disallowed, or (3) if allowed, at the first term after the filing of a sufficient answer.

But, although a cause thus stands for trial at the first term after it is at issue, it does not by any means follow that it will be tried at that term. Nevertheless, it is the duty of the Clerk and Master to set the cause for hearing, and transfer it to the trial docket;¹⁶ and when called will be subject to be tried, or continued, as to the Chancellor may appear proper.¹⁶

§ 534. How Causes are Heard.—The cause having been called on the docket, and both parties having announced their readiness for trial, or the motion for a continuance having been overruled, the Chancellor directs that the case be taken up.¹⁷ The complainant’s Solicitor, thereupon, makes a brief statement of the nature of his bill. The defendant’s Solicitor then states his defence, or reads the material part of his answer.¹⁸ If there be any defendants in default, as to whom no judgment pro confesso has been entered, the complainant may now have a pro confesso entered against them. The evidence is then read in the following order: 1st, the evidence in support of the bill is read by the complainant’s Solicitor; 2d, the evidence of the defendant is read by his Solicitor; and 3d, if the complainant has any rebutting evidence it is read last.¹⁹

The evidence having been all read, the junior counsel for the complainant opens the argument; he is followed by the junior and senior counsel for the defendant in turn; and then the senior counsel for the complainant is heard in reply.²⁰

On the conclusion of the argument, the Chancellor announces his decision, if he has reached one: if not, he reserves his decision until a future day, and the papers and briefs of counsel and authorities relied on, are sent to his Chambers; or he may hold the case under advisement for thirty days after the adjournment of the Court.²¹

§ 535. Objections to Evidence at the Hearing.—Objections to a deposition as a whole because (1) of want of due notice of the taking; or (2) because of some defect in the caption, or certificate; or (3) because not taken, or written, by a person duly authorized; or (4) because not properly transmitted to the Clerk; or (5) because taken after the taker’s time for taking proof had expired; or (6) because retaken to the same matters without an order; or (7) for any other cause going to the admissibility of the deposition, and not to the competency of the witness, or his evidence, must be made and disposed of before the commencement of the hearing, or trial, otherwise they will be considered as waived.²² No such objection can be raised when the deposition is read, or

1. Objections to the Competency of the Witness, because (1) he is an infant, idiot, or lunatic, without sufficient understanding to apprehend the obligations of an oath, and give correct answers to questions put; or (2) because the witness was intoxicated while testifying; or (3) because the witness is deaf and dumb, or unable to speak, or write, in the English language, and the interpreter was not sworn; or (4) because the witness is infamous by the judgment of a Court, and disqualified to testify; or (5) because the witness is a husband, or wife, of the party objecting, or of the opposite party, and the evidence is as to a matter that occurred between them, by virtue, or in consequence, of the marital relation; or (6) because the witness is an executor, administrator, or guardian, and his evidence is as to transactions with, or statements by, the testator, intestate, or ward; or (7) because the witness is a party, and his evidence is as to a transaction or conversation with, or a statement by, the opposite party, who is of unsound mind.23

2. Objections to the Competency of the Evidence, because (1) not relevant to the issues involved, or, immaterial; or (2) because not the best evidence, being hearsay, or a copy, or parol evidence of the contents of a writing; or (3) because a privileged communication; or (4) because a transcript not duly certified; or (5) because a deed not registered; or (6) because only a part of a record, or writing.24

3. Objections to the Form of the Evidence, because (1) the questions of the adverse party to his own witness were leading; (2) because the answer of the witness was not responsive to the objector’s question.25

4. Objections to Evidence Must be Specific, or the Court is not required to notice them. General exceptions to a deposition, witness, paper, question or answer need not be noticed by the Chancellor, and will not be noticed in the Supreme Court. If a party thinks he has ground of exception to any evidence or witness he must specify it, and not require the Court to guess it. A general exception is no exception.26

§ 536. Hearing on a Matter Appealed from the County Court.—The Code provides that any person interested in the estate may except to the account taken and stated by the County Court Clerk with an administrator or executor; and that when such an account has been finally settled by the County Court, either party may appeal from the judgment of the Court to the Chancery or Circuit Court; and the appeal shall be brought before the Chancellor or Circuit Judge at his first session in such county or district, and it shall be sufficient to take up on said appeal only so much of the record as will suffice to present the matter complained of in the decision below.26a

The matters in dispute, in such a case, would ordinarily be heard upon the exceptions taken to the account in the Court below. But, if the case is of such a nature that justice cannot well be done on the County Court record, the Chancellor would, probably, have the power to refer the matters in dispute to the Master, under proper instructions; or he might remand the case with proper instructions to the County Court.26b

§ 537. The Argument of Counsel.—The one purpose of argument is to aid the Court (1) in reaching a correct conclusion from the evidence as to the truth of the facts alleged in the pleadings; and (2) to aid the Court in applying the right law to the facts as found. Counsel for the complainant, therefore, should endeavor to show (1) how the evidence sustains his bill, and (2) how it improves the defenses set up; and counsel for the defendant should endeavor to show how the evidence contradicts the bill and supports the answer. Counsel 24 Objections to the admissibility of evidence, made before the Commissioner, must be renewed and ruled on in Court when the deposition is read, or they will be deemed to be waived. Sahlen v. Bank, 8 Pick., 221.

25 But in such case, the objections will go for naught, unless they are made in writing at the very time the leading question is put, or the irresistible answer is made. See ante, § 496.
26a Code, §§ 3303-3304.
26b Such power would be within the spirit of Code, §§ 3152 and 3170. On such a reference additional evidence might be heard and the account recast.
on both sides should point out the inconsistencies and incredibility of the evidence, or any part thereof, and why and wherein a witness is or is not to be credited.

If there be any disputed questions of law involved in the cause, counsel on each side should file a written brief of the authorities by them relied on, and should send the books to the Chancellor's room.

In arguing any matter before the Chancellor, it should always be kept in mind that nothing so commends both counsel and his cause as a smooth, clear, unimpassioned, and candid, presentation of the law and facts of the case, wholly unmixed with ungenerous or unkind allusions to opposite counsel, or to his arguments; and that nothing so harms both counsel and cause, in the estimation of the Chancellor, as manifest misquotations of law or evidence, unjust criticism of parties or witnesses, unwarranted deductions from the evidence, unfair statements of the arguments of the other side, or unnecessary exhibitions of temper.

§ 538. How Exceptions to Evidence, and the Chancellor's Rulings Thereon, are Made a Part of the Record for Purposes of Review.—Formerly, where exceptions to evidence were sustained by the Chancellor, or any matter of evidence was excluded by him, at the hearing, a bill of exceptions was necessary to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction of the evidence so ruled out; but now, where exceptions to evidence are either sustained or overruled, it is not necessary upon an appeal of the case, to embody the rulings of the Chancellor, the exception and the excluded evidence, in a bill of exceptions, if the rulings of the Chancellor, the exceptions and the excluded evidence are set out in the body of the deposition and properly authenticated by the Chancellor.

So, where any document, deposition or exhibit to a deposition, or any other paper, is excluded, in part or as a whole, it is no longer necessary on appeal to embody the same, the exceptions thereto and the rulings of the Chancellor, in a separate bill of exceptions, where the action of the Court on the parts, or the whole documents, depositions, exhibits thereto, or other papers, is duly noted thereon by the Chancellor, such action by the Chancellor constituting the same a part of the record, in lieu of a bill of exceptions. The statute declares that these rules shall not apply where the testimony is oral, by which is meant that where witnesses are examined orally in open Court, at the hearing, as on a trial by jury, the exceptions to the testimony of the witnesses so examined, and the rulings of the Chancellor thereon must be perpetuated by a bill of exceptions as was the practice before the statute.

INCIDENTS OF THE HEARING.

§ 539. Amendment of Pleadings when Allowed at the Hearing. — Whenever, at the hearing, it appears impossible to the Court to do complete justice, or to determine the whole controversy, without an amendment of the bill or cross-bill, making new allegations, or new prayers, or new parties, the Court may, on its own motion, or on motion of a party, allow the cause to stand over, with leave to make the necessary amendments, or new parties, or both.\textsuperscript{1} In all such cases, however, the party in default shall be taxed with all, or a large part, of the costs of the cause.\textsuperscript{2} If, after such amendments, either party desire to take further proof on the issues raised by the amendments, the cause should be remanded to the rules for that purpose, but not for proof generally.

ORDER FOR A CAUSE TO STAND OVER TO MAKE NEW PARTIES.

This cause coming on to be heard this day, and the record having been read [or the pleadings having been read,] and argument of counsel [in part] heard; and it appearing to the Court that Robert Roe, and his wife, Rachel Roe, are necessary parties defendant to this cause, on motion of the complainant, it is ordered that the cause do stand over, to the end that the complainant may so amend his bill as to make said Robert Roe and Rachel Roe parties defendant thereto. The complainant and David Doe, his prosecution surety, will pay all the costs accruing in the cause between now and the final decree, said costs to be hereafter taxed.

§ 540. What Defects in the Proof may be Remedied at the Hearing. — From the earliest times, Courts of Equity have relieved against mere errors of Commissioners, witnesses and Solicitors; and when there has been an accidental defect in evidence, have, before the hearing, at the hearing, and at the re-hearing of a cause, allowed the defect to be supplied.\textsuperscript{3} Thus, leave has been given at \textsuperscript{1} Sto. Eq. Pt. I, § 333, note. When it is manifest that justice cannot be done without amending the pleadings so as to make the necessary allegations or parties, the Chancellor should allow the cause to stand over for that purpose. The Supreme Court often remands causes on its own motion for such purposes. See, post, § 1318.

\textsuperscript{3} Gres. Eq. Ev., 196.

\textsuperscript{33} That is, the exceptions to the deposition for want of notice or proper formalities. See, ante, §§ 497-501. These exceptions must of course, have been ruled on by the Master and, on appeal, acted on by the Chancellor.

\textsuperscript{34} If no room on a document or deposition to endorse the exception, and action of the Chancellor, the endorsement may be made on a paper attached to the document or deposition, and exhibited thereto by letters or figures of identification.
the hearing: (1) to prove the execution of a deed on file; (2) to stamp an instrument; (3) to prove the loss of a deed so as to let in a copy; (4) to prove the death of a witness to an instrument; (5) to prove that the defendant is a married woman; (6) to prove the death of a party; (7) to prove that the defendant is out of the jurisdiction of the Court; and (8) in any case of defects or omissions of proof, whether brought to light and become material in consequence of something which arises unexpectedly in the course of the hearing, or caused by accident or inadvertence. And the Court will be specially lenient in such cases, when minors or persons of unsound mind would otherwise be injured. If necessary, the Court will remand the cause, or postpone the hearing, with liberty to supply the requisite proof. And so, if the Court see in any such case that the opposite party is liable to be prejudiced by its action, the cause will be remanded to enable him to rebut.

ORDER FOR A CAUSE TO STAND OVER TO SUPPLY PROOF.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al.

This cause coming on this day to be heard upon the pleadings and proofs, and the record having been read, and the argument in part heard, and it appearing to the Court that the complainant has inadvertently omitted to prove the execution of the title-bond by Henry Brown to the defendant, Richard Roe, [or has inadvertently omitted to prove some other manifest link in his chain of evidence,] it is ordered, on motion of the complainant, that this cause do stand over with leave to him to prove the execution of said bond; but for this leave he will pay one-fourth of all the accrued costs of the cause, for which an execution may issue.

§ 541. Remanding a Cause for Further Proof.—While the Chancellor is usually content to determine the cause upon such proofs as the parties may choose to read, he is under no compulsion to do so, as is a Judge of a Court of law. The Chancellor may not only postpone his decision, but, if he deems the evidence unsatisfactory, or defective, or if he is unable to solve the questions in issue upon the proofs read at the hearing, he may require further evidence. This right of the Chancellor is inherent in his office and does not depend on any consent of the parties. Thus, after or during the hearing, the Chancellor may remand the cause for further evidence on particular points, or may remand it for further proof generally, or may refer it to the Master to report as to certain facts about which there are defects or failures in evidence, or he may order a trial by jury.

Where in any case, the Court can see that a party has a clear right so that injustice will be done by dismissing his bill, but his suit fails from some oversight or neglect not culpable, it is the duty of the Court to remand the cause for further proof, that justice may be done.

The Supreme Court will remand a cause, on its own motion, to the end that further proof may be taken, when it appears probable that a decision upon the evidence then in the record will work injustice, and, for a greater reason, the Chancery Court will remand under the same circumstances.

And so, if it should clearly appear that a defendant has a good defence in whole, or in part, which by some oversight not culpable he has failed to prove, the Court, applying the foregoing rules impartially, would, on his application, remand the cause with leave to make the proof.

§ 542. No Objections to Relief at the Hearing. When.—No objections because of the non-joinder or mis-joinder of parties, complainant or defendant, or 8 But remandments, whether for the benefit of one party or the other, should be only on the payment of all, or a large part, of the costs of the cause. Sec. ante, § 537. Hearst r. Proffitt, 7 Cates, 560;

It is the experience of the author, that it is impolitic to remand a cause for further proof on a point as to which the evidence is conflicting; for the reason that there is a strong temptation to introduce false testimony when the parties realize that the case will turn on the decision of a disputed point. Causes should be remanded, not for more proof on a disputed question, but for proof on some question § 543. Announcement of Decree.—The evidence in the cause having been read, and the Solicitors of the parties having concluded their argument, the papers in the cause and the briefs of counsel, all properly assorted and arranged for convenient reference, are sent to the Chancellor’s chambers for his further consideration. If any authorities have been relied on specially by counsel they, also, should be sent along with the papers in the cause.

The Chancellor, thereupon, proceeds to further consider the case, looking first to the pleadings to be sure of the issues involved, then to such pertinent evidence as his notes of the hearing indicate to be important, and lastly to the briefs of counsel and the authorities cited.13

After reaching a conclusion, the Chancellor prepares a memorandum of his findings of law and fact, if the case is of importance and complicated; and, if the case is of special importance or complication, he may write out his opinion in whole or in part. If the case is one of frequent occurrence he will, ordinarily, announce his conclusions orally.14

The Chancellor is not required to give his reasons for his decisions, and in many cases it is wisest not to do so.15

§ 544. Taking a Case Under Advisement.—If the Chancellor desires time to investigate a case after the hearing, or if he desires to consult authorities not accessible, or if unprepared for any other reason, to announce his decision, he may hold the case under advisement, or he may call on the parties for additional briefs, or for further argument on particular matters. If he wishes to hold the case under advisement he should so state on the minutes of the Court,16 but in such case he must forward his decree to the Clerk and Master of the Court in thirty days, unless by consent of counsel, further time is allowed him.17

ENTRY IN CAUSE TAKEN UNDER ADVISEMENT.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe, et al.

This cause came on this July 24, 1905, for final hearing on the pleadings and proofs in the cause and argument of counsel, and the Chancellor desiring time for further consideration takes the case under advisement, [and by consent of counsel he is allowed sixty days in which to file his decree.]

9 Code, §§ 4338; 4325. These objections must be made by motion to dismiss, or by demurrer; and if the misjoinder, or non-joinder, of parties does not appear on the face of the bill, the objection may be made by plea. Code, §§ 4325; 4386—4388.

10 Code, § 4337

11 Code, §§ 4309; 4321; 4385. This has long been the law. Acts of 1801, ch. 6; LeRoy v. Platt, 4 Paige (N. Y.), 77.

12 The true meaning of this rule is, that after answer filed, no exception can be taken (1) to the local jurisdiction of the Court over the person, or over the subject matter and (2) that no objection can be taken to the general jurisdiction because of a perfect remedy at law. It does not mean that because an answer has been filed the Court is bound to pronounce a decree in a case unifit for Equity. See, ente, § 177, notes 17 and 30; and § 290.

13 See, post, § 1141, sub-sec. 10.

14 The Chancellor usually announces his decision on the day following the conclusion of the hearing, or on a day later, because he requires some time to consider the matters in issue, and besides, counsel are in a condition more dispassionately to hear his views. As a rule, it is unwise to decide any case that has been vigorously contested, as soon as the argument is closed; the winning side is apt to be too jubilant, and the losing side too resentful.

15 The decision is the thing he is required to give by the law. A sound decision based on no announced reasons is infinitely better than an unsound decision based on many reasons. Reasoning sometimes entangles the conscience and befogs the intellect. See McGuire v. Gallagher, 11 Pick., 349.

16 Acts of 1905, ch. 427, sec. 2. In the old forms, the only entry in such a case was this: "Curia avisar vellet." [The Court wishes to deliberate]. The power to take a case under advisement is one that exists in the discretion of the statute, the only effect of the statute being to limit the time the case may be so held, and to provide for the entry of the decree in vacation.

17 This part of the Act is merely directory, and a decree withheld beyond the statutory time, or beyond the extension, would be valid and proof against any exception on that account.

When a case is thus taken under advisement the record of the Court should be left unadjourned, and the minutes unclosed, so that the decree and any prayer for, and grant of, an appeal may be entered thereon. See, post, § 546.
§ 545. Drawing of Orders and Decrees.—The Solicitor of the party in whose favor the decision is made, is expected by the Court to draw the order, or decree. Orders are often entered, after being read to and approved by the Chancellor, without being previously submitted to the opposite counsel; but the latter should always be given the opportunity to inspect and criticize the draft of the decree, before it is read to the Chancellor.18 If the opposite counsel object to the decree, he should forthwith bring the matter of his objection before the Chancellor, in order that the decree may be settled at once.

In drawing decrees, care should be taken to have them follow the pleadings, and the specific prayer for relief, unless relief has been granted under the general prayer.

The Chancellor should never allow an order or decree to be entered on the minutes until after it has been expressly approved by him. This practice inflexibly adhered to will enable the Clerk to keep his minutes free from interlineations, erasures, and other alterations.

§ 546. Leaving the Record Unadjourned.—The Chancellor may leave the record of the term unadjourned until Court in course; in which case the minutes being open, orders and decrees made in vacation may be entered therein as in term time.19 All entries made in the open minutes after the close of the term, should be compared with the originals by the Chancellor and approved by him, as soon after the entry is made as convenient, but in no event later than the next regular term of the Court.20 All orders and decrees entered on the open minutes are as effective as those made and entered in term time.21 While not necessary it may be well for the Chancellor to make an entry on the minutes showing the minutes are intentionally left open, thus:

The business of the term ready for hearing being disposed of, but that decrees in cases held under advisement, and decrees and orders made at Chambers, may be the more conveniently entered of record, the record is left unadjourned and the minutes left open until the next regular term.

HAL H. HAYNES, Chancellor.

TRIAL BY JURY.

§ 547. When a Trial by Jury May be Had.—Ordinarily in the Chancery Court, the Chancellor determines all issues whether of law, or of fact,1 but either party to a suit is, upon application therefor in due season, entitled to a jury to try and determine any material issue of fact: all issues of fact in any case shall, however, be submitted to one jury.2

18 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1009; Crow v. Blythe, 3 Hay., 236; Whitney v. Belden, 4 Paige. (N. Y.), 140. 19 Acts of 1905, ch. 427, sec. 2. See post, §§ 771-775. 20 Ibid. If the entries differ from the originals they must be made to conform to them. Ibid, sec. 9. 21 Ibid. 1 Code, §§ 2953; 2955. Chancery has always been insignificant. Cooper v. Stockard, 16 Lea. 145. It is sometimes supposed that either party to a Chancery suit has a Constitutional right to a trial by jury. This supposition is based on a misapprehension. The Constitutional provision that "the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate," (Art. I, § 6,) refers to trials at common law; Neely v. State, 4
The demand for a jury may be made in the pleadings, or at the bar after the cause is at issue. If the demand is made in the pleadings, the cause will stand for trial at the first term before a jury summoned instantaneously. Either party may demand a jury at any time before the hearing is actually begun. The Court may, however, make a rule requiring the demand for a jury to be made, in open Court, on some previous day of the trial term, in order to have time to obtain a jury, and to give the opposite side notice of the demand.

The demand for a jury may be made in the bill, answer or plea, by inserting therein, ordinarily at its conclusion and just before the signature of the Solicitor, the following: "And the complainant, [or defendant, as the case may be], demands a jury to try all the issues of fact in this case." The demand, if made below a pleading, must be dated and signed; and should be marked "filed" by the Clerk. If the demand is made after the pleading is filed, it must be made in open Court, or at Chambers, and entered on the minutes, thus:

DEMAND FOR A JURY.

John Doe,

vs.

Richard Roe.

The complainant [or defendant] demands a jury to try all the issues of fact in this cause.

§ 548. When a Jury Trial Is Appropriate.—The following are the principal cases wherein a trial by jury is appropriate: 1. Where the evidence is so contradictory, or so nearly balanced, that an open and rigid cross-examination of the witnesses before a jury is necessary for the ascertainment of the truth; 2. Where the genuineness of a deed, will, note of hand, bill of sale, or other written instrument is in issue; 3. Where questions of sanity, duress, fraud, usury, and failure of consideration, are involved; 4. Where the defence of adverse possession is interposed in an ejectment suit; 5. Where the question in issue is the dividing line between two tracts or lots of land; 6. Where unliquidated damages are to be assessed; 7. Where a deed, or bill of sale, is alleged to have been given as a mere mortgage; 8. Where the fact of marriage, or the legitimacy of children, is in issue; and 9. Where, in a divorce suit, matters of fact are charged in the bill and denied in the answer.

But in all the foregoing cases, the main reason for a trial by jury is the contradictory character of the evidence, or the importance of an open and rigid cross-examination of the witnesses in the presence of the Court and jury.

The Chancellor may, on his own motion, submit any disputed question of fact to a jury, in order to have their verdict thereon for his own information: and this he will ordinarily do when the evidence is so conflicting that it is difficult to ascertain the truth.

§ 549. Frame of Issues of Fact.—The issues of fact, to be determined by the jury, are made up by the parties under the direction of the Court; and they

Indeed, even in those cases in Chancery wherein a jury is demanded, the suit, strictly speaking, is not tried by the jury, inasmuch as they merely answer certain questions of fact submitted to them. should set forth, briefly and clearly, the true questions of fact to be tried.\textsuperscript{10} The Chancellor has the power and it is his duty to so shape the issues submitted by the parties as to present the material and determinative questions of fact made by the pleadings, briefly and clearly.\textsuperscript{11} These issues must, of course, be responsive to the pleadings,\textsuperscript{12} and must be so comprehensive of the questions of fact put in issue by the pleadings that, when determined by the jury, the Court will be able, upon the findings of the jury, and the balance of the record, to pronounce a full and complete final decree on all the material matters involved in the controversy.\textsuperscript{13} The issues should be responsive to the pleadings, and should raise no questions of fact not raised by the pleadings.\textsuperscript{14}

The party applying for a jury trial must submit material issues; and if he fails so to do the verdict will be immaterial, and the Court may, thereupon, determine the case as though no jury trial had taken place, if the record is in a condition to justify that course.\textsuperscript{15} But where the issues are material, on the verdict being set aside, whether by the Chancery or the Supreme Court, neither Court can determine the facts and decide the cause thereon, but the cause must be re-tried by a jury.\textsuperscript{16}

\section*{§ 550. Form of Issues, and of the Verdict.---The issues may be in the form of pleadings at law;\textsuperscript{17} but the better practice, perhaps, is to resolve the issues made by the pleadings into the form of questions,\textsuperscript{18} to be answered, "yes" or "no," or by dates, amounts, quantities, or boundaries, as the case may be.}

Thus, on an ejectment bill, to which is interposed the defence of adverse possession, and the statute of limitations, the following issues might be submitted to the jury:

\textsuperscript{17} James v. Brooks, 6 Heisk., 150.
\textsuperscript{18} In Manchester v. Ward, 1 Tenn., (Overt.), 430, the issues were as follows:

"First, Whether the bill single for $860, exhibited in the complainant's bill, was procured from John Lancaster, as charged by the defendant Ward, by fraud, misrepresentation, and undue influence, as stated in complainant's bill.
Second, Whether the defendant Ward paid to the deceased any just consideration for the said bill single and if any what consideration was paid."
\textsuperscript{14} Lea, 144.
\textsuperscript{15} In this case, Chief Justice Deaderick, in speaking of the questions to be tried by a jury in Chancery, said, "In practice, these questions are literally questions propounded to the jury, which, in their verdict, they are required to answer affirmatively, or negatively."
\textsuperscript{16} Since the system of special pleading has been properly abandoned, and the general issue of law and fact substituted for it, juries in the Circuit Court have become, in effect, a bench of twelve Chancellors, who decide the case on ill-defined, and often ill-conceived notions of law and general Equity, these notions of the individual jurors often differing as much as their faces, clothing, and habits of thought.
\textsuperscript{17} The Circuit Judge can advise these twelve Chancellors, in a general way, as to what the law is; and, if they find contrary to his judgment, all he can do is to refer the case to another bench of twelve Chancellors, to be tried anew in the same general way, and on the same general and incongruous notions; and if their verdict accords with the former verdict, the power of the Judge is, ordinarily, at an end; and the second verdict must, ordinarily, stand, however strongly the Judge may dissent, and however grossly the law may have been violated and justice outraged.

But, in the Chancery Court, if the issues are properly prepared, they accomplish in part the purpose of special pleading, by restricting the findings of the jury to pure questions of fact.  The verdict in issues decided by the Chancellor, and by the court, are in the nature of a special verdict.  The jury does not, ordinarily, pass on any question of law, and the Chancellor should see that the issues are so framed as to restrict them to pure questions of fact, thus confining the jury to their legitimate function of finding the facts of the case.
§ 551. How the Trial is Conducted.—A jury trial in the Chancery Court is conducted in the same manner as in the Circuit Court: the parties summon their witnesses and enforce their attendance, and the witnesses are sworn, put under the rule and examined, as in a Court of law. Jurors are designated by the Court, and summoned by the Sheriff, and are tried, empanelled and sworn, as in the Circuit Court. The Chancellor passes on all questions of evidence, and on the competency of witnesses, and after the proof is all in on both sides, the cause is argued to the jury by the respective counsel, and the jury is then charged by the Chancellor. The charge of the Chancellor may be required by either party to be reduced to writing before delivered. The jury should be directed to reduce their findings to writing; but this is not essential. The verdict of the jury may be set aside on any ground that would vitiate it if in the Circuit Court, and the Chancellor has the same power to grant new trials as is possessed by Courts of law. Indeed, the whole proceedings, from the time the demand for a jury is made until their verdict is approved, or set aside, by

III.

Had the defendant been in actual and adverse possession of any part of the tract sued for, openly, notoriously, and continuously, for a period of seven or more years next before the bill was filed?

IV.

If the defendant had had such possession, state what color of title he held under, if any.

V.

If the defendant’s possession was not held under any color of title, state the metes and bounds of his possession held for seven or more years next before the bill was filed.

In Ragsdale & Mabry v. Gossett, Judge Cooper held that the issues should have been as follows:

ISSUES OF FACT.

George H. Ragsdale, et al.,

V. F. Gossett, et al.

In this cause, the following issues of fact are tendered by the complainants to be submitted to the jury:

I. Was the money borrowed from McIntosh and Johnson the separate estate of the wife?

II. If so, was any part of it used in the purchase of the chattels in controversy, for her separate use?

III. Was the sale of these chattels, and the purchase as made, intended as a fraudulent device to protect the husband’s property from his creditors?

In Hunter v. Wallace, the issues submitted to the jury were in the form of questions, and in substance as follows:

ISSUES OF FACT.

1st. Had Finley notice of the sale to the plaintiff at the time he paid the purchase-money, or procured his conveyance?

2d. What was the value of the improvements made by the plaintiff?

3d. Did Knox empower Wallace, either by letter or verbally, to make the contract with the plaintiff?

If the issues are in the form of questions propounded to the jury, (which is the better practice,) their verdict is an affirmative or negative answer. The jury do not, as a rule, return a verdict in favor of the complainant for the money or thing sued for, or in favor of the defendant generally, but they say such and such allegations, or propositions of fact, are true, or false. The jury do not try the suit, but try such questions only as are submitted to them. The Chancellor tries and decides the suit, aided by the finding of the jury.
the Chancellor are, in all respects, the same as in jury trials in the Circuit Court, and so is the manner of making out a bill of exceptions, and praying and prosecuting an appeal to the Supreme Court.

DEMAND FOR A JURY, ISSUES, VERDICT, AND FINAL DECEREE.

John Doe, vs. Richard Roe.

In this case, the defendant demanded a jury to try the issues of fact involved in the pleadings, which demand was granted; and the following issues of fact were thereupon made up by the parties, under the direction of the Court, to be submitted to the jury:

1. Was the note sued on executed by the defendant?
2. If not, how much does the defendant owe the complainant on the account exhibited to the bill, if anything?
3. If the defendant is indebted on said account, should interest be added? If so, from what date?

And thereupon came the following jury, all good and lawful men, naming them, who were duly sworn well and truly to try said issues, and a true verdict to render thereon, according to the law and the evidence; and the evidence or argument not being concluded, the jury was respited until tomorrow, or, and the evidence, and argument, and the charge to the Court, having been heard, the said jurors, upon their oaths aforesaid, say:

To the first question they answer, "Yes."
To all the other questions they answer, "No."
Whereupon, the defendant moved the Court to set the said findings of the jury aside, and grant him a new trial on said issues, which motion on due consideration thereof, was by the Court overruled.

And, thereupon, the cause coming on to be further and finally heard this day, upon the pleadings and the said findings of the jury, on consideration thereof, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the Court that [Here insert the adjudications of the Court and the award of final process. See, post, §§ 567-568.]

§ 552. Effect of a Verdict.—When a Chancellor orders a jury on his own motion, his object is to get the opinion of the jury on a difficult question of fact, so that he may thereby be aided in reaching a conclusion satisfactory to his judgment; or, as the books express it, the object of the verdict is to inform and satisfy the conscience of the Chancellor. In all such cases, the verdict is merely advisory, and if it does not satisfy the conscience of the Chancellor, he may disregard it, and find the facts for himself. He will, however, give the verdict due consideration, and will not set it aside unless clearly erroneous.

But when either party demands a jury, their verdict is conclusive upon the Chancellor, unless he grants a new trial, or unless the issue tendered be immaterial. The object of the statute, in allowing a party to demand a jury in the Chancery Court, is to give him all the benefits and rights resulting from such a trial in a Court of law.

The jury having determined the issues submitted to them, the Chancellor, if he allows the verdict to stand, considers the facts found by the jury to be true, and determines the rights of the parties as he deems just and right in view of the facts found. In other words, the jury report their opinion upon the questions submitted to them, and the Chancellor tries and determines the suit between the parties upon the facts reported by the jury, and the other facts before him, and the law governing the case. If, by agreement of parties, the Chancellor hears the case on oral testimony, his decision has all the force and effect of the verdict of a jury.

§ 553. Some Suggestions in Reference to Demanding a Jury.—If, in any case after you have taken your proof, you feel that the real facts are with you, but that (1) by false swearing, or (2) by the refusal of obstinate witnesses to answer fully, or (3) by the collusion of witnesses, or (4) by the evasion of unwilling or hostile witnesses, you have been unable to get out the facts fully enough to risk a trial before the Chancellor on your depositions, then consider whether it would not be well to demand a jury, and have the witnesses sub-pœnaed and examined in open Court. A vigorous oral examination of a witness, in open Court before a jury, will often elicit truth impossible of extraction by means of a deposition. This is especially true of the direct examination of your own witnesses, when they are hostile; and of the cross-examination of your adversary's witnessess, when they are unwilling to tell the whole truth.

A Solicitor, however, should never demand a jury merely because his client believes (1) that there is a local prejudice in his favor, or (2) that the other party is a corporation laboring under local prejudice, or (3) that a jury will allow more damages than will the Chancellor, or (4) that there is a chance to defeat justice, or to do injustice, by means of local or other prejudice, or by any artifice. Any Solicitor who aids or abets his client in demanding a jury for any such purposes, lowers himself in the estimation of the Court, prostitutes the machinery of justice, and degrades at once the profession to which he belongs, and the Court in which he practices. "Law is neither a trade nor a solemn jugglery," but the science of justice; and a Court of Conscience is not the forum for any unconscientious practices.

§ 554. Term to be Extended When Trial Not Concluded.—Whenever a case is pending and on trial by the Court, or a jury, and undetermined at the time when the term at which it is pending expires, on account of [lapse of] time, and on account of the arrival of the succeeding term, the term shall be extended and continued into such succeeding term for all the purposes of trying, disposing of, and returning verdict and rendering judgment in, such case so pending and on trial, the same as if such new term had not arrived. And the jury trying such case shall not be discharged because of the expiration of the term.81

NATURE AND EXTENT OF THE RELIEF GRANTED.

§ 555. Grounds of a Decree.
§ 556. Extent of the Relief Granted.
§ 557. Relief Under the General Prayer.

Answer.

Defeated by a Co-defendant.
§ 562. When Persons Not Parties May Take Benefits Under a Decree.
§ 563. When Interest Will be Allowed in a Decree.

§ 555. Grounds of a Decree.—The bill and decree in a cause are syllogistic in their nature, the law constituting the major premise of the syllogism, and hence seldom expressed, the bill constituting the minor premise, and the decree constituting the conclusion of the syllogism. For this reason, which is as sound in law as in logic, the decree must be a legitimate deduction from the bill and the law, or it will be erroneous on its face. And if the facts alleged in the bill are denied in the answer, and not proved, any decree based on such a bill will be erroneous in fact. It follows from these premises, that a proper decree must be based either on the bill and the admissions in the answer, or on the bill and the proofs in the cause sustaining it, and that a decree not so based is necessarily erroneous. A decree must be founded on, and sustained by, both the material allegations and the pertinent proofs in the cause; it cannot be based on allegations without pertinent proofs, nor on proofs without corre-

1 Occasionally decrees are based on the admissions contained in the answer. The complainant might amend his bill, and charge the facts thus admitted, in which case, the Court would decree on the admission; but as Courts of Equity look at the substance and not at ceremony, they deal with such an answer as though the facts admitted had been charged in an amended bill and then admitted by the defendant.

2 Such an erroneous decree may be reversed on appeal, or by writ of error, or by a bill of review for error apparent; and, if wholly outside of the pleadings, is void. See, post, §§ 565; 814, note 43.

3 Such a decree may be reversed on appeal, or by writ of error.
sponding allegations, but must conform to the material allegations in the pleadings, as well as to the pertinent proofs in the cause. 4

A Court of Chancery has no jurisdiction of any matter not submitted to it in a pleading for adjudication; nor can the defendant be called on to respond to anything not alleged against him. Neither can a Court consider any evidence which does not directly, or indirectly, tend to prove, or disprove, the averments contained in the pleadings. A decree can neither be based on allegations without corresponding proof, nor on proof without corresponding allegations; 5 but all decrees must be the concurring result of allegations justified by proof, and proof justified by allegations. 6 A decree based on pleadings, without proof, will be reversed on appeal or writ of error, but will be good against collateral attack; while a decree based on proof, without pleadings, will not only be reversed on appeal or writ of error, but will, also, yield to a collateral attack: for such a decree is coram non judice, and absolutely void. 7 The jurisdiction of the Court is circumscribed by the pleadings, and the pleadings are circumscribed by the law. 8

§ 556. Extent of Relief Granted.—It is a fundamental rule of Courts of Equity to make as complete a decision, upon all the points embraced in a cause, as the nature of the case will admit; so as to preclude, not only all further litigation between the same parties, and the possibility of the same parties being, at any future period, disturbed or harrassed by other parties claiming the same matter, but also to preclude any danger of injustice to persons who are not before the Court. 9 Acting upon this fundamental rule, Courts of Equity not only require the pleadings to so present all the matters in controversy, that they may be properly and fully adjudicated, 10 but they, also, require all persons having any interest in the subject-matter of the controversy to be made parties, to the end that they may either have their rights ascertained, or their duties declared, or their claims adjudged, or their titles bound. 11 And the extent of the relief the Court will grant is, therefore, commensurate with all the rights, all the duties, all the claims, and all the titles, of all the parties to the suit in and to the subject-matter of the controversy, so far as those rights, duties, claims and titles appear in the pleadings and in the pertinent proof. The pleadings must conform to the law, the proof must conform to the pleadings, and the decree must conform to them all: it must be within the law and the pleadings, and be sustained by the proof. If a decree is outside the pleadings, it is void: if inside the pleadings but outside the proof, it is voidable on appeal or writ of error, but is otherwise valid.

§ 557. Relief Under the General Prayer.—As a rule, no relief can be granted if none is prayed for; 12 and no relief will be granted inconsistent with that prayed for. The decree ordinarily follows the special relief sought by the bill, if the pleadings and proof warrant it. 13

If the complainant is not entitled to the specific relief he prays, he may, under the general prayer, have such other relief as, on the pleadings and proof.

4 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1003, note. A decree must be based upon both the pleadings and the proof, and must be logically responsive thereto. The complainant cannot recover on a case different from that alleged in his bill. Neither allegations without proof, nor proof without allegations, nor proof and allegations which do not substantially correspond, will entitle the complainant to relief. The proof must follow the bill, and the decree must follow both. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr.: 361; 861; 4 Bax. 296; 4 Helsk. 209; 609; 5 Elr. 292, 293; 6 Elr. 728; 746; 3 Tenn. Ch., 118; 4 Hum., 417; 12 Helsk., 702; 2 Tenn. Ch., 174; 4 Sneed, 625; 1 Pick., 87. A decree wholly outside of the issues raised by the pleadings is coram non judice, and void even when collaterally attacked. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 553, Mavo v. Harding, 3 Tenn. Ch., 237. See also, King v. Rowan, 10 Helsk., 677; Wilcox v. Blackwell, 15 Pick., 852.

5 Gerst v. Cusack, 22 Pick., 141; Bradshaw v. Van Valkenberg, 13 Pick., 316.

6 And the Court is absolutely bound by the allegations of the parties, and cannot go outside of them even to do substantial justice. The parties make the issues in their pleadings. Teague v. Teague, 2 Ch. Apprs. 376. Judicis est judicare secundum legis et probata. (It is the duty of a Judge to make his judgment in accordance with the allegations and the proofs).

10 See, ante, § 146.

11 See, ante, §§ 90-95.

12 But where a bill is filed under a statute prescribing the relief, it may be granted without a prayer, as in attachment cases where the attached property may be sold without a sale being prayed for.

13 Pillow v. Pillow, 5 Yerg, 420.
he is fairly entitled to, provided it is not of a character to take the defendant by surprise. The relief under the general prayer must be such as follows, ordinarily and logically, from the pleadings and the proof. If the bill prays for general relief only, the complainant can orally pray, at the hearing, for the specific relief he is entitled to, on the case made out by the pleadings and proof.

§ 558. When Relief May be Based on the Answer.—Where the answer denies the precise case alleged in the bill, and sets up a different case, if the complainant fail to prove the case he alleges, and he be entitled to any relief on the case set up in the answer, the Court will grant him such relief. It would be more regular in such cases, however, for the complainant to amend his bill and charge the case made in the answer; but, as Courts of Chancery regard form, a decree will be rendered as though such an amendment had been made. But when relief is based upon an answer, the whole answer must be taken together, the matters of discharge as well as the matters of charge; and when so considered, must show that the complainant is entitled to relief, or none will be granted on the answer alone. In case the answer sets up a discharge, also, if the complainant wishes to avail himself of the matters of charge and disprove the matters of discharge, he must amend his bill, and allege the former and deny the latter.

§ 559. What Relief a Defendant May Have.—While, as a rule, a defendant to a suit is not entitled to any affirmative relief, unless he obtains it by means of a cross-bill, or an answer filed as a cross-bill, (and even then he obtains it as a complainant, and not as a defendant,) nevertheless, there are important exceptions to this rule; and when a defendant’s equities are the same as the complainant’s, the Court will grant the former the same relief as is granted the latter, if the bill so prays.

And, as he who seeks Equity must, also, do Equity, the Court will give the defendant any relief he may be entitled to in good conscience, as against the complainant, as to any matter connected with the subject-matter of the litigation. Thus, a defendant will (1) be allowed a set-off, or (2) will be allowed the value of his improvements made in good faith and without notice when complainant recovers the land, or (3) will be allowed the principal of his debt when complainant has an usurious or inequitable instrument cancelled, or (4) will be allowed the liens by him removed when a partition is sought. On a bill for an account, a decree may be rendered in favor of the defendant for the balance found due him, and a cross-bill is not necessary to entitle the defendant to such a decree. So, on a bill to enjoin a mortgage sale, and for an account to ascertain the true balance of the mortgage debt, a decree may be rendered in the defendant’s favor for such balance, and the mortgaged land sold, without a cross-bill.

§ 560. Relief When Granted Between Co-defendants.—As a general rule, the Court will not make a decree between co-defendants, but will content itself by granting the complainant the relief he may be entitled to, or by dismissing his bill. To this rule there are, however, frequent and important exceptions; and it is a settled doctrine of adjudication that whenever, in a Court of Equity, a case is made out between defendants, by evidence arising from the pleadings and proofs between the complainants and the defendants, the Court is not only entitled to make a decree between the defendants, but is bound to do so. 28

The tendency of the Court is in favor of the more frequent exercise of this jurisdiction; and to make decrees between co-defendants in all cases, as to all matters contained in the pleadings that if left undetermined would leave roots of future controversy; the object of the Court being to prevent a multiplicity of suits, and to bring litigation to an end. 27 And to effectually do this, the Court will so decree as (1) to settle all equities between the parties arising out of the pleadings, regardless of their attitudes as complainants or defendants, and (2) to make a final disposal of the entire subject-matter of the litigation. 28

The cases in which a decree may be made in favor of one defendant against another are:

1. Where the decree, made in favor of the complainant against one or more of the defendants, operates to create a right, or equity, in favor of one defendant against another which can be adjusted or protected in the same suit; such right, or equity, however, must arise out of the decree itself, and not from a state of facts outside of the decree. 29

2. Where the complainant and one or more defendants have rights of the same nature, and growing out of the same facts, against the other defendant or defendants, so that the same decree may declare and enforce the rights of the complainant and of the defendant, or defendants, whose interests are the same as his. 30

3. Where the relief to which the complainant is entitled cannot be granted without first determining the rights and equities existing between the defendants, and growing out of facts charged in the bill. 31

§ 561. When Relief Against a Defendant is Defeated by a Co-defendant.

A Court of Chancery seeks to do Equity to and between all the parties to a suit as far as possible under the pleadings and proofs, regardless of their attitude as complainants or defendants; and allows no forms of pleading and no technicalities of practice to stay its hand in doing such complete justice to each party as good reason and good conscience require; and, when necessary for co-complainants. Thus on a bill (1) to redeem land, or (2) to partition land, or (3) to sell land and remove all tition, or (4) to set up title to specific real or personal property, or (5) to recover a trust fund, or (6) to compel an executor, administrator, guardian or other trustee to account, or (7) to sell land to pay debts, or (8) to wind up an insolvent estate, partnership or corporation, or (9) to have a general accounting, the Court will render a complete decree, and so mould it as to make a final and full disposition of the entire subject-matter, and of the rights of all the parties having an interest therein, regardless of their attitudes as complainants or defendants. In such cases, a defendant, whose right or interests are concurrent with those of the complainant, will be given the same sort of recovery, and his rights and interests will be protected and enforced in the same manner as though he were a co-complainant, and especially if he be an infant, or person of unsound mind.

this purpose, the Court will require pleadings to be amended, new parties to be made, and additional proof to be filed.

Under the operation of its rule of doing complete and not half justice,\(^{32}\) when, from defences made by one party the non-liability of a non-defending party appears, the Court will not adjudge the latter to be liable, not even when a pro confesso has been entered against him.\(^{33}\) Thus, where there is privity between defendants, a good defence by one of the privies will protect a co-defendant who is a co-heir, co-legatee, co-partner, co-principal, co-surety, tenant in common, co-trustee, co-director, co-guardian, co-executor, co-administrator, beneficiary or trustee, principal or agent, or vendor or vendee, from the consequences of a pro confesso.

When, on the pleadings alone, or on both pleadings and proof, it appears that the complainant is not entitled to any recovery, what justice is there in giving him a decree against an innocent man because as a defendant he has failed to make any defense? The Chancery Court declines to enforce forfeitures and relieves against penalties, and while it may punish such a defendant by taxing him with some of the costs it will not hold that he has forfeited all rights and incurred all penalties by failing to answer the bill when it appears of record in the cause that he is not liable, for that would be to crucify an innocent man on a technicality,\(^{34}\) and aid a guilty man to perpetrate an iniquity by means of the forms of procedure.

Therefore, it has been adjudicated, (1,) that a defence by an heir or legatee will enure to the benefit of the executors of the estate;\(^{35}\) (2,) that a defence by one partner will enure to the benefit of another partner;\(^{36}\) (3,) that a defence by a trustee will protect the beneficiary;\(^{37}\) (4,) that a defence by his vendor will save a vendee from a pro confesso against him;\(^{38}\) and (5,) where one personal representative successfully defends he thereby relieves the representatives from the effects of a judgment by default in a Court of law,\(^{39}\) so that the general rule stated in the second paragraph of this section may be considered a part of our jurisprudence.\(^{40}\) But, on the contrary, where there is no privacy, no joint liability, or no common interest between two defendants, the answer and defence of one will not enure to the benefit of the other who has been pro confessoed, and will not protect him from the liability alleged in the bill.\(^{41}\)

§ 562. When Persons Not Parties May Take Benefits Under a Decree.—It often happens that persons who are not parties are entitled to take benefits under a decree: this happens when they are interested in the subject-matter of the suit, but have not been made parties because (1) too numerous, or (2) because their interests or names were not known; or (3) because the bill is filed for their benefit in part. The most ordinary cases of a right to come in under a decree are the following: 1, Where a decree directs a fund belonging to an estate, or to a trust, to be paid out to those entitled, in which case, legatees, distributees, and creditors may come in at any time before final distribution of the funds. 2, Where a female party marries pending the suit, and no notice thereof is taken by the Court, the husband may come in under the decree in the right of his wife; 3, Where the persons entitled are numerous, and the bill is filed for the benefit of all concerned; 4, Where the decree in a partition, or similar case, adjudges that certain unknown heirs have an interest, these heirs may set up that interest under the decree; 5, Where a person has acquired by purchase, descent or otherwise, the interest of a party in the decree; and 6, Where, in any case, a person not a party has an interest in the fund to be distributed, and the scope of the decree includes him and his interest.\(^{42}\)

In all such cases, the proper procedure to obtain the benefit of a decree is by a sworn petition, setting forth clearly the facts on which the claim is based, and praying to be made a party to the cause, and to be allowed to come in and prove the petitioner's claim under the decree. Such petition, however, cannot be used to attack the decree, nor to set up rights, claims, or interests in conflict therewith; this can be done by a bill only.

If such a decree is merely interlocutory, the rights and privileges of such third persons are greater, and they may have their rights expressly protected in the final decree, and may contest the claims of other claimants.

§ 563. When Interest Will be Allowed in a Decree.—Interest is the compensation which may be demanded by the lender from the borrower, or the creditor from the debtor, for the use of money, the rate not to exceed six per centum; any excess over that rate is usury. Interest was not allowed at common law, but the Legislature and the Courts have made many instances where interest is legal. Thus, all bills single, bonds, notes, bills of exchange, and liquidated and settled accounts, signed by the debtor, bear interest from the time they become due, unless otherwise specified in the writing; and ali judgments and decrees draw interest from their date. In all other cases, Chancellors and juries are given an equitable power to allow interest in the form of damages, if they think it just. The general rule is to allow interest in all cases where the amount of the debt is certain, and not disputed on reasonable grounds. The Clerk and Master will allow interest in stating an account when so directed in the order of reference. Interest may be allowed on the separate items of a debt from the periods at which they respectively fell due. And where damages are allowed for a breach of contract to deliver specific articles on a given day at a certain price, interest may be allowed on such damages from the breach of the contract to the date of the decree. Interest is allowable on a debt admitted, and agreed to be paid, and on an account rendered and not disputed in a reasonable time.

Interest is not ordinarily allowable on unliquidated demands, unless there is some precise time fixed for payment, or an account has been rendered or a demand made, or some custom or usage warrant it; but where the debt is for property sold or services rendered or money loaned to the defendant, or a just debt paid for him, and the transaction reasonable, and no equities or meritorious defences, interest is ordinarily allowable.

Interest is an incident of a debt after its maturity, because it is either given by positive law, or, in the absence of countervailing equity, by the equitable verdict of the jury, or by the Court acting in place of the jury; but where the debt to be paid, or the duty to be performed, is uncertain, no interest ought to be allowed. When the Court has discretionary power to allow interest it may make the allowance from the maturity of the debt, or from date of demand made on defendant for payment, or from date of acknowledgment of debt by the defendant, or from the day the suit was commenced to collect it, which is deemed a demand.

In the Code form of declaration on the common counts, it is alleged that "the several sums of money, with interest thereon, are now due;" which seems to imply that in suits for money due by account, open or stated, or due for money loaned, or for goods, wares and merchandise, or for specific articles of personal property, or for money paid for the defendant at his request, or for work and labor done for the defendant, interest is to be allowed on the recovery from the day it became due. Hence, it is safe to say, that in all such cases interest should be allowed from the day the complainant had the right to the money he sues for.

The rule for casting interest, when partial payments have been made, is to apply the payment, in the first place, to the discharge of the interest then due. If the payment exceeds the interest, the surplus goes towards discharging the principal, and the subsequent interest is to be computed on the balance of the principal remaining due. If the payment be less than the interest, the surplus of interest must not be taken to augment the principal, but interest continues on the former principal until the period when the payments, taken together, exceed the interest due, and then the surplus is to be applied to discharging the principal; and interest is to be computed on the balance as aforesaid.54

ARTICLE II.
DECREEs GENERALLY CONSIDERED.

§ 564. Nature, Office, and Effect of a Decree.1—A decree is the determination of the rights of the parties as to the matters in controversy before the Court, duly pronounced by the Chancellor, and entered on the minutes of the Court.2 As the office of pleadings is to present to the Court the issues of law and fact the parties desire to have adjudicated, and as the office of proof is to sustain by facts the respective contentions of the parties, so the office of a decree is to close the controversy and adjudge the conclusions of law and fact reached by the Court as to the respective rights, duties, and liabilities of the parties. As a rule, decrees determine the rights of all the parties to the suit according to Equity and good conscience, and are pronounced only after hearing and understanding all the points in issue;3 but a decree is none the less a decree, and none the less valid, although pronounced without such a hearing and understanding, and in violation of Equity and good conscience.4 The force and effect of a decree, when unappealed from and unreversed, is not impaired by the fact that the decree is unjust, and might have been reversed on appeal, or by writ of error. So long as the parties aggrieved acquiesce in it, so long is 54 This is the rule laid down by Chancellor Kent, in Jackson v. Connecticut, 1 Johns. Ch. R. 17, and approved by our Supreme Court. Jones v. Ward, 10 Yerg., 160; Scanlan v. Houston, 5 Yerg., 310; Union Bank v. Williams, 3 Cold., 582; Thompson v. Childress, 1 Tenn. Ch. 369; Smith v. Thomas, 8 Bax., 417; Curd v. Davis, 1 Heisk., 576.

The rule may, perhaps, be more briefly stated thus: 1. Where the payment equals or exceeds the accrued interest such payment is deducted from the aggregate of principal and accrued interest, and the balance becomes a new principal upon which subsequent interest will be computed. 2. Where the payment is less than the accrued interest such payment is not computed until it and subsequent payments equal or it valid and binding, nor can it be incidentally or collaterally assailed. Until reversed by an appellate Court, or impeached by an original bill for fraud, or set aside upon a bill of review, a decree, however erroneous, is absolutely conclusive upon the parties to the suit and their privies, provided the Court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter. In Tennessee, a decree in Equity is for all purposes as high in dignity, and as conclusive in effect, as a judgment at law, and as effectually terminates the litigation in which it is pronounced.

A decree is operative and binding upon all the parties to the suit, whether they be natural or artificial persons, and whether under disability or not. Persons under disability have a longer period in which to oust a writ of error, or to file a bill of review, or a bill to impeach a decree for fraud, but none the less is the original decree conclusive upon them until set aside, modified or annulled, by a proper procedure. Infants have no longer a day in Court, after attaining majority, to show cause why they should not be bound by a decree.

A decree is not binding, however upon a person not made a party, nor upon a party not brought before the Court, unless such a person was a member of a class whose interests and rights were duly and expressly presented for adjudication.

§ 565. Essentials of a Valid Decree.—The Chancery Court is a Superior Court of general Equity jurisdiction, and all of its decrees are presumed to be valid, and this presumption is conclusive against collateral attack, unless it affirmatively appear, on the face of the record itself:

1. That the Court had no general jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the litigation.
2. That the decree itself is wholly outside of the pleadings, and no binding consent thereto is shown in the record.
3. That the Court had no jurisdiction of the party complaining, in person or by representation of interest: in which case it is void only as to such party, or his privies.

2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 986, note; And, if all the persons in being have an interest in the subject-matter of the suit are made parties, the decree will bind those subsequently born who have an interest.
3. See ante, §§ 16; 19.
5. A Court of general jurisdiction is presumed to have acted correctly, and the burden of showing the contrary rests upon him who alleges it. Every intention is in favor of its decrees. Irregularities in the proceedings, or erroneous deductions from the evidence, will not affect their validity, if the Court had jurisdiction, and of the subject-matter and of the person. If such jurisdiction be shown by the record, all irregularities go for naught; if such jurisdiction be not shown, the proceedings are void, however regular in all other respects. Proceedings in suits may be very irregular and easily reversible in the Supreme Court, on appeal, or writ of error, and yet invulnerable against collateral attack. Courts hesitate long, and insist upon a clear case, before pronouncing a decree void. If the Court had jurisdiction of the subject and of the party, that is enough to make the decree proof against collateral attack, even in cases where the decree would have been easily reversed on an appeal, or writ of error. Empson v. Robert-

10. A Court of general jurisdiction is presumed to have acted correctly, and the burden of showing the contrary rests upon him who alleges it. Every intention is in favor of its decrees. Irregularities in the proceedings, or erroneous deductions from the evidence, will not affect their validity, if the Court had jurisdiction, and of the subject-matter and of the person. If such jurisdiction be shown by the record, all irregularities go for naught; if such jurisdiction be not shown, the proceedings are void, however regular in all other respects. Proceedings in suits may be very irregular and easily reversible in the Supreme Court, on appeal, or writ of error, and yet invulnerable against collateral attack. Empson v. Robert-
11. See ante, supra.
13. Jurisdiction of the subject-matter cannot be given by consent, except where that jurisdiction depends on a statute. If the Court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and no right to determine it, or pronounce a decree therein, all its orders and decrees are nullities, and may be so treated, on a collateral attack; and the fact that the defendant appeared and made no objection to the jurisdiction, or consented to the decree, will not validate the proceedings. Agee v. Dement, 1 Hum., 331; White v. Buchanan, 6 Cold., 32; Noel v. Scoby, 12 Heisk., 28; Ferris v. Fort, 2 Tenn. Ch., 150; Board v. Bodlin Bros., 24 Pick., 600; Baker v. Mitchell, 11 Pick., 610. See ante, § 177, notes 17 and 30; and § 290.
15. Reinhardt v. Nealis, 17 Pick., 169. A decree wholly outside the pleadings is validated by the consent of the parties appearing in the decree. Ibid.
16. If a person is not duly made a party to a suit
A decree is absolutely void if it appear on the face of the record itself either (1) that the Court had no general jurisdiction of the subject-matter, or (2) that the decree is wholly outside of the pleadings, and no consent thereto appears; and a decree is void as to any person shown by the record itself not to have been before the Court in person, or by representation. All decrees, not thus appearing on their face to be void, are valid and binding, until either (1) reversed in the Supreme Court, or in the Court of Chancery Appeals, on appeal or writ of error, or (2) are reversed on a bill of review, or (3) are set aside on a bill filed to impeach it.

All decrees not thus appearing on their face to be void are absolutely proof against collateral attack, and no parol proof is admissible on such an attack to show any defect in the proceedings, or in the decree.17

§ 566. Frame of a Decree.—Decrees commonly consist of five parts: 1st. The style of the cause in which it is pronounced; 2d, The commencement, which usually gives the date of the decree, and the name of the Chancellor by whom it is pronounced; 3d, The recitals, which state the facts on which the decree is based; 4th, The declaratory part, which sets forth the rights of the parties, and 5th, The ordering, or mandatory part, which specifies what shall be done, when, how, where, by whom, and to or for whom.18 The first and fifth parts only are absolutely essential, as the fourth part may be largely incorporated into the fifth. These five parts will be considered more fully.

1. The Title, Style of the Cause. The decree should show, in its style, or elsewhere on its face, the names of all the parties to the cause, both complainant and defendant; and, also, the character or capacity in which any of the parties sues or is sued, when in other right than in his own,19 as when he sues or is sued as executor, administrator, next friend, guardian, trustee, assignee, and the like. The better practice is to incorporate all of their names in the body of the decree, especially the names of the defendants, when more than one.20

2. The Commencement of a Decree. It is often important, and nearly always convenient, to know the date of the decree, and the name of the Chancellor pronouncing it. The date is sometimes essential, especially when a decree is entered nunc pro tunc, as the parties’ rights sometimes depend on the date when a decree is pronounced. The following form of commencement, though brief, is adequate: “This cause was heard on this May 20, 1890, before Chancellor John P. Smith, upon”— Unless there be some special reason for having the decree bear the date when actually pronounced, it will be so dated as to conform to the date of the minutes in which it is entered; and if it bear a prior date, it should show on its face that it is entered nunc pro tunc.21

3. The Recitals in a Decree. Formerly, an abstract of the pleadings and proof followed the introductory part of a decree, and constituted the premises of the declaratory part; but now the recitals are confined to a plain and succinct state-by service of subpoena, publication, or appearance, or is not duly in Court by representation of interest, or by a privy, he is not bound by any decree in such suit. But if the Court has jurisdiction of the person of the parties, all persons claiming under them are bound by the decree, if it is otherwise valid. A decree against a person not before the Court, is a nullity as to him and all claiming under him; but such a decree is none the less valid and binding as to other parties actually brought before the Court. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 986, note. As to representation of interest, see Parker v. Peters, 2 Shan. Cas., 636; Ridley v. Halliday, 22 Pick., 607. A decree on a bill filed in the wrong county in a local suit is void, even when the jurisdiction is not objected to. Nashville v. Webb, 6 Cates, 432; Mills v. Haley, M.S.S., Nashville, 1906.

17 See, ante, § 446. A decree is collaterally attacked when objected to as evidence in another cause. Pope v. Harrison, 16 Lea. 90. On such an attack the justness of the decree, and whether it is free from error, or sustained by the evidence, cannot be questioned; these are matters to be inquired into only by the Supreme Court on appeal, or writ of error. See Freem. on Judgments, §§ 120; 124.

18 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1001-1004.

19 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1002.

20 This is a matter of no little importance. Inasmuch as the pleadings are no longer enrolled, and frequently get lost or mislaid, and as the rule dockets are not always kept in due form, there may be nothing on record to show where the parties to a cause are, and in what character they sue or are sued, unless the decree should so show on its face. A careful Solicitor will not, in order to save a minute’s time, jeopard his client’s interests by failing to insert all the names of the parties in the style, or brief, of the final decree. A decree which does not give, in its style or elsewhere on its face, the names and character of all the parties to the suit, is frequently absolutely unintelligible, and if the pleadings are lost, may be valueless without further litigation.

ment of the facts without any abstract of the pleadings, and may be dispensed with altogether, unless the Court otherwise direct. Every final decree, however, should at least show that the cause was heard upon the bill, the answers of those answering, the order pro confesso as to those pro confesso; the exhibits, if any, the other orders and reports, if any, and the proof, including any agreements. It is of material importance that the decree should show what evidence was objected to at the hearing, and the ruling of the Court thereon; and if any verbal agreements made at the bar are considered by the Court, these should be recited in the decree. Whenever a decree is made by consent, it should be so stated on its face.

4. The Declaratory Part of a Decree. After reciting that the cause was heard upon the pleadings, specifying them when necessary, the orders pro confesso, if any, and the other orders, if any; the reports of the Master, if any; the exhibits, if any, and the proof, including any verbal agreements made in open Court, the decree should declare what, after considering all these, and the arguments of counsel, the Court is of opinion the facts, and the rights and duties of the respective parties, are. This part of the decree is a sort of premise of the ordering, or mandatory, part of the decree, and makes the meaning of the latter clearer, and its equity more manifest. The declaratory part of a decree should, as a rule, follow the premises, or essential allegations of the bill.

5. The Ordering, or Mandatory Part, of a Decree. This part and the title, or style of the cause, are the only absolutely essential parts of a decree. The mandates of a Court are its ultimate conclusions and final resolutions, all else in the decree, except the style of the cause, being merely preambles and inducements. The mandatory part of a decree is its vital and virile part, and contains the specific orders and directions of the Court, and points out with clearness and emphasis what shall be done, when, how, where, by whom, and to or for whom. The ordering part of the decree must conform to the pleadings, and be responsive to them, leaving no matter undetermined, and no roots for further litigation: it should be precise and definite, free from vagueness, and capable of being executed with certainty.

The mandatory part of a decree is as follows:

"It is therefore, ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the Court that [the (1) defendant pay the complainant the amount of money due, or (2) that the complainant recover the (3) land, or (4) sum of money, or (5) other right he sues for, or (6) that he is entitled to the lien, or right, or interest, he claims, or (7) that the contract be reformed, or rescinded, or, specifically performed, or (8) that the defendant be perpetually enjoined from doing any of the acts complained of, or (9) that he be required to do the particular thing sought by the bill, or (10) that the cloud be removed, or (11) the title be divested and vested, or (12) that the complainant have such other relief as he prays for, and may be entitled to, and (13) that the costs be paid by such and such parties, and (14) that the proper final process issue."

There is a marked difference between a technical decree in Chancery and a judgment at law. A judgment gives the plaintiff a recovery without any other

22 Since the discontinuance of the practice of enrolling the pleadings, it has become of more importance to recite in a decree the substantial facts on which the decree is based, because in this way the facts are placed on record; the pleadings and proof should be lost or mislaid.

24 This recital is valuable as a perpetuation of the facts, for reasons stated in the preceding notes to this section.

25 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1003.

26 Decrees need not recite the facts on which they are based, but only the conclusions to which the Court has come. The Code, however, does not prohibit the plain and succinct statement of the facts in a decree; Code, §§ 4476-4477; and such a statement is often important, and may be properly made in the declaratory part of a decree.

27 The recitals of a decree are the premises of the declaratory part of a decree, the declaratory part is the premise of the mandatory part, and the mandatory part is the premise of the final process, including orders of sale, which are a sort of final process. The draftsman, who remembers this logical sequence of the different parts of a decree, will have no difficulty in drawing a lucid and concise decree, such a decree being one of the highest evidences of genuine legal skill and ability. As he is a timid Chancellor who gives no reasons for his mandate, so he is a timid and unskilled Solicitor who omits the declaratory part in drawing a decree.

28 The declaratory part of a decree is in the nature of a preamble to a resolution, giving the reasons and considerations moving the Chancellor to the mandatory conclusions he reaches.

29 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1004-1006. A decree should (1) specify the precise amount of money to be paid; (2) the precise tract of land to be sold, identifying it; (3) the precise persons by whom and to whom money should be paid; (4) the precise acts to be done, by whom, when, where, and for whom, and (5) should leave nothing to be determined by any other person, or to be ascertained by calculation, except when a reference to the Master is expressly made. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1004, notes. The mandatory part of a decree, should, as a rule, conform to the special prayers of the bill.
reason than that the jury has found in his favor; whereas a technical decree in Chancery gives a summary of the pleadings and the findings of facts by the Chancellor and then commands the defendant to do the particular act, pay the money decreed to be due from him, execute the instrument required, specifically perform the contract named, deliver the real or personal property, or the deeds, papers or other instruments described, or enjoins and prohibits the defendant from doing the acts complained of.

In case of a money recovery, enforceable by execution, many Solicitors, in drawing decrees, pursue the forms of judgments at law in a similar case, and there is no good objection to this practice, and it has been often followed in this Treatise.

If the decree leaves any matter undisposed of, there should be added to it a special or general reservation of such matters, the general reservation order being, "other matters are reserved." If the decree is entered nunc pro tunc, it should so state. If further application to the Court for some order in the case be probable the decree should conclude as follows: "And either party is to be at liberty to apply to the Court as occasion may require." § 567.

§ 567. Formal Parts of Decrees.—To illustrate the preceding section, the formal parts of decrees are here set out. These parts will be often referred to in the forms of decrees given in this Treatise, they being omitted in many forms in order to economize space and avoid unnecessary repetition.

THE FORMAL PARTS OF A DEGREE.

The Title, Style of the Cause. A B and C D, vs. E F, G H and I J. No. 1313

The Commencement.

This cause came on to be heard this August 25, 1890, before Chancellor John P. Smith [or, Judge William R. Hicks, sitting by interchange with Chancellor John P. Smith,] upon the bill [or, the original and amended bills], the answers of the defendants, E F and I J, the latter by K L, his general guardian [or, guardian ad litem,] and the judgment pro confesso heretofore taken and entered against the defendant G H, as to both the original and amended bills, and upon the written agreement exhibited to the [original] bill, and the other proof in the cause, and argument of counsel.

The Declaratory Part.

from all of which it appears to the Court that [Here insert such of the essential allegations of the bill as are sustained by the proof, or admitted by the answers.] The Ordering, or Mandatory Part.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed by the Court: 1. That [Here insert what the Court has decreed, following, as a rule, the specific prayers of the bill, unless the Court's decree is different.]

29 A judgment at law is as follows, omitting the verdict of the jury: "It is therefore considered by the Court that the plaintiff recover of the defendant five hundred dollars [or, the premises specified in the declaration,] and the costs of the suit, for which an execution [and writ of possession] will issue."

30 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1366-1375. In Shepard v. Akers, 2 Tenn. Ch., 547, Interest was allowed in a subsequent decree, without any reservation in the former decree. The former decree was, however, for an account between, the parties.

31 State, ex rel., v. Williams, 2 Cates, 597. This reservation of liberty to apply is a prudent precaution: 1st, When the decree is of such a character that, upon the death of a party, other parties may have rights under the decree requiring action by the Court; 2d, When parties by representation not in esse when the decree was pronounced may be born, and some action of the Court may be necessary for the protection of their rights; 3d, When parties are required by the decree to do some specific act, and further orders may become necessary for the enforcement of the decree; 4th, When, in any other case, vation of liberty to apply does not alter the final nature of the decree. Such a decree can be appealed from as a matter of right, and may be pleaded in bar to another suit, for the same matter. This liberty to apply is taken advantage of by motion or petition, but in either case all parties concerned should have notice, and an opportunity to be heard. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 333; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 396. See, post, § 579, on Supplemental Decrees.

32 Give the correct style of the cause, ordinarily the style endorsed on back of the bill. See, ante, § 178. Technically, every decree has a caption identical with that of the first day's minutes; but the practice is to consider the caption of the first day's minutes as the caption of every order and decree made during the term. See, ante, § 32.

33 Give the names of all the defendants, and show which ones answered and which were pro confesso. 24 This part of the decree is important, but not essential; and may be omitted. Code, § 4476. In such case the following form is often used after the recital: On consideration whereof it is ordered, adjudged and decreed by the Court:
§ 568. Forms of Decrees.—The frame of decrees as set forth in the preceding section will be more fully illustrated by the following forms:

GENERAL FORM OF A DECREES.
The Title, or Style, of the Cause.

The Commencement.

This cause was heard on this 24th day of June, 1891, before Chancellor M N, [or, before Hon. K L, Judge of the 5th Circuit, sitting by interchange with Chancellor M N.]

The Recitals.

Upon the original and amended bills, the answers of the defendant, C D, and of the minor defendant, E D, by O P, his guardian ad litem, to both of said bills, the judgment pro confesso heretofore entered against the defendant, D D, as to both of said bills, the exhibits to the original and amended bills, the stipulation between the complainant and the defendant, C D, and the other proof in the cause, [showing in detail the various bills, answers, exhibits, and stipulations filed, and pro confesso taken. Or the recital may be general, thus: upon the pleadings and proof in the cause, and the pro confesso against the defendant, D D.]

The Declaratory Part.

From all which it appears to the Court that [giving the general facts alleged in the bill, and sustained by the proof.]

The Mandatory Part.

It is, therefore, ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the Court that the complainant have and recover of the defendants, C D and E D, the sum of one thousand dollars, and all the costs of the cause; [or, the property described in the bill; or, that complainant's rights are so and so; or, that the defendants be required to do so and so; or, that they be perpetually enjoined from doing so and so.—following, as a rule, in this part of the decree, the prayer in the bill for specific relief.] The costs of the cause will be paid by the defendant, C D, for which an execution will issue against him; [or, the costs of the cause will be paid out of the fund in the cause, or out of the proceeds of said sale; or, will be paid one-half by the complainant and the other half by the defendant, or as otherwise decreed.] A writ of possession will issue to put A B in possession of said tract of land. [If a report is ordered, specify the matters to be reported, then add:] said report will be made to the present [or, next] term of the Court, until which time all other matters are reserved.

FORM OF AN INTERLOCUTORY DECREES.
The Title, or Style, of the Cause.

John Smith and Henry Smith, vs. David Smith, Mary Smith, Daniel Smith and George Jones. No. 226.

The Commencement.

This cause was heard this May 20, 1890, before Hon. John P. Smith, Chancellor, [or, before Judge William R. Hicks, sitting by interchange with Chancellor John P. Smith,] upon the original and amended bills, and the answers of David Smith and Mary Smith in person, and of Daniel Smith, a minor, by G. Mc. Henderson, his guardian ad litem, and the pro confesso heretofore taken and entered against the defendant George Jones, the two deeds exhibited to the bill, and the other proof in the cause, from all which.

The Recitals.

The Declaratory Part.

it appears that the complainants John Smith and Henry Smith, and the defendants David Smith, Mary Smith, and Daniel Smith, as children and heirs at law of William Smith, deceased, are tenants in common, and equal owners, share and share alike, of the tract of land described in the bill, situated in the 4th civil district of Grainger county, and bounded as follows: Beginning on a large poplar. [giving description by metes and bounds.] And it further appearing that Susan Jones, born Smith, formerly the wife of the defendant, George Jones, died in the lifetime of her father, the said William Smith, leaving no children.
DECREES GENERALLY CONSIDERED. § 569

The Ordering, or Mandatory, Part.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed by the Court:

1. That said John Smith, Henry Smith, David Smith, Mary Smith, and Daniel Smith are each entitled, as equal tenants in common, to an undivided one-fifth of said tract of land, and as such are entitled to have said tract partitioned, or sold.

2. That George Jones has no title or interest in said land, or in any part thereof, either in his own right, or in the right of his deceased wife.

3. That the Master hear proof and report to the present term, if practicable, and if not, to the next term:

   (1) Whether said tract of land is so situated that advantageous partition thereof can be made; or
   (2) Whether it would be manifestly for the advantage of the parties that the tract should be sold instead of partitioned.

4. The adjudication of costs, and counsel fees, and all other matters, are reserved.

5. This decree was made on May 10, 1890, and is entered now for then.

The mandatory part of every decree should be divided into paragraphs, and each paragraph consecutively numbered. These numbers may be placed at the beginning of the paragraphs, as shown above, or they may be put in the center of a separate line above the paragraphs.

The form of a final decree is substantially the same as that of an interlocutory decree, except no matter is reserved, and there is no reference to the Master as to any matter.

FORM OF A FINAL DEREE.

The Title, or Style, of the Cause.

John Jones, vs. Henry Thomas and George Stokes.} No. 953.

The Commencement.

This cause came on to be heard this August 25, 1890, before Chancellor John P. Smith, [or, Judge William R. Hicks, sitting by interchange with Chancellor John P. Smith,] upon the original and amended bills, the answers of the defendant Henry Thomas to both bills, and the judgment pro confesso heretofore entered against the defendant George Stokes as to both bills, and the written agreement exhibited to the amended bill, and the other proof in the cause, from all of which

The Recitals.

The Declaratory Part.

it appears that the defendants, Henry Thomas and George Stokes, did, on December 12, 1888, execute said written agreement, giving the complainant a lien on the saw-mill, engine, boiler and fixtures described in the bill, and situated on the farm of William Cook, in the 2d civil district of Grainger county, to secure the payment of six hundred dollars, on or before April 25, 1890; and that the defendant George Stokes, did in and by said agreement guarantee to pay complainant any balance due on said written agreement in case the proceeds of said property do not satisfy the same; and it further appearing that there is now due on said agreement principal and interest the sum of six hundred and forty-eight dollars; and that all of said property has been attached to secure the payment of the same;

The Ordering, or Mandatory, Part.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed by the Court; 37

1. That complainant have and recover of the defendants, Henry Thomas and George Stokes, said sum of six hundred and forty-eight dollars, and all the costs of this cause.

2. That if said sum and costs are not paid within sixty days, the Sheriff [or Master] will, after giving legal notice, sell said saw-mill, engine, boiler and fixtures for cash in hand, to the highest and best bidder; and an order of sale will issue accordingly. If the proceeds of said sale be insufficient to satisfy this decree,

3. An execution will issue against both defendants for the balance remaining unpaid.

4. The costs of the cause will be paid in the first instance out of the proceeds of said sale.

§ 569. Dismissing Bills at the Hearing.—If, at the hearing, it appear that the complainant is not entitled to any relief, either under his special prayers, or under his general prayer, his bill will be dismissed; if, however, he is entitled 35 When the various pleadings and important proofs are recited, there is less danger of confusion arising, especially on appeal, from papers getting lost or mixed, than if the essential allegations of the bill follow the general prayer of the bill.

§ 570. When a Bill Will be Dismissed Without Prejudice.—When a bill is dismissed (1) because of some slip or mistake in the pleadings or proof, or (2) because of failure to give some required bond, or (3) for want of any of the prerequisites of the writ, or (4) for want of necessary parties, or (5) for any other reason not involving the merits of the controversy, it should generally be dismissed without prejudice to complainant's rights to file another bill. And even when there is an adjudication upon the merits, and it appears probable from the pleadings, or proof, that in a new suit better adapted to the equities sought to be set up, relief may be had; or that, in a subsequent suit, evidence not now attainable may be produced, the Court will, on application, incline to dismiss the bill without prejudice, if the complainant is guilty of no negligence or bad faith.\(^4\)

Where, however, the defendant has taken his proof on the merits, and the complainant has either taken no proof, or is unwilling to have the cause heard on the proof on file, he should not be allowed to dismiss his bill without prejudice; and thus be given full leave to again litigate the same matters with the same parties. In such case the complainant may, subject to the rules heretofore laid down in this Chapter, dismiss his bill, but such dismissal must be subject to all the consequences incident to a dismissal with prejudice.\(^4\)

§ 571. The Drawing and Entering of Orders and Decrees.—After the Chancellor has delivered his opinion, the duty of drawing the consequent order or decree generally devolves on the Solicitors of the winning party. The Chancellor frequently furnishes the draftsman with a memorandum of the chief points of his adjudication. In drawing the decree, the draftsman should, not only in the declaratory part, carefully and conscientiously follow the Chancellor's opinion, but should, in the mandatory part, earnestly endeavor to have his draft fully and fairly express the Chancellor's conclusions.

If the Chancellor has inadvertently failed to adjudicate any question raised by the pleadings, either the draftsman, or the opposite party, may call his attention to it, after notice thereof to the other side, and have it determined, to the end that it may be incorporated into the draft of the decree.

After the decree has been fully drawn, it should be submitted to the Solicitor of the other party for his inspection and criticism; if he raises no objection to \(^{41}\) 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 994; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 341. No suit should ever be dismissed because of any slip, mistake, or omission, that can be remedied, corrected or supplied in the Court where the bill is pending. The better practice is to allow the complainant to amend his bill, or to file a supplemental bill, or to remand the cause for further proof, as the exigency may require. In such case, however, the complainants should be taxed with all the costs of the cause; for, otherwise, the complainant will obtain an advantage from his own want of diligence. The interlocutory taxation of costs is the best spur to diligence, and the best preventive of delay.

DECREES GENERALLY CONSIDERED. § 572

e it, or if his objections are acquiesced in, or removed, the draft is then read to the Chancellor in open Court, or at Chambers, and if approved by him, is delivered to the Clerk for entry upon the minutes. If the respective Solicitors cannot agree upon the draft of the decree, they must submit their differences to the Chancellor in open Court, or at Chambers, and he will determine them, and settle the decree.

The decree must be written upon not less than half a sheet of paper, and in ink.

Until a decree has been settled and entered on the minutes, it is considered as only inchoate, and neither party can have any benefit from the decision. A decree, however, is considered as entered from the time it is left with the Clerk for that purpose, although, from a press of business, it may not be actually copied into the minute-book for some days afterward. If the Chancellor should die, or resign, before a decree has been entered on the minutes, such a decree would be a nullity, and the cause would remain on the docket, as though it had not been heard.

§ 572. When a Decree May be Changed.—A decree is inchoate, and has no force whatever, until it has been entered on the minutes; and even after it has been entered on the minutes, and the minutes signed, it is completely within the power of the Chancellor until the end of the term, unless the term continues longer than thirty days after the entry of the decree, and then until the end of thirty days. During this period, the Chancellor may modify, amend, add to, subtract from, or make any other change in, the decree he may deem proper, and may even absolutely vacate it, and restore the cause to the docket; or he may vacate the decree and have one entered in favor of the other party. These changes, or reversals, of the decree may be on the Chancellor's own motion, or on reargument or reconsideration, or on a formal rehearing on a petition filed for that purpose.

ORDER VACATING A DECREES.

John Doe.

Richard Roe, et al.

Order vacating decree.

On motion of the defendants, supported by the affidavit of George Slow, their Solicitor, [or, for satisfactory reasons appearing to the Court, or, by consent of parties,] the decree pronounced in this cause on the......day of......, 19...... [giving the date,] in favor of the complainant [or the defendants,] is hereby recalled, vacated and annulled, and the cause is reinstated on the trial docket, to be further proceeded in as though said decree had never been made.

The most usual matters in which decrees are amended before adjournment, are the following: (1) where there are miscalculations of amounts, or of interest; (2) where the costs have not been adjudged, or have been misjudged; (3) where there are errors, or omissions, in reference to the Master's report; (4) where there are errors, or omissions, in the recitals of the decree; (5) where 49 The law does not recognize any order or decree made by the Chancellor, until it has been entered upon the minutes of the Court. The minutes are not invalidated by the failure of the Chancellor to sign them, because of death, sickness, or other reason. Moore v. State, 3 Heisk., 493; Jackson v. Jackson, 3 Shan. Cas., 18; Pickett v. State, MSS.; Knoxville, 1906.

48 The Chancellor may require the Solicitor objecting to the draft to make a draft of his own, or he may himself correct the decree, or call the decree de novo.

46 The rule does not recognize any order or decree made by the Chancellor, until it has been entered upon the minutes of the Court. The minutes are not invalidated by the failure of the Chancellor to sign them, because of death, sickness, or other reason. Moore v. State, 3 Heisk., 493; Jackson v. Jackson, 3 Shan. Cas., 18; Pickett v. State, MSS.; Knoxville, 1906.

47 Ch. Rule, III, § 1; post, § 1192. A sheet of legal cap contains four pages, and a half sheet contains two pages. Many careless or negligent Solicitors write decrees on a part of a half sheet. This should not be allowed; it results in interlining, in crowding the margins, and in much illegibility for want of due space. Decrees written with a lead pencil should be deemed nullities, and the Master should be directed to return them. A Solicitor who does not deem the decree worthy of his care should dismiss his bill.

50 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1018-1028. During the period stated in the text, the record of the Court, even though entered on the minutes, is said to be "in the breast of the Judge," and is absolutely under his control. State v. Disney, 5 Speed, 598; Hall v. Bewley, 11 Hum., 105; Davis v. Jones, 3 Head, 604; Timmons v. Garrison, 4 Hum., 148; Abbott v. Fage, 1 Heisk., 749; State v. Dalton, 1 Cates, 544.

51 It may be (1) that the decree was pronounced without argument; or (2) under a misapprehension, by the Chancellor, of some admission or statement by counsel; or (3) that some allegation, or pleading, or proof, was overlooked or misunderstood; or (4) that the Chancellor was, in some way, misled; or (5) that for any other reason, injustice has been inadvertently done. While Chancellors should be far removed from instability of judgment; nevertheless, no sentiment of pride should stay their action, when justice requires that a decree be changed, as there are errors, or omissions, in the metes and bounds of a tract of land mentioned in the decree; (6) where there are blanks in the decree, to be filled by dates, names, amounts, or otherwise; (7) where the prayer for an appeal was not entered, or was misentered; and (8) where the decree was ordered to be entered nunc pro tunc, and it does not contain the order.

But after the lapse of the thirty days after its entry, or after the close of the term, the Chancellor's power to make any revision of a decree settling rights is forever ended, except on a bill of review, or on a bill to impeach the decree for fraud, no matter how manifest and gross the error, nor how certain he may be of its existence. The decrees of Fate are not more beyond his power of change. His right thereafter to rectify a decree, as shown in the next section, is rather clerical in its nature than judicial, such rectification not requiring any exercise of discretion, and not embracing any redetermination of any matter.

An order or decree made by consent cannot be modified or varied, in an essential part, without the assent of all the consenting parties. The Court may, however, upon the application of either party, give such further directions as shall become necessary for the purpose of carrying such order or decree into effect, according to its spirit and intent.

An interlocutory order or decree that settles a principle, adjudges a right, or determines an issue, especially if made upon a hearing of the cause, is, after the lapse of thirty days, or after the adjournment of the term, as much beyond the power of the Court to change it as is a final decree; but an interlocutory order or decree settling no rights, but merely ordering an injunction, or making a reference to the Master, or appointing a receiver, or giving directions to a receiver, or to the Master, or ordering a sale of property, or providing for the safe-keeping or other disposition of property in the Court, or ruling on motions in reference to proof, or other matters preparatory to a trial, may be set aside, overruled, or disregarded, at a subsequent term, provided such action does not take any party by surprise, or deprive any party of a vested right.

§ 573. When and How Decrees May be Amended.—As already stated, decrees are entirely within the power of the Chancellor for thirty days, or during the term if it continue less than thirty days; and he may, during this period, make any changes in them he may deem necessary to the furtherance of justice.

After the expiration of said period, however, a decree cannot be in any way changed, except in the manner and to the extent provided by the statute. The Chancellor may, at any time within twelve months after final decree, and while the cause is still in his Court, amend any clerical error, mistake in the calculation of interest, or other mistake or omission in the decree, where there is sufficient matter apparent on the record, the papers in the cause, or entries by the presiding Chancellor, to amend by.59 Every mistake, apparent on the face of the record, may be corrected by the Court at any time after final judgment, at the discretion of the Court.60

The party seeking to have a decree amended, after the cause has been finally disposed of, must give the opposite party ten days’ notice of his intention to move the Court for a correction of the supposed mistake;61 and, on the day specified in such notice, the motion should be entered on the minutes of the Court. If, at the hearing of the motion, the mistake complained of is apparent on the face of the record, the correction will be made as a matter of course,612 if, however, the mistake is not apparent on the record, the party making the motion must be able to show the mistake by the papers in the cause, or by the entries of the Chancellor on his docket. The proof of the mistake must appear of record, or by some matter in the nature of a record, and parol evidence is absolutely inadmissible, no matter how strong, or how clear; and even when the evidence conforms to the requirements of the statute, it should be so conclusive as to leave no reasonable doubt.63 (1) that the mistake or omission alleged in the notice actually exists, and (2) as to what correction should in fact be made.

§ 574. The Revivor of Decrees.—A decree continues in full force from the day it is made, until it is satisfied, or is barred by the statute of limitations; or until it is modified, vacated, reversed, or annulled, on proper proceedings for that purpose; and an execution, or other proper process, may issue on it at any time, as long as it is in force.64 If the complainant die, it must be revived in the name of the person entitled to its benefits. If the defendant die, it must be revived against his successor in liability. If there are more defendants than one, and any of them die, leaving the co-defendant or co-defendants surviving, this will not debar the complainant from enforcing his decree by execution, or otherwise, against the survivor or survivors,65 to the extent of their liability; or, he may, in such case, revive by sicare facias, or by a bill of revivor, against those standing in the decedent’s shoes.66

Decrees are revived by and against the same parties by and against whom the suit would have been revived had the decedent died before the decree was pronounced; and what has elsewhere been said about the revival of suits in case of death, applies in all respects to the revival of decrees in case of death; the rules as to the proper parties to revive or revive against being the same in both cases.

On a proceeding to revive a decree, whether by a bill of revivor, or by a sicare facias, the defendant may plead and prove any fact that has transpired since the rendition of the decree that would bar the decree, or make it inequitable to revive it: he may plead the bar of the statute of limitations, a release, a paytment, or any other matter that is a discharge, or satisfaction, of the decree.67

59 Code, § 2877. What is here meant by the cause being still in Court, is that it has not been removed to the Supreme Court of the State by appeal, or writ of error, or to a U. S. Court in pursuance of some Federal statute. Dictating decrees to typewriters and stenographers causes many errors. See § 502.

62 Would seem that the proper way to make this amendment, or correction, would be: (1) to enter the proper order or decree on the minutes of the term at which the motion for the amendment or correction is made, and (2) to note on the margin of the decree amended or corrected, the fact and date of the amendment or correction, the Chancellor to declare amended [corrected, or rectified,] August 23, 1890. See Minute Book 0, page 246. A B. Chan-nothing but the clearest statutory proof should be allowed to prevail against it—proof cogent enough to remove all doubt of the truth of the amendment

§ 575. Interlocutory Decrees.
§ 576. Final Decrees.
§ 577. Consent Decrees.

§ 575. Interlocutory Decrees.—An interlocutory decree is one which expressly, or by necessary implication, reserves some particular matter or matters for further consideration, or reserves the further consideration of the cause generally until a future hearing. All decrees which precede the final decree are interlocutory; a final decree being one which terminates the litigation, and from which an appeal will lie as a matter of right. Any order or decree preparatory to a final decision of the cause is interlocutory.

All decrees overruling motions to dismiss the bill, and overruling demurrers and pleas; all decrees referring matters to the Master for his action and report; all decrees remanding causes to the rules for further proof; all decrees determining exceptions to depositions and to reports; all decrees determining applications to amend, or file additional pleadings; all decrees ordering sales of land, or other property; all decrees allowing or disallowing motions of all kinds whatsoever; all decrees on preliminary matters, or matters preparatory for a hearing on the main issues; and all other decrees that expressly reserve matters for future consideration, are interlocutory decrees.

§ 576. Final Decrees.—A final decree is one that (1) decides and disposes of the whole merits of the cause; and (2) reserves on its face no further questions, or directions, for the future judgment of the Court. A final decree, as the term necessarily implies, puts an end to the litigation, leaving none of the issues open for further consideration, or action; and this it may do, (1) by dismissing the bill, or (2) by granting the relief prayed, in whole or in part, and, (3) in either case, adjudging the costs, and awarding final process. A decree may be final without being complete. A complete final decree determines every question properly raised by the pleadings, and leaves no roots of the subject-matter of the litigation, out of which other controversies can arise: it finally and forever closes and bars the doors against any reopening of the matters in dispute, and concludes and ends the controversy. A decree which, though not complete, is final in its nature, reserves nothing for the further action of the Court, adjudges costs, and awards final process, is nevertheless a final decree. When only a part of the relief prayed is granted, or only a part of the issues are determined, and the decree, though final, is silent as to the residue, the effect is the same as though the bill had been expressly dismissed as to the residue of the relief sought, and as though the issues undecided had been expressly adjudged against the party maintaining the affirmative thereof. But a decree is not final which leaves matters undisposed of as to one or more of the defendants.
In our practice, a decree which determines the principles involved in the controversy, and (1) orders an account, or (2) a sale, or (3) a partition, is not a final decree; and cannot, therefore, be appealed from without leave of the Court; and cannot be reviewed at all on a writ of error.

A decree dismissing a bill upon its merits is final and conclusive until reversed, and may be pleaded in bar to a second bill for the same relief on the same subject-matter, between the same parties, unless the decree of dismissal shows on its face that the dismissal is without prejudice to complainant’s right to file another bill.

A decree may be final as to one party, and not final as to the other; thus, a decree determining the controversy as to one of the defendants, whose interests are not connected with the others, and adjudging the costs as to him, is a final decree; and from such a decree, the Chancellor may, in his discretion, allow an appeal.

A final decree may, however, be changed, or overruled and vacated, by the Chancellor, even after it has been entered and the minutes of the day signed, provided such change, or vacation, is made within thirty days from the decree, if the term holds so long, otherwise, before the adjournment of the term. After the lapse of said period of thirty days, or after the adjournment of the term, the decree becomes strictly final, and passes beyond the control of the Court, and can only be changed, or overruled, (1) by the Chancellor, upon a bill of review, or a bill to impeach the decree for fraud, or (2) by the Supreme Court, on appeal or writ of error. Decrees in our Chancery Courts are not enrolled in the English sense, but with us a decree is deemed to be enrolled as soon as the Chancellor’s right to change it has terminated.

§ 577. Consent Decrees.—A decree is frequently made by consent of parties. In such a case, the Court does not inquire into the merits or equities of the decree, nor whether it is sustained by the pleadings. The only questions for the Court to determine are: (1) Are the parties capable of binding themselves by consent; and (2) whether they have consented, or do now consent, to the proposed decree. These two facts appearing, the Court orders the decree to be entered, provided that it shows upon its face that it is a consent decree. If it does not so show upon its face, it is not a consent decree, even though in fact it was consented to; but it is a decree of the Court in invitum, and subject to all the remedies for its correction allowable in case of contested decrees.

A decree by consent is in the nature of a solemn contract; and is, in effect, an admission by the parties that the decree is a just determination of their rights upon the real facts of the case, had such been proved. As a result, such a decree is so binding as to be absolutely conclusive upon the consenting parties, and it can neither be amended, or in any way varied, without a like consent, nor can it be reheard, appealed from, or reviewed upon a writ of error. The one only way in which it can be attacked, or impeached, is by an original bill alleging fraud in securing the consent.

Where, however, a decree is based upon a writing authorizing a particular decree to be made, or otherwise adjusting the controversy, if the decree is not justified by such writing, to that extent it is erroneous, and may, therefore, be reheard, appealed from, or otherwise reviewed, as in case of a contested decree; or the Court may, on motion, amend or rectify the decree.

The statute provides for an appeal only when a party is "dissatisfied with a decree; and a party cannot be dissatisfied with a decree that he consents to, if not illegal. Code
The Court will not, ordinarily, make a decree by consent where infants are concerned, without referring it to the Master to inquire whether it be for their benefit; yet, if such a decree is made, the infants will be bound by it. The consent of counsel to a decree is to be given upon their own conception of their authority; and if their client is injured by such consent, his remedy is against his counsel, unless his counsel’s consent was procured by fraud.

A decree for an absolute or limited divorce cannot be entered by consent; but a decree for alimony may be.

A mere pro forma decree should not be allowed to be entered, and if entered will be dismissed in the Supreme Court, regardless of its merits.

§ 578. Nunc Pro Tunc Decrees.—Ordinarily, there is nothing to be gained by having a decree dated on the very day the cause was heard, or the Chancellor’s opinion delivered; and for this reason, decrees usually bear even date with the minutes of the Court in which they are entered. But parties have the right to have the decree entered as of the date of the hearing, and when the delay of the Chancellor in deciding the cause after the hearing, or the delay of counsel, or the Clerk, in drawing or entering the decree after the decision, works an injury to any party, and especially to the winning party, the Court will, on application by the party interested, order the decree to bear even date with the hearing, or with the decision, as the party in interest may elect. Such a decree is said to be entered nunc pro tunc.

Decrees nunc pro tunc are often entered in the following cases: 1, Where either party died after the hearing, and before the decree is entered; 2, Where, after decision made, and before decree entered, the defendant made a conveyance of his realty; 3, Where a report, or a sale, has been made by a Master or a Special Commissioner, or a partition has been made by Commissioners, and the decree ordering the same has not been entered: in such a case, an entry nunc pro tunc will relate back to the time the decree was made, and will make valid the intermediate proceedings authorized by the decree; and 4, Where, in any case, the act of the Chancellor after the hearing, or the conduct of opposite counsel, or the neglect of the Clerk, has resulted in delaying the entry of a decree, and the delay may injuriously affect any of the parties, it is the duty of the Court, on application of such party, to have such decree entered as of its proper date; and it is no ground for refusing such application, that the rights of third parties will be injuriously affected thereby.

The usual formula in case of nunc pro tunc decrees is: "This decree was made on the (naming the day the cause was heard), and is entered now for then, by order of the Court."

A nunc pro tunc order or decree ought not to be entered except upon the clearest evidence, such as (1) the distinct recollection of the presiding Chancellor; or, (2) some memorandum by him, or by the Clerk and Master; or, (3) the agreement of counsel. To justify a nunc pro tunc order or entry, at a subsequent term, there must be some matter in the nature of a record to base it upon, such as (1) a decree actually drawn at the time, but, by mistake, not entered; or, (2) an entry on the Chancellor’s docket; or (3) a memorandum, or opinion in writing, by the Chancellor.

Courts can make their records speak the truth as to things done; and should do so by entries nunc pro tunc, even after an appeal has been prayed and granted. But after the jurisdiction of the Court over the cause is lost, no

§ 579. Supplemental Decrees.—It frequently happens that, after all the issues raised by the pleadings have been determined, or after a final decree on the merits of the controversy, either dismissing the bill or granting relief, some further order or decree is necessary in order to completely adjust all the matters incidental to the litigation. Thus, 1, The defendant may be entitled to a reference and decree on the question of damages, when an attachment or injunction bill is dismissed; or 2, It may be necessary to take judgment on purchase-money notes, executed to the Master or Special Commissioner, or to re-sell the land in enforcement of the lien for purchase-money; or 3, It may be necessary to make orders and decrees relative to settlements with receivers, and to take judgment on their bonds; or 4, It may be necessary to make orders in reference to calling in loaned money, or in reference to loans out money; or 5, Questions may arise as to the proper distribution of funds in the hands of the Master; or 6, An order of sale may be necessary in consequence of a levy on land too late to make a sale; or 7, It may be necessary to revive a decree; or 8, To set aside the satisfaction of a decree; or 9, To substitute a surety, or a purchaser, to the rights of a complainant under a decree; or 10, It may be necessary to attach a party for violation of a perpetual injunction; or 11, To make some other order in enforcement or execution of a final decree, or in adjustment of the consequential rights or duties of parties, or officers of the Court, thereunder. Inasmuch as the foregoing orders and decrees are supplemental in their nature and office, they are denominated supplemental orders and decrees. 32

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS AS TO DECRESSES.

§ 580. Suggestions as to the Substance of Decrees.

§ 581. Suggestions as to the Writing and Entry of Decrees.

§ 580. Suggestions as to the Substance of Decrees.—In the first place, be sure that your decree is supported by the pleadings, and that it is both a logical and a legal deduction from the pleadings. In drawing your decree, keep in mind the following particulars:

1. If there are defendants under disability of infancy or mental unsoundness, recite in your decree the fact that the cause was heard on the pleadings, including their answers by regular guardian, or guardian ad litem.

2. If any defendant has been pro confessoed at rules, recite that fact in the decree.

3. If any oral agreements were made at the hearing, incorporate them in the decree; otherwise, you will lose their benefit if the case should go to the Supreme Court.

4. If you excepted to any evidence at the hearing, show those exceptions in the decree, or in writing, authenticated by the Chancellor, or in a bill of exceptions, or you will lose the benefit of them in the Supreme Court. 1

2 Rush v. Rush, 13 Pick., 279. In this case a nunc pro tunc divorce decree was entered at a subsequent term on petition of a stranger injured by the non-entry of the decree, the party divorced having died. The Supreme Court, in its opinion, quoted these words: 27 Pond v. Trigg, 5 Heisk., 532. 28 Code, § 2990, amended by the Acts of 1875, ch. 33. 29 Code, §§ 2994-2996. 30 See, ante, § 556, note 31, on “leave to apply.” 31 See, ante, § 538.
§ 581. Suggestions as to Decrees.

5. If you excepted to any ruling, or order, of the Court made at the hearing, incorporate that fact in the decree, and file a bill of exceptions, if necessary, to show all the facts.

6. If your client has obtained a money recovery, state the amount thereof in words; and do not, in your haste, express the amount in figures only. Figures are too easily changed, and too liable to be misunderstood. You may use both words and figures.

7. If the decree directs a sale of land, or removes a cloud, or transfers the possession or title of land, or adjudicates the title, describe the land by metes and bounds in the decree. This will then be a permanent record of title, whereas the file may get lost.

8. If the decree affects the title to land, or affects other important matters, give the names of all the defendants in the body of the decree. The pleadings may get lost.

9. Always see that proper final process is awarded. If your client is adjudged the possession of any property, do not fail to have a writ of possession awarded. If you are entitled to a perpetual injunction, have it so decreed. See that your decree awards an execution for the costs.

10. If the decree is not satisfactory, pray an appeal, even in cases where an appeal will not lie as a matter of right. Such a prayer, when disallowed, may improve your standing when the case finally gets into the Supreme Court: it will be evidence that you did not willingly submit to the decree.

11. If you are allowed an appeal, and are unable to get your bill of exceptions, if any, made out, signed and filed, be sure to get an extension of time, and then be sure to file it within such extension.

12. Do not fail to dispose of any fund in Court, or in the hands of a Receiver; or to make an injunction, if any, perpetual, in a proper case; or to order attached property to be sold as such, if any.

13. If the decree be final and in your favor have the costs adjudged, final process awarded, and a lien declared in your favor on the recovery.

§ 581. Suggestions as to the Writing and Entry of Decrees.—In drawing decrees, the following matters are worthy of consideration:

1. Write your decrees in ink, on legal cap paper, never using less than half a sheet (two full pages) of paper.

2. Divide your decree into paragraphs, as elsewhere shown, and number your paragraphs. If the decree directs a reference to the Master, paragraph and number the matters referred.

3. Take pains and due deliberation in drawing your decree; avoid interlineations, erasures and other alterations. Consult and follow the forms given in the books; and do not rely on your own skill until you have become an expert draftsman.

4. Present your decrees in open Court, in due season, first showing them to adverse counsel, if practicable.

5. Never allow the minutes of a term to be closed without being sure that your orders and decrees have all been duly entered.
CHAPTER XXIX.
DECREES AS TO COSTS.

ARTICLE I. Costs Generally Considered.

ARTICLE II. The Adjudication of Costs.

ARTICLE I.

COSTS GENERALLY CONSIDERED.

§ 582. What are Costs.
§ 583. General Rules as to the Taxation of Costs.

§ 582. What are Costs.—Costs are the expenses incident to a suit; and consist (1) of the fees and postage1 allowed by the statute to the officers of the Court for various specified acts and services connected with a procedure in Court; (2) of the fees, mileage and ferriage allowed witnesses in the cause; (3) of necessary fees paid by the successful party for copies of deeds, bonds, wills, or other records, filed as part of the testimony;2 (4) of the expenses necessarily incurred, and allowed by the Court, in the progress of a cause, such as expenses for protecting or preserving property, for making surveys and plats, and for advertising property; (5) of the expenses incident to a receivership, or to a sequestration; and (6) of counsel and guardian ad litem fees.

§ 583. General Rules as to Taxation of Costs.—Costs in Chancery, except as hereinafter shown, are taxed against such party, or parties, as the Court, in its discretion, may deem equitably liable therefor, in view of all the circumstances of the suit.3 The discretion exercised by the Court in adjudging costs is not an arbitrary, capricious, blind discretion, but an equitable discretion, resulting from a consideration of the entire case, and all its circumstances, and the situation and conduct of the parties, in connection with the principles and practice in reference to the taxation of costs that have been acted on in analogous cases.4 The discretion of the Court in adjudging costs is subject to review in the Supreme Court;5 but will not be reversed except in case of clear abuse.6

As a rule, costs follow the result of the suit;7 but this is because, as a rule, it is equitable that they should. This rule is seldom departed from, except when it would be inequitable to follow it. Parties, though unsuccessful, are sometimes exonerated from costs, because of their good conduct, or some Equity; and on the other hand, successful parties are sometimes taxed with costs, because of their bad conduct.8 A complainant may be entitled to the relief he prays, and yet be guilty of some conduct connected with the suit, or the subject-matter, that offends the conscience of the Court; and so, a defendant may lose a suit, and yet commend himself to the favor of a conscientious Chancellor; in such cases, the Court will adjudge the costs so as to meet the requirements of Equity, and conform to the practice of the Court in such matters.9

§ 584. Statutory Requirements as to Costs.—The following are statutory exceptions to the rule that the taxation of costs is discretionary with the Court: 1. When a complainant amends his bill after copy issued, he must pay all the costs occasioned thereby.
2. When a defendant’s answer is excepted to for insufficiency, and he files a sufficient answer within a month on a rule so requiring, he will not be liable to costs; but if he fail so to do, no further answer shall be received except upon costs.
3. The unsuccessful party must pay the other three dollars when a plea, or demurrer, or an exception to an answer, is overruled or allowed.10
4. The complainant must pay the costs when his bill is dismissed for want of prosecution.11
5. The applicant in a suit to have dower assigned must pay the costs.12
6. The complainant, who fails to set aside a conveyance alleged to be fraudulent, must pay all the costs except those incident to the taking of judgment on his claim, if he obtain such judgment.13
7. A female in whose favor a divorce decree is made cannot be taxed with the costs.14
8. The Chancery Courts will follow the law of the Circuit Courts in the taxation of costs in analogous cases. Thus, (1) in case of the abatement of a suit by the death of the complainant, the defendant will be considered the successful party;15 and (2) when a defendant fails on a pleading to the merits previously filed, but succeeds on a pleading in the nature of a plea since the last continuance, he will, ordinarily, be taxed with the costs which accrued previous to the filing of his last pleading, whether such pleading be a supplemental answer, or a cross bill.16

§ 585. Taxation, and Retaxation, of Costs.—The Clerk and Master makes out the bill of costs, after they have been adjudged by the Court. The defendants against whom judgment has been recovered, are entitled, as between themselves, to a taxation of the costs of witnesses whose testimony was obtained at the instance of one of the defendants, and incurred exclusively to his benefit.17

Costs omitted in taxing the bill of costs may be retaxed, at any time, upon application to the Court; but if the judgment for costs has been paid, the party against whom the retaxation is asked, shall have five days’ notice of the application. If the taxation of costs be excessive, by charging the costs of witnesses who were not examined, or by charging costs to an improper party, or taxing costs contrary to law, or the taxation is otherwise erroneous, the party aggrieved may move the Court for a retaxation, setting forth the particulars in which the Clerk has erred.18

Not more than two witnesses called to prove the same fact shall be taxed in any bill of costs against the losing party, except in case of witnesses called to attack or sustain the character of a witness or party. If more than the number of witnesses allowed are examined in proof of any particular fact, a motion

If the fact that costs have been mistaxed against a party comes to his knowledge after the Court has adjourned he may have the execution stayed as to the errors complained of, on presenting a petition to the Chancellor at Chambers, and have an adjudication thereon at the next term.
should be made at the term at which the cause is tried, and the Court will instruct the Clerk as to the taxation of costs: such motion can not be made afterwards, without good cause shown.\textsuperscript{10}

The losing party may move the Court at the trial term, to direct the Clerk as to how disputed costs should be taxed; or how costs should be taxed as between parties, when several of them are made variously liable for the costs.

\textsection{§ 588. When a Successful Defendant Will be Taxed With Costs.}

\textsection{§ 589. When Each Party Must Pay His Own Costs.}

\textsection{§ 586. The Adjudication of Costs Generally Considered.—By both the civil and the common law the unsuccessful party was taxed with the costs of the litigation;\textsuperscript{1} and by our Code, the successful party in a civil suit at law is entitled to full costs unless otherwise directed by law;\textsuperscript{2} but in the Chancery Court, both by usage\textsuperscript{3} and by statute,\textsuperscript{4} costs are adjudged according to the discretion of the Court, as hereinafter shown. Nevertheless, even in Chancery, as a rule the unsuccessful party pays the costs;\textsuperscript{5} and, if a decree otherwise final fails to adjudge the costs, the law adjudges them against the losing party,\textsuperscript{6} and awards an execution therefor if there be a money recovery.\textsuperscript{7} \textsection{§ 587. When a Successful Complainant May be Taxed With Costs.—It is not enough that a complainant obtains a decree: he must, also, be without fault, if he would escape costs. And so a complainant may be successful and without fault, and yet the defendant may, also, be wholly without fault, in which case it would be manifestly inequitable to burden the latter with all the costs of a suit instituted for the complainant’s benefit.

The following are cases where the complainant, though successful, may be charged with the costs, if the defendant be free from wrong: 1, In a suit by complainant to quiet his title, defendants claiming nothing;\textsuperscript{8} 2, Where the de-defendant is a mere stake-holder; 3, Where the complainant seeks to redeem after mortgage forfeited; 4, Where a full tender was made before suit; 5, Where the defendant is administrator or executor without assets, and the complainant knew that fact;\textsuperscript{9} 6, Where the defendants are heirs, claiming nothing, and especially if they are minors;\textsuperscript{8} 7, Where an infant on attaining majority sues to have his deed set aside, the defendant being guilty of no fraud;\textsuperscript{10} 8, Where a married woman takes advantage of her coverture and recovers, the defendant having done nothing inequitable;\textsuperscript{11} 9, Where a vendor compels a specific performance, but had not shown a good title before suit;\textsuperscript{12} 10, Where a widow seeks an assignment of dower;\textsuperscript{13} 11, Where complainant was greatly in fault, but the strict law was in his favor; 12, Where complainant has obtained a bargain oppressive to the defendant; 13, Where the complainant recovers, but claimed greatly too much; 14, Where the defendant offered a reasonable settlement before suit; 15 and 16, Where a complainant has been guilty of laches, or his mistake caused the suit; 17, Where he filed an original bill when he could have obtained the same relief by cross bill in a pending suit; 18, Where he brought an unnecessary foreclosure suit; 19, Where his own misconduct necessitated the suit; 20 and 19, Where his recovery is less than fifty dollars.

In almost all cases where the complainant obtains relief and the defendant is insolvent, the Court will require the complainant to pay the costs due the officers of the Court, and his own witnesses, in the first instance; and give him a judgment over against the defendant for such costs.

§ 588. When a Successful Defendant Will be Taxed With Costs.—A defendant not unfrequently is guilty of such unconscientious conduct in connection with the litigation, that, though successful, it would be inequitable to burden the complainant with the costs.

The following are cases where the defendant, though successful, should be charged with the costs: 1, Where as administrator, executor, guardian, or trustee, he failed to file proper inventories, or make the settlements required by law, in consequence whereof suit was brought for an account; 2, Where the suit was caused by the defendant falsely claiming to be heir, executor, partner, or the like, 3, Where, in a divorce case, his conduct was very improper; 4, Where a suit for specific performance was dismissed, because the defendant had no title; 5, Where his vacillating conduct caused, or prolonged, the litigation, he obtaining benefits once informally renounced; 6, Where his negligence, or mistake of law, caused the litigation; 7, Where he succeeds on the plea of bankruptcy; 8, on the defence of former adjudication set up in his answer, but without merits; or 9. Where his defence was technical, and without merits; 10, Where he introduced an unnecessary amount of testimony; 11, Where he succeeded on a cross bill, but his negligence caused the litigation; or 12, Where, as agent, his misconduct caused the suit.

§ 589. When Each Party Must Pay His Own Costs.—There are cases where the Court will make each party pay his own costs, most of them being cases where both parties are equally at fault, or equally without fault, or where the defendant succeeds, but without merits. In the following cases each party should pay his own costs: 1, Where the suit is adjusted out of Court, the defendant obtaining set-offs or reductions, and the costs not being disposed of; 2, Where complainant failed because of his misunderstanding of the contract, but without fault on his part; 3, Where, in a doubtful case, the complainant, though successful, refused a fair offer of adjustment; 4, Where both parties are at fault; or 5, are equally innocent; 6, Where the suit is caused by the misconduct of a third person, both parties being without fault; 7, Where the defendant succeeds, but without merits of his own; 8, Where, in consequence of the peculiar hardship of the case, the unsuccessful party should be relieved from part of the costs;\textsuperscript{40} 9, Where the defendant succeeds on the ground that the complainant participated in the inequitable conduct he claims of;\textsuperscript{41} 10, Where proof is very conflicting, but no satisfactory preponderance in favor of the complainant;\textsuperscript{42} and 11, Where a cause is remanded by the Supreme Court for proof of complainant’s corporate character.\textsuperscript{43}

\textbf{§ 590. When the Costs Will be Apportioned.}—There are cases where it would be hardly equitable to operate either party with all the costs, and yet where it would not be equitable to operate one of the parties with all of his own costs. In such cases the Court apportions the costs. The following are cases where costs are ordinarily apportioned: 1, Where there are several issues, or claims, and the complainant fails on some, and succeeds on others;\textsuperscript{44} 2, Where the complainant fails to maintain some alleged equities; 3, Where the suit was brought for an account and sustained;\textsuperscript{45} 4, Where the complainant fails to prove an alleged fraudulent conveyance, but establishes his debt;\textsuperscript{46} 5, Where the defendant answered when he might have ended the suit by demurrer, or plea, and thereby saved costs and delay;\textsuperscript{47} 6, Where the complainant fails, but was deceived by the defendant’s conduct;\textsuperscript{48} 7, Where the complainant obtains a decree, but made unfounded charges of fraud;\textsuperscript{49} 8, Where the bill is dismissed because both parties are guilty of iniquity;\textsuperscript{50} 9, Where the complainant succeeds, but was negligent of matters affecting the interests of the defendant, who was an innocent sufferer in the transaction;\textsuperscript{51} 10, Where a complainant succeeds but could have obtained the same relief by cross bill in another cause;\textsuperscript{52} 11, Where none of the parties have merits;\textsuperscript{53} and 12, Where they are apportioned among the parties in proportion to their respective interests.\textsuperscript{54}

\textbf{§ 591. When Administrators, Executors, Guardians and Other Trustees, and Officers, Will be Taxed With Costs.}—It is manifestly inequitable that an innocent person should suffer because of the negligence, fraud or other misconduct of another, especially if the latter is charged with the duty of caring for the interests of the former. For this reason, Courts charge executors, administrators, guardians and other trustees, personally with the costs of improper proceedings instituted by them, and of proper proceedings instituted against them.\textsuperscript{55} The following will serve as illustrations of this general rule; 1, Where an administrator’s bill to sell land to pay debts is dismissed, because not sustained by proper proofs;\textsuperscript{56} 2, Where an administrator failed to plead the statute of limitations, although on the hearing no assets were found in his hands;\textsuperscript{57} 3, Where a trustee is seeking to enforce an improper compromise;\textsuperscript{58} 4, Where administrators, executors, guardians or trustees are held personally liable for failing to discharge a duty; 5, Where an administrator sued to recover land, the title to which was in his intestate’s heirs;\textsuperscript{59} and 6, A Judge acting \textit{coram non judice} may be taxed with the costs of a successful mandamus suit against him.\textsuperscript{60}

\textbf{§ 592. Costs on Interlocutory Proceedings.}—The Chancellor frequently adjudges costs in an interlocutory order granting leave to amend pleadings, or setting aside a \textit{pro confesso}, or extending the time for taking proof, or overruling a plea or demurrer, or granting a continuance, or allowing the rehearing of a cause, or granting a new trial by jury. In all such cases, the controlling considerations should be: 1, Has the applicant manifested good faith and due diligence? and 2, Will the allowance of the application result in an increase of the costs, or in any way operate to the disadvantage of the opposite party? 60

The following general rules will serve as a guide in taxing costs on interlocutory proceedings:

1. A Pro Confesso should be Set Aside only upon the payment of the costs of the cause, except in cases heretofore specified. 60a

2. An Amendment to a Pleading that causes a continuance should not be allowed, except upon the payment of the same costs as would be imposed on a continuance.

3. An Extension of the Time for Taking Proof should not be allowed, except upon payment of all the adjudged costs of the cause.

4. A Continuance should not be granted, after the expiration of the statutory time for taking proof, except on payment of all the unadjudged costs of the cause.

5. A Rehearing, or a New Trial should not be granted in order to let in new evidence, except on payment of all the costs of the cause.

6. Affidavits Showing Good Cause 60b for granting the application should be imperatively required in each of the foregoing cases, and oral statements, as on affidavit, should not be heard, even by consent.

7. No Costs should be Taxed in any of the foregoing cases when the application is the result of the act of an officer of the Court, or of the fraud of the opposite side, or of accident or mistake, unmixed with negligence on the part of the applicant, his Solicitor or agent.

8. On Overruling a Demurrer, or Plea, deemed frivolous, the defendant should be taxed with all the costs of the cause, if such demurrer or plea was filed more than two months before the first day of the term. 61

§ 593. When Costs will be Paid Out of the Fund.—The Chancery Court is frequently called on to administer a fund, or an estate; or to aid executors, administrators, guardians, or other trustees, in the administration of their trusts; or to wind up estates, corporations and partnerships that are insolvent. In such cases, where no party has been guilty of inequitable conduct, or has caused unnecessary costs, the Court ordinarily orders the costs-to-be paid out of the fund being administered. The following are cases of this character: 1, Where an estate, or fund, is being administered by the Court: but the costs of unnecessary proceedings will be paid by the party causing them. 62 2, Where executors, administrators, guardians, receivers, trustees, and agents, fairly account and pay over, and act in good faith, and the suit is not caused by their misconduct. 63 3, Where an executor properly seeks the aid of the Court, in construing, executing or sustaining a will: 64 4, Where the suit is necessary to the execution of a trust: 65 5, Where the suit is brought by one or more creditors for the benefit of all: 66 Where the suit is to administer a charity, if the parties

60 The rules that impose interlocutory costs are generally based on the principle of compensation. The law has no favorites as between equals, except in so far as it favors those who are diligent; and a Court has no right to grant a favor to one party at the expense of another party. Favors should be paid for in costs; otherwise the party in default is rewarded, and the party who has done his duty is punished. As he who seeks Equity must do Equity, so he who seeks a favor of the Court should accompany his application with an offer to pay such costs as the Court may impose. No rule so greatly encourages diligence and prevents negligence, as the uniform taxation of costs against parties seeking favors.

The subject of the taxation of costs in cases of amendments and continuances has been already fully considered. ante, §§ 429; 526-529.

61 Code, §§ 2938; 3203. Code, § 2934, is construed as applicable to the Chancery Courts; Kirkman v. Snodgrass, 3 Head, 370; then why not § 2938, in the same Article? The three dollars adjudged against the unsuccessful party on the argument of demurrers and pleas, Code, §§ 4397; 4465; 4492, are in the nature of a forfeit, or penalty, and are not costs in the ordinary sense. There is no necessary conflict between the various sections of the Code on this subject; and Equity should follow the law in uprooting frivolous pleadings filed for mere delay.

CHAPTER XXX.

REFERENCES TO THE MASTER, AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON.

ARTICLE I. When References are Necessary, or Proper.

ARTICLE II. Proceedings upon a Reference.

ARTICLE III. The Master's Report.

ARTICLE IV. Proceedings upon a Master's Report.

§ 594. Object of a Reference to the Master — There are often (1) inquiries to be made during the pendency of a suit, or (2) accounts to be taken, or (3) calculations to be made, or (4) settlements to be investigated, or (5) particulars to be ascertained, or (6) special ministerial acts to be performed, or (7) other matters to be attended to, which require the skill of a bookkeeper, accountant, or a man of business, rather than the judgment of a Chancellor; and if the Chancellor was obliged to attend to all of these matters of inquiry and detail, the sessions of the Court would be greatly prolonged, and the number of Chancellors would have to be greatly increased. To remedy this difficulty, and enable the Chancellor to devote his time to the finding and adjudication of the more important matters in litigation, and to the determination of the principles governing the controversy, Equity Courts have an officer, called a Master in Chancery, specially fitted to aid the Chancellor, by taking off his shoulders the burden of many details, the making of many inquiries, and the ascertainment of many facts. The character, powers, and duties of this officer are shown elsewhere.\(^1\)

The findings of the Master are analogous to a special verdict in a Court of law, and it may be stated generally, that what a jury is to the Circuit Court, the Master is to the Chancery Court, with these advantages in favor of the Chancery practice: (1) the Master's reports are far more definite, precise, and thorough than the verdicts of a jury; (2) the Master's reports, as a rule, are more correct and otherwise more satisfactory than verdicts; (3) the Master's errors are more manifest, and more easily corrected than the errors of a jury;\(^2\) and (4) there are matters of account, of details of calculation, of tabulation, and of classification, with which juries are wholly unfitted to deal.\(^3\)

Hence, it may be stated that the objects of a reference to the Master are: 1. To relieve the Chancellor of the details and minor matters involved in a litiga-

1 See Chapter on the Clerk and Master, post, §§ 1154-1172.

2 The Master's report gives items and details specifically, whereas the verdict of a jury is in gross, and it cannot often be known whether any particular item was allowed or not.

3 How could a jury by means of oral explanations pass on the many items of cross accounts contained in various books or memoranda, and running through many years?
tion, to the end that the Chancellor may have more time to devote to the con-consideration of the larger matters; 4 and 2, To present the details, or minor matters in such a form as to enable the parties to scrutinize them, and point out all supposed errors.

§ 595. What Matters may be Referred to the Master.—The matters referred to the Master are almost as numerous as the matters subject to the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court; and include the following: 1, Whether it is to the interest of the owners to sell a tract of land for partition; 2, Whether it is to the manifest interest of minors, or married women, to sell their property; 3, Whether it is necessary to sell a decedent’s lands to pay his debts; 4, Whether the title to land sold, or about to be sold, or purchased, is good; 5, Whether there are any tax liens, mortgages, trust deeds, life estates, or other liens on land sold, or about to be purchased, by order of the Court; 6, What are the assets and liabilities of a decedent, a partnership, corporation, or other person, whose assets are in the custody of the Court; 7, What are the relative rights and priorities of various creditors, or claimants, of the same fund; 8, What is the state of the account between a guardian, personal representative, receiver or other trustee, and the beneficiaries; or between persons having mutual dealings; 9, The validity and amount of any particular liability; 10, The compensation of guardians, personal representatives, receivers, trustees, guardians ad item, Solicitors, and others; 11, The proper allowance for the maintenance of a married woman, infant or person of unsound mind, or for the education of an infant; 12, The investment of money belonging to persons under disability, or belonging to persons who fail to draw the same out of Court; 13, The ascentainment of heirs, or legatees, or distributees, whose estates are in Court; and their residences, when their names and abodes are unknown; 14, The assessment of damages in any case where properly allowable; 15, The ascertainment of the value of any property, real or personal, or of any betterment or permanent improvement; and 16, whether in any pleading, petition or deposition, there is any, and what, scandalous, impertinent or unnecessary matter. Indeed, it may be stated that, in general, there is no question of unknown or disputed fact which may not be referred to the Master, to the end that the Chancellor and the parties may have the benefit of his investigations and findings. 5

Where a question arises incidentally (1) as to the title to property about to be purchased, or sold, under the orders of the Court, or (2) as to who owns certain property involved in the litigation, or (3) as to what interests the parties, or others not parties, have in such property, or (4) as to what encum-brances rest upon property about to be purchased or sold under the orders of the Court, in any and all such cases it is proper to refer such matters to the Master; 6 but where the suit is brought expressly to recover property on the strength of complainant’s title, the Court must then determine the title; and the truth of complainant’s allegations of ownership in such a case is not a proper matter to be referred to the Master. 7

§ 596. Matters not Proper to be Referred to the Master.—The line of division, between matters proper to be referred to the Master, and matters not proper to be referred, is not well defined; but it may be stated, generally, that the main issues of the controversy, 8 and the principles on which these issues are to be adjudicated, must be determined by the Chancellor, 9 while collateral, subordinate, and incidental issues, and the ascertainment of facts ancillary to the determination of the main issues, or to the execution of the decree, may be referred to the Master. It is not proper to refer a question of law, or the determination of a question of law, to the Master, but a mixed question of law and fact may be referred. References in old cases as to old matters, and as to what has been done in the case, or what its present condition is, ought not to be granted: this is the work of counsel.

§ 597. When References to the Master are Necessary.—References to the Master are necessary in the following cases: 1, When in any case it is necessary to take and state an account between the parties, covering numerous items; 2, When the assets of a decedent, a partnership, a corporation, or other person, are being administered in Court, and it becomes necessary to ascertain the kind, items and amount of such assets, and the names, priorities and equities, of the creditors, and the amount due each; 3, When it becomes necessary to show a deficiency of personal assets, in order to justify the sale of a decedent's lands to pay his debts; 4, When an insolvent estate is being wound up in Chancery, and it becomes necessary to ascertain the character and amount of the assets, and the names, priorities and equities, of the various creditors and claimants, and the amounts due each; 5, When it becomes necessary to ascertain whether any, and what, tax liens, mortgages, trust deeds, life estates, and other encumbrances, exist on land sold, about to be sold, or about to be purchased by the Court; 6, When the duty devolves on the Court of investing money belonging to persons under disability, and it becomes necessary to find a bargain, or a borrower; 7, When it becomes necessary to make inquiry for heirs, distributees, legatees, or persons entitled to a fund in Court.

References are necessary in the 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th of the foregoing cases: 1, Because they necessitate long, minute and tedious arithmetical calculations; 2, Because the duties connected with them are clerical rather than judicial; 3, Because the accounts are often so long and so complicated that errors and omissions are almost unavoidable; 4, Because all parties in interest should have an opportunity to scan the account when taken, to the end that they may point out any and all errors, or omissions, therein; and 5, Because by bringing the case on for hearing on the Master's report, and the exceptions thereto, all clerical matters are eliminated, or greatly reduced, and the controversy is narrowed down to the real points in issue, and those matters only in the case that require judicial determination.

References are necessary in the 5th, 6th, and 7th of the foregoing cases: 1, Because the duties imposed in such cases on the Master are incompatible with the office of Judge; 2, Because the duty of a Chancellor is not to hunt for facts outside of the record, but to declare the rights of the parties on the record as presented by them; and 3, Because the duties imposed by the reference require so much time that they could not well be attended to while Court is in session.

§ 588. When References to the Master are Proper.—There are matters as to which references to the Master are proper to be made, but are not imperative; matters which the Chancellor may refer to the Master for a report, or which he may determine without a reference. In these cases, the Chancellor exercises his discretion, and directs a reference, or adjudicates without a reference, as the exigency may require. In exercising his discretion in such matters, the Chancellor will consider: 1, Whether the Master's duties on a reference will be appropriate to his office; 2, Whether more proof will be required, or is desired; 3, Whether a report by the Master will narrow, simplify, or more clearly define, that the argument of counsel would only 'darken by its elucidations, and puzzle by its explanations;' his decree, when rendered, would be but little, if any, better than a Master's report; and, on appeal to the Supreme Court, the assignment of errors would be merely exceptions to the Chancellor's report. The Supreme Court should not tolerate such a practice. But in Gray v. State it was held that the trial Judge in the Circuit Court might state an account without referring it to the Clerk. 11 Pick., 317.

10 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1203; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 516.
11 Elbank v. Wright, 2 Tenn. Ch., 538.
12 White v. Cox, 4 Hay., 214. Besides, while a Chancellor might be willing himself to perform the drudgery of taking and stating an account after a hearing, he has no right to operate the Judges of the Supreme Court with such drudgery as would necessarily result from the practice of deciding such suits without a reference and a report. A Chancellor who would undertake to decide a complicated account, without a reference and a report, would find himself overwhelmed by such a confusion of details.
the matters in controversy; and 4, Whether a report will enable either or both parties to present their cases more satisfactorily to the Court. If these questions are answered in the affirmative, the Chancellor will generally order a reference; if, however, the probabilities are that the Master's report will settle nothing, but that on exceptions thereto the whole controversy will come on for redetermination before the Court, in such a case a reference will not be made. The inclination of the Chancellor is to order a reference when either party desires it, unless the desire is based on a disposition to delay the final determination of the suit.13

Subject to these general rules, references are proper when the question is: 1, whether a tract of land should be sold for partition; or, 2, whether it is manifestly to the interest of minors, or married women, to sell their property for reinvestment, or for their maintenance or education; or, 3, whether a particular claim is valid, and its amount; or, 4, what is a reasonable compensation for a guardian, personal representative, receiver, trustee, guardian ad litem, Solicitor,14 or any other person entitled to compensation; or, 5, what is a proper allowance for the maintenance of a married woman, infant, or person of unsound mind, or for the education of an infant; or, 6, what amount of damages is properly allowable in a given case; or, 7, what is the reasonable value of any property, real or personal, or of any betterments or permanent improvements; or, 8, what is the present cash value of a homestead, dower, or other life estate; or, 9, whether a party has a title to property in controversy;15 or, 10, whether any pleading, petition, or deposition contains any, and what, scandalous, impertinent, or unnecessary matter.

§ 599. How and When References are Made.—As a reference is a step in the progress of a suit, it is generally made on motion of the complainant: sometimes, however, it is made on motion of the defendant; and sometimes the Chancellor makes a reference on his own motion, for his own guidance or information. A reference is usually made after a preliminary hearing on the main questions in controversy, and after a decree settling those questions; the reference in such cases being mainly in furtherance of the decree, and being based on the adjudication made, and the principles declared.16 Sometimes, however, the pleadings themselves show that a report will be necessary; and when, in such a case, a reference can be made, plainly pointing out to the Master what he must report on, and by what rules he must be guided, a reference will be ordered without waiting for any hearing on the proof, leaving the parties to introduce their proof before the Master, and to contest any matter in dispute by exceptions to the Master's report.

Other references are made on petition of third parties, or are made as incidental to the main litigation, or as elucidatory of some side issue, or as necessary to a complete decree, or as a means of avoiding further litigation connected with the subject-matter of the suit.

A reference may be had at any time between the filing of an answer and the final disposition of the cause, even after a decree and the return of an execution satisfied, or after a sale made and confirmed. In short, a reference will be ordered whenever necessary to enable the Court to do justice in any matter connected with the litigation, or connected with the enforcement of the decree, 13 The devices of counsel to secure desired delays are multitudinous; the forms in which these delays are sought are Protean; the reasons by which their applications for delay are supported are plausible and seductive; and their pretensions that they desire the speediest possible trial consistent with justice are vehement and perplexing.

14 The Chancellor should always determine the compensation of a guardian ad litem and Solicitor, where all the services by them were rendered in the given case, and are evidenced by the record, or judicially known to the Court. A reference to the Master in such a case is unnecessary, and a mass

15 A reference is frequently made to the Master to inquire into the title of a party to property in question in a cause. References of this nature are principally made in suits for the specific performance of contracts for the sale, or purchase, of real estate; but such references are not confined to such cases. A purchaser may have a reference before the sale is confirmed to him; or even after confirmation and before he pays the purchase-money. 3 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1215-1220.

16 The order of reference must be founded on the pleadings and proofs, and cannot be more extensive than the allegations of the causes. 3 P. C. W. or the distribution of the proceeds of a decree. A reference, however, should never be made as to matters of account, unless the Court is able, either from the admissions of the answer, or from the proof, to so specify the principles and rules on which the account is to be taken as to limit the range of inquiry, and reduce the matters to be reported on, to those points essential to the determination of the litigation. General and indefinite references for an account, without determining any principles, or giving any special directions for the guidance of the Master, should never be made, as they generally result in unnecessary proof, and an inconclusive and unprofitable report, productive only of costs, confusion, disappointment and delay.

In decreeing an account, the Court should settle and specify the principles on which the account is to be taken; and, when practicable, should define the powers and duties of the Master, and indicate, in a general way, what he is required to do in each particular matter referred to him. The object of such rulings and directions is to narrow the range of inquiry, to point out to the Master the paths for him to pursue in his investigations, and thereby prevent the unnecessary accumulation of costs. The Court should, also, rule on disputed matters of evidence, and specify what books of account, or other evidences of account, what settlements, and what other proofs, the Master may consider, and what weight he should give them, and what rights of surcharge and falsification, or what other liberties the various parties may exercise. If the Chancellor, at the hearing, has reached a definite conclusion as to any large items of the account, he should so find, and direct the Master to take such items as prima facie, or absolutely correct, or to totally reject them, as the case may be. If there be agreements to be construed, or instruments to be passed on, the decree of reference should settle the construction and effect of such agreements, and determine the validity and meaning of such instruments, so that the Master may be neither entangled nor embarrassed by such questions. References, however, may be made by consent, without any preliminary determination of principles.

§ 600. The Frame of a Reference.—If the order of reference is to elucidate some matter in controversy, it must necessarily conform to the issues raised by the pleadings; if the reference is not for the purpose of aiding in the determination of the matters in controversy, it must, nevertheless, relate to some matter pertinent to the pleadings, or to the decrees, or to the subject-matter, or to the funds or property in the custody of the Court. The order of reference should clearly indicate the matter to be reported on, and if any rules or directions are necessary for the guidance of the Master, they should be specified. The order should not only contain all the specific directions necessary to enable the Master to understand what he is expected to do, but should lay down with particularity the principles on which he is to act, to the end that the inquiry may be made as narrow as possible, and all impertinent and unnecessary matters may be excluded. If any book of account, or settlement between the parties is deemed prima facie correct by the Court, the order of reference should so state, and leave be given the attacking party to surcharge and falsify such book of account, or settlement; but if such settlement is wholly set aside, and an account de novo ordered, the decree should so state.

18 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1221, note; Cobb v. Jameson, 1 Tenn. Ch., 604; Jones v. Douglass, 1 Tenn. Ch., 357.
19 The decree of reference should specify what accounts and settlements, if any, should be taken as prima facie correct. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1232, note.
20 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1333, notes. In short, the decree of reference should, as far as possible, blaze out the Master’s road, and mile-mark it, and put up finger-boards at the forks, and indicate the paths to be avoided and the short cuts that may be taken with safety.

Where the adult parties consent to an account before a hearing, the Chancellor may, in a proper case, consent for the parties under disability. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 857. But in such cases, the reference should be expressly without prejudice to any question in the case affecting those under disability.
23 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1232, note.
REFERENCES TO THE MASTER. § 601

In case of a reference for an account, or for a reference as to more matters than one, the order should be divided into parts, each part contained in a separate paragraph, and covering a subdivision of the account, or a single matter; and each paragraph should be given in its proper logical order, or legal sequence, and be consecutively numbered. The paragraphing and consecutive numbering of an order of reference is necessary to an orderly and intelligible report. The order of reference may specify when a report shall be made, and when filed, and may state what notices of the taking of the account shall be given, and on whom served. The order should, also, state whether any and what evidence on file may be considered in taking the account, and whether any and what new evidence may be filed by the parties, and may state what evidence shall not be considered. The Court may, also, make all necessary orders as to the production of documents, books, vouchers, or other evidence in possession of the parties.

Each party should be required, before the taking of proof on a reference begins, to file with the Master a statement of all his items of charge against the other party, and no item not contained in such statement should be considered.

Many forms of references will be given in subsequent pages of this treatise which can be readily found by the Index.

§ 601. Form of a Reference.—The following general form is given, to aid in drawing a reference. Before drawing the reference it would be well to consider the preceding section:

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

John Doe, vs. Richard Roe, et. al. No. 619

This cause came on to be heard this December 1st, 1906, before Chancellor Hugh G. Kyle, upon the bill, the answers of all the defendants thereto, the cross-bill of the defendant Sarah Roe and the answer thereto, and the proof in the cause, [including the agreement signed by all the parties, except Sarah Roe, which is filed and marked A;] and argument of counsel having been heard, the Chancellor is of opinion that this is a proper case for a reference to the Master. [Or, in a proper case, the decree may declare the rights and liabilities of the parties, and lay down the rules and principles to govern the Master in stating the account, or making the report. See, post, § 1040.]

The Master is, therefore, directed to hear proof, including that on file, and report to the next term of the Court:

1st. What [&c., setting out the matters to be reported on, putting each head in a separate paragraph, if possible, and numbering the paragraphs consecutively. See, post, §§ 975; 1040.]
2d. Whether [&c. See Index, for various orders of reference.]

The Master will [&c., Here set out any special rules for the guidance of the Master as to evidence, or the force and effect of documents, settlements, previous reports, or agreements between the parties, or as to requiring the parties to file their respective charges or discharges. See, post, § 958.]

All other matters are reserved until the coming of the Master's report.

§ 602. Reference on Further Directions.—On the coming of the Master's report the Chancellor may confirm it, in whole or in part, or he may recommit it in whole or in part; or he may recommit it with further directions. It is not necessary in the original order of reference to reserve the right to give further directions. The Chancellor is not bound by any directions contained in an order of reference. References are made to obtain facts, and the Chancellor may make such changes in his references, and such additions thereto, as he may deem proper to obtain the facts necessary for a complete adjudication of all the matters in controversy.

24 The deficiencies, disorders and general confusion sometimes found in Master's reports, are as much the fault of the Solicitor who drew the order of reference as of the Master who made the report. Confused, illogical, and chaotic references, neither paragraphed nor numbered, often result in similar wonderful how much order and lucidity a skillful and diligent Master will deduce from a chaos of unmethodical orders and heterogeneous evidence.
25 Ch. Rule, IV, § 1; post, § 1193.
26 Of course, such statements would be amendable in any other pleading. See, post, § 958.
John Den,
vs.
Richard Fen,

[Follow the decree on exceptions to a report, in § 616, post, down to the words, "all other matters," and add:]
The Master is further directed to report whether any trees were cut and removed from said land by the defendant, and if so, when cut and the value thereof; and he may hear additional proof on this point.

ARTICLE II.
PROCEEDINGS UPON A REFERENCE.

§ 603. When and Where a Reference is to be Executed.—The Court may fix the time when an account shall be taken and the report be made; but when the time is not so fixed, the Master fixes the time and place. If the reference is not for an account, but for a report as to some other matter, the Court usually leaves it to the Master to determine when he will make his report. But in all cases where any of the parties is required or expected to furnish proof to be used in making the report, a time should be fixed by the Master for making his report, and the parties interested duly notified thereof, to the end that they may have their witnesses present, or their proof on file in due season. When the decree does not fix the time in which the report shall be made, the Code requires the Master to proceed with the least practicable delay to comply with the terms of the reference;¹ and any neglect of duty in this respect is punishable by a fine of fifty dollars, and the Master is also guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to removal from office.²

The ordinary place for taking an account is the office of the Master; but he would be authorized to take it at another place, if more convenient to the parties, or if any other good reason justified such action.³

§ 604. Notice of the Time and Place of Taking an Account.—The time and place for taking the account having been fixed, either by the Court, or the Master, the next step to be taken is to give the notice thereof. This notice is given not only to the parties interested in the account, and to be affected by it, but, also, to their respective Solicitors, if both the party and Solicitors reside in the county; if both do not reside in the county, then notice shall be given to the one that does reside in the county, whether he be the party, or his Solicitor. In all cases in which a party is a non-resident, the notice must be served on his Solicitor. If the parties are numerous, the notice must be served upon each of them as the decree, or Master, may designate. The notice shall be executed five days before the day assigned for taking the account, and the notice should, on the part of his chief officer. The Code says the Chancellor "shall punish such neglect," not may punish. Masters should begin taking proof for their reports within thirty days after the order is made, and should have the last one of their reports on file at least five days before the next term. Ch. Rule, IV, § 8, post, § 1193.

its face, warn the person notified that if he fail to attend, the account will be proceeded with \textit{ex parte}.

The rule that all parties interested in the result of an account are entitled to attend before the Master at the taking, applies not only to those who are parties, but also to those who are \textit{quasi} parties,\textsuperscript{8} such as (1) creditors who seek either to prove a claim of their own, or to disprove the claim of another; (2) claimants of any fund or property involved in the litigation, or in the custody of the Court; and (3) purchasers of property sold by order of the Court, when their rights therein or thereto are in question.

In Chancery, at Dandridge.

Take notice, that, on the 2d of June next, at 10 a. m., at my office in Dandridge, I will begin the taking of the account ordered in said cause at the last \textit{or, present,} term, when and where you will attend with your proof, or the account will be proceeded with \textit{ex parte}.\textsuperscript{9} [You will produce at said time and place the following books, or, papers: (describing them,) to be used as evidence in the taking of said account.]

May 10, 1891.
To Mr. Richard Roe.

\textbf{§ 605. Meeting of the Parties, and Adjournments.—If, on the day designated in the notice, the parties, or any of them, attend, the Master will proceed with the taking of the account, unless, upon affidavit of either party showing sufficient cause, he adjourn the matter from day to day, or to another day prior to the time he is required to file his report, at which time, unless he again adjourn the same, he will proceed to take the account, and make the report. If there is no adjournment, the Master will proceed forthwith to examine the witnesses and other proof introduced; and when he has concluded his examination, the account shall be closed, notwithstanding a party may fail to attend.}\textsuperscript{7}

\textbf{§ 606. Opening the Account.—If either fail to attend, the account shall be closed, and no other evidence shall be introduced or heard,}\textsuperscript{8} unless the party offering it shall, within ten days by special affidavit,\textsuperscript{9} show that he has material evidence, which was not before the Master at the time fixed for taking the account, and which he could not by proper diligence have produced at the time set for taking the account; in which case the Master may open the account for the reception of further evidence by both parties upon the same notice prescribed for the original account.\textsuperscript{10} The Court, also, may at any time before confirmation, open the account for additional evidence.\textsuperscript{11}

\textbf{§ 607. Examination of the Witnesses.—When the hour arrives for the taking of the account, the Master will begin the examination of the witnesses of

\begin{quote}
4 Ch. Rule, IV, §§ 2, 5, § 1193. The notice should be served by leaving a copy with the person to be notified, and returning the original, with a return thereon, to the Master. If the parties are numerous, the Master should, by an entry on his rule docket, designate those to be notified. If the report states that due notice was given of the time and place of taking the account, that is sufficient evidence of the fact, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary.

5 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1171, note.

7 Ch. Rule, IV, § 3. If the order of reference requires any party to produce books, deeds, writings, or other documents, the notice to him should so state.

8 Ch. Rule, IV, §§ 4-9; § 1193.

9 The meaning of this part of Chancery Rule, IV, § 9, though somewhat obscure, evidently is: (1) that if neither party, the Master will close the account, using such proof as may then be in the record; (2) if only one party attends, the Master will not wait for the other party, but after taking the proof of the attending party, will close the account, without waiting for the other party; and, (3) that when an account has once been closed, whether heard, except upon special affidavit showing sufficient cause.

10 The special affidavit, like a special affidavit for a continuance, should: (1) give the names of the witnesses, or the character of the documents; should (2) specify what the witnesses or documents will prove, and should (3) show that there was no want of due diligence on applicant's part, and no negligence in not producing this evidence before the Master at the proper time, and (4) that he can and will have this evidence before the Master if the account is opened. If the evidence specified in the affidavit is material, and proper diligence be shown, the Master may, in his discretion, open the account for additional evidence. Ch. Rule, IV, §§ 9; § 1193.

11 Ch. Rule, IV, § 9; Stull v. Goode, 10 Heisk., 58. When the account is opened, it should be opened not only for the introduction of the evidence specified in the affidavit, but for such rebutting evidence as the other party may bring forward. The Master should not open the account generally, as a rule, but should open it only for the particular evidence referred to in the affidavit, and for evidence in rebuttal thereof.]

12 Ch. Rule, IV, § 9, post, § 1193; Stull v. Goode, the party on whom rests the burden of the proof; and, after they have been all examined, he will hear the evidence offered by the other party; after which he will allow rebutting proof. The Master may, however, by consent of parties, or for good cause, vary this order for the examination of witnesses. In the examination of a witness, all due formalities should be observed, as in case of taking depositions.

A witness whose deposition was taken in chief before the hearing, as to any matter, cannot upon a reference be examined as to the same matter, by either the Master or the party whose witness he is, without an order of the Court, or of the Master, upon affidavit showing cause therefor; but he may be examined touching any other matter. A witness who was not examined before the hearing, but who was first examined by the Master at the taking of the account, may be re-examined by the Master at his discretion. So, also, a witness who has been examined on behalf of one party, may be examined by the other party without an order.

A witness who fails to appear before the Master when duly summoned may be attached; and a witness who appears and refuses to answer legal interrogatories shall be committed by the Master to the county jail until he consents to give his testimony. The Master has, also, all the powers of a commissioner in taking depositions.

§ 608. The Production of Documents.—The order of reference frequently requires some or all of the parties to produce before the Master, all deeds, books, papers and writings, in their custody or under their control, relating to the matters of reference, to the end that they may be used in the taking of the account, or in making the report ordered. In such cases, the Master will notify the parties to produce such documents, at the same time he notifies them of the time and place of taking the account. If the order of reference does not require the production of documents by the parties, or if other persons have books, documents, or other writings under their control, the production of such books, documents, or other writings, may be enforced by a subpoena duces tecum. Documents, when introduced, may be inspected by any party interested in the reference.

§ 609. Character of the Evidence.—In taking an account, the order of reference shows what matters the Master is called on to consider; and the pleadings cannot be looked to except as an explanation of the true meaning of the order of reference. No evidence should be heard by the Master, unless it will legitimately aid him in reaching a conclusion on the matters covered by the reference. On the taking of an account, neither party should be allowed to introduce proof as to matters not referred to the Master, even when such matters are put in issue by the pleading; because the Master is not trying the cause, or preparing it for trial, on the issues raised by the pleadings, but exclusively on the issues raised by the order of reference. If one party is allowed to travel outside of the order of reference, the other party will want to follow him, and the result will be that the costs will be greatly increased, the time

12 The Master will find it necessary, to the prompt and orderly conduct of accounts, to insist on the enforcement of the regular rules of procedure in taking proof, requiring each party to introduce his good, in the same order as on a trial before the Chancellor, and requiring each witness to be examin the same manner.
13 Ch. Rule, IV, §§ 10-11; § 1195, post. The Master may also require that his duty is to reach the inner truth of the controversy, and where a witness is intelligent, truthful, and familiar with the facts, these characteristics should be considered when his re-examination is requested. On the other hand, an unreliable witness should never be re-examined, where other evidence as to the same matter is accessible. Light does not come from smoke, and pure water cannot flow from an impure fountain.
14 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1191. The reasons which re-quise a special order to authorize the re-examination of a witness are, (1) the danger of perjury by the witness when he knows where the cause pinches, and how his testimony bore upon it; and (2) the anxiety of the Court, or Master, to prevent improper tampering with the witness to induce him to retract, or contradict, or explain away, what he swore in his former examination. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1192.

for taking proof greatly prolonged, and the Master greatly perplexed, and perhaps overwhelmed, by a mass of immaterial, irrelevant and impertinent testimony. The rules of evidence in taking the account are, in no particular, different from the rules of evidence in preparing the case for hearing before the Chancellor. When incompetent evidence is offered it must be then and there objected to, or at least objected to before the evidence is closed by the opposite party, or the objector will be deemed to have waived any objections. Such objections should be in writing and brought to the attention of the Master, and the party offering the evidence.

1. What Evidence may be Considered. The parties have the liberty, in any reference to the Master, to make use of all the pleadings, depositions and documentary evidence, on file in the cause when the order of reference was made.21 The Master must consider, also, all depositions and documentary evidence taken and filed by any of the parties before he begins to make up his report. And when the reference is for an account, the parties may, in addition to all the foregoing evidence, introduce witnesses to be examined by the Master in person, or by his deputy.

2. Agreements by the Parties. Before the Master begins the examination of the witnesses, he should call on the parties to know what matters referred to him are wholly or in part agreed on, what are admitted, and what denied.22 In this way, the range of investigation may often be greatly narrowed, and the matters really controverted specifically defined, thus greatly lessening both the labor and the expense of taking the proof, and making the report. All such agreements should be reduced to writing, signed and filed.23

§ 610. Filing Claims Before the Master, Under a Decree.—Whenever there are assets or funds in Court to be administered or distributed, and the Master, by order of the Court, is directed to report the parties having interest therein, or claims thereto, as creditors, legatees, distributees, beneficiaries or otherwise, any such person, even when not a party to the suit, is authorized, under such an order, to set up his claim to such assets or funds.

To do this in proper form, he must present his petition, either in open Court, or before the Master, praying to be allowed to come in under the decree, and file and prove his claim.24 This petition should detail the particulars of the claim, and the circumstances under which it arises; and should be accompanied by any written evidence of the claim or claims specified.25 The petition should be sworn to as an evidence of the good faith of the petitioner.26 On the filing of such a petition, the petitioner is entitled to all the rights of any other party, so far as is necessary to prove or defend his claim or debt, and is entitled to the production of all documents in the possession or power of any of the parties to the suit relating to his claim; and, conversely, the other parties are entitled to the like production of documents in his power or possession.27

Where publication is made requiring persons to present and prove their debts or claims within a certain time, or be forever barred, such a publication will not preclude a person from proving his debt or claim at any time while the fund is in Court. Such person must, however, present a sworn petition showing merits, and explaining satisfactorily his delay.28

Ordinarily, a creditor or claimant, when a competent witness, may prove his claim by his own deposition, when it is not contested. It must be remembered,

21 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1188.
23 Counsel should always endeavor to lessen the costs and labor of taking the accounts, by agreeing to such matters as cannot be contested. A short stipulation as to deeds, contents of records, books, or other documents will often save great costs; as will agreements in reference to dates, names of heirs, and ages of parties.
24 The answer of the complainant under oath to 26 The sworn petition will not, however, be an evidence of the justness of the claim; the claim must be otherwise proved. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1209.
27 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1209, note. If the Master disallows his claim, he may except. Ibid, 1212.
28 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1204-1205. Such a creditor will, ordinarily, be required to pay any costs occasioned by the filing of his petition. Ibid.
§ 611. The Master's Report, and What it Should Contain.

§ 611. The Master's Report, and What it Should Contain.—A report is ordinarily either (1) a formal statement by the Master showing how the facts or matters referred to him are; or (2) a formal statement of how he has discharged some duty imposed upon him by the Court. It is, therefore, essential to a complete report that the Master shall fully and definitely respond to every matter referred to him, to the end that his report may supply the Court with all the facts called for, or inquired about; and in all respects show that the Master has fully and properly discharged every duty imposed on him by the order of reference.

A perfect report must not only contain everything called for, and show that every duty imposed has been performed, but it must also contain no recital of facts not called for, and no statement of acts not required to be done. In making his report, the Master must confine himself to the matters referred to him; those matters circumscribe his authority and limit his jurisdiction. All other matters contained in his report are mere surplusage and impertinence; and the Court will pay no attention to them, unless to order them to be stricken out.

The report must not only respond to all the requirements of the order of reference, but it must be positive, definite, and correct; not inferential, hypothetical, or in the alternative as to any matter. The Chancellor wants the Master's findings as to the facts, and his positive and affirmative conclusions as to matters of judgment, or opinion. A report, giving alternative states of facts, or alternative conclusions, is no report at all, and will be set aside on motion. The facts called for must be set forth in the report with such precision and particularity, and the duty imposed by the reference must be performed with such fullness and completeness, that the Court will have no difficulty in basing on the report an adjudication as to all and every matter specified in the order of reference.

The Court will not allow anything in an account under the name of general expenses; the party must specify the particulars. Sums in gross will not be allowed in any case; for the party charged therewith has the right to know the items; and lumping charges are generally not only excessive, but are sometimes cloaks for frauds. A report, for these reasons, should contain no lumping charges, and no lumping credits, but should specify every item of charge or credit.

29 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1211, note.
2 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1294. Inasmuch as the taking of an account involves the exercise of judgment and discretion, the Master can not delegate this duty to another, nor can be adopt an account stated by another, either in the same or in another suit. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1295, note. Of course, his regular deputy may make and sign a report.
2 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1296-1297.
3 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1232.
4 Dolus occursur in generalibus.
§ 612. Frame of a Master’s Report.—The frame of a report is as important as its contents; for a report may contain everything called for by the order of reference, and yet its statements may be so unmethodical, and its arrangement so unsystematical, and its construction so irregular and chaotic, that no decree can be predicated upon it without rearranging and restating its contents. As every order of reference should not only specify, in a separate paragraph, each particular matter to be reported on, but should also give each item of the reference in its proper logical order, or legal sequence, and consecutively numbered; so a report should, not only respond fully and directly to each of the particular matters of reference, but should also respond to them in the order in which they appear in the reference, and should never have under one head what properly belongs to another head of reference.

The report should not contain any more of the decree or order of reference than is necessary to show what matters have been referred; nor should the evidence be either recited, or summarized. Preambles, explanations, and arguments, are wholly out of place in a report, as are also all other matters that unnecessarily tend to swell its size. What the Chancellor calls for are facts, conclusions and acts,—in a word, results, and not the processes by which the results were reached. The report should not be hypothetical, or in the alternative, unless so required; and the facts found should be stated with such positiveness and particularity that an issue as to their correctness may be readily raised by an exception thereto. The report of the Master is in the nature of a special verdict; and his findings should not only be clearly and fully responsive to the order of reference, but each finding must be clear, direct, emphatic and brief. And where sums and amounts are reported on, he should give each item allowed, and not the gross sum or amount, for otherwise neither party could intelligently except, not knowing what items had been allowed and what disallowed.

The report must be written in ink, and properly paged; and should refer, by page, to the particular pages of the record upon which each item is based. A reference to a deposition, or to a transcript, is too indefinite, as they may contain many pages. The number of the question and answer in a deposition may be referred to, as well as the page.

§ 613. Form of a Master’s Report.—The form of a Master’s report can be readily understood from the foregoing sections, and from the following form.

MASTER’S REPORT.

The undersigned respectfully reports that, in obedience to a decree in this cause, pronounced at the last term, directing the Master to hear proof and report:

1. What amount was originally due from the defendant, Richard Roe, to the complainant, for the construction of the dwelling-house referred to in the bill, after deducting payments made to complainant, before the assignment by complainant to the defendant, Stokes.

2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1298-1300, notes; Evans v. Evans, 2 Cold., 143. While the report of the Master should not, on the one hand, copy the proof on which it is based, it should not, upon the other hand, be a mere skeleton, presenting nothing but an array of figures. Each item should be numbered, and when these items rest upon accounts, receipts, or other vouchers, they should be numbered correspondingly; and where they are supported by depositions, the deposition should be referred to. The Master should state the grounds of his action in a concise and intelligible manner, referring to the pages of the depositions and of documentary evidence, on which he relies. Green v. Lanier, 5 Heisk., 662; Stull v. Goode, 10 Heisk., 58.

3 The Master’s report should not contain any lumping charge or credit, composed of several items, unless accompanied by a schedule of such items; because, where a lumping charge or credit is made, neither party can with any certainty or definiteness, except thereto. Every item allowed or disallowed by the Master, should be set out either in the report, or in a schedule thereto; and the Master should under each item give the precise place in the record where he obtained the proof in reference thereto, giving the document and page, and if a deposition, the name of the witness, the page and number of the answer. A general reference to a document, pleading or deposition, is but little better than no reference at all. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 130, notes.

4 The ink should be black, and the paper should be legal cap. Fancy inks and fancy paper are abominations in Court proceedings; and a sure sign of some infirmity on the part of the officer or Solicitor voluntarily using them.

5 Ch. Rule, IV, §§ 6-7; post, 1193.

6 For other forms of Reports, see, post, §§ 916; 994; 976. The above form is intended to conform to the requirements given by Judge Nelson, in Greene v. Lanier, 5 Heisk., 671.
\section*{THE MASTER'S REPORT.}

2. How much of the debt due from the complainant to the defendant, Charles Stokes, did the defendant, Richard Roe, pay, and under what contract; and what payments defendant, Richard Roe, made to said Stokes thereunder.

3. Was said dwelling-house constructed according to contract; and if not, what deduction should reasonably be made from the contract price.

4. What amount does the defendant, Richard Roe, owe complainant for building the out-houses and fences on the lot containing said dwelling-house, after deducting all payments made, and all other credits.

5. What balance is due from the defendant, Richard Roe, and what part of said balance belongs to complainant, and what part to the defendant, Charles Stokes.

As to the 1st head to be reported on, I report that the defendant, Richard Roe, originally owed the complainant the full contract price for the building of said dwelling house, to wit:

$2,100.00

\textit{(Written contract, p. 3.)}

Less the following payments:

1. Paid January 2, 1890, \hspace{1cm} $400.00

\textit{(Exhibit No. 1, to the dep. of Richard Roe; and dep. of John Doe, p. 41.)}

2. Paid January 18, 1890, \hspace{1cm} 600.00

\textit{(Exhibit No. 2, to dep. of Richard Roe; and dep. of John Doe, p. 42.)}

Balance originally due the complainant for the building of said house... $1,100.00

I find that the payment of $300.00 set up in the answer was not in fact made, for the reason that the check by which it was sought to be made, was never cashed, and could not have been, because the defendant, Roe, had no money in the bank subject to such check. \textit{(See dep. of the Cashier, John Jones, pp. 1-2; and dep. of John Doe, p. 8; and the said check, exhibit 3, to John Doe's dep.)}

\section*{II.}

As to the 2d head to be reported on, I report that the complainant owed defendant, Charles Stokes, $2,300.00; and that he, on January 20, 1890, gave said Stokes an order in writing on the defendant, Richard Roe, for all the balance due complainant for constructing said house. \textit{(See dep. of John Doe, p. 8; and dep. of Richard Roe, p. 5.)} This order was accepted by the defendant, Roe, and on it he has made the following payments:

Paid Charles Stokes, Jan. 21, 1890, \hspace{1cm} $400.00

\textit{(Dep. of Stokes, p. 3; dep. of Roe, p. 6.)}

Paid Charles Stokes, Feb. 25, 1890, \hspace{1cm} 300.00

\textit{(Dep. of Stokes, p. 4; dep. of Roe, p. 7.)}

Total amount paid by the defendant, Roe, to Stokes, on said order, \hspace{1cm} $700.00

\section*{III.}

As to the 3d head of reference, I report that while the house was not constructed strictly according to the original contract, yet the defendant, Roe, agreed to accept it, and did accept it, as though it had been so constructed; and that such acceptance was based on a sufficient consideration, consisting of additional work done and materials furnished by complainant, and of delays caused by Richard Roe, himself. \textit{(Dep. of John Doe, p. 12; and James Johnson, p. 4.)}

\section*{IV.}

As to the 4th head of reference, I report that the defendant, Roe, owes complainant for building the said out-houses and a fence a balance of \hspace{1cm} $218.00

As follows:

\begin{itemize}
  \item Total cost of materials and labor, \hspace{1cm} $480.00
  \item Paid Charles Stokes on said order, \hspace{1cm} 262.00
  \item (Dep. of John Doe, p. 18; and exhibit 5 to his dep.)
\end{itemize}

The defendant, Roe, claims a deduction of $20.00 because the fence is not straight. This claim I disallow: 1st, because it was straight when built and accepted, \textit{(Dep. of Doe, p. 18;)} and 2d, the crooks in it were caused by defendant. Roe's, clothes' lines being tied to the fence in wet weather \textit{(Dep. of Sarah Cook, pp. 2-3.)}

Defendant Stokes agrees that the said balance of $218.00 belongs to complainant, and that complainant owes him nothing after he gets the sum of $286.13, as shown under head v. \textit{(Dep. of Stokes, p. 6.)}

\section*{V.}

As to the 5th head of reference, I report that the defendant, Richard Roe, owes:

1. On the dwelling house, principal, \hspace{1cm} $300.00

Interest, from Jany. 1, 1890, \hspace{1cm} 47.00

\textit{(Dep. of John Doe, p. 14.)}

This balance of $347.00, I find to belong as follows:
§ 614. When a Report must be Filed.—If the order or decree prescribes a time when a report shall be filed, the report must be filed within such time, or a satisfactory excuse given in writing to the Chancellor, by the same time, in lieu of such report; and a failure so to do makes the Master liable to severe penalties. If the time for filing the report is not prescribed by the order of reference, the report must be filed five days before the first day of the term succeeding the order of reference. The object of having the report filed before the first day of the term is to enable the Solicitors of the parties to examine it, and file such exceptions to it as they may desire; these exceptions must be filed on or before the second day of the term, or sooner if the cause is sooner reached on the docket, and hence the necessity of having the Master’s report on file at least a day as possible. If the Master fails to file his report within the time required, he must file, in lieu, a valid excuse in writing; duly verified by his oath. The Master must note upon the hearing docket, and also upon the Chancellor’s docket, opposite the cause, the fact that his report has been filed.

14 Notwithstanding the imperative language of the statute, and its peremptory repetitions; notwithstanding the severe penalties imposed, cumulative in their character; and notwithstanding the exhortations of the Chancellor and of counsel, there are some Masters who will persist in so delaying to comply with an order of reference, that the term

Such laggardness so interferes with the administration of justice that it should be stimulated into statutory activity by the rigid application of the statutory penalties. Masters must understand that it is not only a gross neglect of duty, but, also, a contempt of Court, and a violation of law, to fail to file a complete report, or a sworn excuse, within the time required. Code, §§ 4471-4474; Ch. Rule, VII, § 9.

after closing the account, file a special affidavit showing these facts, and move the Master to open the account. If, however, a party has no additional evidence, or if ten days have elapsed, he must except to the report if dissatisfied with it.

Exceptions to a Master’s report are proper only in those cases which he has come to a wrong conclusion upon the matters referred to him. Where he proceeds irregularly, or neglects to report upon all the matters referred to him, or failed to give notice, or heard improper proof, improperly refused to reopen the account, or to grant a continuance, or otherwise denied a party his just rights, the proper course for the aggrieved party is to apply to the Court to set aside the report, and refer it back to the Master, with proper directions, supporting his application by affidavit of the facts, when they do not otherwise sufficiently appear. Exceptions are in the nature of special demurrers to the report, and must be based upon the report, and not on matters outside of the report; and must clearly and distinctly specify the matter, or item, excepted to, and why excepted to. The exceptions must be numbered, and refer to the page or pages of the report which show the item or matter excepted to; and, also, refer to the page or pages of the depositions, or other parts of the record, by which the Master’s report is sought to be impeached.

Exceptions should not be prolix, or argumentative, but should state concisely the fault imputed to the report; and should show what the report should have been, on the matter excepted to. And when a party excepts to a report which contains a number of items, he must specify the particular items of which he complains. He cannot by a general exception impose upon the Court the burden of examining every item in the report in order to ascertain the error.

A general exception to a Master’s report will not be noticed; neither will a specific exception unless proper reference is made to the page or pages of the deposition, or other evidence, by which the exception is sought to be sustained; for the exceptant cannot, either by general exceptions, or by general references to the proof, impose on the Court the burden of hunting for errors, or for proof to sustain exceptions. The report is presumed to be correct, and the party who disputes that correctness, must clearly and specifically designate the precise errors he complains of, and the precise proof in the record shewing such errors: in short, he must put his finger both on the error and the proof of the error.

A party cannot, by means of exceptions to a report, reopen any matter adjudicated prior to the report. The Master, in making his report, is bound by the decree ordering the report, and by the former deceses, if any; and so are the parties. A party cannot, therefore, have the benefit of a rehearing, or of a bill of review, or of an appeal, or of a writ of error, or of an original bill, by filing exceptions to a report. The former proceedings are conclusive as to the matters of reference. Exceptions to a report must be confined to the report itself, and to the evidence on which it is based. If the Master has obeyed the order of reference, and his report is sustained by the facts in the record, exceptions are of no avail. The office of exceptions is to show that the Master has not followed the order of reference, or has not made proper deductions from the evidence in the case.

2 Ch. Rule, IV, § 9. Creditors, claimants, and other quasi parties, may have an account opened, or may file exceptions, in the same manner, and on the same terms, as parties to the record; but if their claims are disallowed, and not referred to in the report, they should first obtain leave of the Court to file exceptions. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1311.
3 The fact that the Master employed a party as an amenuensis in making his report is no ground of exception, no improper conduct being shown. Long-ticular item or matter excepted to. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr.,

Any person who is a party, or a quasi party, to the suit, may take exceptions to a report. Creditors and claimants, whose debts and claims have been allowed, or disallowed, may except either as to matters connected with their own claims, or as to allowances made to other creditors or claimants. If there be nothing in the report, or in the proof, that will support an exception by a creditor or claimant whose claim has been unjustly disallowed, he should file an affidavit, or present a sworn petition, showing the facts, and have the report recommitted as to his claim, with proper directions.

No one can except unless he has been aggrieved; he cannot except because another party, even an infant, has been aggrieved.

§ 616. Form of Exceptions to a Master's Report, and Decree Thereon.—In drawing exceptions to a Master's report, no technical set form is indispensable: the essential matter is that the exceptions should clearly and distinctly state the matter or item excepted to, and also refer to the page or pages of the evidence sustaining the exception and impeaching the report. The following is the usual form of EXCEPTIONS TO A MASTER'S REPORT.

John Doe,

Exceptions of the defendant, Richard Roe, to the report of the Master filed in this cause on Oct. 13, 1890:

1st. The Master has, under the 1st head of his report, (page 4,) charged this defendant with $2,100.00, as the contract price of the dwelling-house, whereas the weight of the proof is that complainant subsequently agreed to do all the work, and furnish all the materials, for $2,000.00. (Dep. of Richard Roe, p. 8; Sarah Roe, p. 6; and Wm. George, p. 3.)

2d. The Master under the 3d head of his report, (page 6,) reports that this defendant agreed to accept the house as though it had been constructed according to contract, and fails to allow any deduction for defective work and materials, and for work not done; whereas he should have reported the following deductions:

(1) Defective chimneys, .......................................................... $40.00
   (Dep. of Wm. George, p. 5, q. 13.)
(2) Defective stair-case, ...................................................... 18.00
   (Dep. of Jas. Neal, p. 3, q. 7.)
(3) Defective doors, ......................................................... 14.00
   (Dep. Jas. Neal, p. 4, q. 9.)
(4) Defective plastering, .................................................... 25.00
   (Dep. of Richard Roe, p. 9; and Jas. Neal, p. 5, q. 12.)

3d. The Master fails to allow under the 4th head, (p. 8,) any deduction for defects in the fence, whereas he should have allowed $20.00, the cost of straightening it. (Dep. of John Dike, p. 8; and Richard Roe, p. 12, q. 18.)

4th. The Master reports under the 5th head of his report, (p. 10,) a total balance due from this defendant of $565.00; whereas said balance is only $348.00, being $217.00 less than the report. (This amount of $217.00 is composed of the additional credits claimed in the preceding exceptions.)

Wherefore, this defendant excepts to said report, and appeals therefrom to the Court.

Henry H. Ingersoll, Solicitor.

The following is the form of a decree disposing of the foregoing exceptions to the Master's report, showing the various rulings of the Court on the various exceptions:

John Doe,

This cause coming on this day to be heard before Hon. T. S. Logan, Judge, sitting by interchange, upon the whole record in the cause, but especially upon the Report of the Master, filed Oct. 13, 1890, and the exceptions of the defendant, Richard Roe, to said report; and argument of counsel having been heard, and the premises understood by the Court, the Court overrules and disallows the first of said exceptions, and sustains and allows the third of said exceptions; and as to the second and fourth exceptions, the report is recommitted, and both tions are allowed ten days to file additional proof as to the matters referred to in said second exception. At the end of said ten days the Master will make and file his report in reference to said matters, and will show the balance due from the exceptant, Richard Roe.

All other matters are reserved until the incoming of said report.

The foregoing forms illustrate most of the features usually found in exceptions to reports, and in decrees ruling on such exceptions; but the following form will serve as a further illustration of such exceptions and decrees:

EXCEPTIONS TO A REPORT.

John Den, } No. 723.

vs.

Richard Fen.

Exceptions taken by the said defendant to the report of the Master made in this cause to the present term of the Court:

1st Exception. For that the Master has in and by his said report, (Item I, page 2,) stated that the said complainant paid said defendant, on the 5th of December, 1887, $5,000, and charges this defendant with the same, and interest thereon, whereas the proof does not show that such payment was, in fact, ever made.

2nd Exception. For that the Master has in his said report, (Item V, page 10,) stated that the value of the rents and profits of the tract of land in controversy in this suit, while occupied by the complainant, at only $50.00 a year, whereas the proof shows them to have been of the yearly value of $100.00. (See dep. of Frank Fen, page 12, q. 27.)

3rd Exception. For that the Master has in his said report, (Item VII, page 12,) stated that the value of the permanent improvements erected by the complainant on said tract of land at $1,000, whereas, according to the weight of the evidence, they are not worth more than $600.00. (See dep. of Geo. Bird, pp. 9 to 12; and dep. of Thos. Cole, p. 8, q. 10.)

4th Exception. For that the Master should, in his said report, have allowed the defendant $200.00, the amount of the check referred to in the answer. The report wholly ignores said check. (See dep. of Richard Fen; and the affidavits of John Carr and James Crow, herewith filed, and marked respectively exhibit A, and exhibit B, to these exceptions.)

In all of which particulars, the defendant excepts to said report, and appeals therefrom to the judgment of the Court.

DEGREE ON EXCEPTIONS TO A REPORT.

John Den, } No. 723.

vs.

Richard Fen.

On this 10th day of June, 1891, before the Hon. B. M. Estes, Chancellor, came on for argument, the exceptions taken by the defendant to the report of the Master, made in this cause to the present term of the Court; and the Court having heard read the report, the proof referred to therein, and the exceptions and being of the opinion, that the first exception taken as aforesaid, being for that the Master, in and by his said report, has stated that the complainant paid said defendant, on the 5th of December, 1887, the sum of five thousand dollars, and charges the defendant with the same, and interest thereon, is well taken, the same is sustained. And the Court being of opinion that the second exception taken as aforesaid, being for that the Master in and by said report, stated the value of the permanent improvements erected by the complainant on the tract of land in controversy, in his suit at one thousand dollars, the Court orders that eight hundred dollars, and no more, be allowed for said improvements, that appearing to the Court to be their reasonable value, and said third exception is, to that extent, sustained and allowed. The matters contained in the defendant's fourth exception, relative to the bank check, referred to in the answer, and in the defendant's affidavits in support of his said fourth exception, not being sufficiently clear to the Court, the report is recommenced as to said matters, and the Master will report thereon at the end of ten days herefrom, hearing the proof on file, and any additional proof filed by the parties, or either of them. All other matters are reserved until the incoming of this report.

§ 617. When and How Exceptions are Disposed Of.—All exceptions to a Master's report must be filed on or before the second day of the term to which the report is made returnable, unless the cause is sooner reached on the docket, in which event the exceptions must be filed at the calling of the cause; in either case, the exceptions shall be immediately set down for argument, and shall be heard and disposed of like a motion, provided they are disposed of by the Court before or when the cause is reached for trial.17

On the argument of exceptions, the exceptant has the right to open and conclude.18 The better practice is to hear argument on both sides as to one exception before taking up the next exception. Before argument the proof should be read, or, at least, so much of it as refers to the matters contained in the exceptions; or the Chancellor can allow counsel for the exceptant to read during his argument such parts of the evidence as sustain his exceptions, and can allow opposite counsel, during his argument, to read so much of the evidence as sustains the report, confining the exceptant’s counsel, however, to the pages of evidence specified in his exceptions.

Upon the argument of exceptions, the Court may sustain some and overrule others, or may sustain in part and overrule in part. Upon sustaining one or more exceptions, the Court may either recommit the report of the Master with directions to review it as to the exceptions sustained; or the Chancellor may himself correct the error specified in the exception, without recommitting the report, and thereupon confirm the report as by him corrected, or modified. The Chancellor will not, however, during the argument of exceptions, consider any general exceptions, or any matter in a report not excepted to. Matters not excepted to are deemed correct.

Exceptions cannot be taken to a Master’s report after it has been confirmed: confirmation makes it a part of the decree. If, therefore, a party desires to except to a report that has been confirmed, he must first have the decree of confirmation set aside. If the party show grounds of exception, and, also, show that he was prevented from excepting by fraud, surprise, or mistake, the Court, if it has not lost control of the decree of confirmation, will set it aside, and allow the report to be excepted to. In general, however, the Court is very cautious in admitting applications to review a Master’s report after it has been confirmed; and it is only in cases of fraud, surprise, or mistake, that it will be permitted.

This cause coming on to be further and finally heard, this July 20, 1891, before Hon. B. M. Estes, Chancellor, upon the whole record in the cause, and especially on the report of the Master, filed June 20, 1891, and the exception of defendant thereto, and upon argument of counsel, on consideration of all which, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed, that said exception be overruled and disallowed, and said report confirmed; and that the defendant is justly indebted to the complainant by reason of the premises, in the sum of thirteen hundred dollars.

[If the complaint has no lien on any property to secure his debt, the decree will then proceed as follows:] for all of which and the costs of the cause, which are adjudged against the defendant, an execution will issue. [If the debt is a lien on real estate, conclude the decree after the words “thirteen hundred dollars,” as follows:] And it further appearing that complainant is entitled to have said sum declared a lien on the tract [or lot] of land described in the bill, it is so ordered, adjudged and decreed.

And if said sum of thirteen hundred dollars and all the costs of the cause are not paid into the office of the Clerk and Master of the Court in satisfaction of this decree within sixty days, the Clerk and Master will, in the manner required by law, sell said tract [or lot] of land to the highest and best bidder, on a credit of six, twelve, eighteen and twenty-four months [&c. See balance of decree in § 626, post.]

§ 618. When and How to Correct Errors not Reached by Exceptions.—Exceptions will not reach any error not apparent in the report, or in the accompanying proofs. If, therefore, the Master (1) takes an account without notice, or (2) rules out material and admissible evidence, so that it does not appear in the record, or (3) if the Master refuses to examine a material and competent witness, or (4) if the Master admits illegal evidence, or rejects legal evidence, or

It is sometimes advisable to take up and dispose of an important exception before taking up the next, first hearing the part of the report excepted to, then the exception to such part, and lastly argument for and against the exception, each side in his argument referring to the evidence he relies on.

improperly refuses to open the account on application made to him, or (5) if the Master commits any other error in taking an account which cannot be adequately presented to the Court by exceptions to the report, the party injured may bring the matter before the Chancellor at Chambers, or in open Court, and obtain any order necessary to correct the error, and give the injured party the relief he is entitled to, supporting his motion by affidavit if the facts do not otherwise appear. In such cases, if the report has not been filed, the Chancellor, or in Court direct the Master to receive the rejected evidence, or reject the received evidence, or hear the rejected witness, or open the account; and if the report has been filed, it may be recommitted, with proper instructions to the Master. In cases of this sort, exceptions will not enable the party injured to obtain the relief he is entitled to.23

If the Master was prejudiced against a party, or had expressed an opinion, or was nearly related to one of the parties, or was interested in the litigation, on such fact being made known to the Chancellor, either in vacation, or in term time, he may appoint a commissioner to take the account,24 the application for such appointment being made in due season, and the applicant not having waived the Master’s incompetency.

The party injured by any act of the Master specified in this section should bring the matter before the Chancellor at the first opportunity. Acts of acquiescence, after knowledge, will be deemed a waiver of any error, or disability, of the Master.

If a party, or quasi party, desires to introduce new evidence, he must file a special affidavit, detailing such evidence, showing clearly its materiality, and cegonity, explaining satisfactorily why it was not introduced before the Master, and why application to open the account was not made to the Master; on such an affidavit the Court may recommit the report to the Master, on such terms and with such directions as will effectuate the ends of justice.25

§ 619. Effect of a Master’s Report.—A Master’s report is in the nature of a special verdict, and exceptions to it are in the nature of a motion for a new trial; and the Court will not overrule it unless the evidence clearly preponder-ates against it. The burden is on the party excepting, to establish the mistake, or misconduct, or disability, alleged. Where a matter of fact, depending on conflicting testimony, and the credibility of witnesses, has been referred to the Master, his decision will not be interfered with, unless it is a plain case of error, or mistake, especially when the witnesses were examined before him.26 The result is, the Court will not allow an exception to the Master’s report, unless the exception is clearly sustained by the weight of the evidence, or otherwise affirmatively appears to be well taken.

The effect of confirming a report is the same as though the facts contained in the report had been ascertained by the Court, upon argument and due consideration of the record in the cause. Indeed, if a report is confirmed without exceptions filed, the facts found by the Master will, on appeal to the Supreme Court, be conclusive; whereas, if the Chancellor had upon argument found the same facts, his finding would be inconclusive, and subject to modification, or reversal, on appeal or writ of error.

§ 620. Effect of Confirmation of a Master’s Report.—A Master’s report when unexcepted to is confessed to be true and correct, in so far as said report is responsive to the order of reference; and a decree confirming it is conclusive upon all parties, including minors properly represented, after the term is passed.27 Neither can such a report when so confirmed be set aside in the Supreme Court, even when the report is erroneous on the proof;28 but may be set aside on an original bill surcharging and falsifying the report and decree for fraud.

When a Master's report is confirmed by the Chancellor on exceptions as to facts, such concurrence has the force and effect of a verdict of a jury and judgment thereon, and is conclusive on the Supreme Court.

But a concurrent finding of law, or of a mixed question of law and fact, or of fact based on mere opinions or estimates, is not conclusive but subject to review and redetermination in the Supreme Court, and this is so even when the Court of Chancery Appeals also concurs on a question of law.

DECREES OF SALE, AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON.

ARTICLE I. Sales Generally Considered.
ARTICLE III. The Opening of Biddings.
ARTICLE IV. Purchasers' Duties, Rights, and Liabilities.
ARTICLE V. Payment of Money Under a Decree to Parties Entitled.

ARTICLE I.

SALES GENERALLY CONSIDERED.

§ 621. When a Sale will be Decreed.—The Chancery Court will, by decree, order the Clerk and Master, or a special commissioner, or a receiver appointed for that purpose, to sell property, real or personal, in the following cases:

1. Where the property is described in the bill; and its sale is prayed for, and is necessary, to enforce some lien or trust, created by the contract of the parties, or by operation of law, or by the decree of the Court.

2. Where the bill is filed to sell the property therein described: (1) for partition among tenants in common; (2) for reinvestment in case of persons under disability; (3) for the maintenance or education of persons under disability; (4) to pay the debts of a decedent; (5) to wind up an insolvent or dissolved corporation; or (6) to pay the debts of a fraudulent vendor.

3. Where property described in the bill has been attached, or otherwise impounded, during the progress of the cause.

4. Where, in any other case, the sale of the property described in the bill is necessary, or proper, for the due enforcement of the rights of any of the parties to the suit.

5. Where property has been levied on by attachment or execution, and for some reason has not been sold by the officer levying the writ.

§ 622. What Should Appear of Record when Land is Sold for Debt.—Before land can be properly sold for debt the following facts should appear of record, or in the decree for sale:

1. The owner of the land must be before the Court.

2. A debt necessitating such sale must be established by sufficient proof.1

3. The precise amount of this debt must be ascertained and stated in the decree.2

4. The land to be sold must be described in the decree, or by reference to the bill, or to the attachment or execution levy, or to some other part of the record, so as to identify it;3 and such land must not be different from that sought to be reached by the bill, if any be so sought.4

1 Miller v. Taylor, 2 Shan. Cas., 461.
3 See when the lands of parties under disability are sold the acreage should be known, and sales in gross not allowed. Horn v. Denton, 2 Sneed, 125.
4 A decree is coram non judice and void that sells a different tract from that described in the bill. Bank v. Carpenter, 13 Pick., 437.
The homestead and dower should be carved out when either or both encumber the land.

6. The right of redemption should be preserved, unless good reasons exist for a sale in bar of redemption.

7. Opportunity should be given to the debtor to pay the debt before the sale.\(^5\)

8. The sale should be duly advertised.\(^6\)

9. If there be more tracts than one, each tract should be sold separately, unless, for sufficient reasons appearing in the record, the Court should order two or more adjoining tracts to be consolidated and sold as one.\(^7\)

§ 623. Sale of Land in Bar of Redemption.—Man naturally loves the land he owns, and in all ages among all civilized nations, the law has regarded a man's home as sacred, and has declared that when sold it should be subject to redemption.

1. When the Right to Redeem Exists, and When it May be Barred.—Ordinarily, under our law, real estate sold for debt under any judicial procedure is sold subject to redemption at any time within two years after such sale.\(^8\) But where, upon a foreclosure of a mortgage, or deed of trust, or in any case the specific land to be sold is mentioned in the decree, the Court, upon application of the complainant, may order:

(a) That the property be sold on a credit of not less than six months, nor more than two years.

(b) That when the sale is made and reported, and confirmed, no right of redemption or repurchase shall exist in the debtor or his creditors, but that the purchaser's title shall be absolute.\(^9\)

Under these provisions of the Code three things must be done to make a decree destroy the right of redemption: 1st, the complainant must pray in his bill that the land specified in the bill be sold on a credit, and in bar of the equity of redemption; 2d, this specified land must be mentioned in the decree of sale; and 3d, the decree must order that the sale be on a credit, specifying the time, which must be not less than six months, nor more than two years, and that when made no right of redemption shall exist.\(^10\) The statute evidently contemplated that no part of the purchase price should, on such a sale, be required to be paid in cash, but the Supreme Court has decided that if, on facts appearing in the record, when the decree is made, a cash payment will not interfere with the obtaining of a full and fair price, the Court may require a portion of the purchase money to be paid in cash.\(^11\) But, if such justifying facts do not so appear in the record, a sale requiring any portion of the purchase money to be paid in cash will vitiate the sale; and, on appeal or writ of error, the Supreme Court will set the sale aside and order a resale, and allow the right of redemption from the day of such resale.\(^12\) It is not imperative on the Chancellor to order a sale on credit, barring the equity of redemption, merely because the \(^11\) Hone v. Copely, 11 Heisk., 335; McBee v. McBee, 1 Heisk., 558. The Master may be required to report whether a cash payment will prevent the land being sold for a full and fair price.

\(^12\) No cash should ever be required, unless: 1. The sale is made in the enforcement of a contract expressly providing for a sale for cash, and then it is the duty of the Court to sell for cash. Knox v. McCain, 13 Lea, 197; or 2. Some cash is imperatively required to discharge taxes, or other pressing encumbrances; or 3. The interests of the owners of the parties are all sujo juris, and consent to sale for cash, in whole or in part. As a rule, the prepayment of any cash lessens the price bid for the land somewhat in proportion to the percentage of cash required; that is to say, if ten per cent. cash is required, the land will, ordinarily, bring ten per cent. less, and this percentage holds good until about the limit of 25 per cent. And of what benefit is it to any one, except the Clerks, to have ten per cent. of the purchase money paid in cash?

Neither should a tract of land be sold first in lots, and then as a whole, adopting the sale bringing the larger sum in the aggregate. In such a case, shrewd and scheming bidders will combine, and not bid when the lots are sold separately, but wait until the property is sold as a whole, and then bid a nominal advance, and, on confirmation of the sale, partition the property between them. To defeat such a device, let the property be sold as a whole first, and then sell it in lots: this method suits poor and honest men on complainant asks for such relief in his bill. It is a matter of sound legal discretion to be exercised in view of the facts of the case.13

2. When the Right to Redeem Does Not Exist. In construing the various sections of the Code relative to the equity of redemption,14 it is apparent that it is intended to exist in cases only where the land is sold for debt of the owner of the land, and it therefore does not exist in the following cases:

1. Where land is resold by the Court for the purchase money due from the purchaser at the original Court sale, he failing to pay the full amount of his bid. In such a case, the resale may be made for cash, without the equity of redemption.15

2. Where land is sold in an administration cause for the payment of the debts of the decedent.16

3. Where land is sold for partition of proceeds among tenants in common.17

4. Where the lands of married women, infants,18 idiots, lunatics, or persons of unsound mind19 are sold for support, education, reinvestment or division.

When land is sold in any of the foregoing cases it is not necessary for the decree to bar the equity of redemption.

§ 624. Duties of the Court in Making Sales.—It is an exercise of great power on the part of a Court to sell a man’s property, and especially his land, against his will; and, in making a judicial sale, the Court should diligently see: 1, That the proper parties are before the Court to give a good title to the purchaser; 2, That the pleadings and proofs justify the sale;20 3, That there is a proper decree of sale;21 4, That the sale is made by the Master in strict compliance with the decree; 5, That the best price possible is obtained for the property sold, and 6, That the report of sale by the Master, and the confirmation thereof, are in regular form. The Court acts as a sort of judicial agent for the parties in making a sale.22

In making sales of property, real or personal, the Court has two great duties to discharge; a duty to the owner of the property, and a duty to the buyer of the property. The duty to the owner of the property is discharged when the highest possible price has been obtained for it;23 and the duty to the purchaser is discharged by giving him a good title to what he buys, or, at least, such a title as he has the right in reason to expect.24 It savors of judicial tyranny and oppression, and is certainly judicial injustice, either to sacrifice the owner, by selling his property for a grossly inadequate price, or to sacrifice the buyer, by taking his money and giving him no title or other consideration in return.

§ 625. When Private Sales will be Made by the Court.—While sales by the Master are generally made publicly, and on due advertisement of the time, place and terms,25 nevertheless, inasmuch as a Court of Chancery is bound by no forms, but looks to the substance of things, and strives to best promote the interests of all concerned, cases often arise when the Chancellor deems it expedient for the welfare of the parties to order the Master to sell at private sale; or the Chancellor may accept an offer made directly to the Court, or may ratify a sale already made, and that, too, even when persons under disability have an interest in the land. The question for the consideration of the Court in case of persons under disability is not how the land has been sold, but the nature of the parties is under disability the number of acres in the tract should be ascertained before sale is made. Horn v. Denton, 2 Sneed, 125; and reasonable time, say sixty days, given the defendant to pay the debt before sale. Lewis v. Baker, 1 Head, 388; Codwise v. Taylor, 4 Sneed, 351. See preceding section.

22 Glenn v. Glenn, 7 Heisk., 367.
23 Childress v. Hurt, 2 Swan, 487; Glenn v. Glenn, 7 Heisk., 367; Owen v. Owen, 3 Hum., 352; Lucas v. Moore, 2 Lea, 7; Atkins v. Murfree, 1 Tenn. Ch., 156; Click v. Burris, 6 Heisk., 544.
cessity or inexpediency of the sale, and the propriety of ratifying it, considering the price offered; in short, the question is, will the welfare of the person under disability be promoted by the sale? In all such cases, the Court acts as guardian for those not able to act for themselves; and endeavors to do for them what they themselves would almost certainly do, if able freely and intelligently to act for themselves. Irregularities in a sale of an infant's land will be disregarded, where such sale is manifestly advantageous to the infant. Thus, the Court will ratify a sale made by a next friend of infants during the progress of a suit instituted by him to sell their land, the Court being satisfied that such sale was an advantageous one for the infants, the advisability of the sale having been first duly referred to the Master for investigation and report.

§ 626. Form of a Decree of Sale.—A decree of sale should (1) be preceded by some adjudication warranting a sale; (2) it should specifically describe the land ordered to be sold, and not refer to pleadings, deeds or other papers, for the description; (3) it should expressly declare by whom the sale shall be made; and (4) it should specify when, where, and on what terms, the sale shall be made. The following form will serve as a guide in drawing a decree of sale, omitting the antecedent adjudication:

FORM OF A DECREE OF SALE.

It is, therefore, ordered and decreed by the Court that [unless this decree is satisfied within sixty days from this day,) said tract of land be sold by the Clerk and Master of this Court, [or, by Jonathan S. Lindsay, as special commissioner of this Court,] to the highest and best bidder, on a credit of six and twelve months, taking from the purchaser notes for the purchase-money drawing interest from the date of sale, with one or more solvent sureties thereto, and retaining a lien on the land as further security for the purchase-money. Said sale will be made in front of the Court House door in Knoxville [or, on the premises], and on the notice prescribed by law. [If the tract of land has not been already described in the decree, then add:] Said tract of land is described as follows: [Here insert the description given in the title papers, or in the surveyor's report.] [If the sale is in bar of redemption, then say:] And on the special application of the complainant, both in his bill and at the bar, that said land be sold on a credit and in bar of all right of redemption, said sale will be made on the credit aforesaid, and when made and confirmed by the Court, no right of redemption or repurchase shall exist in the defendants, or in any of their creditors, but the title of the purchaser shall be absolute. The Master [or, special commissioner,] will report his action in the premises to the next regular term of the Court, until which time all other matters are reserved.

§ 627. Duties of the Master in Reference to Sales.—The Master is required in making sales to exercise the utmost diligence, impartiality and good faith. It is a gross breach of his duty for him to do any act that will either directly or indirectly favor a purchaser to the detriment of the parties entitled to the proceeds; but he should earnestly endeavor to realize the highest possible price for the property he has been commissioned to sell. His principal duties in reference to sales are the following:

1. He Must Duly Advertise the Property. If the decree of sale specifies any particular method of advertising the property, this method should be strictly

21 Kirkman et al., ex parte, 3 Head, 518. In this case, the Court said in substance, that it was the Court that made the sale and not the next friend; that the next friend was only the medium through which the offer to purchase was made known to the Court; that the offer, being a very advantageous one, the Chancery Court could, and did, in the interest of the infants, properly accept it; and that the purchase accorded a good title. This case lays down the true doctrine for all cases of Chancery sales: the Court makes the sale; the Master merely reports, for the information of the Court and the parties, the best bid he can get for the property ordered to be sold; and on such report it is for the Court to say whether such bid will be accepted and the sale made. In the language of Judge Carothers, in the above case, "It is the sanction of the Court that makes the sale." Wood v. Morgan, 4 Hum., 371. See Hunt v. Long, 6 Pick., 445.
22 Inasmuch as Chancery sales are, generally, in bar of redemption, the Court should use every means to realize the highest price. This cannot always be done by a public sale, and it is often deemed more advantageous to the parties to sell by private contract. In such cases, the Court may, in its discretion, order the sale to be so made. Or, if a would-be purchaser has already been obtained who offers what is considered a high price, and the parties in interest desire the property to be sold to him, the Court may authorize such a sale: if persons under disability are interested, the Court will not, however, accept such a bid without a reference to the Master to inquire and report whether any better bid can be obtained, or whether it is to the manifest interest of all parties to accept the bid offered: if the Master reports in favor of the bid, the Court will, ordinarily, accept it.
23 When the court prays for a sale on a credit and in bar of redemption, the complainant is, ordinarily, entitled to have it so sold. Smith v. Taylor, 11 Lea, 738; Gibbs v. Putten, 2 Lea, 180; Hoyal v. Bryson, 6 Heisk, 139.
followed. The Master has no discretion to vary or disregard such method, but must implicitly obey the directions contained in the decree. In his advertisement he should give the names of the complainant and defendant, or parties interested, should briefly describe the land, and mention the time, place, and terms of sale.\(^\text{30}\)

If the decree does not give any special directions in reference to the method of advertising and selling the property, it must be advertised and sold in the manner prescribed by the statute.\(^\text{31}\) If the Master fail to sell according to the decree, or to the statute, he is guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable in damages; but the sale will not necessarily be either void or voidable.\(^\text{32}\) If the decree specify when the property shall be sold, the Master must strictly comply with such direction; if there be no such direction, the land should be advertised in time to sell it within three months after the decree of sale.\(^\text{33}\)

The advertisement for the sale may be in the following form:

CHANCERY SALE OF LAND.

In obedience to a decree of the Chancery Court at Knoxville, made in the case of John Doe vs. Richard Roe, et al., I will, on Saturday, June 27, 1891, at noon, in front of the Court House door in Knoxville, [or, on the premises,] sell to the highest and best bidder, the tract of land, [or, town lot,] in said decree described, being the farm on which Richard Roe now resides, in the 10th civil district of Knox county, containing 100 acres, more or less.\(^\text{34}\)

Said sale will be [for cash in hand, or,] on a credit of six and twelve months, [following the terms specified in the decree,] and in bar of the equity of redemption. Notes, drawing interest from the day of sale, with good personal security, will be required of the purchaser; and a lien will be retained on the property sold, as further security.

June 1, 1891.

2. He should Announce the Terms of the Sale. Before he begins to cry the property, the Master should distinctly and fully announce the terms of the sale; and state what amount, or per cent., of cash will be required, if any; on what time the sale is to be made, if on a credit, and when each installment of the purchase-money is to be paid; what security is required to the purchase-money notes, and when interest will begin to run on such notes.

3. He should Describe the Property to be Sold. If the land is described in the decree by metes and bounds, this description should be given on the day of the sale; or, if the decree refers to some other paper for a description, such paper must be followed in describing the land. The Master may, also, state, at the time and place of sale, in a general way, the character of the property to be sold; but he must carefully avoid making any statements, either in his advertisement or in his verbal proclamation, which will unduly enhance the value of the property, or mislead the purchaser. A Court of Equity will not allow any deception whatever to be practiced upon bidders.\(^\text{35}\)

4. He should Require the Purchaser to Comply with the Terms of Sale. When the property has been knocked down to the highest bidder, the Master should at once require him to comply with the terms of the sale, by paying the requisite amount of cash, if any cash is required, and by giving notes, with \(^{30}\) Code, § 2149. A description by metes and bounds is not only wholly unnecessary, but is downright oppressive when the costs of publication are thereby much increased. Chancellors should scan the costs of publications made by the Master, and see that no unnecessary costs are incurred.

\(^{34}\) Some Masters delay, their sales until the month before the term following the decree of sale. This should never be done, unless the party entitled to the proceeds of the sale so orders, in writing. If a sale is promptly made, it better enables the parties interested to obtain an advanced bidder, and thus prevent the property being sacrificed. The Master who makes such a delay is not only violating his duty, but, as a rule, is, also, injuring the parties interested in having the land bring its full price. Code, § 4474.

approved security, for the deferred payments, such notes to draw interest from date of sale.

If the purchaser of property sold at the Master’s sale fails to make payment, or comply with the terms of the sale, the Master may again expose the property to sale, on the same day; or, he may re-advertise it and re-sell it, according to the directions contained in the decree. If the Master is satisfied with the good faith and ability of the highest bidder, he may allow him a reasonable opportunity to comply with the terms of his bid. If, however, the Master has reason to doubt the good faith or ability of the bidder, he may demand an immediate compliance with the terms of the sale. The following is a FORM OF A NOTE FOR PURCHASE-MONEY.

$500.00

Knoxville, Tenn.

Six months after date, we, or either of us, promise to pay S. P. Evans, Clerk and Master of the Chancery Court at Knoxville, Tennessee, or his successor in office, the sum of five hundred dollars, with interest from date hereof. This note is given for, and is a lien on, the property purchased by the undersigned William Jones at a sale made by said Clerk and Master, under a decree pronounced by said Court, at the May term, 1881, in the case of John Doe vs. Richard Roe, et al., No. 618, on the Rule Docket of said Court.

Witness our hands this 20th day of June, 1881.

William Jones,

George Jones, (surety.)

Henry Jones, (surety.)

5. He should Make Due Report of the Sale to the Court. As soon as the property has been sold, the Master must make out and submit to the Court a report, showing the property sold, the person to whom sold, when sold, the amount of the sale, the principal and interest collected on the sale, if any; the number and amount of the notes, if any, and the names of the sureties thereon, and any other matter connected with the sale proper to be stated. This report should describe the land by metes and bounds, or other accurate description, unless such a description is contained in the decree of sale. The report should be filed before the first day of the term.

6. His Duty when the Purchaser Fails to Comply with the Terms of Sale. Courts of Chancery will not tolerate any trifling with its process, or with officers acting under its orders; and when the Master is selling property under a decree, whoever bids is conclusively presumed to bid in good faith, and the Court will, by attachment, compel a bidder to comply with his bid. If, therefore, a solvent report of sale; and, as a consequence, they are seldom, if ever reported, unless specially called for by a separate order of the Court, which will be made, of course, on motion.

There has, in the past, been too much negligence in describing lands sold, or ordered to be sold. In some cases, no description outside of a general and indefinite reference is contained either in the pleadings, decree of sale, or Master's report of sale; and in some cases, the Master has been ordered to make a deed to the purchaser, on the latter furnishing metes and bounds for such deed! Such practice should not be tolerated. 1. It results in property bringing a less price because of the uncertainty of description; 2. It sometimes requires subsequent litigation to settle the boundaries; and 3. False boundaries are sometimes given to the Master to be included in his deed to the purchaser. The Court should never sell lands except by metes and bounds, and should always require the description to be contained in the decree of sale, or in the report. The Master then knows what he is selling, the purchaser knows what he is buying, and if the files in the case are ever lost, the minutes of the Court will perpetuate the description. In aid of our land titles, the Courts should set a good example of carefulness and accuracy. In Sims vs. Cross, 10 Yerg., 460, it was decided that a decree was not void for uncertainty in the description of the land sold, inasmuch as the Master's report of the sale referred to a mortgage deed, which was on file, for a description. Nevertheless, the better and safer practice, is to incorporate the description in the decree, or in the report of sale.

36 If the Master negligently takes insufficient security, he will be held liable, and will, also, forfeit all fees and commissions due him in the cause. Dean v. Hale, 7 Lea, 613.

37 Ch. Rule, XIV, § 1; post, 1203.

38 This reasonable opportunity might be a day, or a week; but it should not be so extended as not to leave time for the Master to re-advertise the property. As to the powers of the Court over a bidder failing to comply with his bid, see, part § 642.

39 Irby v. Irby, 11 Lea, 165. In this case, the Master required Hubbard, the highest bidder, to comply with the terms of the sale in one hour. Hubbard announced that he would not be able to comply with the terms of the sale until the following Monday: and thereupon, the Master at once resold the property, with the understanding that, if Hubbard complied with the terms of the sale according to his promise, the sale would be confirmed to him. The Master then resold the property to other parties for a higher price, and reported the same to the Court. Hubbard failing to comply with the terms of the sale, the Court confirmed the sale to the next highest bidder. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the Master's action was entirely correct, and affirmed the Chancellor's decree. This case is an illustration of the fact that the highest bid is not always the best bid. The best bid is the highest bid that is in compliance with the terms of the sale.

40 Code, § 4045. This section states that the Master shall, also, report the aggregate fund on hand, the disbursements made, to whom and when, specifying the fees allowed to the Master and other officers of the Court. These matters cannot be included in a § 629. Confirmation of Sale, and Divestiture of Title.

§ 630. Form of a Decree Confirming a Sale.

§ 628. The Master's Report of Sale.—The property having been knocked down to the highest bidder, complying with the terms of sale, and he having duly executed and delivered his notes, or paid the money, or otherwise complied with the terms of sale, the Master will then make out his report of the sale, showing therein in what manner he has complied with the decree of sale, to whom he sold the property, when, and on what terms. In general, it is not necessary for the Master to show in his report all the details of advertising and giving notice, but a general statement that he did advertise, or did give the notice, required by law or the decree, is sufficient. The report may be in the third person, or in the first person; but a report in the first person carries with it a larger measure of personal responsibility. The following is a FORM OF A MASTER'S REPORT OF SALE.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al.

I respectfully report that, in obedience to a decree in this cause made at the last term, commanding me to sell the property therein mentioned, I advertised [and gave the notice] as required by the decree, and, on the 20th day of June, 1881, in front of the Court House door in Knoxville, [or, on the premises,] sold said property, at public sale, in bar of the equity of redemption, to William Jones, he being the highest and best bidder, at the price of one thousand dollars, for which he gave his two promissory notes, each for the sum of five hundred dollars, dated June 20th, 1881, [the day of sale.] due respectively, six and twelve months after date, and bearing interest from date, with George Jones and Henry Jones, as his sureties thereon. Said property so sold is that certain tract or lot of land in the 7th civil district of Knox county, Tenn., adjoining the lands of George Jones, Henry Jones and others, bounded as follows: Beginning on a black oak, Henry Jones' corner, [and giving the description in full by metes and bounds to beginning;] containing one hundred acres, more or less.

42 In such a case, a petition should be filed specifying the contempt, and due proceedings had thereon. See Chapter on Contempts, post, § 921.

43 Ch. Rule, XIV, § 1; § 1203, post. The Master should notify the first purchaser that the resale would be at his cost and risk, and he should also, make report of these facts to the Court.
Said notes show on their face that they were given for, and are a lien on, said land, and are hereeto exhibited.

And in obedience to said decree, and on due notice, I, also, sold, on the same day, the following personal property to the highest and best bidders:

1 Red cow to John Jones, for ........................................ $ 25.00
1 Threshing machine to Henry Brown, for ........................................ $93.00
1 Stock of goods, (See Exhibit A.) ................................. 327.00

I sold all of said personal property for cash, except the threshing machine, which I sold on a credit of six months, taking a note therefor with security and retaining a lien on the machine. Said money and note are in my possession, subject to the order of the Court.

Respectfully submitted, this June 20, 1881.

S. P. Evans, C. & M.

EXHIBIT "A" TO REPORT.

I sold the stock of goods as follows:

1 box of soap to John Brown, for ........................................ $1.00
1 plow to Henry Jones, for ........................................ 6.00
1 bolt of domestic to Kate Clark, for ........................................ 3.00

[And so on to the end.]

§ 629. Confirmation of Sale, and Divestiture of Title.—When the Master makes a sale of personalty, and reports the sale for the action of the Court, showing that the purchaser has complied with the terms of the sale, upon confirmation of such sale by the Court, the sale becomes complete, and the title to the personalty so sold becomes vested in him, without any formal decree divesting and vesting title, subject, however, to any lien that may be retained to secure the purchase-money, or for any other purpose. 2 In sales of realty, however, the mere confirmation of the report of sale does not of itself divest and vest the legal title: it only completes the sale. The legal title must be passed by decree, or by deed in pursuance of a decree, for that purpose. 3

When land is sold on a credit, the better practice, where the solvency of the purchaser and his sureties is doubtful, is merely to confirm the sale, thus reserving the legal title until the entire consideration money has been paid. 4 The more usual practice, however, is to confirm the sale in all cases, and divest and vest title by the decree of confirmation, reserving in the decree an express lien on the land to secure the payment of the unpaid purchase-money, and directing the Master to make the purchaser a deed, or give him a certified copy of the decree, upon the purchase-money being all paid.

Under certain circumstances, hereinafter shown, the Chancellor may confirm a sale of land at Chambers. 48

§ 630. Form of a Decree Confirming a Sale.—It is a prudent precaution to specify in the body of a decree of confirmation the names of all the parties who have any title to, or interest in, the land, as the papers in the cause may some day get lost, or mislaid, and the title thereby become clouded. The following is the form of such a decree, omitting the caption:

DECREE CONFIRMING A SALE.

This cause came on to be heard this day before Hon. William B. Staley, upon the whole record in the cause, including the decree of sale and the Master's report made in obedience thereto, which report is as follows:

[Here copy the report, in full.]

1 When the items are numerous they should be put in a schedule, and not entered in the body of the report.
2 Graves v. Keaton, 3 Cold., 13; Young v. Thompson, 2 Cold., 596. These were cases wherein slaves had been sold under statutory authority. Where the Master is ordered to sell goods, wares, and merchandise, or other personalty, as a receiver, unless the decree otherwise directs, his sale would be final without any confirmation by the Court. In Moore v. Watson, 4 Cold., 64, where a steamboat and her appendages were sold by the Master, the biddings were opened, and the sale confirmed to the original purchasers, at an advanced bid; and after this, but at the same time, this second sale was set aside, the biddings reopened, and an advanced bid received. This sale was made under an agreement, the terms of which do not appear. To prevent confusion, the decree ordering the Master to sell personalty should specify on its face whether the sale would require confirmation by the Court, or not.
4 Webster v. Hill, 3 Sneed, 333; Bryant v. McCallum, 4 Heisk., 317.
5 See, post, § 772.
6 The statute requires this report to be embodied in a decree to be entered on the minutes of the Court. Code, § 4047.
§ 631. MASTER'S REPORT OF SALE.

And said report, being unexcepted to, is by the Court, on motion of the complainant [or defendant, or purchaser,] in all things confirmed.

It is, therefore, ordered, adjudged, and decreed, by the Court that all the right, title and interest, of the defendants Richard Roe, Roland Roe, Robert Roe and Romeo Roe, and of all the other parties to this suit, in and to said tract of land, in both law and Equity, be divested out of them and each of them, and be vested in the said purchaser, William Jones, as an indefeasible inheritance in fee simple forever [or, for and during the natural life of the Master, or, for the case may be;] subject to the lien aforesaid for the unpaid purchase-money. And when said purchase-money shall have been fully paid, the Clerk and Master will make, acknowledge for registration, and deliver to said William Jones, a deed conveying said tract of land to him, as aforesaid, or will give him a duly certified copy of this decree, as a muniment of title, at his election, he paying the legal fees therefor. On application of the purchaser a writ of possession will be issued to put him into the possession of said tract of land.

[Then ordinarily follow some directions relating to the distribution of the proceeds, or some other matters.]

§ 632. When a Party May Have a Sale Set Aside.—A party may have a sale set aside whenever the property has not sold for a fair price, and there has been: (1) some failure of the Master to advertise the land properly; or (2) to sell at the right time, or at the right place; or (3) the Master has been guilty of some other misconduct or irregularity, injurious to the sale; or (4) the purchaser has been guilty of some misconduct tending to diminish the price, or discourage bidding; or (5) others have been guilty of combinations, or other acts injuriously affecting the sale; or (6) the weather was so exceedingly inclement, or the waters so high, or in some other way bidders were prevented, or deterred, from attending the sale; or (7) for some other reason, not the fault of the party complaining, a fair sale was not had. Mere inadequacy of price, however, without more, will not justify a Court in setting aside a sale, unless an advance bid be tendered. The only test a Court can have of the value of property sold at a forced sale, is the price it will bring on due notice, at a public sale fairly conducted. 7

If the property has sold for so good a price that a resale would probably avail nothing, the Court may disregard all irregularities in the sale, especially where persons under disability are concerned. 8 The fullness of the price in such cases, however, should be made affirmatively to appear, by reference to the Master, or otherwise.

§ 632. When a Purchaser May Have the Sale Set Aside.—A purchaser may have the sale set aside at any time before the title is vested in him and the term passed, if (1) the parties have no title to the property, or (2) if their title is seriously clouded, 9 or (3) if the property is not such in quality, size, 10 situation, character or value, as it was described to be, or (4) if from some want of necessary parties, or other fatal defect in the proceedings, or in the jurisdiction of the Court, the sale would be void, 11 or (5) if, for any other reason the purchaser would not get such a title, or property of such quality, situation, dimensions or value, as he had a right to expect, or as was authoritatively represented at, or before, the sale, 12 or (6) if, after the sale and before confirmation, the property should be destroyed or otherwise be materially injured, or greatly impaired in value. 13

But a purchaser will not be relieved unless he apply in due season, and is 6 It is a prudent precaution to include all the parties, when some are specified.

7 Bryant v. McCallum, 4 Heisk., 511; Swan v. Newman, 3 Heisk., 289. But a void sale will not be confirmed, if the sale be attacked. Andrews v. Andrews, 7 Heisk., 234
8 Red v. Fitz, 2 Hum., 328; Deaderick v. Smith, 6 Hum., 138.
9 If the sale is by the acre, the purchaser is entitled to an abatement for the deficiency. Myers v. Lindsay, 5 Lea, 331. But where the land is sold in gross, not by the acre, and without any stipulation as to quantity, and the boundaries are correctly given, the purchaser takes the risk as to quantity, unless there be fraud, or so great a deficiency as to create the presumption of fraud. Moses v. Wallace, 7 Lea, 413. As a correlative of this rule, if a purchaser by the acre, by mistake obtains a substantial surplus, over what he supposes he is buying, and the other party supposes he is selling, such purchaser will be compelled to pay for, or return, such surplus. State v. Kelar, 11 Lea, 399.
11 Pearson v. Johnson, 2 Sneed, 580.
12 Eakin v. Herbert, 4 Cold., 119; Childress v. Hurt, 2 Swan, 487; Graves v. Keaton, 3 Cold., 8.
unaffected by negligence or other inequitable conduct. If he buys, or allows the sale to be confirmed to him, with knowledge of the facts set out in his petition for relief, he will not be released.\(^{14}\)

There is one prevailing rule running through all our Reports, and that is, that the Court will not set aside, for irregularities merely, the sale of an infant’s estate, where it is advantageous to the infant,\(^{15}\) provided the purchaser will get a good title.\(^{16}\)

The rights and liabilities of purchasers will be considered in subsequent sections.\(^{17}\)

§ 633. Procedure in Setting Aside Sales.—When the Master reports that he has sold the land in pursuance of the decree, or has advertised the sale as required by law, or by the decree, the Court will presume that his report is true; and the truth of the report cannot be put in issue by an exception to the effect that the Master did not advertise as required,\(^{18}\) or did not do any other thing as reported, unless there be some evidence in the report itself, or exhibited thereto, or elsewhere on file in the cause, contradicting the report.\(^{19}\) Inasmuch as such contradicting evidence seldom appears of record, an exception to a report of sale will seldom lie; and, as a consequence, a report of sale must usually be assailed by a sworn petition setting out in detail the grounds on which the sale is attacked.\(^{20}\) On such a petition being filed, the Court may order proof to be taken summarily, or may refer the matter to the Master, or if the Master’s conduct is called in question, may appoint a special commissioner to report on the truth of the petition.

When a purchaser seeks an abatement of the purchase-money, or to have an encumbrance removed, or to be relieved from his purchase entirely, or to have his rights under his purchase enforced, he should proceed by petition, if the cause is still in Court.\(^{21}\) Being already a quasi party to the suit, and entitled to be heard in any matter growing out of his purchase, an original bill is not only unnecessary, but improper, if the cause be pending.

A purchaser may file his petition to be relieved from a sale, in whole or in part, at any time before a conveyance is executed,\(^{22}\) but after the sale has been confirmed, and the term of the Court at which confirmation was had is passed, a sale can only be set aside for fraud, accident, mistake, or other sufficient ground.\(^{23}\)

A petition attacking a Chancery sale must be positive in its averments. Information alone is insufficient to set the machinery of the Court in motion. A party who assails a judicial proceeding must ascertain the real facts before filing his petition, and must be able to allege those facts with definiteness and positivity.\(^{24}\)

\(^{23}\) Spence v. Armour, 9 Heisk., 167. There is some conflict in our Reports as to the right of a purchaser to come in for relief by petition in the original cause, after the confirmation of the sale. Foster v. Bradford, 1 Tenn. Ch., 402; Spence v. Armour, 9 Heisk., 167. The true rule would seem to be this: If the cause is still in Court, the purchaser, being a quasi party, has the right to relief by petition, even though such petition be not filed until after confirmation; but if the cause be out of Court, the purchaser must obtain relief by original bill. Foster v. Bradford, 1 Tenn. Ch., 402; Spence v. Armour, 9 Heisk., 167. If a petition contained sufficient merits, prayed for process, and brought all necessary parties before the Court, it would have doubt be entertained, as in the nature of an original bill. It would seem from Spence v. Armour, 9 Heisk., 167, that a cause is out of Court, as to the purchaser, after the sale has been confirmed, and the term of the Court, at which the confirmation is had, has passed.

\(^{24}\) Foster v. Bradford, 1 Tenn. Ch., 400.
§ 634. When Biddings will be Opened.—Inasmuch as a sale\(^1\) of land by the Master is conditioned upon its confirmation by the Court, and inasmuch as the chief aim of the Court is to obtain as great a price for the property as possible, it is the regular practice of the Court to "open the biddings:" that is, to allow a person to offer a larger price than the estate was originally sold for by the Master, and upon such offer being made, and the terms of the original sale complied with, to direct a re-sale of the property.\(^2\) Biddings will be opened at any time before a confirmation of the Master’s report of sale, upon proper application being made, and a tender of an advance of at least ten per cent.\(^3\) The Court will exercise more liberality in opening biddings when persons under disability are interested in the property sold, than when all the parties are adults and \textit{sui juris}.\(^4\) But, inasmuch as the sale is made for the benefit of the parties to the suit, and is under their control, the Court will not, when they are all \textit{sui juris} and content with a sale, open the biddings at the instance of a third party who has no interest in the land, or in its proceeds, but merely wants to purchase the property.\(^5\) Where, however, there are parties under disability

---

\(^1\) Although usually termed a \textit{sale}, the proceedings before the Master are really not a sale, or at the very utmost only a conditional sale. In \textit{Wood v. Morgan}, 4 \textit{Hum.}, 371, Judge Green says, "There is no sale until the offer made to the Master is sanctioned by the Court and confirmed." * * * How can that be a sale which is not obligatory upon the parties? It is a bid, an offer by the purchaser, and if the Court is satisfied with it, it is obligatory upon the parties made and being confirmed by the Court, vests in the purchaser a right to the property." So, \textit{Kirkman \textit{ex parte}, 3 \textit{Head}}, 518; \textit{Armstrong v. McClure}, 4 \textit{Heisk.}, 80. See, ante, §§ 659-633.

\(^2\) The implied contract of sale by the Master is, that the sale is to be confirmed unless, (1) the Court has good reason to be dissatisfied with it; or (2) the purchaser has good reason to be dissatisfied with it; and the purchaser has no more right to complain of the Court for accepting a higher bid, than has the Court the right to complain of the purchaser for wanting to be relieved of his purchase, when he fails to get a title, or has other sufficient ground. And as to the policy of opening biddings, the author has long been profoundly convinced of its justice and wisdom. Nearly all of the complaints are made by Masters and purchasers: the Masters complain because of the increased trouble of a second sale without a corresponding increase of compensation, and the purchasers complain because of their disappointment in not getting the property at their bid, after complying with the terms of the sale. It is, also urged that the fact that the biddings are liable to be opened often deters bidding at a Master’s sale. There is truth in all these objections, but the question is not whether the practice is free from objections, or whether it does not occasionally work unjustly or injuriously, but whether it is not, in the main, preferable to the practice of making Master’s sales absolute. If the latter practice prevailed, it would soon result in a statute making all Chancery sales subject to redemption, because such sales would so often be mere ruthless sacrifices of property, and would so often make the debtor the victim of a merciless creditor, or of combinations among bidders, that the cry of the people against such outrage, injustice and oppression would penetrate to the halls of legislation. It is safe to say, that the practice of opening biddings has these most beneficial results: 1st, it enables the owner of the land to secure the highest possible bidder; 2d, it prevents, or greatly thwarts, combinations among bidders; 3d, it enables the Court more effectually to remedy irregularities at the Master’s sale: 4th, it greatly increases the power of the Court to do justice both to the bidder and the owner, and 5th, in a great many cases, prevents property from being sold at grossly inadequate prices. If biddings were not opened, and redemption not allowed, Courts would often become mere destroyers of the estates of debtors. On this general subject, see \textit{Atkinson v. Murfree}, 1 \textit{Tenn. Ch.}, 51. Besides, a bidder has no right to complain: 1st, because the opening of the biddings is a part of the implied contract under which he bids; 2d, he runs no risk until the sale is confirmed, and if the property is destroyed it is not his loss; and 3d, he has until confirmation to investigate the title he will get, and to ascertain whether the property is what it was represented to be. \textit{Atkinson v. Murfree}, 1 \textit{Tenn. Ch.}, 53.

\(^3\) \textit{Click v. Burris}, 4 \textit{Heisk.}, 539; \textit{Atkinson v. Murfree}, 1 \textit{Tenn. Ch.}, 51; 2 \textit{Dan. Ch. Pr.}, 1286. Where, however, the amount of the bid is large, say over $10,000, the Court may open the biddings in order to obtain an advance as low as five per cent. 2 \textit{Dan. Ch. Pr.}, 1287. And when the amount of the bid is small, say under $10, the Court may refuse to open the biddings even on an offer of ten per cent.

\(^4\) \textit{Glenn v. Glenn}, 7 \textit{Heisk.}, 367.

\(^5\) \textit{Bright v. Bright}, 12 \textit{Lea}, 630; \textit{Mayo v. Harding}, 3 \textit{Tenn. Ch.}, 237; 2 \textit{Dan. Ch. Pr.}, 1288. The Court will, however, allow a creditor to file a petition to have biddings opened, even when all the parties to the suit are content with the sale, the creditor having a judgment against the owner of the land sold, and execution on his judgment having been returned \textit{nula bona}. \textit{Childress v. Hurt}, 2 \textit{Swan}, 488.
interested in the proceeds of the land, the Court will allow a stranger to petition for an order opening the biddings, when the interest of such parties will be promoted thereby. It is not necessary for a party to make an advanced bid; any one has the right to do so, and any person interested in the proceeds of the sale, although not a party, may file a petition to have the biddings opened. The proper time for opening biddings is before the Master’s report of sale has been confirmed absolutely: after that, increase of price alone, however large, is not sufficient to induce the Court to grant the application, although it is a strong auxiliary argument when there are other grounds. After confirmation and the close of the term, the purchaser is to be regarded as the owner of the estate according to his purchase, and his title will not be disturbed by opening the biddings, except in case of fraud, accident, mistake, or the existence of a relation of trust; and then only on an original bill, setting forth the equities relied on, and making the proper parties and the proper prayers, so that issues of law and fact may be regularly made and determined.

On applications to open biddings, the Court should so rule as to secure the highest possible price for the land it sells, provided that such ruling does not (1) unduly delay the progress of the suit, (2) does not encourage or reward negligence, on the part of those interested in bidding, or procuring bidders, and (3) does not tend to generally discourage bidding at the time and place of the original sale by the Master. The policy of the law is to make the original sale by the Master a finality, and not an experiment; and the reservation of the right to set aside such a sale, and to open the biddings, is a mere safeguard and a precaution against circumstances and irregularities tending to lessen or prevent due competition; and an offer to advance the reported bid ten per cent. is deemed by the Court presumptive evidence of some such circumstance or irregularity.

§ 635. When the Master May Open the Biddings.—Where an advance bid of as much as ten per cent. of the original bid is made in vacation, the Clerk and Master, without any order or decree authorizing him, may accept such advance bid, and reopen the biddings on such sale, and receive additional bids, and hold the biddings open for other advance bids to some day by him designated. He must give the purchaser at the original sale and the parties or their Solicitors of record, notice of his reopening of the biddings, and report his action to the Court for confirmation. But this action and authority of the Clerk and Master in no way abridge the right and jurisdiction of the Chancellor to reopen the biddings on such terms as he may deem right. The proceedings in the Master’s office under this section should conform substantially to those set out in the following section.

§ 636. How Biddings are Opened by the Court.—The procedure in Court in opening biddings is as follows: 1. A written offer must be made to advance the bid reported by the Master at least ten per cent., and to comply with all the terms of the sale. 2. If the sale is for cash, wholly or partly, the proposed bidder must deposit with the Master the whole amount of cash required by his bid, including the additional per cent. 3. If the sale is on time, in whole, or in part, and secured notes are required, he must execute the notes and secure them in strict compliance with the terms of the decree of sale, dating the 8 Houston v. Aycock, 5 Sneed, 406; Spence v. Armour, 9 Heisk., 169. But if an application to open the biddings before confirmation was prevented by surprise, accident or mistake, or by the fraud of the purchaser, the Court will set aside the confirmation, and allow the application, if regular in all other respects.

notes back to the day of the Master's sale. 72 4. The Master's certification of the sufficiency of the security tendered must be written under the notes; or the sureties may sign the written offer to advance the bid, and join in the offer to comply with the terms of sale, and the Master may certify their sufficiency beneath their signatures. 5. A petition must then be presented to the Court, by some person interested in the proceeds of the sale, reciting the foregoing facts, and exhibiting the foregoing papers, and praying the Court to open the biddings, and keep them open until some set day and hour. 6. Reasonable notice of the time, when such petition will be presented, and the motion to open the biddings made, must be given to the purchaser at the Master's sale. 14 7. On all the preceding steps being duly taken, the Court will make an order opening the biddings, and directing them to stand open until a day and hour named, when they will be closed, and directing the Master to start the bidding with the advanced bid specified in the petition.

If, however, the purchaser at the original sale consent, and all of the parties consent, the biddings may be opened without the filing of any petition, or the execution of any notes, the order showing on its face such consent. The Court, should, however, when any of the parties are under disability, be careful not to open biddings, by consent of the purchaser, until the proposed advance bidder has secured his bid by adequate security in a binding form, otherwise a good sale may be lost through the insolvency of the advance bidder.

When no objection is made; and none appears to the Court, the Court may allow the biddings to be opened, informally, without any petition, motion, or order, all parties in interest, including the purchaser, consenting; and the Master, in such case, may surrender to the original purchaser his notes, or money, and substitute for his name, in his original report of sale, the name of the new purchaser, acting throughout as though such new purchaser had been the purchaser at the original sale. When proper caution is exercised, and all parties consent, no objection can be seen to this practice; it facilitates the dispatch of business, saves costs, and works injury to no one.

§ 637. Forms Incident to the Opening of Biddings.—The following forms may be of benefit to the young Solicitor, and to the Master, when urgency prevents due deliberation in drawing the required paper:

PETITION TO OPEN BIDDINGS.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al.
In Chancery at Knoxville, Tenn.

To the Hon. William B. Staley, Chancellor:

Your petitioner, Richard Roe, respectfully shows to your Honor that John Gibbs, a responsible man, offers, in writing, to give eleven hundred dollars for the tract of land sold by the Master to William Jones for one thousand dollars, under the interlocutory decree rendered in this cause at the May term, 1881. Said Gibbs tenders sufficient securities, and offers to fully comply with the terms of sale set out in said decree. His said offer, marked Exhibit A, is herewith filed, and prayed to be taken as a part of this petition. The said William Jones has notice of the said offer, and of this petition.

Your petitioner prays that said sale to said William Jones be set aside, and that the biddings for said property be opened.

State of Tennessee,
County of Knox.

George Andrews, Solicitor.

12 The reason of this is, that in contemplation of law, the sale is a mere continuation of the Master's sale, and relates to it. Besides, the rights of creditors, or other parties entitled to the proceeds of the sale would be injuriously affected if the notes were dated on the day of re-sale. Atkisson v. Murfree, 1 Tenn. Ch., 57.

13 Where any party is under disability, the Court will allow a stranger, or the proposed bidder himself, to present the petition, regarding him as a quasi next friend.

14 As the purchaser is a quasi party as to all matters connected with his bid, he is not so entitled to actual notice that it would be error to open biddings without such notice, if the service of notice would be difficult, or cause injurious delay. Nevertheless, the Court should always require actual notice to be given the purchaser, not only to enable him the more effectually to protect his rights, but also to enable him to bid for the property at the opened sale.

15 Applications to open biddings, made in good faith, should be favorably received and liberally acted upon, the object of the Court always being to realize the best possible price for the property. An applicant should not be repelled merely because his application is not in due form, but the Court should give such directions as will enable him to conform to its practice, and secure the right. Lucas v. Moore, 2 Lea, 7.

16 Atkisson v. Murfree, 1 Tenn. Ch., 57.
Richard Roe makes oath that the statements in his foregoing petition are true.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, this July 6, 1881.

W. A. Galbraith, D. C. & M.

This petition must be filed by a person having an interest in the land, or in the proceeds thereof. If the parties to the suit are satisfied with the sale, and those interested in its proceeds are content, a mere stranger has no right to have the biddings opened, merely because he, or some one else desires to own the property. Any one, however, may make an offer to raise the biddings.\(^{17}\)

EXHIBIT “A” TO THE PETITION OF RICHARD ROE.

John Doe, vs. Richard Roe, et al. } In the Chancery Court, at Knoxville.

To the Chancellor:

The undersigned, John Gibbs, hereby offers to give eleven hundred dollars for the tract of land sold in this cause, on June 20, 1881, to William Jones, for one thousand dollars; and also, offers to fully comply with all the terms of sale specified in the decree of sale; and he tends the sureties named below that he will fully perform this offer, if accepted by the Court.

July 6, 1881.

If the above offer of John Gibbs is accepted, we hereby bind ourselves to sign the purchase-money notes as his sureties; and we hereby guarantee that he will fully comply with his foregoing offer, if it is accepted by the Court.

July 6, 1881.

I hereby certify that the above named Frank Brown and Robert Roe are good and sufficient sureties for the performance of said offer.

June 2, 1881.

Frank Brown, Robert Roe.

S. P. Evans, C. & M.

If good sureties were not required, the Court might release a bidder whose bid was well secured, and accept a bidder in lieu who would be unable to comply with the terms of the sale, and thus lose the substance in grasping after a shadow.

The decree opening the biddings may be in the following form:

DECREE OPENING BIDDINGS.

The defendant, Richard Roe, this day presented his petition, and the exhibit thereto, praying that the sale of land reported by the Master to have been made to William Jones for one thousand dollars be set aside, and that the biddings on said land be opened;

And it duly appearing from said petition, and exhibit, that John Gibbs has filed a written offer to bid eleven hundred dollars for said tract of land, and that he has tendered good and sufficient security for his said bid; and it also duly appearing that said William Jones has been duly notified that said petition would this day be presented to the Court for action thereon;

On consideration of the premises, it is ordered by the Court, that the said sale to William Jones be set aside, and that the biddings on said tract of land be opened, and kept open by the Master at his office until noon, on July 26, 1891, until which time he will receive bids for said tract of land on the terms prescribed in the decree of sale, beginning with the said bid of John Gibbs, exhibited to said petition. The Master will close the biddings at the hour herein specified unless there be more than one person then bidding, in which case he will cry the sale until the highest, last and best bid shall be obtained. He will report the person making such bid as the purchaser, on his complying with the terms of sale: said report will be made to the present [or next] term of this Court.

It must be kept steadily in view, that the opening of the biddings is a mere continuation of the former sale,\(^{18}\) and that, as a consequence, the notes executed, and the rights of the bidder, bear date even with the date of the original sale, and relate thereto, even when it will result in a note being overdue when executed.

\(^{17}\) See, ante, §§ 634-636.

\(^{18}\) A re-sale takes place when the original sale is, for any reason, entirely set aside. On a re-sale, the proceedings are de novo.
§ 638. Proceedings when Biddings are Opened.—When the biddings are opened, the purchaser is entirely discharged from his purchase; and if he has paid a deposit, or any part of the purchase-money, into Court, he will be entitled to have it paid back to him. If he is the purchaser of more lots than one, and the biddings are ordered to be opened as to some of these lots, the purchaser will be allowed to have the biddings opened, and to be discharged from his purchase, as to all the lots which he has purchased, it being considered but reasonable, that if he became the purchaser of a subsequent lot, in consequence of his having been declared the best bidder upon the prior lot, he should, if he is deprived of the purchase of the first lot, have the option of retaining or surrendering the subsequent lot. The purchaser, in order to entitle himself to such an indulgence, should appear upon the motion to open the biddings, and produce an affidavit that he had bid for the subsequent lots in consequence of his having been declared the best bidder for the first lot.19

On the biddings being opened, the Master will receive bids as required by the opening order, and will continue to receive them until the hour fixed for closing them. It is a safe and convenient practice to require each bidder to put his bid in writing, thus:

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al.

Opened Biddings.

The undersigned bid the amounts opposite our respective names for the property ordered to be sold in this cause:

</tbody>
</table>

At the time and place specified for the closing of the biddings in the order opening the biddings, the Master will close the biddings by accepting and reporting the highest bidder complying with the terms of sale. If, at the hour of closing the sale, there be more than one bidder, the Master should ery the property until the highest bid has been obtained. When the sale has been made, the purchaser will, thereupon, pay the amount of his bid, or execute notes therefor, with the required security, or otherwise in all things comply with the requirements of the decree of sale. The Master will then report the sale.

THE MASTER’S REPORT OF SALE ON OPENED BIDDINGS.

John Doe,
vs.
Richard Roe, et al.

I respectfully report that, in obedience to an order made in this cause opening the biddings upon the property sold herein, on June 20, 1881, to William Jones, I kept said biddings open until July 26, 1881, at noon, when I sold said property, in bar of the equity of redemption, to John Gibbs, he being the highest and best bidder, at the price of twelve hundred dollars, for which he gave his two promissory notes, each for the sum of six hundred dollars, dated June 20, 1881, [the date of the original sale,] due respectively six and twelve months after date, bearing interest from date, with Frank Brown and Richard Roe as his sureties thereon. Said property so sold, is that certain tract [or, lot,] of land in the 7th civil district of Knox county, Tenn., [describing it as in the original report.]

Said notes show on their face that they were given for, and are a lien on, said land, and are hereto exhibited.

Respectfully submitted, July 26, 1881.

After confirmation, there must be equitable circumstances, as well as an advanced bid, to justify the Court in re-opening the biddings.\textsuperscript{23} If the report of the second sale has not been confirmed, the biddings will be re-opened on slghter grounds than after confirmation.\textsuperscript{24} The Court will also relax the rules when the interests of persons under disability will be promoted by re-opening biddings.\textsuperscript{25} After the biddings have once been re-opened, and a public re-sale had, the Court may, upon another offer of an advanced bid of ten per cent., confirm the sale to the reported bidder, with his consent, at the new advance.\textsuperscript{26}

The course of procedure to re-open biddings is the same as on a proceeding to open biddings, except that more particularity and a stricter compliance with the rules of practice in such cases should be required.

\textbf{PURCHASERS' DUTIES, RIGHTS, AND LIABILITIES.}

\textbf{\S\ 640. The Duties of a Purchaser.}—While Chancery sales are conclusive upon all the parties to the suit, and, as a result, almost universally confer a good title upon the purchaser, nevertheless there is no warranty of title,\textsuperscript{1} except in sales for partition; and it is consequently incumbent on a purchaser to ascertain (1) that the Court has jurisdiction under the pleadings to make the sale, (2) that the parties to the suit have a good title to the property, and (3) that all of the persons having an interest in the property, legal or equitable, are duly in Court. If these three requisites exist, the purchaser will acquire a good title, even though there be error in the decree,\textsuperscript{2} or though the decree be reversed on a writ of error.\textsuperscript{3}

A purchaser is just as much bound, in law and in morals, to investigate the title of property about to be sold by a Court, and the regularity and validity of the proceedings under which it is to be sold, as he is bound, in case an agent offers property for sale, to inquire into the title of his principal, and the regularity, validity and extent of his authority to bind his principal.\textsuperscript{4}

\textbf{\S\ 641. The Rights of a Purchaser.}—The purchaser at a Chancery sale becomes a party by virtue of the Master's report of sale, and may make any \textsuperscript{1} When land is sold at a forced sale, the maxim \textit{caveat emptor} applies; and the Court has no power to guarantee a good title to the purchaser. Irby \textit{v.} Irby, 11 Lea, 165; and cases there cited.

\textsuperscript{2} Dan. Ch. Pr., 1276, note.

\textsuperscript{3} If, however, a decree confirming a sale be appealed from and reversed, such reversal will nullify the sale, and entitle the purchaser to the purchase-money by him paid.

\textsuperscript{4} There is no hardship in requiring a purchaser to inquire (1) into the jurisdiction of the Court over the subject-matter, (2) into the jurisdiction of the Court over the parties, and (3) into the title of the parties to the land. Whoever buys land, at a private sale from a private person, is bound to see to it that the title is good; and this investigation he makes, or has made, at his own expense. Why then should not a purchaser at a Chancery sale investigate the title to the land he has bought, before the sale is confirmed to him? or at least before he pays the purchase-money? Hence, it is a settled rule in Chancery, that a person purchasing under a decree of the Court, must not only see that the parties to the suit have a good title to the land sold, but that the sale is made according to the decree. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1275; 2 Barb. Ch. Pr., 529. But the purchaser is not charged with the burden of investigating the merits of the controversy; if the Court has jurisdiction to sell, and the parties to the sale have title, the purchaser need inquire no further. motion, or file any petition, necessary to protect his rights, or relieve himself from liabilitites growing out of the sale.6

The purchaser is entitled to have all tax liens, mortgage liens, trust-deed liens, vendors' liens, life estates, or other encumbrances on the property, removed, or else discharged out of the purchase-money paid by him into Court,6 and he has the right to have a reference to the Master to ascertain whether a good and clear title can be made to him; and if it appears that such title cannot be made, he will not be compelled to complete the purchase.7

The purchaser is entitled to rents only from the confirmation of the sale by the Court;8 and he is not entitled to the possession of the property purchased until confirmation. If he take possession before confirmation, and the sale be set aside, he will be deemed a trespasser, and held liable for mesne profits.9 He is not liable for any loss or injury by fire, or otherwise, which may happen to the property before the sale to him is confirmed.10

If a purchaser desires to substitute another person in his stead, the Court will, on motion, make an order to that effect, or may allow the Master to make the change in his report.11 No such substitution should, however, be made where the substitute has paid anything for the privilege, and the Court may, and ordinarily should, require an affidavit that there was no under bargain, and no consideration paid by the new purchaser, to stand in the other's shoes.12 If any such consideration appears, the Court may either require the new purchaser to take the property at the additional price, or may order a re-sale.18

A purchaser may, on petition, be relieved from his purchase before confirmation, if he shows that he will not get a good title, or that there is a material deficiency in quantity, or that material misrepresentations were made in the advertisement, or at the sale, as to the value or character of the property, or that, for any other reason, it would be inequitable to compel him to complete the purchase by payment of the amount of his bid.14 He will not, however, be relieved after confirmation, because of an encumbrance of which he had knowledge at the time of his bid, and which he then supposed the estate would be able to pay.15 But when he has been prevented from applying for relief, before confirmation, by misrepresentation, surprise, accident, mistake, or the fraud of persons interested in the sale, he will be discharged from his purchase, even after the sale has been confirmed;16 provided the purchase-money has not been paid and disbursed.17

A purchaser has the right to appeal from any judgment rendered against him, and has also the right to a writ of error.18

§ 642. The Liabilities of a Purchaser.—A sale of real estate by the Master is, whether so stated or not, conditional upon its confirmation; and, until such confirmation, may be set aside, either because of fraud, accident or mistake, or some irregularity in the proceedings, or because a higher bid has been obtained. Hence, no sale becomes absolute until confirmation and the adjournment of the Court, or the lapse of thirty days after confirmation in case the term lasts longer. A bidder bids with this understanding, express or implied, and has no just right to complain, if, for sufficient reason, the sale to him by the Master is set aside by the Court.

When a person bids at a Chancery sale, he thereby submits himself to the jurisdiction of the Court as to all matters connected with such bid; and if his bid is accepted by the Master before it is withdrawn, and is reported and confirmed, the Court may by attachment compel the purchaser to complete his purchase, by paying the purchase-money; or may order a re-sale of the property and issue an execution against him and his sureties, if any, for any loss caused by the re-sale: in such case, however, the order of re-sale should only be made after notice to him that the re-sale will be at his risk. A person who makes an advance bid may, also, be held liable in the same way, and to the same extent.

If the purchaser fail to make payment or comply with the terms of sale, the Master may again expose the property to sale on the same day, or on a subsequent day, and after giving due notice of the time and place according to the directions contained in the decree; or the Master may report the facts to the Court, which last would be the proper course, if the purchaser is a solvent person, and his bid higher than could probably be obtained on a re-sale.

Where two or more persons purchase one lot, they must purchase and pay as tenants in common, and will not be allowed to pay their proportions separately, because of the confusion which might ensue.

§ 643. Judgment on Purchase Money Notes.—Where a purchaser at a Chancery sale fails to pay all the purchase-money, the Court may, on motion, and without notice to the purchaser or his sureties, order the land to be resold for cash, and in bar of the equity of redemption; and if any balance remains due after the confirmation of such sale, the Court may award an execution against the purchaser and his sureties for such balance.

The following is the form of a judgment on a purchase-money note, omitting the caption:

JUDGMENT ON A PURCHASE-MONEY NOTE.

In this case, on this 6th day of July, 1891, before the Hon. S. A. Rodgers, sitting by interchange with the Chancellor, came A. T. Marshall, the Clerk and Master of this Court, and produced, in open Court, the following note:

[Here set it out in full.]

And moved the Court for judgment thereon, in his name for the use of those entitled to the proceeds thereof, and for the enforcement of the lien specified on the face of said note, and in the decrees in this cause.

And it appearing to the Court from an inspection of said note [and the credits thereon,] that the sum of eight hundred and sixty-four dollars and twenty cents, principal and interest, is due on said note, it is ordered and decreed by the Court that said A. T. Marshall, as Clerk and Master of this Court, for the use of those entitled, recover of said Richard Roe and his surety, Robert Roe, said sum of eight hundred and sixty-four dollars and twenty cents, and the costs of this motion. And it further appearing from an inspection of said note and of the record in this cause, that said note was given for the purchase-money of a tract of land sold in this cause, and that a lien was retained on said land to secure the payment of said note and said purchase-money, said land being described as follows: A tract of one hundred and sixty acres, more or less, lying in the 8th civil district of Sevier county, on the East Fork of Pigeon River, 19 The confirmation only completes the contract of sale, and does not pass the legal title: this must be done by a deed, or deed of conveyance, or by the Master's deed, made by order of the Court, Webster v. Hill, 3 Sneed, 339; Code, §§ 4103-4105.

21 Allen v. East, 4 Heisk., 308.

22 Sharp v. Hess, 1 Tenn. Leg. Rep., 23. It is a contempt of Court for a bidder to trifle with the Master, or for any other person to interfere with a Master's sale, in any way. A bidder will not, however, be attached for contempt until the sale has been confirmed to him, and he has failed, or refused, to pay the purchase-money. Payment cannot be resisted on the ground of irregularity in the sale, after the sale has been confirmed by the Court, and the time for the parties to appeal has expired. 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1281-1284.

23 Allen v. East, 4 Bax., 308.

26 Mann v. Payne, 9 Heisk., 672; Mosby v. Hunt, 9 Heisk., 675. An execution is frequently ordered to issue before the confirmation of the sale, but such a practice is irregular, and may prove oppressive in case the bid on the land is raised higher than the decree. In such a case, a surety may be greatly injured by the unnecessary sale of his property under the execution.
§ 644. Payment by the Clerk and Master of Money and Property in his Hands.—All the money and other property in the hands of the Clerk and Master received by virtue of his office are Court funds, except his own fees and commissions; and he holds them in trust, under his bond and oath of office, for those thereunto entitled; and it is his duty to have such money and other property always on hand ready to be paid over or delivered to the party entitled, his agent or attorney, or to his Solicitor, upon application, according to the directions and decrees of the Court. When the Clerk and Master has doubts about the propriety of paying over money in any given case, and the parties or their Solicitors disagree in reference thereto, he should bring the matter to the attention of the Court.

Money in the hands of the Clerk of a Court is in custodia legis, and subject to the orders and decrees of the Court; and cannot be lawfully paid to any one except by order of the Court. It can be reached by attachment or garnishment only by suit against the party entitled to it.

In subsequent sections of this Book will be given full directions to the Clerk and Master in reference to the payment of money in his hands belonging to married women, infants, and lunatics.

§ 645. Payment of the Proceeds of Property Sold in Administering Assets.

When the Chancery Court takes jurisdiction to sell property, and especially land, for the purpose of dividing the proceeds among creditors, it stamps upon such proceeds the nature of a trust; and, as a consequence, takes especial care that they reach the hands of the beneficiaries. Accordingly the Court makes full and specific directions to the Clerk and Master in reference to paying out such proceeds, and sees to it that they go directly from the hand of the Court to the hand of the beneficiary, his agent, attorney or Solicitor. The Court will not turn over the proceeds of the sale of land to pay the debts of a decedent, to the administrator in the case to be by him disbursed to the creditors, for the administrator’s bond does not cover such proceeds; and, besides, the creditors are either parties or quasi parties to the suit.

The cases in which property is sold in the interest of creditors in order to pro rate the proceeds are, among others:

FINAL PROCESS GENERALLY CONSIDERED.

§ 646. Powers of the Chancery Court in En- enforcing its Decrees.

§ 646. Powers of the Chancery Court in Enforcing its Decrees.—Courts of Chancery have, inherently, all power necessary effectually to enforce their orders and decrees; and can exercise such power against either the person or property of the party in default.\(^1\) Formerly a decree in the Chancery Court, unless it was for land, operated only \textit{in personam}; and the only mode of enforcing it was by what is termed process of contempt against the party disobeying it, by keeping him in prison until he fully complied with all the requirements of the decree. And when a disobedient party, either could not be arrested on process of contempt, or having been arrested remained in prison without obeying the decree, the party entitled to the benefit of the decree might have a writ of sequestration to seize the defendant’s personal property, and the rents and profits of his real estate, and apply the proceeds to the satisfaction of the decree.\(^2\) These processes, though still authorized by law,\(^3\) are now seldom resorted to, the Legislature having authorized the Chancery Courts to divest and vest title to property; and to issue all writs for the collection of money, or to obtain possession of real or personal property, in use in the common law Courts.\(^4\)

The Chancery Court has thus, in its armory, every process and writ known either to Law or Equity, to enable it to enforce its decrees;\(^5\) and, while the common law writs and the statutory powers of divesting title, are generally used instead of the process of attachment and writs of sequestration, nevertheless, the latter are sometimes indispensable to enable the Court effectually to enforce its decrees, and to do full justice in the cause. It is a general rule that Courts of Chancery have the power to issue any process that may be necessary to carry their decrees into effectual execution.\(^6\)

\(^5\) In the war of legal alteration, the bill is the proclamation of war, the answer is the defiance of the adversary, the witnesses are the soldiers, the authorities are the artillery, the hearing is the battle, the decree is the victory, and the results of the final process are the spoils of war.

\(^8\) 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 1042-1070; 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 440; Code, §§ 4475-1488; 2997. An examination of the Reports of the various States of the Union will show that, even in those States where there are no separate Chancery Courts, the authority of the Courts vested with Equity jurisdiction to issue all the writs and processes necessary to effectuate that jurisdiction, is constantly and vigorously maintained, and unhesitatingly exercised whenever the exigency requires. Indeed, it may be stated in brief, that the Chancery Courts of Tennessee are clothed with full power to employ any and all process necessary to completely carry out any order or decree they may lawfully make; and the extraordinary rarity of unusual process is an evidence, not of the want of authority on the part of the Court, but of the effectiveness of the usual processes, and of the honorable obedience of the people to the mandates of their own laws, as administered by their own Courts. \textit{Ante}, § 32. See Russell v. Stinson, 3 Hay., 12.
§ 647. Kinds of Final Process.—The Chancery Court is equipped with every variety of writ, necessary to enforce its decrees, or to enable it to do justice. It can use its own peculiar processes against the person or property of the party in default, or can use the processes employed in the common law Courts, or may use the processes and powers conferred upon it by the Legislature. The usual methods of enforcing decrees in Chancery, generally speaking, are (1) by process against the person of the party in default; (2) by process against the property of such person, (3) by writs of possession, and (4) by writs of restitution.

I. The Ordinary Chancery processes to enforce decrees are the following:
1. Injunctions to Perform Decrees, accompanied by a copy of the decree. This is commonly called a writ of execution of a decree. 2
2. Attachments for Contempt, against the person of the party in default, under which he may be arrested and committed to jail, there to remain until he performs the decree. 3
3. Writs of Distingas, against the property of corporations, 4 to compel them to perform a decree, or to enforce a money recovery, or to transfer the possession of personal property.
4. Writs of Sequestration, against the estate of a delinquent to compel obedience to a decree. 5
5. Writs of Assistance, to put the party entitled into possession of the property decreed to him. 6 This writ is substantially the same as a writ of possession, and is now generally called by that name.

II. The common law final processes used by our Chancery Courts 7 are:
1. Executions, or, as they are more correctly called, writs of fieri facias, being the ordinary writs for the enforcement of decrees for money.
2. Writs of Possession, which are used to put a party into possession of property decreed to him.
3. Writs of Restitution, whose office is to restore a party to the possession of property of which he had been dispossessed by the Court, or its officer.

All of the foregoing writs are, technically speaking, "executions," execution being the general name of any and every process or writ whereby the judgments and decrees of Courts are enforced. 8

III. The statutory processes and powers conferred upon the Court to enable it to enforce its decrees are the following:
1. Divestiture of Title to property out of one or more parties, and vesting it in those entitled, by decree. 9
2. Appointment of Commissioners to Make Sales, and to execute conveyances, releases and acquittances, binding upon the parties in interest. 10
3. Decrees Becoming Effective without a conveyance, release or acquittance, when the party required to execute the same fails so to do. 11

3 Code, §§ 4478-4481.
4 Code, § 3000. A distingas is used at common law, also; but it is, nevertheless, accounted a Chancery writ.
5 Code, § 4487. A sequestration can be effectively used against a non-resident or absconding defendant, who has property in the State, and who is required to convey land situated in another State, or to execute a release or acquittance of a judgment, or a lien or mortgage of record in another State. 1 Barb. Ch. Pr., 444. If the land to be conveyed, or the mortgage, lien, or judgment to be discharged, are in this State, the Court can, by virtue of its own decree, transfer the title, or discharge the obligation, and perpetually enjoin its enforcements; but as the decree of the Court cannot operate extra-territorially, sequestration is the only available alternative, unless the person of the defendant can be seized on process of attachment for contempt. § 648. Essentials of Final Process.—If no appeal is taken from a final decree, the next, and ordinarily the last, step in the progress of a suit, is the enforcement of the decree. And as the decree itself awards final process, and is authority for its issuance, it is a fundamental rule that this final process must conform to the decree in all essentials. The essentials of final processes are as follows:

1. The process issued, in enforcement of a decree, must be the kind of process awarded by the decree itself, or by the law.\(^1\)
2. The process must run in the name of the State of Tennessee; it must be addressed to the proper executive officer; it must show what is to be done, by whom, and when; it must be tested, and be signed by the Clerk and Master, or his deputy.
3. The process must sufficiently identify the suit in which, and the Court from which, it is issued, by giving the names of the parties or the style of the cause, and the style of the Court pronouncing the decree.\(^2\)
4. The process must pursue the decree,\(^3\) not only in its nature, but as to the amount of money to be paid or made, and as to description of property to be put in possession of the party recovering it, and as to other acts to be done.

\(^1\) The law awards an execution on a decree for a money recovery. Hyder v. Butler, 19 Pick., 289; and no reason occurs why it does not award a writ of possession when land is recovered. Code, §§ 2997-2998; 3003. Sec. post, § 655.

\(^2\) Trotter v. Nelson, 1 Swan, 7.

\(^3\) The execution, to be absolutely valid, must not only be within the decree, but the decree must be within the evidence, the evidence must be within the pleadings, and the pleadings must be within the procedure and jurisprudence of the Chancery Court. This may be illustrated by a diagram, thus:

!Diagram showing the relationship between decree, pleadings, evidence, execution, and procedure

1. The inmost circle represents the decree circumscribing the execution, or final process. If the execution is not warranted by the decree, it may be superseded and quashed.
2. The next circle represents the evidence, circumscribing both the decree and the execution. If a decree is not justified by the evidence, it may be reversed by appeal, or writ of error, and may be reversed even after execution has issued by a writ of error, and on a supersedeas the execution may be stayed and annulled.
3. The circle next to the outmostmost represents the pleadings, circumscribing the evidence, the decree and the execution. If the evidence is not pertinent to the pleadings, or does not substantiate the pleading, on appeal or writ of error the decree will be reversed, and if an execution has issued it will be superseded and annulled.
4. The outside circle represents the procedure and jurisprudence of the Chancery Court circumscribing the pleadings, evidence, decree and execution; and if the pleadings or evidence do not justify the decree on appeal or writ of error the decree will be reversed, and if an execution has issued it will be superseded and annulled.

But a decree so erroneous as to be reversible on appeal or writ of error is, unless so reversed, valid enough to support an execution and justify all that may be done under it. A decree, however, that is absolutely void on its face, will not support an execution; and whoever undertakes to enforce such an execution is a trespasser, and his levy, sale or other act of execution is void in law. As to void and voidable decrees, sec. ante, §§ 446; 565; and post, § 814, note 43.
ARTICLE II.
TRANSFER OF TITLE BY DECREES, OR DEED.

§ 649. Vesting Title, and Executing Instruments, by Decree.

§ 650. Deed by the Master, or Commissioner.

§ 649. Vesting Title, and Executing Instruments, by Decree.—Originally, the Chancery Court compelled parties to execute conveyances, by process of contempt and of sequestration; but now, by statute, the Court may, by decree, vest the title to property, real or personal, out of any of the parties and vest it in others; and such a decree has all the force and effect of a conveyance by such parties executed in due form of law. The Court, may, also, appoint a Commissioner to execute all necessary conveyances, releases, and acquittances, either in his name, or in the name of a party, as the Court may think proper; and the instrument so executed will be as valid as if executed by the party. Or the Court may direct a party to execute a conveyance, release, or acquittance; and if he fail or refuse so to do, in the time specified in the decree, or in a reasonable time, if no time is thus specified, the decree operates in all respects as if the conveyance, release, or acquittance was in fact made by such party as directed. 2

Under these provisions of the statute, the Court generally vests and vests titles to property by decree, or directs the Clerk and Master, as commissioner, to make the proper party a deed conveying the property to him. 3 The decree is often in the alternative. The following is a form of a DECREE vesting TITLE, AND ORDERING A DEED.

And said report of sale, being unexcepted to, is in all things confirmed. It is therefore, ordered and decreed by the Court, that all the right, title, and interest of all parties to this suit 4 [or, of C D and E F] in and to said tract of land [or other property] be and the same are hereby divested out of them, and each of them, and vested in said G H, [the purchaser, complainant, or other person;] as an indefeasible inheritance in fee simple, forever; and the Clerk and Master of this Court, as commissioner, will in his own name, [or, in the name of the parties,] execute and deliver to said G H a deed conveying to him, the said G H, all the right, title, and interest, of all the parties to this suit, [or, of C. D. and E. F.], in and to said tract of land, [or other property.]; or will give him a certified copy of this decree for registration, if said G H. prefer the same. The costs of said deed, or certified deed, will be paid by said G H; and on his application a writ of possession will issue to put him in possession of said tract of land.
